With this measure we are sending a clear signal to Canadians across this country: invest in Canada's future; help build the strong and prosperous country we all seek; help create jobs. This government wants Canadians to enjoy the rewards of those efforts.

Lack of access to start-up capital has been a constraint for many small and medium-sized businesses.

I am announcing measures to encourage greater investment in smaller businesses by pension funds. Registered retirement savings plans will also be eligible to invest in private Canadian corporations with which they deal at arm's length. This will encourage the redirection of significant amounts of capital from one of the fastest growing pools of savings in the country into a sector of our economy that needs financing to create more jobs.

[Translation]

An innovative venture capital initiative has been taken by organized labour in the province of Quebec, in co-operation with the Quebec government. The Solidarity Fund is managed by the Quebec Federation of Labour and has been used effectively to maintain and create jobs in Quebec, by investing in small and medium-sized businesses. Tax assistance to individuals investing in the fund has been provided by the Government of Quebec. This initiative deserves support, not only in Quebec but across Canada. Because of the unique nature of this initiative, the federal government will provide a tax credit for individual investors in the Solidarity Fund in Quebec or in any similar funds that receive provincial tax assistance.

[English]

A further key to growth and more jobs is investment in research and development. Technological change is the driving force behind economic progress. We must keep pace in order to compete both at home and in foreign markets. A strong R and D performance has a vital role to play in meeting this challenge. It is an ongoing priority of this government to encourage a much-improved R and D performance in Canada.

I propose to assist small companies in a significant way by refunding 100 per cent of the tax credit which they earn on their first $2 million of qualifying R and D each year. This full cash refund will be of most use to start-up companies which have particular problems attracting investment capital.

I am also announcing changes to the definition of qualifying R and D expenditures that will respond directly to the real needs and requests of the R and D community.

The capital gains exemption will also aid the growth of high technology firms. As a consequence of these measures, I have decided that the flow-out of the scientific research tax credit to investors will be terminated as of today. There will be appropriate transition rules.

The Western Energy Accord has already led to strong signs of revival in the petroleum industry. This historic agreement will free up one of our most dynamic industries to create economic growth, new oil and gas security and job opportunities across Canada. To support the renewed growth of the energy sector, I am pleased today to table Notices of Ways and Means Motions that will give effect to the fiscal measures announced in the agreement.

In these three areas—small business, research and development and energy—the government has clearly identified the components of economic growth most likely to result in the greatest and fastest response.

The capital gains exemption will give small businesses a boost to expand. There are more than 700,000 small businesses in Canada. If each of these firms created just one new job, the impact would be dramatic.

If other Canadians start up new companies, more jobs will be created. And if our R and D incentives result in new inventions and more competitive companies, still more jobs will result. The energy sector has much room to grow, creating jobs across Canada.

The Challenge is there. The opportunity is there. I am confident that Canadians will seize that opportunity and lead the way to a competitive and vibrant economy.

As we become more competitive, it will be critical to ensure that international markets remain open to our products. More trade means more jobs. That is why the government is working hard on several fronts to improve Canada's trade position. The Prime Minister and President Reagan have opened the door to a more productive trading relationship between Canada and the United States. Canada is in the vanguard of countries pushing for the early start of a new round of multilateral trade negotiations. Here at home we are working closely with the provinces and consulting carefully with business and labour. We must develop negotiating positions which carry their full support and maximize for Canada the benefits of trade liberalization.

All these actions will help to create job opportunities. As these new opportunities arise, we must ensure that Canadians, and particularly our young people, have the skills and training to seize them.

At the Regina First Ministers' Conference the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced a new and innovative approach to training and employment—an approach which will lead to career development, not just short-term jobs. This approach is based on greater private sector and local participation. It was unanimously endorsed by provincial governments and has received broad support from private sector and community groups across the country. We have allocated $900 million to these programs this year. Agreements are now being negotiated so that they can be implemented as quickly as possible. I am announcing today that for 1986-87 the government will allocate an additional $900 million to these programs. This commitment now will provide greater certainty to those designing and implementing these programs. This should help get them off the ground and operating more quickly.

I am also announcing that the government will soon launch a major review of the unemployment insurance program. Our objective is to improve and simplify the unemployment insurance system to make it fairer and to ensure that it promotes flexible adjustment in the labour market. I want to emphasize that we are not undertaking this review with an objective of reducing federal contributions to the unemployed.

Pending the completion of this review by the end of March 1986, I am announcing today that the government intends to maintain the current entrance requirements and to prevent any increase in unemployment insurance premium rates for 1986. Holding the rates to their current level will avoid imposing a heavy tax on lower-income employees and labour-intensive businesses, particularly in the small business sector.

We also need to have a hard and thorough re-examination of the corporate tax system.

There is something seriously wrong when investment decisions are dictated by the tax system rather than by good business sense. I am therefore tabling with this budget a discussion paper aimed at making the corporate income tax fairer and more effective in supporting economic growth. This paper describes how the same amount of revenue as in the current system could be raised in a simpler manner by eliminating a number of tax incentives and, in return, lowering the federal corporate tax rate by 7 percentage points. The effect would be to promote growth and job creation by allowing investment to be allocated more efficiently.

IMPROVING GOVERNMENT EFFECTIVENESS

The measures I have just announced will encourage private initiative throughout our economy and provide new opportunities for Canadians to innovate, create and build. They will spur economic growth and increase employment.

Canadians have been telling us for years that there is too much waste, too much inefficiency and too much overlap of programs in Ottawa. They know that a healthy and vibrant private sector must be supported by a government that is lean, efficient and effective.

[Translation]

I will be proposing measures to streamline the operations of government, restrain its growth, rationalize a number of programs, increase fairness in the tax system and implement pension reform. I will also be proposing fundamental changes to the budget process.

BETTER GOVERNMENT MANAGEMENT

A Ministerial Task Force on Program Review, in co-operation with business and labour leaders in the private sector, is undertaking the most comprehensive and detailed examination of government programs ever carried out by a Canadian government. The purpose is to eliminate unnecessary activities, get rid of unproductive duplication and increase efficiency in government activities so that service to the public is improved.

I am tabling today, on behalf of the Deputy Prime Minister, the first report of the Ministerial Task Force. This report sets out the decisions the government has taken so far in response to the recommendations of the study teams.

Among other things, the study teams looked closely at the cost of tax incentives. They questioned whether particular incentives are worth the revenue loss that must be made up by other taxpayers. This is an important issue. In order to provide a basis for informed discussions, I will shortly be releasing a detailed accounting of the cost of targeted tax measures. In providing this information to Canadians, I am particularly pleased to be continuing the initiative introduced by the Minister of Justice when he held this portfolio in 1979.

The study team examining services and subsidies to business pointed out that undue stacking of benefits can result when investments receive both tax incentives and government grants. I am proposing measures to reduce the undesirable effects of this giving with both hands.

The study team also recommended that many of the items currently exempt from the federal sales tax should be included in the tax base. The current exclusions are often imprecisely defined and lead to competitive distortions among manufacturers producing essentially similar products.

I am therefore announcing that, effective July 1, a range of items will no longer be exempt from the federal sales tax. These include candy and confectionery, soft drinks, pet foods, certain goods related to energy efficiency, and beauty and health goods. Over time, distortions were created as many of these items were excluded from the sales tax base. I will also be removing, effective July 1, the existing differential between the tax for off-site and on-site construction materials. Due to changing construction practices, the differential is no longer appropriate.

The government also places a high priority on rationalizing the current structure of Crown corporations. Crown corporations with a commercial value but no ongoing public policy purpose will be sold. The government announced last week an agreement in principle to sell the Northern Transportation Company Limited. The sale is expected to be completed by the end of June. In the near future the government also expects to sell Teleglobe Canada, Canadian Arsenals Limited and its interest in the Canada Development Corporation. Crown corporations with no commercial value and no effective public policy purpose will be dissolved and others, where appropriate, will be absorbed within existing departments. As a first step, up to 13 Crown corporations in these categories have been identified.

I am also announcing, on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board, measures to tighten the government's own belt and increase the effectiveness with which taxpayer dollars are spent. The government has already proposed that the guarantee of automatic indexation for public service pensions be replaced by a new formula. This would relate inflation protection to the earnings of the pension fund on a comparable basis to private sector pension funds, thus eliminating the financial risks to taxpayers in the future.

[Translation]

The government is also proposing to end the guarantee of full indexation for pensions of Members of Parliament and Senators, effective January 1, 1986. A joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate will be established shortly to review all aspects of parliamentary pensions.

• (1710)

[English]

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has embarked on an aggressive program to improve the government's management of its cash and of its inventory of real property.

The Public Service was projected to increase by 15,000 in the next six years. Instead, action will be taken to bring about a decrease of 15,000 by the end of this period—a difference of 30,000.

These measures will require difficult decisions by public service managers. But we are confident that they will adjust to achieve greater productivity and efficiency with a minimum amount of disruption in service to the public.

MORE EFFECTIVE ECONOMIC PROGRAMS

Government is not only too big, it also reaches too far into almost every corner of the economy. It over-regulates some industries and over-protects others. In trying to facilitate investment, government too often distorts it. Instead of encouraging strength, many actions perpetuate inefficiency. Too often, government frustrates entrepreneurship and discourages initiative.

[Translation]

We must re-examine a number of programs, remove obstacles to growth, cut waste, improve effectiveness and make better use of limited resources. I am announcing today a number of specific program changes to achieve those objectives.

[English]

Transportation expenditures will be reduced by $75 million this year and $200 million next year. The operation of VIA Rail in the Windsor to Quebec City corridor will move toward full cost recovery.

In keeping with the philosophy of greater reliance on market incentives, the government is moving to reduce the use of grants and other subsidies. Industrial subsidies will be reduced by $100 million this year and $150 million next year. Agricultural expenditures will be lowered by $50 million a year.

The projected increase for official development assistance will be reduced next year by $50 million. This will not compromise the government's commitment to increase our foreign aid to 0.6 per cent of GNP by 1990. To assist the Canadian business community in actively pursuing third world projects of a developmental nature, the government will establish a new trade and development facility.

In energy, we will effect savings of more than $150 million this year and $900 million next year. The Petroleum Incentives Program will be phased out by December 31, 1987. Since the CANDU technology is now well established, federal funding for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited's R and D program will be reduced over a six-year period. The priority that AECL assigns to health and safety research will be maintained.

The heavy water plants in Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury are recognized as striking symbols of government waste and mismanagement. They cost the taxpayers of this country more than $100 million per year to produce a product for which there is no demand. We will move immediately to close the plants, but we will not abandon the people or the region of Cape Breton.

Workers at the plants will receive generous severance benefits and will be assisted in seeking new employment. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited will be announcing further details of these measures shortly.

To promote more productive, durable employment and development in Cape Breton, the government is taking two important steps.

We are introducing immediately an enriched tax incentive for new investment in Cape Breton. This will be achieved by significantly broadening the application of the existing 50-percent investment tax credit to include a wide range of investments. This will mean that almost all new investment in Cape Breton will be free of corporate income tax for 10 years.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) will soon announce the appointment of a private sector advisory committee to recommend new initiatives to the federal and provincial governments to promote economic development and productive employment in Cape Breton.

The approach we are following in Cape Breton reflects the basic philosophy of this government with respect to the problems of adjustment in both the private and public sectors. We simply cannot afford to continue supporting non-competitive economic activity. To do so drains resources and energy from more productive, job-creating activity. But we must ensure that adjustment takes place in a humane way.

[Translation]

This philosophy also underlies the approach the government is taking to assist individuals in isolated and remote communities. Tax relief for severance compensation will be offered, on a case-by-case basis, to employees affected by a company closure in isolated communities. Northern allowances are being reviewed and, after public consultation this summer, I will establish a permanent regime.

[English]

MORE EFFECTIVE SOCIAL AND CULTURAL PROGRAMS

When resources are increasingly limited, we must also adjust social programs so that benefits are targeted to those most in need and funds are freed for other social priorities. Nowhere is this more apparent than with regard to child benefits.

CHILD BENEFITS

I am announcing today a restructuring of benefits provided through the tax system to families with children. These changes respond to suggestions made by many individual Canadians, social groups and the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. Beginning in 1986, the child tax credit, which is delivered to low-income families, will be increased significantly and will reach a level of $524 per child in 1988—an increase of $140. The income level at which the child tax credit begins to phase out will be lowered. Starting in 1987, tax exemptions for children will be reduced over a three-year period so that the exemption for children under age 18 will equal the value of family allowances.

These changes achieve a number of important goals. The universal family allowance is maintained. Support to lower-income families will be increased and child benefits will be made more progressive. Our child benefit system will become more effective and fair but the changes will be implemented in a gradual way to ease the impact on those who will receive less.

IMPROVED PENSIONS

Adequate incentives and fairness in the structure of our private pension system are essential to ensuring that Canadians prepare for their retirement in a self-reliant manner.

After a decade of discussion about pension policy, I am proceeding to implement major reforms. These are far-reaching changes. They will make fundamental improvements in the ability of Canadians to build decent pensions in a fair and flexible way.

• (1720)

I will be introducing legislation to improve minimum standards for private pension plans under the federal Pension Benefits Standards Act. The measures improve rules for vesting, portability and survivor benefits. They will be of particular benefit to women. These proposals are the result of extensive consultations with provinces to ensure a high degree of uniformity in pension benefits across the country—another excellent example of federal-provincial co-operation.

[Translation]

The changes that I am announcing will ensure that more workers will have the opportunity to join pension plans and the right to participate in the management of pension funds.

[English]

They will provide workers with rights to their pension benefits after two years of plan membership and ensure that such benefits will be portable. They provide for equal pensions for women and men retiring under identical circumstances. Provision will be made for survivor benefits and for splitting of pensions between spouses upon marriage breakdown.

I am not proposing to legislate mandatory inflation protection at this time. There are too many uncertainties about the future costs of various proposals for inflation protection and there is no consensus on how best to achieve it. However, the Government will encourage all firms under federal jurisdiction to adjust pensions for inflation on a voluntary basis. They will be required to report publicly on the adjustments made and the source of funds used for that purpose.

The government will monitor the situation closely and continue discussions with provinces, business and other interested groups with a view to taking additional action to protect the purchasing power of pensions.

I also propose to reform the system of tax assistance for contributions to private pension plans. The current system discriminates among people in different types of pension plans. Starting in 1986 the limits on RRSP contributions will increase each year until 1990, at which time equity will be restored between RRSPs and other types of pension plans. Persons who do not fully use their allowable RRSP contribution in any year will be able to make up the difference within a seven-year period. This will provide Canadians with access to a much more flexible and comprehensive pension system.

These new measures will significantly improve opportunities to build decent retirement incomes for the growing number of Canadians in small business, farming and the professions.

SUPPORT FOR THE DISABLED

At the National Economic Conference the point was made strongly that the tax definition of disability is too narrow. I intend to broaden the definition of disability for income tax purposes. I expect 120,000 individuals to benefit from this change.

CULTURAL MEASURES

The arts and cultural sector plays a vital role in preserving and developing our intellectual heritage. It is not only a source of pride for Canadians, it is also an important source of jobs. I am announcing, in collaboration with the Minister of Communications, (Mr. Masse) the formation of a special task force to propose initiatives to encourage the private sector to increase its support for the arts.

In response to representations that have been made, I am also announcing tax changes to permit Canadian visual artists to write off the cost of their inventories and to assist them in donating their own works of art to charitable institutions.

VOLUNTARY SECTOR

The voluntary sector will benefit two initiatives in this budget. I am proposing changes to make it easier to donate gifts of property to charities and to protect the charitable status of organizations carrying on non-partisan political activity in support of their charitable goals.

IMPROVING TAX FAIRNESS

Many Canadians have questioned the fairness of the tax system and of tax administration. This is a matter the government views with great concern. Our tax system rests on a foundation of self-assessment and voluntary compliance. If Canadians feel that the system is unfair, this foundation will erode.

[Translation]

The greatest source of concern is the ability of some high-income individuals to take advantage of existing tax incentives to shelter virtually all of their income. There is no question that such tax planning is legitimate, and that the incentives serve valid objectives. Canadians nevertheless feel frustrated when some high-income individuals pay little or no tax. I share this frustration.

[English]

I will therefore be introducing a minimum personal income tax, beginning in 1986, to ensure that high-income Canadians pay their fair share. I am tabling today a paper that explores three alternative ways of imposing a minimum tax. I will use this consultation process to encourage the provinces to adopt the same system in order to maintain uniformity and consistency across the country.

In addition, I am moving to curtail the tax-shelter financing of certain types of property, including yachts, recreational vehicles and hotels when used in certain circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am glad that the Leader of the Opposition still has a sense of humour.

I am also proposing to end the tax advantages of splitting income through interest-free or low-interest loans among family members. Transitional rules will ensure that the new rules are introduced fairly.

Building on the significant initiatives introduced by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), I am proposing a number of further measures to achieve fairer tax administration consistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Additional protection will be provided for taxpayers in the area of search and seizure, audits and examinations, and demands for tax information.

We will continue to move forward with necessary and effective change in the tax system in a responsible, moderate way. This approach is reflected in our commitment to a minimum tax for Canada and in the discussion paper on the corporate income tax. But I have deliberately not launched a process of massive tax reform as a solution to the problem of tax fairness or any other problem. We must not and we will not risk creating the kind of uncertainty and instability that could undermine the effort to get Canadians investing strongly in opportunities that will lead to growth and jobs.

IMPROVING THE BUDGET PROCESS

Finally, I am tabling a discussion paper that proposes significant reforms to the budget-making process, including a fixed period each year for presentation of the annual budget. This would provide greater certainty for planning and decision-making for Parliament, for the federal government, for provincial governments and for the private sector. It would provide the opportunity for more complementary economic and fiscal policy-making by both levels of government.

CONTROLLING THE NATIONAL DEBT

The actions I have taken will revitalize the private sector and make the federal government a more effective partner in pursuing economic renewal. For this partnership to truly flourish, however, we must restore order to our financial position.

In November, I estimated that the deficit for 1984-85 would be $34.6 billion. Final figures for 1984-85 are not yet available, but my current estimate is that the deficit will be just under $36 billion. I expect that government expenditures will be lower than projected. But revenue projections have not been met.

When I began to plan the budget for this year, I was looking at estimated deficits that would have continued to rise, even with continued growth in the economy and even after the actions I took in November. This was quite clearly unacceptable.

It is important that Canadians understand the magnitude of the deficit and debt problem and why it poses serious risks to our ability to achieve sustained economic growth.

The public debt is simply the sum of all past deficits. It took 100 years to accumulate a debt of $18 billion. Now, less than two decades later, the debt is approaching $200 billion.

Like any borrower, the Canadian government pays interest on this debt. And like any borrower, the government has been affected by high interest rates. Interest charges have risen from about $8 billion per year in the late 1970s to $22 billion last year. They have become the fastest growing component of government expenditures.

The government has been borrowing additional funds to pay these interest charges. That is why our debt is spiralling out of sight. If we do not show the resolve to deal with this problem, the result will be paralysis of the Government of Canada.

This is the vicious circle we are now in. At some point we must begin to pay the bills for current services and not pass them on to our children.

[Translation]

If we fail to act now and maintain our present borrowing pattern, annual interest charges at the end of the decade could approach $50 billion.

[English]

Where would we find the money?

We might try to borrow it. But that just continues to build up future problems. At some point, the bills come due.

We could simply print it. But to do so would guarantee an outbreak of inflation and rising interest rates that would damage confidence, investment and growth in the same way it did in the 1970s and early 1980s. This would be an abdication of responsibility. I will not do that.

Ultimately, we would be forced to find the money through drastic cuts in government services and major tax increases. Many government programs would be in jeopardy. This is also unacceptable.

[Translation]

Some say that faster economic growth will solve our fiscal dilemma. It is an important part of the solution. And the measures I have introduced will boost economic growth. But growth alone will not solve our problem. If we are to get off this deficit treadmill, we must also slow down the debt spiral through lower deficits and lower interest rates.

[English]

We all know that lowering interest rates is easier said than done.

It is true that interest rates in Canada are heavily influenced by interest rates in the United States. And as we deal with our fiscal problem we must be mindful of how quickly and how deeply the United States is prepared to cut its own deficit. But Canadian interest rates also depend on our own fiscal actions.

A key action to control interest rates is to maintain our vigilance against inflation. And that means acting to reduce our annual deficits, so that Canadian and foreign investors can be assured that future governments will not resort to the printing press to inflate our debt away.

Most Canadians agree that we must restore fiscal order. But they rightly feel that this process must start by eliminating waste and inefficiency in government, and that any further actions that are necessary must be balanced and fair.

The measures I have outlined to put our own house in order, together with the actions announced in November, represent a significant step in getting control of government spending. Program expenditures are expected to increase by slightly more than 2 per cent this year and next year—the lowest rates of increase in almost two decades. The government's non-statutory program expenditures, excluding defence and foreign aid, will actually decline by more than $1 billion next year—the first such decline in more than two decades.

This is an impressive start. But it is not enough. Over the past decade, the financial position of the Government of Canada has worsened at an accelerating pace. As a percentage of Gross National Product, budgetary expenditures rose by 3.7 percentage points in the past decade. During the same period, budgetary revenues as a percentage of Gross National Product have dropped by 3.5 percentage points. There is a built-in structural imbalance that contributes to an everwidening gap between revenues and expenditures. With each passing year, government policies that tend to widen this gap have become less and less sustainable.

With total spending that now exceeds $100 billion, we cannot make significant saving without examining transfer programs. These programs now account for over $40 billion and are growing rapidly. One of the key factors in this growth is the automatic indexation of transfer programs to the consumer price index, regardless of the income situation of the recipient.

The purpose of indexation has been to protect Canadians from the effects of rising prices. But it has become increasingly clear that Canadians must also find a way to protect themselves against rising deficits and the soaring national debt.

Accordingly, I propose to modify indexation for old age security payments and family allowances. Beginning January 1, 1986, these payments will be indexed only for the annual increase in the consumer price index greater than 3 per cent. No payment will be reduced as a result of this measure. Any increase in inflation above 3 per cent will be fully compensated.

By maintaining the principle of indexation, we are assuring Canadians that if serious inflation breaks out again, these payments will be protected by this potent form of insurance. The government will review the adequacy of payments in light of future circumstances and will increase them as resources permit.

[Translation]

Indexation to the full consumer price index will continue for the guaranteed income supplement and for payments to veterans.

[English]

To spread the burden of expenditure reduction fairly, the government will also be seeking to limit the rate of growth of transfers to provinces to yield annual savings of $2 billion by the end of the decade. There will be no absolute reduction in federal transfers. Even after this adjustment, federal transfers to provincial governments will grow significantly over the balance of this decade. In 1990-91, they would represent about the same share of total program expenditures as they do today.

• (1740)

With this budget and the action taken in November, we have reduced every area of government spending. It is only reasonable that transfers to provinces, which account for 19 per cent of program expenditures, should be included. I made a commitment to my provincial counterparts last January that I would not reduce these transfers in the current fiscal year and that commitment will be honoured. I will meet with provincial Finance Ministers this fall to discuss the full range of issues relating to federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. I will wish to discuss at that time how quickly and how best we can move to secure the savings the government intends to achieve.

We have looked hard at areas for expenditure reduction. We have started with our own operations and we have restructured programs in a balanced and effective way. We have put in place a plan that will meet the need for sustained reduction of deficits over the medium term. We have tried to be fair to individuals to other governments. We have delivered on our commitment to take actions that will achieve net expenditure reductions of $15 billion in 1990-91. And we have done so in a balanced way that is sensitive to the regions of the country.

[English]

This restructuring is very significant. But it is not enough to make a meaningful start on restoring a healthy fiscal balance. I have therefore, reluctantly, accepted the necessity of increasing taxes.

I am proposing the following changes:

The automatic indexation of excise levies on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products is being terminated. Effective today the excise levy on alcoholic beverages will increase by 2 per cent. Effective this afternoon the levy on tobacco products is being increased by 25 cents on a package of 25 cigarettes. I recognize this increase is substantial, but I have taken into account the serious health hazards and high public health costs related to smoking.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: For our own good, Michael?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I see the Hon. Member is trying to buy a package of cigarettes before the price goes up.

The Canadian Ownership Special Charge of 0.7 cents per litre on transportation fuels will be removed June 1. In its place, the excise tax on transportation fuels will increase by 2 cents per litre, effective September 3. I am delaying this increase until after Labour Day in order to avoid any impact on the tourist season and on Canadians planning holiday travel this summer.

The rates of federal sales tax will be increased by one percentage point, effective January 1, 1986.

I am also proposing a number of income tax changes.

—The modified indexation factor applied to personal transfer payments will also apply to the tax system. Beginning next year, the indexation of personal exemptions and tax brackets will reflect only the annual increase in the consumer price index greater than 3 per cent.

[Translation]

—The $50 federal personal tax reduction will be eliminated next year.

—A temporary deficit-reduction surtax will be imposed on higher-income individuals and large corporations.

[English]

For individuals, the surtax will extend from July 1, 1985 to December 31, 1986. It will be levied at an annual rate of 5 per cent of basic federal tax in excess of $6,000 and a further 5 per cent of basic federal tax in excess of $15,000. This surtax should not increase tax liabilities for individuals with gross incomes less than about $40,000. For large corporations, the surtax will extend from July 1, 1985 to June 30, 1986 and will be levied at a rate of 5 per cent of federal tax payable.

—A two-year tax will be imposed on the capital of large banks and trust companies, effective in 1986. The purpose of this measure is to ensure that they bear an appropriate part of the tax load at a time when deficit reduction is a high priority.

—Effective today contributions to a registered home ownership savings plan will no longer qualify for preferential tax treatment. Plans will cease to be tax-exempt at the end of 1985, but individuals will be able to withdraw the accumulated funds for any purpose with no tax liability. There is currently more than $2 billion in such plans. I am confident that, with the measures I have announced to provide incentives to growth and job creation, a substantial portion of these funds will find their way into entrepreneurial and job-creating investments, as well as providing a boost to housing and consumption.

BALANCE AND IMPACTS

The over-all impact of the tax increases must be assessed in the context of the budget as a whole. Net tax increases will amount to $200 million this year and $1.8 billion next year. Coupled with the expenditure reductions I reported earlier, the total direct impact of our actions since November will be to reduce the estimated deficit by $4.4 billion this year, to a level of $33.8 billion. For next year, the total direct impact of our actions in November and today will be to reduce the estimated deficit by $8.3 billion, to a level of $32.7 billion. The rate of increase in the accumulated debt of the Government of Canada will drop from 23.2 per cent last year to 14.6 per cent next year.

It is more misleading than helpful to present a precise view of the deficit five years from now. Small changes in economic growth or interest rates can have large impacts on the deficit, even in the short run. For example, a 1 per cent change in interest rates would have an impact of $1.1 billion on next year's deficit. Such effects compound over time. It would be foolhardy to fine-tune policy to precise estimates that we know are uncertain and will inevitably be proven wrong. What is important is the credibility of our medium-term strategy. Canadians need to have confidence that we will reduce deficits and control the ultimate level of the debt. The measures I announced in November and today will ensure that the annual deficit is more than $20 billion lower than it would otherwise have been by the end of the decade. About 80 per cent of that reduction will be on the expenditure side. Most importantly, these measures will cut $75 billion from the projected debt over that same period.

Given reasonable international economic conditions, these measures should ensure that the growth of the debt is brought back into line with the growth of the economy. This is a major improvement over the situation that confronted this government eight months ago. At that time we were faced with a debt that would continue to grow at a rate far greater than that of the economy long into the future. In a resolute fashion, we have taken the steps to reverse that dangerous trend and put our financial affairs on a responsible course.

On balance, I am confident that the measures I have proposed today will enhance economic growth and employment in the short run. Over the medium term they establish a sound foundation for sustained economic growth and job creation.

Pursuant to Standing Order 64(1), I table in both official languages copies of certain Notices of Ways and Means Motions relating to the Budget. I would ask that Orders of the Day be designated for the consideration of these Ways and Means Motions pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 64(2).

CONCLUSION

If I have a preoccupation with any one economic target, it is with the good, satisfying and durable jobs that Canadians, and particularly young Canadians, want and need.

This budget is about jobs.

If I believed that higher deficits and a more rapidly rising debt would help create those jobs, I would gladly increase the deficit to achieve that goal. But it hasn't worked in the past and it is not going to work in the future.

[Translation]

The economic problems facing this country are not easy to solve. But solve them we must if we are to succeed in this competitive world.

Let us not delude ourselves. Achieving full economic renewal will take sustained effort and time.

[English]

This budget is realistic. It is fair. It tackles our problems as they exist and as this government faced them on taking office last September. When we set out the problems and our directions for solving them in November, we were not building illusions. We were honest with Canadians. We accepted our mandate for change and we made clear that implementing and adjusting to change would test the strength and the resolve of all of us.

We promised to act, but first we promised to consult fully and openly with Canadians in reaching the decisions that I have presented to you today.

We received good advice from Canadians on a great many issues and that advice is reflected in this budget.

We have acted to control and reduce deficits in a balanced and careful way that will not tip the economy off its current course of growth. But we have acted with firmness and determination because without control of our accumulating debt, our economy would be unable to produce the satisfying jobs we need.

[Translation]

We have carefully balanced the measures in this budget so that costs and benefits will be fairly shared. The budget brings forward a number of measures and proposals designed to improve social programs and increase tax fairness.

[English]

The actions in this budget reflect our faith in people, in the ingenuity and the drive of individual Canadians to seize opportunities and to invest in their own future. We have brought forward measures which encourage Canadians to invest, on their own initiative, in the building of new existing enterprises.

This budget is far-reaching in its impact. It is a clear break from the past.

[English]

We Canadians understand more and more the limits of what governments can do. It is now time to show what we can do—individually and together—when the opportunity is there.

That is why the Agenda for Economic Renewal in November focused on providing the conditions for productive economic growth rather than attempting to impose or to direct that growth. That is why budget places the emphasis on rewarding success rather than subsidizing effort.

People working together provide the enduring strength of this nation. This budget builds on that strength.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) had the good sense not to come forward and shake the hand of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: She is probably one of the few people in the House who actually knows what the Budget contains. Some of us who have had the opportunity of looking at it in a preliminary way would have to agree that this is one of the worst Budgets that has ever been presented in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps Members of the House would give this Hon. Member the same courtesy that was given to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I also want to tell my colleagues that I intend to be brief because this has virtually left me speechless, and I intend to resume tomorrow morning. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that when Frank Miller was the Treasurer of Ontario, they found his Budget in the garbage before he delivered it. I can say that this Minister should have been so fortunate. The garbage bins must still wait a few days.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is here. I hope that he elects to participate in the budget debate. When he does, we expect him to rise in his place and apologize to the Canadian people for the breach of trust, the breach of the promises he made during the election campaign and the breach of commitments which he has given to Canada since assuming office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: How often have we heard from the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance that there would be no general tax increase, but, putting the best complexion on it, this is one of the most massive, regressive tax increases that we have seen in this country. In addition, I remind the Prime Minister that on December 20 he stood in this House and, in reply to a question from the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), he said, "There will be no reduction in the tax exemption for families". That is something that he foresaw, and here it is.

The minimum tax that we heard so much about during the election campaign, where is it? Instead, we have a discussion paper. The measure has been lobbed offside and it will be discussed, consulted and so on. We were told that it will come in 1986, but there is no model put forward upon which any proposal could be based.

● (1800)

So, Mr. Speaker, he simply has failed to live up to his promises. He has imposed taxes which are unacceptable to the Canadian people.

[English]

At least, after all these months, they have finally pinned their Tory colours to the mast. There are a few seductive ideas for the boys on Bay Street.

[Translation]

In addition, there is an avalanche of unfair and regressive taxes which will fuel inflation and increase unemployment. Well now, where are the jobs promised by our Prime Minister?

Mr. Chrétien: None!

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Over the last eight months, I have come to the conclusion that the Prime Minister is a disciple of that legendary circus master, Phineas T. Barnum, who said that there's a sucker born every minute. Judging by the applause we have heard from the Tory back-benchers tonight, he is right in so far as they are concerned. However, there are no suckers on this side of the House and there are no suckers among the Canadian public.

The Minister of Finance is following the counsel of that army field commander who decided that he had to destroy a town in order to save it. The Minister of Finance is telling us that he will destroy the economy in order to save it.

We have been treated to months and months of consultation and an economic summit meeting. We all want to know who was consulted who recommended this enormous tax on middle-class and lower-income Canadians. Who were they? Can the Minister prepare a list telling us with whom he consulted? Incidentally, I am going to get the Minister of Finance a calculator. Perhaps he could tell us who recommended, by my calculations, total tax increases, personal, sales and excise, of $1.17 billion for 1985-86. Next year they will be $4,300 million. I must admit that in making these calculations, I have taken out the capital gains reference.

[Translation]

And I would like to inform the House and especially the Prime Minister who knows my riding very well, that the people in Saint-Henri-Westmount are not much affected by the capital gains exemption. However, they are affected by other taxes which are a very real burden: the excise tax on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products, taxes on candy and confectionery goods, pet food, soft drinks, antiseptic creams, lotions, soap, bandages, wood stoves, and so forth.

[English]

We now know that Tories hate dogs and children. They are putting a sales tax on pet food and a tax on children's candies. This is a massive tax grab. Worst of all, as the Minister of Finance himself said a few weeks ago, it is very inflationary. There will be a temporary surtax on the middle class, a tax on fuel of two cents a litre, and no minimum tax on the salaries of the $500,000-per-year bank presidents of whom the Prime Minister so often reminds us.

In concluding these brief remarks, let me just say that this Budget tramples on the middle-class Canadian and hurts the poor with its progressive taxation on sales taxes. It has buried the unemployed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks, here is another example: a married couple living on one salary and with two dependent children below the age of 18, with a family income of $20,000, pays $175 income tax. That is what it says in the paper I have here. If we add sales tax, the excise tax on alcohol and the tax on fuel, it adds up to $350 a year, at least, for this family. Mr. Speaker, this is incredible and it is appalling!

[English]

I will say more about this tomorrow, but I want you to know, Mr. Speaker, in case you are interested in attending tomorrow's debate, that the deficit reductions through savings are a fraud for the most part. There are no five-year projections. It is not possible to make projections; yet we are told that there will be $20 billion taken off the deficit annually in 1990-91. That is political arithmetic in the extreme.

There is a lot of wishful thinking in that Budget. I must say that we on this side of the House will fight tooth and nail for the benefit of those Canadians who see themselves literally savaged by its provisions.

If I may, I now move, seconded by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien):

That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to order made Monday, May 13, 1985, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

On motion of Mr. Johnston, the House adjourned at 6.07 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

IMPACT ON CANADIAN CONSUMER

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon, Canadians had their hour of truth.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought down a budget for the rich and for the multinationals. The rich received a present of $125,000 cash in the form of a capital gains exemption, and if their accountants have any imagination, they will not pay a cent of surtax for 1985-86.

A few months ago, the Conservative Government proposed to do away with the off-oil subsidy for switching from oil to other forms of energy such as gas or electricity.

Government Members told us that these drastic cutbacks, which affected the average Canadian, were necessary to reduce the deficit. A few weeks later, they signed an agreement with the multinational oil companies, giving away $2 billion in the process.

Yesterday afternoon, the Minister of Finance confirmed what we said when the agreement was signed: that Canadians would pay for this. The 2 cents per litre increase in the price of gas, which will probably cost the Canadian consumer about 4 cents a litre, is a measure that is anti-Canadian and pro-multinationals.

The Conservatives showed their true colours yesterday afternoon, and this Government ought to be ashamed of the way it is selling Canadians out to the multinationals.

[English]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

PROPOSED CUTS IN EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, last night's Budget continued the previous Liberal Government's attack on transfer payments provided to the provinces. It is ironic that the House, which is presently debating legislation reinstating some of the money to our have-not provinces, including Quebec, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, and Nova Scotia, lost as a result of Liberal Government cut-backs, now learns that the Conservatives intend to cut further transfer payments due under the existing formula by $2 billion.

That money is earmarked for post-secondary education and medicare in all provinces, and for equalization payments in our less rich areas. Equalization payments are guaranteed in our Constitution in recognition of the importance of maintaining a certain level of essential services to all Canadians regardless of where they live in Canada.

To attack these payments, in addition to funds for health care and post-secondary education, proves that the Government cares little for the plight of ordinary Canadians. The Government claims that it is a tough but fair Budget. It is tough to those who need assistance, and very fair, indeed generous, to those who need to be taxed more in order to pay their share of the legitimate costs of government.

SUPPORT FOR FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has not been the only one who has undertaken an extensive pre-budget consultation process. Like all government Members, I have been involved in an extensive program of consultation with many business, social, and other groups in my riding. I try to meet with as many of my constituents as possible at every opportunity. I can say that during the last few months I have met with a very large number of constituents, and I would like to share with the House the results of my comprehensive consultation process.

In my riding I found overwhelming support for fiscal responsibility and a realistic Budget or, as the Minister of Finance and the rest of my constituents have called it, a tough Budget. However, there was an equally strong feeling that the Budget must also be fair—fair and equitable. They told me that we, as a Government, could not and should not lose sight of those people who truly required our assistance. I think all will agree that we did not lose sight of them. We have asked all Canadians to share the responsibility for the deficit, and we have also asked those who can, to assist us in dealing with it. I am confident that it is the sense of equity and fairness which will ensure that this tough Budget receives the overwhelming support of all Canadians.

IMPACT ON ECONOMY

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my support and that of my constituents for the Budget presented yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The measures contained in the Budget are realistic, effective and particularly equitable. We have made the decisions required to guarantee economic recovery and job creation. They were difficult decisions, but we had to come to grips with the situation, and that is something the Liberal Party has refused to do for too long.

Our Government's first priority is job creation. We want Canadians to have lasting and satisfactory jobs, particularly young people who want and need them.

Mr. Speaker, the Budget measures will create employment by encouraging private initiative, managing public affairs more efficiently and controlling the national debt. We have just turned a page of history and we are now beginning a new and challenging era.

IMPACT ON THE ELDERLY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): At 4.30 p.m. yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada heard about the full extent of the intentions of this Government and the Prime Minister. The whole country has been under dark clouds since 4.30 yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has struck a low blow to the 2.5 million elderly Canadians who will have to cope with a $100 income drop next year. What is more, the Government will also take $100 a year from needy senior citizens.

And as I suggested in a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who sees eye to eye with financiers, his Budget does not affect the 6,000 people with higher incomes ranging from $50,000 to $99,000, so they will still not pay any income tax.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada know now what the Government and the Prime Minister have in mind, and I sincerely hope they will defeat this Government in four years from now.

[English]

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the only farmers to receive relief in yesterday's Budget were those who have given up and are quitting. Otherwise, agriculture, an industry in crisis, was singled out for particularly severe impact. Consultation with farmers failed. Fifty million dollars per year in grants and contributions are being removed. The cost recovery program of $33 million is still in place, and is being added to by a cost recovery program for the Grain Commission. Cuts in transportation subsidies are being increased. There is no mortgage relief, no agri-bonds, no Section 31 relief for part-time farmers. Research is a low priority. Crop insurance assistance is being cut back. There is an increase of two cents per litre in energy cost which is not rebatable. There is a general increase of 1 per cent in excise tax on all farm inputs.

Rural Canada, which sent many Members to form the Conservative majority, has been betrayed again. Farmers out there planting today know that they are being squeezed once more by the Government.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

BENEFITS ACCRUING FROM BUDGET

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, while I am sure that Members would claim that their ridings are ideal spots for the establishment of research and development companies, I can say without any hesitation that I believe the riding of Sarnia-Lambton to be ideally suited to take advantage of the Budget's generous R and D provisions.

The Budget's refund of 100 per cent of the tax credit on the first $2 million of qualifying R and D will undoubtedly bring about the establishment of many new R and D firms and the increased R and D commitment of many other firms throughout Canada and, in particular, in my riding, which already has a significant R and D base.

This important provision will serve a twofold purpose. First, it will result in the creation of a number of small R and D businesses and, second, it will bring about an increased Canadian participation in the international high technology field. This relatively simple provision will create jobs, utilize Canada's abundant brainpower, and expand Canada's role in the high-tech field.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the main concern of Canadians is jobs, and yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated that the Budget's priority goal is jobs for Canadians.

In order to stimulate the investment needed to create those jobs, the Budget proposes a lifetime capital gains tax exemption of half a million dollars for every Canadian, measures to encourage greater investment in small business by pension funds, and a 100 per cent annual tax credit refund for qualifying research and development on the first $2 million of expenditures.

These measures, together with the Western Energy Accord, are aimed at promoting economic growth and creating jobs in the three areas of the economy most likely to result in the greatest and fastest response, small business, research and development, and the petroleum industry. The capital gains exemption, for example, should give small business a boost to expand. There are over 700,000 small businesses in Canada. If each of them can create just two jobs, our unemployment problem will be entirely solved.

Since the Government took office on September 4, over 200,000 new jobs have been created. There are still 1.4 million people looking for work. We must and we can do better. That is the Budget's primary objective, to create permanent jobs and get our country moving again.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is that time again, the time we have all been waiting for. I am pleased to present the Patronage Award of the Week, the PAW award. I know that many of the little piglets are looking forward to this. To those who are still waiting for the bacon, I say don't make a ham of yourself and just check every three hours with the Prime Minister's Office to see if you have been called to the trough. For bringing outstanding qualifications needed to fill their new appointments, the nominees for this week's award are:

Mr. Nunziata: William Hawkins.

Mr. Boudria: William Hawkins, a Conservative fund raiser appointed to the Textile and Clothing Board, who still has no idea why he was appointed.

Mr. Nunziata: Gayle Christie.

Mr. Boudria: Gayle Christie, the Duchess of York, appointed to the Board of Air Canada, who said she knew how to drive a car.

Mr. Nunziata: Marie Marchand.

Mr. Boudria: Marie Marchand of North Bay, who said that she was qualified because her grandfather was a well-known railroader in the Maritimes. Could I have the envelope, please. The patronage award this week is given to Marie Marchand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT FUNDING INITIATIVE

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it has become a tradition over the past two weeks in this House to follow the charge of the rodent brigade with a Survivor of the Week Award, but a major government initiative came out yesterday, and we thought perhaps they might be a little more responsible and a little more serious today. We do not have a survivor award today, and I do have a few words about our major initiative yesterday.

Today is the day for all Canadians to be proud of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberg: Eight months ago the country voted overwhelmingly for change, for new direction, for better management, for fiscal responsibility and, above all, Canadians voted for jobs. Since September 201,000 jobs have been created, 89,000 in April alone.

Ms. Copps: Where are they?

Mr. Schellenberg: Sheila, did anybody ever tell you that you are beautiful when you are angry?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberg: The Government recently allocated $900 million for private sector and community-based job creation programs, another $900 million to this innovative approach to job creation.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what is going to happen in Question Period, as if you don't know? First, the same group who defeated the realistic Crosbie Budget in 1979 will get up and try to do the same thing again. They are not going to do it. Those negative nellies are not going to do it. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), from Howe Street, or Bay Street, wherever he is from, will give us some of the same destructive criticism that his finance critic gave us yesterday. That is irresponsible, Mr. Speaker. Canadian citizens demand more.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

• (1115)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

IMPACT OF TAX MEASURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday's Budget was quite simply an attack on the elderly, the poor, and the middle class. Derived from the Minister's own Budget Papers, I would like to state some facts that he viciously hid from Canadians yesterday. By 1990 a family with an income of $15,000 per year will pay 36 per cent more in taxes. By 1990 a family with an income of $30,000 will pay 11 per cent more in taxes. But a family with an income of $100,000 per year will only pay 4 per cent more in taxes by 1990. On top of that, wealthy Canadians with money to invest will receive a lifetime cash bonus of $125,000. In light of those facts, I would ask the Minister if that is his idea of a fair Budget.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians understand that with the way the Leader of the Opposition has played with figures this time, and the way he played with figures last time, no one is going to believe the figures that he puts out.

I think one of the things that has characterized the response of a broad range of people to this Budget is that it has been fair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Everyone has been asked to share a little bit of the burden in order to get the budget deficit and the accumulating debt problem under control. I think that asking each Canadian to pay a little bit is supported.

The Hon. Member spoke of the elderly. I think that many of the elderly are very worried today about the burden that is being left for their grandchildren. If we do not get on top of that problem there will be a very, very serious situation that will have to be dealt with by future generations.

INVESTMENT TAX EXEMPTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the figures I recited come from page 74 of the Minister's own Budget Papers. Next year the average Canadian family will be nailed with a tax increase of somewhere between $350 and $500 per year. A wealthy Canadian with money to invest will receive a cash bonanza over a lifetime of $125,000. The Minister explained yesterday in his budget speech that that was to stimulate Canadian business. Why did he not limit the application of that exemption to investment in small Canadian-owned business, or to Canadian companies listed on the Canadian Stock Exchange? Why did he allow this exemption to apply to investment in Florida real estate, or European art? My question really boils down to why did the Minister pay as much attention to Miami Beach as he did to Thunder Bay.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, over the years a lot of money has gone to Miami Beach because people did not have the confidence to invest their money in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): This Budget and other actions that we have taken are creating an atmosphere and environment in Canada that will draw those billions of dollars that have left Canada in the last five years back to Canada to create jobs here, not in Miami Beach.

• (1120)

I would like to make one more point if I may, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member is a lawyer. He knows that if we put those rules into the tax system it would result in a tremendously complex tax system. He also knows that people would be able to find ways around it. So, we are not going to put a picket fence on it; we are going to give them the environment so they can put their money into Canada to create jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

IMPLEMENTATION OF DIRECT TAX INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to protest against the less obvious aspects of the income tax increases announced by the Minister yesterday afternoon.

As a result of de-indexing, the taxable income of Canadians will rise 3 per cent annually. Family allowance cheques will drop 3 per cent, year after year. Old Age Security pensions will go down 3 per cent. In 1989, Canadians receiving Old Age Security benefits will lose $30 a month, with the Government taking advantage of this massive tax increase, notwithstanding inflation.

My question is as follows: Did the Minister take this step because he knew that Canadian men and women would be flatly opposed to a direct tax increase as sizeable as these stealthily introduced increases will be?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the position which we have taken is not a sneaky position as the Hon. Member has said. We have been up front. We have stated very clearly exactly what we are going to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There will be full protection against inflation for those in need—people who are receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement. There will be modified protection for those who are above that, who have more money. We have said that there will be a very potent form of insurance for those people, that if inflation rises higher than 3 per cent they will receive some protection. But I underline the fact that the OAS will not be reduced. It will be increased over the years if inflation is greater than 3 per cent.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENTAL PROJECTIONS BE TABLED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. When it comes to imposing new taxes, cutting programs, or giving benefits to the rich, his Budget was clear, detailed, and immediate; as it was with the granting of $125,000 capital gains tax cut to those who are selling their yachts, diamonds, and paintings, or when he cut $78 million from high skilled job training this year. But when it comes to job creation his Budget is vague, obscure, and hypothetical. He is asking Canadians to pay for the Western Energy Accord now with high taxes, and he is offering them pie in the sky in the future with respect to job creation.

Will the Minister immediately table in the House the projections of his Department with respect to the job losses which will result from the Budget? Will he be as clear-cut with the Canadian people on job losses as he is with taxes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Budget is about jobs. It will create jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is also a clear break from the past. The Hon. Member is looking for that little security blanket that tells him that something will happen because the computer says it will happen. Let me remind him that the 50,000 to 100,000 jobs which his Leader said would be lost as a result of the November 8 statement, turned into a very large number of jobs being created. I believe about 143,000 jobs have been created since then, and 200,000 jobs have been created since this Government took office. This demonstrates to me that the Canadian people are responding to the positive and different approach we are taking, and that will continue, reinforced by this Budget.

• (1125)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

JOB CREATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

When the Minister removes $1.2 billion from the Canadian economy with his new taxes and program cutbacks for 1985-86, according to a macro-economic analysis, the result will be a loss of between 125,000 and 150,000 jobs, and this does not include, for instance, Public Service cutbacks and the cutbacks in Cape Breton. By what strange logic does the Minister figure that his Budget will increase employment? By how much? And in what occupations? In what regions of this country? Just for once, is the Minister going to be honest with Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the people said after the November statement, and people are saying today, that we have been honest with the Canadian people. It's all out front. It's all there for them to see.

The Hon. Member is asking for numbers. His Party said in November that there would be 50,000 to 100,000 jobs lost. It was wrong then, and it is going to be wrong again today. Let me remind the Hon. Member that, without the benefit of a computer model, 89,000 jobs were created in the month of April. That is the largest single increase in jobs in five years. That will happen again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINIMUM TAX FOR THE RICH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During the election campaign, the Prime Minister promised to introduce a minimum income tax for the rich. In November, in this very House, the Prime Minister again promised us the same tax for the rich. In the Budget, however, the Government has found several new ways of increasing the average family's income tax by $500. My question to the Prime Minister is as follows: Why was the Government unable to find a single way to introduce a minimum income tax for the rich in this Budget?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought the Leader of the New Democratic Party would be congratulating us for introducing, for the first time, a special tax on banks and trust companies—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —and a special tax on the richest people in our society. In consultation with the provinces, a minimum income tax program has already been announced for the 1986 fiscal year. I think this is already a tremendous step towards achieving equity across the country, and I think that is what comes across in the Budget speech.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that what the Government took away with one hand from the banks, it gave back with the other hand. But we will get to that in the debate later on.

SITUATION OF BANK PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Prime Minister deals with his alleged concern about fairness in the tax system and his often cited reference to his friend, the $500,000 a year bank president, about whom he used to talk. Will the Prime Minister candidly admit to the House that the Government, which has imposed a $500 tax increase on the average family in this Budget, will this year permit his $500,000 a year friend, the bank president, to get away without paying a cent in taxes? Will he admit that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this Budget has introduced a number of measures which are clearly fair to a broad range of Canadians.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That individual is going to be paying a major surtax. I am somewhat reluctant to state the amount of the surtax for someone who is earning $500,000, because it is a very large amount of money. But for the persons making $200,000, I believe the amount is $4,700 more—

• (1130)

Mr. Deans: If they pay tax.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that they will be paying in taxes. The Hon. Member asked why we have not been precise about a minimum tax this year. That is because both Saskatchewan and Quebec have introduced two different types of minimum tax and we want to make sure there will be a broad range of harmony across the tax system in Canada, with the same minimum tax and the greatest amount of harmonization between the tax systems of the various provinces.

Mr. Broadbent: All I will say to that is that the Government did not care one hoot about harmony across the country when it imposed taxes on ordinary working families right across the board.

SURTAX INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister has decided to opt out of any defence of his failure to bring in a minimum on the rich, I will go back to the Minister of Finance.

Will the Minister admit to the House that the surtax which he has talked about introducing will not be paid at all by someone who has no tax payable; that all the incentives he has built into his Budget will encourage more people to become part of that very inclusive category of rich people who do not have to pay any tax, and they will not have to pay his surtax at all? Is this the Tory concept of fairness, $500 in taxes for the average family, and the rich go scot-free again?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Hon. Member that taxation must be introduced in a fair way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: You don't need to tell me that.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): This Budget addresses the question of new taxes in a fair way. We did not do it the way the previous Government did in 1981 when there were 35 retroactive changes in taxes. That has not been done this time because we want to ensure that people who are paying additional taxes will be paying them in a fair way.

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF CAPE BRETON HEAVY WATER PLANTS

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am glad he used the term "honesty" because he ought to know that his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, on two specific occasions—

Mr. Tobin: And the Prime Minister.

Mr. Dingwall: —and the Prime Minister indicated their commitment to the heavy water plants. I want to quote the following words used by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources:

> My plans to close the two heavy water plants will not proceed before alternate employment can be found for displaced workers.

Will the Minister of Finance explain to this House why he and his officials, and the Prime Minister, have deceived the people of Nova Scotia? Why are they implementing a Scheffer-ville solution to the chronic regional disparities in the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think we have been honest and direct with the people of Cape Breton. They know, and the Hon. Member knows, that to spend $200,000 per job just to keep two heavy water plants operating, when there is no market for their product, is a deception on the people of Cape Breton, and we have addressed that problem.

What we have put in their place, consistent with what the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said, is the most generous tax package ever made available to any region of the country, an investment tax credit which affects the broadest range of economic activity possible. The result will be that for almost any new investment in Cape Breton there will be no corporate tax paid for the next 10 years.

Mr. Dingwall: So much for the Minister's honesty.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a commitment that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made to have jobs for the displaced workers, and there are no jobs. Why don't you stand in your place and come clean with the people of Canada and admit that you deceived them in the election, you deceived them on November 8, and you deceived them now? Will the Minister explain why it is fair to give the multinational oil companies $1.3 billion in tax advantages when he cannot find enough money for additional job creation funds? Explain the fairness there?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, so there is no deception here, why doesn't the Hon. Member come clean and tell us all that he is running for the leadership of the Liberal Party of Nova Scotia?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Wrong again.

Some Hon. Members: Wrong again.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You mean they don't want him?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The little twitch in the corner of the Hon. Member's lips betrays the announcement he made the other night.

Mr. Speaker, let me be quite clear. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is in Cape Breton today setting out clearly—

Mr. Broadbent: He will be lucky to get out alive.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —what the Government's plans are regarding the people who are losing their jobs resulting from the closure of the heavy water plants. He will also be announcing the arrangements that will be made for those people, how we will be able to help them in finding new employment, and how we are going to establish an advisory committee to come up with—

Mr. Speaker: Order. With great respect.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —to replace those jobs.

Mr. Speaker: This answer is too long. Under the circumstances, a very short supplementary.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): For the record, Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday evening I informed my constituents that I will not be a candidate for the leadership of the Nova Scotia Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: After this Budget the opportunity is here. Why is the Minister of Finance playing cheap partisan politics with the lives of these people? When will he come clean with the people of Canada and admit that his Budget is for the rich and is definitely against Atlantic Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Nova Scotia has been saved.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Not by you.

Mr. Dingwall: So much for integrity.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are very sensitive to the position of the people of Cape Breton. That is why the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is there now. He is not walking away from the problem. He has gone there to meet with the people and lay out, in very clear terms, the various ways we are going to address the problems they are facing and at the same time do more for the economy of Cape Breton than has been the case with those heavy water plants which everyone in Nova Scotia, including Cape Breton, knew had to be closed. We are meeting a problem here, but we are meeting it in a way that will make for a healthier economy and a more permanent degree of job creation in Cape Breton.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. He indicated yesterday that his Budget would be a very fair one. He will also be aware that there are 500,000 young people unemployed during this International Year of Youth. There are also 600,000 women in Canada who are jobless today. Yet the Budget failed to set aside any amount of money for direction job creation. By his own admission in this Budget, unemployment will remain at 10 per cent or more for the rest of the decade. Why has the Minister decided to allow these very high levels of unemployment to continue? Is this his idea of fairness?

Miss MacDonald: You have got to be kidding.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): There is only scattered applause for that question, and for a very good reason. Back in November his Leader and the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor said we were going to destroy 50,000 to 100,000 jobs. In April some 89,000 jobs were created, the majority of which were for women.

We are not doing this in the way that the NDP would like us to, and that the Liberals did during their term in office. We have said that this is a clear break from the past. We are going to encourage and motivate the private sector, particularly the small business people, to get out and build the country and create those jobs for women and younger people. In that way we will solve the unemployment problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUDGET IMPACT STUDIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in spite of what the Minister of Finance has just said, by his own admission unemployment levels will remain in excess of 10 per cent for the rest of the decade. I got that from the Budget.

The Minister's officials in the Department of Finance indicated that studies have been done to evaluate the impact of the Budget on the various regions of Canada and on the various sectors of the economy in terms of job creation. If the Minister of Finance has the confidence which he says he has in this Budget, will he table those impact studies to give us all a chance to see the impact on the regions of Canada and the various sectors of our economy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member put the same question to me in November. The result in job impact that we have seen since that time is far in excess of what the computer model said at that time that it would be. Therefore, the Hon. Member should not go around with a little black cloud over his head as he has time and again in the past. He should have confidence in the people of Canada. He should have confidence in the future and watch the jobs being created.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GENERAL TAX INCREASE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Government promised a tough but fair Budget. It seems that middle and low-income families have been singled out for most of the tough treatment and little of the fair treatment. For the nearly 60 per cent of Canadian families earning less than $25,000 a year, this Budget is brutal.

On March 1 the Minister said that he was not in favour of general tax increases lest they "dampen the economy". Will the Minister tell the House what caused the 180 degree turn before March 1 and May 22?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): There is no 180 degree turn, Mr. Speaker. I said at that time that my preference was not for a general tax increase in the sense of having an increase in the rates. I have said that the impact that we want from this Budget must be seen to be fair. The decisions that we have put in place today will result in 80 per cent of deficit cutting coming from expenditure reductions, and only 20 per cent coming from tax increases. Those tax increases are spread over a broad range of things and people in the country, and have been regarded as fair. Everyone is sharing in it. Everyone is shouldering some of the burden. I think the result will be a much more optimistic outlook, particularly as it relates to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech. The Hon. Member for Trinity on a supplementary question.

EFFECT ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Budget is bad news for middle and low-income Canadians, but for the 1.4 million unemployed it is a disaster. We need growth to make any real reduction in unemployment. The Budget Papers anticipate GNP growth of only 2.4 per cent in 1986, half the rate when the Liberal Government was in power in 1984. The Budget Papers say that in 1985 consumption spurred economic growth. This Budget strips spending power from the average—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question please.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Will the Minister admit that his Budget measures not only dampen the economy but may choke off recovery, and that as a result even the slight reduction of unemployment which he projects for 1986 will not be attainable?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to use numbers, let me ask her to comment on this. Two hundred and one thousand jobs—

Mr. Gauthier: No, you are answering the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am answering the question. Two hundred and one thousand jobs were created since September 1. In the previous year, over the same period when the Liberals were in power, 72,000 jobs were created.

Mr. Axworthy: Two hundred and fifty-five thousand. Quit lying, Wilson.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member has asked a specific question, Mr. Speaker. She wants to know what we are doing through this Budget for the 1.4 million Canadians without jobs. What we are doing is telling 700,000 small businesses that they will have a tremendous impact on unemployment if they create one or two jobs each. If they do that, many of those people will be able to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is supposed to be Question Period.

EFFECT ON FAMILIES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): My question is also directed to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister gave a $500,000 capital gains gift to the rich and $2 billion to the oil companies, while he reduced indexation of family allowances and old age pensions. He cut child benefits for families and provided no jobs for the unemployed. How can he say that this is being fair to Canadian families?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has forgotten that there are many small business people who will receive the benefits of that capital gains exemption. Many farmers will receive the benefits of that capital gains exemption. Many people will receive jobs as a result of the encouragement to small business which has been given by that capital gains exemption.

The Hon. Member should allow her mind to expand a little bit to try to understand the new directions that we are staking out in this Budget. It is a break from the past, and it will result in better job creation in the future.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister would allow his mind to expand to consider the many poor people in the country who are getting no benefits at all.

IMPACT OF TAX INCREASES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): How can the Minister say that he is being fair to families with the greatest need in the country, most of which are headed by women, when with one hand he gives them a measly $70 increase in the Child Tax Credit, and with the other zaps them with something like $500 a year in increased taxes and additional costs? Poor families have to pay these costs in the same amounts as rich families. There are increased costs for shampoo and drinks for kids, pet food, gas, and even heating the home.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is forgetting that in the past 15 years the Government has gone from a surplus position to a $36 billion deficit position. No new jobs were created during that period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: That is a bunch of nonsense. Come on, Wilson.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If deficits were going to solve that job problem, it would be long since solved. We are asking Canadians to share in a broad range of things on a very reasonable and fair basis. I would like to stress once again that 80 per cent of the actions taken to reduce the deficit are through reduced spending, and only 20 per cent are through increased taxation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY BENEFIT PROGRAMS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I would like to remind him of some more broken commitments, promises, and sacred trusts. Many times during the last election campaign, and in the months since, we heard the Government say that any savings that result from adjustments to the social spending program would never be used to reduce the size of the federal deficit, but would in fact be used to target those groups in our society which need help the most.

If that is true, Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance explain why, in today's dollar terms, there will be $350 million less annually in the child benefits packages in 1990 than there is today? If he has done that, I want a commitment from him to replace that $350 million loss to enable poor Canadians to live comfortably, as well as the people who are getting tax breaks from capital gains.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member was going to stand up and congratulate me for the tremendous introduction of broad reform in the pension area. That is something with which he has been very much associated, and which is very far reaching. We said we would not make changes in the social programs and the family benefit programs, that they would not be redirected into the social envelope. That has been done.

Mr. Broadbent: It has not been done.

An Hon. Member: Again you lie.

IMPACT OF BUDGET

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, just for the record, there has been a $350 million disappearing act with this, and I can explain it afterward.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murta: To whom?

Mr. Frith: The Government said that it wanted to target more funds to people in our society who need help more. If that is true, Mr. Speaker, will the Finance Minister explain to me and to Canadians how it is that in terms of 1985 dollars every family earning $12,000 a year and more will lose money from the child benefits package?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has failed to notice that we have responded to something he raised in this House in November, the fact that people who were earning $10,000 or $15,000, from their family benefits were receiving less than those who were earning $20,000 and $30,000. We have raised that amount—

Mr. Tobin: If the Minister would tell the truth, we would listen.

Ms. Copps: They all receive less.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If I can finish for the loudmouths on the other side, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have increased that amount so that everybody who is earning—I think the break even point is about $25,000—$25,000 or less, will be earning more in their family benefits after these changes are phased in.

An Hon. Member: No.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Read us half a letter.

Mr. Waddell: I would like to challenge him on his notion of fairness with respect to the energy aspects of the Budget. The Minister is aware that in the Western Energy Accord the Government gave about $2 billion to the oil companies, much of it in windfalls for old oil that was even in the ground already.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Why did the Minister say to us in the House and to the Canadian consumers, through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that the consumers would not suffer as a result of all that money being given to the oil companies? Why does the Minister think it fair that the Canadian motorist should be hosed in this Budget to pay for all that money in tax breaks that went to the oil industry?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are learning new things every day. I thought oil always came out of the ground. Is the Hon. Member telling me something different? Does it come from the sky?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): To the NDP it is like money; it is supposed to grow on trees.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What I think the Hon. Member continues to fail to understand is that the increased cash flow that will be generated by the oil companies will be reinvested in the economy—

Mr. Deans: How do you know?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —will be creating jobs right across the country, including Vancouver-Kingsway—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The record speaks for itself.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It will be creating those jobs and making this country a healthier place. We have identified the oil industry as being the real engine of growth.

Mr. Deans: You have to pay to keep the engine running.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is why we say it is fair in the broad context of this Budget to encourage things like the oil and gas industry which will be creating the jobs that all Members opposite say we should be creating.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister reads Shakespeare. He may remember one of those witches in Macbeth who said: "So fair and foul a day I have not seen".

USE OF GASOLINE TAX

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Let me ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. This is a foul Budget. He is giving away $9 billion to the oil companies over the next five years. He still has to get more money from the Canadian motorists to pay for it. Is it his notion of fairness that the Canadian motorist, the fisherman, and the farmer, will have to pay all that money that went to the oil companies, which is just a hope and a prayer of creating jobs compared to the money being taken out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians at the gas pumps?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member calls it a hope and a prayer. We have confidence in the small business community—

Mr. Broadbent: He is talking about the oil companies.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In the oil and gas community to create those jobs. I want to refer the Hon. Member to the fact that since the Energy Accord was announced $3.6 nillion worth of new projects has been announced. That is how the jobs will be created, and that is why this Budget will be fair, and will be seen to be fair right across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION—APPLICATION TO FARMS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. While I applaud the lifetime capital gains exemption included in the Budget, why did the Minister stop at $500,000? Why did the Minister not act on the recommendation of the all-Party finance committee to abolish it altogether? Since the Minister did not, can he at least assure this House and the agricultural community that the intergenerational tax free transfer of farm lands will be available to help preserve the family farm?

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister is a flaming socialist, according to that Member.

Mr. de Cotret: It is a better question than from the Opposition.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me respond directly to the Hon. Member. We looked at whether it was possible to have an unlimited exemption for farm properties—

Mr. Broadbent: That is next year.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —as had been requested by a number of Members representing the farm community. We felt that was not possible under the current financial circumstances of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Deans: Later.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): However, we did put in a limit which I think was consistent with what the finance committee had recommended. We have also maintained the intergenerational roll-over so that farmers will be able to pass on their farms to the next generation without any payment of capital gains.

OLD AGE SECURITY—INDEXATION OF BASIC PENSION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

In his Budget yesterday the Minister decided to cut $2.5 million off the pension income of elderly Canadians through a reduction in pension income indexation. In addition, the Minister struck a low blow to the poorest senior citizens of Canada, those who receive the guaranteed income supplement. Is the Minister aware—

Some Hon. Members: That is not true.

Mr. Malépart: Is the Minister aware of the fact that the income of a person alone who gets the old age security pension amounts to $605.20 a month? This income is made up of the $368 monthly income supplement which will still be indexed—

Some Hon. Members: Ah, ah!

Mr. Malépart: —and the $276 basic pension, that is the total old age security pension—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Malépart: Here is my question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister explain why he did not maintain full basic pension indexation for the 1.3 million senior citizens who receive the guaranteed income supplement?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the preamble and the question itself are misleading and create a false impression in the House.

I would like to assure all Canadians who are receiving the GIS that it will continue to be indexed to the consumer price index. The people who are receiving old age security will receive indexation protection over an inflation rate of 3 per cent.

Ms. Copps: In other words, it will go down by 3 per cent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for a short supplementary question.

CUTS TO PENSION INCOME OF THE ELDERLY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Minister of Finance explain what social justice criteria prompted him to launch an immediate attack against the elderly by reducing their pension income, while at the same time he could not find any justification—

Some Hon. Members: That is completely false.

Mr. Malépart: —for going after the 6,000 Canadians who earn $50,000 or more and do not pay any income tax?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize. I was listening to the translation, and it sounds to me from the translation that the premise of the Hon. Member's question is false.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will be happy to discuss the matter with him afterward. What I said in my first response is that people who are receiving the guaranteed income supplement will receive full indexation on the GIS.

An Hon. Member: What about the base?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): On the OAS they will continue to receive indexation protection, inflation protection, over 3 per cent. I believe Canadians who are looking at the results of what has happened over the past 10 to 15 years, Canadians who are very sensitive to the ravages of inflation, are very sensitive to the impact of the deficit on inflation, are prepared to make a small sacrifice in the interest —

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PENSIONS

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we saw a Budget which gave $500,000 to the rich, another $2 billion to the oil companies, and a 3 per cent cut in old age pensions. Earlier in Question Period the Minister of Finance said that the Government was being honest with Canadians. Was he also being honest with Canadians when he promised during the election campaign to index the OAS fully? Was he honest with Canadians when he promised a standing committee of the House that pensions would not be touched in any Budget? Was that a sacred trust that the Prime Minister promised? I think he was being totally dishonest with the Canadian people.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the thrust of this Budget is to encourage small business people to create jobs. There will be many new jobs created by the encouragement of those small business people. Perhaps the Hon. Member has forgotten that there are many small business people who aren't rich Canadians but who are looking to build something for themselves, something for their children, and to leave something of real positive benefit to the country. That is the kind of Canadian we are trying to encourage.

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances, on a very short supplementary question, the Hon. Member for Beaches.

ELECTION STATEMENT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, when the statement was made during the election campaign that a PC Government would once more index the OAS to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis, was the Minister of Finance being honest with Canadians then?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I explained very clearly in the Budget yesterday that it was important for us, for all Canadians, to come to grips with the very serious deficit and accumulating debt problem facing us. The debt of the country has been growing three times faster than the economy of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Hon. Members say "Oh"; they do not care about that. I will tell them that there are many elderly people who are very worried about that and about the fact that government previously had done nothing to attack that problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I believe the response I have heard to date from elderly Canadians—

Mr. Broadbent: What have you heard from pensioners?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Pensioners are saying to me: "If you don't deal with that deficit—"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, come on!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): "—you are going to leave either an enormous problem for our children, or you are going to inflate this country away so that our pensions, the pensions we have today, will just be lost in a pool of red ink."

POINT OF ORDER

TELEVISION COVERAGE OF BUDGET SPEECH

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on what I hope will be a very brief point of order to ask you to look into a matter which I noted yesterday during the delivery of the Budget by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I had occasion yesterday to watch the proceedings on the monitor in the opposition lobby. The monitor, as I watched it, showed coverage of the House of Commons which, in my opinion—and I think with the benefit of your having viewed it perhaps it may well be Your Honour's opinion—was quite different from the coverage normally provided of the proceedings of the House.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, during the proceedings of the House it has been the practice agreed upon by the House that the coverage would focus narrowly on the person who was making the address and not on any other individual, nor would it show any other but a very tight picture of that person on his or her feet.

Yesterday the coverage showed extensive participation by Conservative Members on the government side of the House on a number of occasions, in particular during those occasions when the Minister of Finance paused in order to allow his colleagues to applaud as they had been hyped up to do.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I want to ask you, Sir, if you would be kind enough, if you have not already done it, to view the coverage of yesterday's proceedings and to determine whether in fact there was a breach of the normally accepted practice which was approved in the past by all Parties; and, if that breach did occur, to find out under whose direction that breach took place; and to ensure in the future that if there is to be any deviation from that coverage which has been accepted by Members of the House of Commons as suitable to our purposes, that that matter be discussed in advance, not only with the Speaker, but with representatives of each of the Parties, in order to ensure that there is agreement on the change.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief comment on the point of order raised by the NDP House Leader. When television was brought into this Chamber, it was on the basis that it would be an electronic Hansard, an electronic record of the debate. Any departure from that concept is something which I think should not take place without careful consideration and the agreement of all Parties. I would urge you, Sir, to look into this matter and respond, in your wisdom, on the basis of the principle which was established when the broadcasting of the House of Commons began some years ago.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I just want to comment briefly on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). When Your Honour enters into an examination of the coverage of that particular debate, which has been brought about by the fact that the Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party and all his caucus were apparently watching it on the monitor in the course of delivery, I ask you to consider looking back at the precedents established on prior budget debates. I have been around here a couple of years and I remember the kind of coverage they were given. Granted, I have not seen what coverage was given of it yesterday, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there were wide-angle shots on the occasion of every major budget delivery and there has been panning of the House. This technique is not unusual on the basis of precedents.

I simply say that I understand the rules are there, and I am not asking for any exception with respect to any particular circumstance because we happen to be in Government.

Mr. Fulton: The question, Ray, is: Who told them to do it?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, that is unworthy of the Hon. Member. He knows that the Speaker is in charge of the television system, and to accuse the Speaker of directing them to use the coverage is unworthy of him, even in the circumstances we have today.

Mr. Speaker: As Hon. Members know, I will look into the matter. Of course I will consult all the precedents, all the practices and all the rules. Perhaps it would be helpful if we just left the matter for me to look into, as I was requested to do in the beginning.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from 250 citizens of Kitchener who are protesting the damage done to the unemployed by the Government's fiscal policy. They are also pointing to the special unemployment problems of middle-aged and older workers. I expect that it will be the first of many such petitions now that the Budget has been brought in.

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many residents of Windsor, Ontario, protesting the change in the unemployment insurance program whereby severance pay would be used in calculating unemployment insurance benefits.

ASSISTANCE FOR BATTERED WOMEN

Question No. 273—Mrs. Killens:

1. Since May, 1982, were changes made to the RCMP training programs regarding battered or molested women and, if so, what were they?

2. (a) Between September, 1980 and May, 1982 (b) from May, 1982 to date, did the Government allocate any moneys to the financing of initial capital projects regarding new emergency and permanent transition homes for battered women, under the Canada Assistance Plan or any federal-provincial cost sharing agreement and, if so, in each case (i) in what amount (ii) how many emergency or permanent transition houses were established and how many women and children were thus accommodated?

3. Since May, 1982, for each project to which funds were allocated, were the federal funds mentioned in part 2(b) allotted to personal and day care costs or to building costs only?

4. Concerning the funds mentioned in parts 2(a) and 2(b) respectively, for what period were the funds allocated to each project?

5. Since May, 1982 (a) how many housing units subsidized by CMHC did the Corporation order set aside for emergency or permanent transition houses for battered women and their children (b) what percentage of all housing units presently subsidized by CMHC do these units represent (c) where are they located (d) what percentage of CMHC-subsidized housing units built since 1982 do these units represent (e) how many women and children presently occupy these units and what percentage of the total number of persons presently living in CMHC-subsidized accommodation do these women and children represent?

6. What amount was repaid to companies who were relieved from repaying unemployment insurance premiums by this decision?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Health and Welfare, the Solicitor General of Canada and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. Yes. (i) Induction training: Human Relations Training. Victimology—Police position in conflict situations. Duration: Previously three hours, now five hours. Legal aspects of domestic intervention. Duration: Previously two hours, now four hours. Applied police intervention. Duration: Previously seven hours, now 15 hours. Globe theatre live scenarios. Ethical Conduct. Ethics and professionalism. Duration: Previously two hours, now six hours.

(ii) In-service training. Investigator's Course (10 days). Family violence, child abuse, elderly, spousal assaults. Duration: Previously one half day, now two days. Victims and witnesses of crime. Duration: Previously one half day, now one day.

(iii) Canadian Police College Courses. Crisis and conflict intervention (10 days). A new session has been inserted on victimology. Duration: one half day. Another new session was added on social agency linking. Duration: one half day.

2. (a) and (b) (i) (ii) There are no programs in the Department of National Health and Welfare, including the Canada Assistance Plan, designed for the financing of initial capital projects regarding new emergency and permanent transition homes for battered women.

The Canada Assistance Plan (CAP) enables federal sharing in the costs to provinces and municipalities of providing a wide range of assistance benefits to needy victims of family violence. These benefits include social assistance allowances, subsidized legal services, assistance with the cost of non-insured medical expenses, maintenance of the family in a transitional home or other sheltered environment. The families may also benefit from services such as day care for children, home support, crisis intervention and counselling, employment support and information/referral services.

As mentioned, one of the forms of assistance to needy victims of family violence is the maintenance of the family in a sheltered environment. These sheltered environments may be hostels, supportive living environments, group homes or transition homes. In 1983-84 cost sharing was effected on behalf of needy women and their children in 63 transition and crisis centres in the country. It is not possible to estimate the number of victims of family violence who have received assistance under CAP. These programs are administered by the provinces and statistics are not available.

For more detailed information, see replies to questions Nos. 35 and 36 answered April 2, 1985.

3. Costs related to the maintenance of victims of family violence in transition homes are rolled up in a per diem fee which is agreed upon by the home and the province or municipality supporting it and then cost shared on behalf of needy residents through the Canada Assistance Plan. Per diem fees reflect operating costs of the homes such as rent, utilities, food, salaries of staff engaged in the administration of the home and the provision of services such as child care, as well as travel and training costs of staff.

4. Cost sharing under CAP is not time limited. Federal support of transition homes begins from the date of the first provincial/municipal contribution to the homes on behalf of needy residents and continues for as long as the provinces and municipalities continue to pay on behalf of needy residents.

5. (a) 471 hostel beds have been provided in transition houses for battered women since January 1, 1982, under the Non-Profit Housing Program, with subsidy assistance under Section 56.1 of the National Housing Act.

(b) These beds represent 0.14 per cent of the total estimated 328,442* units receiving subsidy assistance as of December 31, 1984.

(d) The 471 hostel beds represent 0.63 per cent of the total of approximately 75,200 units committed since January 1, 1982 under all social housing programs.

(e) No statistics are available to the total number of occupants in housing subsidized under the Non-Profit Housing Program. The potential is for 471 women and children to be housed, when the recently approved projects are completed.

*A breakdown of these units includes:
Public housing (incl. rent supplement)	235,570 units
Rural and native housing	13,872 units
Non-profit and co-operatives	79,000 units

6. Through the National Welfare Grants program, the Department of National Health and Welfare provided a project contribution to the Yukon Women's Transition Home Society in order to test the feasibility of a multi-purpose service to northern and rural women. The project explored workable ways of offering outreach and residential services for victims of family violence as well as women in transition from treatment and correctional centres and women in need of a wide range of community services. Funding for the project began in 1979. In 1982-83 and 1983-84, National Welfare Grants provided a total of $64,732.

In addition, the Canada Assistance Plan shares on an ongoing basis in costs to the provinces of conducting welfare research and of planning new or innovative methods of delivering welfare programs. Since such costs are usually included in the general provincial costs of administering welfare programs, it is not possible to isolate them.

GRANTS TO MUSEUMS

Question No. 298—Mr. Lapierre:

1. Has a government department contributed an $800,000 grant to the museum of Sept Isles and, if so (a) which one (b) under which program (c) what criteria was used to assess the grant?

2. How many other grants, and in what amounts, were allocated to museums under the same program?

3. What is the government's policy on museum funding?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications):

1. Yes. (a) The Department of Communications. (b) The Special Program of Cultural Initiatives. (c) The objective of the capital assistance component of the Special Program of Cultural Initiatives is to provide increased public access to the professional Canadian performing and visual arts and to Canadian heritage collections. Applications under this component must be submitted by non-profit, incorporated cultural organizations, municipal or regional governments and

(a) must have a direct and immediate bearing on the provision or the improvement of facilities for both the public and the artists involved;

(b) must demonstrate a provincial or territorial commitment to cost-sharing of the project.

Consultations between the federal departments and agencies and the provincial governments are undertaken as required.

2. During the fiscal years 1983-84 and 1984-85, the following contributions to museums were approved under the capital assistance component of the Special Program:

Fondation Marc Aurèle Fortin	$ 98,000
Musée universel de la chasse et de la nature	50,000
Musée d'art de Joliette	125,000
Nunatta Sunaqutangit Museum	100,000
Lake of the Woods Museum	150,000
Société du Musée du Séminaire de Québec	300,000

3. The capital assistance component of the Special Program of Cultural Initiatives was designed to ensure that a network of cultural facilities is developed across Canada which will provide greater access to the professional performing and visual arts, museums and heritage collections, for Canadians in every region of the country. Financial assistance can be made available to Canadian non-profit incorporated organizations or municipal or regional governments.

The Museum Assistance Programs of the National Museums of Canada's National Programs provide financial and technical assistance to qualifying museums, art galleries, exhibition centres and related associations and other non-profit institutions and organizations, to help further the objectives of the National Museum Policy. These objectives are to increase physical and intellectual access to our natural, cultural and technological heritage as represented in collections across Canada, and to ensure that these collections are preserved for the benefit of present and future generations.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Thursday, May 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, as we end the hockey season and enter the baseball season, I would like to remind the House, particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), of his famous namesake who played for the Giants and the Chicago Cubs, Hack Wilson. On reading the history of the National League, I see that Hack probably received more razzing than any other player in the circuit, particularly when he struck out, which was often. The Minister of Finance struck out yesterday. We say to him very sincerely that we are disappointed that he did.

We Liberals have a view of budgets which I would like to deal with briefly. We believe that budgets are to serve people. They are to provide Canadian people with working opportunities, an equitable and a fair tax system and, to draw upon the words of the great Sir Wilfrid Laurier, we as Liberals must strive to raise ever higher the standard of life and of living of Canadians. That is what budgets are designed to do, or should be designed to do. Laurier was not speaking of just some Canadians. He was speaking of all Canadians in all regions of this great country, in all sectors—agriculture, fisheries, forestry, mines, plant workers et cetera.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we in the Liberal Party believe the Budget should serve all Canadians and not just one group of Canadians.

[English]

We see the strength and the growth of the economy as imperative, not for the economy's sake, but for the people's sake. The economy is there to serve the people of Canada. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to other Members of this House that this Budget handed down by our Minister of Finance establishes a clear line of demarcation between Conservative ideology on the one hand and Liberal principles on the other.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Liberals have believed, continue and always will believe that the private sector is the engine of growth in this country. The Tories say they do too. What is the difference? Liberals define the private sector as comprising all Canadians: children, youth, consumers, the unemployed, working men and women, the elderly, the retired, business and labour. For Liberals, all Canadians constitute the private sector. The Tories define the private sector as comprising only the business community and those who can afford to invest. We as Liberals say that the kind of growth that this country requires, the jobs that we require need the participation of all Canadians, not just the business community and those who can afford to invest. All must participate in this growth and all must benefit from it.

That is not the case with this Budget. Here we have a first class example of the celebrated trickle-down theory. John Kenneth Galbraith, as you know, refers to this approach as horse and sparrow economics. You feed the horse enough and you hope and pray that something will be left over for the sparrows. Even worse, in this Budget there is such a heavy tax burden on Canadian consumers that demand will be dampened, unemployment will increase and, moreover, inflation will increase. The Minister of Finance knows that. In fact, he said that. Of course, the deficit is likely to increase as well.

Liberals believe in managing the public debt, controlling spending, but using the engine of growth with the co-operation of all consumers and investors, first, to control and then, of course, to reduce the deficit, a deficit I might say, notwithstanding all the declarations of those opposite, which was not brought about by profligate spending by the previous Government. There has been some profligate spending, I might add, since the Tories have taken office. It was a deficit incurred, as Canadians know and appreciate, to cushion Canada and Canadians against the ravages of the worst recession since the 1930s.

Let me translate those thoughts on growth, from the Liberal point of view, into numbers. The last Liberal Budget, as the documents deposited by the Minister of Finance clearly show, indicate a real growth rate last year as a result of the Liberal Budget of 4.7 per cent. That is for 1984. The Minister of Finance tells us that this year the Tories anticipate a growth rate of 3.1 per cent. He tells us more, that next year he anticipates a growth rate of 2.4 per cent. That is in 1986. Similarly, under the last Liberal Budget, personal income increased in 1984 by 7 per cent. The Tories expect this to decline in the current year to 6.8 per cent and next year to see it decline further to 5.9 per cent. Canadians will soon remind themselves once again that Tory times are tough times.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: I predict that they will be kicking themselves for having forgotten that lesson in September of 1984. The Minister tells us about the climate of confidence that he wishes to create. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Finance, how can Canada have confidence when this Government has systematically broken promise after promise? Confidence will only be built upon credibility. This Government has lost its credibility. Those promises will be reviewed by speakers of this Party during the budget debate as we deal with the various sectors which are affected adversely by the proposals of the Minister of Finance.

One of the most recent commitments of the Minister of Finance was made as recently as on March 1 when he appeared on the program Question Period. In response to questions from Mr. Terrence Wills of the Montreal Gazette, he said:

> I don't want to increase taxes, Terry. I think we have a good deal of scope on the expenditure side to deal with the deficit problem. A tax increase, certainly a general tax increase, puts a dampening effect on the economy and I don't want to see us do that.

An Hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Johnston: The Minister of Finance said that. Not only was that a breach of a commitment that we witnessed yesterday and not only does it affect the credibility of the Minister, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government, but it carries very serious consequences in terms of job loss, not job creation in this country, and that is strike one against the Minister.

• (1220)

Recently, Pierre Lortie, the President of the Montreal Stock Exchange, with whom I am sure the Minister consulted at some length, made some comments with respect to raising taxes in a speech he gave early this month in Toronto. At that time, he said:

The problem with raising taxes lies with their indirect effects which are powerful. Raising taxes cools the economy in two ways. The first familiar effect is that taxes dampen demand. With 11 per cent unemployment, a 4 per cent inflation rate and a growth rate well below that of the U.S. economy, the Canadian economy surely does not need a cold shower.

He went on to say:

Thus, a strategy to reduce the deficit which would embody tax increases could be really hurtful to the Canadian economy.

It is pretty clear that any consultations the Minister may have had with Mr. Lortie were not heeded.

[Translation]

—I personally would have gone further than Mr. Lortie. These tax increases will not only harm the economy, Mr. Speaker, but also and especially those Canadians who cannot protect themselves.

[English]

How many jobs will be lost? The Minister of Finance knows but he will not tell us. He will say, of course, as I have heard him say repeatedly on the radio, on television and here in the House, that it is the confidence factor which will not only replace those jobs which might be lost through some economic model study but will also create new jobs. I say to the Minister of Finance that there can be no confidence when there are these flagrant breaches of promises which have been made by the Minister and the Government. The Minister said that he did not want a general increase in taxes. We have witnessed a massive increase in taxes.

I know my colleagues have always believed in the integrity of the Minister of Finance. We can only come to the conclusion that once again he has lost a battle in Cabinet, once again he has been derailed. He did not want massive tax increases. He declared that his aim was not to have tax increases. Look at the increases that have been imposed upon us.

I invite you, Mr. Speaker, to look at page 19 of The Fiscal Plan which tells us about new tax measures with major impacts on budgetary revenue. These numbers have been carefully caressed by netting some with others which should not be there. I am quite happy to explain my analysis of these numbers, but the bottom line of it is that in 1985-86, individual Canadians will be subjected to tax increases of $1,170 million, not the paltry $250 million which is shown at the bottom of that table, and in 1986-87, they will be subjected to tax increases of $4,360 million. I would be quite happy and anxious to debate my analysis of those numbers with the Minister of Finance.

I would point out that, among other things, I have eliminated in my calculations the so-called capital gains reduction from those revenues. Let me point out that we are talking about general tax increases. In 1982, the last year for which I have numbers, 63 per cent of all capital gains came from 4 per cent of Canadian taxpayers. I submit to the Minister of Finance that it is hardly fair game to net the lost revenue on the capital gains tax exemption against the tax increases which are going to be borne by ordinary Canadians from coast to coast. That, Mr. Speaker, is strike two. The Minister lost his battle in Cabinet. He had to submit to increased taxes, something which he knew was not the way to go in terms of deficit reduction.

The Minister promised us a fair Budget. Let us examine that proposition very briefly. How do these tax increases affect individual Canadians?

You know, people are going to remember the Progressive Conservative Government for its decision to promote capital gains to tax kids' candy, soap and pet food. This is of course a caricature, but the fact is that the combination of taxes introduced yesterday will crush the middle class and the poor, and I would like to give you a few examples.

For a married couple and I shall quote figures from the papers tabled in the House yesterday by the Minister for a married couple with only one income and two dependent children below the age of 18, and earning $20,000, taxes will go up $175, and that does not include sales tax, excise tax on tobacco or the tax on fuel. Altogether, it will mean an increase of at least $200 and probably more. Some people have estimated that the additional burden will amount to between $500 and $1,000 per family.

[English]

Of course, the Government and the Minister will argue and have already argued that the rich are also hit hard by this Budget. That is because of the temporary surtax which has been imposed upon them. Let us look at the circumstances of that same couple with one source of income and two dependent children. We see that carrying the tax provisions forward for the year 1990, the time frame within which the Minister of Finance spoke, the tax burden of that family at the $20,000 level will be increased by 17 per cent, using any reasonable assumptions such as those which were set forth in the table of the Minister himself. If, on the other hand, we look at a family at the $200,000 level, a family which could certainly be classified as being rich, we find that the increase will in fact be 2 per cent in the year 1990.

Many people seem to have lost sight of the fact that the surtax is an 18-month tax. It is only a blip, but the other provisions go on forever and penalize the low-income groups. In fact, if one uses that same 1982 capital gains tax distribution to which I referred a moment ago, we find that the taxpayer at the $200,000 level will pay $2,352 less in taxes in 1990. The 2 per cent figure I mentioned is there without reference to the capital gains tax break.

What about old age security? Simple calculations show that by the year 1990, the average old age security payment will be reduced by $30 per month or $369 per year. As I entered the House, I heard the Minister answering a question by saying that GIS had been indexed. However, GIS recipients, as we know, receive old age security and GIS. If the old age security costs them $30 per month, that effectively means that people who receive GIS will lose $30 per month. When the Liberal Government introduced its six and five program to cap indexation, that was taken into account. Accordingly, a double indexation on GIS was provided for. The Minister has failed to do that. Elderly people at the poverty line will lose $30 per month in real dollars in the year 1990.

What about child benefits? We have calculated that once one reaches over $12,000 of income, everyone loses, and by 1990, something between $300 million and $380 million will have been taken out of the child benefit system. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this Budget is not only unfair, it is grossly unfair. That is strike number three for the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, I was talking about people who have been adversely affected by this veritable avalanche of taxes. However, we must not forget the poorest regions of this country which have now been abandoned by the Progressive Conservatives, and especially the Atlantic Provinces and the Gaspé, for instance. In the course of this debate, you will be hearing a number of our Members who will elaborate on these questions. It is not only unfair to individuals but also unfair to the regions, and especially to the individuals living in those regions.

[English]

There is something else, Mr. Speaker, which I would like to bring to your attention, and I hope that you will take the opportunity to review the budget documents in detail. I reviewed them as best as I could in the time since yesterday, but I have much more to digest. It is apparent that the Budget is replete with what I call political arithmetic. What kind of climate of confidence can we expect to achieve in Canada if the Government is not forthcoming, does not give us the facts and does not tell us what will be the impacts of the various measures which have been introduced? It is one thing to tell us what the impact might be, but it is quite another to prepare the documents in such a manner that the presentation is confused and difficult to understand.

For example, there is the magic savings which the Conservative Government will accomplish by its New Management Initiatives. In 1985-86 alone, the magic savings will amount to $1.2 billion. The Conservatives call part of that plan "Improved Cash Management". Most of the better cash management will mean stripping and raping the Crown corporations of cash in the form of dividends. That is better cash management! A total of $366 million of the $1.2 billion will be saved in 1985-86. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will provide $26 million, Teleglobe Canada will provide $108 million; Petro-Canada will provide $50 million; Atomic Energy of Canada will provide $50 million, and Ports Canada will provide $83 million. I will not take the time of the House to read all of the corporations which will be involved in that savings plan as the documents are available for all to see. That is better cash management! Declaring dividends from Crown corporations has now become better cash management.

There is a point which I find most troubling and I hope at some point the Minister will furnish us with adequate explanations. After the brilliant exercise of saving $1.2 billion for better management practices, we find that the expenditures for 1985-86, as presented in the budget papers, will be $105 billion. When I turned to the Estimates which were tabled in the House several months ago, I found that expenditures in 1985-86 were to be $105 billion. How on earth can we explain what is going on? How can the Government maintain any credibility when it presents us with that kind of data?

In addition, there are no five-year projections in the Budget. I remember when his colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), came into the House in 1979 and proudly proclaimed that he would introduce five-year projections. Of course, the reason he did so was that it was one of the most firm recommendations of the Lambert Commission on Financial Management and Accountability. He was the first Minister of Finance who had the opportunity to introduce those recommendations, and he did. He explained, at every occasion, the importance of having five-year projections. He explained the importance of allowing the public and others to scrutinize where the Government was intending to go. The Liberal Government which succeeded the Conservative Government of 1979 maintained that tradition through all the Budgets which were presented in the House. However, it has been abandoned by the Minister of Finance because he does not want to be forthcoming with Canadians. He does not want to tell the Canadian public where he is going to go.

[Translation]

What does he tell us? He tells us that between now and 1990, if I am not mistaken, he will reduce the deficit by $20 billion. But he does not want to give us forecasts, he does not want to show us how we will get there, he simply draws the conclusion.

It absolutely amazes me that the Minister of Finance can expect Canadians and the private sector, as it is defined by him, to accept that there will be a climate of confidence when he is not forthcoming with the numbers and when he has broken election promises. He has broken promises which were made as recently as on March 1, when he told us that there would not be a general tax increase.

He has asked Canadians to tighten their belts. He said that people should be pleased to spend a dollar a day for the sake of getting the finances of the country under control. A dollar a day! Yet the Prime Minister recently increased his own office expenditures by some $2 million, which represents approximately $10,000 a day in terms of the expenditures which he intends to make over and above what is already there. The Government tells us that Canadians are expected to pull in their belts and spend a dollar a day. Even the poor families in Saint-Henri are expected to do that——my constituency of Saint-Henri. Well, I would like to bring the Minister with me one of these days so he might explain to my constituents of Saint-Henri why they should pay taxes on candies and gasoline. But at the same time Ministers back here in Ottawa can increase their budgets, have well-paid staff and senior officials, not to mention the Prime Minister's Office. I really think he would have a hard time convincing the people of Saint-Henri in Montreal, which happens to be one of the regions hardest hit by this Budget.

Of course, we have seen the Government indulge in other exercises with taxpayers' money, while individual Canadians are having trouble making ends meet and living virtually from hand to mouth. But the Government treats itself to lavish spending and engages in bailing out corporations. I could cite the number of corporations which have been bailed out. They include Petromont, Domtar, the Canadian Commercial Bank, and Pioner Trust. At least those bail-outs were motivated by concerns of employment and investor confidence.

I hope the Minister of Finance takes these comments seriously because the example must be set here. This Government, of which he is a member, is the most lavish spender and the greatest squanderer of taxpayers' dollars on government lifestyle of all other Governments in the history of this country. It has the largest ministry with the largest staff. It has travelling committees to keep the back-benchers happy. Millions and millions of dollars are being squandered by the Government and by the Prime Minister with the circuses and showbiz to which we have been treated. As far as Quebec City is concerned, we have only seen the bill from CBC for $500,000. There was the Premiers' Conference and the Economic Summit. There has been no concern whatsoever for taxpayers' dollars. Yet the Minister of Finance had the gall to go on national television last night and say that Canadians would be pleased. He said that individual families who earn $20,000 or $30,000 a year would be pleased to pay an extra dollar a day in order to get the finances of the Government under control.

Where is the minimum tax when it comes to fairness? It is another lob hit by the Minister of Finance. He is a tennis player and he hits another lob on this one. That minimum tax would have gone a long way toward suggesting to ordinary men and women of this country that the Government means business, but there is no minimum tax. Instead, there is a study, further consultation, a series of options, and we are told the tax will be introduced miraculously in 1986. But no model for that tax has been decided upon. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you would join with me, if you could, and say that you will believe that tax when you see it.

In terms of expenditure, I must say that when we started to read about the expenditures of this Government on themselves, I really thought the sky was the limit. Now we learn, particularly when we watch the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), that not even the sky is the limit. In fact, all the skies of the world are open to the travelling Ministers of this Government.

[Translation]

It is unbelievable. When he was in Quebec City he was described as the "national air draft"—quite properly so. To him, that is just a few cents. He spent $57,000 to fly to Greece or wherever, and now the Minister of Finance is telling us that each Canadian family with an income of $20,000 to $30,000 ought to be proud to contribute $1 a day to control the finances of the federal Government. Unbelievable, Mr. Speaker, unbelievable!

[English]

We will be hearing much, Mr. Speaker, from Hon. Members on this side of the House with respect to the Budget and, believe me, there is much to be said. I want simply to conclude by telling the Minister of Finance, who unfortunately has left the House—and I should say in fairness to him that he told me he would have to leave the House at 12.40 p.m.—that there is one major difference between the Minister's namesake, Hack Wilson, and himself, that is that at least Hack Wilson hit a lot of home runs.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This guy struck out.

Mr. Johnston: That being said, I move the following amendment, seconded by Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor: This House condemns the Government for its betrayal of the trust of the Canadian people by producing a budget that destroys jobs, that offers neither help nor hope to the working poor and the unemployed, that brutalizes the middle class, that imposes massive and unfair tax increases on middle and lower-income Canadians and that is devastating to the economically disadvantaged regions of the country.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston).

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have had discussions on this matter with the Government House Leader and the House Leader for the Official Opposition. I would like to seek unanimous consent of the House to allow my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who will be speaking next on behalf of our Party in this debate, the courtesy of having the normal time available to a third Party speaker extended to a time not exceeding that taken by the critic for the Official Opposition and, at the very least, not exceeding 40 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure there is unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to thank my colleagues in the House for the courtesy extended to me of an opportunity to speak perhaps a little bit beyond the 20-minute time limit, but certainly within the time limits followed by the previous speaker.

We have now waited as anxious parliamentarians for the last eight months, along with the people of Canada, for this budget presentation. It is the longest period of time in recent history that a Government has waited before it introduced a major Budget. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance prided themselves on having gone about the country and talked with groups in all regions, having spoken with organized groups such as the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, and having listened to groups of individuals who were assembled at various conferences. But what has become very clear, Mr. Speaker, is that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister seemed to have listened to a very select group when it came time to write out and introduce the Budget which we heard last night. I believe that when the dust settles over this whole matter, the columnists have had a chance to evaluate the situation and the true nature of the Budget is presented, what will become clear is that the boy from Baie Comeau has backed his Bay Street buddies all the way to the bank. Very clearly there was a bias in this particular Budget which went against the interests of ordinary Canadians and was very much in favour of a select group of Canadian society. That was perhaps reflected in the advice of the policy adviser brought in by the Minister of Finance for the Budget, the Vice-President of the Bank of Nova Scotia, who advised him on the approaches which the Minister ought to use and, indeed, this was a banker's Budget in many respects.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance said that this was a tough Budget but a fair one. I suspect that the more appropriate wording would be that this was a very fair Budget for a very few number of Canadians and a very tough Budget for very many Canadians. What the privileged few in Canada received in this Budget was, of course, no introduction of the minimum tax which the Prime Minister promised Canadians would be introduced in this Budget. Those thousands of Canadians, whom we will call wealthy Canadians—the upper-income earners whose incomes are often in excess of $500,-000—will again this year pay no income tax whatsoever as a result of the multitude of loopholes available to them in their financial arrangements.

There is another group of Canadians. We recognize that about 4 per cent of the Canadian population buy and sell stocks in the stock market, and a few more, perhaps, are interested in the matter of capital gains. The Government, through this Budget, has now introduced a capital gains holiday for those folks on the first $500,000 of income. That handful of Canadians who obtain their income from investments have now received a real bonus in this Budget and a lot of champagne will be consumed on the Bay Streets and in downtown Montreal, Calgary and Vancouver, as the senior executive levels celebrate just what this corporate giveaway means to them personally.

We think of the laid-off workers of the White Farm plant, the people who work at the heavy water plant in Cape Breton, the laid-off miners in the Highmont Mine in British Columbia and the people who work at the Burns plant in Kitchener, and we wonder how excited they are today about the fact that they can escape capital gains tax on the first $500,000 of income earned through their investments.

Mr. Broadbent: They are lucky if they earn that in their lifetime.

Mr. Riis: As my hon. leader indicates, they are lucky to earn that during their entire lifetime.

So let us recognize that for the privileged few this Budget is excellent news. There will be lots of champagne being drunk over the next few days as people celebrate this Budget.

On the other hand, for most Canadians, the average Canadian, what did the Budget have? Some extremely tough measures. When you examine the implications of the November 8 Economic Statement and add those to the provisions in this Budget, you find that the average family in Canada will be paying about $1,000 more in taxes. That means that $1,000 a family will be taken out of every single community across this country. In the Corner Brooks, the Moose Jaws, the Chicoutimis and the Sudburys, thousands of communities across this country, $1,000 a family will be taken away and plunked down here in Ottawa for the federal Government. The Minister of Finance indicated there would be a fairness in this Budget. Is it fairness to ask every senior citizen in Canada receiving OAS to pay an extra $100 a year starting next year? This will add up to $255 million coming from the senior citizens of Canada to make up for the money the Government is going to lose in its capital gains giveaway. The seniors of this country are going to be paying for that capital gains holiday. The average Canadian family is going to be paying an extra $1,000 to make up for the give aways to the large oil companies.

To be very frank, Mr. Speaker, what this Budget means is that almost every single item in the average corner store in our communities will have a federal tax added to it. Kids' candy bars and pop, all the confectioneries in that store, shampoos and soap, the things families use every day, will all be taxed. Pet food will be taxed in an effort to raise money because somebody has to pay for these capital gains giveaways. I remember very distinctly that when the Western Accord was signed a few weeks ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) said that they made this deal to help the western provinces particularly, but that the taxpayers of Canada are not going to pay for it. There will be no increase in gasoline taxes as a result, she said. What happened in western Canada was that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources sat down for dinner with the provincial Premiers and the heads of the oil companies, and we as Canadian citizens are going to be asked to cough up hundreds of millions of dollars to pay the tab.

Mr. Blaikie: Expensive dinner.

Mr. Riis: Very expensive dinner, when you consider the 9 cents a gallon tax. What does that mean for people who travel about the second largest country in the world? What does that mean for every product transported across this vast country? What does it mean for people who have to travel long distances to work, up into the forest, out into the mines, or commute long distances in metropolitan areas? This 9 cents a gallon tax will be felt right across this country, and at a time when we were hoping to see some disposable income invested at the local level to assist small business. But we are pulling hundreds of millions of dollars out of those communities and bringing them back here to Ottawa, and that will not help small business.

I think the most surprising thing in this Budget is that it totally ignored a group of Canadians. It failed to recognize the 1.475 million Canadians who are jobless today, including 500,000 young people. This is the International Year of Youth, a year when we should be paying special attention to young people. Surely in a country which is at all sensitive the Government should recognize that young people have a special role to play. At this time of year, on budget day, they are coming out of the colleges, universities, technical and vocational schools, and high schools, looking for summer employment or their first job, and what do they find in the Budget? I do not think the word "youth" was even mentioned in the Budget. The Minister spoke for an hour and a half and did not even mention the word; it is not part of his vocabulary. I do not think it is part of the Government's vocabulary. The words which are in the Government's vocabulary, of course, are words like "deficits"—

Mr. Nickerson: Jobs.

Mr. Riis: —and "tough"—

Mr. Nickerson: Jobs.

Mr. Riis: —and "sacrifices"—

Mr. Nickerson: Jobs.

Mr. Riis: —and "capital gains", "corporate confidence", but the word "youth" is not mentioned. Was there any reference at all to the 600,000 women who are jobless? There was virtually not a word in the Budget which would assist those 1.475 million people presently out of work, not a word to give them any hope or encouragement, to indicate that things are going to change in the weeks and months ahead.

The Government has said that we need to have faith because the small business sector will have a whole set of reasons to expand its operations and create jobs. Whether it is in Corner Brook, Glace Bay, Bathurst, Lac-Saint-Jean, Timmins, Moose Jaw, High River, Prince George or Kelowna, small businesses will be going out and expanding in the weeks and months ahead. But let us look at the Minister's constituency. Let us look at a business in Etobicoke. Let us look at that small corner store again. All of a sudden, as a result of this Budget, that store finds that all of the families who use the store are going to have $1,000 removed from their pockets. They will not have a thousand dollars next year to buy goods from that store. In addition, everything in that store has increased in price as a result of additional federal taxes. Is that corner store going to want to run out and expand its operation?

Mr. Rodriguez: Not likely.

Mr. Riis: This same scenario can be imagined across this country. When you take money out of every community in this country and reduce the purchasing power of Canadians, when you do not give any hope to those 1.5 million unemployed, including all those young people looking for work, are people going to go out and purchase goods and services? Are they going to go out and buy that new refrigerator, stove, car or set of clothes? No, they are not. The Government says it expects businesses to go out and expand their operations and hire new employees, but I think we are asking too much of the business community under these conditions. There has been no effort to create more demand for their products. There has been no effort to provide a reason for those businesses to go out and expand. Therefore, I really do not believe that the hope or expectation the Minister expressed today so many times will in fact be realized.

I am reminded of Peter Pan when I hear the Minister of Finance say time after time, "If we really believe, if we really believe, then we can fly. If we really believe businesses are going to create those jobs and they will run out and expand their operations, then they will". Well, surely we can have something better than a Tinker Bell approach to encouraging the business community of Canada to expand and create the necessary jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to look at some aspects of the Budget which were not mentioned. Sometimes it is more appropriate to look at the Budget and take note of what he failed to mention at all. One of the key sectors of our economy is tourism. Right across the country, whether it is in the provinces or the Territories, a lot of Canadians feel this is one area where there is a considerable amount of growth potential. But is there anything in the Budget to assist the tourist sector? Yes, there is something that will affect the tourist sector; the increase in gasoline prices will make it that much more expensive for American travellers to travel around Canada in their Winnebagos and so on, or Canadians for that matter. Also, we are going to increase liquor prices, and that will have a rather profound negative effect on the hospitality industry.

I notice it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps I could continue a little later today.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) had the floor. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Budget includes nearly six and a half pounds of paper. Yet there is nothing in this entire package for the unemployed in the country. There is not a single thing in the package for young people in Canada. We find it totally unacceptable that, with 70 per cent of our young people ouf of work today, there was not a single reference to them in the budget speech.

It is interesting to consider what is in the Budget. After looking at it very carefully it becomes perfectly clear that the Government believes that the most important resource in the country is the capital resource. The other day my friend, the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), suggested that the most important resource is not the capital resource, but trees. We in this Party believe very strongly that the most important resources in the country are our human resources, our young people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: There is nothing in this six and a half pounds of budget material that is going to assist farmers in Canada. There is, however, something that will assist them to get out of the farming business. The capital gains exemptions will help them to get out of farming, but aside from that we find only agricultural cuts. The only assistance for the forest sector is that the federal tax on boom chains can now be deducted. The fisheries sector finds further cuts, the imposition of user fees, but no assistance. There is no assistance for the mining sector. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this Budget which will provide assistance to the hard-pressed resources sectors of the country.

I have already mentioned tourism. This was a wonderful gift for British Columbia. Mr. Bennett must be really happy as they are developing Expo '86 and attracting new tourists. Now the Government slaps on a gasoline tax and an additional liquor tax to make it more expensive for visitors to come into the country. That is not the way in which to encourage tourism. Yet that is the way in which the federal Government has assisted the province which is developing Expo '86.

Was there tax reform in the Budget? Was there an effort to impose that minimum tax on the rich as promised by the Prime Minister? There is no minimum tax in this Budget. The Government says it may study it and put it in the Budget next year. However, it did not stop to study the impact of imposing a tax of $1,000 on families. There was no hesitation in putting that in.

There was nothing done about the billions of dollars in corporate tax concessions used for mergers and takeovers that do not result in new jobs or product lines. There was no corporate tax expenditure included with the Budget to enable us to see the pros and cons of the various expenditure programs. There was no five year projection of the corporate taxes and what they mean for Canada as there is in American Budgets. There was nothing in this Budget with regard to corporate or personal tax reform.

I am pleased to see that the Minister of Finance is now with us and listening to our speeches. He said that this is a new era and new approach. He said it is a chance to make over our country and refashion Canada. He said it is a new way of doing things.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: He went on to say things like, "We mean to cut our costs and become more productive", and, "The private sector must be the main creator of jobs".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: He said, "We look to the creative, innovative small business sector". He said, "This is a fiscally responsible Budget". He said that securing growth and jobs depends on our success in four basic areas; reducing and controlling inflation, increasing investment, reducing the Government's deficit, and improving our competitiveness.

Oh, I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, this was Marc Lalonde's Budget. I am sorry, I got the Budgets mixed up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: And the Tories clapped.

Mr. Riis: I want to thank my Conservative colleagues for their approval of those suggestions, but I was meaning to read from this Budget.

Is there a change or a new direction, Mr. Speaker? The Liberals increased taxes and gave more concessions to the corporations and we know what happened to the country. Nothing has changed from the Lalonde or MacEachen Budget. Nothing has changed. Only the actors have changed and the colour of the suits. The whole effort of the Government was to attack the deficit. This was the bogey-man that had to be slain. This was the dragon. Michael was out there with his sword hacking away at the deficit dragon. What was it that created the deficit, Mr. Speaker? It was the result of the Liberal monetary policy and mismanagement for years and years that resulted in a recession. The fact that it was costing us $1 billion a month in UIC alone was adding to the deficit. Something else has added to the deficit, the billions and billions of dollars in corporate loopholes for which we are getting very little, if anyting, in return. Those are billions of dollars and that is what created the deficit. The cast we were not collecting corporate tax, business tax, personal tax and sales tax because of the recession was another reason.

The New Democrats did their consulting as well. We did not talk with Bay Street and to stockbrokers. We spoke with main street and ordinary Canadians. We came up with something called "Canada Unlimited". We have 70 recommendations in this book on how to reduce the high levels of unemployment. That is what Canada Unlimited sets out to accomplish.

Time and time again what our proposals do is to set targets for inflation, to get inflation down. We set targets for research and development levels and we set targets for foreign aid. Why not set targets for unemployment to get unemployment down? Why not set that as a goal and implement strategies to accomplish it? Why not reform the tax system to provide more moneys for the communities of Canada to assist small businesses as opposed to having a tax policy that takes out a thousand dollars a household from every community in Canada and focuses it right back here in Ottawa? Why not give that money to the communities to develop proper job-creation and economic development schemes?

We propose a minimum tax in Canada Unlimited and a return to the pre-1982 tax rate days. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will remember the time when that legislation was introduced and we heard it said, "This is for all the upper income earners of the country. We are going to reduce the amount of tax that you have to pay". If we introduced that old tax rate and a minimum tax, we would raise $1.2 billion. If we did that, we could avoid de-indexing of the tax exemptions, the old age security, and the family allowance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Towers: The Hon. Member knows better than that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Before the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) continues I must advise him, and I am sure he knows, that it is not permitted to make demonstrations of the kind he is making.

Mr. Deans: Don't be ridiculous. Of course it is.

Mr. Riis: If we followed our proposal for tax reform in Canada Unlimited, we could eliminate the federal tax reduction and avoid the elimination of the Registered Home Ownership Savings plan and we could avoid increases in taxes on children's candy, pop, pet food, and all of the confectionery found in our small corner stores. We could avoid taxes on almost everything we could find in the corner stores. We could avoid additional taxes on tobacco and liquor and we would still have $200 million left.

If we had introduced those two provisions only out of the 70 recommendations in Canada Unlimited we would save all of that unnecessary tax increase and still have $200 million which could be used on direct job creation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: This was a Budget that asked Canadians to make a special sacrifice. It asked only certain Canadians to make a special sacrifice. Ordinary Canadians were asked to make an especially major sacrifice in the way of increased taxes and increased costs of transportation, which will be reflected in the cost of virtually every good transported across Canada. This Budget is especially punitive on the resource sectors of mining, fisheries, agriculture, tourism, and forestry.

Some people benefited, however. They are the ones who are in the upper income brackets. They are very happy as a result of this Budget because they can still use the loopholes of the tax system and pay not a single red cent of income tax. If that were not good enough, those people who obtain their income through investments and consequently take advantage of the capital gains provisions will get another holiday. They will not have to pay any tax at all on their capital gains until a half a million dollars has been accumulated. If we talk about the beneficiaries in this Budget, we are talking about a handful of Canadian citizens. The very wealthy in Canada will get much wealthier.

Mr. Towers: What about the farmers?

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member says, "What about the farmers?" We have six and a half pounds of budget papers. There is nothing for the farmers in this bundle other than to encourage them to get out of farming.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Is there anything in the budget papers to help young people get into farming and into food production? Is there any assistance for those farmers who are hard pressed financially in terms of a heavy debt equity ratio? Are there any agri-bonds in these papers to assist those hard-pressed farmers? No, there is nothing. Is there any clarification of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act? No, there is nothing.

Mr. Gurbin: What about the small business bond?

Mr. Riis: There is a small business bond. But show me a farmer who has been able to get a small business bond. Show me a single farmer who has been able to get one. That is the only bloody provision Mr. Speaker, to assist a farmer, but he cannot get one.

When you ask what is in the Budget for farmers, I say there is nothing, Sir. I can repeat those same comments for the fishermen, the miners, the loggers, the millworkers, and for the ordinary Canadians.

As a result, I am pleased to move on behalf of my Party, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

> That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end of the last sentence to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:
> "And this House further condemns the Government for actions which will effectively reduce pensions for senior citizens, for gasoline tax increases to pay for the Western Accord, for its failure to take immediate and determined action to reduce the ranks of the unemployed, and for the absence of a minimum tax on wealthy Canadians who pay no income tax."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Having read the subamendment, I find it in order.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I have a straightforward and sincere question for the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). In that we are both federal politicians and we both come from British Columbia, I would like the Hon. Member's comment on a question relating to forestry. We have arrived at an agreement with the Province of British Columbia, an agreement which was never reached before, regarding $300 million in reforestation and silviculture. It is part of the over-all commitment on the part of the Government to work in the forestry area. Does the Hon. Member not agree that this is a significant starting point in forestry, or is he completely against the program? He said that we have not done anything for forestry. In view of the fact that we made such a commitment and started such a productive program for forestry, does he concur with it, or is he totally against anything for forestry which we brought forward?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I realize that normally the first speakers for each Party do not have an opportunity to respond to questions. I am pleased that the Speaker changed the rules for today to make this possible, and I welcome the questions of the Hon. Member.

He referred to the fact that I said that in the 6.5 pounds of budget material there was nothing for forestry—and I stand by that—with the exception of the removal of the federal tax on boom chains. There is nothing in the 6.5 pounds of budget material for the forestry industry.

The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) talked about the $300 million federal-provincial agreement to assist the forest sector. I remind him of the words of Les Reed, who used to be Deputy Minister of Forestry in Ottawa and is presently occupying the senior chair of forestry at the University of British Columbia, Department of Forestry. He made the observation that this $300 million was to be spent over five years and that to do the job necessary we needed $300 million this year and every year thereafter.

We should recognize that out of every dollar collected by the federal Government from the forest industry, it returns only five cents, a measly nickel. Yes, I suppose on the logn journey to the moon, one step is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, a couple of years ago the New Democratic Party had a task force to encourage involvement in the small business sector. I think that was laudable. Last night, Mr. John Bulloch, who represents that sector which the NDP wants to see flourish, said that the Budget would create a minimum of 400,000 jobs and maybe more. Yet the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) seems to imply that there is no job creation in the Budget. At the end of his speech he spoke about direct job creation. Would he define how he uses the term "direct job creation"? Does he agree with Mr. John Bulloch that the Budget could create a minimum of 400,000 jobs or more?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, if I recall from the budget documents—and I believe it was in The fiscal Plan—the term outlines the projected levels of unemployment in Canada. By his own admission, the figures of the Minister of Finance indicate that they will be in excess of 10 per cent for the rest of this decade. Beyond that it is anyone's guess. In dealing with unemployment, the Budget indicates that we will not deal with unemployment and that we will be doing other things because the Government's projection is that it will stay about the same. I also remember what the two previous Ministers of Finance projected unemployment to be, and of course the figure was much higher. When one starts to project into the future and depends totally on the whims of the market-place, it is made very difficult. By the Minister's own admission unemployment will not be improved.

When I heard John Bulloch the other day, I suspected that John was drinking a lot of his own bath water. I do not think John has visited many parts of Canada. I know the Prime Minister has not visited British Columbia since assuming office. If the Prime Minister had visited British Columbia, the Hon. Member's constituency and mine, he would know that we cannot stand idly by now and wish that jobs will be created and that small business will expand. That may apply to some parts of central Canada, but in the eartern, northern and western parts of the country we cannot ask the small business sector to expand and at the same time reach out and take $1,000 away from every family and $100 away from every senior citizen in every community, to be paid back to Ottawa, through the de-indexing process. In that event small businesses will not have a market for their goods and services.

The point we have been trying to make is that we do not have to bribe small businesses to expand through tax concessions. They will expand on their own if there is a market for their goods and services. However, in parts of Canada today the market is not there. To take millions and millions of dollars out of the communities of Canada and to ask small business to expand on their own without any market is asking small business to do too much. It is very unfair to expect them to respond to that challenge.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member began answering the questions of the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), he said that he welcomed the opportunity to answer questions. Now would he answer mine?

Some Hon. Members: He did.

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, for years and years I have heard Canadians talk about dealing with unemployment and I have watched with some patience the strategies that were put forward. Each time they related to stimulating the consumer, a concept which I now recognize as one aimed at creating jobs. Some of the jobs created by spending more money were the kinds where very bright young people were hired to travel around the City of Winnipeg to erect signs advertising that the project was sponsored by this Minister or that Minister. I am proud to have listened to the Budget yesterday and to have learned that the Government will no longer accept the concept that the way to create jobs is to spend money and that that stimulates the consumer.

Canadians are able to create jobs. They told us repeatedly that they wanted to stand on their own two feet. They can do so, and the Budget gives them that opportunity. I wish the Opposition would show as much confidence in Canadians as I think Canadians are prepared to show in themselves.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate any chance to respond to the Hon. Member's question or observation. I come from British Columbia which has had a Conservative Government in power for some time. It had a similar approach to creating jobs in that province in terms of raising taxes and cutting back on a whole variety of government areas. I remember the advice of Michael Walker, the chief economist of the Fraser Institute. When asked in British Columbia what advice as a very wise economist he would have for young people looking for work in that province, he used a take-off on the old adage that one should go west, young man, to seek one's future, and said: "Go east, young man. Leave British Columbia and go to Manitoba because it has a different approach".

Manitoba happens to have the lowest level of unemployment in Canada. Manitoba has taken action to provide job opportunities. It has challenged the assumption that it makes sense to give young people and others UIC and welfare, to ask them to remain at home and watch television, to tell them not to provide a useful service for their communities. Manitoba had a different approach. It took the amount of money it would have spent on social services, UIC and welfare, and provided young persons with meaningful jobs so that they could serve their communities, assist senior citizens, assist single parents, provide support for daycare, playgrounds and so on. Thousands and thousands of young people in that province were mobilized and have done just that.

I come from British Columbia where that did not take place. I come from British Columbia where the Conservative Government there used a similar approach to the one in the 6.5 pounds of paper delivered last night. I know what it did for British Columbia, and I only hope and pray that the same thing will not be duplicated across the country.

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, I will promise not to try and be an expert on British Columbia if the Hon. Member opposite will try not to be an expert on my province. I can state clearly that when you talk about Manitoba having the lowest level of unemployment, it is actually the second lowest. It has been the same for some time through both a Progressive Conservative and a New Democratic Party Government in Manitoba. It reflects on the people of my province, and not on the Government. If the Hon. Member is going to suggest that British Columbians were told to go east and go to Manitoba—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I'm sorry, but the period for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) talked about important principles. He spoke about principles that have not worked. That is why this Government has asked Canadians to follow a new road. We have made a conscious effort to break away from the tired, cynical and unsuccessful attempts of the former Government to create jobs and build a future for this country. Instead, we have forged a fresh approach in job creation, in economic prosperity and in social responsibility.

The Hon. Member went on to say that Budgets are to serve people. He is absolutely right. Whay did their Budgets never serve the people? Our Budget will. It will build on the vitality and dynamism of individual Canadians and of our businesses and our industry. It is a Budget that rewards initiative. It is a Budget that reafffirms our Government's basic belief in the ability of Canadians to create the growth that in turn creates the jobs we all want and need. It is a Budget that provides Canadians with the opportunity to show their stuff, to take action and to participate in a new direction for Canada.

This has been called, in a cynical way, a Budget of faith. It is a Budget of faith because I have faith in my neighbours and in your neighbours, because I know that they will help us build the jobs that we have committed for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: During the election, we told Canadians that we knew there was an absolute need for change to responsible fiscal management of the Government's affairs. Canadians agreed with us. We have proven that time and time again in the last eight months. We have consistently demonstrated that our policies are a break from the past. We have taken actions to reduce government overhead, streamline the programs that restrain growth, rationalize programs and eliminate waste. We talked with Canadians across the country and listened to them. Because of that, we were able to formulate our proposals with the concerns of Canadians in mind and with their ideas guiding us. We were able to benefit from views in all regions and from all sectors. In short, we were able to take advantage of perspectives from every segment of Canadian life.

I want to reiterate what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told this House. This Budget is about jobs. It is about providing Canadians with lasting employment, with programs that are sensitive and flexible. Our actions as a Government two months after having taken office have helped create over 200,000 jobs. Despite all the doomsayers over there who said we would lose 50,000 or 100,000 jobs, we now have 200,000 jobs in this country that we did not have before.

Hon. Members know that this is a significant achievement. We know that we can do better. That is why the measures in this Budget address unemployment and the creation of employment. The Canadian people have discovered what seems to be so difficult for the opposition Parties to understand. Canadians have discovered to their pain that government spending does not create jobs, that government spending creates deficits. We have chosen not a single instrument of direct job creation. We do not believe that is responsible. By taking measures to create jobs through the capital gains tax exemption, through the training initiatives of my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), of restoring fiscal order to our balance sheets, we can create a climate of job creation of which Canadians can take advantage.

I know that debate has been occurring, especially in the pre-Budget press, over the relationship between unemployment and the deficit, that the old pump primers still want to spend our way to full employment. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) put it more succinctly than I have ever heard it when he said several days ago "If increased deficits lowered the unemployment rate, we would have full employment this very day". The sad truth in human terms, in terms of dashed hopes of millions of Canadians, is that unemployment still remains unacceptable, despite a staggering deficit.

Clearly the Budget emphasizes fiscal responsibility, but it is not fiscal responsibility for its own sake. Such a philosophy has no place in the plans of our Government. No proposal was made, no program was changed or even considered for the sole purpose of deficit reduction. The issues at stake are too complex, too interwoven to be determined by any one narrow philosophy. The budget measures have been carefully selected and balanced to further the broad goal of economic renewal.

We are a young country, but we are carrying around a burden. That, quite frankly, is weighing us down beyond our years. It is a millstone around our neck. It is preventing the development that our economy needs. It ties the hands that create jobs and it trips the feet that are leading to the future.

There is concern for people in our deficit control action and in our efforts to restore responsibility. We have demonstrated this concern by facing the real problems that stand in the way of the better future we all desire. There is no room for wishful thinking in our policies. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said that this is a Budget of wishful thinking. We do not wish things for small business, we give them the tools to make it happen. By bringing forward realistic effective policies, we are acting with respect for the wishes of Canadians now and with the aspirations of Canadians for today, tomorrow and the day after tomorrow.

[Translation]

The budget is pervaded by the new spirit that has developed across this country. It is the spirit that has led our Government in its relations with the provinces, with the various sectors of our economy and with our trading partners. It is the spirit of co-operation and consultation.

[English]

Canadians know that we can each contribute in one way or another to a better Canada. That means that we must all shoulder a part of the burden. The results will take longer if we do not, and will be more difficult to obtain. The spirit is also independent. There is an enthusiasm growing across this land. I have recently been in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Yes, the people of this country have faith in us because we have faith in them.

This Budget shows that our Government's recognition of Canadians is important. We know that Canadians know best and that Government cannot decide what is best. We are saying to Canadians, "Invest, it is your future, your children's future", and we are saying, "The Government will help you make Canada strong and prosperous". We are cutting out the red tape that strangles initiative. We are making Government simpler, easier, more effective for Canadians who need it and for those who are working with us in the goals we have set.

The budget proposals deal with a tough reality. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount talked about Tory times being tough times. If Tory times are tough times, it is because of the irresponsibility that has gone on for years and years before. We know we cannot give Canadians everything. We do not live in Never, Never Land. We have to act responsibly, to take control of ourselves, each of us in our own way.

I may remind the Hon. Member that we all agree that Canada must have the kind of government that will promote economic growth and stimulate development of the employment opportunities we need.

It is therefore a pleasure to be able to point to some of these programs and policies today.

[English]

At the Regina First Ministers' Conference, my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, announced a new program with an innovative approach to training and employment. This approach too is practical. It aims for career development, not just for short-term jobs. I want to emphasize that under this program, women for the first time will have access to all labour strategy programs, and one of those programs is specifically geared to women who are re-entering the workforce. Those who are most in the know, members of the local private sector, are deeply involved in this to ensure that the training meets the requirement of communities and the private sector. The Budget proposes an additional $900 million for those programs for 1986-87.

Changes proposed in the Budget assure Canadians that, for example, they will be able to enjoy the fruits of their labours. A lifetime capital gains exemption of up to half a million dollars provides significant recognition of the effort and initiative of individuals and frees up funds for investments in small and growing enterprises. This provision is not only for rich people. There is a cap on the capital gains tax exemption because it is for Canadians from all walks of life. The dry cleaner at the corner of my street at home has a modest, successful business and is ready to retire. He will be able to sell his business and keep the profits from the work he has done all his life without paying a capital gains tax.

[Translation]

The Budget proposals have also given full consideration to the innovative spirit of our labour organizations. A tax credit will be provided for individual investors in venture capital initiatives managed by labour organizations and which receive provincial tax assistance, such as the Solidarity Fund of the Quebec Federation of Labour.

[English]

We are all aware of the tremendous contribution played by our cultural sector in both creating jobs and preserving a vital and rich heritage. I spoke with representatives of the Canadian Conference of the Arts this morning. They were enormously excited because, for the first time, a Finance Minister talked about the economic significance of the cultural sector and provided incentives for that sector which provides so much to our heritage and to making our country a civilized place to live. I am especially pleased by the establishment of a private sector committee in collaboration with my colleague, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), to propose ways in which the private sector can be encouraged to increase its support for the arts.

Let us be realistic. In all sectors there is a limit to the public purse. Similarly, the proposals for pension fund investment and the RRSP changes reflect our faith in the ability of Canadians to make their own investment decisions. The pension plan proposals will encourage and strengthen private pension arrangements, will broaden the base and will give many Canadians a fair and more flexible opportunity to save for an adequate pension. Amendments to the Pension Benefits Standard Act will go forward to establish minimum standards for federally regulated pension plans. Once passed, these changes will improve the pension rights of all Canadians, and particularly those of women who make up the bulk of our part-time workforce. It will help workers who are thinking of early retirement, women in the workforce, spouses of pension plan members, and all employees. There will be improved survivor benefit regulations for women, standards for pension benefit splitting on marriage breakdown, and equality standards.

The Government believes that it must manage its own costs more effectively. The November statement initiated that process and further savings are planned in this Budget arising from additional measures to introduce more businesslike practices in the federal Government, including the sale of Crown corporations and additional cuts to government programs. In this important area, our approach has been careful, balanced and systematic. We tabled with the Budget, on behalf of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), the first report of the ministerial task force on program review. It sets out the decisions our Government has taken in this important area of government responsibility.

I am very proud to stand here today to participate in this debate with my hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance. I want to remind all Canadians of the words of that great Nova Scotian, Joseph Howe:

> You are the representatives of the people and I put it to you as you are greatly honoured, should you not greatly dare?

The Budget that was placed before us yesterday by my colleague and friend, the Minister of Finance, does just that. It challenges us and dares us to take a message of hope to the people of Canada. What better place to begin that challenge than here at the heart of Canadian democracy?

Hon. Members opposite, in their quiet and reflective moments, share the Government's concern about the situation which we inherited on September 4. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount knows that this is true. He spoke eloquently today and I listened with interest as he spoke because I recall his words last year when he said:

> Anyone who tells you, you don't have to face up to those hard choices (in spending cuts) would be better off as a tour guide in Disneyland. Any major new government programs can only come at the expense of existing ones. We must not mortgage our children's future by going deeper and deeper into debt.

The Hon. Member was right. The Government has taken that responsibility seriously. It has taken its responsibility seriously not only to care for those who need our help in today's world but enable our children and those who follow us to hope, to plan, and yes, to dare. I recall what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said to a high school student last year. He said, "Your generation is going to be strangled if Ottawa continues to go into debt at the current pace". He too was correct.

We sense the frustration in Canada but we are a Party of optimists. We believe in the future and we believe in tomorrow. We believe we can embrace tomorrow only if we act with responsibility today. We are the trustees of tomorrow and we are determined not to let tomorrow's greatness escape our beneficiaries.

I look to my friends opposite, and they are my friends because I have established a great deal of respect for them, and I ask them, where is their logic, their sense of responsibility? The NDP's own policy advisers have told them that they have been left with an economic analysis of little value and an economic program that is a hodgepodge of contradictions and dead-end solutions. With all due respect I say to Hon. Members, wake up and smell the coffee. Even their colleagues are uncertain about their formula.

I remember how heartened I was to hear the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) earlier this spring state on national television as he looked straight into the camera, "We can't simply accept that we have large deficits continuing . . . it does not make sense". Hear, hear, I thought. Finally there has been a conversion of this Party like the one on the road to Damascus. However, after hearing once again the same tired clichés emanating from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, I can see that that was a conversion for the cameras only.

Thus I wish to conclude by asking Hon. Members to take into account Mr. Howe's question in addressing this Budget: should we not greatly dare?

[Translation]

And why should we not?

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister believe that having corporation taxes go down by half a billion dollars and individual taxes going up by $1 billion next year is fair? As well, does she consider it fair that those who were legally able to avoid paying any income tax last year will not pay a minimum tax this year and that the surcharge has no effect on them whatsoever? Does she believe those two things to be fair?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, in the Budget we indicated that we recognize that corporation taxes need a thorough review. We have published a paper on how choices can be made to reform corporation taxes. In addition, we have placed a tax on financial institutions. Also, we have eliminated some of the loopholes to which the Hon. Member referred, such as using hotels under certain circumstances. Some other loopholes have been removed, such as the scientific research tax credit. We have moved to ensure that the system will become fair. We will continue to do that. It is a continuing program. It is not something which will stop today, it will go on. We will be looking at the whole taxation system through corporation taxes. We know that there are still changes to be made and we will be making them. Some were made in November and some are being made now.

What the Hon. Member is forgetting is that the people of Canada who will benefit from some of the things which we have done will not be the rich and wealthy Canadians. Those who will benefit will be small-businessmen and farmers. Has he forgotten about the farmers? They are the ones who will benefit the most from some of the things which we have done. It will be easier for them to pass on their farms to the next generation.

It is a fair Budget. Fair means that Canadians can look us in the eye, as they have been doing today. We have been flooded with telephone calls and letters from the people of Canada who are saying that they agree with the Budget and that they know we are on the right track.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a couple of questions to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). In January, the Department of Finance published a paper entitled Tax Issues in Agriculture. That paper indicated that farmers earn twice as much as the average Canadian and that they only pay a quarter of the taxes which ordinary Canadians pay. It also indicated that farmers were approximately eight times better off than the average Canadian. The response to that paper from the agricultural community was swift and predictable. It absolutely slaughtered the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on his view of the world and on his view of the Canadian farming scene. It is little wonder!

On October 30, 1984, the Farm Credit Corporation published a paper which indicated that 17 per cent of Canadian farmers were in serious financial difficulty. That paper was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. A few weeks later, the committee released a report which completely rejected the position of the Minister of Finance. If anything, the farm debt crisis in Canada has deepened. A report from an agriculture committee in Bruce County indicated that it was not 17 per cent, but that 30 per cent of the farmers were in serious financial difficulty in countries such as Bruce and Grey.

The report of the standing committee, which had a majority of Tory Members, recommended an emergency program of agri-bonds which would address the serious financial difficulties which some 39,000 farmers face in Canada. That recommendation provided for long-term, low interest agri-bonds at 8 per cent for a five-year period, up to a maximum of $300,000.

The Minister spoke about what the Budget would do for farmers. Certainly, it does not address the serious financial difficulties of the 39,000 farmers who are facing foreclosure or bankruptcy this year. If there is any urgency in the agricultural community, it is that urgency. The Budget, as far as I can see, does not address the situation. I am wondering why the Government did not adopt the recommendation of the standing committee which would have dealt with the serious financial difficulties which face 39,000 farmers. It would have provided long-term, low interest rate loans from the Farm Credit Corporation with a view to saving the farms of those producers who are the most productive. Those producers are the youngest and produce one-half of the produce in Canada. Why did the Budget not deal with that matter? Why did the Government not accept the report of the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party is well aware and very sensitive to the problems which face farmers in Canada, particularly those farmers who are struggling to hang on to their farms and those who have faced the most difficulty. We do have policies for those farmers. However, it is not part of the budgetary process; it is part of a review which is now before the Minister of Finance. He recognizes the sensitivity in the area and he knows, as we all do, that this segment is very important to Canada. Therefore, he will review the policies with respect to farmers.

Some farmers will benefit from proposals concerning the red meat stabilization plan. Other farmers will benefit from the expansion of the small business bond. Sixty per cent of small business bonds go to the agricultural community.

We know farmers are facing problems and we are reviewing those problems. We will be coming forward with policies for farmers. Some of the policies which help the farmers of Canada are in the Budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister to tell all Canadians today who is responsible for the situation in which the Canadian Government now finds itself. I think it is important because for hours on end we are going to be listening to the great Liberal tenors blaming us for everything under the sun, searching for every kind of discrepancy, and posing as the self-appointed defenders of the poor, the underprivileged, the elderly. They ought to hang their heads in shame, and I would like the Minister to set the record straight today and tell all Canadians who are listening who in fact is responsible for the present situation in Canada.

Mr. Gauthier: The Conservatives, my friend! You have brought forth a Budget which falls far short of the mark.

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, yes, we all know who is responsible for the situation in which elderly Canadians find themselves today. Pension reform was studied for 10 years and we were able to make good use of what was accomplished by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) when he was involved with pensions. We thank him for that. It is too had that after all that time the situation had to wait for us to take action.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, it is still less than 24 hours since the unveiling of the Conservative Budget. With the exception of Investment Canada, it is the first piece of legislation which came directly from this Government. It gives us a clear statement of its policy and its view of Canada.

We have already heard an overwhelming amount of critical comment on the budget proposals which strike directly at low and middle-income families. The reaction is real and it is justified. Ordinary taxpayers are the target of the Government's efforts to raise revenue. For many months we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talk about a mythical bank president, or a mother who was receiving family benefits which she did not really need. But it seems that if the Government has aimed at the bank president in this budget, it has shot the teller.

Lower-income Canadians will be paying dearly. A two-parent family with two children and one income totalling $20,000 will be paying upwards of $350 extra in taxes, and that figure does not include the losses from de-indexation of family tax benefits and tax deductions.

Low and middle-income earners will be paying but what are they being offered by the Government? Will all these tax increases and discriminatory measures produce more jobs for our 1.4 million unemployed? The budget does not say so. In this budget, the Government is forcing the average Canadian to pay, and to accept in return a vague promise of better times to come. I say a "vague promise" because the budget has no agenda for economic growth and no projections for growth beyond next year.

I understand that the Department of Finance has prepared forecasts for five years and further but they were not used. In the budget document on Canada's Economic Prospects for 1985-1990, most tables stop at 1986. We are not told what the Government expects the eventual impact of its budget proposals to be. Impact statements have been asked for and have been refused. We are simply told to shoulder this extra tax burden and soldier on.

Canadians are overwhelmingly concerned about unemployment and the Government has not adequately addressed that concern in this budget. Without an agenda for economic growth, who can guarantee any improvement in the unemplo-ment situation? Again, in the Minister's own budget papers, he shows GNP for 1985 at 3.1 as compared to 4.7 in 1984. It shows GNP in 1986 at 2.4. In other words, the Minister's own figures are showing a loss of economic growth. The same table shows unemployment figures of 11.1 in 1984 and 10.3 in 1986.

There is a further statement which adds to our confusion. It says that in 1985, consumption is expected to be an important source of growth. Yet we have measures here which are going to reduce the purchasing power of Canadians. The Government shows a 10.3 per cent unemployment level in 1986, which is still unacceptably high. Are we to take it that the Government is satisfied with the 10 per cent unemployment rate? Is that what Canadians have to look forward to as a result of this anti-family, anti-consumer budget?

When I questioned the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) earlier today on these matters, he said that numbers are not the be-all and end-all of budgets. It is interesting to note that he was somewhat reluctant to discuss the figures from his own Department. However, in a way, the Minister is correct. Budgets are less about numbers of more about people because it is the ordinary working, middle and low-income people who pay taxes, who buy things and who keep the economy going. But here we have a budget which is going to take billions of dollars of purchasing power out of the economy. At the same time we are asked to accept the promise that the unemployment rate will be reduced. Yet we know that even to stay where we are in terms of our present unacceptable 11 per cent rate of unemployment, we need economic growth of 3 per cent. The Government is projecting a loss of economic growth. It is also projecting a slight drop in unemployment. That does not make sense, Mr. Speaker.

Let us leave the numbers for a moment and consider expectations. What might Canadians have expected to see in this budget given the promises of the Government? First, let us consider fairness. The budget amounts to a series of tax breaks for big business and tax grabs from middle and low-income families. Is that to be considered a definition of fairness? The sales tax is not only increased but the number of items which are subject to sales tax is greatly enlarged and includes such necessities of life as soap and medical supplies. This is going to be particularly hard on families with young children and low incomes.

The Government promised a minimum tax on the wealthy. This is not delivered. We have another discussion paper. The temporary surtax is certainly not to be confused with the minimum tax on the wealthy because the temporary surtax applies only to people with taxable income. If, indeed, one has a clever accountant who can guarantee that one has no taxable income, then ovbiously the surtax does not apply. So the minimum tax on the wealthy is another promise which was not kept.

With respect to pensions for home makers, I might just mention that the Government's pension proposals, as far as they go and in so far as they are laudable, are a rehash of reforms introduced by the previous Liberal Government. But this Government did not follow through with the Liberal proposal to provide protection from inflation in private pension benefits, and the Government did not come through with any proposals on pensions for homemakers even though the Prime Minister campaigned on a promise to institute home maker's pensions.

With respect to maintaining universal social programs, I must say we have come a very long way since universality was regarded as a sacred trust. Before Christmas there were threats that all social programs were up for review and might be rearranged. This Party led the criticism and, indeed, Canada's citizens protested loud and hard. So the Government backed off and watered down its consultation paper. This is the same Government which, when in opposition, howled in outrage when old age benefits were capped at 6 and 5 per cent, even though the resultant drop in inflation meant that the pensioners lost only $2.17 while the caps were in place. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and those others of us who were here, will certainly remember the howls of outrage because capping was occurring at six and five, but what we now see essentially is de-indexed pensions and family allowances.

This Budget is mean spirited and puts pensioners and families in the undignified position of being participants in a pension and family allowance lottery. If inflation is hovering at, say, 2.9 per cent, they will just have to hope that inflation nudges over 3 per cent so that their benefits will be indexed and they will have a better chance of making ends meet. What does that say about the attitude of the Government toward its retired labour force and those who are raising a future labour force?

While we are exploring attitudes, let us look at the $500,000 capital gains deduction. In introducing that change the Minister made it sound very reasonable. He spoke of the retiring farmer, and I think we would all sympathize with the idea that someone who is retiring, having worked hard on the farm or in a small business, might indeed get a break on capital gains and be able to plan to invest sensibly for retirement after a long life of hard and productive work. But we look again at the Budget papers and nothing limits the application of this exemption in any way. It could be applied to someone who has fine arts, jewellery bought in Switzerland, or a condominium in the Caribbean. There is no way that this is particularly aimed at the productive members of the Canadian economy. It can be used by someone who has no intention of contributing to the Canadian economy. This is really a slap in the face for the majority of Canadians who are doing what they can in these difficult times and who are now being asked to bear the brunt of the Government's tax increases.

Let us look at what is happening with energy. We find a tax levied which is being described as 2 cents a litre. In fact, if one adds in some other things resulting from the Western Accord, I think it is more likely to be 2.8 cents per litre. The Government's own figures in the Budget papers concerning the anticipated revenue from this gas hike just about matched the revenue it has lost by cancelling the PGRT. In other words, the multinationals get a gift and ordinary Canadians pay. I say "multinationals" advisedly, because those who benefited from the PGRT were the multinationals who had old oil; the smaller Canadian companies with more recent exploration did not benefit. So the Government has chosen to help the multinationals and ask the ordinary Canadian to pay.

As well, paying for energy involves much more than paying at the gas pump or paying more to heat one's house. There is an energy cost in practically everything we use. Energy costs are included all through the food chain in things such as transportation, processing, packaging, storage and marketing. Therefore, as a result of this quite substantial hike in gasoline prices, we can certainly expect food prices to go up.

There are other elements in this Budget which are also inflationary and that have not been faced squarely either. I fully expect that during the coming days, as we plough our way through this six pounds of paper, we will find many more things to comment on. But the single important point I want to make is that this Budget has failed to address questions of economic growth. Without growth we will not have new jobs. There is in fact a great risk that this Government, which is so concerned about the deficit, may have put so many regressive measures in place here that they will choke recovery and we will end up with a higher deficit.

I would just like to comment on a statement by the Minister of Finance after he came to power. In December of 1984, when the Department of Finance, which had predicted growth of 3.8 per cent, revised its figures and projected economic growth to 1990 would decline to an annual average of 3.2 per cent per year, the Minister of Finance said this is not an acceptable outlook for Canadians. That was a very clear statement. Yet here we have in the Budget papers a projection of 2.4 per cent for 1986, which is even worse, but apparently the Minister now finds that acceptable. Had he found it unacceptable, then surely his Budget would have included measures to raise that growth rate substantially within the same time-frame.

What we are talking about, Mr. Speaker, is the definition of our economic problems and the clarity of thought underlying how they are dealt with. This is where one has to be worried about a fixation on the deficit. Of course the deficit is important, but it is one factor and a symptom, not a cause. I get very worried when I find the whole emphasis on the deficit and apparently not much concern about the $50 billion worth of goods and services we are not producing but could be, and the need to get this economy more vibrant and active. That I think is the real issue; how to get more economic growth, more jobs. That is the best way to get the deficit down and I do not think that has been touched by this Budget.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say how pleased I am to be taking part in this historic debate. I would like to thank as well as congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on behalf of the people of my riding of Niagara Falls for setting a clear direction for the economic recovery of this country. The Budget will be welcomed by individuals from my riding, and I believe that it will also be welcomed by all Canadians.

Many people have written to me from my riding, as well as from across the country. Most of them have said the same thing; they want the Government of Canada to continue with those themes that we talked about as candidates in the 1984 election campaign. They want us to be true to our word and do everything we can to encourage job creation. They know, and I think most Members of this House will agree whether they admit it or not, that job creation will only be possible in Canada when the Government of Canada puts its own economic house in order and frees up the entrepreneurial spirit in Canadians to create more jobs. I believe this Budget makes that theme very, very clear.

As the Hon. Minister of Finance said last night, it is a Budget which rewards success rather than subsidizing effort. It is a Budget which builds on the sense of co-operation which this Government has created among all levels of government and the private sector; co-operation which is so necessary to our economy. This Budget, once and for all, puts an end to the fallacy that the federal Government alone can create all the jobs necessary to cure our country's unemployment. It is true that, given co-operation among all the players in Canadian society, Canada will once again be healthy economically.

I believe the Budget introduced last night by the Minister of Finance will do three things to set the course for Canada's economic recovery. First, and finally, after years of Government overspending and misspending, we will control and ultimately reduce the national debt. Second, we will improve the effectiveness and management of all areas of the federal Government. Third, we will encourage private initiatives by increasing the availability of capital and start rewarding success. This is the mandate that I believe we were given on September 4.

In my opinion the staggering growth of the national deficit has for many years hindered real growth in our econony. We have recognized that the first step in long-term regeneration is the control of the national deficit. The Budget of yesterday afternoon and the November statement are the first significant steps in that direction in 15 years. I was, therefore, pleased when the Minister of Finance announced that the deficit for this fiscal year will be $4.4 billion less than it would have been had no action been taken. The deficit for this fiscal year will be $33.8 billion as opposed to $38.2 billion.

This process will continue in the fiscal year 1986-87. According to predictions the deficit will be $8.3 billion less, down to $32.7 billion, as opposed to $40.2 billion. Most significantly, the direct impact of all these efforts since the Government has taken office is to reduce the deficit in 1990 by $20 billion. I am sure that all Canadians congratulate the Minister of Finance for producing a medium-term strategy that will ensure that the national deficit will be $75 billion less by 1990 than if no action had been taken.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nicholson: I believe that the necessity of reducing our national debt is recognized not only by those individuals who voted for the Progressive Conservative Party, but by the Members of the two Opposition Parties as well. All of us remember when early last spring the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) made just that point. He said that if he were elected Prime Minister of Canada he would reduce the structural debt in the country by 50 per cent over the course of seven years. He recognized what we are talking about in this Budget. As far back as 1982 the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) as well made the same statement. He said that the national deficit was too high. To that extent I believe they agree that we are making the right moves.

The theme of deficit reduction has been a theme of the Progressive Conservative Party for some time. This subject came up very often during the recent federal election campaign. I made the point, and I know others agreed with me and made similar points, that the country would never again be healthy economically until the national deficit was reduced. If big deficits and uncontrolled spending could have solved the unemployment problem in Canada, every man, woman, and child in the country would have two jobs by now.

There will be those in the Opposition ranks who will disagree with our approach. They will say that efforts at reducing of the national deficit are unfair and unwise at this time. They will make essentially the same speeches they made last November after the presentation of the economic statement. The arguments I heard earlier this afternoon are the same ones I heard in Novemver. After the economic statement the NDP said that we will lose jobs. Other people said that interest rates and inflation will go up. In fact, since November we have seen the creation of 200,000 new jobs. Interest rates today are at their lowest level in a decade. Inflation has come down and investor confidence has risen. The record of predictions of those who will criticize the approach will be as good as it was last November. They were wrong in November and are wrong again in May.

As I mentioned earlier, in order for the Government to create new jobs in Canada it is necessary for the Government to put its own affairs in order. It must improve the effectiveness and management of Government, the Public Service, and its policy with respect to Crown corporations. I believe there is no clearer statement as to where the Government intends to go than that made last night on the subject of Crown corporations. This is consistent with what we said in the past election campaign. It is our belief that unless a Crown corporation fulfills a continuing public policy purpose it should be sold. Government must return to the private sector activities which properly belong there.

In November the Government announced its intentions to sell the assets of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, including its holdings in Canadair and de Havilland. It is estimated that the sale of these companies will reduce the cash requirement of the Government of Canada by approximately $675 million and the federal deficit by some $350 million in 1985-86.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, corporations that no longer serve public purposes are being wound up. Legislation has already been introduced in Parliament to wind up the Canada Sports Pool Corporation, Loto Canada, and others. As well, five other corporations which are inactive, including Uranium Canada Limited and Mingan Associates, are being wound up.

The days when Government can afford to subsidize the mistakes of the past are over and that is a good thing for all of Canada. The business of Government is not business, it is to give direction to business. The Government will no longer pretend to be an entrepreneur. Decisions in this area are difficult, but they must be made. This is very true in the case of Cape Breton Island.

Although I was born in Niagara Falls and am very proud to represent the people of Niagara Falls, I continue to have hundreds of relatives on Cape Breton Island. When I visited there recently I overhead a discussion about the heavy water plants on Cape Breton Island. One individual made the point that these companies are costing the people of Canada approximately $100 million a year to keep 600 people employed. They are producing a product for which there is no longer a market. He said that he did not believe anyone had the courage to do what must be done, to day that enough is enough. He was proven wrong yesterday. The Government has the courage to say that the mistakes of the past cannot continue.

I was pleased to hear that, in addition to making that tough decision, the Government will not abandon the people of Cape Breton. Workers at that plant will receive generous severance benefits and will be assisted in seeking new employment elsewhere. An enriched tax incentive for new investment is being introduced and all new investment in that part of the country will be free of corporate income tax for 10 years.

In addition to our policy of privatization of Crown corporations, the Budget sets out a number of additional internal measures that we are taking to increase the effectiveness with which taxpayers' money is spent. The Public Service pension plan will be put on a fully funded basis with no taxpayer subsidy. The guarantee of indexation of pensions of Members of Parliament and Senators will end January 1, 1986. An aggressive program is being put into place to improve the Government's management of its cash and to dispose of property that it no longer needs. Most significantly, the federal Public Service, which was expected to increase in size by 15,000 positions over the next six years, will in fact be decreased by 15,000 positions.

As a result of these measures and those taken in November the Government will save more than $2 billion this year. That figure will grow to over $3 billion by 1990. The Government will also encourage private initiative. The Government realizes that this country was built on the strength of the individual and the courage of the small business person. For too many years we have said that Government can do it all. This has been demonstrated many times to be wrong for our country. The Government should encourage investment and risk-taking and reward success.

In order to encourage more Canadians to invest in Canada's growth, the Government is proposing a lifetime capital gains exemption of $500,000 for individuals. This lifetime exemption will be phased in over five years beginning this year. The full $500,000 exemption will be available to farmers immediately in recognition of their special problems and their contributions to Canadian society. I take particular pleasure in that provision in the Budget. Many times the farmers in my area from Niagara-on-the-Lake and Virgil have made that exact point to me. They would like to acquire new farmland, pass their farms on or dispose of their lands as they saw fit without the burden of capital gains. I was particularly pleased to see that measure in the Budget.

I believe the initiative taken by the Government in this area of capital gains will encourage entrepreneurship and investment by individual Canadians in their country. The Government is saying, "We want Canadians to invest. We want Canadians to build and create jobs. We want Canadians to be successful". It has been estimated that almost 1 million Canadians make capital gains, a vast majority of whom earn less than $40,000. This capital gains incentive is a strong signal that the new Government wants people with good ideas and the will to persevere to enjoy the fruits of their success. The Government of Canada is confident that Canadians will accept that challenge.

Small and medium sized businesses will also benefit from our proposals to change regulations governing RRSPs and pension fund investments. These measures will allow greater investment by pension funds in new businesses and small businesses seeking to expand. The measure will enable people with RRSPs to invest the plans directly in smaller Canadian businesses.

Small businesses and farmers will benefit from the extension of the small business farm program until 1987, and small businesses will be exempted for one year from the 5 per cent corporate surtax in recognition of the importance of strengthening small business and facilitating job creation. New and growing research and development companies will be entitled to a direct refund of the full tax credit that they earn on their first $2 million of R and D each year. Action will be taken to make the system fairer and to improve tax administration. These actions will benefit all of us, but especially entrepreneurs and small business owners by reducing administrative headaches.

Last night we saw a Budget that balanced tax fairness, effective Government management and the encouragement of private initiative. In order to accomplish those goals we all know that tough medicine is required. Last night someone in my apartment building approached me and said, "I think it is a good Budget but I am sorry that drinkers and smokers have to be taxed." I am sorry about a lot of things, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry that for 18 years we had a Government that overspent and misspent taxpayers' money. I am sorry that we built airports to which no one wanted to fly and that we build planes that nobody wanted to buy. I am sorry about all those things. This redoubles my commitment and the commitment of the Conservative Party to do something about the mistakes of the past and to make a clear statement that the Government alone cannot solve the problems of this country.

I believe the Budget contains a number of actions that will be taken to ensure greater fairness in the tax system. Specifically there will be a minimum income tax imposed on upper income Canadians in place in time for the 1986 taxation year. This I know is a concern to Canadians. I think most of us realize that we have to pay tax, but all of us want to have the assurance that everyone will pay his or her fair share. In addition there will be a temporary 18-month deficit reduction surtax on high-income Canadians and large corporations. Also there will be a tax on the capital of large banks and trust companies. There will be amendments which will prevent taxpayers from avoiding tax by splitting income through the use of loans to spouses and children. There will be the elimination of tax shelters involving property, such as yachts, recreational vehicles and hotels.

Equally important is how the Government collects taxes. The Budget also includes a number of measures to achieve fairer tax administration consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; the extension of the "Innocent until proven guilty" concept to cases involving sales and excise taxes under the Excise Tax Act; clear limits to Revenue Canada's powers of search and seizure, and limits on the Government's authority to make retroactive income tax regulations.

I am proud to be a part of a Party that includes people like the Minister of Finance who stands up for what he and this Party believes. We follow through with our election pledges. I think that is something Canadians have not been used to for a long time. I was amazed after being elected by the number of people who wrote to me saying, "I know you said that during the election. Will you do something different now you are elected?" This is what people saw before. That idea and that type of Government is finished in Canada, Mr. Speaker.

This Government is consistent. What I said in St. David's, in Willoughby Township or Queenston is what I say here in the House of Commons. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party are consistent in what they say. When we saw the Minister of Finance last night they saw the commitment, the honesty and the courage of that man. I believe that commitment, that honesty and that courage is what brought us here on September 4. I believe it is that honesty, courage and that commitment that will keep us here.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) is sorry about a lot of things. I am sorry that I had to listen to him. I take great exception to statements attributed to people, particularly because he is fortunate enough to have relatives in Cape Breton and was not fortunate enough to be born there himself. He is attributing some ludicrous comments to people whose names he has not given, whose identities are unknown, people who have said they did not think the Government had the guts to close the heavy water plants that are putting 700 people out of work, that this was breaking a Government commitment that the heavy water plants would not be closed until alternate employment was made available. What about the $100 million to $125 billion which the Government will now have in its treasury? What about the $2.1 million the Government saved cancelling the decentralization to Sydney, the $8 million the Government saved not going ahead with the downtown program in Sydney and the $64 million the Government saved in not going ahead with the coal wash plant. What about the $5.1 million the Government saved not going ahead with the wharf at North Sydney and the $8.3 million the Government saved not going ahead with the federal building in Sydney, plus millions of dollars for stages three and four of the coastguard college? All this was to announce a ridiculous advisory committee today, putting needed funding, $1.5 million in the fish plant in Glace Bay, $12 million in Donkin and funding for the strait areas. What dribble it is to say how this is such a wonderful thing the Government did and what a courageous decision for a community that already has 40 per cent unemployment.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member, who is using the privilege of the House not to be called to task on what he says, whether he really thinks this is a good thing, that what has happened is good for the people in Cape Breton.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I have a pretty good idea of what people are sorry for. They are sorry that Members like the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) and the Liberal Party have been running this country for the past 20 years. That is what people are sorry about.

Let me say something about Cape Breton. It was time to say enough was enough. One hundred million dollars to create 600 or 700 jobs is too much. This Government had to take the step. It was a necessary and a courageous step. It was time to put Cape Breton on a more economic and sound footing. For the first time Cape Breton has the chance for industry to come to Cape Breton. I want it, the Hon. Member wants it, all of Canada wants it. Now is the time. This Budget is the first step toward creating employment in Cape Breton, the employment that Cape Breton deserves.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) who I know is very concerned about the agricultural industry, the wine industry and the grape growers. Does he agree with the statement today by the wine growers group from Niagara who are opposed to the Budget? They find it unacceptable because it raises taxes on wines and spirits. Does the Hon. Member agree with the people he represents in the Niagara belt?

Another concern of many farm groups is a nine-cent-per-gallon increase imposed on gasoline and farm fuel through taxes. Does he agree with that?

Would the Hon. Member comment on another subject? Premier Miller, the Premier of Ontario, and the Treasurer, Bette Stephenson, have criticized the Budget. They are opposing it. They said that the Budget did not stimulate job creation and did not address the need for more housing in Ontario. I assume by implication that that includes housing in the Niagara Peninsula. Could the Hon. Member comment on the statements today of various groups in the area which he represents?

● (1540)

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the farmers of my area are very much like other Canadians. They want the Government to be sensitive to their needs. They know we have been responsive.

The Hon. Member failed to mention that just last fall—and none of the members of his Party raised this issue because they do not want to raise good news in the House of Commons—the Government picked up the full 100 per cent surplus of grape crop. We spent $12 million to help grape farmers in my area. They know of the efforts which are being made by individuals like myself, the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Pietz), the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) and other Members from the grape growing region of Canada. They know the consistent efforts which have been made to promote Canadian wines in Ottawa and across the country. They know those things.

As I said in my speech, one of the things farmers in my area came to see me about was the capital gains tax on their farm property. They wanted to be able to dispose of their property or to acquire new property. They do not want to have the burden of capital gains. When I go back to my riding of Niagara Falls, they will be very pleased because of the specific measures which help farmers of my area. As well they will benefit from all parts of the Budget.

Farmers are just like any other Canadians. When the federal Government puts its fiscal house in order, they benefit. When the Government is not spending all its money on interest, they benefit as well. I believe the farmers in my area and the farmers in the constituencies of other Members of the House of Commons will be very, very pleased with the results of the Budget.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a moment to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) for the excellent contribution to the budget debate, both in terms of the content of his speech and in terms of its delivery. He brought forward many points upon which we need to focus our attention as a House and as a people, particularly the wasteful spending on projects which have been continued for too long, such as the one in Cape Breton, costing taxpayers $100 million per year. My Liberal friend is understandably concerned about the abolition of that program. We could provide a substantial amount of money to the people of that area instead of into heavy water. We could pay 600 people $50,000 per year and still save Canadian taxpayers a substantial amount of money. We ought to be more concerned about helping people rather than continuing wasteful industries. I express appreciation to my colleague. I know he expressed the concern which I have heard many other Canadians put forward, and that he is speaking for them.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). He indicated how the Government had to be tough in the Budget. In his riding, just as in my riding, there are many citizens who are receiving the old age pension. Can he give any justification whatsoever for the Government in fact asking those who are living on the old age pension, which is below the poverty line, to absorb the first 3 per cent of the inflation rate? Why is it that his Government can be so tough on those citizens yet so easy on the very wealthy? Everything which is progressive has to be studied, the minimum tax has to be studied, but when the Government wants to zap senior folk, it is tough. Why does it not get tough with its friends for a change?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, this Budget is tough, but my friend forgot to mention that it is tough but fair. That is what this Budget is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nicholson: I listened to the Hon. Member when he asked his question; they should let me reply. They do not want to listen to logic. We are taking nothing away from senior citizens. If the Hon. Member read the Budget more closely he would see that nothing is taken from the gross income supplement. It continues, fully indexed, and it will protect senior citizens. Also he forgot to mention the child tax credit. That benefits the neediest in society, but he forgot to mention it. It does help. It helps senior citizens. It helps people on low incomes with children. It helps the neediest. The Hon. Member also forgot to mention the surtax on corporations and higher income Canadians. That is with whom we are getting tough.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to bring to Your Honour's attention that if an Hon. Member rises on a point of order, he can only do so if he is in his seat, not from his buddy's seat.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker knows that.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, it is always a delight to learn procedure from the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I rise on a point of order because the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt raised questions with the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) about matters which were not included in his speech. The question period following an Hon. Member's speech is supposed to relate to the remarks of the Hon. Member. I could have intervened sooner, but I knew that my friend from Niagara Falls could very well look after himself. I just wanted to point out that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt was completely out of order in his questions.

Mr. Rodriguez: On the same point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): That will be the last one as the period for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order; I only rise because the Hon. Member mentioned my riding. I raised a question with the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls because he in fact praised the Budget for being fair. When it is so obviously unfair, I had to point that out with a question and get his response.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, there has been an amazing circus criss-crossing the country over the last week or so trying to add some new buzz words to the political vocabulary of Canada—tough but fair, tough but fair. They hit the headlines, they hit the newscasts. They seem to have hit everything except the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) because what he brought in was a tough luck Budget. It is a Budget which is hard on Canadians. It is a Budget which is hard on the people who make up my constituency and the constituencies of every Member of the House of Commons. It is a Budget which is anything but fair. It is a Budget which is unjust. It is a Budget which is typified by the fact that our finance critic, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), could read portions from the Lalonde Budget and have the Conservatives clapping, thinking it was their Budget which they were supporting. It is a Budget in the sorry, sad and failed tradition of the Liberal Government which went before this Government.

I had hoped—I must say against hope, but I am an eternal optimist—that the Government would have learned its lesson after November, that it would have learned that the Liberal Party approach of cut-backs and of a fatuous concern with the deficit is an approach that will lead us to disaster.

I stood in my place in the House of Commons after the November statement and I predicted—and I ask Hon. Members to check the words which I stated at that stage—that in fact the budget changes which were brought in then, because they had the effect of decreasing economic activity in the country, would increase the budget deficit. Everybody looked quite amazed and thought that that could not happen. However, when the Minister of Finance stood yesterday, he conceded that the budget deficit is now $36 billion, not $35 billion as he projected.

The reason is absolutely clear. It is that economic activity has been slowed. Investment has not had the kind of expansion and buoyancy that this Government expected to occur, by magic. Instead we have had a perpetuation of an unemployment rate that is shameful for any country to experience. We have an unemployment rate 4 percentage points above that the United States. The unemployment rate is not significantly decreasing. It is an unemployment rate that persists, and we have a deficit that is rising. That is precisely what we predicted would be the consequence of the November statement, which followed the wrongheaded policies of the previous regime. Rather than accepting the lessons that we so magnanimously offer, these misguided souls on the Treasury benches continue in their misguided ways. They do so with a particular sense of affrontery as far as this Budget is concerned.

There is a level of unemployment in this country which our action group on jobs, as it criss-crossed across this country, heard described in place after place, community after community, as a human tragedy, a tragedy that was destroying the hopes and expectations of our young people. It is a tragedy that is putting into the ashcan of our society the older workers.

I presented a petition this morning from people in Kitchener, people who represent older workers, those over 40 and older. They do not have the prospect, as things stand in this country, to find jobs for themselves. The tragedy is very much there.

Forlorn optimist that I am, I expected that somehow there would be within this Budget something to permit the poor back-benchers to defend it as they go back to their constituencies this weekend, so that they would be able to point and say "There is a community initiatives fund that we have set up to assist communities to get people back to work. There is a youth initiatives fund to permit young people to start up their own businesses. There is something that would assist agriculture". Perhaps there could be the kind of thing we suggested in our group report. $100 million to help soil conservation measures in agriculture or the $200 million that we suggested to support reforestation in this country. I did not expect that would be the thrust of the Budget.

I have listened to the rhetoric of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Being the Prime Minister, I certainly thought we could believe him. He is a clever politician. I thought that within the Budget he would have inserted some gestures, some symbols of concern about the vast number of people out of work in this country. Granted, they might just be symbols; $200 million for a community initiatives fund instead of the $850 million that we recommended. I thought there might have been a limited amount for agriculture and a limited amount in terms of support for industrial renewal. I searched.

Yesterday I sat in on the lock-up. I figured it would be a difficult Budget to analyze. I thought within it there would be symbols or gestures and that it would be difficult for us as opposition people to make our way past some of the gestures to find the real substance of the Budget. In fact, this Government made it easy for us. It set before this House a Budget which, believe it or not, in a country with 10.9 per cent of the population out of work, does not have a single initiative to put people back to work directly. There is not a single initiative or a gesture to help, for example, get 20,000 people back into the workforce. There is not a single initiative to help people in agriculture.

I feel for the back-benchers who will face criticism from those in their constituencies who will be out of work over the next eight months, indeed the next 18 months. As a politician, I find it unbelievable that a Government would bring in a Budget that has in cold black print, which each of us will circulate as widely as possible throughout this country, a projection, and I refer to the Government's statistics in Table 5 of Canada's Economic Prospects, that 18 months from now, in December 1986, there will still be 10.3 per cent of the workforce in this country out of work.

In the course of a year and a half this Budget has set itself the heroic goal of cutting the rate of unemployment in this country by .6 per cent. Congratulations to those on the Treasury benches. I admire their political courage. They have guts indeed to stand before the country and say that this is a Budget about jobs when their own figures tell us that in 18 months the unemployment rate will have been reduced by .6 of a percentage point, and that with the most incredible of assumptions.

When you start as an economist instead of a politician to look at the assumptions that lie behind this Budget, you find they are assumptions behind which no independent economist with whom I am acquainted in this country would be prepared to stand. They are assumptions that suggest that growth rates inthe United States are going to continue to be quite positive for the next two years. We know from United States statistics that there is a significant downturn in economic activity occurring in the United States which makes those figures laughable, pie in the sky.

At the same time, if you look at the figures for investment next year in this country, which are plugged into this Budget, you see the bizarre prediction that there will be a real increase in investment in this country next year of 6.4 per cent in non-residential investment. Incredibly, it will be 10.7 per cent for residential investment. This is to happen at the same time as consumer expenditures in this country go up, according to the Government's own statistics, by 1.1 per cent.

I would hate to suggest that the Minister of Finance needs to return to first-year economics. I would hate to suggest that he needs a better understanding of the very basic laws of investment in any country. However, I would ask the Conservative back-benchers who come from the business community, if they were to face in cold, hard print the Government's prediction that there will be an increase of only 1 per cent in consumer spending, would they make vast new investments? Would they put their hard earned cash into risky business ventures in the hopes that they would be successful? I assume that Conservative back-benchers recognize, as Conservative front-benchers do not, that businesses need customers.

The Government would have us believe that people will rush out next year to put 10.7 per cent more investment into residential investment and 6.4 per cent more into non-residential investment, while at the same time consumers will only spend 1 per cent more. That is absolutely laughable. It is indefensible to anyone from the Conservative back-benches who has a degree in economics or at the very least has been in business for some years.

I plead with Conservative back-benchers to take the Minister of Finance aside and explain to him the facts of life. Tell him how the business world works, explain to him and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) that across this country, small businesses want to know that they will have customers and that there will be a market for what they produce before they invest. I beg them to go to him. I would not ask them to do so publicly, as I do not want them to get into trouble.

An Hon. Member: What about heavy water?

Mr. Langdon: For the benefit of the Hon. Members who mentioned heavy water, I was on record back in November as saying that those plants should be shut down. The reality of that is an important part of this Budget, but it should have been done with measures to see to it that the Cape Breton economy gets an injection of direct government support to assist the steel industry and the coal industry. There is absolutely nothing to provide a counterweight to the price Cape Breton is required to carry.

We have before us a Budget which is totally, and bizarrely inaccurate. It is a Budget which is based on dreams. It suggests to me that the Minister of Finance must be about to bring forth a Bill to legalize marijuana. It seems to me that this Budget was brought forth in a haze of dreams. It is a Budget built on fraud, on myth and on a total misunderstanding of how the small business community works. We have a Budget which hammers the people of this country.

It is estimated that in Essex County average families will pay an extra $500 in tax this year as a result of this Budget, and will pay nine cents more per gallon of gas. When their kids go to get soft drinks at the store they will have to pay federal sales tax. When the wives buy makeup they will have to pay federal sales tax. Medicine and health products are being taxed. There has been a big jump in taxes on beer, cigarettes, liquor and wine. Sales taxes on all goods are going up. Via Rail is going to raise its fares at least 30 per cent in the Windsor to Quebec City corridor. There will be an income tax increase of at least $215 per family. This is coming from a Government that promised it would not bring in increases in income tax.

What we have before us is a Budget that, in economic terms, is a hopeless disaster, and in human terms in an unfair burden imposed upon the people of this country.

There has not been one single specific move to put a minimum tax into effect. There will be a decrease of $540 million in corporation taxes for next year while individual taxes will go up $1 billion or even more by 1991. We have a Budget that hurts the resource sector through cut-backs in agriculture and fisheries. It is a Budget that hurts the industrial sector through cut-backs to IRDP.

To conclude, it is a Budget that fails completely to meet the hopes and expectations about which we heard across the country as our action group spoke to hundreds and hundreds of groups of Canadians. The Government talks about consultation. We actually consulted instead of just playing the game. What we heard led to a budget proposal entitled Canada Unlimited which contains a real set of benefits for Canadians, not the kind of damage that this Budget invites.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I am really very pleased that the Hon. Member reminded us once again that he is an economics professor. I know who should go back to take the first-year course in economics.

We in this country have experienced some of the things recommended by the Hon. Member like the Youth Initiative Fund. These are little funds in little pots. What has this left us? It has left us with huge deficit and unemployment. While the Hon. Member was speaking of all the funny-money economics at which he seems to be so expert, the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) was meeting with 40 senior citizens in the lobby of this very building. These senior citizens commended the Government for its Budget.

How can the Hon. Member reconcile what he said today with the statement he made while smiling into the television camera earlier this spring? At that time he said we can't simply accept continuing large deficits; that does not make sense. There are only two ways to reduce the debt of this nation; reduce expenditures and increase taxes. Does the Hon. Member have another suggestion?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have in fact 70 suggestions which were put together in the proposal entitled Canada Unlimited. I would argue that it contains an approach which recognizes reality. The reality is that we now have a deficit of $36 billion, not because the previous Government set out to achieve that level of deficit, but because it bought exactly the same kind of crazy, mixed up logic of which this Government is speaking. The Government thinks that if it cuts back, raises taxes and relies on the corporate sector, it will put people back to work and bring down the deficit.

Earlier today we had the quite dramatic spectacle of Conservatives clapping vigorously for phrases which came out of the Liberal Budget of Marc Lalonde. The reason for that is absolutely clear. That Liberal Budget did exactly the same thing. It tried to cut the deficit and the result was an increase in the deficit.

I would like to make it very clear that Canada cannot afford over the next three to five years to keep building deficits. It is not fair to future generations if we spend 30 per cent of what we take from the taxpayers of the country to service the public debt. It is wrong and morally indefensible. If we want to do something about that burden, there is only one way to do it.

When I commented on the November statement, I predicted, because of the cut-backs and the tax increases, that the deficit would be higher than $35 billion. Was I right? I was absolutely right. The deficit is now $36 billion. I will make exactly the same prediction today. The Government thinks it will reduce the deficit by squeezing the economy. The result will be a higher deficit. The people in the Treasury benches will help to bankrupt the country. They will have to carry the responsibility in the years ahead. There is a single answer.

There is only one solution, and it must be one that will provide for a growing economy.

[English]

It is necessary to have an economy which will grow fast. This economy, as a result of the actions of the Government, will not grow, it will decrease. In 1985 there will be a growth rate of 3.1 per cent, and in 1986 the growth rate will be 2.4 per cent. The Government is driving the country into disaster, as the Liberal Party did before it. As a result, we will end up with a higher deficit. Members on the other side of the House will be to blame for that.

The answer is to bring into effect what the NDP presented six weeks ago. We need a significant change in the tax system which would require the corporate sector to pay its fair share, instead of decreasing corporate taxes which this Budget does. We need a change which would put a permanent fair tax burden on wealthy Canadians. It should be permanent, not a one-shot surtax. At the same time, we should be providing tax relief for ordinary Canadians. We should be providing tax benefits for working people. The working people should not have the tax loads which they will be required to pay as as result of this irresponsibility.

If we put the significant amount of money we would get as a result of those changes into community initiatives and provided help for young people, communities, the housing industry and municipalities, people could return to work. The unemployment rate would be cut by 2.5 per cent, not by the .6 per cent about which the Government seems ecstatic. I would warn government Members, when they go out into the country to defend a target or a prediction, that over the next 18 months the unemployment rate will only be reduced by .06 per cent. Those Members will come back to the House with red faces their tails between their legs. As a result, I hope a new Budget will be brought down within three months.

Mr. Pietz: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) a question about his statement regarding transportation and gasoline costs in Windsor. Why has he said nothing about the incentives the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has continued to make available to encourage Canadians to convert to alternate fuels? He did not tell ordinary Canadians that, rather than increasing their transportation costs, they could decrease those costs as much as 45 per cent by converting to alternate fuels. He knows that in Ontario, for example, automobile owners are forgiven the provincial sales tax on their vehicles if those vehicles are converted and if the refund is applied for within 30 days.

The Minister of Finance has continued to provide $400 for conversion to propane, and $500 for conversion to natural gas. As a result, conversion costs can be recovered. The Hon. Member knows that alternate fuels such as propane can be purchased at approximately 25 per cent of service stations. Alternate fuels also cut down on pollution. As well, they are Canadian fuels. Alternate fuels help to put Canadians back to work. Why does he not recommend the 45 per cent savings to ordinary Canadians and recognize the Minister's consideration in this regard?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that question has been raised. In fact, there are so many targets in the Budget that I did not want to touch on all of them. A most destructive, senseless and ridiculous approach has been taken in the Budget. At a time when we are trying to save energy and, indeed, as the Members said, to encourage people to convert to alternate energy sources, the Budget has placed a federal sales tax on wood burning stoves, wind deflectors, heat pumps, solar heaters, panels for furnaces, insulation materials, wind generators, windmills, wind deflectors and other such goods. Serious and shameful damage is being done to the alternate energy sector, as well as the increases which will face people in the Member's constituency and mine as a result of the increases in transportation costs which will hit the rail corridor between Windsor and Quebec.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, today is a great day because I have been given an opportunity to defend an excellent Budget, and it is also a day I have been waiting for ever since I became a Member of this House, because today I am making my maiden speech in this House.

The Budget brought down yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Member for Etobicoke Centre, is of paramount importance. It constitutes a turning point, a totally new economic direction that the Government of Canada is obliged to take, without delay. We have turned the page. The economic situation in Canada had become critical and reducing the deficit was both necessary and urgent. This was due to the following, and I would like to quote what the Minister said in his speech, and I quote:

> High deficits constrain our ability to promote growth and create jobs. High unemployment in turn contributes to even higher deficits.

Canada was caught in a situation from which it could be freed only by taking a totally different approach. This Budget addresses the vicious circle of unemployment and debt, which was spiralling upwards at a terrifying rate.

This Budget's philosophy is to urge Canadians to take the initiative and to become the instrument of our country's economic renewal. It was important to allow the private sector substantial room for manoeuvring, because the State cannot act as an absolute power and constantly tell its citizens what they must do. Canadians want jobs and they want permanent jobs. However, it is not up to the Government alone to create jobs. All Canadian men and women must help make it happen: small businesses, medium-sized businesses, big corporations and the Government. In this context, the new measures being proposed are very definite incentives. That is why, Mr. Speaker, as the Member for the riding of Louis-Hébert, it is with great pride that I rise in the House today to speak to the concerns of my constituents who, I am sure, will understand the sound reasoning behind these budgetary measures.

I would like to describe, very briefly, my riding which is located on the shores of the St. Lawrence and includes four towns, Sainte-Foy being the largest with a population of 70,000. My riding also includes Sillery, Cap-Rouge and L'Ancienne-Lorette, which are not as big and together have a population of 100,000. Sainte-Foy airport at L'Ancienne-Lorette is also in my riding, which also has a railway station and a bus terminal. I would say that as far as transportation is concerned, my riding is well provided for. Tertiary services are also adequate, and Sainte-Foy has built sports facilities where some of our gold medal winners have trained.

I know my riding and I know its major issues. As a former municipal councillor in Sainte-Foy, I became acquainted with all the townships. I know the mayors of all four towns in my riding, with their councillors, and also the leaders of organizations and their members. This is a great advantage in serving my constituents to the best of my ability. The residents of Louis-Hébert have a great deal of courage and are able to rise above adversity, and they are also very creative people. For months and even years they have been working on a new economic venture that will benefit the entire Quebec City region. It is incredible to see how well all these organizations, all these people with varying interests are able to work together towards a common goal, and I am thinking, for instance, of the hi-tech industrial park, where high-precision optical and laser instruments will be manufactured.

Mr. Speaker, the riding of Louis-Hébert also has a number of educational institutions including Laval University the oldest francophone university in North-America and also the Sainte-Foy CEGEP, the Collège Notre-Dame-de-Foy and St. Lawrence College.

Mr. Speaker, you will understand that I am all the more concerned for young people since this year is International Youth Year, which is only fair.

Being a teacher, I can assure you that I am very sensitive to the requests and recommendations made to me by young people. That is why, Mr. Speaker, you will readily understand that I am very pleased about the action taken by the Government to create jobs. As you know, unemployment is a terrible ill facing all young people who enter the labour market and must often resign themselves to live on welfare, because all their efforts and goodwill are often of no avail. All the cases submitted to my constituency office are vivid proof of this fact.

The proposals contained in this Budget, which aim mostly at creating new jobs, can only help these young people to finally join the labour market, and most important, to find permanent employment. In addition, as announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) at the First Ministers' Conference in Regina, there is now a Conservative approach to training and employment designed to promote professional training rather than short-term jobs. With such an approach, an increased participation by the private sector and local businesses is essential. That is why, in view of the importance of such an initiative, $900 million have been set aside for these programs this year and an additional amount of $900 million will be allocated in 1986-87. One can only rejoice at such an initiative, which will have a direct impact on these young people looking for a job. I can only approve such a Budget, Mr. Speaker.

In the same connection, the field of research is close to my heart because, obviously, young people will have to live with technological change. High technology is future-oriented and will create a tremendous number of jobs.

Mr. Speaker, the residents of Louis-Hébert are lucky in this regard. Indeed, we have at Laval University, which is very active in the area of research, especially in medicine, optics and laser technology, and elsewhere in the constituency two highly sophisticated scientific complexes, namely, the National Scientific Research Institute, which specializes in water and geological research and also has a second role, that of teaching students at the second and third cycle levels. Moreover, there is the Quebec industrial research centre, which cooperates with industry to develop products as much as possible according to the major directions of the technological approach taken by the Quebec Government.

It was therefore essential that such an important field continue to get federal support, and by refunding 100 per cent of the tax credit earned by small businesses on their first $2 million of qualifying expenditures on research and development each year, the government is making it much easier for new industries which have problems attracting investment capital to expand. Since high technology is a leading sector which will develop even more and become increasingly important in industry, the risk taken by potential investors is most interesting because it is a guarantee of future profitability.

By abolishing the flow-out of the scientific research tax credit to foreign investors, the Canadian Government urges more Canadian investors to take advantage of this measure, and most important, I want to emphasize that it gives them a choice. Everyone is free to invest if and as he chooses.

As I have just pointed out, it must be acknowledged that potential investors are bound to be attracted to this sector because it will continue to expand, thus practically cutting risks down to nothing. It is a safe investment.

Mr. Speaker, this measure will enable the riding of Louis-Hébert to take its rightful place in the technological revolution, ensuring the development of the riding and the creation of jobs related to that sector. Allow me to quote the words of the Right Hon. the Prime Minister when he visited my constituency in 1982:

> This region and this riding have everything to become a research and development nerve centre. You have industries, the university, skilled labour, research centres, a social infrastructure and so on. All you need now is the willingness of the federal Government to set targets that reflect the requirements of the situation and the talent of our people, and to cooperate with Quebec to turn that into reality.

And today, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see that the federal Government is willing and anxious to contribute more generously to technological development. I am convinced that the implementation of those measures will enable us to fulfill our aspirations. The Canadian people want to succeed and the residents of my riding share the same ambition. I know them very well, so I have no doubt about that. The harmony which our Government has restored since September 4 between Ottawa and the provinces, particularly the Government of Quebec, augurs well. This dialogue can only benefit all citizens in the constituency of Louis-Hébert, Quebec, and even Canada as a whole.

I can assure the various interest groups of my region that they have my full support in their quest for those objectives. I must emphasize that, through a tax credit, the federal Government will encourage individuals to invest in Quebec's Fonds de solidarité, or in any other similar fund which benefits from provincial tax assistance. Quebec's Fonds de solidarité is a very worthy initiative that came to light after representations were made by the Quebec Federation of Labour to provincial Employment Minister Robert Dean. It is an outstanding example of labour participation in investment projects whose first priority is to help small and medium-sized businesses. It is administered by a 13-member board of directors whose mandate is to invest the funds and make sure that the investments are designed to reach the objectives, namely maintain existing jobs and create new ones.

The tax credit now available in Quebec is one of the best. For instance, someone who would buy 100 shares of $10 today—an investment of $1,000—would in fact have to pay only $187 after eligible tax deductions. In addition to the tax credit already given by the Province of Quebec, the new federal Government tax credit will be a further incentive to make such investments, and the short and long term impact on the economy can only be very positive.

Now, as a woman and a mother, I am very sensitive to the standard of living of women in our society. I am very pleased with the proposals concerning family benefits, which point to this Government's constant concern for the less-privileged in our society.

Many of my constituents were quite apprehensive of a decrease in family allowances. I am proud to reassure them, because these have not been affected. On the contrary, the Government has announced a restructuring of family benefits along the lines of a tax credit. Those changes resulted from suggestions made by a large number of Canadians. Starting in 1986, the Minister of Finance announced that the child tax credit paid to low-income families will be significantly increased to $524 per child as early as 1988, a $140 increase. Moreover, the income level at which the credit begins to phase out will be lowered. Starting in 1987, tax exemption for children will be reduced over a three-year period so that the exemption for children under age 18 will be equal to the level of family allowances. I am very pleased with those measures. They show this Government's concerns for families, the basic structure of our society and the starting point for economic growth. Again this is why I am so pleased with those measures.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say that the constituency of Louis-Hébert, the constituency I love so much because of its lively people who are decidedly determined to pull through, is a model of co-operation, and this budget will allow them to fully exercise their initiative and enterpreneurship. These budget measures which are directly aimed at helping small and medium-sized businesses will finally help put people of every age group back to work. They do not privilege any specific group. In that sense, this is a budget that is just and fair for each and every Canadian man and woman. Work is vitally important in our society. By means of this budget, the Canadian Government will enable a very large number of Canadians to recover the dignity they lost with their jobs. Work gives the individual back his or her dignity. This is why it was so essential to deal now with this problem. This Conservative Government, on the other hand, has created 200,000 jobs since September 4, 1984, something which the previous Government could not do in 12 years.

Statistics show also that last month we experienced our largest employment increase in five years, and this is most encouraging. These figures, Mr. Speaker, show how much emphasis my colleagues and myself are laying on the difficult problem of unemployment, and we are willing to do everything that is needed to correct the situation and make sure that economic recovery is effective and producing results as fast as possible. We had to be reasonable and not slash too deeply into the deficit because this would have hurt the less privileged provinces, something which we could not accept. Our sense of justice and fairness would not have it. As any good manager, the Government is aware that it must pay its debt back or at least reduce it, because the astronomical amounts of money needed to pay interests on that debt clearly hinder our economic recovery. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we had no choice, it was an unavoidable obligation.

People of Louis-Hébert, Quebecers, Canadians, have faith in us! This new direction was necessary and urgent on the short and the medium term. I am convinced it will have a very positive impact and will help economic recovery by promoting growth in the private sector. Canadians at last will be able to return to work and regain their dignity, a sine qua non condition for the full development of all individuals. We support small- and medium-size businesses, Mr. Speaker, because we know that their owners who are very good administrators and who feel that a penny saved is worth more that a penny earned will not squander their money. They have repeatedly told us: "Reduce the deficit and pay your debts. We know, because we are involved in trade and commerce, that if we behaved the way the government has so far, we would have been bankrupt long ago. We do not act irrationally, we tighten our belts and we keep a close watch on our spending." I know that there are employees who accepted salary reductions to keep their jobs when interest rates were so high. They have managed to survive. I know also that there are board chairmen who withdrew their children from private schools, sold their summer cottages, renounced their regular games of golf, lived sparingly and survived those difficult times. Today, we are calling on the Canadian public as a whole to help our country which has run into a financial dead-end and must find a way out. We must revive our economy, create jobs, rationalize government spending, administer with increased efficiency. There will be no increase in the operation and investment budgets of the departments . . . I just need a couple of seconds more to conclude, Mr. Speaker. Operation and investment budgets of the departments will no longer be increased to reflect inflation. Each and every one of us must do his or her share, so that our children may live and hope for the dignity which results from the satisfaction of a job well done, raise a family and live as our parents used to before the degrading and decadent Liberal era.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions, comments. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins).

• (1640)

[English]

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on her Maiden Speech. It was wonderful and the first of many in the House. I share her tremendous enthusiasm for this Budget. I have been receiving very positive response from my riding of Capilano in British Columbia about the initiatives which the Government is taking.

I think there is an aspect of the Budget that we have not yet discussed to a great degree. One of the major emphasis is, of course, on the development of small business. It is now possible for pension funds and RRSPs to be put into small business. Women are really the engine behind the creation of so many new small businesses. I therefore feel that this Budget is a tremendous boon to the women of the country who have entrepreneurial spirit and want to get involved but have not had the necessary financing. Would the Hon. Member agree that the initiatives we are taking in the Budget will be a great boon to the women of the country in getting their small businesses going and growing and creating the jobs which we all want?

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for her kind words and also for her question. The essence of my entire speech was to say that in my opinion the incentives made available to small and medium businesses, especially as far as research and development are concerned, will in the long-term really create jobs. Let me explain that. If small businesses are allowed to invest in research and development and at the end of the year, to recover that money through a tax credit, I think that an increasing number of small industries will explore new avenues and thus create jobs in the long term.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. Debate. The Hon. Member Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, a federal Budget is supposed to do a great many things. First and foremost it is supposed to be about ordinary, everyday people. It should assure them that their Government is listening to them, cares for them, and is committed to ensuring equal opportunity for careers, education, recreation and retirement. A Budget should be about people and their lives, but this Budget is about none of those things. It gives none of those assurances. It is cold and insensitive. It is a statement which fails to understand the urgent needs of Canadian women, of youth, and of the elderly. It has taken this cynical, unfeeling Budget to flush the Conservative Government out on where it stands on issues that really matter to the general population, to Monsieur, Madame, tout le monde. The sound of cold hard cash rings through this Budget ripping holes in our social safety net, but the voices of ordinary Canadian men and women have not been heard.

Canadians had great expectations and hopes for this Budget. The Government consulted and consulted, but reality indicates that this much-touted consultation process has been an utter flop. We waited for more than eight months to see which lobby would win the day. It is not very difficult to discern. The big business boys, the multinationals, the oil companies and the defence industry are the winners. The Government listened to them. I can only hope that the women, the youth, and the labour leaders invited to be consulted at the national economic conference were at least given a cup of coffee and a doughnut, because that is about all they got out of this Budget.

Harry Truman once said, "When you can't convince them, confuse them". The Tories have tried that often enough. Now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has gone one better. When you can't confuse, consult.

A federal Budget is also supposed to answer questions and remove uncertainty. This one has done exactly the reverse. Canadians now have more questions than ever before about the Government's secret agenda for social programs and social policy. There are questions about what is going to happen with the maternity benefits program and the unemployment insurance scheme. There is more uncertainty than ever before about how the Government intends to replace the cuts in job creation and training programs. These cuts severely hurt the efforts of youth to find meaningful, lasting work. The lack of detail on the Government's proposed $900 million labour strategy is absolutely shocking and frustrating. You had better check your Budget because I believe that $900 million is not new money. It is renewed from last year.

I listened to the Budget speech yesterday with great care and a good deal of hope. I listened on behalf of women in the workplace, women working in the home, women struggling to make ends meet for their families, women retired on fixed incomes, and women living below the poverty line. I listened on behalf of young people who were promised so much in the last election but have seen so little. I was listening and hoping. However, today I share the bitter disappointment of these women and young people in the reality of this barren Budget.

Before touching on areas on areas of specific concern to women and youth I would like to say a few words about the tone and underlying message of this Budget. Through this tone we see clearly how the Government has ignored the forces of ordinary men and women. In the fourth paragraph on the first page the Minister said:

> My Budget calls for Canadians, not government, to choose what is best for Canada. And it challenges Canadians by rewarding success, not subsidizing effort.

I thought that sheer effort and pride in one's work used to be the motto for this society. Apparently now only successful financial effort is of worth. I think the ordinary folk of society will not be very pleased with that.

Further down I see a description of how the discussion process took place. Page 17 contains that marvellous part of the Budget about de-indexing. It reads:

> The purpose of indexation has been to protect Canadians from the effects of rising prices. But it has become increasingly clear that Canadians must also find a way to protect themselves against rising deficits and the soaring national debt.

I would like to have that told to single-parent families, to single mothers, the elderly and the poor. How are they going to protect themselves against this rising deficit and the soaring national debt? I am sure they got a tremendous sense of satisfaction from that remark. When you tell people that it is about time they started to pull their own weight to protect themselves, I think it is a bit unfair. This is what I mean when I say that the Budget is cold, insensitive and that it lacks a human face and a human heart.

I could go on. There are so many matters of affront in the tone and the text of the Budget that I am almost ashamed that this is our Government speaking out. Let us look at what the Government says about particular benefits to women, something I will deal with later. As a woman reading what the Government appears to think about me, I wonder about this Government's supposed interest in the other sex.

I want to turn to several points in the Government's Budget that are deeply disturbing to me and I believe to millions of Canadian women and young people.

Canadians expected training for women and youth to be a top priority in this Budget. How often did we hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) chant "jobs, jobs, jobs"? What did the Minister of Finance say? From where did he get his guidance? He said absolutely nothing about youth. The guidance he got was from the Nielsen Task Force. It was to address all those concerns particularly relating to youth and women, areas of major unemployment. The Task Force was to look at and determine the kinds of programs women and youth should have. I would suggest that Members on the other side of this House take a look at the list of people used in all this wonderful consultative process and notice the absence of the distaff side. There was an absence of women and young people on the committees used by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). This makes me very sad for the future of training. What about the cutting that will take place?

We have had Budget cuts in general and critical skills training of $78 million. Young people will have to wait until the fall to hear of any replacement programs. High-tech job training is precisely what young men and women need. Upgrading of skills is essential for women and for youth to secure better-paying jobs. Nearly 500,000 young people are out of work. Yet this Government chooses to cut funds for highly skilled job training. Are we to return to the days when we trained young women to be hairdressers?

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the Budget's job creation efforts rely totally on the private sector, the same folks who brought us the situation in which women are blocked from promotion, still earn less than men for work of equal value, and still discriminate against women. This is a hope and a prayer job creation strategy and it is doomed to condemn women to job ghettos.

The Government has also created undue uncertainty over the status of the unemployment insurance scheme. Of particular concern to women is the future of maternity benefits. Maternity benefits are a right not a social benefit or a privilege. They are an important bridge for women who wish to continue to work after childbirth. Since 70 per cent of the recipients do return to the job market, I think they have indicated their attachment to the program. It is obvious this program is an integral part of their economic independence. We will be monitoring the Government's plans in this area very carefully. Canada already ranks near the very bottom among industrialized nations when it comes to ensuring paid parental leave. Now is not the time to chip away at this further.

Speaking of chipping away, let it not go by unnoticed that the great majority of federal civil service jobs cut by this Budget will be or are held by women. More than 40 per cent of federal employees are women, many in the lower paid positions which will be most vulnerable to cuts.

Let me speak about pensions. Pensions are a fundamental building block for women as they seek economic independence and autonomy. The Government's Budget has done very little to improve pension opportunities for women. Contrary to election promises, there are no provisions for homemakers in the proposals. The Government's plan to improve vesting rights in employer-sponsored pension plans is as far as it goes. It will in the end benefit few women. Only one third of Canadian women in the labour force are enrolled in private pension plans, because most women work for small companies that have no such employer-sponsored plan, or they are part-time workers with no access to pensions. Do not forget that 70 per cent of all part-time workers in Canada are women, and not necessarily by choice.

The Minister of Finance has also backed away from any Canada Pension Plan improvements. He has bowed to business pressure and backed away from any federal leadership role in mandating a minimum degree of inflation protection for private pension plans, a key part of any reform package. A comfortable pension at age 65 can be eroded by inflation by age 75 without some form of protection. Inflation protection is not a frill but an essential component.

Canadians can add the improvement of pension reform to the growing list of empty campaign promises of this Government.

Let me come to housing now, Mr. Speaker. And what about child care and child benefits? What about federal transfers to the provinces? What about the entire area of youth?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The interest from the Government is so great for this Budget, I do not know whether the Government's Members are hiding or what, but I would like to remind the House that according to Standing Order 5(3) there is no quorum. I will not call for it.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis knows that this is not a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think, with all respect that the Opposition Parties, both of them, if they would look at their numbers, have as much a duty to attend the Chamber as we do.

Mr. Gauthier: Proportionately we have more than you. It is your Budget, your quorum.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, there is a silent crisis ongoing in our country that this Government does not seem to be aware of. I am speaking of housing, aging buildings, low vacancy rates in almost every major city and hald a million Canadians unable to afford decent housing. The victims in this crisis are too often women, single mothers and elderly women on low incomes. Yet, this Government has cut the Budget for CMHC and this has far-reaching impact.

One Canadian woman out of ten is battered. Last year, the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation gave funds to start only 11 shelters with a total of 129 beds. There are presently in Canada only 190 shelters and three projects for the next stage, Mr. Speaker, you are well aware of the Badgley and Fraser reports which were tabled and which emphasize the need for these shelters. More than 500,000 Canadian women are victims of family violence. The Mulroney budget concluded that $26 million from the CMHC suited their needs perfectly.

[English]

Let me speak about federal transfers to the provinces, Mr. Speaker. There is another important part of the Budget that will have far-reaching impacts for women and youth in Canada. I am referring to the Government's intention to deindex federal transfers to the provinces and further to reduce such transfers by $2 billion by the end of the decade. So much for the Prime Minister's co-operative federalism.

The real danger is that this federal action will put increasing pressure on the provinces to take a hard look at how they are going to finance such programs as transition homes for battered women, welfare payments, medicare and university tuition. These are the kinds of hidden and sneaky cuts that this Budget is really all about. They are the kinds of cuts which show the true priorities of the Tories.

I could deal with child care and child benefits. I could tell you that I feel terrible that there was nothing about daycare in the Budget. Last and most important is our youth. This cutting of job training and the abandonment of direct job-creation efforts have bitterly disappointed the youth of Canada. The Canadian Federation of Students called me—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, if there is unanimous consent, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) could continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Friday, May 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and on the amendment of Mr. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount), p. 5043, and on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap), p. 5047.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am ready for my speech, not for questions.

Mr. Speaker: I was informed it was time to resume debate, but the Hon. Member is not in the House. Debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are one or two things to welcome in this Budget. As you know from the other day, I had proposed that the Government look favourably on the plight of home brewers who have been forced to act illegally for many years. This has been addressed in the Budget, but it is unfortunate that it is one of the very few things that was addressed in the Budget that affects ordinary Canadians. I want to speak about the impact of this Budget on ordinary Canadians, the impact of the Budget on people in the Province of Quebec, and about the way that the Budget is going to affect people in my riding of Ottawa Centre and people living in the National Capital Region.

Perhaps I can put on the record what the impact of the Budget will be on a family earning $30,000 or $40,000 a year, a middle-income family which has been trying to get by and finding it very difficult with the present cost of food, housing and the other essentials that it needs in order to survive. At the time of the November statement, the new Government effectively increased the tax burden on that average family by about some $500 per annum by incorporating the sales tax increase which it had previously resisted in opposition when it had been proposed by the Liberal Government, and by bringing in other tax measures which had that effect.

It has done it again. The increase in the taxes on the average family in the new Budget will be of the order of $500 per family; $100 through the elimination of the federal tax reduction, $115 in loss to the average family through the modification of indexing; $22.50 through the cut in family allowance payments; some $75 of increase if that family smokes and drinks the occasional bottle of beer or wine; the sales tax increase will cost the family $150; and the gas tax, as a very conservative estimate, will cost $1 a week on a tank of gas, or another $50 a year. That adds up to $512.50 for the average family.

The promise of the Budget was that it would be tough but fair. It certainly is tough on that family who now has to pay $1,000 a year more in taxes than it had to pay just a year ago, thanks to the new Conservative Government. The toughness is reflected in the fact that by 1990, the Government expects that personal income taxes will rise by $4.1 billion and that sales and excise taxes will rise by another $2.6 billion. The fairness will be fair only to a very limited proportion of the tax-paying public.

Corporation taxes are expected to fall by $2.2 billion by 1990 according to budget figures. In other words, it is more taxes on individuals and less taxes on corporations. That unfairness is particularly evident if you look at what the Government has done with the $500,000 exemption for the capital gains tax. That will cost $300 million in 1985. It will result in $600 million in lost revenue in 1986. The Government does not estimate what it will cost in subsequent years, but since the limit on capital gains that will be tax free goes up year by year, one has to assume that we will be talking about $1 billion or more per annum, which is being given not to every Joe and Jane across the country, but is being given to that small proportion of the tax-paying public who have the disposable income and can benefit on substantial amounts of capital gains.

If the Government had said that it wanted to encourage small business and encourage people to launch themselves into equity investment by making a certain small proportion of capital gains tax free, I would not have been happy about it, but I could have at least seen the point. However, huge profits on Miami condominiums, the New York art market and the London Stock Exchange will all be eligible for this treatment. It does not make a lot of sense, particularly when you look at who is paying.

Who is paying? One of the major groups that is paying is old age pensioners. They will give up the equivalent of $225 million in pension next year due to the de-indexing of the Old Age Security. That money is not being applied, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said over the weekend, to reduce the deficit. It is being applied to give a great, big fiscal carrot to the top 5 or 10 per cent of taxpayers who will get this capital gains tax elimination beginning next year. That is not fair in any kind of taxation system that I can understand.

During the election campaign, Progressive Conservative Members promised a minimum tax at the urging of NDP Members. Now they have deferred that minimum tax. At the same time, they have opened up the most glaring loophole yet for upper-income earners in the form of the $500,000 exemption.

Back in the 1960s when the Carter report came out, the concept which I thought was reasonable was that a buck is a buck is a buck. Certainly when one spends a dollar earned through capital gains, it has the same spending power as a dollar earned through an employment salary or income. However, that is not reflected in the Budget. After the Liberals eroded the tax base in the corporate sector, the Progressive Conservatives now intend to erode the tax base in the personal tax sector by taking tax burdens away from people who are upper-income earners.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the situation in the Province of Quebec, in connection with the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). This spring and during the winter, the New Democratic Party's Task Force on Unemployment travelled through Quebec. We went to Quebec City, Montreal, Chicoutimi and the Outaouais to meet people, union members and workers, community groups and municipalities, to talk about the priorities they were seeking in the Budget.

The situation in Quebec is not very good. The unemployment rate is still over 12 per cent, Mr. Speaker. There has been a slight drop since April 1984, but nevertheless, we still have a situation where one out of eight workers is unemployed. Among young people, the unemployment rate in many parts of Quebec is over 20 per cent. In Chicoutimi, for instance, it is as high as 26 per cent. Time and time again, Quebecers told us they were looking for positive action to boost the economy in their province, and they told us about some very important community projects they were ready to start with the support of their government, meaning not just the Government of Quebec but also the Government of Canada. Now I am well aware that Mr. Duhaime, the Quebec Minister of Finance, "welcomed" Mr. Wilson's Budget. These are two birds of a feather, Mr. Speaker. We have in Quebec a government that we could now call a Conservative PQ government, because they have the same views on budget priorities. However, Mr. Speaker, these priorities do not provide anything for the average Quebecer.

In Chicoutimi people are wondering what the Budget is going to do for them at a time when the forestry industry is not doing enough reforestation and the region's main industrial base, the aluminum industry, cannot provide new jobs. It is a desperate situation, but at the same time, we see people who are looking for projects and for the necessary funding and resources to help the economy in their own region get back into gear.

Mr. Speaker, what is the Budget doing for farmers in Quebec? The answer is: nothing! What is the Government doing for disadvantaged regions? The answer is: nothing! What has the Government done for farmers and the agricultural industry? There again, the answer is: nothing! I remember how during the election campaign, the Conservatives, or rather the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), wrote a symbolic cheque for pork producers, by giving them access to the Federal Stabilization Fund. Unfortunately, this promise was not kept. During the election campaign, the Conservatives promised an enormous sum of money to finance farm mortgages at reasonable rates: another promise that was not kept.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this new Government is not listening, because it was very obvious on September 4 that Quebecers voted for a change of government at the federal level. They were fed to the teeth with the Liberals. They wanted to get rid of the Liberal Government and bring about real change that would benefit everyone in Quebec, and not just the businessmen on St. James Street: the Paul DesMarais, the Westmount bankers and the rich in Quebec generally. But what are this Government's priorities regarding Quebec? Of course, the deficit is their priority. I welcome their gesture to the solidarity fund, and I say it is a step in the right direction. But aside from that, they have done nothing that is going to have any effect on Quebec's disadvantaged regions.

Quebec is not just St. James. It is not just the Montreal area. Quebec is the Gaspé, Chicoutimi, Lac-Saint-Jean, the Abitibi area and the Eastern Townships, Mr. Speaker. Quebec is the Saint-Maurice area and Trois-Rivières, and all these regions are suffering from a lack of jobs. Their basic industries are threatened, and nothing is being done by the Federal Government to help these industries and to help save the province's economic base.

Under the former PQ Government, I mean the Government that was in power before 1985, real efforts had been made to promote consultation between Quebec's various regions and its major industries. There were economic summits in each region, attended by employers, industries, municipalities, community groups, unions and workers. Everyone was involved in looking for ways to rebuild and boost their industries and regions. And in each case, Mr. Speaker, it was clear that federal assistance was needed, because the Federal Government was just as involved in Quebec's economy as the Quebec Government.

Now, in order to implement the consultation policy proposed at these economic summits, it will just not do to maintain a policy of ignoring, of patently ignoring Quebec's needs. The Federal Government's participation is necessary to help specific industries and specific regions to get back on track. That is what is lacking in this Budget, Mr. Speaker. One wonders, for instance, how the capital gains exemption is going to help Quebec's shipyards, where the present situation is that 60 per cent of shipyard workers are out of work. The problem is that Davie Shipyards in Lauzon has just laid off half of its workforce, with the remaining half to be laid off this fall. The Government, however, continues to ignore the promise it made last August to give $75 million to the shipbuilding industry. In fact, it has had to withdraw the shipyard subsidy program, effective the end of June 1985.

That is the Government's policy on one of Quebec's major industries. As far as forestry is concerned, Mr. Speaker, no promises were made. And the same applies to the manufacturing industry in Quebec. Even in the Montreal area, the citizens' committee noted that the future of Pétromont was not dealt with in the Budget; that today, with the reduction of subsidies to VIA Rail, the future of VIA Rail's maintenance centre is again in doubt; that privatization of Crown corporations as suggested in the budget is specially threatening to Montrealers, because many corporations are located in Montreal. The committee also noted that there was no reference to strategic proposals for Montreal's future as a transport and communication centre or international banking centre.

Mr. Speaker, we must have participation. We do not, however, need consultations between Mr. Duhaime and Mr. Wilson on measures that will compromise the future of the Province of Quebec. We must work together to provide a better economic base for Quebec, and that is what the New Democratic Party proposed through its employment task force. We must work together with all groups in the Province of Quebec, not just those that supported the Progressive Conservative Government's election campaign.

[English]

I would like to comment briefly on a number of areas in the Budget which have troubled me. However, there are one or two areas in the Budget which might have some promise.

In the area of pensions, the Government is promising two-year vesting, better provisions for women, and increasing portability. Those are good measures, except for the fact that they will not come into effect until after 1987 and, therefore, there will be no workable benefit until 1989 and no pension entitlement earned prior to 1987 will count. That is inadequate, Mr. Speaker, and makes this forward-looking promise effectively worthless as far as most Canadians are concerned.

In the area of research and development, the Government makes bold promises, but the Minister of Finance ignored in his speech the fact that just last week the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) effectively repudiated the Government's campaign promise to double Canada's percentage of research and development spending to 2.5 per cent by 1990.

While the measures in the Budget may be welcome to small companies, they will come nowhere near to undoing the damage that has been done by the Government's destruction of federal public research and development efforts, its undermining of the National Research Council, and the fact that the Government has not been prepared to bring forward a plan to see how we increase the 1.3 per cent of spending on research and development to the proposed 2.5 per cent.

I would like to talk briefly about a situation right here in Ottawa in my home riding. Ottawa is a bit of a microcosm of the country in how it is affected by the Budget. We are fortunate that our unemployment rate is down around 8.5 per cent. That is better than that in the country as a whole. But with the cut in 15,000 government jobs over the course of the next six years, there will be no job opportunities for the young people coming out of high school, community colleges and universities here in Ottawa. I repeat, there will be no job opportunities because of the loss of about 15,000 potential jobs which would have been created in Ottawa over the course of the next six years. That is almost equal to the total number of young men and women coming out of grade 12 in schools in Ottawa over the course of the next five or six years. There will be an awful lot of job opportunities which will dry up.

There may be some increased employment in the high-tech sector. I hope that that is in fact the case. Nonetheless, we have a lot of running to do in Ottawa just to catch up with the situation which was created by the government's cut-backs. In addition to that, one has to be aware of the fact that there is a very real danger that good jobs in Government will be replaced by part-time help, minimum wage and contracted out jobs because of the Government's policy of putting jobs into the private sector. There is a real prospect that essential services to Canadians will be no longer available by the cut-back of 15,000 jobs. I bring to the attention of the Government the fact that already in the Canada Employment and Immigration service, there have been cut-backs at a time when overtime has been used as a matter of course week after week and month after month by CEIC employees who are trying to provide services to unemployed Canadians. Even now they cannot keep up with the demands which are being made upon them.

As far as the young people in Ottawa are concerned, Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate is running around 14 per cent or 15 per cent, and I note that the student employment centres at Carleton Unversity and other universities will be closed. The Government is effectively making life extremely difficult for those young people who really deserve more from Government. They deserve more from us in Parliament than they are getting in this particular Budget.

I would also like to speak on behalf of the superannuated federal government employees and plead with the Government not to assume that it can simply, with the stroke of a pen, take away the indexing for which these pensioners have been paying in their pension contributions these past many years. The Budget of the Finance Minister seems to take it as assumed that it is OK to take away that indexing. I want to tell the Minister of Finance that there are a lot of superannuated federal public servants who are extremely concerned. People have called me in the last couple of days almost crying over the telephone because they don't know how they can survive if the indexing which enables them to cope with the cost of living is in fact not going to be maintained. The Budget ignores the fact that negotiations with the Public Service Alliance and other unions have not so far been successful. The Public Service employees have earned that indexing. If something else is put in its place, those employees have to be guaranteed that they are still being fairly dealt with. That is not being done right now, Mr. Speaker, and that worries me very much. I will continue, as one representative of the people of the Ottawa area, to make sure that they are not unfairly dealt with in this Budget.

I would like to ask the Government to assure the House that there will be no lay-offs of Public Service employees as a consequence of this Budget, because that would be a particularly cruel, unpleasant and undesirable result of the Budget.

I would like to conclude by saying that we in the New Democratic Party saw the prospect for a positive Budget rather than just eight months of rumbling before a mouse emerged from the Government. We foresaw a Budget which would be fair to ordinary Canadians rather than only to people who have the prospect of earning $.5 million in capital gains tax free. We thought that we could set unemployment reduction targets as they did in the Province of Manitoba to reduce unemployment by 2 per cent or 2.5 per cent this year. That would have been fair to ordinary Canadians.

We saw the prospect for investing in our future in areas such as the upgrading of resources, community development, technological development, housing, and municipal investments. We saw the prospect of bringing ordinary Canadians on board in terms of research and development by ensuring that they would be partners in technological change rather than victims of new technology. We saw the prospect of reforming the tax system to sweep away that $15 billion or $20 billion of tax concessions to corporations which contribute so much to the deficit and are creating such a difficult situation for Canadians.

Rather than that, Mr. Speaker, those concessions are essentially untouched and the surtax which has been put on upper income Canadians and corporations is for one year only, whereas the benefits to upper income Canadians and large corporations will go on in perpetuity. Mr. Speaker, this Budget is reminiscent of the Budgets of Ronald Reagan in the United States. It is not quite as vicious or brutal on the surface, but the philosophy is the same. We have seen in the United States, in British Columbia, and in Great Britain that the approach of putting money in the pockets of the rich in hopes that it trickles down to the poor is not an effective policy for creating jobs for Canadians. That is why we have grave reservations about this Budget.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the impression of the Hon. Member that Ottawa is a microcosm of the country. He should realize that in the rest of Canada Ottawa is viewed as 20 square miles surrounded by reality.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member knows that the Progressive Conservatives have led the way in demanding a minimum tax on the rich. We promised that minimum tax during the election and we brought it in in the Budget.

Mr. Keeper: Your nose is getting longer.

Mr. Lewis: I am going to give the Hon. Member a chance. Let him just wait a moment.

We announced a minimum tax in the Budget effective January 1, 1986. We brought forward a discussion paper laying out three methods. As a chartered accountant I am tempted to ask the Hon. Member which method he prefers, but that would be unfair because at this point I, as a chartered accountant, am not exactly sure which method will do what we want it to do in terms of taxing the rich. That is not my question. We have provided for consultation with the people. We have provided for examination by a parliamentary committee. We have said that it will start on January 1. I suggest to the Hon. Member that that process is fair to the taxpayer and also to the tax collector. In my opinion, it would create undue chaos to introduce that type of tax in the middle of a fiscal year. I think the Hon. Member would agree that that type of tax must be instituted at the start of a taxation year.

Why are we not getting support from the NDP after we brought in this minimum tax? This lack of minimum tax has been nothing but a Liberal ploy to benefit their friends in big business. We brought it in. Why can we not get some support from the NDP for the process and the principle both of which are important? Will we have the support of the NDP when we go to committee in order to get the best result rather than the usual moaning and groaning?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if the Government had brought in a minimum tax in this Budget, one which was tough and effective, he would have had the support of the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: By deferring in order to have consultation, the Government is going to give every advantage possible to the former colleagues of the Minister of Finance in Dominion Securities and to the financial interests in Vancouver, Toronto, and Montreal to find ways of cutting down the minimum tax to the point where it will be a piece of cosmetic window-dressing and nothing else.

Why did the Government not defer the de-indexing of old age pensions for a year until it has had a chance to consult with old age pensioners to discover whether they would be in favour of that? Why did the Government not defer the increase in the sales tax until it has had a chance to consult with ordinary Canadians to discover whether they were prepared to pay and thought it was a fair tax, particularly when the revenue is required mostly to pay for the concession of capital gains? The Government wasted no time putting the capital gains tax exemption into effect for the 1985 tax year in order to give something to the rich. However, in attempting to tax people who are very rich, the Government gave them every opportunity to resist it by a process of added consultation.

If the Government introduces a tough and effective minimum tax and makes it retroactive to 1985, it will have our support. However, I do not believe that is its intention.

I would also point out that the New Democrats have been talking about a fair tax system year after year. When the Hon. Member was in opposition, did he talk about a minimum tax? It was only when his leader was challenged by our leader in the television debate during the election campaign that the Conservatives finally committed themselves to some form of minimum tax.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre—where I reside three and a half days a week—and when I heard him talk about a microcosm I thought he ought to get out of it now and then, as suggested earlier by my colleague.

When New Democratic Party Members claim that they crisscrossed the country to consult Canadians—

An Hon. Member: They never came around my place.

Mr. Blais: Nor did they ever come anywhere near my place either because, had they done so and travelled throughout Quebec they would have found out that, barely a few weeks ago, the Minister of State (Forestry) (Mr. Merrithew) signed a $300 million agreement with the Province of Quebec. Three Ministers were there—two from Quebec, one from Ottawa—along with 15-odd Members representing various Quebec regions to witness this agreement to spur the forest industry which the previous Government ignored for years. Here they are now saying that we have not done anything for forestry. You could at least check your notes and those of your colleagues who were involved in the consultation process, if indeed they were.

The Hon. Member talked about shipyards, and I wondered whether we both read the same newspapers. Everybody knows that an agreement was signed recently to put Lauzon's Davie shipyards back in business at a time when the shipbuilding industry is in the doldrums not only in Quebec and the rest of Canada, but throughout the world as well. Of course, Marine Industries on the shore of the Richelieu River are in a predicament as a result of the on-going strike, and all parties involved are trying to arrive at a settlement which will serve the interests of the unions and those of the Quebec Government which happens to be an active partner. The federal Government has nothing to do with that. We have contracts and we are living up to our commitments with the shipbuilding industry as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) would tell us just what he thinks of those special measures taken even before the Budget was brought down. Consultations had been going on for years, but to no avail because the federal Government did not do anything. Well, in six months, we did consult, we sat down with the Minister and hammered out an agreement. Why should you say that the forest industry was left out in the Budget?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, first I note that my friend still talks as though Ottawa is not representative of the rest of the country, as if it were privileged territory. I can assure him that a lot of people who live here in Ottawa know something about substandard housing, are affected by unemployment, earn incomes below the national average and have to cope with the same problems as those experienced by his constituents.

I do not particularly fancy the remarks of his colleague the Parliamentary Secretary who has just suggested the new Government should ignore Ottawa because the city has been so generously treated in the past. Mr. Speaker, I too have constituents who must live with their problems. If we were to look at the situation of the shipbuilding industry, among others, I can tell my colleague that 60 per cent of the shipyards workers are idle. But in spite of that and the Prime Minister's promises in an August 26 speech before the Toronto Empire Club, as I recall, the Government has scrapped its $75 million assistance program for shipbuilders. The Lauzon shipyards were not spared despite the fact that, after the Government announcement, they laid off half their work force and will dismiss the other half this fall because there are no contracts. How can the Government remain so indifferent to the plight of that industry? I simply cannot understand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, concerning agriculture, the Government—

Mr. Blais: I asked you a question about forestry.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member does not say anything about the cheque of the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), for example, or about the Government's unkept promise to set up a $100 million agricultural mortgage financing program.

With respect to forestry, I was in touch with people in the Chicoutimi-Lac-Saint-Jean region and I know they do not expect their problems to be solved simply because the Government has just made a few announcements.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this opportunity to participate in the budget debate allows me to put on the record the views of my constituents as well as the considerations from a social policy point of view that make this Budget worthy of support. I am pleased to have this opportunity.

No Member of the House—certainly no Member of the Government—takes any pleasure in the fact that there are those who say that the Budget is tough. However, we do take a measure of pride in the fact that we have attempted to be fair in the manner in which the Budget addresses Canada's economic crisis. My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), has done an admirable job of seeking out a national consensus for the direction of the Budget by taking often divergent views and opinions and bringing about a fair and balanced Budget.

I said that Canada faced an economic crisis. I believe very strongly that such has been the case and that we will be on such a crisis footing for some time. This is a crisis not only in the economy but, as a result, in all aspects of our social and national life.

Let me illustrate by reminding the House that during the last years of aggravated conflict between Ottawa and the provinces, many of us argued that the failure of the federal Government to show national economic leadership increased the strain on Confederation. The weak state of the economy led to many of the inter-regional and federal-provincial conflicts that we witnessed during those years.

In the same way, failure to recognize an economic crisis as a crisis can only put in jeopardy the social security system and the social infrastructure that, as parliamentarians and Canadians, we cherish so much.

This Government recognized the gravity of the economic situation and we have acted. More to the point, the Government recognized what would be the inevitable consequences of our economic problems and we have acted now.

If Members of the House are honest with themselves, they will know that tough choices had to be made. We know, having been in the Opposition, how very easy it is to sit in the Opposition and decry hard choices, claiming that the pain was somehow avoidable. I can understand that posture, and in fact I hear some Members today using that very same argument.

However, being the Government is another story. To do nothing about the situation that was described to the House by the Minister of Finance last Thursday would be irresponsible and would have earned the scorn of the Canadian public. First and foremost, that situation to which I refer is the mounting public debt, flowing from a national deficit that has skyrocketed in the last two decades. Without action, the deficit this year would have been over $38 billion and next year over $40 billion. The debt is not a myth. Nor is the debt a fictitious monster or, for that matter, as some in the Opposition might want us to believe, is it a benign giant. The debt is a burden. It is a burden which is real, a burden which is heavy, and a burden which will affect decisions made both in the House and by Canadians as individuals. The debt will not go away by wishing it to do so. Without determination to arrest the debt, sooner or later it would lead to the paralysis of the Government of Canada. Being the Minister responsible for the Department which consumes roughly a quarter of the federal budget, I see first-hand on a day by day basis the costs of our social infrastructure, and I am inclined to believe that the paralysis would come sooner rather than later.

Let me put it into an even clearer perspective, from the point of view of the Department. At the present time the cost of the debt to Canadians is approximately $22 billion on an annual basis. The total cost of health care to the provinces and the federal Government is approximately $22 billion. Thus today we are spending as much to service the debt as Canadians across the country spend for health care. Anyone with a bit of understanding, regardless of his or her partisanship, will have to come to the quick conclusion that that loss of money, money which does not buy a new service, brings into jeopardy the very services we want to maintain. Or, to put it another way, the $22 billion of debt is roughly equal to federal government, federal taxpayer, expenditures for the federal share of health care costs and pensions combined. We as Canadians spend about the same amount on the debt today as we do on the federal share of health care and pensions.

If we could reduce the cost of that debt by 25 per cent, we as the federal Government, as federal taxpayers, would have 50 per cent more money for health care, or we would have 50 per cent more money than we are spending now on pensions, or a combination thereof, obviously. When people talk to me about the Budget not having a social policy component, I say they are wrong. The fact is that to retain social policy we have to create wealth and, if we do not have wealth or if we do not create wealth, we cannot have a sustained social policy. If Hon. Members opposite do not believe that, all they have to do is to take a look at some of their neighbours in the international community to make that point.

Being a Member from the Province of Manitoba, a province which is dependent to some degree on transfer payments, I realize that it is also important from that perspective to understand that debt costs are losses to those provinces and citizens as well.

I should like to make another argument. There are those who say that we should raise the deficit and create employment. I ask them a simple question. We now have a very high deficit. I have shown the cost of the debt. If that is the case, and if that system works, why do we still have 1.4 million Canadians unemployed? Surely, as Hon. Members return to their ridings, as I did this weekend—and I had a number of meetings with senior citizens, business people, farmers—

Mr. Boudria: What did they think?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will tell the Hon. Member, because he loves to speak from the seat of his pants. What they were saying—and they were understanding it—was that we could not sustain those kinds of debt charges and still maintain the services they wanted to see maintained. Another point they made was that they were pleased as farmers and as small business people that pools of capital which they had earned would stay in their hands as a result of the capital gains changes. What will they do with that capital? They will invest it in their farms and on Main Street, Canada.

What I am saying to Hon. Members opposite, to everyone, is that when they look at job creation and at social policy, they should start relying on their neighbours and their vision of their communities. They should start relying on the ability of their friends and neighbours to invest in their communities so that they can create infrastructure and jobs for their children. They should start relying on their friends, not always think that Government will do better for communities than their friends and neighbours can do.

For too long, I believe, economic policy and social policy have been treated in isolation. I believe the Canadian public knows more than we in the House give them credit for knowing. Action was needed to restore fiscal integrity to our national affairs. Canadians are not prepared to see a greater and greater percentage of our finances devoted to carrying interest charges on the national debt when our social services and hospitals are choked for funds, yet that is exactly what was threatened. The public will not tolerate the continued reality of waste and efficiency in public expenditure at the expense of flexibility to meet new social needs or to seize new economic opportunities. In the vital challenge of creating new jobs, Canadians increasingly want priority placed on effective and permanent solutions, not short-term band-aids. These national objectives—security of our social programs, flexibility to meet new needs, and lasting solutions to the unemployment crisis—are addressed by the Budget.

The Budget involves certain adjustments—adjustments to promote private sector job creation, adjustments to reform employer-sponsored pension plans to assist Canadians in their retirement income planning, and adjustments to a new competitive economic environment in which the realities of markets make it easier to help workers adapt to new employment than to subsidize a failed industry. If we had not made those hard choices now, we would have had to make even harder choices down the road. In the face of that reality it would have been irresponsible—and I suggest to the House heartless—to put off the inevitable.

It would be inaccurate in the extreme to portray this Budget, as those in the Opposition have tried to do, as a bad news Budget. About 185,000 disabled persons, for example, will benefit from a new definition of disability for the purposes of the Income Tax Act. Many Canadians suffering from disabling conditions, who are presently neither blind nor confined to a bed or to a wheelchair, do not have access to this deduction from taxable income. The new definition to be administered by experts in the Department will improve the situation for these Canadians. In this action the Government has responded to the Special Parliamentary Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped by promoting the role of independent living.

Other speakers in this debate may well refer to the assistance to artists contained in the Budget. Tax changes affecting artists recognize their unique professional circumstances and seek to make it easier to donate works of art to public charities and to write off the costs of their inventories.

The voluntary community which forms part of the experience of every Member of the House will benefit from two changes to the treatment of their tax affairs. It will now be easier to donate gifts of intangible capital property to charities, and the Budget clarified the right of charitable organizations to engage in non-partisan political activity.

Members also know that while preserving the principle of universality, as we said we would do, the structure of the child benefits system has been made more progressive. The new structure provides a better basis for changes that any future Parliament may wish to make in response to the evolving needs and circumstances.

More than with any of these advances in social policy contained in the Budget, I am pleased by the reforms to the pension system announced by my colleague, the Minister of Finance. I take this opportunity to stress again that the Government is not closing the doors on pension reform with these announced changes to the Pension Benefits Standards Act. Rather, reforms to the Canada Pension Plan, including the proposal of a home-makers' pension, remain the firm commitment of the Government. The Minister of Finance has already had some discussions with the provinces in this area. We will each be pursuing this discussion with our provincial colleagues in the months to come.

In the meantime, these improvements to minimum pension standards for private pension plans under federal jurisdiction should be given recognition for what they are, that is, major improvements in the rules for vesting, portability and survival benefits. We expect these improvements to be of major benefit to Canadian women who in the past have not been able to participate in full numbers in these plans.

Access to pension plans for part-time workers will be provided. Generally more workers will have the opportunity to join private pension plans, and their participation in the management of their pension funds will be recognized as a right. Equal pensions for men and women retiring under identical circumstances will also be provided. Greater flexibility for workers taking early retirement will now be possible. Vesting and portability changes, as well as improvements to survivor benefits, are among the changes that will be especially satisfactory to Canadian women. The equality of women is further recognized by the provision of splitting up pension benefits between spouses in the event of marriage breakdown.

These elements of pension reform are important not only because they improve equity and solidify the rights of workers now in pension plans, but also because they provide greater access among the workforce, especially women, to private pension plans. A great deal is left to be done in the reform of the Canada Pension Plan, but this Government believes that more Canadians will be able to contemplate a secure and rewarding retirement if they have planned previously in their working life for their retirement. These pensions reforms are a step in the direction of providing many more Canadians with the means to enjoy a secure old age with dignity.

We are acutely aware of the circumstances of older Canadians who are dependent to a greater degree on the public pension system. The decision not to modify indexation for the Guaranteed Income Supplement and veterans assistance was taken with this greater dependence in mind. I want to assure Canadians that the Government will be looking very carefully at the circumstances of these Canadians. We will monitor the adequacy of these payments and, as resources permit, they will be enriched.

This Budget asks Canadians to be realistic about the future. Everyone is asked to contribute to the restoration of sanity to our national finances. Tax increases have been contemplated as a last resort, and only because they were demanded in the circumstances in which the Government found itself. The Government has attempted, and I believe has been successful, to spread the burden of recovery as widely as possible. Business, especially the small business sector, is asked to play its part in the creation of thousands of new jobs. The stimulus given to our small businesses will enable them to grow and expand. I have no doubt that small business owners across the country, both in the commercial and in the agricultural field, will be equal to the challenge.

Governments are asked to play their part in the management of their affairs, to ensure efficiency and show leadership by example. Not least, Governments must work together, especially in the design and implementation of the new labour market strategy. The resources devoted to these training and employment programs will go farther than any previous program because of federal-provincial harmonization, local initiative and the use of the private sector as the driving force.

The Budget draws on the lessons of our history to chart a new course for the future. Canada was built on the vision and initiative of men and women who work not just for themselves, but for their children and for their communities. It would be nothing less than tragic to accept the situation of spiralling deficits that condemned our children to paying a debt they did not incur and ate away at the social infrastructure that is at the very heart of our community commitment.

Canadians elected a Government last September to show realism and compassion, blended together. No blend can be perfect. The value of this Budget is that it comes to grips with the reality of the situation and does so in a way that is fair. That is the best, the only guarantee of social security.

I say to Hon. Members that this Budget is a direct reflection of what Canadians asked us to do on September 4. I have been listening to Canadians over the last number of days since the Budget. They believe this is a response that is fair. I have been in the House for a few years. I know the immediate response to other Budgets. Other than the naysayers across the way, who already had their lines written before the Budget was even read, having already made up their mind, what is important is that Canadians wanted this direction. Canadians believe in the country. Canadians believe in their ability to invest. Canadians believe in the future. They know that future for them and for their children is best guaranteed when they have a Government that is respectful of the taxpayers' dollar and gives those Canadians the tax room and the ability to invest and develop that future. As that takes place, all of us will benefit.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in his comments the Minister stated that the Budget represents advances in social policy. He referred to senior citizens and said that this will enable senior citizens to proceed through old age with dignity. He went on to say that the Budget is a direct response to what Canadians asked them to do on September 4.

Did the Minister tell Canadians, specifically senior citizens, during the election campaign that he intended to cut their pensions? Did he or his Party tell them during that election campaign that no longer would senior citizens of this country be protected against inflation? I say that the Conservative Party did not tell the Canadian people that.

I would further like to ask the Minister whom he consulted. Which senior citizens did he consult with before deciding to de-index or partially de-index the Old Age Security? Did he speak to Harold Ballard or the blue rinse set on Bay Street? He certainly did not speak to the senior citizens in York South-Weston.

Does the Minister agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who is quoted in The Toronto Star yesterday as saying that the senior citizens of this country are prepared to sacrifice in order to reduce the deficit, or does he agree with me and the Liberal Party when we say that the senior citizens of this country have sacrificed long enough and hard enough over the years? They have sacrificed for the benefit of Canadians. They have worked long and hard. They have fought in world wars and have struggled to make Canada a better place in which to live.

Why is the Minister and his Government showing complete disregard for senior citizens and plunging a great many of them into poverty because of their insensitivity by de-indexing the Old Age Security? Does that indicate caring on behalf of the Government, or does it indicate an insensitivity toward the senior citizens of this country and a disrespect for everything they have worked for and fought for?

In conclusion, where is social justice? Where is fairness when you attack the very heart of this nation? You pierce the very heart of a nation when you attack the senior citizens.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I will try to address those questions, not necessarily in sequence because a number of them were repeated.

• (1200)

First, senior citizens have sacrificed. That is why the Hon. Member and I enjoy the standard of living that we now enjoy. However, no one understands debt better than senior citizens.

Mr. Nunziata: Because they have their own.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I listened to you. Perhaps you could give me the same courtesy.

Senior citizens understand better than anyone else that debt has to be repaid. They also understand that if debt becomes too large, the very cost of that debt reduces the flexibility and ability to have programs which are wanted. It reduces the ability to expand businesses or farms. It reduces the ability to own homes and educate children. The list is endless. Senior citizens understand that.

By the way, the Hon. Member should be careful when he begins to draw the kind of picture he is trying to draw. I can take him back to 1976 if he wants to talk about the record of the Liberal Government. I will leave it at that. I can talk to him about the six and five program which was implemented when inflation was running at 13 per cent. Governments of the past had to look at those circumstances.

I hope the Hon. Member understands what I am saying to senior citizens. It is that—

Mr. Boudria: Sacred trust.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Yes, the sacred trust of universality has been maintained. Liberals knocked on doors campaign after campaign as did the NDP, saying, "Don't vote for the Conservative Party because it will remove pensions".

Mr. Boudria: And we were right.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We have not done away with the pensions. Universality has been maintained. Full indexing has been maintained on the GIS. Full indexing has been maintained on the veterans' pension. Partial indexing has been maintained on the OAS.

Again, I do not think the Hon. Member was listening. If he had listened to my comments or to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who said that we would monitor the situation closely—

Mr. Boudria: So we are monitoring.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is right. Do not waste all your breath because you might have to walk over your backside again. Be very careful about what you say.

I am saying this about senior citizens because I have talked to them. Of course senior citizens would like to see an economy in which pensions could be expanded. However, they also know that the best way to have those pensions expanded is to get the deficit under control and to create wealth. Hon. Members opposite have the idea that wealth has no relationship to the ability to provide social programs.

Yes, consultation took place. Yes, senior citizens understand that. Senior citizens do not want the debt to become so large and the cost of servicing the debt so great that their children and grandchildren will be forced to pay such a large portion of their incomes that they will not have the potential to buy their own homes and give educational opportunities to their children. All senior citizens understand that in order to have that kind of security, we must get our economic house in order.

The people who should stand condemned are Hon. Members opposite. Hon. Members opposite stand condemned because in 1968, the accumulated national debt was $17 billion. Today the national debt, after the Liberal legacy, is $180 billion. That is why the cost is so high today.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, among other things, I would point out to the Hon. Minister that one of the side effects of the Budget has been to disadvantage in a small way people who are blind. They will now have to pay sales taxes on dog food for their guide dogs. That is the level to which this Government is sinking. I would say to the Minister that I hope we will see that changed.

The main point I would like to make is that the $225 million that will be taken from senior citizens next year will not go to the reduction of the deficit. Not a nickel of that money will go to reduce the deficit because the Government is taking $225 million from seniors through indexing but is giving $300 million to the upper 10 per cent of taxpayers through the capital gains tax exemptions. In 1986, it will take $450 million from seniors, a group that is poor, and give $600 million through capital gains tax exemptions to a group that is extremely well off. That will go on year after year.

The speech made by the Minister was a disappointing one from a Minister of National Health and Welfare and from a man who has been known in the past to be compassionate and caring about ordinary Canadians. How is it fair to take so much from senior citizens on a pretence which is fraudulent in order to give money to the people who are receiving the benefit of the capital gains tax exemption? How can the Minister justify that inequity?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say to the Hon. Member that the approach he is taking is a traditional NDP approach. Members of the NDP try to create a class struggle as if there were a class war. The Hon. Member is only talking about the upper 10 per cent of income earners. If he were to look at the situation of the average blue-collar worker in the United States, he would find that because of the tax incentives there, a very high percentage of blue-collar workers have invested in industry and are stockholders. They have invested because they have got some advantage from the very economic base of investment, risk taking and return on risk taking. That is one of the problems here in Canada. The present tax structure allows only those in the corporate sector to have those advantages. Because of the new capital gains tax system, ordinary people who work for a wage can invest in stocks. The Hon. Member should not be so imprisoned by his own position. He should open his eyes a little bit.

Mr. Cassidy: You are taking from the poor to give to the rich.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just listen. I listened to you. Members of the NDP always argue that they are the ultimate Canadian nationalists. What better way to have investment by Canadians in the Canadian economy than by having average workers who work on salary invest and take some of those advantages?

Mr. Cassidy: Half a million dollars?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just a moment. Did you not listen in Queen's Park? Are you trying to bring the same attitude here?

The third point I would like to make is that if the Hon. Member were to look at the social policy envelope and the expenditures, for instance, on the spousal allowance for widows and widowers, something which I hope his Party will begin to support, he would see that the cost of that program is greater than the figures he gave as being those which are being withheld by the partial de-indexing. If he were to take a look at his figures very carefully, he would see that the arguments he makes do not hold water.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased to participate in this debate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I see that Conservative Members have already started to heckle me. I wish that they would listen to the advice given by the Minister who said to listen when other Members are speaking.

After listening to the "Minister of social injustice", I can understand why it is that Disraeli once said that a Conservative Government is an organized hypocrisy. It is now fairly easy to understand why he would have said that.

The Government said that its Budget would be tough but fair. What is so fair about consulting with the rich for a year and taxing the poor immediately? Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) could answer that question later if he is given the opportunity. I would ask him what is fair about that kind of system.

If you think for one moment, Mr. Speaker, that I am being partisan—

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Boudria: I knew some Conservative Members would never think that.

Mr. Blenkarn: You're not even sensible, let alone partisan.

Mr. Boudria: Let us listen to what the press has to say about this Budget. Here are a few headlines: "Mike's gambling your money . . .", "Middle-class bears budget brunt", "Tory budget is enormous gamble". Other headlines read: "Those little treats—candy, pop, booze and cigarettes—they'll all cost more", "Family with $30,000 income faces $400 increase in taxes", "Tories ignore election promise to put housewives in pension plan". The headlines continue: "Give and take", "Home-ownership plans cut as tax shelters", "Budget zaps Canadians for $1B extra income tax in 1986", "15,000 PS jobs to be cut over 5 years", "Half-billion in cuts hits all regions, every department", and "Many rich people untouched by budget".

• (1210)

Mr. Blenkarn: Great.

Mr. Boudria: Is that great? I am sure the Member opposite thinks that is great because it is Tory policy not to touch the rich but to attack the poor.

There are more headlines. They read: "Rich helped at expense of average Canadians . . ."; "'Jobs, jobs, jobs' cry becomes 'tax, tax, tax' "; "Despite jobs promise, Wilson cuts $78M from training programs"; "Transfer payment reductions will cost provinces $2 billion". Those are newspaper headlines concerning the horrible Budget which was presented by the Government of Canada.

In questioning the people of my constituency, which I do very frequently—

Mr. Clifford: What kind of questions?

Mr. Boudria: Well, I would like to tell the Hon. Member opposite that I won with the largest Liberal majority in Canada. If he is questioning what kind of communication I have with my constituents, perhaps he should remember that. If Tories do not respect anything else, at least they should respect democracy.

I asked my constituents the following question: "Do you feel that the Government should create employment for the youth and chronically unemployed even if it means increasing the deficit?" Of the 1,600 people who replied to the questionnaire, 69 per cent said yes. The Government's obsession with the deficit should take into consideration the wish of the people. If the program which the Government has is so great, why was it not promised during the election campaign? There were 338 Tory promises. We all had to listen to the orgy of promises during the election campaign. The Conservatives promised everything to everyone.

I heard the "Minister of social injustice", the Minister of National Health and Welfare, speak about the sacred trust of the Conservative Party. The sacred trust dealt with pensions, among other things. I would like to remind the House of a few Conservative campaign promises.

Concerning senior citizens, the Conservatives promised that they would reinstate complete indexation of old age pensions to the actual cost of living as of January 1, 1985. That was a so-called sacred trust. What happened to it? I want Tory Members to tell the people of Canada that they have decided that the promises of last August are no longer valid. Forget about the hypocrisy. Let those Members stand and say that they have deliberately broken the promises and have misled the people of Canada, if that is the position of the Conservative Party. But Conservative Members will not say that. The Government does not have the intestinal fortitude to be forthright with the people of Canada.

The Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) a short while ago made certain remarks about workers in the national capital area. Those comments were extremely uncalled for. The people of that community, like any others, have the right to earn a decent living. I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) will want to dissociate themselves from those remarks.

I would like to speak about job creation programs.

[Translation]

I am sure the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) who I notice is at her place in the House, would have liked the government to act, for instance, to expedite the construction of a bridge between Hawkesbury and Grenville. I am sure and I know for a fact that she would have appreciated capital investments of this kind which would have meant new job opportunities in both our ridings. I know also that the Hon. Member would have been grateful for a necessary replacement of the connecting structure between our two provinces. And I know that she is as disappointed as I am that this government has decided not to fund any direct job creating scheme, which is unfair.

[English]

I would like to speak briefly about agriculture. The Government has decided to cut $50 million from agriculture programs. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) and I have listened to discussions in committee dealing with the state of farm finances in Canada. He knows, as I do, that the farmers of Canada cannot afford to pay one cent more, let alone $50 million. If he believes the farmers can pay more, let him stand and say that the farmers are too rich and can afford a $50-million cut. However, I do not believe he feels that. He knows that the farmers of the country cannot afford the Budget which was brought down. Farmers cannot afford the fact that the promises which dealt with Section 31 of the Income Tax Act were not respected. Farmers cannot afford not to have the agri-bond program which the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party promised during the election campaign. Members of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs listened to witnesses for weeks, and subsequently recommended in favour of that measure. Last Friday, one Conservative Member asked why those agricultural programs had not been adopted. However, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had no reply.

This Budget resembles the Miller Budget of 1982. We all recall what that Budget did in the Province of Ontario. We all know that that Budget was largely responsible for the Conservative Party's electoral defeat in 1985. For the same reason, the Budget which was brought down last Thursday will be the beginning of the end of the Conservative Party at the federal level.

I would like to speak briefly about consultation. The Government told us that it consulted. I do not know one of my constituents who was consulted before gas prices increased two cents a litre. Neither do I know of a constituent who was consulted before the federal excise tax jumped 1 per cent. If Members across know of constituents who were consulted, they should name them. People at the lower end of the economic scale have to buy soap and other consumer goods. Those people will have to pay more than their fair share of that increase. It is unfair. There was no consultation. To claim otherwise is simply not true. With whom did the Tories consult? They consulted with the rich. There will not be a minimum tax for Canadians until a full consultation process is held. There will not be a different corporate taxation policy until consultation is held. Why is it that the Government does not consult with the people at the lower end of the economic scale before it viciously attacks their wallets? We are now finding out of what this Government is truly made. The promises of last September were simply empty rhetoric. It is becoming more and more obvious to all Canadians that it is a true saying that "Tory times are tough times for Canada".

I would like to talk briefly about the capital gains tax. All members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture were agreeable because we said unanimously that there should be no capital gains tax on farm land.

An Hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Boudria: I am glad to see Hon. Members opposite agree. But why are we exempting from capital gains tax someone who sells his yacht, his Rembrandt or his condominium in Florida at the same time as we are cutting $50 million from the budget of agriculture? Are those members of the Committee on Agriculture agreeing that we should take money away from the farmers and give it to people who are selling their condos in Florida, Mr. Speaker? I don't hear any Hon. Member saying yes to that. Yet that is what the Minister of Finance is doing. That is the action he is perpetrating on the farmers in the constituency I represent, and in many other constituencies across this country.

Mr. Malone: Speak louder. No one can hear you.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) seems to have a contribution to make to this debate. He can rise later and tell the farmers of his riding that this Budget is good for them. Let the Hon. Member stand and say that, if that is his view. But that Hon. Member will likely do as many others. He will sit and remain silent except for the odd heckle when we wake him up or he will read the prepared text which someone from the Department of Finance has written for him. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, if that is the limit of the contribution from members of the Conservative Party, we might as well forget about their speeches.

I see that the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) is here. No doubt he rushed to the House immediately when he heard what his colleague had to say about the public servants in the national capital area. I am sure it will not take too long before he goes over to his colleague and tells him what he really thinks, and I want the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton to know that we are 100 per cent behind him when he chastises the Hon. Member for Simcoe North for the remarks he made about the public servants in the national capital area.

Mr. Dick: We on our side allow free opinions.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton tells us that free speech is allowed in his Party. I would like to ask him, Mr. Speaker, since when? Whenever we have heard a dissenting voice from that Party, there is usually a knife stuck in the back of whoever is speaking.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: That is the legacy of the Conservative Party. Our young people, our farmers, the unemployed and the elderly suffered a very severe blow last Thursday when this Budget was inflicted upon them.

Mr. Crosbie: You are crying crocodile tears. Which half of Laurel and Hardy are you?

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member opposite who is heckling at this particular point, no doubt has senior citizens in his riding, as I have myself, who are not all that wealthy.

Mr. Crosbie: They love me.

Mr. Boudria: No doubt if those senior citizens did love him before, they don't think too highly of him after this Budget. I am happy that he is no longer the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, because perhaps the Budget would have been worse, heaven forbid. We all remember what happened to the last Budget which was presented by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). Of course, it was a disaster, as was stated so correctly by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Crosbie: We wouldn't need this Budget if the last one hadn't been tampered with. It's the greatest Budget of the 20th century.

Mr. Boudria: There are 39,000 young farmers, Mr. Speaker, who are deeply in debt and who were looking forward to assistance from this Government. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the small business people, the farmers and other people of my riding were anxiously awaiting this Budget. They were expecting that we would see programs for direct job creation such as, for instance, the NEED Program which was brought in by the previous Liberal administration. That was a program which was very useful in expanding facilities and for job-creation both in the public and in the private sector. If this Government, because of its narrow way of viewing things, had chosen to place only those kinds of programs in the private sector, so be it. At least they could have done something to assist the people of Canada. But what this Government has decided is that it is not interventionist. It will wash its hands of everything, sit back, perhaps say a little prayer, and hope that everything will solve itself. Again, Mr. Speaker, I remind you of the promises made by this Government. This Government should have promised last summer only one thing, "Vote for us and we'll do absolutely nothing". They could have kept that promise. But that is not what it did. It made 338 promises—

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: —but it did not promise that if the people voted for it it would do nothing. The Hon. Member cheers while his Government and his Minister of Finance is doing just that, nothing, instead of helping out the unemployed and the socially disadvantaged people of this country.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I hear the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). I cannot blame him for being nervous now that his riding at the provincial level has been lost to the Liberals, as will likely happen federally in the next federal election, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nunziata: No doubt about it.

Mr. Boudria: I do not blame the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown for being nervous because if I was a member of the Conservative Party trying to defend this Budget I would probably be as nervous as he is. Of course, I do not have to worry about that because happiness is never having to say you are a Tory, and I will likely never have to say that.

Mr. McDermid: We don't want you to have to say that either. We wouldn't accept you.

Mr. Boudria: This Budget is all about give and take. The people of Canada give, and these Tories take.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering what happened to the Hon. Member. He was on the Committee on Finance dealing with tax issues and agriculture. He will recall that the recommendation of that committee was the complete abolition of capital gains tax for everybody.

Mr. Boudria: That's not true.

Mr. Blenkarn: The second recommendation was an allowance of $400,000 to farmers against capital gains. But the committee report, to which the Hon. Member was a party, in the preparation of which he heard evidence and which he approved and voted for, recommended the complete abolition of capital gains tax. But today in the House he says what a terrible thing that is. He has a limited memory. He really does not understand what he is saying. He has been given new lines. Talk about a conversion! One day it is good for the farmers. Another day it is bad for the farmers. One day it is good for business, and another day it is bad for business. It all depends on what the Liberal Party wants to say at the time.

Perhaps the Hon. Member can explain to us how he manages to change his tune so frequently.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would love to respond to the Hon. Member's question. I can say that I understand the Hon. Member's convoluted sense of logic. It is undoubtedly caused by the embarrassment he feels in trying to justify his objection to this Budget. I do not blame the Hon. Member for acting like that, but he will recover, perhaps after the next electoral defeat of his Party.

The Hon. Member knows better, Mr. Speaker, he being the chairman of that committee. He will recall that what the committee asked for was that capital gains tax be abolished on farm land.

Mr. Blenkarn: On everything.

Mr. Boudria: On farm land. The Hon. Member will know that that is the case.

Mr. Blenkarn: You read the report that you voted for.

Mr. Boudria: No one in his right mind, Mr. Speaker, would want a condominium in Florida to be sold without paying capital gains tax at the same time as we are taxing the poor—

Mr. Nunziata: And the senior citizens.

Mr. Boudria: —to pay for the extravagance of this Conservative Government. The Hon. Member opposite should know better than that, but he must have forgotten about the report and about the fact that he himself chaired the committee at the time this was discussed. What we asked for was that there should be no capital gains tax at all on the sale of farm land which was to remain in agriculture, and that if the Minister of Finance could not possibly deliver on that, the second best alternative would be to remove the capital gains tax on the first accumulation of $400,000—I remember that because I added the word "accumulation" myself—on the sale of farm land which was to remain in agriculture. I know, because we had considerable discussion about how one would determine how land would be retained for agricultural purposes as opposed to some other use. We decided at that point in committee that the Government could find a way to achieve that. But I distinctly remember it was a case of farm land being used for agricultural purposes.

Mr. Blenkarn: Your memory is weak.

Mr. Boudria: At the same time the farmers of this country have their budgetary allocation reduced by $50 million so that this Government can give tax breaks to the rich. That is not what the people of my riding want and that is not what the farmers of my riding want, and neither do the farmers anywhere else in Canada. They are looking for meaningful assistance and they are looking for the Government to fulfil its campaign promises. If the Government could not live with those promises, it was its duty not to make them in the first place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault).

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to reply briefly to my friend from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) because, as you will be aware, our constituencies are joined by a bridge.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to forget that last September 4, the Canadian people elected a Progressive Conservative Government and were therefore expecting a Progressive Conservative Budget. I also want to remind him of an important concept in the Parliamentary process. As a former British Prime Minister said, I do not understand why it is that, in a democratic parliamentary institution, Opposition Members always say no to the Government and Government Members say yes all the time, even though their conscience would sometimes allow them to say no.

Today, Mr. Speaker, what I want to tell my hon. friend is that I took part in a radio show in Hawkesbury last Saturday and that I received phone calls from his own constituents, farmers and small businessmen, who thought our Budget was great. Strange enough, Mr. Speaker, we represent neighbouring constituencies, but my hon. friend says one thing and the people who call me say the opposite. My hon. friend, you should go on a radio show in Hawkesbury. What you are saying today might not be the same as what you would hear.

I would like to ask him something. He said, for instance, that the Budget did not mention the Hawkesbury-Grenville bridge. As this bridge, which is administered and maintained by the Federal Government, joins two provinces, we should perhaps find out what Quebec and Ontario want to do. The Hon. Member says that there has already been some talk of consultation and cooperation, which is the way to help our constituents. In any case, I think that what the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell wants to do is to put together a householder this thick to say that they are against the Government only for the sake of opposing. I warn him to watch his words because our ridings are adjacent and I assure you that what I hear is quite different. You should read the editorial of Jean-Louis Roy in this morning's Le Devoir, which is self-explanatory. You should read it. It is interesting and would answer your questions. In any case, I simply wanted to say that we do not hear the same version of the facts, even though there is only a bridge between us. Go on the radio in Hawkesbury and you will hear another side of the story.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am quite aware of the fact that Mr. Roy writes editorials for Le Devoir. I can confirm the fact, it is true indeed. Still I would like to tell my colleague the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) that it may be true that the Conservative Government had every right to present a conservative Budget, but what really matters is that the Government was committed to follow up on its promises to the electorate. If the Hon. Member opposite feels that her Government should now forget all about those promises, I would have expected her to rise and tell the House that the Conservative Government no longer has to honour its commitments, if that is what she thinks. But she did not say that. What I hear, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government has every intention of keeping its promises—but it simply does not do so. That is why I said earlier that the Government, not the Hon. Member, is hypocritical. I know she is very honest with her constituents and that she will hurry back to her riding to speak the truth to the people of Argenteuil-Papineau and tell them that the Budget is a disaster. I am sure she will do that next weekend.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the Glengarry-Prescott-Russell Conservative association president phoned her on the air last Saturday, all the more power to her. I want her to know that the Conservative association president is free to phone whomever he likes. But if the Hon. Member were to take a public opinion poll. I wish she would call upon the Prescott-Russell union of social welfare recipients and try to convince them that it is a good Budget. Mr. Speaker, she would do well to put on a football helmet before praising the Budget in front of those social welfare recipients because it has not been such a big hit, particularly with older people in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau knows her files and her riding, but she ought to realize that the only person in my riding who could have called her to rave about the Budget is the president of the Conservative association. If she wants his number, Mr. Speaker, I can give it to her so she might call him back and again sing the praises of the Budget. I see nothing wrong with that and the Conservatives are quite free to talk to one another over the air.

[English]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I realize time is limited and I certainly have respect for the new Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), but he has charged the new Government with organized hypocrisy. While I have no problems with that charge, I would like to ask him this. If it is true, as it certainly is, that the old Government took money out of pensioners' pockets through its six and five program, and if that Government had programs to put money into the pockets of the rich through RRSPs, RHOSPs and MURBs, along with other tax concessions, how was the old Government any less hypocritical than the new Government?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the former leader of the Ontario NDP and the new Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) asked me this question about how our Party established social programs. I am glad to have the opportunity to tell him that all the social programs we have, or most of them, were established by Liberal Governments of the past.

Mr. Nunziata: And we are proud of them.

Mr. Boudria: I know that he would want to take this occasion to congratulate the Liberals, and I accept that message of congratulation.

Ms. Mitchell: But we pushed you into them.

Mr. Boudria: As to the RHOSPs, I did not know that the NDP was against that program. Perhaps that is a new policy for it, but as far as I as a Liberal am concerned, a program which encourages young families to put money aside in order to put a large payment down on a new house is a very good program, one that our Party is very proud of. If the NDP is now against that kind of program to assist young people, so be it, but I maintain that RHOSPs were a very good program for the young people of Canada and that this Government has made a terrible mistake in cancelling RHOSPs.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to address a few remarks to the subject of the Budget. This past weekend I convened two public meetings, one in Orillia at nine o'clock in the morning and one in Midland at two o'clock in the afternoon. There was good attendance and a great deal of interest in the Budget we brought down. I am pleased to tell the House that there has been general acceptance of the Budget and that the people of Simcoe North realize that over the past few years the Liberals had spent us into oblivion. They realized that there was a desperate situation which had to be addressed by all walks of life. The people of Simcoe North were pleased to be part of the solution to the problem rather than having to watch the problem occur as they did in the past.

There is no question that this Budget is a break with the past. If higher deficits could have created jobs, there would have been many jobs created in the country. However, we have seen higher deficits and a climbing unemployment rate under the Liberal Government. This is a break with the past. It is an opportunity for Canadians to address the deficit and to create a climate which will encourage the creation of jobs. As a result of this Budget, the estimated deficit for 1985-86 will be reduced by $4.4 billion. That is actually the third step that we took to bring our fiscal house into order.

Step one was taken last November when we brought in the expenditure reduction program. We said that the Government could cut back on what it was spending. We said that we intended to examine our expenditures in order to give Canadian taxpayers the best value for their dollar. That was universally accepted by Canadians. As a result, the investment community, our trading partners, and the international monetary community all applauded our efforts as a Government to bring our fiscal house into order.

Step two was taken last February when we introduced Estimates for our spending and borrowing, which were exactly as we said we would spend in November. Having been a Member of the House for the past six years I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberals used to bring in one set of figures which escalated by the time you saw them again. Our figures were the same in February as they were in November.

It is apparent to every Canadian that we will not reduce the deficit in one fell swoop. We need a planned program which can be defended step by step. That is what we are doing. We have terminated programs and projects. Over the course of the next few years we intend to reduce the number of public servants through attrition. It is important to focus on the word "attrition". We intend to examine the number of people employed by the Government and the projects in which they are employed. As people retire or resign, we will replace them with fewer people. We intend to give the Canadian people a more effective and efficient Government.

We are examining Crown corporations. We are asking whether each Crown corporation fulfils the mandate which it was given when it was created. We are asking whether there is a reason, for public policy purposes, to keep that Crown corporation and whether it is operating as efficiently as it should. That is the method through which we are attacking the deficit. We have a targeted reduction which we intend to meet over a series of years to keep faith with the Canadian people and reduce the deficit.

Another issue which is addressed as part of the Budget is job creation. Job creation was a major platform of the Government. We promised "jobs, jobs, jobs". We promised to do it by creating a climate in which jobs could be created. We did not promise that bureaucrats would create jobs. That is not a function of the bureaucracy. Bureaucracy has a definite function in External Affairs and Supply and Services, but the creation of jobs is not a function of the bureaucracy. That should be done by private enterprise. The job of the Government is to encourage businesses to invest, research, innovate, and take a chance.

The small business people who came to see me on Saturday said that they like the capital gains tax exemption. It is not that they will make a lot of money from it. Every business person in Canada who has a chance to make a dollar, knowing that he will pay only 25 cents on it, will go out and make that dollar. They are doing it now. However, through the capital gains tax exemption we want to create the perception that they can make that money and produce the jobs.

I suggest in sincerity that members of the Opposition may be missing the point. It is not the rich people who are looking forward to the capital gains tax exemption. The small business people and their employees, the backbone of the country, are the ones who are looking forward to this tax exemption because they perceive themselves to be participating in that $500,000. The rich people will pay the 25 per cent tax. This tax exemption gives every Canadian employed by small business the chance to take a chance and have a return on his or her investment.

Prior to the Budget we did other things to stimulate job creation in the country. We reduced federal Government expenditures, as I indicated before. We introduced Investment Canada to encourage foreign investment. It is sad to see the Liberals and New Democrats fight a Bill which would create jobs in every riding in Canada.

We have had consultation in many areas. The Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) was in my riding consulting on the tourism business. That is the first time a Minister of Tourism did anything other than go down to Cleveland to get his picture taken on a streetcar. That is what the last joker from the Liberal Party did. We know where he is now. The Government is serious about consulting and about the tourism business in Canada.

We have changed the approach and attitude of the Department of National Revenue. That will defeat the underground economy which says it does not have to pay taxes. We are changing the attitude of the Ministry of National Revenue, which was created, fostered, and promoted by the Liberals. It cracked down on decent people. The former Minister defended that attitude, and he is gone too. Those are the steps we took before the presentation of the Budget to promote fairness and equity and to create jobs.

The consultation on the Unemployment Insurance Act is part of "creating a climate". Through consultation we will tell the business community, labour, and the bureaucracy that the Unemployment Insurance Act is not working exactly in the way we want it to. There are improvements which can be made and we will test them through consultation. That, coupled with the fact that we promised not to increase pensions, is going to help create the climate in the business community that will create jobs.

We said that we would be tough but fair. We are introducing a minimum income tax on high income Canadians. Under a series of Liberal Governments the rich people were allowed to get away without paying tax. As of our January 1 implementation date we will ensure that fairness is returned to the income tax system. I would have thought that the "holier than thou" New Democrats might have joined us in this exercise. Instead, they do not know how to handle the fact that we brought in this minimum tax.

Mr. Parry: You haven't brought it in.

Mr. Lewis: I take it as meaning that Pierre Berton has got to the NDP and it is afraid to lose Pierre Berton's support.

Mr. Parry: That is nonsense, boring nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: What will you do when Pierre Berton, the ultimate socialist, says that he will no longer support the NDP if it supports that minimum tax on the rich? The NDP has abandoned its support of a minimum tax because Pierre said not to do it. When you are going to stop playing the tune that Pierre Berton dictates to the rest of you socialists?

I wanted to illustrate something for the socialists but the paper is in my briefcase—

Mr. Parry: We are not interested in your briefcase. Let us hear your views.

Mr. Lewis: A minimum tax cannot be implemented immediately.

Mr. Parry: That is all we have heard, briefcase talk.

Mr. Lewis: When you find out how to open one, I will show you what to put in it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parry: When you can open your mind, I will show you what to put in it.

Mr. Lewis: You can interject any time.

Last Thursday, they sat in their seats, thunderstruck by the fairness of this Budget. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) came to the point in his speech at which he introduced a minimum tax on banks, they were thunderstruck and there was silence once again. This suggests that once again the banks have got to the New Democrats. When will they stop supporting the banks and join us in taxing the banks and trust companies? We are shocked by the way the New Democrats have abandoned their principles.

This Budget takes action for which Canadians have been asking for years. We said that there should be changes to the Pension Benefits Standard Act. The people with whom I talked at a meeting last Saturday agreed with what we are trying to do because there are people in Canada who would gladly invest but do not know exactly how to do it. They said that through expanding the vehicle of the RRSP, Canadian workers and salaried employees will be given an oportunity to invest through the RRSP mechanism. They are in favour of that. I cannot understand why the NDP is against giving workers and salaried people an opportunity to invest in this country. What could be wrong with that? Why do they take that indefensible position? Why do they not trust ordinary Canadians who want to invest in this country? It is hard to understand that lack of trust from the NDP. Other measures in this Budget include eliminating the tax shelters that existed under the former Liberal Government.

We have attempted to return fairness and equity to a system which we all support and believe can bring this country to greatness. Under the Liberals, the tax system became a haven for the rich. The system was abused as a result of the New Democrats, who do not understand the system, propping up the Liberals.

We have attempted to explain that we are in a serious situation and that we are asking all parts of the country to participate in the solution. I think the argument on fairness is valid. I do not back away from that argument for a moment. The Opposition is right to call fairness into question because the purpose of this exercise is to question the entire package.

However, when the opposition Parties talk to Canadians about the Budget I caution them to remember that any budget is a package and must be considered as a packaged proposition. I caution the Opposition seriously to consider the Budget on that basis.

I talked to a number of Canadians over the weekend. A number of Canadians also talked to my executive and campaign committee, which met for two and a half hours on Sunday morning. It is the view of those people that we have brought down a Budget with which Canadians will agree.

With respect to the budgetary process, I believe it should be addressed by all Parties in a non-partisan way. I have challenged the chartered accountant profession in my riding to review carefully the Canadian budgetary process. I believe we should review it on a non-partisan basis because for too long Governments have brought in Budgets in Canada in every month of the year. That creates problems for the business community, the professions which advise the business community and the people who work in Canada, whether they are the employers or the employees.

There is much merit to reviewing the Canadian budgetary process and asking what would suit the country. We could reach a consensus on what process would suit everyone in order to adopt a sensible process that would benefit Canadians and Parliament. Personally, I would like to see all the budget provisions passed by a certain date. I held the same view when I was in opposition. Whether or not one agrees with the provisions, the community wants certainty. While there is ample provision to argue the philosophy of a Budget as we are doing today, I believe all parliamentarians support the view that certainty in the budgetary process is important to every one of us. It is important to the people whom we represent. I ask Members of the House to consult with the professionals who advise businesses, business people and employees, in order to come up with a means to make the budgetary process work better.

I appreciate the unexpected opportunity to enter into this debate. I was simply going to question my colleagues opposite, but I appreciate this opportunity to speak.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is drenched in hypocrisy.

Mr. Lewis: If I am drenched, you are drowned.

Mr. Nunziata: He speaks of a specific date on which to hand down the Budget. However, he knows, as every Member of the House knows, that his Government delayed the Budget because of the election in Ontario. Members of his Party withheld the Budget because they were concerned about the negative impact it would have on the electorate in Ontario. I suggest to the Hon. Member and all Conservatives opposite that Canadians and the people of Ontario knew better and repudiated Frank Miller and the Conservative Party in Ontario, and they intend to repudiate the Conservative Government in Ottawa, given the next opportunity at the polls.

Hon. Members speak of fairness, equity and justice. Where is the justice, equity and fairness in this Budget when senior citizens are attacked? They are no longer fully cushioned from the ravages of inflation. Where is the equity when poor senior citizens from across the country are losing a significant portion of their pension? Where is the equity when poor senior citizens are made to suffer, on the one hand, while oil barons in Alberta, the rich multi-nationals, are given a windfall profit? Where is the equity when senior citizens suffer, on the one hand, while, on the other, rich people are given a windfall profit, a hand-out bonanza of $125,000 as a result of changes to the capital gains provision?

Will the Hon. Member honestly tell us where are the fairness, justice and equity? I am sure he will agree that there is no fairness in the Budget. It is a Budget for the rich and by the rich and it attacks the poor, especially the senior citizens in the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) will have an opportunity to answer the question this afternoon.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

WOMEN

THE BUDGET—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize today this Progressive Conservative Government Budget's complete disregard of the needs of Canadian women.

First of all, in the area of employment. This Government's decision to eliminate 15,000 Public Service positions will affect 5 per cent of women employed in the Public Service. The Government has implemented no special job creating scheme. Instead of fulfilling its promise to help women benefit from the technological revolution, the Government has decided to cut $78 million from training programs this year.

The Budget says nothing about part-time workers of whom 72 per cent are women. It penalizes low and medium income families through regressive sales taxes on consumer goods.

The desindexation of social programs will especially hurt people at the lower end of the economic scale who are mostly women.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on like this, but I feel I have conveyed the essential of my message. The Government is altogether indifferent to women's needs, as evidenced once again by the Budget it tabled last Thursday.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EFFECT OF BUDGET'S PROVISIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the fear expressed by Canadian women that the Conservative Government would sacrifice its election commitment to equality for the sake of a deficit first strategy has come true. The Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) continues past Liberal traditions of broken promises, cuts, and taxes at the expense of Canadian women and their children. Deindexing of the old age security pension will harm the most vulnerable members of Canadian society, elderly women. Over 60 per cent of them now live in poverty, and the Budget does nothing to provide relief.

For unemployed women there are no jobs. For the average women in the workforce the Budget does nothing, either. There are cuts to training programs. Lay-offs in the Public Service and privatization will hit women the hardest. There are no additional funds for the Canadian Human Rights Commission to enforce equal pay for work of equal value and employment equity.

Cuts in transfer payments to the provinces are of particular concern to women. Promised funding for child care has been ignored. Battered women will see no increase in protection from violence for themselves and their children. Canadian women who took the promise of consultation in good faith have been betrayed.

ECCLESIASTICAL AFFAIRS

ELEVATION TO COLLEGE OF CARDINALS OF MONSIGNOR LOUIS-ALBERT VACHON

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Rome, Pope John Paul II honoured a famous "Beauceron", and I would like to announce here in Parliament the great honour that reflects on the great riding of Beauce following the elevation to the College of Cardinals of Monsignor Louis-Albert Vachon, Archbishop of Quebec City.

Cardinal Vachon was born in 1912 in Saint-Frédéric de Beauce. After a life dedicated to others in his capacity as priest and as Rector of Laval University for many years, he was made Archbishop of Quebec City and Primate of the Catholic Church in Canada, and today, a cardinal.

Throughout his life he has been an example to us, reflecting the basic values that are part of our heritage in Beauce. Truly great men do not tolerate mediocrity, and many Beaucerons have, like him, aimed for excellence and achieved it.

He reached his goals through hard work and sheer tenacity. He is an honoured member of his community, and today, the entire Christian and Catholic community of Canada, Quebec and Beauce is honoured to have him in their midst.

His appointment to the highest post in the Catholic Church gives us cause for rejoicing as a community. Again, I am indeed honoured to be able to pay tribute to this famous Beauceron, His Eminence Cardinal Louis-Albert Vachon.

INCOME TAX

INTRODUCTION OF MINIMUM TAX

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, during the past federal election campaign the Progressive Conservative Party pledged to improve the fairness of our tax system by introducing a minimum personal income tax. That tax will take effect on January 1, 1986. The date was chosen to allow for consultation and to avoid, as much as possible, any adverse effects on farmers, people starting new businesses, and retired people living on fixed incomes from dividends. Adverse effects could very well result from such a major tax change midway through the taxation year.

Opposition Parties have expressed concern that the minimum tax did not take effect as of the budget date of May 23. This is most surprising, bearing in mind their well-known sense of fair play and equity. I am sure that upon quiet reflection opposition Parties will enthusiastically agree the Government has not only kept its word but has chosen the best, fairest, and fastest way of implementing the minimum tax.

THE BUDGET—IMPACT ON ELDERLY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, Prime Minister Mulroney made a solemn commitment during the election campaign—he was not going to tamper with social programs, especially old age security pensions. As the Progressive Conservative Leader himself put it at the time, it was a sacred trust.

Well, Prime Minister Mulroney has failed to live up to that solemn commitment and, among people most penalized by the Mulroney-Wilson Budget, we must include the senior citizens of Canada who between now and 1990-91 stand to lose $4.5 billion as a result of the 3 per cent old age security desindexation.

Since 2.5 million elderly Canadian men and women receive pensions, it means that each senior citizen will lose $1,800 between now and 1990-91. The Mulroney-Wilson Budget amounts to a direct attack against the purchasing power of elderly Canadians, for they will have to do with $54 less a month in 1990-91. Is it fair to expect men and women aged 65 or more to carry such a burden while multinational oil companies will be getting $2.5 billion in 1990-91 alone?

The Mulroney-Wilson Budget is unfair to millions of taxpayers and even more so to older people, most of whom have nothing else but their old age security cheques to make ends meet. Old age security pensions will be reduced by $54 a month in 1990-91, and that is unfair to the elderly to whom Prime Minister Mulroney promised during the election campaign that social programs, and especially old age pensions, would not be tampered with.

FINANCE

BUDGET'S EFFECT ON FAMILIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, rumour has it that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has ordered the minting of a new Canadian coin to symbolize the sacrifices he has required each Canadian family to make through tax increases in order to pay for the multibillion dollar giveaway to the corporate sector and to upper-income earners. The new coin is valued at $3, to symbolize the daily increase in family taxes flowing from the November statement of the Minister of Finance and last week's Budget.

In November the Minister of Finance announced a 1 per cent sales tax increase, an unemployment insurance increase, a gasoline tax increase of eight cents per gallon, and elimination of the standard $100 deduction, a deindexation of threshold for child tax credit, a deindexing of exemptions for dependent children, and a reduced federal tax reduction, totalling approximately $500 per family per year.

In the May 23 Budget we saw another sales tax broadening, a 1 per cent increase in sales tax, alcohol and tobacco excise tax increages, a gasoline tax increase, a deindexing of personal tax exemptions, an elimination of federal tax reduction, an elimination of RHOSPs, a deindexing of OAS and a deindexing of family allowance, totalling approximately $500 per family per year.

These amount to an approximate $1,000 per year tax increase for the average family in Canada. This means that the Budget and the November statement will call upon the average family to support the federal Government and its giveaways to the corporate sector and to upper-income earners by approximately $3 per day.

PROPOSED MEASURES

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on September 4, Canadians across the country voted massively in favour of a change of Government. During the last election campaign, the Progressive Conservative Party and I in my own riding repeated time and time again that what this country needed was a team of administrators and good managers to stop the appalling waste of public funds.

Mr. Speaker, the first Wilson Budget is a clear departure from the budgets brought down by our predecessors, in that it resolutely comes to grips with the problem of our national debt. Our Government has realized that accumulating deficits is no way to solve the problem of unemployment in this country. It is the kind of theory that has brought us economic disaster.

Some day, a government would have to act responsibly, and that is what this Government has done. This first Budget, Mr. Speaker, is realistic, effective and fair. For the first time even, the Budget provides for a minimum income tax for the wealthiest in our society, and also a tax on financial institutions.

Mr. Speaker, many residents and organizations in my riding told me they were very concerned about the possibility that the principle of universality for social programs might be abandoned. Mr. Speaker, all these people now have the assurance that this is not so, since the Budget has not altered the principle of universality of social programs and is maintaining unemployment insurance benefits at their present level.

Mr. Speaker, this first Budget does ask Canadians to make some sacrifices, but—

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SUPPORT FOR PROVISIONS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, weep for the people of Ontario. The palsy-walsy puppy love of the NDP for the Liberals blossomed into a common law arrangement, with the Liberals caving in to socialist demands even though three-quarters of the people of the province are free enterprisers. The Liberals and socialists have made love before—yes, in the federal House when they joined hands to take property rights out of the Charter after the PCs had put property rights in. So weep and beware, Ontario.

Nationally, Canadians are happy. Last Thursday our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) threw out the hodge-podge borrowing policies initiated by "Emperor" Trudeau and still followed by the Liberals and the NDP, who believe you can borrow the country out of debt. The ancient regime has given up the ghost, and we can look forward to bright tomorrows under the strong leadership of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). This Budget is one of hope and confidence. It puts its faith in Canadians, not manipulative and conning backroom socialists. It is designed to cut the deficit and put people to work, not to buy Liberal seats with public money.

Our Minister of Finance has put people first, not the money lenders, as was done by the Liberals. New investment will provide work, for Canadians have faith in our Budget and in our Leader. In spite of all the doom and gloom of the Liberals and the NDP, the PC Party will build a new Canada, a prosperous Canada, and a greater Canada. So, hurrah for the emperor slayer, our Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONDEMNATION OF PROVISIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I believe that those poor government back-benchers should be getting a punishment commission for having to go out and sell the Budget. True Tory colours have come out with a blue-blooded Budget for the rich in Canada. Cut-backs in family allowances and old age pensions fly in the face of Mulroney's own promises to Canadians. Mulroney's idea of fair tax reform is a half million dollar capital gains tax write-off for the rich, and a tax on pet food, chocolate bars, and soap. Where are the jobs, jobs, jobs promised by the Mulroney Government last year during the election? Harsh cuts to federal programs and Departments will result in a combined loss of 125,000 jobs for all Canadians. Closures, lay-offs, sell-offs, and sell-outs are the hallmark of the Budget. No new job creation measures have been introduced.

The Budget is a direct kick in the teeth to the unemployed and the poor. Why didn't the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) address the needs of the unemployed? Why did he not assist potential home owners? One and a half million people are in need of adequate housing, and 1,400,000 people are out of work. Mulroney has not given Canadians anything to look forward to with his Budget. It is a slap in the face to middle-income Canadians, and we are going to fight it with every tooth and nail that we have.

THE BUDGET—OBJECTIVES

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, our Government was elected on a platform for change, and on that basis we have charted a course of action to create jobs, growth and increased Government responsibility.

Since November, over 200,000 real jobs were created, and this Budget is to be an effective tool for creating jobs for Canadians. It will reduce the deficit inherited from the previous Liberal Government by the end of the decade, without compromising economic renewal, and it contains proposals for more effective management of government operations.

The Budget proposals encourage private initiative and private sector growth. These measures represent a fundamental break with the past. For instance, this Government is proposing a life-time capital gains exemption of $500,000 for each Canadian, a measure aimed at encouraging Canadians to invest in small and large businesses, which will help stimulate the economy and counter the effects of the underground economy.

The Budget promotes job creation in strategic sectors by encouraging private initiative, improving effectiveness in management of government operations and the Public Service, reducing the deficit and controlling our national debt.

Mr. Speaker, this Budget was brought down following the most extensive round of pre-budget consultations ever held. We listened to representatives from all groups and all regions across Canada.

PATENTS

THE BUDGET—PROPOSED ELIMINATION OF CANADIAN PATENT OFFICE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the proposed elimination of the Canadian Patent Office announced in the Conservative Government Budget does not make any sense.

It would seem that, as a result of the Government's decision to eliminate 15,000 public sector jobs, 233 Patent Office positions will disappear, including 120 held by highly specialized patent examiners who have made the Canadian Patent Office second to none in the world.

Mr. Speaker, this decision is one more failure in this country's commitment to research and development. The Patent Office is responsible for millions of dollars of Canadian research projects to avoid duplication. As well, Mr. Speaker, the Patent Office plays a leading role in the promotion of new technology by putting our patent examiners in direct contact with international technology.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has done very little if anything at all to promote research and development, and it has failed to keep its promise to double the percentage of our Gross National Product earmarked for research. We must support the expansion of an institution like the Patent Office instead of closing it.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CREATION OF EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. With all the rhetoric surrounding his budget speech last Thursday, there was a lot of talk about job creation. However, when we examined his budget speech and budget documents in detail, we found that there were no specific plans for job creation, no policies for job creation, no specifics whatsoever. When it comes to the imposition of new taxes, they are immediate and specific, but with respect to job creation it is very hypothetical, very pie in the sky.

Can the Minister give us the information on which he makes the statement that the Budget will produce those jobs which are necessary to get the economy moving? Can he produce for us the working papers that he must have prepared, the impact studies? Can he give those to the House today so that we will know on what he makes the claim that the Budget will give us the jobs that we require?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said in the budget speech that this is a break from the past. It is a new approach to economic management. If we could count on deficits to produce the lower unemployment rate that the Hon. Member is calling for, we would have had that many times over in the last 10 years. That has not worked before, it will not work now.

What we are doing is encouraging the small business community in particular to go out, invest in Canada, invest in something for themselves, create something for themselves and their families that they did not have before, and in that way create jobs. I am not going to stand here in front of the Hon. Member and say that I can tell him precisely what those jobs are going to be, but I remind him that last November his Leader said we would lose 50,000 to 100,000 jobs, and since then 149,000 have been created.

PROJECTED ECONOMIC GROWTH

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it is unbelievable in this age of computers, econometrics, and sophisticated statistics, that the Minister and his Department have not made a serious analysis of the impact on employment of his budget measures. It seems he is leaving it all to faith, hope, and charity, with respect to the business sector and the Tory Party. In his Budget of escalating taxes and cut-backs, and these are his own figures, by 1990 he will take out of the economy approximately $11 billion.

Next year he predicts a growth rate of 2.4 per cent, down from 4.7 per cent in 1984. How does he expect to create the necessary jobs with that kind of growth when he has no policy for direct job creation, and no policy to stimulate the economy and bring about that growth?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Hon. Member that the direct job creation, the make-work programs, the dead-end programs, have not worked. They have not produced the jobs that are necessary. They have not produced the hope. They have not produced the—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let us talk a little bit about these econometric models. The econometric models can produce a number, a response to direct impacts. What the econometric models do not measure is the impact on the small businessman of this Budget when he sees the hope and the encouragement that is being given to him. That cannot be measured. I can assure the Hon. Member that the small businessman has been performing since September 4, because 201,000 jobs have been created. In the comparable period before, it was around 72,000 jobs.

CONSEQUENCES FOR WOMEN

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in his Budget, the Minister made only two references to women and employment, and then only very vaguely and indirectly. In the United States, as a result of the same kind of policies in recent years, the situation has been very hard on mothers and their children. Recently, we received a report indicating that in the United States today, 22.2 per cent of children are below the poverty line, compared to 13 per cent in 1969. With the kind of laisser-faire policy he is proposing for the private sector, how can the Minister give Canadian women the assurance that the outlook for their employment, training and salaries will improve, and where are all those promises on these matters that were made to Canadian women during the election campaign?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made passing reference to the United States. He forgot to mention that the unemployment rate in the United States is 7.5 per cent as against 10.9 per cent here. I think a good objective to have is to reduce the unemployment rate to that level.

Let me remind the Hon. Member that in April 89,000 jobs were created, the largest single monthly increase in five years. About 60 per cent of those jobs were for women, and I believe that that is the direction we should be taking.

INDEXATION OF OLD AGE PENSIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. By 1990, as a result of breaking its promise to maintain full indexing of old age pensions, the Government will be withdrawing $1.6 billion per year from senior citizens. How can the Minister justify this assault on the pocketbooks of senior citizens?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the budget speech, I indicated that we would be modifying indexation and that we would not be providing a full recompense for the degree of inflation because the first 3 per cent would not be compensated for. I have talked to a number of senior citizens and—

Mr. Broadbent: Where? At the Albany Club?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I repeat, I spoke to a number of senior citizens over the weekend and many of them have said that we were right to do what we are doing because they are worried about their grandchildren. They are worried about the $6,000 debt that is put on the head of every new baby when it is born. They are worried about the debt that will grow to about $12,000 per head by the time those children are five years old if we do not do anything about this. That is why senior citizens are in support of this move.

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, 58 per cent of those who receive old age pensions also receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement because they have no other income. The Minister is only partially indexing the GIS even though he claims otherwise in the budget figures.

There is a further cut in the Budget, and that is a $2 billion cut in transfer payments to the provinces in 1990, which will impact on services provided to senior citizens. How can the Government justify reducing payments to the provinces when the need for services remains the same and the provinces will have to raise taxes? How can this be called a true effort to reduce the deficit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two points in response to the Hon. Member's question. First, we are fully indexing the Guaranteed Income Supplement. The second point I would make is that the federal-provincial transfers will be increasing each year by a rate of around 5 per cent assuming certain levels of inflation rates that we are projecting today exist. The amount the provinces will receive will be the same as a per cent of total spending in 1990-91 as it is today. I believe that giving the provinces lots of warning of the impact of this change is far, far better than the two, three, or four-week notice given by the previous Government, thus putting the provinces off stride without giving them a chance to manage into the change in funding levels that they were to receive.

SMALL BUSINESS

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was overheard last week urging Conservative Members to go out at the weekend to talk about the Budget. Members of the Opposition did so as well. I was in Kamloops main-streeting over the weekend and I spoke with some small businessmen.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Did they recognize you?

Mr. Riis: Yes, they recognized me. I talked to a small business operator who indicated that, for the last three years, he has been struggling to make ends meet. He has not made a profit but is struggling just to break even. He asked me to ask the Prime Minister how he would be able to survive in the next year or two now that $1,000 per family has been taken out of the pockets of all of his customers.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Leader of the NDP did not rise so we could see his new wedding suit that he will be wearing at Queen's Park next week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I understand he is going to be giving away the bride.

Mr. Broadbent: Sour grapes.

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member for Windsor West will be singing I Love You Truly.

Mr. Broadbent: Nothing like a rejected lover.

Mr. Mulroney: Ah, it is going to be sweet.

I am sure the small-businessman also told the Hon. Member about his delight with the tax changes that will give small-businessmen the chance to create jobs so that they can retain the benefits of some of the tremendous effort they put into building the Canadian economy. That is what this Budget is all about: job creation and hope for the entrepreneurs who build real jobs in Canada.

INCOME TAX

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. A little later on the same weekend I was travelling in Clearwater, British Columbia, where I ran into the head of a young family, a logger making $25,000 per year and paying about $4,000 per year in income tax as his contribution to the country. He had heard that, because of the Budget, stockbrokers can now sell their condos in California without paying any income tax at all. He wanted me to ask the Prime Minister how this would be considered fair taxation.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is because the Budget also contained measures to end income splitting among family members, to end tax shelters for yachts, hotels, and other properties, to put a surtax on higher-income individuals and large corporations, and to put a two-year tax on the capital of banks and trust companies. That is the first time that has taken place, and that indicates the Government is committed to fairness in the tax system. The Hon. Member should be applauding this rather than denigrating the attempt to bring fairness and equity to the tax system of Canada.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, later on that same weekend—

An Hon. Member: What did they say in Salmon Arm?

Mr. Riis: —I went to Salmon Arm.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: I am very serious about this. I talked with an individual who has owned a resort on the shore of the Shuswap Lake for a number of years. Again , he is not making any money but is simply struggling to survive. He asked me to ask the Prime Minister, if I had the opportunity, the following question: he is looking forward to the fall and the year 1986, Expo year, because he believes there will be more and more tourists visiting the area. He feels that this will help him get out of a break-even situation and enable him to make a few dollars of profit. He wants to know how a nine-cent increase per gallon of gasoline in this Budget, coupled with a seven-cent increase per gallon of gasoline in the November statement, would help the travelling public and his business this fall and into 1986.

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should have indicated to the gentleman from Salmon Arm that the information was misleading. There is no such increase of taxation in the Budget; on the contrary.

I ran into somebody from Kamloops the other day and he said to me: "If you see Nelson Riis, tell him to get back to Ottawa and do some work, rather than run around his riding".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TAXES IMPOSED ON AVERAGE CONSUMER

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was talking about fairness and equity, but my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns the fair distribution of the tax burden among the country's taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, if we analyze last Thursday's Budget more carefully, it becomes clear that Canadian taxpayers will be paying $37 billion more in income and other taxes by 1990-1991 and that of that $37 billion, only $1.4 billion will be paid by the big corporations, banks and trust companies, to which the Prime Minister referred earlier, and by the wealthiest among us.

My question is as follows: Could the Minister of Finance, who promised a Budget that would be fair to all taxpayers, inform the House what is so fair about taxing Canadian working men and women who belong to the middle class of our society, 26 times as much as the rich and the big corporations, including our banks?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think those same Canadians might have some questions about the figures which the Hon. Member is putting before the House today. I would ask him to look at the impact of the range of measures which we are taking. We will reduce the debt of Canada by $75 billion over and above what it would have been had there been no action taken. Of that reduction, 80 per cent is in expenditure cuts. That is why I have very major doubts about the figures which the Hon. Member put forward. Only 20 per cent will be based on revenue increases.

BUDGET'S JUSTICE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my figures were taken from a so-called secret document that has been circulating for a number of days and bears the title: Direct Impacts of Budget Measures by National Accounts Component.

My supplementary is also based on these data, most of which may be found in the Budget documents we have been given. Could the Minister, since we are talking about fairness in the Budget, inform the House why, if he was agreeable to removing the first 3 per cent of indexing on our tax tables, which will give the Treasury $11.5 billion more in revenue, he then turns around and, in the same Budget, gives away $8.5 billion to the oil multinationals between now and 1990-1991?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in response to a previous question, I think Canadians, particularly elderly Canadians, are very sensitive to the impact of the policies which have been followed in recent years which have led to a high degree of inflation—much higher than is the case in other countries—and the relationship between that inflation and the growing level of debt which we have had in Canada. A great deal of support has been expressed to me and to my other colleagues during the past weekend that finally a Government has come to power which will take action on the deficit to minimize the degree of inflation which has devastated their lives. Therefore, they are very thankful for the measures which we have taken and they are prepared to make that small sacrifice.

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister has continually been telling the House that senior citizens support his measures to slash their incomes by 3 per cent a year. That will come as a great surprise to the Canadian Pensioners Concerned and to the United Senior Citizens of Ontario, which organizations over the weekend made their objections to the Minister's plans clearly known.

During the last election campaign when the Government was looking for votes it promised to improve Old Age Security benefits. However, in the Budget the Minister slashed the incomes of seniors over the next five years by $2 billion and at the same time increased the incomes of corporations by $2 billion. I want to ask the Minister of Finance: Is that fair?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member neglected to make one point. In the November statement we increased the spouse's allowance for many low income Canadians who are 60 to 64 years of age.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Yes, we are very sensitive to the position of senior citizens. But, as I indicated in responding to other questions, we are also sensitive to the concern which they have about the growing debt, the impact which that will have on inflation, and the impact which it will have on the residue which will be left for their grandchildren.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONCEPT OF UNIVERSALITY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Many Canadians view that move in the Budget as being an attack on universality, which the Prime Minister has repeatedly said is a sacred trust. I would ask the Minister of Finance: Is universality to be 97 per cent this year, 94 per cent next year, 91 per cent the following year, and so on? When will the Government do something about the universal application of old age pensions, particularly on behalf of the many senior women who are living in poverty?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member that universality has been maintained. The same number of people who were eligible for the old age pension before the Budget are eligible for it after the Budget. Additionally thereto, 85,000 Canadians who are not getting the spouse's allowance will be eligible once that legislation is passed. I hope the Hon. Member would endorse that.

There is another point which I would like to make. The cost of the deficit—and obviously they want to have a greater cost—is greater today than the federal share of health spending and pensions. In order to maintain both, we must get the deficit under control.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PREMIER'S TRIAL—INTERNAL INVESTIGATION REPORT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and it concerns the Hatfield-MacKay affair. The RCMP report, which was released last Friday, confirmed what we in the Liberal Party have said from the outset—Richard Hatfield was given special treatment because he is a Premier. Indeed it is a sad day for the criminal justice system in Canada, and the Solicitor General should hang his head in shame.

Will the Solicitor General finally admit that special treatment was given to Richard Hatfield? Will he admit that it was wrong to treat Richard Hatfield differently from any other Canadian in similar circumstances? Or should Canadians conclude that there is one law for the rich and powerful, and another for the poor?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell my colleague from York South-Weston that the way in which I read the report indicated that the RCMP proceeded, as I said at the outset, with meticulous care to make certain that all proper procedures were followed with respect to the manner in which Premier Hatfield's case was handled.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Solicitor General should reread the report as he certainly was mistaken in what he said. The very integrity of our criminal justice system has been challenged by the inequities and the improprieties of this particular case. More questions have been raised than answered in the report. Commissioner Simmonds confirmed that the report is incomplete and that it leaves a number of interesting questions unanswered. In view of the fact that the Solicitor General claims he is a man of fairness, a man of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It was a very long preamble. Right to the question, please.

Mr. Nunziata: I would like to direct the question to the Prime Minister. Will he initiate a public judicial inquiry into the whole affair in order to restore confidence and respect to the Canadian criminal justice system? If not, what is he hiding? Of what is he afraid?

● (1440)

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in response to that question put by my hon. colleague I think I should quote to him what the Commissioner of the RCMP has concluded, and I will quote very briefly:

> My own view is that such an inquiry would accomplish little other than provide public entertainment while every person who has anything to do with this matter, and all the peripheral issues connected with it, were examined under oath as to their exact conduct and knowledge by a battery of lawyers—

Under the circumstances, unless the Hon. Member has something better than that to offer I do not believe that the interests of justice would be served one iota by any judicial inquiry.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

APPLICATION OF TAX RELIEF

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I was also in my riding on the weekend. Many of my constituents asked me to come back and express some sense of appreciation to the Minister of Finance and to the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Question.

Mr. Hawkes: They are very pleased with the special provision for the disabled.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hawkes: And they would like me to ask in this Chamber if the Minister of National Health and Welfare could provide the House and the Canadian people with a slightly better view of the kinds of disabled people who will now be included under this provision. We understand there are 120,000 or more. What are the characteristics of these people? How will they be defined, and how will they apply for that special kind of relief?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for that question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I also want to remind the House that he has been one Hon. Member who, while on both sides of the House, has been very diligent in following the needs of the disabled and trying to improve their position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): At the present time, Mr. Speaker, about 60,000 Canadian families have qualified under the definition of "disabled" for the enriched tax exemption where they are taking their responsibilities as families for the disabled. That definition will be expanded to include, we calculate, approximately another 120,000 Canadians. This will include people, for instance, who are suffering from profound deafness, severe mental retardation, who have severe heart or respiratory conditions, and who are not confined either to a wheelchair or to a bed.

WESTERN ACCORD—BUDGET'S IMPACT ON CONSUMERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On March 29 she said in this House: "As I have repeatedly said, there is nothing in the Western Accord with the producing provinces that hurts consumers". She said again: "As I have said repeatedly, there is nothing in the Accord which would lead to increases in consumer prices". Now the Government has socked it to us in the form of higher energy prices in the Budget. Given that it has taken money out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians, what has the ordinary Canadian gained from the Budget, as opposed to what we all know the oil companies have gained, and that is windfalls and more tax breaks?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to say how dismayed I am—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: —that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway does not understand the Western Accord. He cannot apparently read the Western Accord and doesn't understand it. There is nothing in the Western Accord which is increasing costs to consumers. There is no point in me trying to refute a question asked by the Hon. Member which contains no basis in truth.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister knows that the Western Accord is being paid for by the Budget which came down the other night. She cannot kid anybody otherwise.

CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): The Minister also said in the House that the only justification—her argument—for giving so much money to the oil companies was that they would create jobs, that they would reinvest the money and create jobs. In view of the fact that I have asked her Department under the Freedom of Information Act how many studies there are which show that jobs are being created or will be created—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is again a very long preamble to a supplementary question. Is there a question, please?

Mr. Waddell: Does she have any studies in her Department which will show that 100,000 to 300,000 jobs are going to be created by taking money out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians and giving it to rather fat oil companies?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I don't understand why the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway wants us to continue, as the Liberals did, to pay oil companies $40 a barrel for crude at a time when it is selling at world prices for $29.75.

Miss Carney: That is one of the reasons why, with the support of the New Democratic Party, we are left with the deficit position with which the Minister of Finance has dealt. On June 1 we are going to deregulation where Canadian crude prices go to world prices.

In terms of the jobs which are being created, I have already advised the Hon. Member that we already have about $15 billion worth of projects which have been announced since the Accord, or the economics of which have been approved since the Accord, and those are the kind of projects which will create the jobs which we want.

Oral Questions

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

SEXUAL HARASSMENT COMPLAINT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week it became public that the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester was the subject of a complaint to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. My colleague, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston, called for greater confidentiality at the commission. But on Friday the Solicitor General took a totally different tack. He actually took sides in the case, saying he was doing it as a Minister and a friend of his former Cabinet colleague. He rejected the evidence even though he admitted not having seen it. Does the Prime Minister not feel that his Solicitor General showed poor judgment in taking sides in a case before a federal commission?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I am the Minister who answers for the Human Rights Commission let me say that many Hon. Members of Parliament have expressed some disquiet with respect to certain aspects of the policy of the Human Rights Commission relating to complaints which are unsubstantiated accusations at that particular stage in the process. The same kinds of views have been expressed before the House of Commons justice committee. We are considering possible amendments to the Human Rights Commission legislation at the present time, and this is one of the areas which will have to be considered.

I am sure that all Hon. Members of this House realize the perils with which people in public life are faced in this kind of situation. My colleague was expressing his concern in that area, and I believe it is a concern which we all have to consider.

SOLICITOR GENERAL'S STATEMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): The Minister of Justice is throwing us a red herring. I am not talking about the procedures of the commission. That is fair game for legislators. What the Solicitor General did in this case was to challenge the evidence, and say he didn't believe the evidence against his former colleague even though he had not seen the evidence. I want to ask the Prime Minister again, because it is a question about the Cabinet not about the Human Rights Commission, does the Prime Minister continue to have confidence in a Solicitor General who would take sides and challenge the impartiality of the commission like this?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I construed the comments of the Solicitor General as comments of concern about the procedure which could affect any Hon. Member of this House, in much the same way as the Hon. Member for York South-Weston indicated his concern about the same kind of problem. Inasmuch as it is a quasi-judicial process I would not want to go beyond that except to say that I thought that the Hon. Member for York South-Weston and the Solicitor General were expressing a concern about injustices which could flow from the procedures themselves.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Given what he has just said, will the Prime Minister instruct the Solicitor General that is is inappropriate, holding the position that he does, for him to make comment about the innocence or otherwise of any person who is either before the courts or who is being investigated by a tribunal, during the time the investigation is being conducted or while the matter is still before the courts?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I discussed with the Solicitor General the views expressed by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston and himself, and I construed in both cases those views to be an expression of frustration with a system which could cause any Hon. Member of the House of Commons to be dealt with unfairly. The Solicitor General assured me that his comments were meant in that regard and in the same vein as the expression of concern by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

COMMENT BY MINISTERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, given the somewhat privileged position a Solicitor General holds, will the Prime Minister discuss, not only with him but with Cabinet in general, the inappropriateness of commenting on the innocence or otherwise of any individual who is either before the courts or who is being investigated by a tribunal, in advance of a decision having been made on the one hand whether or not to proceed and therefore finalize the charge or, on the other hand, until after the innocence or guilt has been proven by the court itself? Will he make that a general rule for Cabinet, notwithstanding the fact that we may well agree that the procedures in place are inappropriate?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The comment by my hon. friend is fundamentally appropriate and will be happy to discuss again not only with all members of the Government and caucus but indeed Members of the House of Commons, and ask them to bear in mind the injunction of which my hon. friend speaks so well.

INCOME TAX

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I visited my riding over the weekend, the great riding of Timmins-Chapleau, and found that the great majority of my constituents are truly impressed by the block-buster Budget announced by the Minister here last week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gervais: I would like to ask the Minister to explain to this House once more the implementation of a minimum tax on the rich. Specifically, why are we waiting until 1986 for it to take effect, and what are the three options outlined in the discussion paper?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member and the support expressed by his constituents. Let me respond directly to the question of the alternative minimum tax. We could have brought in a tax immediately.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: You could have.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): But there are some problems in doing so. We were concerned that the implementation of this tax right away would have a retroactive impact in much the same way the 1981 Budget did, which resulted in 45 changes having to be made before the ink had even dried on that Budget.

There are two provinces which have taken a somewhat different approach to a minimum or flat tax. We want to use the opportunity over the next six or eight months to consult with the provinces—I met with the provincial Finance Ministers last night—and discuss with them the means of implementing a minimum tax so that it will be as effective and harmonious as possible for the 1986 taxation year.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

LEVEL OF FUNDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is funny how the slap at senior citizens is very timely but the minimum tax on the rich is not too timely.

In the absence of the Minister responsible for housing I would like to ask my question directly to the Prime Minister because I know the stake he has in the Budget. With 1.5 million Canadians without adequate housing, and one million homes in need of major repair, does the Prime Minister agree with the assessment by the Minister of Finance that $26 million of CMHC funds are "surplus to current requirements"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I think the important thing to remember, Mr. Speaker, in any discussion of housing is that since this Government came to office, and this is what matters to the ordinary taxpayer, interest rates are down almost 3 per cent. That is what we are doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is the way you get home ownership in this country. We are following a course which, hopefully, will ensure that interest rates come down further so that housing becomes available to more and more Canadians. That is what it is all about.

FUNDING OF TRANSITION HOUSES FOR BATTERED WOMEN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is displaying his fundamental ignorance of the position of 1.5 million Canadians who can never aspire to home ownership.

There are more than half a million battered Canadian women, Mr. Speaker, and last year CMHC funded start-ups for only 11 transition houses. Is the Prime Minister telling the Canadian people that the transition needs of half a million Canadian women are "surplus to current requirements"?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the issue of transition houses was discussed between the provincial Ministers of Health and Social Services, especially social services, at the federal-provincial meeting. The provincial Ministers have taken a very direct role because they feel it is very much a provincial matter. But we have said that we want to co-operate in whatever way we can in order to develop that.

If you really get down to the argument of the Hon. Member, we are talking about transition-houses to which people in need of help and support go. It is not a matter of whether they are eligible, which has long been a problem in these transition houses, under CAP. If she really looks at the issue, she would not mix various issues together as she did in her question.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister indicated in his Budget last week that he is going to be reducing provincial transfer payments over the next five years compared to what they would be receiving under the present formula. Conservative MPs when they were in opposition, including the present Minister of National Health and Welfare, and the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board, attacked the 1982 formula because there was not enough money for medicare, post-secondary education, and other programs. Given that, how can the Government say it is now going to cut back from the existing formula?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I indicated in the budget speech was that the level of federal-provincial transfers will be increasing at a significant rate between now and 1990-91. The percentage of government program spending through transfer payments will be the same in 1990-91 as it is today.

I met with the provincial Ministers of Finance last night and I told them I wanted to work with them in determining the best way to manage this transition to a new level of funding so that their Ministers of Health and Education would have the greatest opportunity possible to adjust their programs, in order to avoid the disruption which occurred back in 1982 and the fundamental changes made at that time.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that a $2 billion cut from what they would receive under the present formula is, in fact, a cut.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN STATEMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. Does he believe that the Conservative Party was being honest during the last campaign when it indicated "we will return to the 1977 funding formula"? That formula provided more money for the provinces than they have at this time. He made that promise during the election campaign and the Minister of Finance has gone in the opposite direction. Is that honest?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I had a fairly full discussion with the provincial Ministers of Finance last evening. We discussed at some length the basis on which this change was made. I think they recognize the very difficult financial position of the federal Government. They acknowledge the fact that all government programs have been affected as a result of the Budget. As I said in my speech the other day, it was very difficult for me to exclude a major portion of government spending from the changes we made. But I will be meeting with those Ministers in September, and again in December, to discuss further the position they wish to take in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell; one question.

PUBLIC SERVICE

WORK OF MR. JACK THREADER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, on page 9 of the budgetary document entitled "New Management Initiatives" there appears the name of Dr. Peter Meyboom as the Public Service Advisor to the Nielsen Task Force. Is the Minister aware that one of the persons assisting Dr. Meyboom in providing technical assistance was Mr. Jack Threader of the office of Regulatory Reform of the Treasury Board, the same Jack Threader involved with Mystl Management? In other words, at the same time Mr. Threader was providing technical assistance on the budgetary document, he was offering, along with his associates, inside information on dealing with the Government?

• (1500)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer that in my capacity as Acting President of the Treasury Board. Over the weekend the Hon. Member contacted the Treasury Board. At that time he was told that this individual did not have direct access to the work of the task force. I am disappointed that, knowing that, the Hon. Member would have made an allegation similar to the one he made in the House today.

Mr. Boudria: No, Sir.

Mr. Beatty: I can also indicate that the report that is being conducted by the Treasury Board should be completed within about 24 hours. The results will be made public by the Government. Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Hon. Member, if he still has some vestige of honour, to respect the position of public servants and not to make false allegations in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Friday, May 24, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

ANSWER GIVEN BY MR. BEATTY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on a question of privilege arising out of Question Period.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Minister across has obviously accused me of lying to the House when all facts that were stated by me today were made in a conversation that I had with officials of his Department. It is he, Sir, who should apologize to the House for accusing other Members of giving false information when that which he gave was obviously grossly inaccurate.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I did not accuse the Hon. Member of lying. However, I can say that he and his colleague have given information that was wrong. Unfortunately, they have been so consumed by their interest in promoting themselves by destroying the reputation of others that they have given false information to the House of Commons, albeit inadvertently.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it the Hon. Minister is indicating that a question of fact that has been presented to the House by another Hon. Member is, in his view, not factual. That strikes me as a difference of opinion about facts and not as a question of—

Ms. Copps: He is imputing motives, quite clearly.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully and I have heard someone saying that one thing is true and someone else saying that it is not true. I then heard the Minister say that he has his own views as to why those things are being presented to the House. If Hon. Members would prefer that I reserve my judgment and read the "blues", I would be happy to do so.

Ms. Copps: Yes.

Mr. Prud'homme: On this question, yes, I would like you to do so, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time with respect to House business. The House Leaders have had discussions with respect to the business for this week. On the basis of those discussions it was our intention to proceed with the Budget debate on a continuous basis. However, there is a necessity to pass through both Houses and to receive Royal Assent on a Bill relating to variable entry requirements under the Unemployment Insurance Act, which is to be introduced later today by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). We have therefore come to the agreement that we will interrupt the proceedings with respect to the budgetary debate and tomorrow will be a day for government business. The Bill which is to be introduced by my colleague will receive all three readings in the House. There will be one speaker on behalf of each Party.

It will be my intention then to call the Bill with respect to borrowing authority which was introduced on Friday by my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). I am hoping that we can make progress to second reading of that Bill tomorrow. If we are successful in reaching second reading, it will be my intention to call Bill C-32 in relation to amendments to the Fisheries Act.

As it now appears, Mr. Speaker, the budget debate will continue on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and conclude on Monday on next week. I expect that we will have the usual vote on Thursday night. We will wait to see what happens on Monday night. It is now my intention to continue to the conclusion of the budget debate.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 197 and 294.

[Text]

SPACE BASED NAVIGATIONAL SATELLITE SYSTEMS

Question No. 197—Mr. Stackhouse:

What is the government's current participation in developing space based navigational satellite systems?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence, Regional Industrial Expansion and Transport as follows:

Order Paper Questions

Canada through the Department of National Defence has been involved with the NAVSTAR Global Positioning System (GPS) since 1978. This is the NATO endorsed space based navigation system which is being developed and funded entirely by the U.S. military. Canada and nine other NATO nations provide personnel and funds for a NATO Project Office at Space Division in Los Angeles. To date, DND has expended $380,000 and provided two officers to the project office and total cost is not expected to exceed $980,000 when the present agreement terminates at the end of 1988.

When NAVSTAR GPS becmes fully operational in 1988 it will meet the majority of military navigation requirements. It also will be available to civil users. Offshore resource exploration, hydrographic and geophysical surveying, and maritime navigation are but a few areas where the system has great potential.

Canadian Marconi Company is currently being assisted via the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion's Defence Industry Productivity Program (DIPP) in the development of NAVSTAR/GPS receiver technology. The development program comprises three areas:

(1) the exploration and implementation of several areas of technology common to all types of receiver;

(2) the development of the market/product potential for low-cost, moderate performance receivers suitable for military and commercial transport aircrafts and ships;

(3) the development of the market/product potential of a highly accurate and versatile receiver suitable for geodetic, surveying and positioning applications.

This DIPP assisted development program started in 1981 and is anticipated to be completed in 1986. Expenditures to date are in the amount of $484,070. Total expenditures upon completion of contract will be approximately $3,075,000.

Transport Canada has through the issuance of a Canadian Airspace Systems Plan indicated that the present ground based navigational system will continue as the navigational guidance system for civil aviation aircraft flying in Canada until at least the year 2000.

Presently the International Civil Aviation Organization is addressing the issue of future navigation system including the option of a satellite based system in the early 2000s as part of a new committee FANS (Future Air Navigations Systems).

The Canadian Air Transportation Administration as a member of this committee heads the Canadian delegation.

Transport Canada is also involved in the following activities:

(i) participation in the U.S.-based consultative agency developing standards and techniques for the future NAVSTAR/Global Positioning System in the Differential Mode, which is of interest to special marine and offshore industry users,

(ii) evaluation, under contract, of differential NAVSTAR/GPS for Coast Guard missions such as buoy positioning and

(iii) technical supervision of DRIE-sponsored contract to Canadian Marconi Company for development of low cost civil air and marine NAVSTAR/GPS receiver.

TRIP TO EUROPE

Question No. 294—Mr. Boudria:

1. Did the Secretary of State for Canada take a recent trip to Europe?

2. Was a jet chartered to transport the Minister and/or his staff from Belgium to London (England) and, if so (a) for what reason was such an aircraft chartered instead of travelling by a regular carrier (b) what type of aircraft was involved (c) how many persons were on board and what were their names, citizenship and reason for being on the aircraft (d) what was the cost to the taxpayer for the charter?

Hon. Walter McLean (Secretary of State): 1. Yes.

2. No.

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 5043); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis (p. 5047).

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock p.m. the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) and completed his speech but had the floor for questions and answers. I recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a response.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, at the close of business at one o'clock I had been asked a question by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata). Not wanting to bring into question his whereabouts at this time, because I am sure he is doing what he does best, and that is seeking publicity, I would like to reply to him at that time.

The Hon. Member made the comment that I might be drenched in hypocrisy. As I ran along the Ottawa River I told myself that on that basis the Hon. Member for York South-Weston would require a frogman's suit to survive his daily hypocrisy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I do want that on the record for the Hon. Member to read when he returns to the House from the glare of the cameras which he enjoys so much and does so poorly at.

There was a valid question among all the nonsense that the Hon. Member gave the House. The Member suggested that we were attacking the senior citizens by putting a limit of 3 per cent on de-indexing. I would like to point out to the House that the annual Guaranteed Income Supplement is indexed fully as are veterans pensions. Therefore, there is absolutely no question that through the Budget the Government has done its very best to protect the people who cannot afford complete de-indexation.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, during his address before lunch the Hon. Member stated that it was not the wealthy of the country who would be pleased with the $.5 million capital gains tax exemption which in Ontario is equivalent to $135,000 freedom from taxes over the course of a lifetime. He suggested that it is the blue collar workers of the country who are supporting this exemption. Personally, I have rarely heard such nonsense. Does he have any shred of evidence to suggest that the introduction of capital gains tax in 1971 led to a flight of blue collar investors from the market?

Furthermore, is he prepared to stand up and repeat the assertion that the wealthy would not support the capital gains tax exemption?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not remember making the assertion that the wealthy would not support the capital gains tax exemption. However, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that the farmers in my riding and his, tourist operators in my riding and his, the blue collar workers in my riding and his, and those people who make those small investments to make this country strong would support this exemption because that is what they told me on the weekend. I am surprised that the Hon. Member did not return to his riding to find out that very fact. He should have been out there asking them.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. There has been much discussion about the lack of job creation funds in this Budget. Has the Hon. Member found from his experience that people are sick and tired of having 20-week job creation programs whereby they fall back on unemployment insurance and have to scramble up again? Are young people especially not looking for permanent and full-time jobs that can be created by private industry?

Mr. Lewis: I thank my colleague for that very thought-provoking question. There is absolutely no question that in his riding, my riding and the riding of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry), people are fed up with throwing money at job creation. They realize that all the money that has been thrown away by the Liberals has gone for nought and that the Liberal Government has created 13 per cent unemployment.

As the Hon. Member aptly points out, we are trying to create a climate in which small a big business will invest, innovate, take risks and do those things that it does so well. It is another step toward creating a climate in which we will employ people in long-term, meaningful jobs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou, for questions or comments.

Mr. Gagliano: This is question, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has been talking a lot about small business.

[English]

I agree with the Hon. Member that small business is creating the real jobs. However, if he believes in small business, why does the Budget not allow small business to invest in small business through a retirement savings plan? Why not allow small businesses to invest in that plan? Why does the Government limit their possibilities if it believes that small business creates jobs?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. I think it is valid to suggest that we have done something that previous Governments of the Party to which the Hon. Member belongs have failed to realize. Perhaps, as a result of the Hon. Member's contribution, there is a glimmer of hope in the Liberal Party that it is starting to understand small business. I compliment the Hon. Member for bringing that knowledge to the wilderness of that Party.

I like the Hon. Member's idea. Perhaps with his help we can bring forward some ideas for implementing a means by which such a provision would not be open to abuse.

I am reminded of some of the provisions of the Challenge '85 program which do not permit owners of limited companies to employ their children. That is something about which I have written to the Minister, saying that it should be broadened to allow such employment while being cognizant of the rules.

The Hon. Member makes a good point. It would be a question of how to ensure that the privilege is not abused.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the 1985 Wilson Budget shows that the same economic myths and regressive Conservative goals which prevailed when I first came to the House in 1979 were present in the abortive Crosbie Budget certainly prevail in the Budget we are debating today. The mukluks have been exchanged for the Bay Street boots, but when one looks beyond the PR and the pizzaz, Tory policies are still policies of restraint, increased taxes and high unemployment. The policies are the same in Ottawa as they are in British Columbia. I note the similarity to the policies in the United Kingdom which I visited recently, and the results of those policies are devastating.

There is no question that the new Government, and especially the new Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), are more slick and perhaps more slippery than they were in the Joe Clark days.

Mr. Malone: Order.

Ms. Mitchell: The new Prime Minister is a master of hypocrisy—

Mr. Malone: A point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I assume the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) rises on a point of order to remind the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) that she should refer to Members by position and not personal names. I am sure it is a slip because the Hon. Member is aware of the rules.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I delete the name of the former Prime Minister, but I am referring of course to the 1979 Conservative Government.

We know now that this particular Government, under the present leadership, may have a few more tricks up its sleeve and certainly has much more media awareness. I was about to say that I think the Prime Minister shows us that he is a master of manipulation and media hype and hypocrisy. For example, we know that his pretence to consult with people who were invited to the economic summit was actually just that.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, if I understood correctly, the Hon. Member just said that a Member of this House indulged in hypocrisy. I would like, to know whether that is what she said, and if so, I believe the Hon. Member is out of order.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course, the Hon. Member knows that it is not proper to refer to a specific Member in the House as being a "hypocrite". Possibly it has been allowed to be used in reference to a group of individuals, to a Party or to a Government, but I believe the Hon. Member knows that it cannot be used with regard to a specific Member.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, of course, I am referring to the characteristics of the Government. The participants at the Summit Conference, particularly the representatives of consumer groups, labour groups and women's organizations, unanimously wanted a "jobs first" priority. This was quite evident on television every day.

The Prime Minister pretended to listen very seriously, and I am sure those groups believed that their views would have some impact. However, the Budget reveals that it was his corporate friends to whom he was really listening. There are no funds for job creation provided in the Budget. The unemployed are completely ignored, as if they did not exist in this country. The Budget caters to the corporate sector with capital gain gifts, tax loopholes and a $2 billion bonanza for oil companies.

Middle income earners and the poor will bear the brunt of the increased sales tax, including taxes on health products and energy conservation products, as well as a nine-cent per gallon gas tax.

As the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pointed out in his statement today, if one adds the increased cost of taxes and the reduction on indexation in this Budget to the increases of some $500 that were implemented last fall, average families will pay $1,000 more this year. This is not only a burden upon families. It is also a burden upon small businesses, the very sector in which the Government professes to put all its faith for job creation. How can small businesses survive, expand and employ more people if consumer demand is down? With $1,000 less to spend, surely that will happen.

I challenge Tory Members in the House today to convince me and the women of Canada—and I hope they will do so in the question and comment period—that the Budget is not anti-women. Canadian women, who earn on average 60 per cent of men's wages, will pay $1,000 extra in taxes or reduced benefits. Increasing numbers of women are sole supporters of their children and are on very low incomes, if not already on welfare. There is no job creation targeted for women in the Budget. Indeed, training funds are being reduced. Women are faced with being displaced or phased out, either entirely or in part-time jobs, by technological change. This is the time when they need retraining opportunities, new job creation and alternative kinds of work. There are no funds allocated in the Budget to employment equity, the Government's own program which it introduced and in which it presumably believed. There is nothing to increase funds for the Human Rights Commission.

Cuts in public services, privatization which will go along with phasing out Crown corporations, and the contracting out of all these techniques, will have a proportionately greater impact on women because they are the last hired and the first fired and they are in the lowest paid clerical and service positions. They will be the ones who will not have jobs. They will be the ones who will be in part-time work. They are the ones about whom the Government does not care. It did not do anything about the prorated benefits for part-time workers. Of course, elderly women will continue in poverty because public pension reforms, which are so desperately needed, have been ignored.

As the Hon. Member for Vancouver East, I must say that we in British Columbia know from experience the devastating impact of a tough, deficit-reducing, Conservative restraint Budget. In British Columbia, experience shows that restraint has resulted in a chronic unemployment rate of 15 per cent. Skilled people have been unemployed for two or more years now. Also, it has resulted in chops in essential services such as educational, health and social services. Failures of small businesses have resulted rather than increases of new enterprises which the Government thinks will occur by some magic.

There is a lack of job creation and economic planning, particularly in the resource sectors, as is the case now. There are high costs as a result of increased violence, crime and social stress which go along with high unemployment and low incomes. The B.C. experience proves that Conservative economic policy, whether it is the Progressive Conservative Party federally or the Social Credit Party in British Columbia, simply does not work. Even Conservative business people, people who supported the Social Credit in British Columbia, are saying that the economy has been stultified, that we need change, and that this is not the way to go. The Fraser Institute is somewhat apologetic, and there is absolutely no evidence that the private sector, if left to do these things, will automatically create jobs when there is this kind of oppression in the economy. The federal Conservative Budget will add another layer of hardship on B.C. residents and on the residents of other provinces, particularly those in eastern Canada. There is no increase in job creation to help alleviate the high unemployment rate. Ordinary citizens will pay more in taxes.

No funds are budgeted for the ailing forestry and fishery industries, for housing or for municipal development. Even shipbuilding subsidies are being cut, which concerns me in my riding of Vancouver East. Revenues which should have been taxed from the wealthy are now lost because of the removal of the capital gains tax and other tax loopholes. The temporary minimum surtax is a laugh. We wanted a real, effective 20 per cent minimum tax. This is what the Prime Minister promised and has neglected to enforce.

Public services will also be cut back federally and Crown corporations will be privatized. In British Columbia we know that this will mean a lack of services, inadequate services, a loss of jobs and reduced social conditions with increased costs of health, educational and social services. A $2 billion cut in transfer payments, which one sees if one reads carefully the small print in the Budget, is a very, very serious concern. I hope very much that there will be a mass move to ensure that this does not happen. It will definitely worsen the situation in my province. The Budget is bad news for Canada generally and it is double bad news for British Columbia.

I would like to refer to the particular impact of this Budget on areas of social policy. What will the Conservatives do now in the area of health and social services to improve the general well-being of Canadians, especially the well-being of poor Canadians and of women? As I have said and will keep on saying, the lack of new funds for job creation is really difficult to believe. It condemns many thousands of Canadians to chronic unemployment, to the insecurity, stress and poverty of years ahead, not to mention the high cost of maintaining people on social programs and unemployment.

It is not only the lack of money which concerns us. Of course money is the basic cause, but it is the absolute dwindling of self-confidence which occurs when persons go day after day lookind for work, submitting résumés, feeling that they are losing their skills and their employability, feeling that they cannot remain competitive, and feeling worthless and angry. We know that when there is lots of anger, it leads to violence. In society today we have an increase in family violence and abuse of children, which I am sure is not unrelated to high unemployment. What is more, there is the lack of opportunity for a whole generation of young people.

All of us in the House say this day after day, but I hope we really feel it. It is not only the lack of jobs, it is the lack of opportunity for the future which is really so depressing. On top of that of course, there are the cuts which have occurred in education, training a work-related experiences. Again the federal Government is neglecting to increase shared funding in the Budget for these areas.

I think it is immoral of this Government to have turned its back on the unemployed, and it was hypocritical of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who had the gall to say: "This Budget is about jobs".

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member just made the same mistake she made a while ago. She referred to a Member by name and accused him of hypocrisy.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) did not mean to imply that the Minister himself was a hypocrite but rather was alluding to the Government as she did before.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speakr, I quoted the Finance Minister as saying: "This Budget is about jobs". It is a direct quote of the Finance Minister. If that statement is not hypocrisy, I do not know what is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to understand that the Hon. Member for Vancouver East is accusing a specific Member of being a hypocrite? If that is so, the Hon. Member would know, with her experience in the House, that that cannot be done.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite obvious that what I am saying is that this is a hypocritical Budget and that the policies of the Government are completely hypocritical, as is that statement. I would like to say also that he and his colleague—

• (1530)

Mrs. Mailly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I am not satisfied with the answer of the Hon. Member. She can play with words, but the fact is that she indulged in a personal attack on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). She used a word which is not acceptable in the House and I would ask her to make a proper apology.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is satisfied with the explanation given by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). The Hon. Member may continue.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, it seems that Members are touchy when there are direct quotes. The quote I read is that this Budget is about jobs. I will leave it to the Hon. Member to interpret that in her own conscience.

In his Budget, the Minister of Finance went on to say that they are going to cut 15,000 jobs in the public service. A lot more jobs will be cut because of privatization and doing away with Crown corporations. That is quite obvious.

A similar kind of misleading of the public in budget policies is evident in the statement by the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who said that their priority is to be Canadians with the greatest need. I challenge the Conservative Members to prove this. I assume those Canadians with the greatest need are the low-income Canadians. However, they are the hardest hit by this Budget. Not only are they being whacked with $1,000 in extra taxes, but their family benefits will be affected as well. There is a slight, token increase in the child tax credit for the lowest-income people, but that is about one-tenth of the actual extra cost they will be forced to pay with the extra taxes.

As my colleagues have said, and others will elaborate, the limit on the indexation of Old Age Security may not sound much to seniors right now, but if you look at the cumulative effect, it is a very serious and unfair policy. I am told by the social policy reform group that by 1987 this will mean a cumulative loss of about $1,577 for a single pensioner. By 1990, they will lose $537 in one year. That is what this reduction of indexation of old age pensions means.

The indexation on family allowance is also being limited. This is contrary to what the Minister of National Health and Welfare said twice in the House today. It is an erosion of universality. The Liberals tried this trick. They kept eroding family allowances and other social benefits by not indexing them fully. As a result, the real value of those benefits has gone down over the years. Therefore, it is a real erosion of univerality in both cases.

The child tax exemption for older children, those who are going on to post-secondary education, will also be restricted. For low-income families, those earning under $22,000, there is a slight increase in the child tax credit, but far less than we recommended in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. We spent weeks talking to witnesses and doing other work among ourselves. Surely even the Conservative Members will admit that that was a wasted effort. They did not pay any attention to it. This year an extra $70 will be given in the child tax credit. However, this will be taken away because of the increase in the sales tax. Most witnesses who appeared before us in committee advocated removal of the regressive child tax exemption. Conservative Members seem to be in favour of this. I am sure my colleague, the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) will agree that most of the witnesses were in favour of this. There was nothing in the report that advocated the kind of cut-back that comes out in this Budget.

According to the social policy reform group, the changes in this family benefit package that are evident in this Budget mean a loss of $400 million from the child benefit package. That $400 million is being taken away from Canada's children. Therefore, you cannot say the children are not victims of government cuts. By 1990, all families will be net losers under the child benefit package.

I want to concentrate my remaining time on what this Budget means or does not mean for Canadian women. Will it take them a step closer to equality in the workplace? Cutting 15,000 public service jobs will have a disproportionate impact on women, as will selling off Crown corporations and moves towards privatization. Women will largely be the victims. They will be left unprotected, with non-unionized part-time jobs with inadequate benefits. We only have to look at what Air Canada is doing in trying to promote unlimited part-time jobs to see that this is the way things will go in Canada. Our Government should not be encouraging that.

The Government has taken no steps to require prorated benefits for part-time workers, most of whom are women. There should have been amendments to the Canada Pension Plan as well as for private pensions. Although they are minimal, we certainly support the changes that are suggested, as far as they go, for public servants. The Government made no reference to employment equity programs. As I said earlier, the Canadian Human Rights Commission must have more money to enforce the employment equity provisions.

I could go on. I will conclude by saying that the cuts in transfer payments will not only be cuts to the provinces. They are basic cuts to new programs, including child care which desperately needs funding. The Prime Minister said the problem is urgent. As will, it means cuts to health care; really to a new kind of health care, community health care, which in the Throne Speech this Government said it was committed to. In its election promises, it even put a figure of $150 million on reforming the health system, with more emphasis on community health prevention.

I wish I had time to outline the budget proposals which the New Democratic Party developed after weeks of discussion and visits to over 24 centre across Canada. Unlike the Liberals, who offered no alternatives, and who have a despicable record, we developed a jobs first proposal. We have a jobs first proposal with many recommendations that are practical. We show how they can be paid for. We do not believe that the deficit is the first priority. People must be the first priority. It means that job strategy must be the first priority of this Government. It means federal leadership, public leadership. In the short-term, funds are required to create meaningful community jobs so that people can be fulfilled, use their skills and have a secure future. Then our country would truly be more productive.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, as a woman in this Government I feel personally offended by the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). We, the women in this Government, have worked very hard to represent our sisters across Canada. This Budget will be helpful to them. Her remarks were very offensive. It will be helpful because up until now women have had to live with temporary jobs created by emergency measures. Those jobs, if they were lucky, lasted about 20 weeks. They were then back on welfare. We want to stop this vicious circle. This is why this Budget has been shaped in this way. We want jobs to be created by the small business sector in our communities, the most vital job creation sector in our country.

In my riding of Gatineau, which is in the Outaouais, the small business sector is the most dynamic sector in that part of Quebec. Like the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), this past weekend I was in my riding. I spoke to small business-people, many of whom are women who have managed to create small businesses in the area. They are very pleased with this Budget because at last they will be able to create permanent jobs. They were sick and tired of these temporary job-creation programs.

I would also like to remind the Hon. Member for Vancouver East of what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said in Question Period today, that 89,000 jobs were created in April, 60 per cent of which were for women. That is a fact as well. I would also like to remind her that the training allowance in the Budget of $900 million for 1986-87, the same as it is in this year's Budget, will give better allowances for women who go on training. Up until now allowances were not sufficient for women because they have extra expenses that men who have women at home looking after the children do not have. That too will be an improvement of the women's lot.

I would also like to remind her that at the request of the labour sector, which she purports to represent, we will now allow a deduction for contribution to the——Solidarity Fund of Quebec.

[English]

That will go a long way toward restoring jobs for women who are being laid off in small industries and in the forestry sector in the Outaouais and Abitibi. That is a very positive thing for the women of Canada.

I would also like to remind the Hon. Member that there will be access for homemakers to the pension plan after discussions are terminated with the provinces. That is something that must happen before it can be put in the Budget. Quebec has signalled that it is interested in finding a formula so that women who stay at home because they want to bring up their families at home will be able to.

I hope that women will have the right to choose the way of life they want. They do not have to listen to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East, living only the way she thinks is the right way for women to live. That is the other thing that offends me. She talks about taking away the total deduction for couples when the woman stays at home. She is dictating to the women of Canada the lifestyle that they should lead, and I object to that. I think women will be equal the day they can decide how best they want to live without being punished for the choices they make.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

[English]

Would the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) care to make a few comments?

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, I have given the floor to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say to the Hon. Member opposite that I would hope that she would be an advocate for women, and I think from some of the things she was saying that she possibly is an advocate for women. I would hope that she would not be offended by some of us believing very strongly in and working very hard at being advocates as well, as that is our job.

I wish I could ask the Hon. Member some of the questions she asked me. Of course we do not want 20-week jobs. No one has ever suggested that we want 20-week jobs. I have certainly never said that. I want long-term jobs but I do not think that the only way to get long-term jobs is through some magic worked by the private sector and small businesses while small businesses themselves are saying that they simply do not have the kind of consumer demand to do so. I do not really see what she is getting at.

I think it will be great if many more jobs are created by small business. We would all like that. We need millions of jobs in this country. However, that will not happen overnight, as the Minister has said and I am taking into account the first-hand experience we have had in British Columbia. As well, I just returned from Britain. The job situation over there is so dreadful that Conservative Members are splitting from the Margaret Thatcher position. I really do not have any great confidence that this approach will work.

We are all for jobs and we are all for small business. I hope, though, that as an advocate for women and as an advocate for small business, the Hon. Member will be doing something very dramatic to persuade the Government to make it possible for women in business to have more access to credit. It is disgusting that nothing has been done about that.

The Hon. Member raised the matter of the training allowances. Women's organizations and others have been fighting for years to have more adequate provisions for women. I congratulate the Government for putting this in place. It is doing a better job in some areas than the Liberal Government did. However, there is not enough. What is the point of having some improvement in benefits if the women cannot get into those training programs? I have heard from women right across the country who indicate that they cannot get into non-traditional jobs. They are being phased out of traditional jobs in many instances and cannot get into training programs or pre-employment programs that will help give them equal access to non-traditional jobs, and that is a fact. If the Hon. Member could figure out some way to help that situation, more power to her.

Regarding the question of choice, I really did not understand what the Hon. Member was saying when she accused me of trying to restrict the choices of women. That is the last thing I would ever do. I believe in complete freedom of choice; not only in freedom of choice, but in the opportunities that allow women to have a choice. I believe women should have enough income that they can choose to remain at home or go into the workforce if that is their choice. I also believe, and I hope she does as well, in freedom of choice as far as reproductive rights are concerned. That is something on which the Government has taken no position. I very much fear that if it did take a position it would be a negative one.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I would not expect to do as the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) asked us to do earlier, that is to persuade her of something. She knows as do I that we begin with fundamentally different philosophies and ideologies. Her view is that the Government ought to be doing for the people everything that she can imagine needs to be done. The fact of the matter is that in her request for more jobs, reasonable as it is, she fails to recognize that the approach that she is advocating is precisely the approach utilized by the Liberals for most of the last 15 or 16 years. That is an approach of extending the debt and presuming that the Government, through some make-work program, will put in place jobs that are real. That approach has proven to be a dismal failure.

The fact is that in the approach that has been taken since September, 1984, there has been to date 210,000 jobs created, 89,000 of them since April and 60 per cent of which were for women. That is in considerable contrast to what was put forth by Opposition Parties when they indicated that the November 28 statement would cost 50,000 jobs.

What we must recognize fundamentally is that there is a significant and basic philosophical difference in the approaches to creating jobs. Surely the Hon. Member should find no objection to putting in place a system that creates permanent jobs, a system that allows the thrill of the entrepreneurial mentality to go forward and be productive, a system that allows business to hire people who will remain permanently hired as opposed to having the Government create jobs by having people paint churches, fix fences and clean up roadsides.

When the Hon. Member indicates that the Minister is hypocritical because he had said that the Budget was about jobs, jobs, jobs and then cuts Crown corporations, which she then relates to hypocrisy, she is basically supporting the notion that the debt should continue. Where does she find within her reflection on this matter that it is productive for Canada to continue having one out of three tax dollars doing nothing more than paying for the interest on the accumulated debt? If the debt were gone, the Government could do 30 per cent more for all the social services of Canada. We could have 30 per cent more for hospitals, airports and virtually everything for which the Government spends money.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) on a short answer.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what were his specific questions, but I will comment on his comments.

I disagree with the Member that what we are proposing is the same as the Liberals. I agree with the Member that the major focus on job creation, with some exceptions, was on short-term, make-work projects which recycled people on and off unemployment insurance benefits. While those projects were not entirely a waste of money, they were not productive as far as creating something new was concerned. Often, people felt abused by that system.

In our report, Canada Unlimited, we made 70 recommendations to create meaningful and productive work. The report also places a great emphasis on enterprises, not only on small business, which we agree certainly generates jobs, but also on co-operative endeavours. The report recommended more start-up funds, low interest loans and so on to help start workers' co-operatives. That is something to which I hope the Government would give more emphasis. One of the Liberal programs which was fairly good in that endeavour was LEAP. That was a three-year program which helped people to develop skills as well as to set up non-profit enterprises.

I cannot agree with the assumption in the question the Hon. Member asked me about the national debt. Of course, we do not want things to continue as they are. Our Party wants, as much as the Government, to bring down the national debt. But, it must be done in a sensible manner in order that people will not be hurt. It cannot be done in the way in which it was done in British Columbia. For heaven's sake, the Hon. Member should visit British Columbia to see what has been done to the people there. That system has abused people, created hardships and added to unemployment rolls, social assistance rolls and health costs. It has destroyed families. We should do it in a manner which will give some public leadership and encourage the private sector to do as much as possible.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in this debate. I have enjoyed all the comments which have been made by colleagues to date.

At the present time the spending of the federal Government accounts for roughly 67 per cent of the total economic activity in New Brunswick, my province. Most of the expenditures are in the form of payments to the provincial Government and to individuals. The level of dependency on federal expenditures in New Brunswick is shared proportionately by all Atlantic Provinces. That dependency is the result of federal policies which have been practised over the last 20 years, and it leaves the Province of New Brunswick and other Atlantic Provinces in a fragile and tragic position.

I would like to emphasize that the industrial policies which were practised by the former administration did much more to maintain incomes and employment in other parts of Canada than they did in New Brunswick and other Atlantic Provinces. Federal subsidies to de Havilland and Canadair alone have been greatly in excess of the sums paid for any industrial development program in the Atlantic Provinces since World War II. The rate of unemployment in New Brunswick is a stain on the conscience of the nation. The level of wages is two-thirds of the national average and the resource-based economy is extremely vulnerable to international and national cyclical downturns.

The basic characteristics of New Brunswick and the Atlantic econoy in the mid-1980s are: resource-based industries; a good record in job creation out-stripped by more people looking for work, resulting in higher unemployment than nationally; lower personal incomes, especially earned incomes; higher levels of federal transfer payments to individuals, with unemployment benefits assuming increasing importance; lower levels of private investment; higher levels of government spending and employment; higher levels of federal transfers to other Governments, and declining levels of trageted regional development spending, to a point where they are a small fraction of increased unemployment insurance transfers.

In summary, at the present time the economies of New Brunswick and other Atlantic Provinces are much too dependent on the flow of federal transfer payments. Strong new policies to expand the industrial base of New Brunswick and other Atlantic Provinces will bring great benefits to both the regional economy and the economy of Canada as a whole. To achieve that goal is the challenge that faces our Government. The severe economic problems that face our nation do not make it easy to meet that challenge.

For a moment, I would like to look at the expenditures in New Brunswick to see if they could not be re-allocated to generate more economic growth and help put in place a badly needed private sector economy.

DREE expenditures in 1971 dollars declined from $145 million in 1972 to $45 million in 1982. I suggest that other evidence of a reduced commitment toward the importance of regional development can be seen with the relative proportions of spending in other regional development programs over the past decade.

During the past decade, the federal Government spent $412 million in New Brunswick for projects associated with regional development. That is roughly equal to the $440 million paid to Canadair in two years. Those pay-outs are insignificant compared with the $1.4 billion which was written off at Canadair by the Canadian taxpayers.

Regional development expenditures have been reducing in Atlantic Canada as unemployment expenditures have been increasing. In 1972, DREE expenditures were 67 per cent of unemployment insurance payments. By 1982, the reduced DREE expenditures were 10 per cent of unemployment insurance payments.

The complexion of federal expenditures in New Brunswick and other Atlantic Provinces has been more like foreign aid and mere spending than economic assistance and investment. The balance is wrong. We must change the balance to foster more economic development.

Private sector stimulation will be necessary if our smaller private sector is to be the engine of economic growth. Enhanced and improved regional development programs that provide long-term job opportunities for Atlantic Canadians are essential if we wish to reduce dependence on the federal Treasury and increase the long-term economic viability of our region.

Federal policies to promote regional economic development should be concerned primarily with expanding the industrial base of the region. Economic problems of the region cannot permanently be solved by transfer payments or by a dependence on high expenditures by the federal Government.

If Atlantic Canada is going to compete, we must ensure that our incentives are adequate. Our private sector is underdeveloped and so are the capital markets. If Atlantic Canadian industries are going to be established, grow and prosper, we must create a climate that is attractive to industry. The federal Government's policy of reducing interest rates is a major step in that direction.

Proposals to develop freer trade are attractive to Atlantic Canadians whose products seek expanding United States markets. Programs to improve productivity are another major step in that direction.

I would like to mention some of the things which the Government has done recently to move in the direction of which I have been speaking.

Federal support for the establishment and expansion of Process Technology Ltd., in my constituency, is a major step in the diversification of the economy, with special emphasis on non-resource-based manufacturing. Process Technology embodies new technologies and is the flagship of the high technology industry in the Province of New Brunswick.

• (1600)

The province possesses a number of strengths which can be the basis for growth opportunities in the development of products and services embodying new technologies. These include the New Brunswick Research and Productivity Council which has attracted worldwide attention for its work in metallurgy; a well established engineering school at the University of New Brunswick, which offers the only Ph. D. in North America in computer assisted design and manufacturing; and excellent schools of computer science and world class expertise in telecommunications technology. The use of CAD/

CAM techniques, being assisted by the province's manufacturing technology centre, has the potential to greatly improve the competitive position of small companies. My Government has just given the New Brunswick Research and Productivity Council a $4.2 million grant for that purpose.

It is important to improve the over-all productivity and competitive position of New Brunswick's industries. The leading industry in New Brunswick which provides the largest number of jobs is the forest industry. The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) has just announced a $35 million contribution to the forestry complex being located in Fredericton which will open a unique window on research for the entire forest industry in the region. This will greatly enhance the transfer of new technology to industry and expand the research and development component for this vital industry.

The availability of unskilled and semi-skilled labour provides a challenge for Government to provide needed facilities now in order to stimulate employment now. The announcement by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) of the commence of construction this year of "J" Division Headquarters of the RCMP in Fredericton—a $20 million project—is a step in this direction.

The need to increase added value in New Brunswick products by increasing the level of processing the New Brunswick resources is another important strategy and a worthy strategic objective. The announcement by my Government of its $42 million participation in the development of the REPAP paper mill project on the Miramichi, which will produce a high grade of lightweight coated paper to be sold largely in the United States, is an example of putting your money where your mouth is. The retention of the military base on the Miramichi is another objective achieved by this Government.

Another major industry in New Brunswick, which at the moment is underdeveloped, is tourism. The Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) in this Government has recently implemented a federal-provincial program involving $22 million federal dollars and $10 million provincial for this very purpose. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) has signed a joint agreement with his New Brunswick counterpart to improve and increase purchasing in that province. Jobs are the number one priority of this Government and the $60 million development of the Canadian Forces Base at Gagetown already announced by my Government will help provide them.

The new course of action for 1985-1986 commits Canada and New Brunswick to pursuing measures undertaken in existing subsidiary agreements and to undertake new joint measures in support of economic development in New Brunswick. Two of these, an ERDA subsidiary agreement for industrial development and a subsidiary agreement for industrial innovation and technology development, are expected to be signed in the near future. Premier Hatfield and Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) also agreed to assess where supplemental measures may be required for certain regions of New Brunswick. Current plans indicate that both Governments will expend an estimated $93 million in total in New Brunswick under existing agreements during 1985-1986.

It is crucially important to New Brunswick, which sells more to New England than it does to other eastern Canadian provinces, that Canada's trade policy emphasize the development and maintenance of positive trade relations with the United States with the aim of reducing obstacles to increased trade flows.

There are other challenges which face us. Because of its dispersed population and heavy dependence on exports, and to a lesser extent, central Canadians markets, the quality and costs of transportation services are crucial to New Brunswick's economic development. As just one example, an assessment for Transport Canada indicated that New Brunswick would be the most adversely affected of the four Atlantic Provinces by the removal of freight rate subsidies now provided under the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act. Recent announcements concerning freight rate subsidies by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), who understands our problems, the reintroduction of the Atlantic Limited rail passenger train service and the continuation of the dayliner between Fredericton and Saint John, indicate that we have a Government which will listen and respond to our needs. It gives us the confidence that our problems will be addressed.

The upgrading of highways in the northern and eastern regions of the province to an all-weather standard has been a major federal priority. This work is now nearing completion and has succeeded in reducing the cost of moving resource exports to markets and improving the linkages between the northern regions and the urban centres of the south.

It may now be appropriate to consider how transportation measures can be used to improve the linkages between the complementary business functions distributed among the major urban centres; Saint John, manufacturing and port; Moncton, distribution and business services; and Fredericton, public administration, education and research. The upgrading, and in some cases, realignment of the highway link between the three centres represents one such approach.

There may also be opportunities now with the new federal airline deregulation policy to achieve improved air service between the major New Brunswick centres and between New Brunswick urban centres and other Maritime cities. As well, a third level air carrier service, for example, if established between New Brunswick centres, might make feasible improved service to the important New England market. Potentially, such improved air service could reduce the cost of doing business and greatly increase the attractiveness of a New Brunswick location for secondary manufacturing and services industry.

Another important issue in the transportation area relates to the ability of the port of Saint John to undertake the investment required for it to maintain its competitive position. The port is still heavily in debt from the expansion program undertaken in the 1970s and is not currently in a position to finance new investments. The existing debt load has prevented the port from obtaining local port commission status, as the new federal policy requires that a port demonstrate financial self-sufficiency in order to be eligible. However, the port urgently requires new facilities such as a roll-on-roll-off service, to improve its competitive position. Such a facility would benefit New Brunswick exporters through reduction in handling costs and through an increase in the availability and quality of shipping services.

The resource based economies of the northern counties of New Brunswick have helped close the gap in employment income per capita with the provincial average which was made possible in part by federal-provincial programs.

Another factor behind the growth in the economies of the Madawaska, Gloucester and Kent Counties, has been the emergence of small manufacturing firms established by local entrepreneurs and selling primarily on regional and national markets. This underscores the importance of a small business incentive program. It also underlines the key thrust of this budget. The budget stimulates the small business sector, which is the engine of jobs, by creating more potential pools of capital, more generous research and development incentives and an attractive capital gains tax exemption. With a realistic and balanced medium-term strategy, the Minister now controls the deficit without threatening economic recovery, social programs or job-creation, while ensuring significant deficit reductions later.

The federal Government has been acting in a spirit of national conciliation and co-operation throughout its short term in office. It has attempted to put its house in order, to create a climate that is attractive to industry. It has also attempted to increase its ability to help regions of the country which suffer from disparities.

I reject the claim of Hon. Members of the Opposition who speak of sneaky and dishonest tax increases. Nothing could be sneakier than crippling the government's ability to deliver necessary services by strangling it in its own debt. We have had enough of grandiose announcements and constant shifts in direction which have created major problems with investor and consumer confidence over the past few years. This budget points out the direction rather than pretends we can do everything in one fell swoop. The corollary to that, the budget has planned the gradual phase-out of many loopholes in the taxation system and in programs. After all, these were legitimate deductions to which persons were properly entitled and they are entitled the reasonable notice of their discontinuance. That is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is giving.

Significantly, major issues involving social policy are not decided unilaterally or arbitrarily by the federal Government because they involve the provinces. Our Government is under no illusion that it is going to be easy to get us out of the mess the previous Government put us into. But this Budget does point in a new direction; it is a break with the past and a serious effort to maximize the delivery of quality service at the lowest possible cost.

Some of our opponents refer to the Budget as gutless. I reject that allegation. By putting its credibility on the line, by saying it trusts the private sector to make wise decisions, by making no attempt to hide its direction, the Government has indicated it will stand or fall by what it believes in. This is an example of political courage which is so rare that some of our opponents appear unable to recognize it for what it is.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, to listen to the speech of my friend from New Brunswick, the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie), you would think that all is well in Atlantic Canada. But I do not think that is the case.

First I would like to address the issue which has been on the minds of Canadians since Thursday, and that issue is jobs. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said this Budget was about jobs. Well, I say to you that this Budget is not at all about jobs in Atlantic Canada, and I do not think it is about jobs in Canada as a whole. Fewer dollars will be spent, as I read this Budget, on training and job creation. So how can the Government claim that the priority goal is jobs for Canadians? Where are all those jobs we were told about by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance? As I say, I have not seen them in the Budget plans.

There is a plan, of course, to free up the entrepreneurial spirit, and we on this side, and I think all Members of the House, agree that there is an engine of growth there, but we have to consider those areas of the country where it is very difficult to get the entrepreneurial spirit in gear and where it will take some time to do so.

Therefore, what about the immediate job crisis we have on our hands? The Minister is taking quite a gamble by leaving everything up to the private sector, and hopefully it will work in the long term, over the next eight or ten years, but there are 1.5 million Canadians who are out of work today and that has to be addressed.

I do not see how those people who were left out of the Budget can be very excited about the investment incentives. In fact, I think they are sorely disappointed. The Budget leaves those Canadians out in the cold. The entrepreneurial spirit proposed in this Budget certainly will achieve some praise from some corners of this country and economy, and I hope it does. But I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, that praise is not going to be very great in Atlantic Canada, especially from those poor people on unemployment insurance whose benefits are running out and who will be unable to get jobs when that happens. These people have to look forward to going on the welfare roles. So this Budget is definitely not about jobs.

I can assure all Hon. Members that this Budget promises to aggravate the economic problems of my province, Prince Edward Island, and the rest of Atlantic Canada. The Budget clearly demonstrates the lack of understanding of Atlantic Canada which this Government suffers from. It is a region hampered by unemployment, where jobs are seasonal, and where the private sector is not the dominant force in the economy. This Budget baffles Atlantic Canada. They are asking me where the jobs will come from and it is obvious that the Minister does not have the answer, so the Budget is bitter medicine for those people in that part of the country.

The riding I represent, Egmont, is much like other areas of Atlantic Canada. It relies heavily on transfer payments from the federal Government. Those payments are the largest single source of revenue for Prince Edward Island, and now the Minister of Finance has shown to Canadians that job creation is not a priority goal with this Government. The Minister delivered another blow to my province with this holdback of $2 billion in transfer payments over the next five years. Is that fair to the have-not provinces of this country? It means that essential medical services will be curtailed and in some cases eliminated, and dollars for post secondary education will shrink. Atlantic Canadians, especially those in Prince Edward Island, will have to dig pretty deep for this deficit-slashing Budget.

We have heard for the last three months the cliché that the Budget would be tough but fair, so let us look at the fairness of this Budget. First, the average family loses the federal tax reduction of $50. The child tax credit will be lowered. Family allowance cheques will shrink. On top of that, the average family gets hit with taxes on items like pet food, soft drinks, candy and band-aids, all of which are essential to the ordinary and poor Canadian.

Of course, the financial squeeze gets even tougher as we look at other areas where the Government is going to increase taxes, especially the gasoline tax. I happen to live in an area with three main industries: agriculture, the fishery and tourism. For Atlantic Canada as a whole you can add the forestry and mining sectors. These sectors are all heavy users of energy, and when you hit them with that kind of a tax it has to be extremely regressive. Therefore these excessive taxes will pinch the average wage earner, Canadians who scrape from one pay cheque to another. The Minister wants them to spend their savings and they will, but not on investments to stimulate the economy. No, they will cash in their savings to survive, to save their families from poverty. So it is not the families earning $50,000 and more who are going to be hurt. The families who can least afford it, the ones earning $20,000 or $25,000, or even up to $30,000, are going to pay for this Budget.

As I read through the Budget papers, another important concern for Prince Edward Island was totally lacking. There was no mention whatsoever of an energy agreement between the Province of Prince Edward Island and the Government of Canada. The Premier in his 1982 election campaign announced with great fanfare that we were going to have a 20 per cent reduction in energy rates. That was three years ago and what has happened since? There has been not only no reduction, but in fact a 30 per cent increase.

The Prime Minister, during the election campaign, promised to rectify that situation for Prince Edward Island. He recognized, as we all do, that energy rates were too high and he was going to quickly reduce them whenever he got the reins of power. Conservative members were in Halifax during the election campaign and they also said that they were going to find a solution to the energy situation in Prince Edward Island. The Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan), who is from Prince Edward Island, said that when they got power we would have a one-shot subsidy. But nothing has happened; in fact it has gone the other way. How long can Prince Edward Islanders continue to shell out to cover their astronomical power bills? It is taking everything they have to turn on the light switch and heat their homes. I can see where the Government is fattening its coffers by proposing a 10 per cent tax on things such as wood stoves, insulation, wind generators and solar panels, all equipment used for alternate energy sources. At the same time we are trying to get these people in the hard-hit regions off high cost non-renewable energy resources and onto renewable energy resources. All the incentive is directed toward western Canada, and particularly the Province of Alberta.

The Maritime provinces are the major producers of potatoes in Canada. Forty-five per cent of Canadian potatoes are harvested in Atlantic Canada. However, Maritime farmers are no longer able to boast about this prize crop because when the statement of the Minister of Finance was introduced in November they were hit with all kinds of fees. On top of that there will be a 2 cent a litre increase on fuel just at the time when farmers are harvesting their crops. That is another sector which is hopelessly going into the hole. The farmers of the country were looking for some relief from interest on loans. Instead another $50 million of farm subsidies was cut from the Budget for next year and every year thereafter, in addition to the cuts which were made in November. It is very difficult for farmers to put up with these uncertainties. They already have to put up with the uncertainties of prices, weather, and escalating energy costs.

Another important group of people living on Prince Edward Island is the senior citizens. Prince Edward Island has the highest per capita rate of senior citizens in Canada. Due to the de-indexing of Old Age Security payments their cheques will not stretch as far next year or in the following years. They will be cut by 3 per cent every year. Many seniors in the country are already living in poverty. Why did the Government take a swipe at the elderly, most of whom are women, who rely solely upon Old Age Security cheques to buy groceries and pay the rent? Three per cent means an awful lot to these people. Three per cent puts food on their tables. Senior citizens will have fewer dollars to spend on consumer goods. That, coupled with the absence of a significant job creation program, will swell the unemployment and welfare rolls. These people merely get by and do not have extra cash to spend. How will that help small businesses, which rely on consumer spending, to create jobs?

A family business which was incorporated 125 years ago went into receivership a week and one-half ago. Approximately 95 to 125 employees will be unemployed. That is the kind of business that we need in Atlantic Canada to create jobs. It is all tied to consumer spending. This Budget has not addressed that situation. In fact, it is going the opposite way. Being faced with even more cuts, it will be very difficult for any company to take over R. T. Holman's and make it work. We desperately need to put Canadians back to work. This Budget is definitely not designed to do that.

Let us consider the fishery. During the election campaign we heard an awful lot about the fishery. We heard of all the things the Government was going to do for fishermen. It almost sounded like Orwell's book of fiction entitled 1984 in which he predicted what society would be like in 1984. The Tories also had a great book of fiction about the fishery. The number one author of that book was the present Prime Minister who had a riding in Atlantic Canada at that time. He was then showing some concern for Atlantic Canada. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) was the co-author of that book.

After the Prime Minister got elected and formed the Government he forgot what Atlantic Canada was all about. The proof of this was in the November 8, 1984 economic statement. In this anti-Robin Hood, take from the poor and give to the rich Budget, the nasty sheriff of Nottingham Forest, the Minister of Finance, robbed one of Canada's poorest industries, the fishing industry, of some $40 million in November. On top of that he has robbed them of $25 million for next year.

Since the Government has taken office we have seen a hefty increase in the staff of the Prime Minister's office. There has been an increase in the staff of Minister's offices. There are 80,000 plus people employed in Ministers' offices. The only reason I can see for this is to find new and better ways to take money from the poor. That is exactly what they have been doing. They have been taking money away from fishermen and farmers. The "new and better" that was talked about during the election campaign was a new way for the poor and middle-class to become poorer and a better way for the rich to become richer.

I feel a bit sorry for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Recently he came to the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and asked all members of the committee to support him in his attempt to get far more money for small craft harbours. I have proposed on several occasions that we should have no less than $150 million for small craft harbours in Canada. I think every Member of Parliament agrees that there is not enough money in the Budget for small craft harbours. Even Members of Parliament from Ontario and Quebec have come before the committee asking for more money. Last week we had $54 million but on Thursday night we discovered that we have only $25 million left in the global budget of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. This is crazy, Mr. Speaker. It is penny wise and dollar foolish. Our wharves are collapsing before the Government's eyes for need of maintenance. If the maintenance is not done this year it will cost five times as much next year. We have severe ice problems in Altantic Canada and there is a lot of destruction during the winter due to storms. If the necessary repairs are not made we could lose a total wharf. Instead of costing $100,000 to do the repairs now, it will cost the Government $1 million in the future.

This is an area in which the Government could look to create jobs. That would provide the infrastructure to expand the fishing and agricultural industries. Unless something is done to provide this infrastructure and keep it in place jobs will be lost. Fishermen can no longer afford to take part in the industry in which they have participated for many years.

I do not know where the Minister will make the cuts in the Budget. He tried in November. It was announced that Ste Anne de Bellevue would be closed and they had to retract that. It was announced that fisheries development programs would be cut in Quebec, Labrador, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. They had to backtrack on that and will have to backtrack on this too.

On behalf of the fishermen of this country whom I am trying to represent, I ask the Government to take a more sensible approach to the fishery so that it can become more efficient and create the jobs that are necessary. I hope the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) will heed my words and consider that sector as one which will generate jobs.

The Budget will have a disastrous effect on tourism throughout the country, particularly in my province where it is the third main industry. The majority of tourists from the United States are blue collar workers. They too have budget restrictions, and higher transportation costs will prevent them from staying in Canada longer. That, coupled with the increased ferry rates that were implemented in November, the increased national parks fees as well as other increased costs make it a sad day for Atlantic Canada.

The President of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, Bob Stuart, said in a speech that the impact of the increased investment and expenditure cuts of 10 per cent will mean one per cent growth in central Canada and western Canada and it will mean a minus 6 per cent growth in Atlantic Canada where the private sector makes up just 20 percent of the economy and the public sector accounts for 80 per cent. This is compared to the West where it is 55 per cent in the private sector and 45 per cent for the public sector.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member. I heard him say specifically that farmers in Prince Edward Island are no longer able to boost about their potato crop. I should point out to the House that the Minister of State for Tourism who is the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), the Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns) and the Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) consistently boast about the potato crops on Prince Edward Island. The Member represents Prince Edward Island and I think it is shameful that he is not boasting about the potato crops there. I hope that his constituents will bring him up short for that.

The Hon. Member has been a member of the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government for several years. He knows that his Party refused to introduce legislation recognizing that the family farm is the pension fund of the farmer. Consistently the Liberal Party taxed capital gains on the sale of the family farm. The Conservative Party has given the farmers of this country that exemption on capital gains. It is something the Liberal Party refused to do. Is the Hon. Member prepared to agree that this exemption which the Liberals refused to provide will have a long-term effect on the farmers of Canada?

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member did not understand what I said. Unfortunately, potato farmers on Prince Edward Island will no longer be able to boast about their potatoes as a result of these increased costs. There will no longer be any potato farmers if the Government proceeds with its increased cost measures. That is what I am saying and that is what his colleagues from Prince Edward Island should be saying.

It is not a question of the quality of our potatoes, it is how long we can continue to grow them at a loss. That is what the Government must consider.

With respect to capital gains, I agree with the positive measure in the Budget. I believe we all agree with that provision and it is a positive move for the farmers who are getting out of agriculture, but is is not positive for those trying to get into agriculture. While a capital gains exemption is an excellent program for farmers, the Government has not addressed the plight of young farmers and new farmers. That is the point I am trying to make to the Government.

Unless it addresses that situation there will be no potatoes in Prince Edward Island to boast about, or any agriculture to boast about. Even milk production is becoming less attractive as a result of high energy costs in Prince Edward Island. The profit margin is almost nothing compared to Ontario. I hope the Government will seriously look at what is happening in Atlantic Canada—particularly my Province of Prince Edward Island—and recognize the situation.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, in order for the Hon. Member to be fair about farm issues, he might recall the steps that were taken in November to reduce the input costs and the impact of a 3 per cent or 25 per cent reduction in interest rates on the input costs of farmers and the ability of consumers to pay for the products they produce.

At the beginning of his speech the Hon. Member talked about jobs. He concluded with a special plea for Prince Edward Island because 80 per cent of the economy was in the public sector and 20 per cent was in the private sector. He belongs to a political party that has essentially been in charge of this country for the last 20 years, during which time the proportion of public sector spending has grown in order to keep the community alive, while private sector employment and private sector spending has declined. I found his remarks rather confusing. Does he choose to make that proportion 85 per cent and 15 per cent, 90 per cent and 10 per cent for the future, or does he support our Government's goal of 50-50 in the economy, where everyone has a job because the private sector is strong and healthy? If he believes that, could he identify some measures in that Budget which will help realize that goal?

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I was quoting a speech given by the President of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce. He said that the Budget will decrease by minus 6 per cent the growth of Atlantic Canada. Those were his words, not mine.

Mr. Hawkes: Is he a Liberal?

Mr. Henderson: I do not know the gentleman. However, after the Budget I presume he would not be a Conservative, if he uses figures like that.

The Hon. Member asked about the ratio in the economy between the public and private sector. I would like to see it at 50-50, just as the Hon. Member would. However, we must be realistic. Cars are not manufactured in the Province of Prince Edward Island, they are manufactured close to the markets. The Hon. Member should know that. We do not have oil wells or spin-off industries from oil wells in the Province of Prince Edward Island. We must rely on three very important industries; agriculture, fisheries and tourism. The other sectors are related to consumer spending.

The disturbing aspect of the budget, as is reflected by the mentality of the Hon. Member, is that Members opposite do not understand what all of Canada is about. They do not understand the situation in Labrador. They do not understand the situation in Cape Breton or they would never have closed two heavy water plants without providing an alternative.

I do not understand downtown Calgary but I suggest it is much easier to create jobs in downtown Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto, Montreal or, indeed, in Ottawa. There are construction cranes everywhere, in Ottawa. I do not think there is one crane in my province of Prince Edward Island. There are some blue herons, but no cranes.

These are areas at which all of us have to take a look. In northern Ontario we will find the same situation. It is not unique to Prince Edward Island or to Cape Breton. There are outlying areas in the country which have to be taken into consideration. Unless the Government is prepared to address the situation, we will have unemployment like we have never seen before. What will happen to the deficit in that event? These people will have to survive. They will have to be paid welfare, UIC or something. All I am saying is that we will have to take a long, hard look at it.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about the agricultural industry in Prince Edward Island, and he used some figures regarding fuel prices which I think were somewhat misleading. Perhaps in fairness he might want to correct what he said. He talked about the price going up in September by two cents per litre, but he neglected to mention that on June 1 it would go down .7 cents. Therefore the net additional cost to consumers in September will in fact be 1.3 cents per litre. He gave no credit whatsoever for the fact that the Government, since assuming office, has given a federal tax remission to primary industries, which happens to include farmers as well.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on that question and to set the record straight. The tax remission which was given as a result of the November economic statement went into effect on January 1, 1985. It expires, and this is what we have to watch in these Budgets and economic statements—this is the trickery which I am glad to be able to expose today—on January 1, 1987. It is for two seasons. On top of that, they have already put on two cents per litre as well as the other increase last November. Where is the net benefit of that to farmers? There was no mention of that when the Conservative Party promised that if it was elected it would eliminate the excise tax on gasoline for two years. Conservative Members said that they would eliminate it. I have their list of promises. There is no sunset clause on it whatsoever. It was a good idea, a tremendous idea, but many farmers went to the polls to vote thinking that ever after there would be no tax on gasoline. What did the Government do? It will be the same this coming September as it was last August.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A short question by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I find the comments of the Hon. Member interesting. If one were to believe all that he was saying, one would expect that the netted gems on Prince Edward Island no longer see eye to eye. Bearing in mind that the Hon. Member indicated that the tax on gasoline was going somewhat higher, some 1.3 cents per litre in total, would he not concede, nevertheless, that it will be cheaper than when the Liberals were last in office?

Further, bearing in mind that one of the major costs to agriculture is the cost of capitalization, does the Hon. Member not recognize that interest rates are now 3 per cent cheaper then they were when he was on the government benches about a year ago? He said that we did nothing with the capital gains tax for new farmers to get started and that it would only help older, retiring farmers. Does he not recognize that the removal of $500,000 in capital gains tax will have a downward pressure on land prices and therefore make it more possible for younger farmers to become established?

Does the Hon. Member not huff and puff a bit too hard by not recognizing that part way through our term one of the major aspects at which we are looking is opening up the market to the United States? This could make his netted gems happy again and give farmers an opportunity for some sales. Surely he puffs too hard after being a Member on the Government side.

Finally, does the Hon. Member project a continuation of the Liberal policies of ever increasing the debt, ever increasing the burden, and believing that somehow that creates jobs and economic stability?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) has 30 seconds to answer that question.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, you do not give me much time within which to answer that question. It is interesting to hear government Members taking credit for the interest rates. Right after they were elected interest rates started to rise again, and they said that was the fault of the United States as the rates in the United States were going up.

An Hon. Member: They were fluctuating.

Mr. Henderson: They were fluctuating. During the election campaign it was all the fault of the Liberals, but when they were elected and they started to rise it was all the fault of the United States. However, when they started to come down again they started taking credit for it. If they go up again in the United States and then go up here, they will say the same thing.

It is interesting that the Hon. Member mentioned the United States market. This is at a time when our hog farmers are in extreme difficulty trying to sell pork in the United States, when our fishermen are having problems trying to sell salt cod, and when the Prime Minister said that he would buddy up with Reagan and settle all these problems. However, the Hon. Member knows full well that if the agricultural, fishing and tourism sectors are allowed to die, there will be a deficit situation the likes of which Canada has never witnessed before.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired for questions and comments.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured, as a government Member from western Canada, to join in this budget debate. My constituency of Swift Current-Maple Creek covers 18,000 square miles in the southwestern corner of Saskatchewan. The main business and occupation is agriculture, with some secondary oil and gas activity. What I say will be from that perspective.

The Budget is very important to my area of the Prairies, indeed to all western Canada, because it was this area, perhaps more than any other, which endured hardship and neglect over the past 20 years. Western Canada was particularly devastated by twin hammer blows 10 years apart. The 1971 Budget brought us capital gains and 1981 brought us the MacEachen Budget and the infamous National Energy Program. The emancipation of western Canada was launched at the historic meeting in the City of Prince Albert last July. There the Progressive Conservative Party confirmed that western Canada had to be brought back into Confederation. The Prince Albert Declaration indicated that a Progressive Conservative government would prove to western Canadians, by listening and taking action, that the federal Government was as much their Government as that of any other region; westerners would again see Ottawa as a friend, not as a foe.

Last September Canadians voted for change. They voted not just for a change in policies, they voted for a new approach to making public policy. Two months later, in November, we set out our agenda for economic renewal, an agenda which laid out our principles and new policy directions. We said at that time that we would make the changes necessary to promote growth, create jobs and improve social programs. We said that we would act fairly, and we said that we would consult and listen before acting.

Since that time we have listened to the concerns and aspirations of Canadians in the most extensive consultative process in Canadian history. However, consultation has not been an excuse for inaction. Since September we have implemented many of the policies defined in Prince Albert. We said that we would implement a taxation system which recognized bottom line profits as the basis for assessing taxes in order to stimulate the investment needed to bring on new energy resources. In keeping with this, the Western Accord has been signed, thus concluding negotiations with the western provinces and the oil industry. The Western Accord signals a new era in federal-provincial relations and the end of the national energy policy. This new policy will mean opportunity for all Canadians through balanced development of our resources for all regions. Jobs in exploration and drilling will mean jobs in manufacturing plants. Development in the oil and gas resource areas will mean jobs and growth in Ontario and Quebec. The Western Accord brings to a close that bitter chapter of western history in which the federal Government unilaterally changed the rules of the game and caused untold misery for hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

In the areas of transportation and agriculture we have frozen existing freight rates from further increases for the next two crop years. The 31.5 tonne volume cap in the Western Grain Transportation Act is being removed. We have preserved a number of rural rail branch lines. We have implemented the $60 million federal-provincial drought assistance program. The Farm Credit Corporation has reduced interest rates by some 4 per cent for 5,600 farmers. It has announced a shared risk mortgage program. We have allowed voluntary dual labelling in imperial as well as in metric on farm products.

Last fall this Government reduced the price of fuel to primary producers by some 22 cents a gallon. We are in the process of legislating a national voluntary tripartite red meat stabilization program. We amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act to trigger a timely and substantial pay-out of $450 million to producers. The strong-arm and confrontational tactics of the Department of National Revenue have been abolished and taxpayers' rights have been enshrined in the declaration. All these actions prove this Government's commitment to the needs of western Canadians and to Canadian farmers.

On Thursday last, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) reaffirmed this commitment when he announced the immediate $500,000 capital gains exemption on the sale of farm property while at the same time preserving the tax free intergenerational rollover of land. Since the Liberal Government instituted capital gains in 1972, that unfair tax has hung like a poisonous cloud over the farm community. It hit hardest the farmer who found the fruits of his life's work locked up in the ground and, on retirement, subject to considerable income tax.

I am privileged to be a member of the Standing Committee on Finance of this House, a committee which in the month of March held extensive hearings on a number of agricultural issues and listened to briefs and presentations from all sectors of agriculture. From these hearings, it became obvious that the major concern was capital gains. The elimination of capital gains on farmland will enable a generation of older farmers to turn over their farm and receive a fair price which will permit them to retire with some dignity. At the same time, opportunities will open up to younger farmers to acquire this land at a more reasonable price. A further benefit will accrue to agriculture through obvious simplification in farm estate planning. In most instances, the lifetime capital gains exemption will do away with the widespread use of phoney custom work contracts and other back-door agreements which maintain roll over eligibility. Western agriculture today rejoices in the elimination of this odious and unfair impediment to individual freedom. The spirit and intent of the Prince Albert declaration manifests itself once again.

Thus far I have concentrated on our actions to help Canadian farmers, but farmers have wider interests. I know they share our concerns for the future of this country, for the unemployed and for our national financial problems, so I want to leave the subject of agriculture and talk generally about the comprehensive plan for economic review and renewal which the Minister of Finance unveiled on budget afternoon.

I, along with many other new Members, entered this federal level of public life because we feared for the future, the future of our families, our children and for their children, indeed for the very future of our way of life. We could see we were heading in the wrong direction. We were at the crossroads, the crisis stage, as the interest on the debt begins to feed on itself like a snowball rolling downhill. This Budget represents an historic moment in Canadian history. It is a watershed. It represents the turning point, the beginning of the ascension from the far depths of the fiscal imprudence of the past administration.

There is no magic to it. It faces the fundamental truth. You cannot spend indefinitely that which you do not have. There will be no more bribing Canadians with their own money, no more spend now and pay later. This Budget is realistic, fair, effective and honest. It is based on extensive consultation with Canadians.

This Budget is part of the agenda announced November last, an agenda for action to break the vicious circle of high unemployment and spiralling national debt. This Government seeks to break that cycle by taking decisive action on three fronts: first, by encouraging private initiative enterprise and productive investment by increasing the availability of capital and by rewarding success instead of merely subsidizing effort; second, by managing Government more effectively; and third, by gaining control of the national debt through a realistic medium-term strategy.

This Budget represents a fundamental break with the past, a significant change of direction as Canadians turn away from big Government toward the private sector, particularly small business, for growth and jobs. The personal lifetime capital gains exemption is designed to let all people of Canada—individual Canadians who have a personal stake in their affairs—to choose when and where to invest and how to create jobs. For too long politicians and bureaucrats, who have no investment, have been telling Canadians what to do. It has not worked, and it never will. There is no substitute for individual decision-making by Canadians who can best decide for themselves their own course of action. The jobs will follow. This is no great leap of faith; it is just plain common sense.

Government has become too big. It has become part of the problem instead of being part of the solution. That is why we have been combing Government for waste and inefficiency since September, and our efforts are starting to pay off. We will be lowering government overhead, rationalizing and improving government programs and selling off Crown corporations which do not serve an essential public policy purpose. The civil service will be reduced and public sector pensions put on a sounder footing. The search is still on to ensure that we provide maximum value for tax dollars.

This Government is first putting its own House in Order. It will be leaner, more efficient and cost effective, but savings from this better management will not be enough in itself to end the debt spiral. In order to deal with this problem we must increase growth, reduce spending and increase taxes, because failure to contain the debt now will force future Governments to drastic measures. We must reduce spending now to save programs later.

It is important that Canadians understand the magnitude of our deficit and debt problem and why it poses serious risks to our ability to achieve sustained economic growth and full employment. The public debt is simply the sum of all past deficits. It took 100 years to accumulate a debt of $18 billion and now, less than two decades later, the debt is approaching $200 billion, and is doubling every five years. Like any borrower, the Canadian Government pays interest on the debt and, like any borrower, the Government has been affected by high interest rates. Interest charges have been the fastest growing component of government expenditure. However, unlike most individual Canadians, the Government has been borrowing additional funds to pay the interest on past debts. That is why our debt is spiralling out of sight. If we do not show the resolve to deal with this problem now, the inevitable result will be the financial paralysis of the Government of Canada.

This Government has inherited a fiscal mess of such magnitude that urgent remedial action must be taken. Government spending has virtually doubled in the past four years. Expenditures today exceed revenues by 50 per cent. Government spends more on your behalf, 50 per cent more in fact than it gathers in taxes and other revenues. The deficit is growing three times faster than the economy. This year's deficit is approximately $35 billion. For every three dollars spent, two are collected and one is borrowed. Surely even the most profligate spendthrift would agree that this cannot long continue. We are mortgaging our tomorrow, our children's future to pay for today's excesses.

The annual deficit or shortfall amounts to about $1,400 per Canadian or approximately $5,600 for a family of four. Any family that continues to spend $5,600 more each year than it takes in will soon find itself in financial jeopardy. That family may be able to borrow for a while, but the interest charges will mount up and it will soon be faced with hard choices: to bring in more money, to spend less or declare bankruptcy, and the option of bankruptcy is not open to Government.

The net national debt is now closing in on $200 billion. It is not the debt itself that is the problem. It is the cost of the debt, the interest burden. This is not a little interest free loan from mom and dad. This is a cross that all Canadians have to bear. This year alone, $25 billion will be required to pay interest on the previously accumulated debt, the Liberal legacy. This is about $1,000 per person this year alone. One out of every $4 the Government spends goes to interest. One out of every three dollars of government revenue goes to service the debt. Projecting this kind of fiscal insanity into the future will indicate that all revenues may be required to service the debt in the 1990s.

What then? We might try to borrow money, but that just continues to build up future problems. At some point the bills come due. We could simply print more money, but to do that would guarantee an outbreak of inflation and rising interest rates that would damage confidence, investment and growth in the same way it did in the 1970s and early 1980s. This would be an abdication of responsibility. It is not an option.

The only other choice would be to find the money through drastic cuts in government services and major tax increases. Many government programs would be in jeopardy. Obviously this is also unacceptable. This situation is so compelling that I am sure all Members of this House will understand that the matter of reduced government spending, consequent debt reduction and lower interest rates are conditions precedent for greater employment and job opportunity for Canadians. I know that Members will unite and support these budget proposals which are necessary, and at the same time fair and reasonable. The people of Canada expect their representatives to put the fiscal house in order. They expect a responsible and prudent response. They want deficit reduction. They want to get this country moving again.

Some say that faster economic growth will solve our fiscal dilemma. As the Minister of Finance said, it will be an important part of the solution and the measures we have introduced will boost economic growth, but growth alone will not solve our problem. If we are to get off this treadmill, we must also slow down the debt spiral through lower deficits and lower interest rates, and that is what we have done in this Budget. We have taken that decisive first step to arrest and reverse the trend of increasing annual deficits. We have taken the tough decisions necessary to prevent future disaster. Though the measures are tough, they are also fair. Most important, they are being implemented in a way that will not threaten our economic recovery. The Government has consciously chosen a plan of action which controls the deficit now while ensuring substantial reductions in the future. It is a plan that will help us create jobs now and ensure that we can create even more jobs later.

Many Hon. Members have heard or read that the Government is obsessed with the deficit. That is simply not true. Our obsession is with jobs; good, satisfying and lasting jobs for Canadians. If we believed higher deficits and a rapidly growing debt, the Liberal legacy, would help us create those jobs, we would gladly have increased the deficit. In the past four years, the deficit has tripled and unemployment has doubled. Obviously that approach does not work. It has not in the past and it never will.

Government job creation is band-aid stuff: twenty weeks of work and then back onto unemployment insurance. That is not good enough. Instead, the Government has brought in a realistic agenda for action that tackles our problems as they exist and as we found them on taking office last September. When we set out the problems and our directions for solving them in November, we were not building illusions. We were honest with Canadians. We accepted our mandate for change and made clear that implementing and adjusting to change would test the strength and resolve of all of us. We promised to act but first we promised to consult fully and openly with Canadians in reaching the decisions presented in the Budget.

We have acted to control and reduce deficits in a balanced and careful way that will not tip the economy off its current course of action. However, we acted with firmness and determination because, without control of our accumulating debt, the economy would be unable to produce the jobs we need.

This Budget is responsible, effective and fair. It is responsible because it faces up to the challenges, the same challenges that were irresponsibly ignored by the former Government. It is effective because it reduces the deficit by $4 billion this year and by $8 billion next year and reduces growth in the national debt. It is fair because the measures to reduce the deficit do not endanger the economic recovery. All Canadians are asked to contribute fairly and equitably, but those in greatest need receive adequate protection.

The Minister of Finance should be congratulated for carefully constructing a package that must be viewed in its entirety. We must go past the individual trees to look at the forest. The Budget asks individuals and corporations to pay their fair shares, and it also uses the tax system to promote economic growth and job creation. It contains expenditure reductions and program reviews and it also increases funding for job-creation and training programs and raises the child tax credit for lower-income Canadians.

This is a Budget for the 1980s. It builds on our strengths for a better Canada and a better tomorrow. It indicates to individual Canadians that for too long Government has made their decisions for them. Now is the time to revitalize, to rejuvenate and to transform ideas and energies into the kind of Canada we all want for ourselves and our children.

The Budget is realistic. It is fair and it will be effective. It will be effective because the action we have taken in this Budget reflects our faith in people, our faith in the ingenuity and drive of individual Canadians to seize opportunities and invest in their own futures.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for a very excellent speech which was splendidly delivered. I was interested in what he had to say about capital gains. The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) and NDP Members who have spoken so far have claimed that capital gains are for the rich and some Liberal Members have taken the same attitude. That shows their ignorance of what has been going on with capital gains. The Hon. Member mentioned very carefully that capital gains formed the nest-egg of farmers and businessmen, and that is quite right. In fact, it is the only nest-egg they have. However, it goes beyond that.

One day I was standing on the street in Black Diamond when a businessman of about 35 or 40 years of age came up to me. He asked me, "When are you going to remove this capital gains tax?" I asked him why he was interested in that as he was not ready to retire. He said he was not ready to retire but he went on to say, "See that land there beside my service station? I own that. I would like to expand that business by hiring another seven people, but as long as the capital gains tax exists, which will rob me of my heritage, I will not do it. I will work my fingers to the bone for my wife and my children but I will not do it for any blankety-blank government".

I wonder how many businessmen have refused to expand their businesses because of capital gains taxes. This measure is not just for the rich, is is for everyone.

There is another point I would like to mention but I do not have the time as I know that these questions are to be short and concise. The Hon. Member indicated that he supported the capital gains measure because it was the nest-egg of farmers and businessmen, and that would be a good enough reason to do so even if there were no other reasons. However, is the Hon. Member aware of other reasons for the capital gains measure to be so important to this country? Is he aware of the terrible attitude of western members of the NDP who say that capital gains tax elimination is only for the rich? I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to say that to the farmers of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for his observations and comments and for his question. I personally got into this business mainly as a result of seeing what capital gains had done to the farmers and small-business people of western Canada. Without doubt, capital gains tax has hung like a sword over their heads since its inception. It has backed up a whole generation of older farmers and business-people who have been basically unable to dispose of their assets to the next generation because of the prospect of that unfair tax hanging over their heads. This measure will stimulate activity all across Canada, and, more important, I think it gives the younger generation an opportunity to strive and to succeed.

I know, as do many of my confrères, of many young people who are bushy-tailed and eager to get out to work. They want to work long hours. They are quite prepared to work nights and weekends but they will not put out if they see that their hard earned efforts are taxed away. This measure gives the entrepreneur, the person who wants to take on the extra responsibility of building a business, that opportunity. People will be employed by these businesses and that is the side benefit. That as well is the main thrust of this Budget.

We should point out that the capital gains measure is something that is fair for all Canadians. I think it is something all Parties of the House should support. I really have not detected any particularly strenuous objections coming from Members of the Opposition Parties. I mentioned earlier that I had participated in the hearings of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee. It is my understanding that the recommendation of that committee was to eliminate capital gains taxes completely. I am pleased to see that the Minister of Finance has been able to respond at least in part to that request by putting forward the cumulative lifetime exemption of $500,000.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), I would like to add my congratulations to the Hon. Member for his very excellent speech and particularly for the manner in which he was able to set out the cornerposts of economics, and the fact that we do need to base the advantages of our nation on solid principles. Hes has outlined them in a way which I believe to be clear and understandable.

Bearing in mind the rational and reasoned way in which the Hon. Member set out his case, and knowing that Members of the two Opposition Parties have rather enjoyed an interesting time since the Budget was delivered by attacking point after point as if they existed in isolation, I would like to deal with a matter that relates to the cost of fuel. I would like to ask the Member, knowing that he views that in a broad perspective and that he has a true desire to do what is best for Canadians, what response he would give if someone were to ask him about the increase in the cost of fuels. Perhaps the House might have the benefit of his reasoned and measured judgment.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) for his question. It is a question I was asked in my constituency this past weekend. Certainly, it is a concern, particularly to the agriculture sector which is a large user of fuel.

It is my understanding, that effective June 1, as a result of the Western Accord, oil prices will be deregulated. At that time the Canadian Ownership Special Charge will be abolished. Members will recall that the COSC was imposed in 1981 as part of the original National Energy Program. Its purpose was to allow Petro-Canada to embark on expansion plans. Of course, one of the early purchases was the famous Petrofina purchase in which the previous administration saw fit to squander $1.6 billion of hard earned tax dollars to acquire a string of gas stations which already had their pumps in the ground. Those gas stations were already subject to Canadian taxation and regulation. That was the source of the COSC. That is the .7 cents a litre which will terminate on June 1. It is true that in order to put together the Western Accord package there will be an increase in the excise tax on motor fuels of some 2 cents a litre, effective September 3. I firmly believe, if analysts' predictions of lower oil prices in the months ahead are true, that we could be paying less for gasoline. The world is awash in oil. There is absolutely no question that the reduction in the world price will be passed on to the consumer in the normal course of events. That is speculation, but I believe there is every likelihood that there will be a reduction. If not, we are looking at an increase of two cents a litre on September 3, minus the .7 cents a litre which will terminate on June 1. Therefore, the net effect will be 1.3 cents a litre, which is approximately six cents a gallon.

Mr. Hovdebo: I will believe it when I see it.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Of course, the purveyors of gloom and doom in the NDP will sneer at that. We know they are professionals at complaining, whining and snivelling. They do it day after day.

Mr. de Jong: That is one of the effects of deregulation.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), who so rudely interrupted, gets a glow whenever there is a possibility that a financial institution might be in some difficulty. He comes alive at the prospect that there might be some crack in the foundation of the private enterprise system.

Mr. Hovdebo: What question are you answering?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): The Hon. Member is miserable enough as it is, I certainly would not want to carry it on.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that there was an economic statement in November, and that there was another clear-cut statement made in the Budget concerning the importance of creating jobs for Canadians through encouraging the private sector to produce more and to sell aggressively in order to produce the jobs which we need.

A previous speaker spoke about the farming community and the fact that there were no provisions in the Budget for farmers. The Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) represents a community which has a large number of farmers. Could he indicate to the House what parts of the Budget and what parts of the November economic statement are important to the farmers in his riding?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to review my speech, which listed at least a dozen initiatives upon which the Government has already embarked—

Mr. Hovdebo: Not this Budget.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): He will recall that the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) asked what the Government has done since it came into office. In responding to the question of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), I can tell him that at least a dozen initiatives were put forward. A most important initiative was the reduction of 22 cents a gallon on the price of fuel to primary producers. The other initiative, which will be of enormous benefit to all Canadians, particularly those involved in the agricultural sector, is the lifetime $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. That is the single most important tax development to hit Canada in the last 15 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in entering the debate on the Budget, I have cause to reflect once again on what the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops stated in their report which was released January 5, 1983. The report was entitled, "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis". At that time, the Bishops gave a general description of the realities which faced Canadians. They said:

> Along with most people in Canada today, we realize that our economy is in serious trouble. In our own regions, we have seen the economic realities of plant shut-downs, massive layoffs of workers, wage restraint programs, and suspension of collective bargaining rights for public sector workers. At the same time, we have seen the social realities of abandoned one-industry towns, depleting unemployment insurance benefits, cut-backs in health and social services, and line-ups at local soup kitchens. And, we have also witnessed, first-hand, the results of a troubled economy: personal tragedies, emotional strain, loss of human dignity, family breakdown, and even suicide.

In reading that statement, and looking at the Budget which was brought down by the Conservative Party, I am concerned about the way in which the Budget addresses the realities which the Bishops laid out in their statement of 1983. I found a lot of what the Bishops spoke about in 1983, and the criticisms which they had of the Liberal Government and its economic policies, are very much applicable to the Budget which was delivered last Thursday.

For example, in the statement, the Bishops pointed out that the economic strategy of the Liberal Government was one which they described as:

> To stimulate economic growth, Governments are being called upon to provide a more favourable climate for private investments. Since capital tends to flow wherever the returns are greatest, reduced labour costs and lower taxes are required if countries are to remain competitive. As a result, most Governments are introducing austerity measures such as wage restraint programs, cut-backs in social services and other reductions in social spending in order to attract more private investment.

Again, what the Bishops pointed out in their 1983 statement is very much what this Government and previous Liberal Governments have done. They have reduced taxes in order to encourage private investment at the expense of social programs, in the hope that it would generate the economic activity which would benefit the majority of Canadians.

> As recent economic policy statements reveal, the primary objective is to restore profitability and competitiveness in certain Canadian industries and provide more favourable conditions for private investment in the country. They private sector is to be the "engine" for economic recovery.

It is that economic order about which the Bishops wrote. Their statement continued:

> —we firmly believe that present economic realities reveal a "moral disorder" in our society.

The Budget which was brought down by the Conservative Government is a moral disorder. It is a budget based on false premises, based on the notion of greed and encouraging the accumulation of private and corporate wealth in obscene proportions.

Let us have a look, Mr. Speaker, at past records to see whether this economic policy of encouraging the private sector in order to have economic renewal has actually worked. Let us look first at some of the corporate tax breaks which exist now.

For example, in 1983, Northern Telecom, had $3.3 billions in sales, showed $325 million in profit, yet managed to end the fiscal year paying no taxes. TransCanada PipeLines Limited has $4.7 billion in assets and its 1982 pre-tax earnings were $482 million, yet it paid just 7 per cent in taxes. Shell Canada Limited, with assets of $4.7 billion and pre-tax earnings of $302 million, paid no income tax in 1982.

This Government talks about fairness. Is it fair that Shell Canada and Imperial Oil pay no taxes when they make hundreds of millions of dollars? But the poor person who is earning $15,000 to $20,000 a year will have removed out of his pocket $1,000 because of this Tory Government. Is that fair? Is that equitable? I agree with the bishops when they say there is a moral disorder in this country and in this economy.

There is the other area of tax deferrals, Mr. Speaker. In 1982 it was estimated that we had some $29 billion owing, increasing by approximately $1 billion every year. So let us assume that in 1985 we have $32 billion or $33 billion in tax deferrals. These are taxes which corporations admit they owe, but they made an agreement with the Government that the taxes would be deferred until some time in the future. Will they ever be paid? No, Mr. Speaker. Anyone who is wise in the ways of the world knows that these taxes will never be paid. Is any interest charged on these taxes? No, Mr. Speaker, none whatsoever.

The Government, of course, has to pay interest on money it borrows. I heard the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) explain that anyone who borrows money has to pay interest so, therefore, the Government has to pay interest on its deficits. Yet there is some $30 billion out there owed to the federal Government. Is any interest being paid on that money? No, Mr. Speaker. If the Government would only charge interest at 10 per cent on the $30 billion, it would collect $3 billion this year which would reduce the deficit to a much greater extent than did the Minister of Finance last Thursday evening. The Government could just collect 10 per cent interest on the $30 billion which is owing to it. That is a very handy and neat way of reducing the deficit. Charging 10 per cent interest is just one little item. Most people who borrow money in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, would love to pay 10 per cent interest on their borrowings. Many small business people and many farmers would love to pay 10 per cent interest. That's fair, isn't it? Let's charge 10 per cent interest on these deferred taxes. We can really reduce the deficit with some $3 billion. But, no, Mr. Speaker, the Governemnt is not going to touch those corporations.

There is also the research and development tax credit, Mr. Speaker, which is something that our Liberal friends introduced. We were going to lose some $200 million on this. But apparently, we have lost some $2.8 billion on the R and D tax credits. Are we going to put a stop to this? No, Mr. Speaker. When the Tories came in they realized it was a little too much so they introduced a grandfather clause. When the Tories took power it was estimated we had lost some $1.5 billion in lost government revenues just on this one scam alone—and it is a scam. The Minister of Finance knows it's a scam. Every Hon. Member opposite knows it's a scam. There is no $2.8 billion in new research and development which has occurred in this country. So the Conservatives were going to shut that down. At that stage it was estimated we had lost some $1.5 billion. Some shut down, Mr. Speaker. We lost another $1.3 billion under the research and development tax credit scam after the Tories were in. And they say, "No problem. Let's feed those guys some more tax breaks and eventually some of it will trickle down and create some jobs. Prosperity is just around the corner".

But, Mr. Speaker, as the bishops pointed out in their statement, "Since capital tends to flow to wherever the returns are greater, reduced labour cost and lower taxes are required if countries are to remain competitive".

What we are doing is giving these corporations more tax incentives and tax breaks in order to compete with what is given by the Governments of the United States, England and in other places. So it continues, Mr. Speaker, and the result is that the wealthy and the multinationals, who have the power to move their capital around the globe, essentially hold this Government, and Governments around the world, up for ransom. That results in the wealthy and the multinationals not paying their fair share. All this budget has done is give further service to the corporate sector.

Let us continue to look at the Tory philosophy of helping the well to do. I have a copy of The Globe and Mail of July 7, 1984. The headline reads, "Unemployment Good Alberta Minister Says", and I quote:

> Unemployment is good for the economy because it controls wage levels and increases productivity. Alberta manpower Minister Ernest Isley says.
> "From an economic point of view, if you define full employment as everyone having a job, that's not a healthy thing"—

The Minister says full employment is not a healthy thing. I am waiting for some of the Tories to come out of the closet and repeat what the Alberta Minister of Manpower says, because I believe that a fair number of those Tories do not really believe in full employment. They believe in keeping working people down and reducing the cost of manufacturing so that we can compete with the wage levels of Hong Kong and Singapore. That is what those Hon. Members want. They do not believe in full employment because what full employment will do is allow working people to get better wages and they are not interested in that. All they are interested in is having the corporate sector, their wealthy friends, doing quite all right, thank you.

Then there are some 7,782 persons who paid no tax this year. These are people who earn more than $50,000 or $60,000 a year and pay absolutely no tax because of all of the different loopholes and schemes in which they can get involved. The Government says, "We are going to get these characters. We are introducing this surtax". But that is a joke, Mr. Speaker. The surtax is a tax on the tax that you pay. But the 7,782 people who earn more than $60,000 who didn't pay any tax, are not going to be paying a surtax. All the surtax will do is penalize those people who do not play the tax loophole game. It is going to force those people who have been paying their fair share of the tax, and who have not gotten involved in any of the tax avoidance schemes, to get involved in tax avoidance schemes. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the surtax will produce less revenue than is now being collected because it will encourage people to attempt to avoid taxes through different tax schemes.

We come now to the other goody in the Budget, the capital gains goody. The Tories are quite smart. They have learned some lessons from the Liberals and definitely from the Republicans in the U.S. Essentially what they have done is taken one good item and used that as an excuse to bring in all sorts of questionable items. They allowed farmers to escape paying taxes on $500,000 of capital gains. This is a good move. It is something which has been in our—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, could you please ask the jackasses to stop braying.

Mr. Lewis: That is not a nice thing to say about the NDP.

Mr. de Jong: It is something which has been—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There will be an opportunity to ask questions or make comments after the Hon. Member's speech.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, that item has been in the NDP platform for most of the 1970s. However, the problem is that the Government at the same time is allowing tax-free capital gains for all sorts of wheelers and dealers and speculators. To achieve one good thing they have drafted legislation which is so broad I predict it will put to shame the Liberal research and development tax credit scheme so far as Government revenue loss is concerned.

There is a very good reason why a farmer who toils on his land has seen very little return on his labour, especially over the last decade. The reason is that the cost of production is about equal to the prive he gets for the goods he produces. The only profit he really produces is in the improvements to his farm. So when he sells his farm I think it is right and just that he not be taxed on the first $500,000 of his capital gain. But is this also true for people who buy condominiums and flip them a year later? Is it also true for people who speculate? I say it is not.

Mr. Malone: Why not?

Mr. de Jong: Because the farmer is engaged in some honest labour, whereas the bloody speculator flipping apartments or condominiums in Florida should be taxed on his capital gain.

So we see a Budget based essentially on a very simple notion of making the guys at the top happy and eventually the benefits will trickle down. It is called the trickle-down theory. Essentially it means feed the horse a lot of oats and eventually the sparrows will get some. That is the essential notion. Except that some Members opposite obviously continue to step in that under the mistaken belief that they are receiving a benefit.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Check the floor by your desk.

Mr. Lewis: We call it the NDP platform.

Mr. de Jong: I claim this Budget is essentially obscene. The Bishops, in their statement, pointed out:

> At the same time, working people, the unemployed, young people, and those on fixed incomes are increasingly called upon to make the most sacrifice for economic recovery.
> —even if companies recover and increase their profit margins, the additional revenues are likely to be reinvested in more labour-saving technology, exported to other countries, or spent on market speculation or luxury goods.

In this Budget we see that older retired people have been asked to carry the burden; they will be losing $1.6 billion in the next few years. They are the ones who are called-upon to sacrifice in order to reduce the deficit. Yet there is no call for Imperial Oil or TransCanada Pipelines or Northern Telecom to pay their share, or for the Government to call in the $30 billion in deferred taxes. No, those companies are not to participate in reducing the deficit, just the old folks, and that I call obscene. It is an obscene Budget and it is certainly not in keeping with the traditions and sentiments of the Canadian people.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I listened to the Hon. Member's speech with a great deal of concern. We have expanded the capital gains tax exemption beyond farmers alone, but the previous Liberal Government, as everyone in this House knows, applied that capital gains tax to farmers without any understanding of the situation. No one in this House would doubt the effort made by people who earn their living from the soil, but I am shocked to hear to Hon. Member infer that the tourist operators, hardware store operators, contractors and real estate agents in my riding, all of them people who make legitimate capital gains by working at what they do best, just as hard as farmers work at what they do best, do not perform honest labour. I ask him to immediately stand in his place and refute the irresponsible charge that those people who work so hard in this country do not achieve what they do through honest labour.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, it amazes me how hyped-up Government Members are. Obviously they have gone through a good mind training session. They remind me of a group of Amway salesmen. They have been hyped-up, given the line, and they are out there like little robots delivering their lines and points. Here in the House they are hyped-up to the point of impoliteness and discourtesy, I might add. They have to do this little number of show and tell for Canadians because they realize that this Budget is dishonest, and they have to shout loud and long in order to try and convince the Canadian people they have something worthwhile. But in fact it is the biggest con we have seen in a number of years.

The Hon. Member talks about the hard-working Canadian people that this Budget is supposed to help. I have no doubt that this capital gains provision will help some people who have needed and need help.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: Fine. But I want the Hon. Member to stand up and state in this House that it will also help people who do not need to be helped and should not be helped. I challenge the Hon. Member to make that statement right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner).

Mr. de Jong: I note the Hon. Member is not standing up.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the Bishops, and I was just going to call a Bishop because I think he is bordering on cardiac arrest. He talked about the Budget being a moral disorder. On the contrary, I think it is a serious act of fiscal responsibility. I think the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) will agree that the Budget is a break from the past. We know the old ways were not working. Pouring funds into the public trough was not creating jobs in the country. The ball is now in the court of all Canadians. It is up to Canadian businesses to invest and create real jobs rather than short-term, make-work projects.

● (1740)

Does the Member for Regina East think the Government should have printed more money which would create inflation? Does he think the Government should continue to pour money down the deficit drain, or does he think we should eliminate short-term, make-work projects in favour of long-term, real, lasting jobs, allowing the private sector to create more jobs in the country?

Mr. de Jong: That is a very interesting question, Mr. Speaker. As I answer it I wish to note that the former Member to whom I made the challenge chose not to respond to it.

Government studies show that the people who have received the most tax breaks have been the least productive in creating new jobs. I find it amazing that the Tories can say that the Budget is a major break from the past. That is not true. The Lalonde Budget and the MacEachen Budget before it were essentially based on the trickle down notion. The $30 billion in deferred taxes and the drop in the corporate tax rate which has occurred in the last number of years are just continuations of that policy. We must ask whether that policy has worked. It has not.

Will the tax breaks to corporations produce jobs? A Statistics Canada report found that incentives to business are not likely to create more jobs. In the last quarter of 1984 there was "little incentive for most companies to increase their spending on plant and equipment since most sectors are burdened with . . . excess capacity". For the manufacturing sector the capacity utilization rate was only 77 per cent. If you are only utilizing 77 per cent of your plant are you going to create more jobs and open more plants? Of course not. Therefore, why does the Hon. Member ask such a silly question? Is it economic sense that if you give someone who is only operating his plant at 77 per cent capacity more tax breaks he will use those tax breaks to build new plants and equipment? Of course he will not. The problem is that the public does not have the income to buy the goods and services which are produced.

I do not understand why the Tories do not understand simple straight economics. It is the lack of people being able to buy the goods and services that they need. We have people lining up at food banks because they do not have the income to go to a grocery store and buy a pound of hamburger. That is why we have a downturn in the economy. No matter how much money is given to the person who is only operating at 77 per cent capacity, he will not increase his capacity. He will only take the money and build condominiums in Florida or use it for a take-over. He will not create jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when he asks when the Opposition is going to stop running around with a little black cloud over its head.

And I think that if this black cloud is as thick as their arguments are sound it will not cast much of a shadow. A moment ago, I heard the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) say that 7,700 people would not pay any tax, so they would not pay any surtax either.

I would also like to hear the real figures. I draw the attention of the House to the fact that indeed 1.2 million people will pay the surtax in Canada. Well, no one can claim that 1.2 million is a negligible amount compared with the 7,700 people who will not pay any tax.

Another interesting figure has to do with the fact that 6,600 companies will also be paying the surtax. Again if we compare that with the 7,700 people mentioned earlier, I think it is a very sad performance.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will give you 30 seconds to respond.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, those are estimates which his Department has produced. I suggest that the surtax will be like a disincentive or penalty for those people who have been paying their tax. They will find themselves paying more tax on the taxes that they have been paying. They will look for tax loopholes and tax avoidance schemes in order to stop paying that tax. I suggest that the surtax may very well mean an over-all drop in revenues because it is a penalty for the people who have been doing the honest thing and paying their taxes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions and comments are over.

[English]

It being 5.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 64(6), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith any question necessary to dispose of the amendment to the amendent which is now before the House.

Mr. Wilson, seconded by Mr. Mulroney, has moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

In amendment thereto, Mr. Johnston, seconded by Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), has moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"this House condemns the Government for its betrayal of the trust of the Canadian people by producing a budget that destroys jobs, that offers neither help nor hope to the working poor and the unemployed, that brutalizes the middle class, that imposes massive and unfair tax increases on middle and lower income Canadians and that is devastating to the economically disadvantaged regions of the country."

In amendment to the amendment, Mr. Riis, seconded by Mr. Murphy, has moved:

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House further condemns the Government for actions which will effectively reduce pensions for senior citizens, for gasoline tax increases to pay for the Western Accord, for its failure to take immediate and determined action to reduce the ranks of the unemployed, and for the absence of a minimum tax on wealthy Canadians who pay no income tax."

The question is on the amendment to the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Riis), which was negatived on the following division:

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-52, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that there have been negotiations among the House Leaders on this particular Bill and I think, Sir, if you seek agreement, you will find that the House is in agreement to move this Bill to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, Miss MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Merrithew, moves that Bill C-52, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, the Bill will be referred to Committee of the Whole. The motion is now debatable.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, at the outset of this debate on Bill C-52, I would like to express my real thanks to Hon. Members of the Opposition Parties for their agreement to expedite this Bill through all stages at one sitting of the House and to limit the time that we spend in debating this very important measure.

I am pleased to introduce debate on Bill C-52 which, as Hon. Members will know, contains two very important amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. These amendments if passed into law would do two things. The first amendment would freeze the UI premium rate for 1986 and the second would extend the variable entry requirement for a period of 19 months. I see that my friends opposite are nodding in agreement with that. I know that it has been of concern to them and I am pleased to be able to introduce these measures today.

I think we all agree that the unemployment insurance system plays a very, very vital role in our social security network. Its benefits replace lost income. Those benefits help maintain the stability of local economies of communities and indeed help develop jobs for people in those communities.

During each of the last three years, the years of the recession, the unemployment insurance program provided basic income protection for something like three million Canadians each year. The ability of individual Canadians to meet the basic requirements of food and shelter while looking for another job is maintained through the unemployment insurance network.

For some time, as I am sure Hon. Members will have noticed, there has been a great deal of discussion about the unemployment insurance fund. Many different aspects of this program have been criticized and others have been praised, but there has been discussion from one coast to the other about the unemployment insurance fund. Whether it is business or labour organizations, interest groups or whatever, they are asking if the program is fair, if it is efficient, if it impedes the development of new jobs or if it does enough to provide unemployed Canadians with new opportunities. These are some of the questions that have been raised.

As a Government, we clearly recognize that unemployment insurance is a cornerstone at the base of our social security system. It is supported primarily by premiums from individual businesses and their employees. This program as such belongs in the most direct sense of any program we have, to the Canadian people. The role of the Government is largely one of a trustee whose role is to manage this public fund on behalf of Canadians. Therefore, any basic re-examination of the fund demands consultation and discussion with the people who really own the fund. The Government recognizes that and it recognizes as well that many Canadians feel that the time has come for the Unemployment Insurance Fund to be re-examined. Canadians have spoken out about this and we agree with them.

I will shortly be announcing the names of members of the special committee who will study the fund and will hold public hearings. That committee will be made up of representatives from business and labour, leading Canadians who will meet and consult with other Canadians across the country. Our commitment is to provide an open forum for debate so that the many varieties of views on this subject can be expressed. This review, I would say, provides a unique opportunity for Canadians to develop a national consensus as to what they want their unemployment insurance fund to do.

I have said that it is the workers and the employers who pay for the unemployment insurance fund. In 1984, the UI Program cost $11.2 billion. To finance those expenditures, employers and employees contributed more than $7.5 billion directly into the fund. Bill C-52 proposes to amend the Act to freeze the premium rate at its present level until December 31, 1986. The present level is $2.35 for workers and $3.29 for employers. Those amounts are based on a particular formula. If the formula were allowed to remain in place, without amendment, it would require the Government to raise the premium rate later this year. Employees would probably have to pay as much as $2.60 for every $100 of every worker's insurable earnings. Employers would be required to pay more than that for each employee.

As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said last Thursday, we will avoid imposing a heavy tax on lower income employees and labour-intensive businesses. Not only will the freezing of the UI premium rate help to give stability to employer-employee costs, it will also remove the burden from both employers and workers; the major shareholders in the unemployment insurance fund. That is one of the amendments which we are bringing forward, to freeze the present premium rate.

We are proposing another amendment, which is more urgent, to extend the variable entry requirement until December 31, 1986. If that amendment were not to pass, as of this Saturday, June 1, the variable entry requirement would expire. That would mean a great many people would be immediately and directly affected.

The VER first came into effect in December 1977. It allows UI claimants to qualify for benefits, based on the difficulty of finding and keeping work. It is based on the unemployment rate in each of the 48 economic regions across the country. The VER recognizes that it is more difficult to find and keep a job in certain parts of Canada than in others. The VER takes into account regional differences and responds to those differences with a formula.

In an economic region with a high level of unemployment, a claimant needs only 10 weeks of insurable work to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. If the VER were allowed to expire this Saturday, all claimants, across the entire country, would require a minimum of 14 weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. That would have an immediate impact on approximately 175,000 Canadians. They would face a new kind of hardship. In areas of high unemployment, those individuals would find themselves without work, without pay and unable to qualify for unemployment insurance. Bill C-52 contains an extension to the variable entry requirement to allow the UI Program to continue to respond to regional differences for the next 19 months, until December 31, 1986.

Bill C-52 is bringing forward two amendments. First, the extension of the variable entry requirement, which will symbolize Parliament's recognition of the difficulties which many Canadians face in finding work, and second, the decision to freeze the premium rate, which will help Canadians to find new jobs by removing what could be a potential obstacle to growth. We do not want to create hardship, so we are asking the House to approve the amendments as quickly as possible. The amendments are set out in Bill C-52. I am asking the House to give prompt agreement to the extension of the variable entry requirement and to the freezing of the premium rate until December 31, 1986.

I want to say once again that I appreciate the support and co-operation which has been given to me in bringing this Bill before the House at short notice in order to meet the requirements which are placed on us by a schedule where the variable entry requirement would expire at the end of this week were we not to take these measures.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I assume that we are in questions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. Under Section 35(2), there are no questions or comments.

Mr. Rompkey: If there is no time for questions, I would like to make a speech. Is it possible, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is possible if there is agreement with your colleague.

Mr. Rompkey: I would just like to make a few comments, Mr. Speaker, if I may.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There has been agreement here to have one speaker per party. The official spokesman for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). I believe the agreement is one speaker from each Party.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: I want to be quite clear about the procedure. Is the Chair going to ask Hon. Members for questions or comments after the Hon. Member's speech? Is there going to be a ten-minute question period?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No. I must say that under Section 35(2) in the Standing Orders, the first three speakers have 40 minutes. There are no questions or comments. If there is further agreement that we can go on into the 20 minutes, then there are questions or comments.

Mr. Gauthier: I take it, then, Mr. Speaker, we will proceed as agreed to Committee of the Whole and at that time Hon. Members can ask questions of the Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is right.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I can well understand the desire of the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) to leap to his feet to both ask questions and make comments on the Minister's statement. While my Party and I applaud Bill C-52 being brought before the House today in order to ensure that the variable entrance requirement of the Unemployment Insurance Act is extended to December 31, 1986, there is much which has arisen out of the Budget which was brought down last Thursday, for instance, the projections for Atlantic Canada, which Hon. Members from Atlantic Canada, including the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, would like to ask questions about. It is enough to bring any Hon. Member to his feet with a great deal of passion in his desire to ask questions and to solicit some information.

I congratulate the Minister for bringing in Bill C-52, an Act to extend the variable entrance requirement for unemployment insurance benefits and to freeze the premiums which are paid for unemployment insurance, because in doing so, she is following a practice which was initiated in 1977 by a Liberal Government. In 1977, we established the variable entrance requirement because we recognized that the problem and curse of unemployment affects people in different ways and to different degrees. We recognized that while 14 weeks may be an acceptable level of insurable earnings in order to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits in an area of high economic activity and low unemployment, that same entrance requirement may not be a just requirement in Cape Breton Island, northern Quebec, British Columbia or, indeed, in my own Province of Newfoundland. Therefore, we brought in the variable entrance requirement and every year since 1977, up until this year, a Liberal Minister has stood in his or her place in this House and asked for a one-year extension of that variable entrance requirement.

I congratulate the Minister for standing in her place today on Bill C-52. However, when one recognizes the circumstances this time as opposed to the other occasions when Ministers have asked for an extension, one has to be a little bit more concerned, and for two reasons.

First, there are those of us who are convinced, particularly those from areas of high unemployment like Atlantic Canada, that this Budget is going to exacerbate an already difficult situation. The second reason is that this Minister has announced that a private sector task force, made up of two representatives each from business and labour and one independent chairman, will begin the task in the days and weeks ahead of reviewing the Unemployment Insurance Act. There are those of us who believe that the only reason for such a review, and there are some legitimate questions which can be asked, and the motivation of this Government in having a review is to save money.

The only way to save money is to ensure that less people qualify for unemployment insurance. The Minister pointed out that during the recession we experienced in the early part of the 1980s, up to three million Canadians availed themselves of this program annually. This Government wants to see a lesser number of people availing themselves of a program which belongs to them and which is there to be taken advantage of in times of difficult and prolonged economic downturn.

The Economic Council of the Atlantic Provinces is a good free enterprise, laissez-faire organization, including businessmen as well as labour, and it has responded to this Budget by applauding the Government for its stated objective of trying to unshackle business and encouraging more investment, but it condemns the Government for not recognizing in this Budget the regional reality of Atlantic Canada. There is no recognition of the very difficult economic straits that these people find themselves in. When a respected organization like APEC says something like that, we in Atlantic Canada can only presume that the unemployment picture is going to get worse.

This Government wants a task force report which will allow it to qualify fewer people for unemployment insurance. The net effect of that on my people in Newfoundland as well as the rest of Atlantic Canada, by the time this process if finished, including the Budget and possible Draconian changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, is to conjure up only one kind of image to describe the sense of desolation and despair which will exist in Atlantic Canada; that is, the sense of despair experienced in Nagasaki the morning after the bomb was dropped. That is about how hopeful our people are going to feel.

This Government wants to change the Unemployment Insurance Act and have fewer people qualify. It wants to save money on the backs of the unemployed. This is the same Government which promised during the election campaign tens and tens of thousands of new jobs.

Mr. Dick: You got them.

Mr. Tobin: We got then, did we? Well, in Newfoundland last June, July and August, unemployment stood at 20 per cent, which is unacceptably high. It stands today at 23.6 per cent. In British Columbia, unemployment stood at 14.9 per cent last September and stands today at 14.8 per cent. They were promised tens and tens of thousands of new jobs. When this Government took office, unemployment in Manitoba stood at 8.8 per cent and stands today at 8.7 per cent. Is that the election promise to which the people of Manitoba responded?

• (1125)

Mr. Dick: What is the national average?

Mr. Tobin: The national average is 10.9 per cent. If you want to stand up and applaud that, my friend, I am afraid you are seriously out of touch. We in Atlantic Canada, particularly in Newfoundland, understood the mentality of the Government when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stood in the House and applauded the fact that in the month of April unemployment dropped by three-tenths of one percentage point. That is at the time of year when even nature tries to respond with a burst of new energy. The Prime Minister said that three-tenths of one percentage point was a great reduction in unemployment. I presume the business community would try to emulate mother nature and generate a bit more activity as well.

How would you describe a 2.3 per cent increase in unemployment in the Province of Newfoundland if a three-tenths of one percentage point drop nationally was considered a dramatic decrease in the number of unemployed? Webster's dictionary does not contain the words to describe the kind of dramatic increase described by the Prime Minister.

A Budget was tabled last Thursday. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is smiling, but I know that she probably fought the good battle in Cabinet and lost. She is now forced to sit with a smile pinned to her face, to suffer in silence the fact that right wing Thatcher faction of the Conservative Party has won the day. The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council said that the Budget of last Thursday fails to provide any recognition of the reality of those regions of the country where the policy of combating economic disparity and promoting regional development is appropriate.

This Budget applies a user-pay concept to those people who choose to live in rural and far-flung geographic areas of the country and expect to have the same services as Canadians in any other part of the country. If you live in Newfoundland and can only receive goods by the CN Marine ferry, you will have to pay for the ferry service. There is no Trans-Canada Highway for Newfoundland. There is no longer equality in providing goods and services for Newfoundland. Most of the goods and services are brought to the island Province of Prince Edward Island by sea. Those who choose to live in P.E.I. will pay the full cost of transportation for goods and services.

That kind of mentality is very frightening to those of us who live in Atlantic Canada. The economic plight of the people of British Columbia is closer to that of Atlantic Canada than to any other part of Canada because their economy has been going downhill for months. The people of those regions do not ask for the status quo. They do not ask for a welfare mentality or a built-in permanent subsidy.

They do ask, however, that until the current infrastructure of the economy is corrected by the provincial and the federal Governments, the federal Government not remove the umbilical cord of UIC, even though people do not want to keep or even acknowledge the UIC umbilical cord which recognizes the seasonal nature of employment and the resource industries in the Atlantic region.

I am pleased to support Bill C-52, as Liberals have supported this notion of recognition of the variable entrance requirements since 1977. We introduced this notion and we applaud the Minister for standing for the seventh or eighth time since 1977 and following the well established and proud traditions of Liberal Governments in recognizing that not all parts of this country are the same when it comes to the requirements for unemployment insurance. Perhaps that is why she is called a red Tory on occasion.

Last Thursday, the Government's saving grace for the people of Cape Breton Island was to close down two heavy water plants, with 600 jobs lost. If one adds the multiplier effect of two jobs for every industrial job lost, at least 1,800 jobs are lost in Cape Breton Island as a result of a stroke of the pen by the Minister. What was the Government's reaction? It sent the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to Cape Breton Island, Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury to announce a tax credit.

An Hon. Member: You don't want it?

Mr. Tobin: That is the arrogant attitude of the central mentality, "You don't want it?" What is the next word, "You can go to . . . ?" That is what you are saying to the people of Cape Breton and you may as well say it out loud since you have told them subtly that they can all go there in a basket.

The Government has neglected to tell the people of Canada that for the last five years there has been a 50 per cent tax credit on manufacturing and processing machinery on the Island of Cape Breton. The Government has simply extended that tax credit to include such things as tourism and services in some selected businesses. The Government has simply extended a program that has already been in place for five years—

Mr. Deans: It didn't work.

Mr. Tobin: That is right. As well intentioned as it was, it did not work. However, the Government is using smoke and mirrors to remove 1,800 jobs on the one hand while dressing up a five year old program on the other and telling the people of Cape Breton Island not to worry. It is that type of cruel and unthinking mentality of the administration that frightens me. I am disturbed that it would implement such a program so viciously and, second, that it would insult the intelligence of the people of Cape Breton Island by assuming that they would applaud an absolutely sarcastic approach to the very real human conditions in which they find themselves in that area.

We can do without that kind of politics. The Minister would do much better to come clean and tell the people of Cape Breton Island that there will not be a panacea, a tax haven and a stampede of investment that will create a proliferation of jobs for every man, woman and child. The truth would have been better than this insulting replacement for the loss of 1,800 jobs in that hard pressed area of Cape Breton.

The Minister wants to examine unemployment insurance in order to save money. She tells us that the program can be reconsidered because we now have an environment in which more jobs will be created by the private sector. I have been talking to the private sector people in my riding all weekend. They are good Conservative Party supporters. They understand that if up to $200 million is taken from Newfoundland's economy, there is less money to go into the till of those good Conservative Party supporters. Those good Conservative Party supporters, whom I respect, will be out of business. They know that good intentions do not put bread and butter on the table.

There is a shock wave in Atlantic Canada that is being felt by Liberals and New Democrats, and there is outrage being expressed by Conservatives who look at this Budget. What benefits does the Budget provide to Atlantic Canada? There is another $60 million cut from the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans. That Department is already operating on a skeleton budget.

The fishery is the primary industry in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. It is a major industry with forestry in New Brunswick and a major industry with tourism and agriculture in the Province of Prince Edward Island. Yet, $60 million is being slashed from that Department.

The Nielsen document has announced a further streamlining of CN Marine. How can one further streamline a service that is becoming more and more like a cattle-car every day? It cannot be done. Many people visit Atlantic Canada to enjoy the culture, heritage, scenery, the fresh air and saltwater.

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the Hon. Member talking about the Budget or Bill C-52?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not believe that the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) has a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I am talking about something that the Conservative Party knows nothing about. I am talking about working men and women of this country, the unemployed men and women of this country and a generation of youth who have seen what was hope turned into despair and despair turned into a prospect of spending their lives left out of the economy. That is what this Hon. Member is talking about.

There were further cut-backs to CN Marine. As well, $150 million is being cut from the IRDP. That program was designed to attract business to set up and create jobs in areas of high unemployment. Its purpose was to target dollars in areas of unacceptable high unemployment, where opportunities are few, in an attempt to spread wealth and opportunity throughout this country. However, $150 million is being cut from that program.

The Government will cut $75 million from Transport Canada. Mr. Nielsen has announced, presumably on behalf of Mr. Mazankowski—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Tobin: The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) has announced on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) that from now on airports in Canada will have a policy of being self-sufficient. Those that are not self-sufficient will be turned into municipal airports. That will look good in the North.

Mr. Murphy: Where is Otto Lang?

Mr. Tobin: In the Hon. Member's area, the Government will turn airports into municipal airports. It will tell the people in the North that they are second class citizens. It will tell people in Atlantic Canada that their airports will no longer have jet carrier status because of the small population base. These communities will be given the gift of a municipal airport. Some gift!

Some $78 million will be cut from job creation and training in the Minister's own Department for this fiscal year. She is presiding over that cut during what she knows is an extremely difficult time for people who are trying to return to the workforce in this country either through retraining or other job opportunities. The Minister tells us about the SEED program during Question Period every second day. That is being denied to the poorest municipalities in this country because they cannot make the cash contribution to take advantage of that program. The Minister will not recognize that reality and deal with it. I advise her now that she should.

Whether or not we like it, and we do not like it, the Atlantic region, the region from where I come, is still a slow growth region. We in Atlantic Canada were looking for a specific recognition of our region's problems. We did not find it. We were looking for stimulus, something that recognized that the level of unemployment in our region was unacceptably high. No one can say that 23.6 per cent of the people of Newfoundland being unemployed or 15 per cent or 16 per cent in the other Atlantic provinces is acceptable, any more than we can accept that in the great Province of British Columbia, a province with natural resources, unemployment today sits at nearly 15 per cent. That is not acceptable either, Mr. Speaker. You do not deal with that kind of problem by reducing the deficit, by taking money out of the regions, or by bringing in a policy that says the Government will save $2 billion in transfer payments to the provinces over the next five years. Saving that $2 billion will hit medical facilities and educational facilities in all provinces, every one.

That is going to be particularly devastating in provinces like British Columbia. Even the northern regions of Ontario will suffer, as well as Atlantic Canada. Provinces have to decide either to tax back that money from their citizens which the federal Government just took away with one hand, or increase user fees, increase premiums on health plans or increase tuition for universities. Those are the options. This Government has by sleight of hand managed to recover $2 billion from the taxpayers, not by taking it directly or by owning up to it, but by passing the burden on to the provinces which have to collect that $2 billion.

The Government will cut $2 billion in health care and education transfer payments to the provinces over the next five years. The provincial governments will have to try to make up the loss. The Government does not have the courage to identify itself as the author of a reduction in the quality of education and health care services in Canada. I tell the Minister that we will support this Bill and will see it through today, but the notion of extending the variable entrance requirement to December 31, 1986 is a foolhardy one.

The Minister knows that the report of the task force on unemployment and the accompanying Government legislation that will flow from it will not be back in this House by December 31, 1986. The task is important. It is complex. It is difficult. I wish her task force the very best with its work. I can assure the Minister and the members of the task force that the variable entrance requirement, this concept of recognizing that Canada is made up of different regions, had better be front and centre. Whatever legislation flows out of the task force report, it had better be front and centre in whatever report is provided to the Minister by her advisers. If it is not, speaking for this Party, I can tell the Minister that new legislation will not receive easy passage in this place.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) for having provided the New Democratic Party's critic on the unemployment insurance program with advance notice and discussion with respect to the introduction of Bill C-52.

My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) took a great deal of credit for the variable entrance requirement. He said the Minister was right that in 1977 the variable entrance requirement was introduced in the great tradition of the Liberal Party, but the Liberal Party could not deal with unemployment in regions across this country. I would not think any Member in this House would stand up and take credit for that. After all the years of Liberal rule, the Liberals were never able to deal with eliminating the regional disparities which have aggravated unemployment in areas such as Atlantic Canada, Nickel Belt, and the northern prairie provinces.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I do not think it is to the Hon. Member's credit to take credit for a variable entrance requirement. I would rather not see that in existence because it would mean that we are coming to grips with our unemployment problem.

Bill C-52 provides for two things. First, the variable entrance requirement is continued for 19 months. This variable entrance requirement reflects the unemployment rate in the 48 economic regions of our country. The higher the unemployment rate, the lower the number of qualified weeks for collecting unemployment insurance.

Why are we faced with this rush today to put this Bill through all stages? After all, if the Bill is not approved today and if it is protracted as of Saturday, the Minister is quite right that the variable entrance requirement comes to an end and 14 weeks becomes the norm for everyone starting June 4. We know June 1 is the deadline. I raised this matter in committee with the Minister four weeks ago, and I raised it in this House. I was buffaloed by answers and told to wait. This created a great deal of tension and stress. Many groups, trade unions and unemployed help centres, which deal with the unemployed on a day to day basis, have been contacting me, and I am sure they have been contacting the Minister's office.

Why was this matter not dealt with earlier? I suspect it was because the Minister was in a struggle in Cabinet. There were those Neanderthals in the Cabinet wanting to chop and slice the Unemployment Insurance Program. I have the suspicion that the Minister did a survey to convince the more recalcitrant members of the Cabinet that the damage contemplated by certain elements in the Cabinet with respect to the Unemployment Insurance Program would create great havoc. From the financial documents, the Budget of last week it is obvious the Government does not intend to deal with unemployment in a targetted way. Unemployment next year is projected to be 10.3 per cent and, since you cannot deal with bringing down unemployment, you ought not to tamper with those instruments in place to deal with the fall-out victims from the lack of any kind of economic strategy to create employment.

The Bill also provides for freezing premium rate levels. People may not be aware and new Members to this House may not be aware, of the history since the present Act came into effect in 1971 and incorporated many provisions such as maternity benefits and sick benefits. People may not be aware that at that time the Government would pick up the cost of unemployment over 3 per cent. The Unemployment Insurance Program of 1971 was designed so that the premiums from employers and employees would pick up the cost of the program with up to 3 per cent unemployment. We all know what happened. Unemployment started to rise beyond 3 per cent. The Government was picking up larger and larger amounts of the cost of carrying unemployment insurance.

That was during the Liberal administration. Then, there were amendments to the Act with respect to the 6 per cent figure. We know what happened thereafter—unemployment rose above the 6 per cent level. The Government then had to pick up larger and larger amounts, which resulted in a move to the sliding scale. That did not solve the problem either.

We then saw the final change which set the employer/employee premiums at a rate which would pick up the cost of the program. This did not include fisherpersons' unemployment insurance costs, nor did it include the extended benefits. The accumulated cost is now some $5 billion, with the employer and employee carrying the brunt of unemployment insurance costs in the country.

The Minister has spoken about consultation. She has spoken of this blue ribbon task force which has been established to study the Unemployment Insurance Program. The Minister says there will be consultation. Of course, Mr. Speaker, one has to judge people by their actions.

On November 8, two very important changes came about with respect to the Unemployment Insurance Program. These changes hit the unemployed the hardest. The first change dealt with the use of severance pay and holiday pay in the calculation of unemployment insurance. The other change dealt with pension income being considered as earned income, which would be used in the calculation of unemployment insurance benefits.

That was literally a shot out of the blue on November 8. There was no advance warning whatsoever. There was no consultation. Consultation started after the fact. These provisions were to take effect December 31, 1984. We, in this Party, along with our friends and allies in the trade union movement, and together with various groups in the country who represent the unemployed, must take some credit for having forced this Government, and the Minister, to back up and change the effective date for the pension arrangement provision until January 1, 1986, and the effective date for the severance pay provision until April 1, 1985.

Mr. Nystrom: You had to push here.

Mr. Rodriguez: You always have to push Tories and pull Liberals.

This is the consultation the Government has practised with respect to two important aspects of the Unemployment Insurance Program. One took some $60 million away from the unemployed. The other took some $90 million away from the unemployment insurance scheme. There was not one iota of consultation with respect to these provisions. Indeed, when consultation was undertaken at the economic conference, we circulated a petition against the severance pay and pension provisions being used in the calculation of unemployment insurance. The vast majority of participants at the economic conference said the idea was wrong-headed and that it should not have been carried out. Yet, this Government, with its blinders on, has put its head down in its bull-headed way and has proceeded to carry out the legislation.

Members opposite can shake their heads and chuckle. The fact of the matter is that the application of severance pay to unemployment insurance is cruel and unfair. People through no fault of their own, have had their jobs eliminated; some companies have even had to close down. In this regard, we have the Iron Ore Company of Canada. We have the experiences with respect to Cyprus Anvil in Faro. There are umpteen examples. I have been forwarding information with respect to this matter to the Minister. Each one asks for relief from the provisions of April 1, 1985.

As I promised the Minister, we will allow this Bill to go ahead today. However, it seems to me that the Minister should keep clearly in mind that this task force which is being set up to study unemployment insurance matters should take its time to travel to different parts of the country and listen to people who cannot afford to come to Ottawa. These are people who do not have the financial backing which would allow them to present fancy briefs. It is important that this task force get out to the nether regions of the country in order to listen to what the people have to say. I do not mean to say that we approve of variable entrance requirements.

Yesterday, in Winnipeg, was inaugurated the Association of Single Industry Towns. It seems to me we deal with disadvantaged areas of the country and single industry towns only when they are in a state of crisis. This was the case with respect to Cape Breton. We do not seem to have developed any type of strategy to deal with the situations as they arise or, alternatively, prevent these towns from becoming single industry towns.

In that regard, I have suggested to the Minister that she look at the situation in the same way which our Party has undertaken to look at it. We have put forward suggestions with respect to the role her Department can play in alleviating many of the problems experienced before disaster strikes.

The Minister will be receiving shortly the report on northwestern Ontario, which deals with the Hemlo, Manitouwadge and Marathon mines. These are communities which are looking to the future. In order to prevent what took place in western Labrador and Faro, hopefully the Minister will work on her colleagues in the same assiduous fashion in which she worked on them to prevent the destruction of the Unemployment Insurance Program.

I give the Minister credit for that. When she phoned me with respect to this matter, the first question I asked her was, "How did you do it?" I hope the same resistance will be applied until we have put in place the type of full employment policies which we should have. I hope that the Unemployment Insurance Program will not be tampered with. We should not be creating hardships for anyone. There is enough stress for everyone to deal with in terms of unemployment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the Chair.

• (1200)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-52, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, I have no cause to delay the Bill, but I do want to ask some questions of the Minister. Of course I am pleased to see that the premium rate is being frozen and I am pleased to see that the variable entrance requirement is being extended to December 1986. However, I would like to ask the Minister why she is not extending it indefinitely.

Reviews worry me and words like "rationalization', and "cost-effectiveness" worry me becaue they have come to mean bad news for the Atlantic area. I would like to point out to the Minister something she already knows, and that is that we can review as much as we like, but there is no way that fishermen along the Northeast coast of Newfoundland or the coast of Labrador can fish for more than 10 weeks of the year. That is a fact of life. On the other hand, there are really no alternatives. That is frustrating and something with which various Governments have tried to deal, but it is a reality and a fact of life. We can review the situation as much as we like, but unless we reduce it to eight weeks like it was before, we really cannot do much about it now.

I am worried about a review that will look into variable entrance requirements if they are only extended to December 1986. There are people in some parts of the country who, through no fault of their own, cannot make any other kind of arrangement. Why does the Minister not simply indicate that we will extend the variable entrance requirement indefinitely?

I would like to remind the Minister that the other day, she announced that between $5 million and $6 million would go to people who are affected by the ice along the Labrador coast. I must compliment her for taking that measure. However, this measure has been taken for the last several years. It seems to have become a fixed experience. In light of that, I am wondering why we cannot make an immediate amendment to the Act so that it will do what has been suggested by a number of people, including myself, and that is to extend unemployment insurance for fishermen until such time as the season starts.

In terms of consultation on this matter, the Minister has already heard from the fishermen's union in Newfoundland. I do not know if she has heard from the Government of Newfoundland, but she has certainly heard from us, and I suspect that she has heard from other members of the fishing community as well. We have all indicated that we would like to see that particular measure taken because of the reasons I gave earlier. In some parts of the country, it is just not possible to fish for any longer than 10 weeks, and in some parts of the country it is impossible to begin fishing until a certain time of the year, yet there are some fishermen who had to go without benefits because of circumstances that occurred through no fault of their own.

Is the Minister prepared to bring this measure in now without consultation? The consultation has already been done. I have been looking at this matter since 1972 when I was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries. At that time, we looked at ways and means of having alternate programs for fishermen. The matter has bedevilled every Government since that time, and perhaps even before that time.

There does not appear to be an alternative to the unemployment insurance scheme. We looked at a price-support scheme and we looked at an income-support scheme. This has bedevilled every Fisheries Minister that has looked at the matter. Unemployment insurance seems to be the only scheme that works. In view of that and in view of the fact that we are now embarking on another round of consultation, I would ask the Minister, in light of the suggestions that have already been made, if she is prepared to bring in an amendment now that would see unemployment insurance benefits to fishermen extended until such time as the fishing season begins.

Will the Minister see that Labrador is included in the present provision that she has made for extending the unemployment insurance benefits until the ice goes out? As she will know and as her officials will tell her, Labrador fishermen are excluded from the announcement she made last week.

If the Minister is determined to make this review and have this round of consultation, will she ensure that on the panel that she is putting together there is a representative from the Province of Newfoundland? Would she give an undertaking that that representative would be a spokesperson for the fishing community? Indeed, would she go so far as to appoint an active fisherman on that committee or indeed, possibly even a fisherwoman? There are a number of women who are engaged in the fishing industry in Newfoundland right at the catching level. They are in the boats with their husbands and the other men. There are such people who are involved in the business aspect and even in the labour aspect of the fishing industry in Newfoundland.

Will the Minister give an undertaking to a province that I suspect will be more affected by this measure than any other that on this committee there will be a representative from that province and that that representative will be someone who is actively engaged in the fishing industry at the primary level? If at all possible, and I can make some recommendations to the Minister, will she appoint to that committee a woman who is actively engaged in that process? Perhaps the Minister could respond to those four questions.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to respond to the questions put by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador and as well to thank other Members who have contributed to this debate. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador raised several questions. I will try to deal with them seriatim.

The first question the Hon. Member asked was why we did not extend the variable entry requirements indefinitely rather than for the 19 months that we are proposing. It has been the normal practice to extend this legislation for a one-year period. We have gone beyond that by extending it for a year and a half. This coincides with the period of time we think will be required for the committee conducting the review of the unemployment insurance fund to provide their recommendations to the Government and for the Government to bring those recommendations before Parliament. I anticipate that we will be able to deal with this issue among others by that time. We should be able to see what the requirements should be and whether they should be extended indefinitely or whether there should be more of a variation, as was suggested by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, who suggested that it be extended not on a continuing basis, but for the period of time that unemployment exists at a high level in certain regions of the country.

The end goal that we all have in mind is the possibility of doing away with this measure, not because it is not necessary in times of stress, but because employment in those areas will have developed to a point at which that measure is no longer necessary as a safeguard. These things will be taken into consideration during the review. If at the end of 19 months progress has not been sufficient, then obviously this measure can be considered once again and can be brought before the House for another extension, whether for a definite period of time or an indefinite period of time.

The second question raised by the Hon. Member was whether or not there can be an immediate amendment to extend to fishermen and fisherwomen payments until the fishing season can commence each year. He went back over the history of this particular measure and indicated that it looks like it is becoming a normal practice. He said that ice conditions are generally such each year that an additional payment has to be made and, therefore, we should take that into consideration when looking at a regular extension of unemployment insurance benefits. Again, I think this is something the committee looking at the Unemployment Insurance Act can review, and it can offer its recommendations on this measure.

I would point out that although the practice of paying a supplementary benefit directly from government revenues and not from the unemployment insurance fund has been utilized from time to time, in the last 11 years it has only been used on three occasions. It was used in 1974, in 1984 and again this year. Of course, it depends on weather and ice conditions, which may not be the same every year. I can assure the Hon. Member that I am very cognizant of ice conditions on the East Coast of Canada, having lived with them for much of my life. I know how ice conditions can impact, not just on the fishing industry, but on many other industries. For the present time, we have brought in a supplementary payment for this year. Where we go from there could depend on the recommendations which are made by the unemployment insurance review committee.

The Hon. Member also asked if the fishing industry in Labrador could be included in the present provision, that is the payments for the supplementary benefits. As the Hon. Member knows, it is included as of June 1, which is the normal date for operations to commence in that part of the country. That is taken into account in the payments which will be made in 1985.

The final question concerned the make-up of the committee which will review the unemployment insurance fund and whether it could have a representative from the fishing community in Newfoundland. I listened to the Hon. Member's representation. The persons who will be taking on the responsibility for that review have not yet been decided upon. I recognize not just the fishing interests of Newfoundland, but, in particular, the position of Newfoundland and its people vis-à-vis the unemployment insurance fund and the impact which it has on the over-all economy. I hope that any committee will be very aware that Newfoundland has more of an interest in what is being done in this regard than any other province. I would hope that the members of the committee would not only be aware of the special requirements of the fishermen and women in Newfoundland, but also of the total impact which any changes would have on the Province of Newfoundland. I cannot give the Hon. Member the assurance that a particular individual will be named to the committee, but I am sure that members of the committee will seriously take into consideration the special needs of Newfoundland.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, as the Bill proposes to freeze the premium rate levels for employers and employees, can the Minister tell the House if there is a cost overrun on that part of the Unemployment Insurance Program? From where will the extra money come? Will it be charged to the cumulative deficit in the unemployment insurance fund? I would suggest that it should come from the general revenues of the country. As it is freezing the contributions of employers and employees, I think the general pot should take the responsibility for the overrun. While the gentleman who is assisting the Minister is looking up that answer, maybe I could give a further explanation of my suggestion.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry. When the Hon. Member posed his question, I was handed a note about another matter and I did not get the gist of the first part of the question. However, I gather he wants to know whether or not the cumulative deficit will be absorbed into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. If I am not correct, perhaps he could repeat the question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, the contributions of the employer and the employee are supposed to carry the Unemployment Insurance Program, except for the extended benefit and the fisherpersons' unemployment insurance. At the moment, if the cost of the program goes up—with the exception of the extended benefit and the fisherpersons' unemployment insurance—the premiums are adjusted accordingly to take care of the cost. However, if we freeze the premiums which are paid by employers and employees and the cost goes up, what will pick up the extra costs? I am suggesting to the Minister that it might come of general revenues rather than adding it to the total deficit of the unemployment insurance fund.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I will take the Hon. Member's suggestion as a representation. However, the way that the deficit is now borne—that is, the deficit over and above what employers and employees pay—is that it is distributed equally. My projection, considering the revenues which now come from the payments, is that the deficit will begin to decrease and will continue to do so. That is based on the revenues which are presently coming in from both employers and employees.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, if that is the case, why did we need to freeze the premiums of employers and employees? If the Minister's projections show that the money which is presently coming in takes care of the cost of running the program, why was it necessary to have a freeze clause in Bill C-52?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the reason it was frozen was that under the formula now in the Act, it would automatically have increased to $2.60 for every $100 of insurable earnings. That increase would have to be paid by the employees and, of course, a larger increase would have to be paid by the employer. Yes, that certainly would have begun to reduce the deficit, but it would have placed a much heavier burden on the individuals concerned, whether they be workers or employers. We view the projection from the present rate as being able to begin to reduce the deficit to which the Hon. Member has referred. However, automatically jacking up the payments and trying to arrive at an elimination of the deficit sooner was not the way in which we felt we should proceed at this time.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could clarify one of the answers which she gave to me. Could she double-check to make certain that it relates to the extension of unemployment insurance benefits in Labrador? Last week she announced that a special amount of money had been previously made available for the same reason. However, I thought she said a minute ago that Labrador fishermen who were receiving unemployment insurance would receive those payments as of June 1. That was not my understanding in talking with her officials.

I wonder if the Minister would like to clarify that for the record so that we know exactly when fisherpersons in Labrador would be eligible for these unemployment insurance benefits? As the Minister can appreciate, the seasons open at different times in different places. There is not one date when the season opens. The Department of Fisheries has set various opening dates. The reality is that although people on the Island of Newfoundland qualify for these benefits, the people in Labrador do not, possibly because their season might open at a different time. Both Newfoundland and Labrador suffer from the same phenomenon of ice problems around the coast. Would the Minister make doubly sure of exactly when the fishermen in Labrador qualify for those benefits this year?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the Hon. Member that my understanding with regard to opening dates is that exactly the same practice will be followed as was used last year. Officials at Treasury Board informed the Department that this would go into effect as it did last year, and last year the beginning date for payments for people in Labrador was June 1.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I have a comment and then some questions for the Minister. My comment basically concerns the fact that the procedure we are going through at this time really does not represent a good parliamentary practice. I remember when the Liberal Government used to rush in with legislation at the last minute. The Conservatives, when they were in opposition, and the New Democratic Party, would agree to quick passage of the legislation because a deadline was coming up, and we were quite rightfully criticized by various groups who were concerned with the legislation.

It is of concern to me that just a week before the existing legislation comes to an end, we are extending that legislation without going through the proper parliamentary procedures. I happen to be a member of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. I see the chairperson of that committee is in the House. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt is also on that committee. Normally, legislation of this nature would be introduced in time so that it could go before the full committee for clause by clause study. Groups who are concerned with the legislation would have a chance to make presentations and unemployed people from the various economic regions of this country would have a chance to explain how the legislation affects them. They would have a chance to explain some of the problems they have encountered because the rates have changed over a period of time, although their unemployed status has not.

Mr. Manly: And it would have given Tory back-benchers something to do.

Mr. Murphy: It may also have been a very educational procedure for some of the new Tory back-benchers to understand how this legislation actually works. I understand we are rushing this Bill through in order to benefit the people who are affected by the variable entrance requirement, but my point is that there are a lot of people who have concern with this legislation who are not going to have the opportunity to appear before a Commons committee and, by the same token, we in the Commons are not going to have an opportunity to really examine the legislation in the depth which is necessary.

I would like to give two other examples of how rushing through things have hurt people, Mr. Chairman, if I may. The indication in the November 8 statement with respect to how severance pay and pension benefits were going to be considered under the UIC program was, with almost no consultation.

The community of Lynn Lake in my riding is facing a mine closure this year, about which I previously spoke to the Minister. The people in that community woke up November 9 and found that the rules of the game had changed. They had studied the rules which were in existence before the Minister of Finance introduced his economic statement of November 8. They knew that their mine was closing and they thought they understood what the rules of the game were. All of a sudden on November 8 this Government changed the rules, and that is going to affect these people. People working in the mine who are going to be laid off and people who are going to lose their teaching jobs, and so on, will have a difficult enough time facing their own economic future without the rules being changed, and it was done without them having any chance to have any input into those changes. Again we are not allowing at this time for that type of input.

I can also say the same thing with regard to the Challenge '85 program for students. We in my riding were very drastically and negatively affected by the program. The Minister of National Health and Welfare made the announcement on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and he explained that there were only 222 jobs which were approved for my riding under that program because of the new rules. In the past we had received approximately 40 per cent more in terms of money and summer employment through the old programs, but the programs were changed. I recognize that this is a new Government, but it was done quickly without the type of consultation and study by a House of Commons committee which was necessary.

We are again doing the same thing. I wonder why the Minister was not able to introduce this legislation a month ago so that we could have taken it to the Labour, Employment and Immigration Committee where it could have been studied and where groups and communities which were affected could have made the presentations which are necessary.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I listened with some amazement to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Churchill. I really thought there was no one in this House who was opposed to these particular amendments. Now I find that there is someone who wants to drag his feet and delay the legislation, which would impact adversely on 175,000 Canadians who are most in need of this particular legislation.

The Hon. Member's colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, understands what these particular amendments are all about. He is well aware that this legislation has not met with any criticism or complaint from the people who are affected by these particular amendments. If the Hon. Member for Churchill thinks that what we really need to do is drop the variable entry requirement, do away with the minimum 10 week period for people in the fishing community, for instance, and if the Hon. Member thinks that that is the way in which the groups he seems to be speaking for want to go, then he should rise in his place and have the courtesy to say so.

I can tell the Hon. Member that in all of the representations I have heard on the variable entry requirement, I have heard no suggestion to drop that 10 week period. To the contrary. That is why we are putting this legislation through. I have talked to Hon. Members on the government side and Hon. Members from the Opposition Parties, who have urged that this legislation go through as quickly as possible. I would hope that the Hon. Member would see the reason for this and would want to give it his support as well.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister, for whatever reason, has misunderstood my question. I am not against the variable entrance requirement. I have spoken in favour of it in this House before. What I asked is why we are dealing with this legislation so quickly? Why are we refusing to deal with it in a proper legislative manner? Why was this not introduced a month ago? We are not doing anything new. If the deputy whip of the Conservative Party would listen for a while, instead of yapping, maybe she would learn something. The point is that there was time. This Bill could have been introduced one month earlier. It could have gone before committee and the people who are concerned, as well as those who happen to be in favour of the legislation, could have had input. Our Party, through our critic, has agreed that we will pass this legislation because we recognize it will benefit so many Canadians. We have no problem with that.

Mrs. Mailly: Sit down, then.

Mr. Murphy: I am a little tired of the deputy whip of the Conservative Party yapping away. If she wants to speak, she does have the ability to rise in her place and speak.

The point is that we have a parliamentary reform committee which exists at this present time and which is discussing how we can strengthen and legitimize the role of the parliamentary committees. One of the main purposes of committees is to study legislation, to look at it to see how it affects Canadians. I have a concern with the legislation and with how we deal with the economic regions. My riding is grouped with other parts of Canada which have a lower unemployment rate. As a result of that, the variable rate does not benefit parts of my riding according to the actual unemployment there. I am concerned about that. Because of the process we are going through, we do not have a chance to examine that in detail. I wish the Minister, just as I wished with Liberal Ministers, had introduced this legislation early enough that we could study it in committee and give it the attention any piece of legislation deserves.

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-51, an Act to provide borrowing authority be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that there is no Minister in the House prepared to speak on the introduction of the Bill. If indeed that is the case—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I apologize, Mr. Speaker. Things happen so quickly around here, I had not realized that we had completed the previous piece of legislation. However, I do want to speak on the introduction of Bill C-51, requesting parliamentary authority for the borrowing of $18.2 billion.

While I am very pleased to stand before the House today, I cannot say that I am doing so with great enthusiasm in asking this House for approval of these expenditures because it is very clear we are dealing with a legacy of the previous Government. It is a legacy which continues to impose a very severe burden on the people of Canada. In the eight months or so since we have been in office, we have indicated a resolute desire to deal with that legacy by putting in place, both in the November economic statement as well as the Budget last week, a series of measures designed to get control of this serious problem and ultimately bring it down to a much more manageable level in relation to the size of the economy and our ability to finance the various programs represented by these borrowings.

As all Members know from the discussions we went through last autumn on Bill C-11, we must come before the House to request supplementary borrowing authority to provide the funds necessary to complete this fiscal year. As I stand before you today, I am very proud to reflect on the progress we have made over the past eight months, as well as being proud of the very important role that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took in a strong and compassionate demonstration of his leadership to take the tough but fair, and I believe very appropriate, measures necessary to end the irresponsible borrowing patterns which have been building up over the past 10 years. It has not been easy; there have been some difficult decisions taken, but I believe we have made some progress.

In the Budget last week, I think we reinforced the measures which were set out originally last November. This first Budget of the Conservative Government faced head on the two major challenges of high unemployment and high budget deficits which are facing this country. We still face unacceptably high levels of unemployment and we still have a spiralling debt problem. As I said last week, these problems are a bit of a vicious circle because high deficits constrain our ability to deal with the job problem and high unemployment in turn reinforces the very high deficit. The Budget itself does propose some realistic, fair and effective actions to break this vicious circle.

This Budget puts special emphasis on the need for promoting a spirit of entrepreneurship, by proposing measures designed to encourage risk-taking by small- and medium-sized businesses and farmers, and thus promoting new investment so as to give Canadians more opportunities to participate in the economy, to innovate and to succeed.

[English]

As Hon. Members are aware, interim borrowing authority for this fiscal year was provided in Bill C-11 last year. In her speech on that Bill, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) stated that further legislation would be introduced after the Budget to seek the balance of the borrowing authority needed for this fiscal year. This is the legislation now before us. There can be no doubt about the timing of this legislation; it is right, and follows directly on the financial requirements set out in the Budget. Under the Financial Administration Act, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament in order for the Government to increase its outstanding debt. Part IV, Section 36 of that Act requires that:

> No money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of Parliament.

This refers to new money only, because under Section 38 of the Act, there is continuing authority to borrow funds to repay maturing debt while Section 39 provides for short-term, temporary borrowings.

I would now like to discuss the Bill itself and explain how the amount requested has been arrived at. Clause 2(1) seeks $18.2 billion of borrowing authority for the 1985-86 fiscal year. The major portion of that money is composed of the difference between the total of $28 billion in financial requirements for 1985-86, as I set out in the Budget, and the borrowing authority granted under Bill C-11 for $12 billion even. To this $16 billion must be added another $2.2 billion, resulting from the use of Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act last February. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the use of that Section was directly related to the delay in the passage of Bill C-11 in the other place. The request for an additional $2.2 billion is really quite technical in nature and results from the way the relevant Sections of the Financial Administration Act are structured.

Section 39 provides for the Governor in Council to authorize the borrowing of money if, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, it appears that funds will not be sufficient to meet disbursements from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This action is designed for short-term temporary use only as loans are limited to terms to maturity not exceeding six months, and each borrowing must be approved by the Governor in Council.

Section 38 provides for the normal raising of money to refund maturing debt and, since there is no increase in the oustanding debt, does not require borrowing authority. The Financial Administration Act, however, specifically excludes securities issued under the authority of Section 39 being refunded pursuant to Section 38. Thus, specific borrowing authority is required to refund maturing debt issued last February under Section 39. I hope you followed that all very carefully, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Could you repeat it please?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I don't think you want it again. If the passage of Bill C-11 had not been delayed last February, the $2.2 billion would have been charged to regular borrowing authority and it would not have been necessary to seek this additional amount this fiscal year. As it was, $2.3 billion of regular borrowing authority was cancelled at the end of fiscal 1984-85 because the Government was unable to use it.

I assure Hon. Members that it was essential to use Section 39 last February. Members will recall that at that time there was some downward pressure on the Canadian dollar as a result of the unprecedented strength of the U.S. dollar and foreign exchange intervention was required, causing a run-off of our U.S. dollar foreign exchange reserves. These U.S. dollar reserves had to be replaced by employing Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act to draw on Canada's standby credit facilities with the Canadian chartered banks and the international banks. Section 39 was also used to raise $200 million in the domestic capital market through the issue of Treasury Bills. Thus, in total, the equivalent of $2.2 billion was raised at that time.

The cost of delay by the Liberal Senators in the other place was quite significant. We may never know the total indirect costs arising from the confusion and uncertainty which resulted from those delays. However, we have been able to identify very clearly and precisely the amount of money that that did cost us. It amounted to $15 million. That was the cost of the delay by the Liberal Senators when they took action to obstruct that legislation at a time when it was totally irresponsible for the Senators to take that action knowing, as they did, that we were running out of borrowing authority and that the U.S. dollar was putting considerable pressure on our currency, causing interest rates to go up. They deliberately caused an increase in our over-all financial costs which must ultimately be borne by the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: What was that figure again?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): A cost of $15 million was caused by the unconscionable delays of the Liberal Senate.

With the passage of this Bill, the Government will have a total of $32.2 billion of borrowing authority for the current fiscal year. This amount will consist of $12 billion provided by Bill C-11, the Borrowing Authority Act, 1985-86; $18.2 billion provided by the Bill before us now; and $2 billion non-lapsing reserve carried forward from the Borrowing Authority Act, 1984-85 (No. 2). I must note, however, that all borrowing authority conferred by the two Acts for this fiscal year which is unused in 1985-86 will be cancelled on March 31, 1986.

As a matter of interest to Hon. Members, I would like to outline how the Government has made use of the borrowing authority provided by Parliament for the 1984-85 fiscal year. The total amount of borrowing authority for 1984-85 was $31.9 billion. This authority consisted of $24.6 billion provided by the Borrowing Authority Act, 1984-85; $7.3 billion provided by the Borrowing Authority Act, 1984-85; and $7.3 billion provided by the Borrowing Authority Act, 1984-85 (No. 2).

During the 1984-85 fiscal year, domestic borrowing operations used about $26.7 billion of borrowing authority. Of this amount, $10.4 billion was raised through the issuance of Treasury Bills, $12.5 billion through the sale of marketable bonds, and $3.8 billion through the net sale of Canada Savings Bonds. Foreign borrowing added a further $.9 billion to the use of borrowing authority. The foreign borrowing represented a 1 billion Swiss francs borrowing in the Swiss franc market in May 1984, a 120 billion yen syndicated loan in the Japanese capital market in July of 1984, and a U.S. $500 million bond issue in the Eurodollar market in March of this year.

Net standby drawings during the 1984-85 fiscal year provided $510 million of borrowing authority. There were also redemptions of foreign issues during the last fiscal year which reduced the total use of borrowing authority. These consisted of a 500 million Deutschmark private placement which matured in May 1984 and a 500 million Swiss franc private placement which matured in March 1985.

As a result of these domestic and foreign financial operations, the total use of borrowing authority in the 1984-85 fiscal year was $27.6 billion, leaving $4.3 billion unused as of March 31, 1985. Of this latter amount, $2 billion was carried forward into the 1985-86 fiscal year and $2.3 billion of the authority was cancelled.

The Bill which is before us today fully meets the conditions of the understanding we reached with the Opposition Parties last December when we agreed to bring forward a request for borrowing authority for 1985-86 within two weeks of the Budget. We made that commitment at that time and are fulfilling it today. Indeed, this Bill was given its first reading less than 24 hours after the Budget was brought down.

I would like to close by asking for swift passage of this Bill for it will permit us to get on with the job. It clearly demonstrates why we need swift passage, but we do need approval for this borrowing authority. It is a very straight-forward Bill. We are only asking for borrowing authority for the balance of this year. As Hon. Members will be aware, if they have read the Budget discussion paper that was released at the time of the Budget, we are looking for a more defined parliamentary timetable surrounding the Budget process. We are hopeful that the next request for borrowing authority, which will be in respect of the 1986-87 fiscal year, will be brought down before the end of this fiscal year.

I ask Hon. Members to assist us in passing this Bill as quickly as possible to allow us to do the job that Canadians have elected us to do, the job of representing and serving the country in an efficient and responsible manner.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister concluded his speech by asking for quick passage of this Bill. We in the Official Opposition have no plan to delay this Bill. Obviously, the Government must have borrowing authority in order to proceed with its business in an orderly fashion. However, we will have some speakers because there are a number of issues which should be addressed in the House today and possibly tomorrow.

I note that with the Budget, the Government tabled a discussion paper on the budgetary process which contains recommendations on how and when borrowing authority Bills should be presented to the House. These are interesting recommendations which will, no doubt, receive a thorough analysis and evaluation. It is clear that the Government has taken to heart the lessons learned from the consequences of its inept approach in introducing Bill C-11 last fall.

Members will recall that the Government sought borrowing authority for fiscal year 1985-86 as well as for 1984-85. The Government did not present a Budget or spending estimates. A newly elected Government, with no track record, demanded approval to borrow $16 billion, which was later reduced to $12 billion, without any statement of its economic policies or goals. It cried foul when responsible Members of both Opposition Parties asked to see financial and economic information about the Government's intentions for this money.

The Government's discussion paper refers to delays on borrowing authority such as occurred in early 1985. No doubt, this means the reluctance of the Senate to approve the Bill without knowledge of the Government's plans for spending. I am pleased to see that the recommendations acknowledged the fact that the Government was the author of its own misfortune because there is a phrase on page 11 which reads, "The Government should not seek borrowing authority for a fiscal year without first providing Parliament with all the relevant details relating to the financial requirement". The Government has quite properly restricted itself to borrowing authority for the current fiscal year in the Bill before us today and the Bill follows a budget, as it should.

The financial requirements set out in this Budget do not inspire confidence. The Government now wants over $18 billion to pay for a Budget that is making tough financial demands on those who are least able to bear them. Perhaps it is useful to review which areas will receive money and which will not; who will benefit and who will not.

The Budget is proposing an increase in sales tax and making sales tax payable on a host of every day items and necessities, including health care products, soaps, shampoo, pet food, candy and confectionery as well as insulation products and alternative energy devices. The increase in sales tax will bring the Government over $350 million this year directly from the pockets of the taxpayers. This sales tax bears equally on those who can afford it and those who cannot.

The Budget also provides for an increase in the Government's levy on alcohol, a stiff increase in excise taxes on tobacco and a hefty gas tax increase, all of which will bring in $630 million this year. We have barely scratched the surface of the Budget. Already we see that the Government is reaping nearly a billion dollars from a few tax proposals.

Let us not forget that sales and excise taxes have a dramatic multiplier effect. The Government will get more and more money from them every year. Next year, the gas tax will bring in over $930 million. That is enough to cover what the Government will lose next year as a result of abolishing the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax. Therefore, the multinational oil companies—and I say multinationals advisedly because they have the old oil and will benefit from the removal of the PGRT—have a gift of a large sum of money, but the Canadian consumer makes it up.

There are a number of inconsistencies in the Budget which make it difficult to assess the Government's intentions and, therefore, its borrowing needs. The Budget stresses deficit reduction, but the Budget's deficit reduction measures are back-end loaded with little real reductions in this fiscal year. Many measures are hidden to individuals, such as a de-indexation of income tax and certain benefits, as well as the sales and excise tax rate increases and the broadening of the tax base.

We are told that over 80 per cent of deficit reduction is to be through decreases in expenditure, but many of the stated decreases are "under review" and have yet to be specified. So far, the Government's approach to deficit reduction appears to be primarily a tax grab from Canadian consumers, particularly at the low and middle income scales. Over 20 per cent of the total projected deficit reduction in 1990-91—some $4.5 billion—is shown as savings due to lower debt service payments. However, lower debt service payments depend on many factors domestically and internationally which are difficult to foresee today. Therefore, there is an element of hope which may or may not prove to be well founded.

Although the Minister claims that $4.4 billion is being trimmed from the deficit in 1985-86 and over $8 billion in 1986-87, the actual cuts are far less. In fact, the deficit may be only $2 billion lower than forecast this year and only $1 billion next year. The deficit forecast figures seem to change often. There is a deficit forecast that is $6 billion higher for 1984-85 and 1985-86 than that forecast by Marc Lalonde 18 months ago.

The constant shifting of figures makes it difficult to feel confidence in them. For instance, apparently personal income tax rebates have been accelerated. For 1984-85, this shows as exaggerating the size of the deficit. In turn, that allows for some deficit reduction in 1985-86, but surely this is not a substantive reduction. May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is a disposition to call it one o'clock. I remind the Hon. Member that according to Standing Order 35(2), she still has 30 minutes remaining for her speech. The finance critic for the New Democratic Party will have 40 minutes when we resume debate this afternoon.

It being one o'clock, I do leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 12:58 the House took recess.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ALLEGED VIOLENT REACTION OF MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Last week, we heard that the Conservative caucus had received an instruction booklet on how to sell the Budget across the country. Whatever the Budget contained, this salesperson's vade mecum instructed them to defend every word the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would alter as if it were Gospel truth, and to do so with force and determination. They were to let nothing prevent them from preaching the good word, and tolerate no criticism. Mr. Speaker, I therefore recommend that this House award a medal for bravery to the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay), who exposed himself to bodily harm in defending what his riding association president found indefensible, to say the least.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Lotbinière will probably be promoted to the rank of Budget hero by his own caucus, considering his fervour in defending the Budget against all comers. His riding association president, however, who is on the list of notaries favoured by the new Government, has experienced the limits of democracy within the Progressive Conservative Party in Quebec. He has a double nose fracture to show for it.

I suggest that Progressive Conservative Members immediately take out a collective policy for liability insurance, if they intend to continue these high-pressure sales tactics, and I recommend that the public, for its own protection, restrict all contacts with their Members to letters or telephone calls and refrain from any direct contact with the Conservatives in these times on the Government side.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NAMIBIA—MINING OF URANIUM BY CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Canada is violating a United Nations decree that prohibits foreign exploitation of Namibia's natural resources. Since the bloody and brutal apartheid Government of South Africa invaded Namibia and began the enslavement of its people and theft of its resources, western countries have been joining in the looting of that defenceless former colony.

The United Nations Council for Namibia in 1974 passed decree No. 1 calling for a halt to further foreign exploitation of Namibia's natural resources. Yet Rio Algom, a Canadian company with tax benefits from the Canadian Government, has, with Rio Tinto Zinc, for nine years been mining uranium at Rossing in Namibia. After the ore is imported into Canada a Crown corporation, El Dorado, in Port Hope, processes it to uranium hexafluoride for delivery to Japan. This is a multimillion dollar theft from a conquered people, in direct violation of a U.N. decree.

Recently the U.N. Council for Namibia began prosecuting a Netherlands company, Urenco, in a Netherlands court for a similar offence. According to His Excellency Ononaiye, Nigerian Ambassador to the U.N. and spokesperson for the U.N. Council for Namibia, the Council intends also to prosecute Canadian firms engaged in this offence.

I call on the Government of Canada to honour the U.N. boycott of South Africa and the decree of the Council for Namibia, and halt this greedy and illegal practice by Canadian companies.

LIONS CLUBS INTERNATIONAL

ASSISTANCE TO THE DISADVANTAGED

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride I speak in the House today on behalf of the largest service club in the world. Lions Clubs International was formed in 1917 and now boasts a membership of 1,341,000 dedicated men representing some 37,000 clubs in 157 nations and geographical areas.

The City of Ottawa is honoured today to host the President of Lions Clubs International, Bert Mason, of Northern Ireland. Earlier today Mr. Mason presented our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with a token of appreciation from Lions Clubs everywhere.

For many years the membership of Lions International has been committed to improving the quality of life for the disadvantaged. Lions International has made particular progress helping many deaf and blind persons world-wide.

I am delighted to note that near my own riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka the Lions Club built a summer camp for dialysis patients whose kidneys require expensive machinery to function normally. In the heart of my riding the Canadian International Institute for the Blind runs another summer camp with funding from the Lions.

Many Members of Parliament will recall seeing the mobile clinic parked outside the Members' entrance four weeks ago. The bus, equipped with a dentist's chair and other medical paraphernalia, is a gift to the people of Peru from, you guessed it, Lions International.

On behalf of Members of the House may I welcome Lion President Bert Mason to the capital of Canada. We truly hope our country will be his home—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE BUDGET—PATH CHOSEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, in Canada the term profit has again become part of the vocabulary of our small- and medium-sized businesses, and as a result, hundreds of thousands of jobs will be created, something the Liberal Government was unable to do during the twenty years it was in power.

Workers in my riding can now look to the future with optimism because they have the assurance their employers will receive the fiscal and financial support they need to maintain and expand their businesses. In fact, for many of my constituents, uncertainty and their employers' problems were having a direct impact on their vision of their own and their own family's future.

Mr. Speaker, the support voiced by farmers, businessmen and women for the Wilson budget has convinced me that the direction chosen by our Government will turn out to be the best thing for Canada and Canadians.

The Budget will make it possible for hundreds of young Canadians to put what they have learned to good use by participating in Canada's economy through jobs in all economic sectors.

Incidentally, I would like to say a few words of greeting to a group of young Progressive Conservatives from the great riding of Argenteuil-Papineau who are visiting Ottawa today, who have renewed their support for the Government and who are always as enthusiastic in their show of confidence in the Progressive Conservative Party. Our young people are our hope for the future. I trust their critical faculties, but not those of the Hon. Members' opposite, when we are talking about the best possible measures to provide for their future.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ABORTION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservatives in Saskatchewan have taken a firm stand against voluntary termination of pregrancy. They have increased their grants to Pro-Life and put a freeze on grants to Planned Parenthood.

Today, the House will be considering second reading of a Private Member's Bill that is being used as a trial balloon, with the support of the Premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Grant Devine. The Bill would make it compulsory for a woman to obtain the consent of her husband to have an abortion. Similarly, girls under 18 who are the victims of incest or rape will have to get their parents' consent or that of the courts to obtain a voluntary termination of pregnancy.

Mr. Speaker, this is a striking example of the Conservative attitude to women's rights. Since the 70's, women in Canada have been signing their own release for treatment and surgery. Does the House really believe that a teenage victim of incest is going to ask her father for permission to get an abortion? Is it not more likely that she will try to have her pregnancy terminated under conditions where hygiene and safety precautions leave much to be desired?

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to denigrate the role of the husband, but if we insist that a woman must have his permission for a voluntary termination of pregnancy, I will start a national campaign to make it compulsory for a man to ask his wife's permission before getting a vasectomy treatment for venereal disease.

Mr. Speaker: I must advide the Hon. Member that her time has expired. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will recall that in the election campaign the Conservative Party campaigned across Canada saying jobs, jobs, jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: In the Budget we see taxes, taxes, taxes, Mr. Speaker. In the campaign the Conservatives never told us about tax increases. They never told us about a gas tax. They never told us about the deindexing of pensions and family allowances. They never told us about deindexing the income tax exemption. In fact some critics go as far as to say that no member of the Government can be trusted, that no member of the Government can be believed. I would not go that far, Mr. Speaker.

There is at least one honest Tory, and that is the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). You will recall before the campaign he said: "If we tell the people of Canada the truth, they would never vote for us".

Truer words were never spoken.

EMPLOYMENT

CO-OPERATION OF GOVERNMENT AND BUSINESS IN CREATING JOBS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, we hear the voice of doom from the opposition Parties on a daily basis condemning the Government for the harsh cuts to federal programs and the resulting job loss. We have been hearing that same story since November, Mr. Speaker. The real story is much different.

Since the time we formed the new Government over 200,000 new jobs have been created. In the month of April alone there were 89,000 new jobs.

Change is obviously a threatening concept to our Liberal and NDP friends. Job-creation programs from the past have not worked. The Government inherited an unacceptably high unemployment rate, and is now encouraged by our opposition colleagues simply to throw more money at the problem.

We in this Party recognize that meaningful job creation cannot be accomplished without the full co-operation of business, both large and small. The Budget introduced last week by my colleague, the minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), will work to create jobs because it frees Canadians to reach their full economic potential.

CONGRATULATIONS OFFERED TO MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, May 23, my hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), brought down this Government's first Budget, a Budget that acknowledges the intelligence of Canadian men and women by giving them the tools they need to create the jobs Canada needs. As did many of my colleagues, I reported to my constituents in Chambly to get their reactions to the Budget. Many people, including owners of businesses, employees and others reacted very encouragingly to the measures proposed by the Government to reduce the deficit and to create a climate of confidence that will promote investment in Canada and put 1,400,000 people back to work, people who can now look to the future with optimism. Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the constituents of the riding of Chambly, I want to offer the Minister of Finance our sincere congratulations for having chosen the right path, the one leading to Canada's economic renewal.

ANNOUNCED CLOSING OF HEAVY WATER PLANTS IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced in his Budget that the heavy water plants in Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury would be closed down. This has indicated a certain callousness and indifference to the people of Cape Breton. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) had promised on more than one occasion that any decision with respect to the closure of the two plants would be withheld until replacement jobs had been found for all workers. The Government has now broken that commitment.

For the record, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, on November 23, 1985, said to the workers, and it was announced in The Chronicle-Herald:

> I can assure you there will be no move made at all in that area unless there is a development plan in place to replace any employment effects associated with moving on the heavy water plants—

In February of 1985, she said:

> — any plans to close the two plants will not proceed before alternate employment can be found for displaced workers.

The Government has broken other promises as well. It promised consultation with the provinces, with management, with labour—with all sectors of Canadian society. Despite these lofty intensions the Government did not at any time seek to consult with the workers at Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury. This is an astounding fact, when one considers that it is the workers themselves who are most directly affected by the plant closures.

I call upon the Government for some positive actions on behalf of the people of Canada, as opposed to the lofty promises and intentions which have yet to be realized or implemented.

PENSIONS

PENSION PLAN REFORM

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday night we saw action on many fronts vital to the health of the nation. But few were as significant as that of pension reform.

After 10 years of obstruction and procrastination it took a Tory Government, a dynamic and responsive Government, to bring needed pension reform to this great country in only nine months.

These changes will provide more workers with the opportunity to join pension plans and to participate in the management of pension funds. These changes will protect workers who change jobs against the loss of pension benefits. It will provide workers after two years of plan membership with the right to their pension benefits, which they well deserve.

Most important, these changes will provide equal pensions for women and men retiring under identical circumstances, and will provide survivor benefits for spouses. These major reforms will provide for the splitting of pensions between spouses upon marriage breakdown. These measures will provide needed equity between men and women and, by doing so, the Tory Government is proving it believes that women should get their fair share.

SMALL BUSINESS

SMALL-BUSINESSMAN'S LETTER ON BUDGET

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I received the following letter today. It reads:

> As a small businessman, I was quite enthusiastic when I learned of the Budget's emphasis on rejuvenating the Canadian economy via a series of steps designed to enhance small business. I must admit, however, that the new Budget confuses me as to how it will help small business.

The vast majority of my business revolves around the sale of various day-to-day necessities, such as toothpaste and bathroom tissue, as well as tobacco products, non-alcoholic beverages, candy and snack foods. The new Budget, which raises taxes on every one of these items, has had the net effect of lowering consumer demand for these products.

I understood the role of the new Budget to be one of encouraging the expansion of small businesses in the hopes that we could create jobs. However, at least in my case the opposite is true, as this Budget is placing my business in a precarious position in two related ways.

First, the Budget is reducing my gross sales by lowering consumer demand. Second, the Budget adversely affects the most important component of any successful business—customer "goodwill". It accomplishes this by raising consumer taxes in such a manner that small business takes the rap for the present Government's policies.

In conclusion, it seems to me, as a small businessman, that the Minister of Finance's approach to helping small business is in need of re-examination.

Sincerely,

Abba's Grocery,
344 Bell Street S.,
Ottawa.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF CHAIRMAN OF THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS OF THE RUSSIAN FEDERATED SOCIALIST REPUBLIC

Mr. Speaker: I should like to indicate to the House the presence in our gallery today of His Excellency Vitaly Vorotnikov, member of the Politburo of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, and Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PENSIONS

CHANGE IN INDEXATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will recall that on Friday last, here in the House, I asked him why he had been sneaky and had not been straight with the people of Canada and the Canadian taxpayer in his Budget.

I told him that the deindexation of the tax brackets, the general deductions, the old age pensions and the family allowances would mean, in effect, a hidden and massive tax increase at the rate of 3 per cent a year, per year, per year, all cumulative. My colleague from Laval-des-Rapides has produced a document from the Department of Finance which bears out the point I made in this House on Friday.

Will the Minister now admit what he refused to admit on Friday, namely, that an 80-year old widow living on an old age pension, with a guaranteed income supplement, will lose, in absolute terms by the year 1990, $30 per month, and by 1991 over $45 a month? Why will the Minister not come clean and say to the members of this House, and to the people of Canada, that he has been clandestine and sneaky with respect to the tax increases that he is imposing on the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is dead wrong in the way he has expressed his point. I think what he should do is read the budget speech where the fiscal problem that we have, and the range of means by which we are dealing with it, are clearly set out. We have set a track here, a track which will carry on over a number of years. However, I caution the Hon. Member that the directions we are going in now are essentially toward controlling the fiscal problem of the country at an early date.

I ask him if he does not support the policy that we are following with respect to getting the deficit under control. If he does not support it, then he is going totally contrary to everything he has said over the past four or five years.

IMPACT OF BUDGET ON PENSIONERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with that subject fully in the House tomorrow. The public finances of the country have to be brought under control—but not at the expense of the weak, the unemployed, the elderly or the disabled. I have said that publicly for the past five years.

In 1990 we will have 1,740,000 senior citizens living at or below the poverty line. We have calculated that the reduction in the old age pension, plus the increase in the various sales taxes, will mean that these senior citizens will lose $1.25 billion in income in 1990. That is the exact amount represented by the exemption for capital gains tax for our more wealthy citizens.

Does the Minister really want the wealthy citizens of this country to receive a tax benefit, what I have called a cash bonanza, of $125,000 in a lifetime, at the expense of the elderly citizens of the country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made reference to the disabled. It is very clear that in the Budget we are taking steps to help the disabled. We have maintained indexation for the guaranteed income supplement and for the child tax credit. In fact we are increasing the child tax credit in excess of the rate of inflation over the next few years. We have maintained full indexation for the programs for veterans, so what he said in the preamble to his question is dead wrong.

● (1420)

I might just observe that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides is on record as saying that he oppose tax indexation. He has said that tax indexation is a short-sighted measure which may prevent government from efficiently fighting inflation, and that is what we are trying to do.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

De-indexation is a tax, a clandestine, secret and hidden tax on the Canadian people. The Minister's secret forecasts, made public yesterday by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, indicate that by 1990, Canadians will suffer a net loss of $630 million per year on deductions and tax credits for children. Is the Minister of Finance prepared to admit to the House today that he is making huge cutbacks in family programs? Is he prepared to admit that he has broken the Prime Minister's promise not to reduce budgets for social programs in order to reduce the deficit?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what we have set out to do in this Budget is set the Government on a track toward getting control of the massive debt problem which is a burden on all Canadians. It is very important that Canadians recognize that there is a broad attack taking place, and that everyone has been asked to share some of the load. There is to be a tax on the capital of banks, and a surtax on corporations.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If Hon. Members opposite would just relax a little, I would continue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Obviously they do not want to listen.

STATEMENTS MADE BY SOLICITOR GENERAL—REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister reprimanded the Solicitor General for taking sides in the Coates case, and less than five minutes after that the Solicitor General told the media outside the House that he did not regret having spoken out as he did. Last winter, after the clandestine Hatfield meeting was revealed, the Prime Minister was also critical of the Solicitor General, saying that such a meeting would not have been held in a perfect world. However, the Solicitor General said that he would hold such a meeting again. Both acts were highly offensive to the administration of justice or, to use the Prime Minister's own words, they were fundamentally inappropriate.

Given that we have a Solicitor General who has a perverse lack of appreciation not only of the responsibilities of his office but of his duty to the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Kaplan: Here is the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Given all of that, is it not time for the Prime Minister to appoint a new Solicitor General?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appointed a new Solicitor General because we did not want one who would go out and authorize the payment of $100,000 to a killer in British Columbia. People have had it up to the ears with that kind of stuff.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: The Solicitor General is an extremely honourable man, and I think that the former Solicitor General would be well advised not to indulge in selective quotations from the Solicitor General, because what he said was very clear-cut.

MINISTERIAL BEHAVIOUR

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the record shows very clearly that I did not authorize that payment of $100,000. The Attorney General of British Columbia authorized that payment.

I would like to deal with the subject at hand. What are the Prime Minister's criteria for disciplining Ministers? The Minister of National Defence has a drink in a bar and is asked to resign, or advised to resign. The Solicitor General engages in conduct which the Prime Minister himself criticizes, and he is allowed to remain in the Cabinet and gets a rose pinned on his lapel by the Prime Minister. What kind of criteria is the Prime Minister using?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I referred to the injunction in regard to the process that was quite properly mentioned by my hon. friend from Hamilton Mountain, and it applied to all Members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Nunziata: We're not all Ministers.

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member for York South-Weston was in agreement with the general thrust of the comment.

Ms. Copps: He was not.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Let him speak for himself.

Mr. Mulroney: I think that my hon. friend should take the cautionary reference made by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston, as all Members of the House will, in regard to comments made by those involved in a quasi-judicial process. I agreed yesterday with my friend from Hamilton Mountain. His comment was appropriate, and I expect that all Members of the House will follow it in their future conduct.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

WATER EXPORT COMPANY—PRIME MINISTERS' OFFER OF CO-OPERATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister and it concerns a report in today's Montreal Gazette with which I am sure the Prime Minister is familiar. The report concerns a civil action that is being brought against a company established to export water from the Prime Minister's constituency to the Middle East.

My question concerns the support the Prime Minister allegedly gave to this company. Quite specifically, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he could tell the House what he meant when he told the company president, in a letter under the Prime Ministerial imprimatur, that he would offer "every co-operation to assist" the company after he had looked into what he described as the "corporate initiatives" being taken by the company.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the letter to which the Hon. Member refers offers every co-operation to establish productive jobs in the constituency of Manicouagan.

[Translation]

And that is perfectly normal. I was approached by the Mayor of Seven Islands in my capacity as Member for Manicouagan. The mayor had a letter of approval from the Government of Quebec and plans for a project that would create about 50 jobs on the North Shore. I thought it was perfectly normal that I, as the Member for the riding, should support a job creation project, which I did, and I believe any other Member of this House would have done the same in similar circumstances.

ROLE OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, no one is questioning the obligation of Members of Parliament, on whichever side of the House, to take action to support the location of jobs in their constituencies. The question pertains to something other than that. First, all Members of Parliament are not the Prime Minister. It is the Prime Minister who can request the Secretary of State for External Affairs to take related action in terms of his responsibilities. Members of Parliament, as opposed to Ministers of the Crown, cannot do those things.

My question in this regard would pertain to members of the Ministry as well as other Members. Does the Prime Minister think it is appropriate that he, as Prime Minister, lent his support to a highly speculative economic venture, in a letter that was subsequently used to get other investors to take part in the project, a project that is now involved in a civil suit?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my information is that, prior to coming to see me, the other investors had been approached and were involved. I can only tell my hon. friend the facts. I was approached by the Mayor of Seven Islands—

● (1430)

—who came to see me with a person who had already received the support of the Quebec Government in the form of a letter signed by the Deputy Prime Minister of Quebec, the Hon. Bernard Landry. I looked into the project and talked about it with the mayor who had discussed it with the municipal council of Seven Islands. Water was available from the municipality of Seven Islands. I therefore wrote the following in English, at the mayor's request, and I quote:

[English]

—I wish to extend to you and your colleagues every co-operation to assist, if possible, in bringing productive employment to the area.

I was adivsed that some 50 or 55 jobs could result. I thought it was an appropriate way to be helpful to the Mayor of Seven Islands in trying to bring the jobs to my area.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S LETTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the letter which was sent by the Prime Minister states categorically that he looked into the project. In the letter he said that he had a look at their corporate initiatives, which suggests that in some sense he did some background work on the project. Then he wrote to the president of the company with a fulsome endorsation of the project. The letter was subsequently used by the president to get other people to invest.

Does the Prime Minister really think it is appropriate for himself, other members of the Cabinet, or any Member of Parliament, to endorse speculative projects which may involve risks, not for themselves but for other Canadians, particularly in this instance pensioners who could be persuaded because of such endorsation to use their pension funds for investment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not only unfair but extremely inaccurate for my hon. friend to refer to a proforma letter which I wrote as a fulsome endorsation of the project. There was absolutely nothing in the letter which was a recommendation of the project, least of all a fulsome endorsation of the project. There was an approach made to me, in my capacity as Member of Parliament for Manicouagan, by the Mayor of Seven Islands, which is backed up with a letter from—

—Bernard Landry, Minister of Intergovernmental Relations of the Government of Quebec.

[English]

There was no fulsome endorsation of it by me whatsoever. There is nothing in the letter which could be construed as an invitation to investors to get involved. Clearly, as a Member of Parliament—

I realize the Liberals think it is funny that a Member from Quebec should actually try to bring jobs to Quebecers. I know you think that is funny, and the people of Quebec are watching the Quebec Liberals laugh, but we are going to keep on trying, and that has been a project—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

STATEMENTS MADE BY SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and it concerns his Solicitor General and the contempt which he has shown toward the Human Rights Commission and anyone's sense of fair play and justice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: How much more incompetence do Canadians have to take from the Solicitor General? The Solicitor General has a fundamentally perverse misunderstanding of his role as a Solicitor General. He has brought the administration of justice into disrepute and he has challenged the very integrity of the Human Rights Commission.

Is the Prime Minister prepared today to dissociate himself and his Government, completely and unequivocally, from the statements which were made by his Solicitor General in this particular case? Will the Prime Minister extend his apology, and the apology of his Government, to the Human Rights Commission for the conduct of his Solicitor General?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Normally, Mr. Speaker, I would not think that would be deserving of a lengthy reply, except were it not for the fact of the well-known solicitude which the hon. gentleman has for other people's reputations.

I responded yesterday in regard to what I thought was a very thoughtful question which was put by the House Leader for the NDP. I gave a response that I believe was appropriate, which dealt not only with the Minister but with all Members of the House. I have nothing further to add, except that the Hon. Member should perhaps think a little before he speaks in regard to damage being done to other people's reputations, inasmuch as he is the principal sinner in this House.

CONDUCT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, Canadians quite justifiably are having some difficulty understanding why the former Minister of National Defence resigned when he simply attended a strip bar in West Germany, and why the Solicitor General is clinging to power when his conduct is so inappropriate. Will the Prime Minister explain why he advised the former Minister of National Defence to resign, and why he has not discussed resignation with the Solicitor General? Can he explain to Canadians why the double standard? Would he not agree that the Solicitor General's conduct to date is far worse than the conduct of the former Minister of National Defence?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Leader isn't applauding.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, the Leader of the Opposition is not applauding, because he is an honourable man and would not applaud that kind of intervention.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: He is just as ashamed of it as the rest of the Members of the House of Commons.

The former Minister of National Defence, in a difficult moment, acted with great honour, as did the Solicitor General, who has given the House an appropriate and thoughtful response.

Oral Questions

EFFECT OF CHANGE IN INDEXATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance knows that the impact of his budget proposal to deindex pensions will have a serious effect on most pensioners. The Minister also knows that the impact on a 50-year-old Canadian who is planning for his retirement is that, through inflation and reduction of the pension, he can expect to receive a pension which is equal to an amount approximately 50 per cent of what he receives today in real dollars. Would the Minister of Finance not agree that the proposal to deindex pensions is simply putting the boots to old age pensioners?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear to the Hon. Member so that he does not mislead the people who are watching Question Period. Indexation will be modified. There will still be a very potent form of insurance in the event that we do see high levels of inflation at some time in the future. We are having regard for the concern that older people have with respect to the effects of inflation. But I would like to remind the Hon. Member that older people are very concerned about the effects which deficits and debts have had on past levels of inflation. Therefore I believe they are willing to make a small sacrifice to do their part in fighting inflation, and to do that through reducing the high levels of debt.

LIBERAL BUDGET—STATEMENTS MADE BY PRESENT MINISTERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, on June 29, 1982, in response to the MacEachen proposal to deindex pensions, the Minister of Finance said:

—the Minister is to put the boots to those who are hardest hit in the economy today, the low-income people and the pensioners.

Would the Minister agree with the statement from the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands on the same day, on the same budgetary proposal, when she said:

The meanest move in his budget last night was to reduce sharply the indexing of old age security for those who do not receive the supplement.

Would the Minister of Finance not agree that the Government is indeed putting the boots to old age pensioners?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has forgotten to establish the perspective within which that comment was made.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): At that time inflation was running—

Mr. Blaikie: Come on, hypocrite.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it is reasonable for questions and answers to be heard. All Members in the House—and I am pointing in a particular direction—should refrain from using unparliamentary language.

• (1440)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me start again, Mr. Speaker. I think we should look at the situation we were facing at that time. There was a level of inflation. My recollection is that it was around 11 per cent. The Government at the time was proposing to reduce the level of indexation to 6 per cent. That was five percentage points it was knocking off the old age security benefits. What we are saying here today is that we have inflation down and we want to keep it down. One of the ways we can keep it down is by lowering the size of the deficit, getting control of the debt, and removing those ongoing pressures—

Mr. Broadbent: On the backs of the pensioners.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party would listen, he will hear that what we are trying to do is remove the pressures from that inflation which is causing the problem we are trying to protect Canadians against.

Mr. Broadbent: And the pensioners are paying for it.

THE ELDERLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. In Sherbrooke, last July 26, he made a promise to elderly Canadians and his first priority was to reinstate full old age security pension indexation to the cost of living as of January 1, 1985. Can the Prime Minister now explain to older Canadians why he let his Minister of Finance disregard that commitment to senior citizens, and also let his Minister of Finance eliminate part of the indexation, with the result that elderly Canadians will lose $54 a month?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I want to say to the Hon. Member that, when one takes a look at the entire indexing of old age pensions, one sees that the full indexing is still there for those pensioners who rely on the GIS.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The basic isn't.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I understand that, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Then say it.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Additionally, I want to say to the Hon. Member that he should go back, for instance, to 1982 and the discussion at that time when the former Government brought in six and five. At that time the debt was calculated at $10.9 billion. We then heard it was going to $19.6 billion. At that time the Government took those kinds of steps. Today we are looking at a deficit of around $35 billion. Surely the greatest protection which any person receiving old age security benefits can have is to make sure that that deficit is brought under control, so that the large amount of money which is being—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I ask the Ministers and the questioners, please, to be shorter. This is taking much longer than normal.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Prime Minister would be ashamed to answer the question. No wonder he is red-faced!

INDEXATION—CHEQUES FOR THE AGED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, and I dare hope that for once the elderly will get a clear and honest answer.

Ms. Copps: That is impossible!

Mr. Malépart: I checked the Minister's Budget and nowhere is there any reference to old age pensions being fully indexed. Can the Minister of Finance now promise elderly Canadians that, if inflation goes up 6 per cent, the guaranteed income supplement will also go up 6 per cent as will the basic old age security pension so that the poor in Canada, older people, will get the full—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it quite clear that anyone who receives an old age security cheque will receive the same cheque, or an increase, as the effects of modified indexation occur.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member knows that there will be a very potent form of insurance by keeping the modified indexation in place for those who receive the old age security. In addition, those who receive the guaranteed income supplement will receive full indexation of the CPI, as will people who receive the child tax credit, and the people who receive the veterans payments.

INDEXATION INQUIRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, yesterday our action group on jobs met with groups across Canada who expressed disappointment about parts of the Budget which affect them. They expressed real anger over the $1.6 billion which will be taken out of the pockets of our senior citizens by 1990. We heard things like: "What a hollow mockery this present Budget makes of the concepts of equity, fairness and compassion." Nowhere, Sir, is this more blatant than in "the harsh measures the Government is taking to—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Langdon: —partially deindex old age pensions".

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question now, please?

Mr. Langdon: Does the Minister agree with those words about the harshness of deindexing pensions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that perhaps the Hon. Member has talked to some people about the effects of the Budget, but my colleagues on this side represent 75 per cent of the households in Canada, and what I have heard from them—

Mr. Broadbent: In September.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): They still represent 75 per cent of the households in Canada, I say to the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

During the course of the past few days my colleagues have talked to the widest range of Canadians which anyone has talked to, and I have heard directly from them the comments, and they are positive. The comments tell us this is a fair Budget, it's a realistic Budget, and it is being honest with Canadians. It is going to be effective in creating jobs, and realistic in getting the size of the deficit under control.

BUDGET PROVISIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my quote with respect to deindexing, of course, was from the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration when she attacked the Liberal Government in 1982 about its last attempt to deindex pensions. Will the Minister of Finance agree that what was wrong in 1982 is wrong in 1985? Will he agree, as the Essex County Senior Citizens Federation told me yesterday morning, that a sense of decency and fairness requires that these pension measures be cut out of the present Budget?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Hon. Member that we are trying to do two fundamental things in this Budget. First, we are trying to get Canadians back to work and, second, we are trying to get control of the massive debt which this country has built up over the past 15 years. We cannot do one without the other.

We have to blend the policies in order to get effective results. I believe that we have blended those policies in an effective way to create jobs, and to reinforce the 201,000 jobs which have been created since September. As the same time, as that momentum of economic activity continues we are going to take another big bite out of the deficit because of the higher tax revenues we will receive from that increased revenue.

STIMULATION OF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the critical housing situation in major metropolitan areas—there is a .3 vacancy rate in Scarborough apartments—and in view of the great spin-off potential for job-creation in the housing industry, will the Minister of Finance indicate ways in which his Budget policies will stimulate new housing construction in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can say very directly and very clearly the way in which this Budget will generate increased housing activity, which we believe is very important for the country. Lower interest rates and lower mortgage rates are the fundamental cause of increased activity in the housing industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Since September 4 we have seen mortgage rates come down by close to 3 per cent. We believe that the direction of those interest rates as a result of this Budget will be towards a further reduction. That, Mr. Speaker, will have a far reaching impact, not only on housing but on manufacturing activity and a wide range of economic activity.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, no matter how good a face the Minister of Finance wishes to put on his Budget, there are many parts of it which are obviously deficient and perhaps even contain oversights. One cannot make a silk purse from a sow's ear, and he knows that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: He has four weeks before Parliament rises. Will he consider, during those weeks, taking corrective action in those areas where problems have been raised by people right across the country? The elderly are suffering, along with the unemployed. The regions are being savaged. Even the Minister of Justice knows that.

• (1450)

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Johnston: He has four weeks to take corrective action and bring it into the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: Will he do that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member has not been in opposition for a long time, and I would like to help him ask the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am not quite sure I got the thrust of the question because of the pauses but, as I indicated in response to a previous question, there has been a good degree of support, not just among my colleagues in the House, or editorial writers, but from many Canadians who are saying we are moving in the right direction.

We are finally sitting down and addressing the problems of unemployment and a high deficit. We are doing it in a fair way, and at the same time dealing with the problems of the disabled, and pension reform. There is a lot of meat in this Budget, and I suggest the Hon. Member read it.

ESTIMATES OF JOB CREATION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I have not been in opposition a long time. But he has not been Minister of Finance for a long time, and I would like to help him write his Budget.

There are Members in his own back benches who do not agree with him but who agree with me. The Member from Cape Breton is one. However, the Minister has told us again and again today that this is a job-creation Budget, yet the private experts, if you like, such as Data Resources and Informetrica, show thousands and thousands of lost jobs. The very least he can do is remove the anxiety of those who see themsleves threatened by the Budget, and table in this House his Department's estimates of what the job creation is actually going to be. Will he do that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Hon. Member that you learn a lot of things in opposition, and I wish him many, many long years there.

The Hon. Member made reference to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, who said, in referring to the Cape Breton tax credit in a latter to me: "These initiatives reflect our commitment to creating jobs. Congratulations."

I know the Hon. Member has some understanding of econometric models and knows very well their very severe limitations in projecting what might happen in the economy. I only have to remind him of what his colleagues were saying last November. The models back then indicated we were going to lose 50,000 to 100,000 jobs, and what has happened? Some 149,000 jobs have been created.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF FAIRNESS IN BUDGET

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, the Budget has the support of the Quebec Minister of Finance but, that PQ-Tory agreement notwithstanding, the Budget will cost Quebecers 40,000 jobs next year and, by the end of this decade, Quebec will have to raise 630 million more in taxes or cut back social, health and education services, while under the same agreement and thanks to the Budget of the Minister of Finance and reduced equalization—

Mr. Speaker: Is there a question?

Mr. Cassidy: Can the Minister explain how the Budget is fair to ordinary people in Quebec, considering its impact on employment, services and taxes?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that someone who is in very close touch with what is going on in the Province of Quebec is the Minister of Finance of that province's Government. While not giving the Budget a blanket endorsement, he did say that it was moving in the right direction and addressing the problems of that province. It was doing many of the things that the people in that province felt should be done in addressing the twin problems of high unemployment and job creation on the one hand, and deficit control on the other. These numbers that the Hon. Member is throwing around about 40,000 jobs lost have just been pulled right out of the air and have no basis in fact.

FINANCIAL AID TO QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Minister of Finance that the unemployment rate in Quebec is still over 12 per cent and that, during the election campaign, the Government promised grants to the shipbuilding industry in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada. Why did the Government withdraw its support for shipyards in spite of its election promises, and why did the Government withdraw financial assistance in spite of its promise to help industries in Quebec's hard-pressed regions? Is that fair to the unemployed in Quebec?

Mr. Lapierre: Not the Quebec Minister.

An Hon. Member: The new Quebec Minister.

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, if I may be given an opportunity to speak as a Minister of the Government of Canada—

Mr. Deans: On behalf of the Government of the United States.

Mr. Stevens: —I would like to assure the Hon. Member that he is not correct in saying that assistance has been cut off from the shipbuilding industry and the grant program to which he referred. In fact there will be continuing assistance for another seven years.

INCREASED BORROWING COSTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that interest rates have dropped about 3 per cent since the election. He will also know we are borrowing roughly $4 billion more this year than last. I was wondering if he could explain to the House why his appropriation for interest payments this year is $3.6 billion higher than last year, in view of lower interest rates and a lower borrowing requirement.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as we borrow each year to cover the defict, that is piled on top of an ever increasing amount of debt. It is that ever increasing amount of debt on which we have to pay interest. The increase in the amount of debt charges I beliee is $3 billion, and a 10 per cent interest rate on a borrowing requirement of $30 billion is about $3 billion. It is for that reason we are on a bit of a treadmill here, and if we do not take action to reduce the size of the deficit we will never get that debt problem under control.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

CUTS IN FUNDING

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last August he sent a telex to my Progressive Conservative opponent stating that the Chalk River nuclear laboratories would not only be fully maintained but that a Progressive Conservative Government would consider additional funding. The Minister of Finance has now slashed AECL research and development funding by $100 million and has lifted an additional $70 million out of the company's retained earnings. Therefore I ask the Prime Minister, in all sincerity, why has he broken his promise in a way which will cause a large loss of jobs and result in another brain drain from Canada, just like the Avro brain drain which was perpetrated on the Canadian people by a previous Conservative Government.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member looked closely at the Budget he would see that it represents a very major commitment on the part of the Government of Canada to reinvigorate research and development activities from coast to coast.

If I may address specifically the question the Hon. Member has posed, yes, we have made some adjustments to the R & D program at AECL, but there will be discussions with other provinces to see whether there can be a co-operative approach taken to nuclear research and development. I do want to underline that the safety and health elements of the research and development programs will be maintained.

EFFECT ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance, since the Prime Minister refuses to say why he did not keep his promise. The Minister of Finance stated in his Budget that he was going to reward success. How can he justify this statement after cutting $100 million out of R and D and lifting another $70 million out of the earned savings of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited? That is money that that Crown corporation earned largely through the world renowned laboratories at Chalk River. Does he not realize that he is creating another brain drain situation, or is he prepared to be the author of another Avro-Arrow story?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Member obviously wrote that question before he heard the answer to the first question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have said that we will be working with other utilities in Canada to see whether we can approach the research and development program for the Candu reactor on a co-operative basis.

In response to the broad thrust of the Hon. Member's question, I can say that broadening the definition of R and D, and having a refundable tax credit which will be of great benefit to a wide range of research and development companies across Canada, represent by far the largest commitment to research and development that any Government has made in recent years in Canada.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) on Monday, May 27, 1985, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * * * *

Mr. Speaker: I am now in a position to give two rulings that were requested. The first was requested by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) with regard to television coverage of the Budget. The second is with regard to the complaint by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) concerning words used yesterday by the Hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty).

PRIVILEGE

ANSWER GIVEN BY MR. BEATTY DURING QUESTION PERIOD—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I have, as requested, examined the record. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) believed that the Minister had accused him of lying. The record does not show that any such accusation was made, and I am bound to say that I can find nothing unparliamentary in the words complained of.

However, I should like to use this occasion to repeat a plea which I have made several times in the House, namely, that Hon. Members should at all times observe the normal courtesies of debate in the exchanges which take place in the House, particularly during Question Period. Today we had examples of deviation from what I think we all believe to be the appropriate practice for Members of the House. Expressions and comments can be offensive without necessarily being unparliamentary. Proceedings would certainly be improved if all Members would avoid the use of offensive language whether parliamentary or unparliamentary.

TELEVISION COVERAGE OF BUDGET DEBATE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: With regard to the complaint of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) about television coverage, I have now viewed several hours of budget speeches on camera. That is a part of the job that I was not aware of when I accepted this role. However, I am bound to say that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is in fact correct in his complaint.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The television coverage of the latest budget speech is significantly and substantially different from the coverage of previous budget speeches over the years. As Hon. Members would expect, I therefore have two things to say. The first is that I have in fact brought the discrepancies to the attention of the broadcasting bureau. The second is that, in my view, it would be appropriate, at least for the moment, to return to the guidelines that have been established.

I watched all the television coverage of all the budget speeches. From the point of view of television coverage and reporting, it is my view that the coverage of the latest budget speech was better television. I say that for only one reason. Hon. Members know that the rules which the bureau must follow were established by the House. I think it may be time for the parliamentary Committee on Reform of the House of Commons to give some thought to whether it is time for us to consider exactly what we want television to do fairly for all Parties and all Members at all times in the House.

PETITIONS

JOBS FOR YOUTH AT GAS STATIONS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present to the House. Given the windfalls that were given to the oil companies as a result of the Budget and the Western Accord, and given that there are no guarantees that these companies will create jobs with those monies, we ask that the oil companies be told to end self service gas stations to provide jobs for young people.

RESETTLEMENT OF TIGREANS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a few residents of Vancouver, some of whom reside in my riding. It brings to the attention of the Government of Canada that the resettlement of Tigreans being conducted by the Government of Ethiopia will have disastrous consequences for the Tigrean people. These people are being resettled in an area where they have significant linguistic and cultural differences with the indigenous people, making for a potential recurrence of violence and persecution.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1985-86

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 63 I move:

Since the list is rather long and there is a detailed allocation of the Estimates to the committees, if it is agreeable to the House, I would ask that the list be printed in Hansard as if it had been read.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE

ESTABLISHMENT AND ORDER OF REFERENCE OF SUBCOMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are three items which have been the subject of consultations between the Parties that I want to bring to the attention of the House. If you were to seek unanimous consent and put these motions forward, I think you would find a disposition to accept the same.

• (1510)

The first is the longest. It deals with the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. I move:

Motions

That a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture be appointed to examine annual reports of the Minister responsible for the Status of Disabled Persons and report and make recommendations to the House on any such reports and on questions referred to it by the House;

That five Members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, be members of the subcommittee;

That the subcommittee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary;

That the subcommittee have the power to adjourn from place to place inside Canada provided that the locations to be visited and the estimated expenses for such travel are determined in advance and submitted to the Commissioners of Internal Economy for approval;

That the subcommittee report directly to the House on the reports of the Minister responsible for the Status of Disabled Persons and on questions referred to it by the House;

That the subcommittee have all of the powers of a standing committee of the House, pursuant to Standing Order 69(8); and

That changes in membership on the part of the House of commons be made only pursuant to Standing Order 69(4)(b).

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) rising to speak on the same matter?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, there is agreement. I want to make sure for the record, however, that the total number of five members of the committee will be representative of all Parties in the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not think there is any question about that.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

AUTHORISATION TO TRAVEL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration who are presently involved in the committee's study on the detention of immigrants in the Toronto area, be empowered to travel to Toronto and Montreal during the week of June 10 to 14, 1985, for the purpose of holding public hearings and that the necessary staff do accompany them.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move that the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, presented to the House on Wednesday, May 22, 1985, be concurred in.

This report deals with the consideration of the circumstances arising with respect to legislation concerning the Canadian Commercial Bank and, in effect, allows an extension of the period of time for the consideration of that matter.

Motion agreed to.

POINT OF ORDER

TELEVISION COVERAGE OF BUDGET DEBATE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order. There is an important question that I think remains as a result of your ruling with respect to the matter of televising the budget speech.

I believe that the House should be informed as to exactly who gave the instructions to the broadcasting bureau to depart from the rules previously agreed to by the House as to the manner of broadcasting the budget speech. I am not sure who should give this answer, whether it is the Government House Leader or an appropriate officer of the House, but I think it is necessary as a result of your ruling a few moments ago for this additional information to be provided to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is asking a very good question to which I do not yet have the final answer. As the Hon. Member would expect, I have sought the answer to that question and will be happy to advise the House when I know it.

It is clear from watching the coverage of the last few Budgets that there have been more periods of applause during the budget presentations, which creates difficulty for the producers in the television facility. I suspect that producers, on their own initiative and with the best of intentions, have been bringing the cameras back for wider shots during those periods in order to deal with what would be relatively dead time in production terms.

Furthermore, between the two budget presentations, the placement of the Finance Minister in the Chamber changed sufficiently so that when the same three cameras were used for Mr. Lalonde, there was an entirely different perspective because Mr. Lalonde sat at that end and the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) sits at this end. This time, a fourth camera—the camera at the end—was added to the shot and, I suspect, for the same reason. It was added and used during periods of applause. Therefore, the head and shoulder coverage, which is covered in our rules as the electronic Hansard of someone speaking, was not available because we were dealing with a period when no one was speaking.

While I will certainly relay any further information, I suspect that there is nothing more to it than an attempt by our staff to try to make the presentation of the House easier to follow on television. I will, of course, be happy to report to the House of Commons whatever information I find.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 289.

CHIP AND COSP PROGRAMS

Question No. 289—Mr. de Jong:

1. How many barrels of imported oil are saved annually as a result of the CHIP and COSP programs in (a) Canada (b) the Atlantic provinces (c) the Province of Quebec?

2. What does the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources estimate the financial savings to have been from the reduction in the level of imported oil for (a) Canada (b) the Atlantic provinces (c) the Province of Quebec?

3. What is the Department's estimated costs, both direct and indirect, of the National Energy Program to the Government?

4. What is the Department's estimate in terms of barrels of oil produced as a direct result of the programs, incentives and tax breaks of the NEP?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1 and 2. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources does not possess the information to discern whether the oil previously used was imported or not. For the CHIP program, EM&R's data base does not contain information on oil displacement or even on fuel type used when the CHIP work was carried out. Therefore, the only numbers that EM&R can supply are as follows:

(a) Nationally: Energy savings attributable to work carried out under CHIP are equivalent to 10 million barrels of oil a year. Oil displaced by conversions carried out under COSP: 12 million barrels a year.

(b) Atlantic: CHIP—750,000 barrels a year, COSP—1,300,000 barrels a year.

(c) Quebec: CHIP—2,623,000 barrels a year, COSP—5,162,000 barrels a year.

3. The Department in 1982 estimated the cost of all the new initiatives announced in the NEP to be $9.1 billion for the four year period 1981-82 to 1984-85. A revision to this estimate has not been carried out. For the key NEP initiatives, the Department's most recent estimates are provided below.

	1981/82	1982/83	1983/84	1984/85
Petroleum Incentives Program	—	1824	1748	1770
Oil Substitution Program	134	188	204	228
Home Insulation Program	130	224	53	114
Natural Gas Laterals	—	5	77	169
	264	2241	2082	2281

4. The Department does not have such an estimate available and it would be very difficult to estimate the direct impact of the NEP on oil production. There have been a number of other factors that have influenced the level of oil production in Canada since the NEP. These factors include remaining geological potential, technological advancements, producer expectations on future oil and natural gas prices, cost of exploration, development and production, provincial incentives, producer cash flow and expected rates of return on investments in other sectors of the Canadian economy and in other countries. It is very difficult to separate the effects of these other factors on oil production from those resulting directly from the NEP.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1985-86 (NO. 2)

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (for the Minister of State (Finance)) that Bill C-51, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was interrupted this morning I was talking about the difficulty in arriving at a true picture of the deficit because the numbers shift depending on how one views them.

I have mentioned that in a year when the personal income tax rebates are returned early, one can get an apparent exaggeration of the size of the deficit. It is corrected the following year although nothing has really changed.

Another example of this is in the February, 1984 Budget. The Department of Finance predicted an annual growth rate of 3.8 per cent over the next four years. Some ten months later, with another Minister of Finance, the Department of Finance produced totally different figures, and the result on paper was an addition of $9 billion to the deficit. This certainly points out the need for Members of Parliament to have better figures if we are to examine the financial requirements of the Government responsibly.

The need for better figures is one experienced equally by all Members of the House. For that reason, I hope that the Government will co-operate with the Auditor General in the study he is conducting in association with his opposite numbers in the United States. The object is to present Members of Parliament with figures which make for clear comparison and better understanding of the nation's business.

Deficit reduction over the next five years, to the extent that it can materially be seen, is to be pursued in a very unfair manner. The wealthy pay little, if anything. Apart from a one-year bump, corporations will enjoy substantial tax cuts.

However, lower and middle income groups will pay heavily. By 1990-91, individuals will be paying an extra $4.1 billion in income tax and $2.6 billion in sales and excise tax. However, corporations will enjoy a $2.2 billion decrease in taxes.

In addition, Canadians will find the real value of their pensions, family allowances and child tax support badly eroded. De-indexation of those programs by three percentage points will erode their real value by 16 per cent in 1990 to 1991. Canadians will have less disposable income to spend at a time when consumption is the key to sustaining the economic recovery.

The Old Age Security benefit payments will be cut by $1.6 billion by 1990-91 with a sizeable cut of $245 million as early as next year. Family allowances will be cut by $400 million in 1990-91 and by $90 million next year. Other cuts hit some sectors of our economy hard, in particular, agriculture. With the cuts in agricultural subsidies, food prices must go up.

The capital gains tax holiday is going to make it more profitable to get out of farming than to stay in it. As more farmers get out of farming and the value of the surrounding holdings is depressed, it does not take a lot of imagination to foresee much difficulty in the agricultural sector which will impact on the urban consumer.

The Budget has a lot of smoke and mirrors in the introduction of surtaxes on upper income groups, corporations and banks for a limited time period only. For the low to middle income family, especially those with dependent children, the cuts are ongoing.

The capital gains tax holiday which I just mentioned, apart from farmers, will benefit in the main affluent Canadians who are able to benefit from this exemption. Based on 1982 statistics, some 63 per cent of the capital gains exemption will accrue to people earning $50,000 a year or more, although they represent only 4 per cent of total taxpayers. The wealthier in society will enjoy significant tax reductions, but the poor and the lower middle class will have significant tax hikes.

The essential criticism I have of the Government's plan is the lack of any agenda for economic growth. Contrary to the leap of faith expounded in the Budget, many experts expect the proposed measures to slow economic growth. Even the Budget documents appear to undercut the Minister's Budget statements. The forecast for GNP growth shows 3.1 per cent for 1985. This is a decrease from the 1984 growth of 4.7 per cent. The Budget indicates a further deceleration in 1986 to 2.4 per cent.

Most authorities will say that even to stand still at our present unemployment rate of 11 per cent, which is unacceptably high, we need growth of 3 per cent. How can the Minister say that there will be jobs created when he is anticipating growth of less than 3 per cent? The Minister is anticipating growth of less than 3 per cent without the impact of his Budget cuts. I note that one respected forecaster for Woods Gordon has been quoted as saying the Budget's tax increases will cut GNP growth to about 1.9 per cent in 1986. If the forecaster is right, unemployment will increase sharply.

The Budget takes some $13 billion out of the economy over this year and next. The Budget takes at least $3 billion out of direct disposable income through personal income tax increases, sales tax increases, and cuts in transfers to persons, namely Old Age Security and family allowances. This cut in disposable income hits particularly the low and middle income group. The low and middle income groups are the people who spend their money on the necessities of life. They have very little margin for saving. Therefore, taking money away from them is taking money out of the economy and reduces consumer spending.

Investment is essentially driven by consumer demand, both domestic and foreign. Exports to the United States are weakening with the economic slowdown there. The Budget depresses domestic demand. In those circumstances, how can we share the economic and optimistic hopes of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)?

The Government tell us it is banking on a rise in confidence to spur economic recovery. Canadians are more sensible than to invest or spend solely because the Government says so. There must be visible reasons to do so, including improved employment prospects. The Budget does little to reduce the deficit, hence business confidence is not fortified. The Budget strikes at consumers, hence shaking their confidence. The Budget document entitled Canada's Economic Prospects has some material concerning consumer expenditures on page 16. It shows consumer expenditures to be very weak in 1986 when the tax measures really begin to bite. That same budget document shows net exports decreasing. Given that Canadian industry is still operating well below full plant capacity, probably at about 75 per cent, why would investment leap in 1986?

The Budget is based on supply side economics, the trickle down effect, which even the Reagan administration abandoned long ago.

Our real problem in Canada is the millions of dollars worth of goods and services we are not producing. The Budget does not address this. There is no agenda for economic growth which creates jobs. Instead, the Government has chosen to rely on a tax grab from low and middle income earners.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, as usual I appreciate listening to the comments of my colleague, the spokesman for the Liberal Party. As usual, she had a number of interesting and thoughtful reflections on where the country is not going and so on. I listened carefully to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when he introduced Bill C-51, an Act to provide Borrowing Authority. He is asking us to approve today in principle the borrowing of $18.2 billion. Even for yourself, Mr. Speaker, you will appreciate that is a lot of change. When we are talking about $18 billion, we have a number of points to raise and questions to put to the Minister of Finance in order for us to endorse this request.

While the Minister of Finance has asked us for speedy passage of this Bill—we have no intention of holding up a borrowing authority—we have some comments we wish to make. I think it is fair to say that if we took a day or two to approve the borrowing of $18 billion, I do not think people would consider that to be hasty or unrealistic. I think, Sir, you can anticipate two or three speakers from our Party, and I suspect my colleagues in the Liberal Party will do the same thing.

Having said some complimentary things about my colleague in the Liberal Party, I would be remiss not to mention that we are being asked to borrow extra money, not because of Liberal Members of Parliament—that would be unfair to them and their integrity—but because some of their colleagues in the Senate decided it was in the best interests of the country to hold up approval of the previous borrowing authority, Bill C-11, for $12 billion.

As a result, that cost the taxpayers of Canada an extra $15 million. When we talk about multibillion dollar budgets, $15 million may not sound like a lot of money. However, $15 million in extra charges, which the Members of the House of Commons were not prepared to levy, would have provided a whole set of child care centres and a wide set of opportunities to build and put into place transition homes for battered women or abused children. I could go on and on with a whole variety of areas in which that $15 million would have enabled us to perform a number of measures as a Parliament.

When we were asked by the Minister of Finance to authorize the borrowing of $18.2 billion, we heard in the same presentation, and more recently in the budget presentation, that the Government has launched itself in a new direction. We heard that there is a new era beginning for Canada and that the Government will be handling matters quite differently from now on. We have been told that we will be seeing new approaches, new directions and new developments.

Those are certainly great terms, and we welcome them. Indeed, we do. The one item I found absent from the Budget and, therefore, I think of concern to all Members of Parliament when we authorize the borrowing of $18.2 billion, was the apparent lack of a clear direction for the country.

To put that into context, and to be fair to the Members of the Conservative Party, what I think the Budget said is that we are now turning our attention totally to the private sector in order to create the 1.5 million jobs required in this country over the next number of years. We do not expect it to happen next month, or even this year. However, by unleashing the private sector, by giving it a variety of tax breaks, by giving individuals who make their living through investments, we are now looking to the private sector—the small, medium and large businesses of Canada—to provide the bulk, if not the entirety, of those 1.5 million jobs, in order to provide opportunities for the unemployed.

If you like, that is an approach to job creation. It is a somewhat different approach than what we have had in the past. I emphasize the word "somewhat". When you look at what Mr. MacEachen did in his Budget and consider what he said he was going to do, and when you consider what Mr. Lalonde did in his Budget and consider what he said he was going to do, I think the two said the same thing. In effect, they said they were going to give a great many tax breaks to upper income earners. They said that a number of tax breaks will be given to the business and corporate sectors in the anticipation of creating jobs. We have tried that, Mr. Speaker. However, this measure has taken us just a bit closer to the extreme.

That is not a direction for the country. It is a process. It leaves me to ask the question, what direction has the Government provided for the textile and footwear industries of Canada? If we were to interview people involved in that business and ask what direction this sector will take over the next decade, what would people say? What would people involved in the telecommunications and aerospace sectors say when asked the same question? I do not think there is a clear vision coming out of the Budget, or even out of subsequent discussions.

What is the situation with respect to the forest sector? This is a sector which touches every province and territory in this country. Where are we going with respect to the forest industry? I am speaking now of pulp and paper, plywood and lumber, the manufacture of shingles and shakes. Are we expanding in these vital areas? Are we rationalizing these industries? Are we cutting back?

It is not clear. What is clear is that some countries, such as Sweden and Finland, are developing resource industries such as forestry. For every tree which is cut down in those countries, three more are planted. Then, over time, the three trees are thinned out to ensure that for every tree cut down a good, strong tree is grown to replace it.

We have a different approach in this country. We cut down three trees and plant one. We are still doing that in spite of recent developments. Again, one asks where are we going with respect to the forest industry?

What is the situation with respect to fishing, whether it be the East Coast, inland or West Coast fishery? What will be the situation with respect to the fishing industry in Canada over the next number of years? At this point, I look to my colleague from Newfoundland, where fishing plays such an important role. I am forced to ask where the Newfoundland fishery will be at the end of this decade. Will it be healthy? Will it be rationalized and, in parts, phased out? Where are we in terms of fish farming and aquaculture? Again, there is no direction, no vision, no blueprint, no strategy for such a critical resource industry in this Budget. There is absolutely nothing.

One could go on and on. I think one of the most important industries any country has, particularly a country such as Canada, is the agricultural sector, the food processing sector. In every province and territory there is a certain amount of that life-critical sector, food production. What is our game plan in Canada with respect to this sector? Is it to become self-sufficient in the critical areas over the next decade or two? Is it to develop more exports in agriculture? The present Government has canned Canagrex and said that the Crown corporation whose business it is to open up new export markets for our food producers is not needed. In terms of agriculture, are we trying to preserve the family farm as the agricultural producing unit? Are we trying to become self-sufficient in terms of critical foodstuffs? Are we trying to open up new markets for our food producers? There is no direction and no vision. There is no sense at all of where we are going as a country in terms of agriculture.

I suspect one could go through all of the various sectors in this country, whether it be the auto industry, fishing, shipbuilding, transportation policy, resource policy, and a variety of other areas. The situation is as unclear today as it was yesterday in terms of where we are headed as a country.

I suspect you might be asking yourself, Mr. Speaker, what on earth am I getting at? Do I want some kind of a plan to show us the way? Do I want a road-map for agriculture in Canada? I have to say yes to that question. When the Edmonton Oilers from your community, Mr. Speaker, go out with a strategy to win the Stanley Cup, they do not just go to the game, put everyone on the ice and see what happens. They do not just go and slap the puck around. They have a very clear strategy, not only from game to game but from period to period. They have a very critical strategy.

When one is opening up a small business, one needs a plan with respect to where you are headed for the next two, three or even ten years. If you are running a family farm, you have a plan. If you run your life as a family person, or as an individual, you have a career or family plan. Somehow, we as a country, and we as a Government, have no plan. We do not know where we are going. We do not even know if we are there when we get there. We do not know if we are going in the right direction. It is like getting the family in the car and going on a holiday this summer without taking a road map along. It is like saying that we will try and see where we are going. That is one way of doing things. However, I do not think that if you looked around the world at successful countries which have developed economies and reduced unemployment levels, that you would find that ad hockery in those countries.

As New Democrats, we are concerned when we see a Budget which holds a different approach to a certain extent. However, we still see no blueprint for Canada. We do not see any strategy; nor do we see a development plan. We have profound and deep concerns that the future will be difficult to reach if we do not know where we are going. The situation will be difficult if we do not know what the future will hold.

What I believe we are seeing in this country is the sending out of a number of conflicting and confusing signals on the part of the Government. On the one hand, the Government says that it is providing tax incentives to keep the economy going. However, when one looks closely at other parts of the tax changes contained in the Budget, we notice, for example, that for a Canadian family with two dependent children, whose income is, let us say, in the $34,000 to $35,000 range, we have calculated that the elimination of the federal tax reduction will result in a $100 increase in taxes for that family. Because of the modification to indexing, it will result in about $115 in additional taxes.

The cut in family allowance payments means a decrease of $22.50 in what people would be expecting. Again, because of tax increases, the average cigarette or cigar smoker and the average person who has a glass of wine or something to drink during the year will pay another $75 on average. The sales tax increase touches everyone, rich or poor; it does not make any difference. This will mean $150 in additional costs for the average family through this tax imposition. As well, another nine cents per gallon is levied on our gas charges through a gax tax increase, resulting in an increase of $50. When those figures are totalled, they come to $512.50 per family. I ask Hon. Members to think about that.

At a time when we are asking small businesses around the country to expand their operations by hiring two or three more people because the good times are coming, we are saying that every single family, through this Budget alone, will have to pay another $512.50. This money will be dragged down to Ottawa because someone has to make up for all those tax loopholes that we have created.

Those folks who make their income from investments like the stock market, selling paintings or flipping real estate will pay no income tax at all on the first $500,000. That means that they will pay no income tax at all for an income of a half a million dollars. Some people find that system to be confusing. The Minister of Finance is saying that the Budget is fair, but poor people will pay more taxes while rich people, if they can use the loopholes in the system, will pay no tax and a great many upper-income earners will get tax breaks. How is this fair?

As someone who is very concerned about the way the economy is moving, I am concerned that the economy will tend to move underground. I am concerned that because of the unfair tax system, we will find more and more people not declaring income. It will be like this: I will fix your teeth if you fix my plumbing at my summer cabin; I will build you a fireplace if you provide me with some clothing for my children. The whole thing will go underground. Cash and services will change hands, but we will not collect any taxes.

Some people say that the underground economy is worth $30 billion today. Some people say that it is worth as much as $50 billion. My fear is that at a time when we really need revenue more than ever before, we will be forcing more and more of that economic activity underground. This is something we have seen happen in a number of European countries.

I have other concerns about the direction in which things seem to be moving. I will use my own constituency as an example. It is a constituency which is pretty typical of those outside of urban Canada. The new Government with its new thrust is looking almost exclusively to the private sector for creating the jobs and the economic activity that is needed. There is a sense of support for that system within the country. However, when looking at the economic activity that has taken place in the City of Kamloops in the last number of months, one sees what is really happening. We built a new airport terminal and put hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of improvements into the airport. We built a major bridge across a large river. We built an armoury for our Armed Forces contingent. We built a large new provincial court house. We built a whole variety of small fire halls and community halls and we built rodeo, stampede and fair grounds. We built large highways and we replaced and built a sewage system. We installed sewage treatment facilities and water treatment facilities. Those are all public-sector activities. I have left out many of them including new wharfs, beach and park developments and so on.

Tallying up almost all of the economic activity that has occurred in the City of Kamloops and surrounding area in the last few years, I would guess that at least 90 per cent of it has been public sector development. The public sector has hired hundreds and hundreds of tradesmen and bought from dozens and dozens of small manufacturers. If that public sector expenditure is taken away, I wonder where the activity will occur. The manufacturing firms that locate in the Kamloops area often locate there because they are subsidized by an incentive program which provides $500,000 worth of capital support or help with research and development and the like for locating there. Even private-sector companies that have located in the City of Kamloops often do so because of the support that comes from one level of Government or another.

If we blindly accept that the private sector alone will do everything and that there is no role at all for the federal, provincial, local or regional Governments to play, I will be very worried. With all due respect to my Conservative colleagues, it seems to me to be a little simplistic to say that the world will now change and we will rely totally on the private sector composed of small and medium sized businesses to create jobs that will employ one and a half million people over the next number of years. I think we are putting blinders on over the economic reality.

When being asked to give borrowing authority to $18.2 billion, I am particularly concerned by the Government having assumed that all regions of Canada are exactly the same and that there are no real special difficulties in certain areas. We can tell the private sector that we have confidence in it to expand in Newfoundland and Labrador, Cape Breton and New Brunswick, Alberta and Northern British Columbia, but those areas are particularly hard hit. I see that the Hon. Member who represents Red Deer is present. He will know how sensitive the situation is in parts of Alberta and other parts of western and northern Canada. Now, at a time when we are taking so much money out of those communities through increased taxes, when we are reducing the increases that senior citizens may expect to receive in the years ahead, and when we are taking away $512 from every family as a result of this Budget and at the same time as we are asking small and medium sized businesses to expand in those areas, we may asking for a little too much. We may be making some unreasonable demands on and having some unreasonable expectations for just what that sector is able to do in these times.

Some of the things that we found disappointing in the discussions that have followed this Budget and prefaced this requst for $18.2 billion were such things as the Government not really evaluating the 170 programs that are presently in place to assist business. There are 170 programs that in theory assist business. Many of them are valuable, but I suspect that many of them are totally invaluable and totally counter-productive. If we are trying to reduce expenditures, then rather than taxing senior citizens or, as someone said earlier in a very strong statement, putting the boots to the senior citizens, and rather than cutting back on family allowance increases, pension increases and raising taxes on the things kids buy in stores, would it not have been more sensible to evaluate these 170 programs that assist business in order to determine which of these could be eliminated? For example, should we be encouraging businesses through the tax system to modernize their plants so that they can lay off a number of employees? Should we be encouraging businesses through the tax system to merge with other businesses? This usually results in a net job loss. Is this the kind of way we should be spending taxpayers' money?

Again, there was no tax expenditure program with the Budget. There was no study of the 170 programs to assist business to determine which were useful and which were not. Again, this adds to the sense of the Budget being somewhat unfair. Perhaps the Budget was biased in favour of certain regions of Canada. Perhaps it was biased toward certain kinds of industries and particularly the large corporate sector. Perhaps it was biased toward upper income earners at the expense of ordinary Canadians and people with lower incomes. If we look closely at it, it provides a whole set of questions. It sends confusing messages to the regions of Canada, the taxpayers of Canada and to the people of Canada as to what direction, if any, the new Government appears to be taking.

It appears that we have now launched on a bit of an experiment. Last Saturday, major editorials in a number of Canada's newspapers were written about the trickle-down theory of economics. Various questions were raised as to whether the trickle-down theory has ever worked and whether it could work in Canada. For those people who are not familiar with the trickle-down theory, basically it means that if tax breaks or money is given to the large successful corporations and the upper-income earners, they will do things so that eventually some of those dollars will trickle down to ordinary Canadians. The idea is that if the large corporations and upper-income earners do extremely well, eventually it will come out at the other end.

That theory was tried in the United Kingdom. Margaret Thatcher gave a lot of tax breaks to upper-income earners and helped the big corporations. However, it would appear that things are not going that well in the United Kingdom in terms of getting unemployment levels down. Perhaps the trickle-down theory which was applied in the United Kingdom did not work quite as well as was anticipated. The Government of West Germany also tried that approach. However, unemployment levels in West Germany are increasing and the economy is slowing down. A lot of upper-income people and large corporations which were given breaks did not end up having their dollars trickle down. We are now trying the old trickle-down theory in Canada.

A friend of mine who runs a farm in Saskatchewan explained the trickle-down theory to me. He told me that it was like feeding a horse. The birds sometimes sit down on the ground behind the horse, because if enough oats are jammed into the horse eventually the odd kernel gets down through the system and the birds have something to eat at the other end. I do not suppose that theory works very well for the birds, as there are better ways to feed birds. I do not think the trickle-down theory has worked very well in the United Kingdom, nor has it worked well in West Germany. But it may work here. That is the hope which the Minister of Finance has for the country. He tells us that with a little bit of luck and if we all put our shoulders to the wheel, things will be OK.

It reminds me of the time when I took my two sons to see Peter Pan. Tinker Bell was talking about flying and explained that if one really wished and believed, one could fly. I believe we are now seeing the Peter Pan approach to economics. The Minister of Finance is telling us that if we really wish and really believe things will improve, they will. There might be a certain element of truth in that, but it is hardly the approach on which a strong economy is built.

NDP Members have a variety of concerns in terms of what appears to be the lack of direction in which the Government is moving. We also have concerns regarding the quarterly report approach to economics. The private sector, whether it is the shareholders or the companies themselves, is very concerned about the quarterly report. A lot of the successes and failures of small businesses are evaluated every three months on the results of the quarterly report. We in this Party have some concerns with regard to that kind of planning. We are concerned that the planning will be done only at three-month intervals and that we will not look ahead, as countries in western Europe and Japan have done, for at least a decade. We should start taking steps to ensure that certain kinds of economic activities will take place two or three years in the future.

In conclusion I would like to say that my Party is concerned about a variety of elements in this legislation. My colleagues will be raising a number of observations and concerns in future debates. Then we will look forward to the rapid passage of this borrowing authority Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to bring to the attention of the House that we are now entering the second phase under Standing Order 35(2), whereby the next speakers will have 20 minutes, plus a ten-minute question and comment period.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am greatly honoured to have this opportunity to rise in the House today, in my capacity of Parliamentary Secretary to our excellent Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

I am both honoured and proud, because in the few days following the Budget, Canadians have clearly understood that the present Government fully intends to act according to the very clear mandate it received last September. Only two months after Canadians had again taken control of their destiny, our Government was listening to the concerns and aspirations of Canadians through the most formidable consultation process in Canadian history, which started on November 8, 1984.

As a result of this general consultation, the Government was able to clearly define three very specific priorities. Because of the three-fold need to encompass and control the situation in our country as a whole, we cannot now afford to dissociate these priorities, which are, first of all, to create permanent jobs, second, to control Government expenditures and third, to reduce the deficit gradually and consistently. Those are the three major goals that must direct our policy for the future. On May 23 of this year, the Budget tabled in the House reflected the Government's clear-cut and realistic acknowledgement of these fundamental priorities.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House today which is aimed at providing additional borrowing authority, reflects once again how urgent it is for the present Government to implement the kind of policies proposed in the Budget.

It is unfortunate but true that today we are still suffering the disastrous effects of the appalling mismanagement of this country's economy by the previous Government. It is equally unfortunate and equally true that until the new policies proposed in the Budget have any significant effect, we will still have to honour the commitments made by our country, even if those commitments reflect the poor management of the previous Government. Nevertheless, Hon. Members will understand that it is not my intention to indulge in any kind of political partisanship in presenting the Bill before the House today.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we are facing two very real facts: the tangible presence of the disastrous results of previous mismanagement and tomorrow's priorities dictated by systematic consultations, facts that were indeed acknowledged in this Government's brand new Budget. Thanks to the Budget brought down on May 23, the Government will save more than $6 billion this year through more effective management of its operations, that is, $2 billion as a direct result of this Budget and $4.2 billion as a result of the measures already in effect announced in last November's economic statement.

The deficit for the current financial year will be approximately $4.4 billion less than it would have been if no measures had been taken by this Government, in other words, if previous principles of poor management had continued to be implemented.

The deficit for 1986-87 will be $8.3 billion less than it would have been without the restraint measures we proposed in the recent Budget.

The direct impact of all the efforts undertaken last November will therefore be to reduce the deficit by some $20 billion by 1990. About 80 per cent of this decrease in the deficit will be the direct result of better program management and greater cost recovery, in other words of a good administration.

The Government has undertaken to reduce the projected level of annual expenditures by $10 to $15 billion by 1990. The total spending cuts in 1990-91 will therefore amount to some $16 billion. Our medium term strategy ensures that the national debt will be about $75 billion less by 1990 than it would have been otherwise.

It must be kept in mind that the main thrust of this Budget is to create jobs. The main purpose of this Government is to create thousands of permanent jobs for all Canadians. Indeed, since our coming to power, 200,000 new jobs have been created thanks to the new confidence generated in the commercial, business and industrial sectors of Canada. The Budget has also laid the foundation of a sound economy, which will allow us to create thousands of other stable jobs.

One thing became quite clear during our consultations. Employment is our No. 1 priority, but this does not mean a vague and indifferent process of creating doubtful jobs. What we need are not temporary jobs, which were often directly or indirectly subsidized by transitional Government programs. No, what the Canadian people want and deserve are jobs created by the private sector or through local initiatives, that is by themselves. We all agree that self-sufficiency is much better and more productive than the paternalistic assistance of the welfare state.

The economic renewal and job creation approach outlined in the Budget of May 23 follows three major themes: first, in the Budget, we express the need to promote local initiatives and the private sector by rewarding success instead of subsidizing perhaps worthwhile but, unfortunately, often unproductive efforts; second, we are improving the management and effectiveness of public administration in order to give the taxpayer more for his money, that is to give him the services he deserves; third, we want to cut the deficit through strict control over our dreadful national debt.

Our initiatives to stimulate the growth of the private sector aim first at promoting job creating investments, for instance in our own small businesses in Quebec. Canadian businessmen have a much better sense of business, trade and industry than our public servants. Our initiatives to promote better government management will create a proper framework for the expected growth of the private sector while limiting the bothersome influence and harmful interference of the unwieldy government bureaucracy.

Finally, our action to cut the deficit is carefully and sensibly balanced to meet these medium-term objectives so as not to hinder the needed economic recovery. This does not mean that the Government will no longer deal with job creation or training. For instance, the Government has allocated some $900 million more for job creation and training programs next year, in addition to the $900 million already appropriated for the same purpose this year. On the other hand, the spirit underlying our programs thus funded is very different from what it was with previous programs. Funds will be used for programs based on a larger input by the private sector and the community. This partnership approach besides will result in a consensus being reached among the Provinces and the local groups across the country.

Mr. Speaker, an extensive review of the unemployment insurance program also is under way. Its purpose is to improve and simplify that program, in order to make it more equitable and more responsive to current changes in the labour market. Contrary to what some prophets of evil would have us believe, this Government's objective is anything but wanting to reduce federal help to the unemployed. And this Government's determination to bring about an improvement in the unemployment insurance system is illustrated by the two changes announced in the budget, namely that the variable entrance requirements allowing the unemployed in distressed areas to draw benefits at an earlier date will actually be extended for another year.

Further, unemployment insurance premium rates in 1986 will be the same as in 1985, so as not to unduly increase the costs for employees and employers. Mr. Speaker, this Government's determination to reduce the deficit stems from the relentless reality of the experience we have had with the negative effects of our heavy national indebtedness on economic growth and job creation.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, the previous Government's mismanagement has created a vicious circle from which we are just starting to break away. The fast accumulation of our national debt is still for the moment forcing us to allocate a significant percentage of the public funds to the payment of interests rather than to the programs and the social services that are so badly needed. Now we must extend our borrowing authority, Mr. Speaker. However, let us not lose sight of the fact that deficit reduction and job creation are not mutually exclusive, quite the opposite. If an increasing deficit and a huge debt could create jobs, there would not have been a single unemployed on Canada's labour market for a long time!

This Government's objective, as evidenced in the Budget of May 23, 1985, is indeed to decrease the deficit in a reasoned and responsible way, in order not to have the economy edge away from its current pattern of steady growth. Were it not for this Government's determined action to bring the deficit under control, the Canadian economy would be unable to produce steady jobs for our workers who urgently need them. Above all, the Budget, with both a modern and truly Canadian dimension, reflects something that has long since been cast away by the previous adminsitration. It reflects a warranted hope and a faith in the Canadian people, its vitality and its capacity to grasp the opportunities and invest in their own future.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members in this House to strongly support Bill C-51 the Borrowing Authority Act, 1985-86 (No. 2).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions, comments.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1985-86 (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (for the Minister of State (Finance)) that Bill C-51, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There was no one who rose on questions and comments and I am recognizing the next speaker. Is the Hon. Member the next speaker for his Party?

Mr. Manly: I was hoping to be able to ask a question. I believe that there is someone here from—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There were no questions or comments. If the Hon. Member is participating in the debate, then I will recognize him as the next speaker.

Mr. Manly: I was hoping, Mr. Speaker, just to ask some questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is a little late to ask questions or make comments. I will recognize the next speaker for debate if there is another speaker. If there is not, is the House ready for the question?

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take in this very important debate today. I would like to mention that this legislation has been the subject of frequent debate and that the debate on Bill C-51, which concerns the provision of borrowing authority, gives Members an opportunity to review the Government's record.

Mr. Speaker, I heard the Parliamentary Secretary refer to his Government's three-fold priority, and he had the nerve to rank job creation first. Mr. Speaker, the figures we received in April from Statistics Canada showed that for the week ending April 20, even if the Minister is bragging about having created jobs, one group was particularly disadvantaged. Mr. Speaker, I am referring to young people 25 years old or under.

Mr. Speaker, the number of jobs for young people of 25 or under hardly increased at all during the last few months. In fact the opposite is true. So we have a situation where unemployment among young people from 15 to 24 affects 489,000 young men and women who cannot become active members of the labour force and cannot participate fully in the progress of our society. And considering this fact, Mr. Speaker, I feel that legitimate though this request for borrowing authority may be, the borrowing is not being done for the right reasons.

Mr. Speaker, let me explain. This is International Youth Year, with its three major themes: participation, development and peace. At a time when participation should be a fundamental priority, when 500,000 young Canadians are anxious to take an active part in society and become active members of the labour force, the Government, through its failure to opt clearly in favour of the most dynamic elements of our society, through its lack of interest for this segment of our population, is compromising the hopes of an entire generation. The Parliamentary Secretary has said nothing to convince me his Government is at all concerned about youth unemployment. The Budget contains no reference to helping young people enter the labour market. No programs to help young people. However, Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, that same Government was filling our ears with promises that could not have been more generous.

Mr. Speaker, the day after the Cabinet was sworn in, they appointed a Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne). Mr. Speaker, as one Member who made every effort to ensure that the Ministry of State for Youth would be a reality within the Government, I must admit I was very disappointed. I almost regret I was instrumental in providing a position for the present incumbent. Mr. Speaker, the present incumbent at the Minister of State (Youth), who always played starring roles during her professional career, now has a very minor role indeed. What influence did the Minister of State (Youth) have on preparations for this Budget? It is obvious she had no say in it whatsoever. I say that because I am sure she is far more concerned about young people than her colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who simply shouldered her aside.

Mr. Speaker, one look at the figures is enough. Worse, in a year specifically dedicated to youth, when we talk about participation and development, development of the individual, Canada's educational system is under-financed. Access to post-secondary education is becoming increasingly restricted.

Perhaps in keeping with the Government's approach, Mr. Speaker, the situation is such that only rich people will be able to afford to attend college or university. Consider the huge number of young Canadians who can no longer afford post-secondary education. Look at the discouragingly high number of post-secondary student drop-outs, and what does the Government do? Mr. Speaker, 300,000 out of 540,000 unemployed youths did not even finish high school, 300,000 young people who do not have the vocational training required to land a full-time job. What measures did the Minister of Finance advocate? Sure enough, they will swell the ranks of permanent welfare cases, and that is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, in a society which keeps bragging about equal opportunity for everybody.

Mr. Speaker, self-development is the current buzz word, but I fail to see the rationale behind the International Youth Year three themes—Participation, Development, Peace—because they are but words and all we can see is those lofty themes reproduced on posters. That is why I was concerned when I heard the Minister of Finance talk about people getting a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. Mr. Speaker, precious few young Canadians stand to gain anything there, except perhaps the sons and daughters of rich parents who will end up with a fortune. Who else? And what about the economic and social impact of unemployment? Here again, Mr. Speaker, we saw the Minister of Finance shirk all responsibility. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to give unconditional support to Bill C-51, I hesitate because the priorities are wrong.

Peace is one of this year's three themes and yet, Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Defence has been practically untouched. Mr. Speaker, why display those slogans and convene seminars and conferencs on the three themes if we are not going to do anything positive? That brings to mind the hundreds of young Canadians I met recently, most of them quite disillusioned. They had been promised the moon, but the sad reality is that they now find out that, as far as the Minister of Finance is concerned, a just society is one where the rich get richer, where people who are well-off do not miss an opportunity to do even better, and where the ordinary man invariably gets stuck with the bill. This Budget which has been brought down and which will justify part of this money, this borrowing authority, is a "fat cats" budget, Mr. Speaker. You know full well that in fact it will please the haves in our society, and that 25 per cent of the Canadian society have been totally ignored by that Budget, the younger generation has been completely overlooked, and in that sense I am very much disappointed.

I certainly can speak of that Government's new management initiatives, Mr. Speaker. Not only they have the gall to tell the unemployed: We let you turn to the private sector, do not count on us, we are not responsible and we do not want to hear from you. Worse than that they tell them: We find that your unemployment insurance benefits are a bit generous, and we will set up a committee with people from the private sector. Not a committee made up of unemployed people, Mr. Speaker. Above all, do not bother about them. This is what the Minister of Finance told them. Not only shall we not try to find jobs for you, but the unemployment insurance scheme is too generous, we are going to cut down on your benefits. Such is the message relayed by the Minister of Finance to the unemployed, a message of despair. He is telling them: You are the scape goats in our society. How can anyone with a minimum of social conscience, Mr. Speaker, accept such a miserable message to one and a half million unemployed across the land? They are told: Trust us, but, better still, trust the large corporations. Trust the rich. We are going to give them more. We are going to give them a $125,000 bonus, and they will look after you. Possibly, Mr. Speaker, with that $125,000 bonus, which is the deduction on half a million dollars in capital gains, they might hire a maid, and perhaps also a gardener. But this is about all it will afford to pay. Most of it will not benefit job creation. Even today, Alain Dubuc stated in La presse, and God knows he is not a politically involved columnist but a perceptivbe economic observer, this was a gift to the rich with very little chances for employment creation.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that my colleagues opposite, who have been commissioned to go and sell that Budget with their eyes closed and their ears shut to criticism—

Mr. La Salle: No, no!

Mr. Lapierre: The Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) says: No, no, no. We even have one of his colleagues, his colleague from Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay), who showed so much zeal that, being unable to convince his constituency association chairman with words, went as far as breaking his nose in two places!

Mr. La Salle: On the Budget?

Mr. Lapierre: On the Budget, Mr. Speaker. His constituency association chairman, over the week-end, could not agree with the Hon. Member for Lotbinière, and the Hon. Member carried out the Prime Minister's orders to the letter. He said: I must defend the Budget forcibly, and so he did, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. La Salle: With conviction!

Mr. Lapierre: With much conviction! And one thing I would recommend to the Tory caucus, if they are going to resort to that kind of pressure selling, at least they should buy collective life insurance.

Mr. Rossi: A big one!

Mr. Lapierre: I would first and foremost recommend to the average Canadians not to try and meet directly their Conservative MP's at this time, because they are very nervous. They know very well that they do not see eye to eye with ordinary people. They know it, but they were told that the word of the Minister of Finance is as good as what the Bible says. They are nervous, and if someone annoys them, they become aggressive. They have learned that from their Leader. Whenever he does not have an answer, he shouts. Mr. Speaker, I advise all Canadians who are clearly unsatisfied by most of the budgetary measures, except for the wealthy who are as happy as can be, to phone their Member of Parliament or to write to him. It is less risky and I hope that it will be as effective.

Mr. Speaker, we saw the commitments made by the Prime Minister at the time when, as he says himself, he was generous with his commitments. Where young people are concerned, he was supposed to provide more incentives so that employers would hire and train young workers. He was supposed to extend the Career Access Program, Mr. Speaker. Have you heard anything about it? They have forgotten. The Prime Minister was supposed to provide reimbursable employment tax credits. He was supposed to set up new training and retraining programs for young people in highly specialized technical areas. Mr. Speaker, we have not heard anything about them. He even said that a Conservative Government would substantially improve the information exchange mechanisms to help young people learn about job opportunities. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Government for doing nothing in this regard because there are no job opportunities and therefore no need to improve these mechanisms. I can forgive the Prime Minister for this. However, there is more. He was supposed to implement programs to fight the chronic unemployment which dramatically hit some areas in Canada. In those areas, Government Members, who have a short memory, were supposed to implement private sector development community programs. They wanted to help groups and individuals willing to create new businesses to cut through the red tape, find markets, train their employees and maintain harmonious relations with the local workers, teachers, and financial institutions. Mr. Speaker, everyone is for virtue and motherhood. That is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised during the election campaign and we realize now that he did not really mean what he was saying. Today we have seen a budget, and the bill now under consideration is related to it, strictly meant for the rich, a budget which does away with all former commitments. I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and I know that as an honest man, he is deeply embarrassed by it. I would rather have had a budget introduced under his government, because I recognized his integrity. Moreover, he was remarkably honest in 1979. His colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) said that if he had been as honest this time he would never have been elected. The Minister of Justice also said that it was better not to tell Canadians what they planned to do because they would never be elected. This is why they merely fooled the Canadian people who were ready for a change.

They wanted to humble us, but when you vote for the Conservative party you have to pay the price, Mr. Speaker. And this is what the Canadian people are beginning to say. This could surely be a useful slogan, Mr. Speaker, for my friends who have now finally realized, that the Tories tried to fake it during the election campaign but as soon as they were elected, what was bred in the bone came out in the flesh. And their traditional clientele of Bay Street and others have had more influence on the Minister of Finance than the ordinary Canadian. And when the Minister of Finance tells us: "I met some people and they approved my budget; the kind of people he sees, Mr. Speaker, is not the kind of people I meet.

Surely, I am not in touch with the business sector the same way he is and I do not apologize for it. But I will refer to the inquiries made among ordinary people, those who have realized that they will have to carry the burden of cuts made by the Minister of Finance and not derive any benefit from it. This is why I find unfortunate that the people have soon realized how costly it will be because this government has not kept its word. I do not trust the government to because I know that its expenditures will be beneficial to very few, to those whom the Minister of Finance is willing to hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

• (1620)

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Member who just finished speaking indicated that the capital gains exemptions introduced in the Budget would not create jobs. The man does not know what he is talking about. Capital gains tax has killed incentive in the country. It has stopped people from investing money and stopped businesses from expanding. The elimination of capital gains tax will encourage many people to invest money. When money is invested it creates jobs. It is that simple.

After the Liberal Government introduced the capital gains tax their Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture promised to change the date of evaluation. They then sat in the House for four years and refused to do anything. Every time we asked them about it, they would say "soon". They both recognized that it was killing incentive but would not do anything about it. They killed the incentive of hundreds of people across the country. The exemption from the capital gains tax will create jobs.

Capital gains tax has ruined the lives of many Canadians who wanted to retire but could not do so because the Government would take a chunk out of their nest-egg, the only pension they had. That caused lost jobs as well because if they had been able to sell their land to their hired man he would have been able to hire other people. That would create many jobs across the country.

The Liberals say that this Government was elected because there was a need for change. The Government was elected because the people were sick and tired of the do-nothing policies and the killing-of-incentive policies of the Liberals. That is why we were elected. Our Budget is creating jobs and reducing the deficit. Maybe that is what makes the Liberals and the NDP so angry.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Thank Heavens I am not a Consevative, Mr. Speaker! My hon. friend has just said that if farmers can sell their lands, they will create jobs. All farmers who intend to continue working their lands and creating jobs have denounced the fact that this decision will not help farmers generally, but only retired farmers, and will not ease the burden of those to whom the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) had promised a subsidy, like Quebec hog producers! This decision is not likely to help them because their lands having lost so much of their worth, there is no capital gain to speak of.

When he says that this decision will create jobs, Mr. Speaker, does he feel that the purchase of a condominium in Florida is likely to create jobs in Canada? The answer is an unequivocal no. There is no condition attached to the generous gift the Minister of Finance is making to the rich, as far as creating jobs in Canada for Canadians is concerned. That is the fraud of their budget. They will create a great many jobs by purchasing works of art in Europe or by purchasing condominiums in Florida or villas in Portugal. All this will be accepted by this generous Minister of Finance who was far more eager to please the big shots than ordinary Canadians. But who is going to pay for this, Mr. Speaker? I suggest that if my hon. colleague knew the people at the lower end of the economic scale and those who are faced with enormous financial difficulties . . . like our senior citizens. He should be ashamed to stand in the House and brag about defending senior citizens when his own Minister of Finance is reducing the purchasing power of their Old Age Pension cheques, which is totally unacceptable. When he uses the expression "senior citizens", he means those who have lots of money, but what about the millions of old folks whose sole source of income is their pension cheque, the purchasing power of which will be cut by as much as 30 per cent over the next five years, because of the action taken by the Minister of Finance? And he has the gall to support that. That is altogether unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the last remarks of the Hon. Member are complete baloney. He does not understand the system. The only thing that Liberals understand is borrowing money, nationalizing, spending government money and putting the people further into debt. That is what they have been doing for 16 years. The Hon. Member is in a rut.

He cannot tell me that capital gains do not create jobs. I told the House yesterday about a man who said he wanted to expand his business and create jobs for seven people but would never do so while capital gains tax was in existence.

The Hon. Member does not even understand farming. The Liberals say that we want the farmers to sell their land. People who have spent 40 or 50 years on the land are entitled to retire in dignity. That is what the Liberals refuse to let them do. The MacEachen Budget would not even let them put their money into an RRSP. I do not know how a Liberal can stand up without having his face turn as red as blazes. They have hurt the little people of this country and have killed incentive.

We have a new Government starting a new era in which we will give people a chance to live and a chance to have a job. That is what irks the Hon. Member so much. We are doing what his Government refused to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I have much respect for the hon. member because of his age and not because of his judgment. His social awareness should make him realize that the cuts his Minister of Finance is about to make in the case of senior citizens will affect the poor people without a piece of land or $500,000 in capital gains. When he referred to farmers who could not retire, I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but . . . Marc Lalonde, the former Minister of Finance, had allowed a $300,000 exemption which covered the reasonable value of the land. The farmers I know were satisfied with that because capital gains in excess of $300,000 . . . Perhaps those people should be asked to make some contribution to the nation, Mr. Speaker, and pay taxes. I understand that the Hon. Member would want to give every opportunity to the rich. When he refers to fairness, the Hon. Member means to give more to the well-to-do. This is the difference between a Progressive Conservative and a Liberal. We have a social awareness. Our conduct is not merely dictated by the lure of power and money. The Hon. Member has two obsessions: profit-making and the fear of losses. I think that in politics our reasoning should not be strictly based on financial factors, but also on humanitarian and social considerations. And that is why your victimization of the unemployed and the senior citizens is morally unacceptable.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on some points made in earlier speeches when it was mentioned that the young people were left out in the budget. At least, we will not leave an unfortunate legacy of failures and borrowings for which the young will have to pay. We will try to balance the budget so that our young people will not have that legacy. I repeat once again, they will not have to pay our debts later. I hate to look back to the past, but the previous administration . . . I was not a government member then but I was a victim and I can assure you that if at least I can leave our books and our government in order, that will be a good point for our young people.

Secondly, we want young people to get out of that vicious circle where they alternate between temporary jobs created with government grants and unemployment insurance. Our young people now lack dignity. We need permanent jobs and private enterprise alone can create them . . . We are generous. We do not mention that the Liberal government is responsible. We do not lay any charge. We say that the government cannot create permanent jobs and we trust private enterprise. I come from the private enterprise sector, I can assure you that we take those measures for the sake of young people. Those are concrete and direct steps which the government has taken in the last budget.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, this is precisely the kind of speech I like to hear. When he says that we will have something in store for young people in future . . . but today, at this very moment there are 432,000 of them who have nothing. In the meanwhile, he only provides them with welfare benefits. Is that what the Parliamentary Secretary is offering to young Canadians? They do not have jobs. We will have to wait for his so-called private enterprise to hire all of them. That is fine, Mr. Speaker, but it is only smoke. It is a smoke screen which he puts up in front of the young people. And despair is the only thing they will inherit from him. He will be responsible because if these children cannot have . . . his own children will receive an adequate education because they will be able to pay for it but those who do not have access to education today will never forgive you. It is a high cost to pay to keep our books in order, and it is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over.

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have waited some time for the Government to bring forward this borrowing Bill. The House will recall that prior to Christmas, as part of an arrangement to be made, there was an agreement that the Government would bring in its borrowing authority legislation as close as possible to its Budget and its fiscal plan. It has done so and I am grateful that the Government has lived up to its end of the agreement.

The reason we asked for that agreement is that it seemed necessary to see all aspects of the economic package at once so that we could compare and reasonably discuss the Budget on one hand, the fiscal plan of the Government as it affects the raising and dispensing of taxes and tax money on the other, and of course the requirement for borrowing.

In my opinion there are certain things that must be said, and if I appear to be thinking out loud it is because I am doing just that. I do not have volumes of prepared text before me because what I want to say does not require volumes of prepared text. Rather, it is a view of Canada that I happen to believe has been missed by successive Governments for many years and is being missed again by the present Government.

I read the Budget with interest. I must admit that I listened to the Budget with somewhat less interest because it was long, somewhat laboured, and a bit boring. However, I read it to see if the Budget, the working papers or the background documents referred to what was really wrong in the country. I must say to you, Sir, that I could not find what I believe to be wrong in Canada at the moment referred to even in the most passing way in any of the documents. The Budget is as traditional as any Budget I have seen in 18 years of political life. It is a tax grab and nothing more. There is no innovation in the Budget. There is nothing that recognizes the reality that is Canada in the Budget. To be quite honest, there is no new direction for Canada. There is no recognition of the problems we now face as a country. There is no recognition of the problems we will face as a country, and there is no carefully analysed document that would indicate what the Government anticipates would be the impact of its new direction, this direction it calls new.

The Government asks us to allow it to borrow more money. In order to determine whether it is appropriate to borrow more money, we have to take a look at how the money the Government now has is going to be spent. I do not want to go into the kind of detail that many others have. I recognize that the Government has done a number of things that are about as traditional as they could possibly be. The Government has raised taxes. Where did the Government go to raise those taxes? The Government went to the working families of Canada. The Government did not even have the necessary intestinal fortitude to follow up on the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) own commitment to bring in with this Budget a tax on those who have for many years been able to accumulate substantial sums of money without ever paying a single solitary cent in income tax. The Government then decided it would add a surtax on those who are earning in excess of $40,000 a year. As one of those individuals, I do not object to paying a little more in order to put the "house" in order so to speak.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Let me say that what I do object to is this Government, not having dealt with those who earn far more than $40,000 a year and who pay no tax, has not found any way to have them pay the surtax either. Not only do those earning more than $40,000 a year pay tax under normal circumstances, but they are not asked to pay the additional tax that everyone else is asked to. Who is being asked to pay? The senior citizens are being asked to pay. That is normal. That is what one gets to expect from Governments. Governments tend always to go to where it is easiest to get money. From here on senior citizens' incomes will be reduced on an annual basis. That appears to be the Government's will and wont. We will see over the course of the next few years a dramatic reduction in the purchasing capacity of the senior citizens in Canada. That is not fair, Mr. Speaker. It is not fair when measured over and against the fact that there are many others who earn considerably more who pay no tax at all. Where else did the Government go? The Government decided that it would hand out to its friends and supporters in the oil companies many billions of dollars. The Government told us at the time, although we asked over and over again, that this would not detrimentally affect the consumers of Canada.

The Minister of Energy Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) at one point went as far as to suggest that the measures, the effects that would flow from the Western Accord, would be of benefit to the consumers and she anticipated a reduction in the price at the pump.

I ask Conservative back-benchers who are here, and even the two Ministers in their seats, where oh where is the reduction at the pump? By September next this Government alone will have increased the cost of gasoline since November of last year by over 17 cents a gallon. The reason that it has been raised, of course, and you know it and I know it, Mr. Speaker, protestation notwithstanding, is to give the oil companies even more money.

Is there anyone who would rise and tell me that the oil companies were in such dire straits that it was necessary for the consuming public of Canada to consume an additional 17 cents a gallon by way of tax, that it is necessary for every single commodity that must be transported across Canada to reflect the added cost of 17 cents a gallon in tax? Is there anyone who can tell me that it was desirable to inflict further damage on small business because small business will find its products even less attractive in price as a result of having to absorb this additional 17 cents a gallon tax? This is the new regime, the new direction. You must surely recognize as I do, Mr. Speaker, that there is nothing new about that. That is how Governments have done these things since the beginning of time.

I say to my colleague here in the Liberal Party, without being unduly critical of him or his Government, that he would have to admit that the Government of which he was a part did exactly the same thing, albeit perhaps in differing amounts. Maybe it was not 17 cents at one whack, but nevertheless the Liberals did exactly the same as this Government is doing. What do we find? The average Canadian family will be asked to contribute even more, yet the Government tells us that somehow that will create jobs. How, Mr. Speaker? How can it create jobs if we take out of the pockets of those who will buy an even larger part of their income? How then will they be encouraged to buy more or be encouraged to take on additional indebtedness to purchase larger items if they find themselves in a position where their income has been reduced as a result of the Government's action? How then, if they are unable to buy those things they would have purchased, will that somehow encourage the manufacturers to manufacture more? Why would the manufacturers manufacture more if fewer people are buying? Why would manufacturers manufacture more if the market-place has shrunk by yet another billion dollars in sales tax, by yet another 17 cents a gallon in gasoline tax? How will that encourage the manufacturers to manufacture more when the people who would be buying what is manufactured have less money to spend? How then will that create jobs? How many more people will be put to work in this effort to produce less? How many more people do you need working to produce less than you now produce? How many more people can we anticipate being hired by those who, out of necessity, will find that the market for their products is smaller than it was before the Government brought in its Budget and imposed the taxes?

You do not have to be an economist to understand that there is at least some logic to that argument. Let me go on a bit, Mr. Speaker. I want to deal with something even more fundamental and more important in my opinion than even that. I think that in itself is sufficient to draw into question the rationale behind the Budget. What the Government says is that if it provides the manufacturers with more money by allowing them even larger tax breaks, somehow or other that will create jobs. If it encourages those who manufacture in our society to enhance their technology, to improve computerization, to improve productivity factors, that will somehow create jobs. I ask you to consider with me, Mr. Speaker, if the manufacturers are able, by virtue of tax breaks, to replace the equipment they now have with more modern equipment capable of producing far more than the equipment it replaced, if that is true, and if, as I have said, the market has shrunk, how will that create jobs? How many more people will you need working every day of the week in order to operate a machine that will produce far more, far more efficiently, for a market that has shrunk?

I suggest to the Government in that area, notwithstanding the merit—and I will discuss the merit of improving our productive capacity—that that certainly cannot be seen to be a job-producing measure.

Thus, on two fronts, we have the Government talking about its measures as being measures to create new employment opportunities when, in fact, if one were to look at them objectively, one could come to no other conclusion than that the measures the Government has brought forward will reduce the necessity for even the numbers of people who are presently working in the factories and in the shops of Canada to be working. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, on those two fronts, if on no others, this Government's stated intention is being thwarted by the actions it is taking.

Can we produce jobs? That must be the question. Is there some way to produce jobs? I suppose, in all fairness, I have to say that it will be very difficult. In fact, most of the jobs that we will create in our society will be either in the Public Service, or they will be jobs of an entirely different character to the jobs we have created in the past. Many will be short-term. Most of them will be quite different from what I had anticipated as a young man and from what most of the Members of this House had anticipated as young people, men or women, when they were growing up.

What, then, will we produce by way of this Budget and other similar Budgets? We will produce more wealth. There is no doubt about that. The greater productivity, with fewer dollars required for manpower spent on the job, with faster write-offs for the acquisition of equipment, and with capital gains that people will no longer have to pay tax on will no doubt produce more wealth.

Then comes the crunch. If we produce more wealth, will we produce fewer jobs? What do we do? That is the question the Budget fails to address. In the Budget it is stated that 15,000 positions in the Public Service will be eliminated. Why? Because they are marginally necessary and, therefore, we can get by without them. However, as a part of our very being, we maintain that to be considered acceptable in our society it is necessary to have a job.

If you accept my theory that you do not need as many people in the manufacturing sector because of the changes, if you accept that the tax arrangements worked out by the Government will not in themselves create employment, and if you accept that the actions of the Government will eliminate 15,000 jobs in the Public Service, then where in heaven's name are we going to get the jobs to satisfy the requirement we impose on everyone in our society that they work for a living? Where do we get them?

There will be more wealth. However, it will not be taxed because this Government has said that you do not tax wealth. It has said that what you do is allow people to accumulate wealth in the fond hope that somehow or the other it will get from them to somebody else. You cannot hope like that, Mr. Speaker. That is not how it works.

I am suggesting what this Government has to do, if it honestly believes that there is a need for a new day in Canada—and I agree that there is a need—is that we will have to start looking at the question of income redistribution. If you cannot find a job, you cannot starve. If, through the action of Government, or through the inability of the economy to create a sufficient number of jobs in order to meet demand, there will be 1 million or 1.5 million people unemployed over the next 10-year period, then the question which must be addressed is: How will we be able to provide those people with some way of maintaining themselves? How will we be able to provide for their economic well-being? Where is that question addressed in the Budget? Where is there any reference to the problem of the 1.5 million people who are destined to be unemployed for the next 10 years? It is nowhere.

Is it not about time that we started to look at the reality that is this country, that is every country? You cannot live in the fond hope that somehow or other we will be able to find jobs for everybody, unless you are prepared to accept that some of the jobs may not be as meaningful as one would have hoped, in whatever way one makes that type of calculation. You cannot turn around and eliminate 15,000 jobs in the Public Service because of a need to generate more wealth and then expect those people, who will be displaced or unable to get into the same type of work, to find alternatives in an ever-shrinking job market.

I am suggesting to the Government that this is not a new direction for Canada. The present Budget is no more than a housekeeping operation. It is an extension of previous Governments' views on how to deal with economic problems. It is not, however, an extension of a reasoned view on how to deal with human problems. There is no recognition in the Budget of the needs of society in terms of how to deal with the human problem of keeping a family together at a time when there can be no work found and no one is willing to hire you. This is why I cannot find myself supportive of the request for additional funding for the Government by way of borrowing.

I expected more of this Government. I do not know why, since I have dealt with Tory Governments all my life. However, I still expected more. I expected some new thought. I expected the question of what is to be done with 1.5 million people who are unemployed and who must stay unemployed to be addressed. I expected someone to say to me that, unfortunately, we will have 10 per cent or more of the population unemployed for the next decades. However, how are we to deal with the needs of that 10 per cent?

I could go on indefinitely, Mr. Speaker, but I will not. I want to say that the document before us is disappointing. It inflicts hardship where it is unnecessary to do so. It conveys benefit where benefit is not required. It hopes rather than plans. It provides no concrete evidence of clear thinking.

It is time this Government went back to the drawing board and tried to come up with an economic document which honestly addresses Canada today and Canada 10 years from now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments?

[Translation]

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, some parts of the budget have obviously been read. As regards senior citizens in particular, the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party are now strongly deploring their plight. And yet, the budget states clearly that the basic pension will be periodically adjusted and that the Guaranteed Income Supplement will be fully indexed. In addition, the Official Opposition also fails to mention, as well as my colleague, that for the first time $550 million in spouse's allowance will be devoted over a two-year period to senior citizens. They conveniently ignore that fact.

They have also mentioned the 15,000 jobs that will be cut in the Public Service. I want to say clearly to my colleague that those 15,000 employees are not going to be laid off. It will be done through attrition only.

Mr. Speaker, here is my question: Does the Honourable member feel that the reduction of interest rates, due to the fact that government deficit has been brought under control, will benefit to citizens who will buy goods, appliances, to those who will have to renegotiate their mortgage loans, or to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member has nine minutes left of the period for questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) will be able to reflect on that question and answer it next time. We are now going into Private Members' Business.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitutional Act, 1982, should be amended in order to include property rights and, that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights so that it reads as follows:

"7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

and this House urges that the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces and the Senate pass similar resolutions.

He said: I count it both a privilege and a responsibility to introduce and defend this motion before the House of Commons today. It is a measure of its importance that this motion has already been introduced on two previous occasions during the brief tenure of this parliamentary session. It was introduced first by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) on December 6, 1984, and then by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) on February 1, 1985.

This motion follows the considerable discussion which took place on the subject matter—the inclusion of property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms—throughout the 1981 constitutional debate and during the subsequent debate on the motion for a constitutional amendment introduced by the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on April 29, 1983. The recent parliamentary history of this subject indicates at least two things. First, it indicates that this is a complex and somewhat contentious issue which cuts to the very heart of philosophical and political ideology. Therefore, of necessity, I shall outline the premise, intent and substance of this motion. Second, it indicates that, for all its complexity and contentiousness, this is an issue which will not simply go away. Consequently, it is the responsibility of all Members of the House to address and render a final decision on this important matter. It is my hope that this motion may be referred to the appropriate committee, thereby leading to a conclusive debate and the enshrinement of the enjoyment of property as a fundamental right protected by our Constitution.

The basic premise of this motion is that adding the words "the enjoyment of property" to Section 7 of the Charter of Rights will give a natural and undeniable corollary to the words "life, liberty and security of the person", rights already secured in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. To omit and deny the right to private property is to diminish and indeed render meaningless the right to life, liberty and security of person.

Life, liberty and security of person cannot be viewed as abstract principles existing in a vacuum. In order to have any meaning, they must have tangible correlates. To a certain extent, the framers of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms recognized this fact. They knew very well that such fundamental principles as liberty and security of the person must be given concrete expression. Therefore, the Charter specifies in Section 2 freedom of conscience and religion; freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication; freedom of peaceful assembly; and freedom of association. Various other concrete freedoms are enumerated throughout the Charter, including the freedoms to vote in an election, to choose where to live within Canada, to pursue the gaining of a livelihood, and so on.

The Charter is also specific with respect to its principle of security of the person. For example, it stipulates that everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure, arbitrary detainment or imprisonment and improper procedures upon arrest or detention. All of the above is right and proper. However, the Charter does not pursue its own inherent logic far enough to include the enjoyment of the fruits of that liberty in private property.

Let me elaborate. A life is actively lived out in time and space by men and women who require certain properties such as food, clothing and shelter. A life so lived out requires both the liberty to attain these properties lawfully and the liberty to enjoy the measure of independence and security which they bring.

Wayne Gretzky has proven that he is the best goal scorer in the NHL. His skill is unique, and that leads naturally and rightly to his demanding his reward in the market-place of professional sports today. We would be denying him his uniqueness, his dignity and his worth as a human being and we would be denying him his freedom if we did not let him compete for whatever he can gain, even if it is close to $20 million. After all, what is private property? Surely it is simply the natural consequence of human uniqueness and freedom. Where there is no right to private property, I believe that society becomes a life in death; physically we would be alive but socially, mentally and intellectually we would be dead.

Last week I had the great privilege and, I believe, responsibility, of viewing and experiencing both sides of the Berlin wall. I say to Members of the House in all humility yet with firm conviction that if they do not understand why the principles of life, liberty and security of person logically lead to the right to private property, they ought to go to Berlin. There they will see that on the west side of the Berlin wall, the words "life, liberty and security of person" are concretely lived out, including the right to property. Tragically, on the east side of the Berlin wall, although the same words, "life, liberty and security of person", exist in the Constitution, they have little tangible and free application in everyday life and there are practically no rights to private property.

Any life that "lives", eats, dresses, takes shelter, ploughs a field, fishes a lake, manufactures a product, digs an oil well, invests in a car, a house, a cottage or a business knows that principles without properties—life, liberty or security of person without their necessary and logical correlates—are devoid of meaning and content. Surely the principle of freedom to pursue the gaining of a livelihood as a labourer, housewife, farmer or businessman is severely diminished if one's freedom to simply keep, sell or buy is not protected. Surely the principle of security of the person against unlawful search or seizure is rendered meaningless if one's right to own clothing, a car, a home, a cottage or a company is not secured.

It is this compelling logic which led to the inclusion of property rights in such documents as the Magna Carta of 1215, the English Bill of Rights of 1627, the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the American Constitution of 1791 and 1868 respectively, the U.N. Declaration of Human Rights of 1948, and the Canadian Bill of Rights of 1960. It is this compelling logic which was once again confirmed in a 1972 decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which declared:

> Property does not have rights. People have rights . . . (However) a fundamental inter-dependence exists between the personal right to liberty and the personal right in property. Neither could have meaning without the other. That rights in property are basic civil rights has long been recognized.

In 1948, Canada signed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Article 17 of that Declaration reads:

> (1) Everyone has the right to own property as well as in association with others.
> (2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

Our Bill of Rights also specifically provides for property rights. Therefore, I call upon my Party, the Government, the Liberals and the NDP to bring our Constitution fully in line with our actions at the United Nations and with our Bill of Rights.

This, then, is the premise of this motion: logical consistency demands that those fundamental rights now guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms of life, liberty and security of the person be given their natural, undeniable and essential correlate, the enjoyment of property. It is incumbent upon those who would disagree with the motion to state their position with respect to its premise. It follows that the intent of the motion is simply to correct the omission of property rights in the Charter of Rights. In my opinion, that is one of the most serious flaws within our Charter.

If I may digress briefly from the main subject at hand, I think there is also another addition which could be made to the Charter. I would seek to add at the end of the Charter of Rights a new section which states:

> The powers not delegated to the federal and provincial levels of Government by the Constitution are reserved to the people.

The American Constitution includes such an amendment. In a democracy, it must be crystal clear that people possess all the rights and Governments possess none other than those which are given to them by the people. If we looked closely at the Charter of Rights and read it, we would notice that it uses words such as "everyone has", "every citizens has", and "every citizen and every person has". Those words seem to imply that Governments give rights to the people. Therefore, to make absolutely certain that no one in Government is ever tempted to say that they, as a Government, give rights, let us make sure that our Constitution clearly reminds Governments that their powers are limited. Let us make sure that Governments clearly understand that the only rights and powers they hold are those which are granted to them in trust by the people.

Returning to the motion, I would like to emphasize that the Bill harbours no hidden agenda, and no machiavellian design to give one segment of the Canadian people more rights or more privileges than any other. Rather, it wishes to ensure that the principle of the independence of the individual from unlawful interference by the state upon his or her right to life, liberty, and security of the person, is given concrete grounding by also ensuring the independence of those properties which naturally accrue in the course of his or her exercising of those rights.

I suggest that this is a principle which applies to all Canadians, and it is a right which each of them wants and deserves, whether they happen to own a single coat or a whole wardrobe, a bicycle or a BMW, a modest apartment or a luxury home. A person's right to be secure in his or her ownership of that coat, bicycle, or apartment is no less important than another's right to be secure in his or her ownership of a wardrobe, a BMW or a luxury home.

It is in the area of the substance of the motion, that is, its actual wording, that the greatest potential for disagreement exists. During previous debates on property rights in the House, much of the contention was engendered in two interrelated questions. First, what exactly is meant by "property"? Second, how would the inclusion and subsequent interpretation of "the enjoyment of property" impact upon such diverse bodies as the provinces, native people, environmentalists, women's groups, civil libertarians, business and labour? Those are important questions. It may be admitted that it is beyond the scope of this brief address to attempt an exhaustive explanation and critique of the various issues implicit in them. However, it is crucial that such matters be held in proper perspective. To that end, I should like to make the following comments.

First, it is indeed true that the last two or three centuries have seen the concept of property evolve from a rather basic interest in land and chattels or personal property to a more complex concern with intellectual property such as patents, trademarks and copyrights, to passive property such as stocks and shares, and now to the so-called new property such as social security systems and public employment. Therefore, the defining of what is meant by property is now a necessary and sometimes complicated exercise.

Second, one must take the legitimate concerns of the aforementioned groups very seriously. It is only common sense for Prince Edward Island to be worried about excessive foreign ownership of its limited land resources. Every Canadian who loves Canada wants the appropriate environmental laws to ensure that our natural heritage is not abused. I, personally, have absolutely no patience with polluters, be they individuals, small or big businesses, or foreigners. Women's groups are right in wanting to safeguard the recent gains which have been made in family law legislation which have ensured a more equitable understanding of property rights within a marriage relationship.

There will always be a concern to ensure, on those occasions when difficult decisions must be made as to whether the public interest demands governmental expropriation of strategically-located land, that it be done with just recompense. Labour has raised important questions with respect to the just division of assets between the ownership and the workers upon the bankruptcy of a company. All this suggests that the careful legal interpretation of the "the enjoyment of property" is also a necessary and complicated exercise which is of particular concern to such groups and to Canadians in general.

However, having granted that "the enjoyment of property" may require both careful definition and legal interpretation, it is in no way sufficient to negate the premise and intent of the motion. Just because it may be difficult to define and interpret what is meant by "life", "liberty", or "security of the person", does not mean that we should refrain from enshrining them as fundamental rights. Similarly, just because it may be difficult to define and interpret "the enjoyment of property" does not necessarily mean that it must be excluded from the Charter. To so argue is, at best, to allow the necessary qualification to negate completely a valid principle and thereby engage in inverted logic. At worst, it is an attempt to create a smokescreen by consciously confusing primary and secondary considerations. Indeed, the first consideration in this whole matter is whether or not, in principle, it may be agreed that "the enjoyment of property" must be secured as a fundamental right for all Canadians within the Charter. In discussing the premise of the motion, I have argued at some length that it is logically inconsistent to do otherwise.

Apparently, even the Liberals and the NDP agree with this assessment, although their performance during the constitutional debates on the subject might suggest otherwise. The Liberal spokesman, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), recently stated that he was in agreement with the principle of property rights, as reported in Hansard on December 6, 1984. Similarly, the spokesman for the NDP, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), repeatedly stated in the House that his Party, in principle, was in favour of property rights. Some of his comments were reported in Hansard on February 1, 1985.

All that is fine, as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. Both the Liberal Party and the NDP have failed to pursue the principle to its logical conclusion. That is, since life does not operate in a vacuum, principles cannot be left in abstraction. Therefore, we must ensure that the principles of liberty lead to their natural conclusion in property rights.

I am content with the simple addition of the phrase, "and the enjoyment of property" being placed in the middle of Section 7 of the Charter of Rights. The parameters of the definition and the interpretation of this addition would be limited by the latter part of Section 7, which states that the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the enjoyment of property are limited "in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice".

As there will be a constitutional conference during the life of this parliamentary session which will at least discuss the issue of Senate reform, I strongly urge the federal Government and members of my Party to demonstrate to the people of Canada that we support the inclusion of property rights in the Charter of Rights. If the provinces in their wisdom choose to say no, then let them answer for their error to their electorate.

In conclusion, I call upon the House to refer the motion to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in order that the appropriate witnesses may be heard, a consensus achieved, and a conclusive decision made to secure within the Charter "the enjoyment of property" as a fundamental right and privilege of each and every Canadian.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the Hon. Member on presenting this motion to the House. The concept of property rights and the protection of those rights within our Constitution is a question we have all been debating in recent years, and having been very much involved in the constitutional process, I can inform the Hon. Member that property rights received a great deal of attention from Parliamentarians and committee members at the time. Now it should be understood that it was not indifference to the concept but the need for a compromise formula that led to the omission of property rights at the time the Constitution was patriated.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that his intentions are praiseworthy and that my party colleagues, when we were sitting on the Constitutional Committee as individual Members, were agreed on including property rights in the Constitution, but unfortunately, politics being the art of compromise, and considering the government's need at the time to reach a consensus on the Constitution and the Charter of Rights, property rights unfortunately fell by the wayside, at the insistance of some provincial governments and some of our colleagues in the New Democratic Party, who most certainly were influenced in their decision by friends in the provinces. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that at the time we were under tremendous pressure, and compromises were reached on a large number of issues relating to the Charter, including the definition of certain rights, and in this respect, I think the Hon. Member's initiative is very appropriate. I think that at the time, politicians, in their concern for achieving a praiseworthy goal, unfortunately neglected—

An Hon. Member: —neglected Quebec.

Mr. Lapierre: The Hon. Member says: "neglected Quebec", and I agree. In a perfect world, we would have liked all Canadians to applaud in unison. Unfortunately, that was not to be, and I hope we will be able to remedy this unfortunate incident or accident, and I should be happy to support the Government if some honourable solution could be found. Nevertheless, I am very happy with the Hon. Member's initiative, because at a time when Parliament will be examining Senate reform, and when we will want to include Quebec in the Constitutional Agreement, I think the Hon. Member's concern is shared by Members in my own caucus, and he can count on our support, because we will be able to take a fresh look at this question, and since his leader is always talking about his new spirit and new openness, I hope that improved relations with the provinces will make it possible to enshrine property rights. In fact, in a society like ours, Mr. Speaker, property rights should be fundamental and be given protection against the tyranny of the majority.

I think all Canadians could go along with this concept. I think Canadians have a fundamental belief in the rights of the individual and the need to work to acquire property that can be left to future generations, and I think all our fellow Canadians would be pleased to see these rights protected.

Mr. Speaker, a number of governments at the time objected because it might create problems for their powers of expropriation, and so forth. I am very pleased. I think that ever since the Charter became effective, which is fairly recent, and especially where it has served as the basis for court decisions, I do not think anyone has found anything wrong with it. I do not think the courts have set themselves up as a distinct power. They have been strictly applying the provisions of the Charter in a fair and equitable manner, and they have occasionally, and rightly so, made Parliamentarians see reason. Bearing that in mind, I am very pleased with the Hon. Member's initiative. I would even say that there are certainly more improvements that could be made in the Charter, and I think that through the kind of initiative proposed by the Hon. Member and others, we may be able to give Canadians a better Charter.

As I said earlier, the Charter was a compromise. Very important concepts were left out. However, Canadian society is changing, which means there will always be a chance to add improvements. I am thinking, for instance, of Quebec's constitutional proposal. In that proposal, it is said that the Quebec Charter of Rights and Freedoms is more generous than the Canadian Charter. Unfortunately, it does not have the ultraparliamentary effect of the Canadian Charter but it contains more generous provisions for many citizens or classes of citizens. In that sense, I hope that the compromise formula arrived at in the constitutional negotiations with Quebec will add new guarantees for the citizens, new elements to the Canadian Charter which will make it more in keeping with the Quebec Charter.

But, in fact, Mr. Speaker, we, parliamentarians, are the ones who must agree to limit ourselves. I think it is important for all of us and the compromise made at the time of patriation needs to be reviewed. Everybody agrees. The corrective measure proposed by the Hon. Member is very reasonable and very commendable, and I am pleased with it. I can see some of my colleagues from Quebec who might be too. I think it could be a solution to improve the Canadian Charter.

We have all had a look at Mr. Lévesque's proposals, and particularly the details concerning the Quebec Charter. I think it could be interesting to increase the scope of the Canadian Charter to include in it provisions which are somewhat similar to those of the Quebec Charter. As a matter of fact, these are all principles on which politicians in general, especially Canadian politicians, because they are strictly the instruments of the population . . . Certainly, the Canadian people could appreciate the expansion of the scope of the Charter.

Mr. Speaker, I remember when we talked about the entrenchment of a Canadian Charter in the Constitution, several of my colleagues here were sceptical. We thought about the supremacy of Parliament, and we all remembered our law classes where we learned that the only thing Parliament cannot do is change a man into a woman. We all remembered those honourable concepts but in fact, science has evolved and it is even possible to change a man into a woman today. Consequently, we must forget our old concepts of civil law or common law and realize that society changes, that our judicial system changes, that our parliamentary system changes. And your presence in this chair, Mr. Speaker, is a good example of a changing world. I am going to tell you that I hope the Charter will be submitted regularly to a renewal process to adapt to Canadian reality and in that sense, I want to congratulate again the Hon. Member for his initiative and I hope that in a constitutional negotiation, when there is less pressure... You know, it is much easier to improve things, than to change or to disturb old habits. From the moment the precedent of a constitutional Charter is established, from the moment people or lawyers have learned to live with, from the moment judges have demonstrated to us their view of reasonableness... From then on, the Charter could be reopened without creating as much commotion as its inclusion as such stirred in this country. In that sense, I feel that now we can be very happy we patriated our Constitution, because now we can discuss it between us, between Canadians, according to our own system of values. We don't even have to go through a little exercise which proved somewhat difficult for all of us, that is to go to another country and beg for the rights we wanted for us, Canadians. In that sense, the fact that we have cut the umbilical cord with Great Britain allows us to discuss between us without having to get others' approval, and I hope that other motions of the kind put forward by the Hon. Member will be introduced in this House so that we can really improve the Charter and make sure it does meet the new values of Canadians. I do hope his colleagues will not speak too long because I want to give the House the opportunity to pass and refer this motion to the committee, for if the government is really serious about it they will let it go to committee. I am sure we will be able to make tremendous progress as a Parliament if we include this notion of property rights which is absolutely not disputed by no right across this country.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks on the motion before us, and I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) for bringing forward this motion on a very important topic. As I listened to him I was reminded of Tennyson's poem about the northern farmer in the 19th century who, as he rode his horse, at every step heard the horse's foot sounding the word: "proputty-proputty-proputty". That seems to be one of the constant themes of the Conservative Party: "proputty-proputty-proputty".

Mr. Nickerson: It is. You have it right.

Mr. Manly: We have seen a number of things debated during Private Members' Hour. Capital punishment was one issue, and metric used to be an issue until the Government decided it was not going to turn the clock back, it would throw a sop to some of the Conservatives but basically would endorse what had been done. At any rate, we have the Conservatives continuing with this theme: "proputty-proputty-proputty", as they trot along with their 19th century ideas.

I think it is very important to emphasize that this debate is not about the right to own property. We already have that right. It is a right that Canadians enjoy, a right that I enjoy and intend to continue enjoying. For that reason I hope I will be able to continue paying my taxes and my mortgage, and I intend to avoid violating any of the zoning regulations which impinge upon my property. However, I recognize, as I enjoy my property, that no right is absolute, and I think we have to look at this question in light of that fact.

New Democrats have a long and proud tradition of defending the right of ordinary Canadians to own their own homes, farms and small businesses. We recognize that this is the central part of the Canadian way of life, and we fought against threats to this kind of ownership. Today the fundamental threats to that right come from a number of sources, such as high unemployment. How many people in this House have seen people lose their houses, farms and businesses because of the economic system? If people do not have jobs, they lose their homes. Where we have usurious interest rates, banks foreclose on people's homes. What a painful experience it is, not only to lose your equity, but also, as in British Columbia where our housing prices have fallen so drastically, to be stuck with costs in addition to that. These people bought homes and put everything they had into them, made their payments, and when they lost their jobs and were unable to make the payments, they were stuck with a great bill to pay to the bank because of usurious interest rates. When land is treated as a speculative commodity, that in turn is a threat against the right to own property. We would like to see that right spread around so more Canadians enjoy that right. We do not want to see it restricted to the few who are able to get the necessary funds together to buy their homes. We want to see all Canadians have access to the enjoyment of property.

Many of us in this House come from countries such as England or Scotland which have a somewhat bitter history. People once thought they had a certain right to property, but then they found out, through the enclosures or the highland clearances, that someone else had the legal right. So what they had enjoyed as a common right was taken away from them by the lord or the clan chiefs who were able to establish in court some kind of right to the property. These people were then deprived of their property.

Mr. Taylor: We do not have feudalism here.

Mr. Manly: We have that history. You ask me about Canada. Just two weeks ago we celebrated, or commemorated perhaps, there is not too much to celebrate, the one hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Batoche. The Métis had tried to protect their land, land that they had developed themselves. But who had legal title to that land? They found out that the Government of Canada had granted legal title to the railways, and the Métis were driven off their land. I would like to ask

Hon. Members, if we had approved the motion which is before us today, who would have had the right to that property? It would have been the CPR, not the Métis.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manly: I challenge Hon. Members opposite to show me otherwise. The fact is that constitutional recognition of property rights would not have enabled the Métis to hold on to their land in opposition to the CPR. Constitutional entrenchment would not have enabled the Japanese people to hold on to their property once the War Measures Act was proclaimed. What is constitutional entrenchment going to do with regard to aboriginal title? There are a lot of concerns here.

Mr. Taylor: You are full of excuses.

Mr. Manly: When we look at the wording of the resolution, Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms would read that everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property. But I am concerned about that word "everyone"—

Some Hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Manly: Because, as Members opposite will recognize, it not only includes human beings, it also includes other entities such as corporations. What we have to be very concerned about is that we do not simply end up entrenching the rights of the CPR or of MacMillan Bloedel. They have plenty of funds so they can have access to the courts and go through all kinds of appeal procedures which are not available to the ordinary citizen who cannot afford them. If we are going to look at a resolution dealing with property rights, we have to make sure we are protecting the rights of persons, not just those of large corporations.

Mr. Nickerson: That is what it says in the motion.

Mr. Manly: That is not what it says in the motion. The way the motion reads it would protect the rights of CPR and other large corporations.

I think the Hon. Member who moved the motion recognized that property is an evolving concept. It is not just land, or the right to land, but covers an expanding number of meanings. We need to recognize that property rights are covered by our Constitution presently. They are part of provincial jurisdiction under Section 9213 of the Constitution Act of 1867. Many provinces, including those with Conservative Governments, have been extremely leery of entrenching property rights in the Charter. For example, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) will be aware of the fact that the Government of Alberta, through its Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, Mr. Horsman, has indicated that property and civil rights should remain under the control of the provinces and not be entrenched. During the constitutional conference two or three years ago, the Province of British Columbia tried to get a resolution dealing with property rights entrenched in the Charter, and Mr. Horsman canvassed the other provinces and reported that there was very little support for that idea. So they have some legitimate concerns which must be addressed by the House in dealing with this issue.

Property rights entrenched in the Constitution could very seriously restrict the right of provinces to pass legislation which would protect agricultural land, protect the environment, or ensure that choice recreational land is not bought up and controlled by foreign interests. I am concerned that we not take away the right of provinces to socialize industries for the public good. An example of that is the purchase of potash industries in Saskatchewan. I am concerned that laws to redistribute wealth and create a more just and equalitarian society in Canada not be abridged. Government should be able to act in the interest of all people rather than of a few corporations which have the financial clout.

Some members of the Party opposite have been running something of a fear campaign with a rather simplistic appeal to the natural concerns of all Canadians who would like to be able to own and enjoy their property. This is natural. We respect and endorse it. Although members of the Government opposite talk about property rights, we have seen no action from them that will protect the property of ordinary people from the banks. We have seen no protection from the ravages of unemployment. Instead, they talk about the entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution as a panacea without being aware of the side effects which are involved.

For example, would the entrenchment of property rights give data banks the right to collect personal information and to sell it later on? What protection would there be against that kind of use of personal information? That kind of information is part of the evolving concept of property rights. What protection do individuals have against that? The Conservatives have raised some legitimate concerns, but they have aroused more fear in the general public.

New Democrats have suggested that any proposal to entrench property rights must be subjected to full committee hearings before which a wide variety of people can testify about their concerns. I certainly cannot support the motion in its present form, but we would be interested to see what the Government might bring forward. If the Conservatives are really interested in this issue, it is incumbent upon the front benches of the Government to bring forward a well considered motion rather than a simplistic one such as this. Such a motion should be debated fully in the House of Commons and then referred to a committee process to allow all kinds of groups to be heard. In that way we can be assured that we are not simply acting out of a blind instinct to own property.

I would like to conclude by pointing out that there is a finite amount of land in this world. Our population is still expanding. When speaking of property rights in relation to land we must consider how much land one person needs. There are countries in Central America such as El Salvador where a dozen families control almost all of the land and the peasants have been pushed off. Entrenchment of property rights in such a situation would simply entrench that inequity. We do not want to entrench such an inequity, but rather to recognize the rights of ordinary Canadian people to own their own homes, farms, and businesses. We do not want to make it possible for large corporations to use the Constitution to deny Government the power to act in the interest of ordinary Canadians.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms is still in the process of being shaken down in our courts. We are still unsure as to what many of its provisions mean. While that is happening, it is very important for us to watch closely to see in what direction the Supreme Court is moving with regard to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Since the Charter was passed I have not heard anyone say that if property rights had been entrenched things would have been much better. In fact, I am sure that if the entrenchment of property rights had been included in the words of this motion, things would have been a lot more complicated rather than better. If the Government brings forward a motion which will recognize, respect, and protect the rights of ordinary Canadians to own their homes, farms, and businesses, we in this Party will give it our full support. We have fought continuously against every force that has tried to take those rights away from Canadians and we will support any positive measures. We are not interested in entrenching the rights of large corporations to prevent positive measures for a more just society in Canada.

Mr. Taylor: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. NDP Member left out his most important argument, namely, that it would be more difficult to nationalize if property rights were in the Charter—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay).

[Translation]

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate my colleague the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) who presented a well-founded notion today.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) deserves a great deal of credit for the concern which he has shown about the entrenchment of property rights in Canada. His comments today are a valuable contribution to public discussion of this matter. This continuing public discussion is appropriate for resolving this important national issue. Many individuals as well as organizations and provincial and municipal Governments are interested in this matter. Regrettably, private Members' hour does not allow us the time to give their views the full and thoughtful consideration that they deserve, nor does it allow us to canvass properly the legal, economic, and social implications of entrenching property rights.

I hope that I will one day see in the House of Commons a private Members' hour which provides private Members with the chance to present a Bill and have it debated until it passes in the House. I believe we are operating under an antiquated set of rules. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Kitchener for bringing forward this matter in order that it may be discussed thoroughly, even though it may not be adopted in the House.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) both missed the complex and overstated and simplified the partisan. I respectfully submit that the Member was bringing forth, on behalf of his constituents and many other Canadians, some concerns which people express. The Hon. Member tried to make the subject of this motion into a Conservative policy or non-policy. Let me say clearly that I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member for Kitchener who brings forth this very important issue. I fully support the principle of entrenching property rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I welcome today's debate as an opportunity to comment upon some of those issues. I am committed to the idea of entrenching property rights in the Charter. The Progressive Conservative Party has long supported property rights. We recognize that property rights represent basic protection for all Canadians.

We all own property of some sort; be it simple personal possessions, a Canada Savings Bond, a car or a house. We are concerned about providing constitutional protection for the right to own and use property because the ownership and use of property is so pervasive in our society. In my view, this right is no less important than other rights already entrenched in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Property rights have a long history in our society. Their development marked the evolution from feudalism to democracy. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), now the Minister of National Health and Welfare, commented on this when the Progressive Conservative Party introduced a motion in the House in 1983 to entrench propery rights in the Constitution. I refer Hon. Members to page 24997 of Hansard on April 29, 1983, where the Hon. Member for Provencher is reported as having said this:

> In the British context, private property has always been historically associated with the development of free institutions. It goes back to 1215, when the Magna Carta referred to it. It is referred to in the Bill of Rights of 1627.

The historical concept for property rights is clearly important. However, there is a fundamental interdependence between the right to liberty and the right to property. The right to property enables us to carry on and benefit from useful and productive activities independent of Government. With this economic freedom comes political freedom. We are less afraid to criticize the Government and give expression to our views when we know that the Government cannot arbitrarily control or affect our right to own and enjoy or use our property. The right to property has been recognized in many jurisdictions outside of Canada.

To this point I have spoken of property rights in the abstract. For ordinary Canadians, property rights are concrete.

For them, property rights mean the right to own and enjoy their homes, their farms, their businesses without arbitrary interference from the Government. Property rights mean that they can provide for their children and their future. Property rights are their security, their assurance that things they have striven so hard to acquire and accomplish will not be undermined.

As important as property rights are, all of us recognize that they must, like other individual rights, sometimes give way to higher interests in the common good or to other individual rights. The Hon. Member for Kitchener understood that well in his presentation to the House. There are many laws affecting property interests which are essential to the proper functioning of our society. I speak of laws such as public health and safety, environmental laws, resource laws, community planning laws and family laws. In one way or another, such laws regulate the ownership and use of property in the public interest.

All three levels of Government in Canada—federal, provincial and municipal—have found it necessary to enact such laws. In doing so, they have usually struck a reasonable and fair balance between property rights and important societal interests.

There are many who are concerned, however, that the entrenchment of property rights will tip this balance in a way which is detrimental to these important societal interests. The provinces, women's groups, environmentalists, civil libertarians, native people and others have voiced concerns about the potential consequences of entrenching property rights. I see no reason why the concerns expressed should prevent us from acting. Those concerns simply indicate to me that there is a need to be cautious and sure that we have consulted all of those groups before we act in amending our Charter.

Some of the provinces are concerned that in applying property rights guarantees to provincial laws, the courts will substitute their economic and social beliefs for the judgment of legislatures. They believe that these sorts of judgment should be made by our elected representatives. The provinces would not appear to object to these sort of procedural protections which may be provided by the entrenchment of property rights in the Charter. Nor do they appear to object to protection against arbitrary government action. They do object to any step that would usurp their responsibility to make important social and economic policy decisions on the basis of public interst.

Women's groups are also concerned that by entrenching property rights we will be enabling the courts to substitute their policy views for those of Government. They point, and rightly so, to the experience in the United States in the first few decades of this century.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) have a point of order?

Mr. Lapierre: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I am very happy with the speech made by the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay), but if I am not mistaken, Mr. Speaker, in the case of private members' business, if one were to speak till six o'clock, would all those good words not be vain? Could you remind the Hon. Member for St. Boniface of the rules in order that—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Duguay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure my colleague that I fully understand the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

[English]

The women's groups to whom I was referring point to the experience in the United States in the first few decades of this century. During that time, the courts invoked the due process clause of the U.S. Constitution to strike down social and economic legislation. I make that point not to undermine the points made by my hon. colleague. They are indeed valid.

Mr. Malépart: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie rising on a point of order?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I believe my hon. colleague and friend from St. Boniface does not know the procedure. Could you explain to him that what he is now doing is talking out a Bill which is of great importance for Canadians?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think that it is fair to the Hon. Member, particularly in private Members' hour. I regret that Hon. Members are doing this. The Hon. Member still has a minute left in which to speak.

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, not only do I know and respect the rules of this House, but I do not abuse them as do some other Hon. Members.

[English]

The present Government has not had sufficient opportunity to consult with the parties concerned in this matter and to consider properly their views. Consultation takes time. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kitchener, has raised a very important issue. He has contributed to an important debate. Canadians understand that the matter that he raises is significant to all of us. It needs to be done with a great deal of care and concern so that when we put forth amendments they are supported by the provinces and Canadians get what they so rightfully deserve, an entrenchment of property rights.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR TAX MEASURES TO ASSIST ARTISTS AND WRITERS. (B) UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE INQUIRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on May 3 I raised a very important question regarding taxation of artists in Canada. I particularly noted the recommendations of the report of the subcommittee on the taxation of visual and performing artists and writers. It made a large number of precise recommendations to get our artists out of poverty and to see that they get their due with the tax man and do not have to endure unreasonable treatment by tax authorities. The answer I got was extremely unsatisfactory.

I raised the question about the deduction of losses, about the deduction of expenses, assuming people who are artists have the right to make deductions as do other professional people. I also raised the issue of unemployment insurance because our artists are people who suffer from very long periods of unemployment and now for the most part are excluded from coverage by unemployment insurance.

The only answer I got from the minister was that these things were being considered by the Government and I would get my answer in due course in the Budget. Since that time we have had a Budget. I regret to say the very large number of concerns that were raised in the subcommittee on taxation of artists did not make it into the Budget. All of the lobbying, the march on Ottawa, the lobbying done by the Canadian Conference of the Arts and many other arts groups that made recommendations to see fair taxes for artists have been ignored.

The taxation of artists raises the matter of poverty and justice. Visual and performing artists and writers are the less well-paid group in Canada. According to Statistics Canada figures, pensioners are the only ones to have lower income than our artists. It was therefore to be expected that the Budget would contain concrete proposals to improve their lot.

Last year, the subcommittee on the taxation of visual and performing artists and writers proposed a series of measures to increase the income of artists. The Conservatives, who were then in Opposition, supported those proposals. During the election campaign, the Conservative Party renewed its support for those recommendations. Now that they have the chance to keep their promises, they fail to do so. The plight and poverty of our artists does not concern them any more.

The most important recommendations of the subcommittee were as follows.

20—That the simple fact of incurring major expenses creates a presumption of self-employment for all performing artists.

11—That all losses resulting from expenses directly related to the artist's or writer's work be fully deductible. The same thing is recommended for tutoring costs.

27—That the grants given to professional artists be considered a business income and that their expenditures be deductible from their income.

23—That performing artists be eligible to unemployment insurance, regardless of their fiscal status.

In my opinion, it would be advisable to make other categories of creative artists eligible for unemployment insurance. Unemployment is a much more prevalent problem among our artists than this would indicate.

7—That the Income Tax Act be amended to allow the deduction of losses resulting from professional artistic activities.

22—That the Income Tax Act be amended to authorize symphony orchestra musicians to claim the deduction of all expenses incurred for the maintenance of their instruments.

In this regard, Revenue Canada has recently replied to the demands of Canadian orchestras that such an amendment to the Act was unlikely to be made.

• (1805)

[English]

It is extremely regrettable that we have not seen any swift and favourable response to this important measure for musicians.

What this Government has done is much more limited. In this Budget, this Government has taken action in only two of the cases covered by the 31 recommendations of the subcommittee and has chosen two measures which deal only with visual artists. This means that there is nothing for performing artists, writers and other creative artists.

[English]

I am sure that Mr. Tony Onley is pleased that he can put away his matches and not burn his works on the beaches of Vancouver. He is a visual artist who has been helped by this Budget. However, most of the artists have not been helped.

Measures which deal with only one small group are not enough. We want justice for artists. We want measures which will ensure that they have adequate incomes in order that they can pursue their work.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, many recommendations made by the subcommittee on the taxation of visual and performing artists and writers were accepted on an administrative basis by Revenue Canada and did not entail legislative amendments.

With regard to the specific case of performing artists, their self-employed status has been strengthened by the administrative policy which allows them to deduct the cost of musical tutoring and other lessons to develop their talents. Revenue Canada has also reviewed its interpretation bulletin for musicians and performing artists to take into account the length of their job contracts. This will allow most performing artists to be considered as self-employed.

When the contracts of symphony orchestra musicians are once again submitted to Revenue Canada, the department is willing to consider most, if not all, these musicians as self-employed, therefore, it is no longer necessary to implement the recommendation of the subcommittee to amend depreciation provisions since these self-employed musicians can already claim depreciation for their instruments. Mr. Speaker, these changes meet the concerns expressed by the subcommittee about the fiscal status of performing artists.

[English]

The question has also been raised as to whether the Government is prepared to introduce a measure permitting the deduction of artistic and writing losses from other income. Such a measure implies a definition within the Income Tax Act of a special category of individuals called "professional artists", who could deduct losses without necessarily meeting the test of "reasonable expectation of profit". By allowing the proposed deduction, our tax system would be providing a subsidy to all individuals who meet the criteria of "professional artist" but who may have no intention of earning income from their artistic pursuits.

Further, the definition of "professional artist" would likely be unpalatable to the arts community and would be difficult for Revenue Canada officials to administer with any degree of consistency. Given these problems, Revenue Canada has modified its administration by including in its determination of "reasonable expectation of profit" the criteria of professionalism and the longer time frame required to earn profits from artistic and writing activities. This change in administrative practice ensures that these persons will not be denied the deduction of losses from other income.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) would be well-advised to refer to the Budget Speech and Papers to learn about the most recent changes in the legislation dealing with artists generally and especially visual artists.

PUBLIC SERVICE—JOB CLASSIFICATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the question I want to raise during the adjournment debate has to do with an issue of great interest to public employees. I am referring to job classification and classification standards. The matter is very complex, so perhaps I might explain first what classification means and how the system works.

Here are some of the remarks one can find in the Auditor's General's report. Job classification is an important element and an integral part of the salary of federal employees. This process makes it possible to establish the relative value of jobs in the federal Public Service and to classify each job within a professional group and at a precise level.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, it is a duty to be performed by the employer, a management responsibility related to about 222,000 jobs in the Public Service of Canada.

Last May 22, I asked the Minister a question to find out whether this Government—which, as we know, made a considerable number of election promises—would keep its word. In a letter he wrote last year to the President of the Public Service Institute, Mr. Donegani, the then Leader of the Conservative Party said, and I quote from the English version I have here:

[English]

A PC government will negotiate directly with public service unions and associations toward the establishment of an improved collective bargaining system . . . Staffing procedures, classification, technological change, designations, and other issues will become negotiable.

Classification will become negotiable.

[Translation]

Last May 22, I wanted to know from the Minister when the Government would keep its word and when we might expect that famous negotiation for classification standards to become reality and on what conditions.

The Minister was absent at the time, so the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) told me that he would note the question and bring it to the attention of his colleague.

It is not just everybody who can talk every day to the Minister responsible. I remind Hon. Members that I am still waiting for an answer, that the unions are worried and would like to know when the matter will be settled.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, the issue of classification standards had been raised in last year's Auditor General report. According to the Auditor General of Canada, the existing system was such that 25 per cent of Public Service jobs were incorrectly classified; 80 per cent of classification errors or 19 per cent of all jobs were cases of overclassification. According to the findings of an audit by the Secretary of the Treasury Board, one federal employee out of five is overpaid. Still according to the Secretary of the Treasury Board, the cost of overclassification is estimated to be $125 million a year, 2.4 per cent of the ordinary rate of pay. The net cost of the employer's classification errors is therefore rather high, and I would point out to the House that the Auditor General said that this amount of money, $125 million, would be enough for 5,200 jobs, enough to staff three of this Government's average departments.

So, it is rather embarrassing that the government cannot come forward with a solution after promising a review of classification standards. I do not blame the government for previous mistakes, since classification standards were not negotiable in the past. But the Conservatives did promise during the election campaign that for the sake of efficiency those standards should be made negotiable with public servants as it is the case for salaries.

On February 4—as you can see I am not raising that matter for the first time—I asked the Treasury Board what corrective action was considered to alleviate the situation. The Minister reiterated at that time that he would indeed keep his word. And he did confirm it on May 15 in committee while answering a question on job classification in the Public Service. He said that we could rest assured that the government would live up to the commitment made during the election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, considering the report of the Auditor General and media reports as well to the effect that we are facing a serious situation, that some $125 million and 5,000 jobs are at stake; considering that this government announced in his last budget that it would cut 5,000 jobs next year, I do not think we are seeking too much from the government by asking that it take corrective action in the very near future so as to remove that sword of Damocles hanging over the reputation of public servants, since it is said that they are overclassified; in other words, overpaid. That allegation is groundless. As stated by the President of the Public Alliance as well as the President of the Professional Institute, such allegation does not take into account the fact that a number of jobs are presently underclassified, that is underpaid.

Drastic changes have also occurred in job classifications with the implementation of the computer system into the federal administration. That means that in some cases jobs have not been reviewed for the past ten years and are yet to be classified, and employees should not be blamed for the lack of corrective action by the employer.

I would like to know tonight if the government is prepared to announce that a system of negotiation for classification standards will be implemented so as to correct not only an unfair situation that needs to be corrected but also to strengthen a system that needs to be tough, to implement standards by which the federal administration could operate normally, efficiently and effectively in the best interests of Canadian taxpayers.

• (1815)

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Section 7 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act confirms the right of the Treasury Board to classify positions in the Public Service. When the Board's secretariat reviews a classification standard with a view to updating it, a copy of the draft revised standard is provided to the affected Public Service union for comment. That process has enabled meaningful input from unions to be incorporated into the revised standards. As a result of consultation with the Public Service Alliance of Canada, significant changes were made recently in the revised standard for the General Labour and Trades Group.

The Treasury Board Secretariat last fall commenced a review of the program administration classification standard. As an experiment, it was decided to have representatives of the Alliance sit as members of the standards review committee with exactly the same voice in the deliberations as representatives of user government Departments. The arrangement appears to be working well, and the same process is slated to apply to the upcoming review of the administrative services standard.

I mentioned those practices and developments to show that Treasury Board has been and is involving the Public Service unions in a meaningful way in the matter of the review of classification standards.

At the Standing Committee on Public Accounts on May 16, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) advised that all classification standards would be reviewed and updated over the next two years. Any deputy head whose Department's classification performance is unsatisfactory will be called before Treasury Board to explain the situation and submit plans to correct it.

In response to the Hon. Member's question about the election promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to make classification a negotiable issue, the President of the Treasury Board referred to the good progress he was making in the discussions he was holding on six union-management issues with the Public Service union leaders.

The views of other interested parties will also be solicited. Out of the process will emerge the Government's proposals to change the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Those changes will be placed before Parliament at the earliest possible date.

SOCIAL SECURITY—BENEFITS PAID TO WIDOWS AND WIDOWERS AGED 60 TO 64 YEARS—EXCLUSION OF SINGLE, DIVORCED AND SEPARATED PERSONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, further to a question I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), whom unfortunately I must call—because of his actions, of the decisions he has made concerning the aged with respect to Bill C-26 and because of what happened in the Budget—the Minister of Social Injustice in Canada, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister at that time why this Progressive Conservative Government has deliberately decided to debar 80,000 older persons in need, aged 60 to 65 years, from the spouse allowance program for the simple reason that they were single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague also reminds me that all persons in religious orders, unless the Minister considers that having been married to God they have become widows or widowers, those persons as matters now stand will not be entitled to the spouse allowance because they are considered single.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to tell me how it is possible that in 1985, men and women can meet in Cabinet and look at the number of needy citizens who now live, not below the poverty line but below the misery line since they are on welfare, how can human beings in 1985 decide to give assistance to half of those persons while ignoring the other half? Who are the persons being penalized by the Bill? Let us look together at the single people who are 60 years old today. Why? First, those people often have been living mainly in rural areas. Most often, they were the eldest daughters in the family, people who sacrificed their own future. They left school early enough to help their mother raise the children at home. They sacrificed their own interests so their brothers and sisters could get an education, find jobs. And upon reaching a certain age, they had to go on sacrificing their own aspirations to stay with their fathers and mothers, because of their age, rather than sending father and mother to a nursing home. They accepted to give up everything to stay at home, they remained single, saving the governments retiring home money. And all those people inherited from their parents has been the so-called family home. Now they own the house where they have been living but they have no money to pay for their property taxes.

Mr. Speaker, because this Government and this Minister of Social Injustice refuse to help those persons, it is a sad sight, Mr. Speaker, to see those people who sacrificed everything all their lives, who served the community being told by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister: No, you are not to be entitled to the spouse's allowance.

What about the 80,000 persons who are separated or divorced? I remember the celebrations on Remembrance Day. We mentioned veterans, widows and widowers. I think that persons older than I would remember the many broken marriages at that time because of people having to live far apart.

They are mothers who kept going despite the husband being away for whatever reason, Mothers who all by themselves raised five or ten children, who sacrificed everything when times were really tough, not in the easier years we ourselves have known. And, today, the Government is telling them: Because you are separated, unfortunately you are not entitled to the spouse's allowance. It is only for widows and widowers. When I am told we are looking at this in terms of money, it seems to me we all have been elected here not only for the purpose of writing a budget. We were elected with our hearts and our souls, with the knowledge we have. I am convinced that if there was a free vote on that matter, Mr. Speaker, there is not one. Member who would vote against extending the spouse's allowance to all persons living alone, whether single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, it is unthinkable that those 80,000 persons will be turned down come September. They are to be found in each and every constituency. I believe that I have been trying to call the Government's attention on that since before the Christmas holidays. I have been calm, I have been violent, I have been tough to try and make this Government understand. I may have upset a few people and I am sorry about that but I am quite sincere when I say that when someone is in dire straits, when someone is not treated fairly, I think it is our duty as Members to raise the issue and get someone's attention.

I do not want to score political points, but look at all the waste; they say there is no money, they want to reduce the deficit, but they have to live up to our NATO commitments and so they will send a thousand more soldiers to Lahr, at a cost of $100 million a year. I wish the Prime Minister had been more humane, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) had also been more humane. The former Minister of National Health and Welfare, Miss Bégin, would never have done anything like that. It seems to me they should have said: Let us respect our commitments towards Canadians first and then, after three or four years, we will respect our NATO commitments. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, the first thing to do would have been to meet the needs of senior citizens. I will not even comment on the penalties imposed in the recent Budget.

But I keep hoping and I have confidence in the Parliamentary Secretary. I am seriously considering the possibility of urging the Prime Minister to ask for the resignation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and to put the Parliamentary Secretary in his place. I hope she will answer me from the bottom of her heart, as she did before, rather than read from a paper written by departmental officials.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Tonight I am not going to use the notes provided by the Department, Mr. Speaker, because answering the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is too easy.

He wants to champion the cause of the poorest of the poor within our society, something for which I congratulate him. This does not mean, however, that we on this side remain insensitive to the needs of these people. As you said a while ago, we have hearts and souls just like everybody else, and as part of our party's last year election platform, we had promised spouse's allowances to widows and widowers between 60 and 64 years of age. Surely we would like to do more and say that widows and widowers will be eligible at age 59. It might be discriminatory against people 59 years of age to draw the line at age 60. But we must take into account our ability to pay; suffice it to say that we should like to do more and that we will do more as soon as we can. For the time being, only widows and widowers will start receiving in September these spouse's allowances.

If we were to share the views of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie who feels that we are not concerned about the needs of all the needy people... Besides these widows and widowers, there is a whole lot of people within our society, I mean, all those women who may or may not have worked outside their homes and who, being 40, 45 or 50 years of age, are tired and who would be delighted to get benefits from the government under some program or other. There are other categories of people who are improverished and underprivileged. We think about them and we are trying to put programs together to help them survive. The hon. member has raised this issue many, many times, which is understandable, but all we can say is that we will do what he is asking for when we can.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 6.29 p.m.

MINES

REQUEST FOR REAL POLICY CONCERNING ASBESTOS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) announced recently that the Sherbrooke-Asbestos gas pipeline project was shelved. This unilateral decision is an insult to the Quebec Government which was not party to this decision-making process. The decision will have a dramatic impact: first, although it is planning to invest $1.2 billion, Domtar will not be supplied with natural gas and, second, J.M. Asbestos Company has just announced 225 lay-offs.

In either case, Mr. Speaker, the Government is not doing anything at all. It is not doing anything with respect to the gas pipeline which would make Domtar's project more viable and pave the way for real economic diversification in the two single-industry towns of my riding.

As to asbestos, the Government's performance is pitiful and will have a dramatic impact on the major city of my riding, Asbestos. The people of Asbestos quite properly expect the Government to implement a dynamic abestos policy to boost sales and on-site processing.

Shameful though it may be, the Government processes only 5 per cent of the production and simply exports the other 95 per cent. Processing would be just the way to create jobs.

ENERGY

GASOLINE PRICES—BUDGET IMPACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, there is much in the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) which concerns Canadians. The betrayal of the Conservative promise of full indexation for the old age pension was the cruellest cut of all. However, I would like to talk about another broken promise.

On page 97 of the Conservative campaign handbook, the Conservatives promised:

> The tax system must be adjusted to help lower the price of consumer oil and gas products.

Was that promise kept? No, it was not. Instead, ordinary Canadians will see yet another hike in the cost of gasoline, not to reduce the deficit as some may claim, but to give more to the oil companies of the land.

Canadians in rural and northern areas are doubly hit. First, they already have to pay higher prices. Second, they have longer distances to travel. That is not all. In addition, because the cost of gasoline is going up, it will mean that each and every product which is transported into rural and northern areas will go up as well.

It is upsetting to many Canadians that the Government does not keep its promises. But it is doubly upsetting to realize that it has absolutely no concern for those people who live in the hinterland of the country.

IMPACT ON THE AGED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to stir the conscience of Hon. Members by reminding them of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) expect them to do about the elderly.

The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have been urging us to tell the elderly that they ought to tighten their belts to reduce the deficit. When we talk about the elderly, we are referring to my father and mother, your father and mother who were brought up in difficult times. My parents were married during the Depression, they lived through hard times yet paid to send me to school because education was not free in those days, they made a lot of sacrifices to pay for medical care because there was no such thing as health insurance then. Today's generation of Wilsons and Mulroneys benefit from the self-sacrificing achievements of elderly Canadians who are once again expected to do more than their share so that the Wilson and Mulroney children will not have to pay the debt later on.

Mr. Speaker, I should think that all members of the House share my feelings: under no circumstances will I ever ask my parents for more sacrifices. I would rather sacrifice the Wilson and Mulroney generation and well-to-do people to reduce the deficit and save our children as well as our parents.

INTERNATIONAL YOUTH YEAR

COMPOSITION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the United Nations has designated 1985 as International Youth Year, in which the three themes of participation, development, and peace are to be given emphasis.

The United Nations' document elaborating on these themes states that "participation implies that a person is aware of his or her opportunity, has access to the means necessary for taking advantage of it, and feels satisfied that his or her contribution has been recognized". That condition will not be met in Canada if a person is a disabled youth, an Acadian, an East Indian, or a black. Those persons will not be represented on the Youth Advisory Committee for International Youth Year which was appointed by the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne).

The Acadian community, in particular, has already expressed its concern to the Government. Participation is also compromised by exploitation for political purposes, such as has been alleged by some to have occurred in Jamaica when there was an attempt to co-opt Canadian support for highly partisan, right wing resolutions which were promoted by the United States, or when background material and agendas were not provided in a timely fashion in preparation for meetings.

New Democrats believe that participation is of fundamental importance to all components of our youthful society. What the membership of the advisory committee might be is of tremendous and symbolic significance—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN HOGS

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the House an important delegation which is in Ottawa this week. Hog producers are here from all provinces in Canada to call on their elected representatives and to inform them of the serious dilemma which faces the hog industry today. If the current United States countervailing duty on hogs continues, Canadian hog production could drop by 25 per cent to 30 per cent. That would mean a loss in production of from three million to five million head, and some $300 million to $500 million to Canadian hog producers. With the five-to-one spinoff recognized in hog production today, Canada's economy could lose $2.5 billion.

We have 50,000 hog producers in the country. About 30,000 live hogs and seven million pounds of pork are exported to the United States each week. The countervailing duty is 3.8 cents per pound on live hogs, and 5.3 cents on pork. It is disastrous. Canadian hog prices have dropped over 15 per cent since the tariff was imposed.

We must act now so that this vital sector of our agricultural economy is not devastated beyond repair. All the provinces and all the hog boards must work collectively with the Government before the full effects of the tariff are felt.

The hog producers are not looking for handouts. They have not come begging. All they want is a fair deal. All they want is access to fair trade.

EMPLOYMENT

THE BUDGET—SOLIDARITY FUND FOR QUEBEC WORKERS

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Gaspé, I would like to draw the attention of the House and the people of Canada to a particularly interesting proposal in the Budget brought down on May 23 of this year by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The proposal concerns the Solidarity Fund set up by the Quebec Federation of Labour in 1984, to maintain existing jobs and create new employment in Quebec. It is a venture capital fund and invests in small and medium-sized businesses in Quebec. The Government of the Province of Quebec provides tax credits to individuals who invest in this fund.

The Progressive Conservative Government, unlike the previous Government, believes that this kind of initiative deserves support, not only in Quebec but across Canada.

Consequently, the Government of Canada will provide a tax credit for individual investors in the Solidarity Fund in Quebec or in similar funds in other provinces that are based on the Quebec model.

Mr. Speaker, this measure shows once again the conviction of our Government that investment is necessary to create jobs.

BENEFICIAL BUDGET PROVISIONS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, since the Government took office Canada's Old Age Security Program has been one of the best in the world. In spite of a projected deficit of $32.8 billion in the forthcoming year, senior citizens will still be better off in Canada than anywhere else. Full universality of old age security pensions will be guaranteed. No current pension income will be reduced to fight inflation or to cut the deficit. Full indexation of guaranteed income supplements for the most needy will be maintained.

Cost of living supplements will be paid to all pensioners when the Consumer Price Index rises above 3 per cent. Indexation of spousal and veterans pensions will continue. Larger contributions to RRSPs will be permitted tax free. Plan holders will be allowed to purchase shares in Canadian-owned corporations. Best of all, inflation will be checked by responsible fiscal policies. Canada will still have a better Old Age Security Program than anywhere else in the world.

SALE OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recall the new approach taken by the Government with respect to Crown corporations, as set forth in the Budget brought down last Thursday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

I was glad to hear that Crown corporations with a commercial value but no ongoing public policy purpose will be sold. In this connection, the Government intends to divest itself very shortly of Teleglobe Canada and Canadian Arsenals Limited, as well as its interest in the Canada Development Corporation. Crown corporations with no commercial value and no effective public policy purpose will be dissolved or absorbed within existing departments. Thirteen corporations have already been identified.

Mr. Speaker, Government operations must be leaner. It is not enough to be well-intentioned. A vigorous effort is needed to streamline and enhance the efficiency of our public administration. For 20 years, Crown corporations have been allowed to proliferate. Twenty years of white elephants!

Spending public money to make their dreams of centralization come true, that was the goal of the Liberal Government. We were elected to clean up the mess, and that is what we are going to do.

IMPACT ON REMOTE REGIONS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the people of New Brunswick were appalled to hear that the Progressive Conservative Government has decided to ignore their needs in its Budget.

It is indeed discouraging when we realize that the Government has decided to stop encouraging our regional small- and medium-size businesses by cutting federal grants by $100 million this year and $150 million next year.

It is discouraging when we hear that the transportation sector will lose $75 million this year, and we all know how vital this sector is to the Atlantic Provinces. It is also discouraging to realize that the price of gas has gone up again, especially since in the Maritimes, the price of gas is already very high. It is very discouraging to hear that transfer payments to the provinces will be limited from now on.

It is discouraging to be hit with a host of tax increases that will reduce the disposal income of consumers and result in more employment. It is discouraging to hear that Old Age Security pensions and family allowances will no longer be indexed to the consumer price index.

Finally, it is really discouraging when we realize that middle- and low-income Canadians in remote areas stand to suffer most as a result of the draconian policies the Progressive Conservative Government has decided to inflict on Canadians.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—ASSAULTS ON PALESTINIAN REFUGEE CAMPS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the three Palestinian refugee camps of Sabra, Shatila, and Bourj al-Barajneh have come under armed assault by the Shiite Amal militia and the Lebanese Army Brigades. Another Palestinian refugee camp has been encircled by the Amal militia.

During the attack the Gaza Hospital was partially destroyed, and 95 wounded Palestinians were murdered in their hospital beds. Some 450 Palestinians refugees were killed, and over 2,000 were wounded in the fighting. Another 2,000 Palestinians have been kidnapped. No distinction is being made between men, women, and children.

The Palestinian refugee camps have come under continuous and merciless shelling. No supplies have been allowed in, nor have the wounded been evacuated. The Red Cross has been denied permission to administer humanitarian assistance. Victims are being allowed to die when they could have lived.

I urge the Government of Canada, as a conscientious and humanitarian body, to call upon the Governments involved to halt the horror. I also call upon the Government of Canada to make immediate representations urging provision be made to allow the admittance of medical and food supplies into the camps, to permit the evacuation of the wounded and burial for the dead, to provide safety for those in medical centres who are presently injured, and to arrange the safe return of the abducted Palestinians. We cannot turn away from this cruelty.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and, today being a unique and special Canadian day when Steve Fonyo reaches the end of his important journey across Canada, we have agreed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), and the Leader of the NDP will each have an opportunity to address this important occasion. Therefore, Question Period will be extended for the period of time used up on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker: Is that understood and agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STEVE FONYO

TRIBUTES TO ONE-LEGGED RUNNER ON COMPLETION OF "JOURNEY FOR LIVES"

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of all Parties, today, together with all Canadians, I take pride in saluting Steve Fonyo, our courageous young countryman, who has completed his epic run across this vast land. After many months and countless miles he has reached his destination, he has realized his dream.

Steve Fonyo, despite his crippling disability, has accomplished this remarkable feat because he is a man of genuine courage, driven by a desire to help others who are or might become victims of the disease that he faces with such fortitude. His first step on his journey for lives was a giant step for all of us. Through his valiant efforts he has made a significant contribution to the cause of cancer research and the eventual conquest of a grievous malady. On behalf of all Members of the House of Commons and all Canadians, I salute him warmly today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Alone and vulnerable, overcoming his handicap with each step, Steve Fonyo has blazed a trail of courage across the breadth of this continent.

In so doing, he has made each of us part of an event which, in addition to its unique individual achievement, has acquired meaning for us all.

His unspoken but eloquent message is that there are other answers to human vicissitudes besides despair; other ways to combat evil besides violence; and other solutions to injustice.

Steve Fonyo is among those who believe that individuals find their ultimate dignity in throwing off the chains imposed by day-to-day existence.

[English]

Steve Fonyo has made his painful progress from St. John's to Victoria. He has given us a shining example of the true strength of the human spirit. He demonstrated anew the power of courage, the capacity of a man of inflexible resolve and indomitable will to struggle, to endure, and so to achieve his cherished goal. Steve Fonyo's personal triumph is a matter of national pride.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We stand in admiration of his extraordinary achievement. We are all the richer because of the legacy of hope and inspiration that he has given all of us. Where there is a generous heart and gallant spirit great things can be achieved. This, I think, is the lesson we have learned from Steve Fonyo, the long-distance runner.

[Translation]

On behalf of all Canadians, I want to offer my congratulations and best wishes, not only to Steve Fonyo but also to his family, to his truly remarkable parents, and on behalf of all Members of the House of Commons, I again wish to extend our sincere congratulations today.

[English]

Let me assure you, Steve, that all Canadians rejoice with you and with your family today. Yours is a unique achievement, a splendid accomplishment. You are a Canadian of historic stature, worthy of our utmost esteem. On behalf of the Government and the people of Canada and on behalf of my colleagues of all Parties of the House of Commons I offer heartfelt sentiments of gratitude and pride, and I express our most fervent hopes for your personal health and happiness.

• (1420)

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and second what he has so ably said. On behalf of fellow Members in the House, I pay tribute to one of Canada's outstanding young men. Steve Fonyo said to his fellow citizens in B.C. Place, "I am not a hero. I am just a 19 year old guy who got cancer". Steve, there are not very many 19 year old guys who run across Canada on one good leg to raise money for cancer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): On Monday we watched as he ran into Vancouver's B.C. Place. We watched as he was greeted by his fellow British Columbians. We have watched as he ran through Rogers Pass in the Rocky Mountains. We have watched him run across the cold Prairies during a very tough winter. We watched as Mary Beth Dolan greeted him in Winnipeg. We watched as he ran through ice and rain in Atlantic Canada and Quebec. Canadians have been watching Steve Fonyo, praying for him, and thanking him ever since he dipped his leg into the cold Atlantic Ocean more than a year ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have twice had the honour of thanking Steve Fonyo personally: the first time when he visited the National Capital last August, and the second time in Kelowna, British Columbia, not long ago.

Today, Canadians want to express, to him and his family, their admiration for his determination, courage and perseverance.

Canada is a big country, and its climate can be cold and rigorous. But it also has a wealth of beauty and warmth. Steve Fonyo, by doing what he did, has demonstrated all the generosity, sincerity and courage of which Canadian men and women are capable.

[English]

Today, as Steve Fonyo stands at kilometre zero of the Trans-Canada Highway and pours that vial of water from the Atlantic Ocean into the Pacific Ocean, we would all like to share with him and his family the enormous pride that he must feel having completed such an epic journey.

In his "Journey for Lives" he has created a hope for thousands across Canada who suffer with cancer, hoping that some day there will be a cure. Steve Fonyo said:

> I have run in the cold and I have run on ice. I have run in the rain. I have run in the sunshine. But mostly, I have run on hope.

Steve, on behalf of my own proud constituents in Vancouver Quadra, on behalf of all our colleagues in the House of Commons, and on behalf of all your fellow Canadians, I say that you have given people hope, hope for a cure for cancer, hope in themselves, hope for the young and old who suffer, hope for a country. Thank you once again, Steve. Congratulations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), and all other Members of the House to mark a courageous young man's completion of a monumental 8,000 kilometre voyage, Steve Fonyo's "Journey for Lives". We are paying tribute this afternoon to a very special young man. Although Steven himself may say, as he did, "So big deal", we know differently. We know that Steve's determination to fight cancer has affected Canadians profoundly. He has won a place in our hearts and in the collective imagination of all Canadians.

[Translation]

The brave struggle, five years ago, of another young man, Terry Fox, to help find a cure for cancer, inspired Steve Fonyo to do something that would bring hope to other young men and women afflicted with this terrible disease. Steve Fonyo decided that he could and would take up the challenge.

[English]

In Steve's own words, "I just want to say that I hope because of this run there is going to be a cure for cancer. I don't want any kid—I don't want anybody—to go through what I did."

• (1425)

Steve's dedication to this cause was tested over the last 14 months as Canadians all across our land have seen. Like the classic hero of antiquity, he set out on a journey, was confronted by nature and the foibles of personality, but he did not falter or fail. He overcame. Indeed, he triumphed.

Steve's arrival at his destination today, mile zero on the Trans-Canada Highway, while a personal triumph for Steve is an inspiration for all Canadians. His journey has revealed what the indomitable human spirit can actually achieve.

Steve refused to quit. He refused to quit because he did not want to let down the children struggling with cancer, to put it as bluntly and frankly as that. He wanted to show them that fighting can make a difference.

Despite almost constant pain and a gruelling 25 kilometre a day schedule, Steve persevered. With stubborn determination he became our coast-to-coast hero, weaving a common thread of optimism across our country.

[Translation]

His run across the country will remain a symbol of endurance for all Canadian men and women. His initiative has fired the dedication of thousands of volunteers of the Canadian Cancer Society who yearly go from door to door to canvass for donations. During his trip, donations to the Canadian Cancer Society increased 25 per cent. The money is to be given to the Lung Research Association in Kelowna and will also be spent on research, education and various services for cancer patients across the country.

[English]

Steve Fonyo can indeed go his own way today in the full knowledge that he has made an outstanding contribution. We all wish him well in realizing his wish at this point for plenty of sleep and a chance to learn to fly a helicopter.

I would like to say to Steve, having shown us all what it means for the human spirit to fly, he should be able to master a helicopter on one clear day.

SENIOR CITIZENS—BUDGET IMPACT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Pursuant to the Budget tabled by the Minister of Finance we note that the purchasing power of senior citizens at the poverty line, who are those receiving the guaranteed income supplement, will be reduced by an average of $58.08 a month by the year 1990. Would the Prime Minister tell the House whether he realized at the time the Budget was being prepared, or when it was delivered, that it would have this devastating effect on the purchasing power of our elderly poor?

● (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1982, there was a statement made in the House that I think responds to the Hon. Member's question. It reads:

> The essential attack on the federal deficit and on provincial deficits can only come when people contribute more out of their incomes to reducing them. We have built in this country one of the best welfare systems in the world, one of which we can all be proud. But we must also pay the bill for that system. That is what I meant when I said that the real incomes of the employed in this country must be reduced so that the capital, which would otherwise go into consumption—

—would go into paying for those resources. That was the statement by the Member for St. Henri-Westmount.

Ms. Copps: They are on pensions.

Mr. Mulroney: In point of fact we were extremely conscious of the impact of the Budget on all Canadians according to different income levels, which is why it is most demanding and most tough on those in high income levels and it has the smallest possible impact on those down the income scale. I think that is consistent with the principle of fairness with which all Canadians agree.

Ms. Copps: Tell the truth.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Prime Minister really answered the question. I am trying to get at some facts that may have escaped the attention of the Government, the Minister of Finance, or the Prime Minister, when the Budget was tabled.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. We have done the calculations. The issue really is this. Was it the intention of the Budget to have the people at the poverty line, the elderly poor, contribute $58.08 a month out of their incomes to reduce the deficit? That is the question. Perhaps the Minister of Finance could respond to that.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think we have responded to this question on a number of occasions in the past in the House.

Mr. Foster: He has talked, but he does not answer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have said it is important to maintain the viability of the finances of the federal Government in order that we can maintain the wide range of social programs that we have and that we all feel are very important to the fibre of our society. We have taken these considerations very much into account when we designed the Budget. That is why we kept in place this very, very potent form of insurance against the effects of inflation for those people who are on old age security so they will continue to be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question was short. The answer can be short, too.

Mr. Johnston: All my questions are short, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of finance. Seriously. If we are able to satisfy the Minister of Finance and the Government that this is the impact, $58.08 out of the pockets of the elderly who are at the poverty line, and if we can satisfy everyone in this House on that score, will the minister of Finance bring in remedial legislation or proposals before the end of June to correct what is obviously an inequitable and unjust situation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Budget is generally regarded as being fair to all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where has he been?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have maintained the full indexation of the guaranteed income supplement in place, and the payments to veterans and the child tax credit will be increasing in excess of inflation over the next three years. We have committed to put in place a minimum tax for the next taxation year. There is a wide range of matters here which direct themselves to the question of fairness, and I believe Canadians support that.

SOCIAL WELFARE

ALLEGED DECLARATION BY PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday we proved that you did not honour your solemn commitment towards elderly Canadians.

Here is what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare said, as reported today in the newspaper La Presse:

—the Mulroney Government does not have to keep last summers's election campaign promise to index old age security pensions.

Here is my question to the Prime Minister. Does the statement made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare represent the position of the Prime Minister and the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that the position . . . The Hon. Member is not in the House today.

Mr. Rossi: They hid her!

Mr. Mulroney: On the contrary! The Hon. Member for Bourassa said that we hid her. She is one of Quebec's most distinguished women, one of our outstanding Quebecers and we want her to be constantly in the limelight. The name Bertrand commands pride. She did not say she was speaking on behalf of the Government. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare have been the Government's spokesmen, and I should think that was obvious enough.

FULL INDEXATION OF OLD AGE PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, just to make sure that the Right Hon. the Prime Minister is as good as his word, would he now agree to ask the Minister of Finance to reinstate full old age security pension indexation, as promised in Sherbrooke on July 26, particularly in the case of elderly people living under the threshold of poverty who will lose $54 a month as a result of the Budget?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the record of this Government since we have been in office has been a good one.

Mr. Chrétien: It is a broken record with broken promises.

Mr. Rodriguez: Soak the poor.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have broadened the spousal allowance to 85,000 other new low-income Canadians who previously had not been receiving the benefits that they now receive, and I believe that is a good step forward.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member wishes to look carefully at the budget documents he will see that, if in the future the circumstances and the resources permit, we will review the situation.

PENSIONS

ELECTION CAMPAIGN STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we have been continuing to get what can only euphemistically be described as baloney type answers from the Minister of Finance in justification for the Government's removal of indexation from pensions.

I want to ask the Prime Minister a question on the same subject. He promised Canadians on July 26 last that if a Conservative Government were elected there would be full indexation restored to all pensions on January 1, 1985. Yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Health and Welfare, of all people, said that the Conservatives were not obligated to keep their promises. Is that the real explanation why the Prime Minister has broken his promise to Canada's pensioners?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have—

Mr. Nunziata: No integrity at all, Mulroney.

Mr. Mulroney: There is somebody who knows a little bit about integrity.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, he does.

Mr. Mulroney: It is written all over his forehead.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Since we have come into office, notwithstanding the fact that the budget deficit was greatly in excess of the deficit projected in the February papers, we have taken a number of measures designed to benefit those in need both in November, and again in December, with regard to veterans, the elderly, and others. We will continue to do so.

I will acknowledge that unfortunately, given the incredible mess that we were left, we cannot do it all over night, but we are working on a program which will allow us at all times to provide more to those in our society who need help.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the reality remains that the Prime Minister has categorically broken a very specific promise he made to the pensioners of Canada, who are among the most vulnerable people in our society.

Mr. Broadbent: When his Party was in opposition it took out full-page ads across the country and spent some $30,000 to criticize what was then alleged to be the Liberal Government's intention to remove indexation of pensions, correctly pointing out how harmful that would be to Canada's elderly citizens, and urging Canadians to send a message to the Government to stop it from doing so. Since Canadians were urged to send a message to the Government of the day to get it to reconsider, will the Prime Minister now make a commitment to Canadian pensioners that, if they get a message to him that they want indexation restored to their pensions, his Government will reconsider?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member does a disservice to the House when he compares the 1981 period with the position of the economy today. It is quite clear, and this is my recollection, that at that time the inflation rate was 11 per cent or 12 per cent. That was entirely different from today, when we are looking at an inflation rate of 4 per cent. At that time there would have been a major impact on Canadians had there been a removal of indexation, as was speculated at that time. However, at this point there is a very potent form of insurance for Canadians receiving any form of indexation program, because they will be protected from any inflation rate over 3 per cent.

REQUEST THAT PENSIONERS BE CONSULTED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the only guarantee in the Budget for pensioners is that within five years they will lose $600 from their pensions, and that within 15 years they will lose $1,500 from their pensions. That is the guarantee they are getting from the Conservatives.

Considering that the Minister's Government has made so much about consultation, even though it left out anything it heard from pensioners, will he now consult pensioners about the effects of the Budget and, if they tell him that they want their full pensions restored, will he have the honesty, in terms of previous commitments, to live up to that request?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we can see in the House today that there are many Conservatives Members who have been consulting over the past few days. The response to the Budget has been a positive one. Our senior citizens are saying: "Yes, we know there will be some"—

Mr. Fulton: Name one senior citizen who supports it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member would allow me to finish the question, I would do so.

An Hon. Member: George Hees.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Senior citizens are saying: "Yes, there will be a small sacrifice which we, as all Canadians, are being asked to accept, but we want to do so because we are worried about our grandchildren, because we are worried about that fast accumulating debt which is such a burden on the country". Those are the reasons why senior citizens are saying: "You are on the right track".

SOLICITOR GENERAL'S CONDUCT—REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister smeared me yesterday with a patently false accusation, which he has subsequently withdrawn, he was trying to protect a Solicitor General with a perverse sense of how he should use his powers. I want to return to that and to ask the Prime Minister how he can keep in Cabinet a Solicitor General who gratuitously intervened, taking sides in a proceeding before a federal commission, to protect a friend. Does the Prime Minister not realize that that sends an intimidating signal to complainants before the federal tribunals and commissions? Is it not a ground for replacing the Solicitor General with someone who has respect for the office?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have learned that in the heat of debate in the House from time to time statements are made which inadvertently reflect unfairly on other Members. That was the case with part of my statement yesterday vis-à-vis the Hon. Member. I wrote to him earlier today to withdraw that statement, and I do so with good grace, and with an apology to him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I read the transcript of the statement made by the Solicitor General. It is my reading of it, and my understanding, that he expressed to the media at that particular moment regret that his remarks had been so construed. He indicated that, if that were the case, that that part of his remarks he wished he had not so conveyed. In light of that, and given the outstanding record of probity of the Solicitor General for so many years, I am satisfied that he will continue to conduct himself with great honour.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will seek to raise a question of privilege in connection with the letter, which is not an apology and which is not satisfactory as far as I am concerned. However, I want to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. With The Gazette of Montreal now added to the list of dailies demanding the resignation of the Solicitor General, will the Prime Minister look at the latest gaffe the Solicitor General made in the Justice Committee yesterday, where the Solicitor General refused to do anything to assist the Commissioner of the RCMP to defend the reputation of the force in the Province of New Brunswick, where the Government of that Province, even after Commissioner Simmonds' investigation and report, still indicates that it harbours suspicions against the force? Will the Prime Minister at least read that transcript and what the Solicitor General had to say about his responsibilities?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am sorry to learn, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend is disinclined to accept an apology offered on the floor of the House of Commons. Having said that, may I tell him that, while I will read the transcript to which he referred, I had an occasion in Regina at the First Ministers' Conference when this matter arose to set out the view of the Government of Canada, which is that we view the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as an outstanding national police force that we hold in the highest respect, and will defend at all times, in all circumstances.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S 1980 ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. There is absolutely no question that, under the Government's proposal to deindex pensions, pensioners will be getting a double whammy—lower pensions and higher taxes—from the Budget.

When the Conservatives were in opposition they ran an ad across the country opposing what the Liberals intended to do on deindexation. Does the Prime Minister agree with the following statements which they made then—"the less your income, the harder you get hit", "deindexing would mean a massive tax increase for all Canadians", and "the one group which would get hit hardest are pensioners"? Does the Government still agree with those statements which were made across the country in 1980?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that at that time—and he was in the House, as I was—there was considerable speculation that indexation would be fully removed. Instead of having a minor impact on indexation, as is the case with our proposal, there was to be a drop in the indexation rate from around 11 per cent or 12 per cent to zero. We opposed that, and we still oppose that. This is why we have put in a modified form of indexation which provides for full indexation of the impact of inflation over the level of 3 per cent.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Since Conservatives raised Canadians' expectations by promising to index pensions fully, as well as all those other promises which they made, why does the Government now feel quite justified and quite clean in saying to Canadians that it cannot keep the promises to seniors but it can keep the promises to the oil companies, and make seniors pay for them?

• (1450)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am going to repeat myself. I have talked to many of my colleagues here, and I have talked to many senior citizens. The one thing that seniors tell me very, very clearly, is that they are very worried when they see the debt of the country growing three times faster than the rate of the increase in the economy of the country. They are also concerned, about the huge debt, which at today's level is $6,000, and will go to $12,000 per person that will be left for their children and grandchildren to pay. That is something we are trying to turn around, and I would expect that there would be some degree of support for—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is becoming a speech.

ENERGY

CLOSURE OF CAPE BRETON HEAVY WATER PLANTS—CREATION OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that a member of his caucus is on record as saying that the closure of two heavy water plants in Nova Scotia will be devastating to the local economies. That Member has also gone on to say that it is now the complete responsibility of the Government of Canada to resolve the high unemployment rate in that area. I would ask the Prime Minister respectfully if he agrees with those statements. If so, when can we expect some real, concrete, positive statements and actions to be taken to put people back to work in those communities?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there is an onus on the Government to make sure, to begin with the employees affected, that if there is an error made that we err always on the side of fairness and generosity to the employees. I accept, as well, that there is an obligation on the Government of Canada to ensure that the tax measures proposed result in the attraction of durable jobs for the people of Cape Breton.

Cape Bretoners have had a difficult time, and eastern Nova Scotia has not had an easy time for as long as I can remember. It has never been easy. There is a special kind of problem there that has been recognized by Members on all sides of the House. I accept that we have a special obligation to do everything humanly possible to bring durable jobs to Cape Breton.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I wish to inform him of what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources informed the union when she said on March 4:

> No action will be taken on the future of AECL's heavy water operations in Cape Breton without a full and thorough review of the impact of a proposed decision.

There has been no consultation with the unions affected. I would ask the Prime Minister to order the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to live up to their commitments to the people of Nova Scotia, and to the workers, by creating jobs now, not in 50 years' time. Will the Prime Minister live up to that commitment?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member I would like to assure him that there will be jobs for those in Cape Breton. As far as I am concerned, the number of jobs to which the Hon. Member referred is certainly attainable before there are any reductions with respect to the heavy water plants, as far as employment in those plants is concerned.

EFFECT ON OIL COMPANIES AND PENSIONERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In 1980 the Conservative Party promised tax breaks to the oil companies and, sure enough, in the Budget paper that was not published, it is indicated that in 1990 $2.4 billion will be forgone to the oil companies, in one tax alone, the PGRT. In 1980 the Conservative Party proposed that it would not do anything with deindexation for pensioners, but in the Budget it eliminated that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The preamble is becoming longer than the question.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, why is there a double standard? Why is it fair to give the oil companies $2.4 billion while taking the money away from the pensioners?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think what the Hon. Member misses is the range of measures that are taken in this Budget to do two things. One is to create jobs by identifying three particular areas in the economy which have the greatest impact on economic activity. The first is small business, the second is research and development, and the third is energy development. Those jobs will be created right across Canada. As I said before, jobs will be created in Vancouver-Kingsway as well as in Halifax. Those are the things we are trying to do. We are trying to get the unemployment rate down so that the children and grandchildren of those senior citizens will have jobs.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that he is taking money from the pensioners and giving it to the oil companies. Will he take this cheque from the pensioners of Canada to give to his friends—

Mr. Speaker: Orders.

Some Hon. Members: Order. Order.

Mr. Waddell: Will he give them $530 million? Will he take that right out of the pockets of the pensioners of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Order. Throw him out.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Justice was sent to Newfoundland and Altantic Canada to sell the Budget, the most crippling economic blow ever dealt to the Altantic area. The Minister of Justice knew that because he said, as reported in the Evening Telegram of May 25, 1985:

> If it turns out that in any of the approaches taken in this budget there is any possibility of any damage to regionally deprived areas, then there will be changes made—

Does the Minister of Finance agree with that? Will he show some compassion? Will he live up to the commitment made by the Minister of Justice? If we can show him, as we can, that this will cripple the Atlantic area, will he make some changes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have always indicated in the past that I am a very flexible individual. We have had a Budget which I think has been well received across the country. I am listening to people. We are going to continue the consultative process. Consultations did not stop on May 23. We will continue with them for future Budgets that the Government will be bringing down. Yes, we will be flexible, but we do believe that the new approach that we set out in a clear break from the past is the right approach, and we are going to give it a good chance to work.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO BUDGET

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, we cannot wait for future Budgets. This Budget will cripple the Atlantic area for the next four years. The Evening Telegram also reported the following about the Minister of Justice:

He admitted the private sector in the Atlantic area is weaker than other parts of the country and said there will have to be more government support—

The Minister of Finance has cut that government support. Will he change the Budget? Will he stop the cruel and devastating effect this is having on the Atlantic area?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Ouellet: Order. The question is to the Minister of Finance. He cannot answer.

Mr. Crosbie: They are afraid.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Justice has the capacity to answer as the Hon. Minister of Justice on a justice matter.

Mr. Ouellet: It's not a justice matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ouellet: This is a budget matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: For some reason I cannot hear. The microphones must be off.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, the question was directed to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: It's a budget matter, not a justice matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it that the Hon. Minister of Justice is now trying to answer a question in his capacity as Acting Minister of Fisheries?

Mr. Crosbie: Yes.

Mr. Broadbent: No, it's a budget question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: I am versatile, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I now recognize the Hon. Member for Laurier.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

CLOSING OF PATENT OFFICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Since yesterday I have had several conversations with the President of the Canadian Patent Insitute who stated that closing the Patent Office would deprive Canada of a tool essential for Canadian industry as a whole as well as for innovation, economic growth and employment opportunities. As he told me, we will soon rank among the banana republics.

Can the Minister confirm that closing the Patent Office is indeed Government policy? Can he tell us whether a cost-profit analysis was made, and would he be prepared to table that study?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, indeed we are aware of the recommendations of the task force chaired by my colleague, Mr. Nielsen. We are interested in examining the conditions of Canada's ratification of the Patent Co-operation Treaty with a view to avoiding duplication of efforts by various countries when examining patents.

The task force considered and analyzed the advisability of Canada proceeding this way, and we endorse this measure.

PATENTS

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING CLOSING OF PATENT OFFICE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister.

Dismantling the Patent Office will mean a loss of 200 jobs in the Public Service. Can the Minister inform the House whether he has consulted with the unions and whether these employees will be dealt with on the basis of relocation? Will they benefit under the measures provided by the Public Service Commission ... Can the Minister inform the House today exactly when the Office is to be closed and why?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I repeat once again that the Government is anxious to provide the best possible service at the lowest possible cost. As far as the Hon. Member's questions are concerned, I can inform him that I have had consultations with the President of the Treasury Board, and I can assure him that there are quite a few patent applications that must be examined before any employees can be laid off, and we must proceed with these applications before any final steps are taken.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

After carefully reading through the Budget, I was unable to find any measures dealing with the textile and garment industry. Could the Minister inform the House what kind of policies he intends to introduce in this respect or could he give some indication of the progress that has been made in deciding on policies for this particular sector?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Budget gives a good deal of encouragement to the small business community, which involves many companies in the textile industry. The involvement there will give the industry access to more capital and a good deal of encouragement in expanding its activities.

In consultation with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion as well as with the Minister for International Trade, we have been discussing at length the directions in which we feel the textile industry should proceed. Announcements will be made with respect to those directions in due course.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

REPORTED REORGANIZATION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the Minister confirm the reports we have received from the usual sources—those being the Pentagon and The New York Times—which state that the United States has finalized its plans to establish an integrated command centre at Colorado Springs which will include ballistic missile defences, that is, the SDI, as well as offensive nuclear forces? Can the Minister confirm this decision? Will be not agree that, unless we oppose it, Canada will be inexorably drawn into star wars through NORAD?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will confirm no such thing. I read the article to which the Hon. Member refers in The Globe and Mail this morning. That article purports to reproduce an article from The New York Times. Mr. Halloran, who, I believe, is the reporter who wrote the article, garbled totally fictitious events with some actual developments, which creates the very false impression of relevance to star wars, SDI, or whatever. However, in the process it is very misleading and gravely misquotes the facts, which I do not find unusual.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it is clear the Minister has, once again, not been speaking to his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs who, on March 12, 1985, in answer to a question from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant, said that arrangements have been in place for some long time for the development of the merging of missile air and space systems under NORAD. That is what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has stated. That is what the United States stated when the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

Ms. Jewett: When will the Minister state what his colleague has already stated, namely, that there is to be a combined, integrated centre at Colorado Springs which will include ballistic missile defences?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my colleague has said no such thing.

Ms. Jewett: Read Joe.

Mr. Nielsen: If there is any influence among the bedfellows over there, then I would urge the Leader of the New Democratic Party to intervene personally with the Leader of the Liberal Party—

Mr. Broadbent: That is what he is doing!

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps, then, we can break this log-jam. We have been trying to get the subject of NORAD before the standing committee since April 3, but it is they who have been preventing it. Let us have some agreement to get the subject before committee.

JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, last Monday, I was able to point out that in absolute dollars, the middle class was going to be taxed 26 times as much as wealthy Canadians. A closer analysis of last Thursday's Budget indicates that as a result of tax increases and de-indexing of Old Age Security pensions, domestic demand will drop $3 billion in 1986-87, $5 billion in 1987-88, $7.3 billion in 1988-89, $9.5 billion in 1989-90 and $12 billion in 1990-91.

My question to the Minister of Finance is very simple. How does the Minister intend to create the jobs he promised Canadians by cutting the purchasing power of the middle class?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on many occasions the Hon. Member opposite has commented on the danger of running up deficits and debts which are too high. I believe he has pointed out why we did not go farther in the deficit cutting exercise. We have maintained a balance. We have tried to have regard for the impact on Canadians and for the impact on the economy. For that reason we chose the direction which we have taken in the Budget.

However, if the Hon. Member suggests we should be cutting somewhere else, and not in the ways he has suggested, then I would appreciate him advising me. I do not think he would wish to have a higher deficit than that which I brought in last Thursday.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, that is not the point. If we can afford to reduce the tax burden on the oil multinationals, why can't we afford to maintain the purchasing power of middle-class Canadian taxpayers?

FINANCE

ASSISTANCE TO MEDIUM AND SMALL ENTERPRISES—JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I would also like to point out to the Minister of Finance that although he is very found of using the United States and the Prime Minister's buddy, Mr. Reagan, as a model, the U.S. economic recovery was the result of reducing taxes and increasing the deficit. My supplementary is as follows: Could the Minister inform the House how, if the purchasing power of Canadian families is cut by $1,000 a year, starting in 1988, there will be enough demand to help small- and medium-sized businesses create jobs and produce more, also considering that our industrial capacity is under-utilized?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am left to draw two conclusions from the Hon. Member's question. First, he would wish that I increase the deficit to something in the order of $38 billion or $40 billion. That is the direct conclusion which I draw.

The second conclusion is that, in an imaginative way, without drawing on the resources of the Government, we have opened access to vast amounts of capital for the small business community. As the Hon. Member and I are well aware, the small business community is the major generator of economic activity. It is the creator of jobs. That is the direction in which we have gone, and I think the people are supporting it.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—EFFECT ON KIDD CREEK MINES LTD.

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. In the budget speech it was stated 13 Crown corporations will be sold, one of which is the Canada Development Corporation. The CDC owns 49 per cent of Kidd Creek Mines Ltd., the largest employer in my riding of Timmins-Chapleau. Will the Minister tell me what ramifications, if any, the sale of the CDC will have on Kidd Creek Mines, its employees, and the community of Timmins?

• (1510)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the possible sale of some 23 million government shares which was announced today will have no direct effect on the Kidd Creek Mines operation. I would remind the Hon. Member that there is no suggestion that the board will be changed, or that the management of CDC will be changed. As he probably knows, that mine had a much better experience in the current quarter than in earlier quarters. It actually was on a profit level and had a cashflow level of $18.3 million.

REDUCTION OF SUBSIDIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Budget indicates that an annual reduction of $50 million will begin in 1985-86 and will continue to 1990-91. Can the Minister clarify the effect of the reduction? Will it be a one-shot affair which will end up as being a $300 million reduction in the money which will go to farmers over six years, or will it be a $1.05 billion reduction in the money which will go to farmers on a cumulative basis?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I presume the question related to the $50 million reduction in agriculture subsidies.

Mr. Hovdebo: Yes.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In the Budget I said that those reductions would occur as $50 million a year in 1985-86 and in 1986-87. The Minister of Agriculture will be announcing the effects of the reductions in due course.

SIZE OF REDUCTION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the $50 million reduction in the Budget is only a small part of the reduction which will affect farmers. Could the Minister indicate what the total extraction of money from farmers will be, with the $33 million recovery program, the reduction in insurance premiums, less funds for the farm credit program, higher freight rates, and the grain commission recovery? What will be the total extraction from the farming community through the Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Member has got his decimal points or his signs wrong. Since we have come into power the impact of the measures which have been taken by the Government have all been positive and have benefited the farming community.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is a $150 million fuel tax rebate. There is a drop in the Farm Credit Corporation long-term interest rate, from 16.25 per cent to 13.5 per cent. There is a change in metric. There is a change in the capital gains exemption, which the farmers will be able to take advantage of right away. In addition to that interest rates have dropped about three percentage points since we have taken office, and that has also helped the farming community. I do not understand what the Hon. member is getting at. We have been very generous toward the farming community.

PENSIONS

STATEMENT BY SPOKESPERSON FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. A few minutes ago he told the House that he had spoken to senior citizens and that they support what he has done in the Budget, in reducing old age pensions by amounts up to $690 a year by 1990. Can he explain the statement of Jean Woodsworth, head of the Ontario division of Canadian Pensioners Concerned, representing about 10,000 seniors in Ontario, when she said:

> It's a shocking thing for the Government to do, . . . It takes money away from the very poor.

Further she said:

> —senior groups across Ontario petitioned the federal Government to maintain full indexing.

To which seniors did the Minister talk? Surely not the spokespersons for the tens of thousands of elderly people across the country. Will he come clean and tell the House why he has not listened to the spokespersons of the senior citizens, and why he is cutting their pensions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would expect, as would the Hon. Member, that the spokespersons for the senior citizens would take the position which they took. I can assure him that senior citizens are very encouraged because we have maintained full indexation on the GIS. They acknowledge that some change has been made in the modified indexation of the OAS, but, as I have said before, they recognize the importance of getting the deficit down because they know that deficit leads to inflation. If there is one thing which senior citizens understand, it is inflation, and the levels of inflation which the previous Government brought in.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that two petitions were presented by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on Tuesday, May 28, 1985. The first petition, concerning jobs for youth at gas stations, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The second petition which was presented by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), concerning assistance to the Tigreans in Ethiopia, does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DAMAGING REMARK OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege, of which I gave you notice, that relates to a letter which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sent to me this morning, to which he referred in Question Period as a letter of apology. The letter refers to false accusations which he made yesterday that I had engaged in an authorization of a police procedure which the Prime Minister considered reprehensible.

To come directly to the question of privilege, the Prime Minister did not satisfactorily and completely retract today the remarks which he made yesterday in the House, which results in damaging my reputation and in creating the impression that I have engaged in some form of reprehensible conduct.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister alleged that I had directly authorized a payment of $100,000 to be made to Clifford Olson. That is an authorization which the Prime Minister considered reprehensible. Today, he withdrew in his letter the remark that I had authorized it, but be continued to assert that I was responsible for it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Kaplan: As I have the floor, I hope I will have the opportunity of being heard.

In his letter today, the Prime Minister continued to assert that I was responsible for the authorization of that payment because it was made by a senior officer of the RCMP for whom I was responsible to Parliament.

In reply to the statement which was made by the Prime Minister, I would like to remind him that, in fact, RCMP officers who investigated the case were acting on a matter which was of provincial responsibility. They were paid by a provincial contract. They were reporting to the Attorney General, and it was not the Attorney General—

Mr. Speaker: I have given the Hon. Member some time to tell the House what it his question of privilege. I would now invite him to do so. I appreciate the seriousness and importance of the matter to everyone who is concerned, but would the Member please bring it into the context of privilege.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the Prime Minister should withdraw the remarks which damage my reputation.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is clearly not a question of privilege. I do not understand what the Hon. Member hopes to accomplish by raising the matter under the guise of a question of privilege.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had the grace and decency to stand in his place and withdraw categorically any implication with respect to the statement which was made yesterday. I have the letter here. If the Hon. Member who is new in this House, and probably does not know the rules, would look at Beauchesne's Citation 19(1), he will understand—

Mr. Ouellet: You are the House Leader and you should know better.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —that a difference in facts is certainly not a basis for a question of privilege. There is no question of privilege here. Moreover, the Prime Minister stood in his place on the floor of the House—and, Mr. Speaker, you heard him today in Question Period—and said that he withdrew absolutely the reference made on the floor of the House yesterday with respect to this matter. And, Mr. Speaker, he apologized.

If the Hon. Member had any sense of decency in this House, he would leave things alone; he would leave it at that.

Mr. Kaplan: I would accept an apology from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), but this is no apology.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the Hon. Member's question of privilege. I am sure that if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would add to what he said in the House earlier today, a withdrawal of this letter, which is not an apology, the Hon. Member would accept that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: What kind of garbage is this? You're despicable.

Mr. Gauthier: He is despicable.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: Who do you think you are?

Mr. Speaker: It does not seem to matter how many times I say to the House that there is language which is proper for this place and language which is not. It just does not seem to matter on both sides.

Mr. Rossi: He is the one who said it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not some place where people yell at each other. This is supposed to be a house of civilized, principled debate.

Mr. de Jong: The press are laughing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I didn't say it was. I said it was supposed to be. I hope, for the last time, to read Citation 19(1) from Beauchesne to Hon. Members. Beauchesne reads:

> A dispute arising between two Members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

The question of privilege of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) arises out of yesterday's Question Period. It arises, I take it, out of a concern he has with a statement which was made and which, apparently, in his view is unfactual, and later admitted to be that by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Whether withdrawn or not, the factual dispute is not a question of privilege, ever. I suggest to Hon. Members that, under the circumstances, I have been given nothing to reserve on except the question of a putative letter of apology, and I am faced at the same time with a verbal apology issued during Question Period.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): With a letter on record.

Mr. Speaker: There is no letter on record.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member had the opportunity, in presenting his question of privilege, to submit to me the letter. He neither submitted it to me in writing nor did he indicate during his question of privilege that he intended to submit it to the House. I have no evidence. Even if I did have the letter, it would still come back to a question of fact, and I believe the right hon. gentleman knows that. It is a matter of procedure.

I appreciate that it is a difficult moment between Hon. Members in the House. But I ask Hon. Members to accept the position which the Speaker is in on this question, and who apparently is entering into what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) quite properly referred to yesterday as "editorializing", and I think I will leave it at this point.

Mr. Mulroney: May I just say that I had the opportunity earlier in the House of conveying my apology to my hon.

friend. I had hoped that that would be appropriate and adequate. If it is not, I am happy to repeat it again for him and to withdraw the statement.

I take your observations very seriously, Mr. Speaker, and particularly your injunction in regard to civilized conduct. As Prime Minister, I must be the first to follow those rules. So I apologize to my hon. friend.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I can accept a gracious apology, but the letter on the record, the letter which has been sent to me, makes it clear that the Prime Minister still regards me as responsible for the payment, and that is no apology.

Mr. Nunziata: Withdraw the letter.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, if it is the letter, which was dispatched in good faith, the letter of apology that is causing some difficulty, I will withdraw the letter of apology.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Monday, May 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 5043).

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where did everyone go?

Mr. Nielsen: I can't see anyone. Oh, yes, there are two Hon. Members behind my hon. friend over there.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where did everyone go?

Mr. Nielsen: I can't see anyone.

I rise to intervene in this debate, Mr. Speaker, in connection with a process in which my ministerial colleagues and I have been involved since last autumn. I speak, of course, of the program review, so I am participating in that regard wearing the hat of chairman of that task force.

The time and the thoughtful consideration given to the program review by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), who sit with me on that committee, is a measure of the commitment of this Government, the depth of that commitment, and the priority being given to improving both the management of government programs and service to the public, as well as to improving the sense of order generally throughout the Government. This mission is one that we accepted readily and that has been at the forefront of our thoughts for several months with a very high degree of determination and insistence upon those objectives.

The assignment with which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) mandated us last September is a measure as well, Sir, of the commitment to ensuring the effectiveness and efficiency of the Public Service for many years to come. The people of this country, it is our belief, have a right to expect a Public Service the equal of any. People from Port Alberni to Chicoutimi and Placentia Bay are entitled to expect their Public Service to function without fear of favour, liberated entirely from any concessions whatsoever to the past. A contemporary Public Service should be free from the yoke of compromises fashioned to fit expediencies that no longer apply.

A revamped approach to management of the Government was long, long overdue. We in government knew that as private citizens, as businessmen, as farmers, and as members of communities which struggled to meet the challenges raised by post-war global enterprise. We knew this as members of her Majesty's Official Opposition as we watched and then tried to check the responses of the Government of the day to the energy crisis; as we tried to check the environmental threats that were being posed and, in our view, overlooked, and the failure of the Government of the day to rise to the challenges being brought about by the technological revolution. We watched them as their response stacked program on top of program, inflated Budgets beyond accountability, and multiplied staff resources in many areas until they grew entirely out of proportion with any reality whatsoever. We reflected, too, on the judgments of others such as that of the Auditor General of Canada when he declared that the management of Government in this country was entirely out of control. We waited, Sir, until obviously Canadians came to the conclusion that enough was enough was enough.

We have now been a few months into this process of program review, a process which can be accurately described as an examination, on a government-wide basis, of management practices being applied with respect to those programs. The impressions we formed while in opposition, the observations we made, have been confirmed and with a great deal of emphasis.

Members, I am sure, are aware of the findings of study teams on services and subsidies to business, the study teams on job creation, training and employment and on agriculture which were reported in the Budget in a separate document entitled "New Management Initiatives". Members will also be aware that there has been created by the Prime Minister a special subcommittee of Cabinet to deal with the whole broad range of native policy matters. The Budget presented an early opportunity to describe the work of the ministerial task force in the context of the Government's fiscal plan, and in the context of the Government's over-all strategy for economic renewal. Certain observations at this stage are central to the work of the task force on program review as it has occurred to date.

First of all, where we looked we found what we expected. There was stacking of subsidies and programs to spur investment. That stacking process had been obscured in a scheme of grants, tax incentives, loan guarantees and other forms of industrial aid which take more than 30,000 public servants to keep track of. The Budget addresses one dimension of this issue: The amendment to the investment tax credit will reduce the stacking of this tax incentive on top of other forms of support. The Government will be consulting with provinces and industry about other ways to deal with this stacking phenomenon.

Training programs should not be an end in themselves; assuming people enter these programs with an interest or aptitude for certain kinds of work, it is reasonable for them to expect the authorities to ensure that there are jobs to go with their new certificates. People pin their hopes and the well-being of their families on the expectation of employment which is implied in the offer of training itself. Yet the review of federal training programs revealed that the kinds of training that are provided are too often not synchronized with the job opportunities in the labour market. The material released with the Budget asserted that the link between training and job opportunities should be strengthened during the renegotiation of the federal-provincial training agreement.

Another observation: Canadian agriculture needs a new impetus and emphasis on the market realities of the 1980s. The agri-food sector must also equip itself to adjust to opportunities that will emerge in the last decade of this century. Effective programs for the development of the industry must be based on a sound appraisal of the market opportunities and the competitive position of each commodity in each region of this country. This orientation is central to the review of agricultural programs and was consolidated in the Government's plans for new market-oriented commodity development strategies by the decisions of Cabinet relating to that particular review. In short, many of the assumptions on which current agricultural programs are based are anchored in the past. This realization no longer reflects merely the views of outsiders looking in on the management of federal Government as it relates to agriculture; it has now been acknowledged and embodied as a new direction in the development of federal policy and programs for the future.

Second, the Government of Canada is under new direction and we are moving decisively to remove the ties that bind federal decision-making to the past. I have just mentioned the new orientation of agricultural programs. Another example deals with the antiquated legislation governing the operations of Revenue Canada, Customs and Excise. The legislation prohibits the importation of goods between sunset and sunrise. The same law empowers the Government to impound a horse and cart, while making no reference at all to a truck. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) will be bringing forward proposals for a new Customs Act and will review the operations of Revenue Canada, Customs and Excise, to deal with these anachronisms and other issues illuminated by the exercise on program review.

Still another example is raised in the business framework legislation administered by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In addition to a Bankruptcy Act which has only been tinkered with since 1949, the Department is burdened with a 1924 Copyright Act which could not possibly anticipate the advent of photocopiers, cassette tape-decks, video recorders or personal computers. As the budget documents say, legislative proposals applying to bankruptcy, patents, copyright, the Canada Business Corporations Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Industrial Design Act, have just been moved up on the Government's agenda.

A third observation has to do with the nature of the process of reviewing over 1,000 federal programs and services on a government-wide, department by department basis. None of these programs exist in isolation, although in some cases they are distinctly unrelated to the real world of the 1980s.

Neither I nor my ministerial colleagues on the task force were surprised when we opened the lid of this Pandora's box that we inherited from the previous Government. As I have already said, our expectations were very quickly confirmed. The study team on business services and subsidies alone had to sift through well over 150 distinct federal or federal-provincial programs costing more than $12.2 billion in fiscal 1984-85. Many of these programs not only have roots in the past, they are like some mutated creature, half plant and half fish, with tentacles that reach deep into the support system of legitimate enterprise-strangling initiative, incentive, and natural growth.

Another perspective of the work that we are trying to accomplish might best be achieved if I were to inform Members that the over-all program review entails the support of some 170,000 person-years annually. It addresses the expenditure of something in the order of $92 billion. Study teams confronted with matchless complexity of that magnitude had about three months each to come to grips with the subject matter and to bring forward reasonable suggestions or recommendations for solutions. When these recommendations reached Ministers of the task force, care was taken not to cripple good and effective programs in our enthusiasm to eradicate those that good management compelled us to recommend be eradicated.

The simplest and most isolated examples of overlap and duplication were, of course, dealt with most expeditiously. However, these were not always the most insidious or most far-reaching. In a number of cases the solutions to the most vexatious issues lie at the end of a long and sometimes tedious implementation process. The choice of the task force in some instances was to ask for additional study along the lines developed by the study teams, with a subsequent report and decision to come before the fall. In other instances, as in the illustration I used a few moments ago, the solution lies in legislation and will be determined by the priorities of the House. In any case, the decisions of the task force fall somewhere between an evolutionary reform of the management of Government and a more revolutionary one.

There are few overnight remedies to a number of problems that have taken two decades to develop. The choice of the task force has been to bite off a manageable portion this far and to report our initial results as part of the budget package.

Incidentally, I am delighted that the advent of this Budget has provided the vehicle for squelching certain myths about the work of the task force. I have heard it suggested, for instance, that the task force is devising some sort of hidden agenda. Others have said it is operating under a mantle of excessive secrecy like some nocturnal raider intent on slashing this and chopping that. Such talk is nonsense and those who propel it are nonsensical. Such nonsense reflects no appreciation for the uniqueness and magnitude of the task we are about.

Never in the history of Canadian public administration has the political will been summoned to launch a review of such scope. Nowhere in the annals of federal public administration has such a representative cross-section of people from outside Government been invited into the process in the way that the private sector is represented, both as advisers and analysts, on the study teams. How can it be credibly asserted, as some have tried, that this is a closed process? Its very make-up has assured, in the creation of a private sector advisory committee and in the private sector membership on study teams, an open and healthy exchange of ideas. I am totally mystified how a process can be declared secretive when at the first opportunity an account is tabled of its composition, its terms of reference, and its initial results, running to more than 270 pages in both official languages.

It is ironic that the very nature of the process has caused some mutterings about its impact and implications. Members of the House should understand, if some instant analysts do not, that it was not designed to yield headlines, but to produce results.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Author.

Mr. Nielsen: I am the author of these words, Sir.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I have often attempted to give a 20 minute speech in 20 minutes, but sometimes it has to be put on paper in order for that to be done. Now he has diverted me and I have lost a minute.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are grateful.

Mr. Nielsen: You should be grateful. I am glad to see you sitting here listening.

As I say, it was designed to produce results. A measured, methodical analysis of more than 1,000 programs may not satisfy some newsmen's lust for drama and immediacy, and may not produce the kind of political grist that others in the House may seek. I do not identify anyone who may have this motivation as being guilty. In no way can this can be described as an overnight smash and grab. All that the initial report of the task force represents is a snapshot of a systematic process, with headlines to follow if and when they are warranted. Rash judgment may be the bread and butter of some—including a few journalists and others who may moonlight at that craft—but there is no place for it in the management of the Government of Canada.

In the Budget itself we have seen the first step of the implementation of the stacking principle to prevent the "giving with both hands". We have seen the introduction of the refundable tax credit for research and development as an initial step to streamline the administration of R and D programs. We have seen the termination of a number of sales tax exemptions to restore part of our tax base.

All of these measures are directly attributable to the work of the task force and the individual study teams. In terms of dollars, the famous bottom line, you may have noticed that our initial discussions have been translated by the Department of Finance for fiscal year 1986-87 into some $500 million in savings and some $275 million in increased revenue. I suggest that is a good start.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments on the Hon. Minister's speech? If not, debate.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is always a happy coincidence to have you in the chair. It gives me that sense of equilibrium one needs when addressing the highest court in our land on a very serious subject.

After waiting the longest period in Canadian history for a new Government to present its economic plan to the nation, eight and a half months, Canadians are finding out that it was not worth the wait. The Budget does not have an economic plan. There is no agenda for growth, no agenda for jobs.

We have heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) say in the House that last fall Canadians, voted for a change. However, they did not get the change they wanted. They did not get what they were promised. Instead of sticking to its massive list of glowing promises, that avalanche of promises, the Government has made a complete about-face.

The people of Canada were misled. Not only did the Government have no intention of keeping those promises, the new Conservative Government has finally revealed through its Budget that the true hidden agenda is nothing short of an all-out attack on lower and middle-income families of this country.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Ministers are travelling throughout the country in expensive government jets to promote the Budget. I understand that the Prime Minister is on his way to Toronto. The Budget received tremendous hype. The Prime Minister was in western Canada for the first time since the election, except for a brief love-in at Regina on St. Valentine's Day. He showed up in Edmonton, Calgary and Winnipeg saying that this was going to be a tough but fair Budget.

Conservative back-benchers, who are usually silent, anonymous and invisible, have been given a kit and told to sell the Budget in their ridings. Selling the Budget will be a challenge. No matter what the qualifications that the Members of the Conservative caucus may have as salesmen, no one can sell a bad product. The Budget is a bad product.

The Prime Minsiter said that the Budget would be tough but fair. The Prime Minister has spent much time promoting this Budget and I believe that he co-authored it, beginning in Miami. Therefore, this is not only the Budget of the Minister of Finance but, probably for the first time in Canadian history, a Prime Minister is intimately connected with the writing of the Budget, and he will be held jointly accountable with the Minister of Finance.

The Prime Minister's slogan of "tough but fair" promises to go down in history with many other famous sayings, such as, "Let them eat cake", "A chicken in every pot", "Tough but fair". The words "fair" and "fairness" are sprinkled liberally throughout the Budget. On the first page of the budget speech, the Minister says, "The actions I am proposing are realistic, effective and fair". On page 21, he says that costs and benefits will be fairly shared.

I believe that before the Minister of Finance assumed his portfolio, he was rather straightforward, direct and unambiguous. It seems that the Prime Minister, followed by the Minister of Finance and other members of the Government, feels that people will tend to believe something if it is said and repeated often and enough. Let me suggest that despite the repetition and the hype from all the salesmanship, the burdens, the costs and the benefits of the Budget are not evenly shared by the people of Canada.

The Government's Budget is not fair. It hits average Canadians hard. The tax increase for the average Canadian is approximately $400 to $500 a year when one considers all that the tax increases, including the clandestine, sneaky and direct increases. That $400 to $500 tax increase to the average Canadian family begins now.

What use will be made of this money that was taken from the average Canadian? Does it go to the poorer regions of the country? Does it go to the less advantaged? Does it go to the single parents? Does it go to the elderly widow? Does it go to our native people? The answer is no, no, no. It goes to the rich and wealthy with the scope to invest.

The $500,000 capital gains tax exemption is a cash bonanza of $125,000 when converted into cash. The average family faces a $500 a year tax, while the wealthy have a cash lifetime bonanza of $125,000. Is that fair? Is that just? I do not believe that is the type of equitable Budget that you expected, Mr. Speaker.

I said in the House on Thursday night, and again last Friday morning, that this Budget is not only unfair, it is sneaky. It is based on a hidden tax increase. The Minister had a secret document entitled Direct Impacts of Budget Measures by National Accounts Component. It was prepared by his Department and confirmed as valid by his own officials. As was pointed out on Monday by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), this secret document of the Minister of Finance reveals that de-indexing will net the Treasury $11.5 billion more. In other words, the cost of this move to the average Canadian by 1990 will be $11.5 billion. It is not a $200 million tax increase, but a $11.5 billion increase. At the same time, the give-away to the multi-nationals by that date will be some $8.5 billion. The middle class will be affected now, while the minimum tax on the rich is postponed for a study. Those who can least afford it must pay now, while those who can afford it pay very little. That is what the Government calls fair.

Let us deal with the minimum tax. On August 17, during the election campaign last year, the Minister said:

> I think it is unfair that an individual not pay a minimum tax.

We proposed a minimum tax on the rich of 13 per cent for those over $50,000. Taken with the provincial component of an additional 7 per cent, that would have been a 20 per cent minimum tax on every Canadian earning over $50,000 a year. The Government also promised a minimum tax during the election campaign, but it has given only some options in this Budget. It has provided for some further study but not any realistic commitment.

The Budget hits the poor, the weak, the elderly and the disadvantaged. It does so in a sneaky, underhanded, ruthless and gutless manner because the tax increases are not up front. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance said categorically that there would be no tax increases. Yet the Government has handed Canadians the most massive tax bill in recent Canadian history.

The Minister of Finance agrees with me that hidden taxes are wrong. Here is what he said as quoted by the Canadian Press on August 8, 1984. These are the Minister's words. He was then the critic for another portfolio. He said:

● (1600)

I think taxation which is automatic, taxation which sneaks in without a politician having to say, "this is what we're doing, this is why we're doing it, and be prepared to take the flak that comes from it is wrong.

He went on to say:

Responsible government means that when you want to increase the taxes, you say you're going to increase the tax and you make it quite clear why you're going to increase the tax.

The Minister has not done it. He has repudiated his own words and brought in the most massive, secret, hidden tax increase in the history of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He begins with de-indexation of old age pensions. I want to tell the old age pensioners of this country what is happening in this Budget. By taking away de-indexation from those pensions up to 3 per cent every year pensions will be reduced by 3 per cent, year after year after year cumulatively.

Mr. Siddon: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is exactly what the Budget says.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, read the documents. We have a lot of squirming Conservatives on the other side of the House who have not read the documents, Mr. Speaker. There are approximately, 1,740,000 senior citizens in Canada at or below the poverty line. De-indexation plus tax increases means that old age pensioners will lose roughly $1.25 billion in income by the year 1990. Those are figures derived from the Minister's own documents produced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. Those are the documents upon which the Minister of Finance is relying himself.

Mr. Siddon: Pensions will not be reduced.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Those documents have not been denied by the Minister. They were not denied by his officials in the lock-up.

The 80-year old widow trying to make ends meet will see a reduction in her income by 1989 of $30 a month in real terms. She will have to pay more under this Budget for health care products. She will even have to pay more for her cat food, more for her soap and her shampoo.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They laugh. Members on the other side do not know what it is like to count every penny to know if you have enough to pay for soap, shampoo, let alone to feed a pet. The Minister did not tell the 80-year old widow that in this Budget that is what she will have to do. He did not tell her that $360 a year is going to help provide the owner of her apartment building with a $125,000 cash bonus in a capital gains tax exemption. She will have little money for soap, shampoo and basic health care, but the owner of that apartment building will be able to invest in Miami real estate.

You know, Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

—he is eliminating the first 3 per cent of indexing from senior citizens' pensions, and as if this further violation of an election promise was not enough, the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) told the newspaper La Presse today that it was up to the people to judge whether this promise was so vital to the survival of our senior citizens. You know—

[English]

In his book Where I Stand, the Prime Minister said the following about indexation of pensions. On page 19 we find:

It should become a priority to reduce and eventually eliminate and outlaw indexed contracts and benefits, including indexed pensions, in line with a decline in inflation—Clear and justified exception should be made for mothers' allowances and all other social programs designed to protect the ordinary or disadvantaged Canadian from the ravages of inflation for which they are not responsible.

That is where the Prime Minister stood. Where does he stand now after all that talk about sacred trust and longstanding commitment? Canadians can be forgiven for asking the Prime Minister, "We knew where you stood when you wrote the book. Where do you stand now?" It is certainly not where he stood during the last election campaign.

Let us turn to family allowances and the child tax credit. The net result, based again on these documents of the Department of Finance, is that some $300 million less is available for families by 1990. This reduction hits hardest at the people who need help the most, young families, single parents, and every year that family allowance, now de-indexed up to 3 per cent, goes down 3 per cent, after 3 per cent, and all cumulative.

Let me come to the matter of de-indexing the income tax system. By de-indexing the tax bracket 3 per cent after 3 per cent year by year, which accumulates, again by the Minister's own documents, by 1990 families with incomes of $15,000 a year will see their taxes increase by 36 per cent while families with $30,000 a year will see their taxes increase by 11 per cent. But if you make $100,000 a year, the increase will be only 4 per cent. If you make $200,000 what will the increase be? Only 2 per cent, Sir. That is the fair, equitable Budget of this Government and of the Minister of Finance?

I want to tell the Minister why I brought in indexation of the tax system into the Income Tax Act in the first place in my Budget of February, 1973, a Budget I recommend the Minister read and study. Our income tax is based on a progressive system. It is based on a progressive rate schedule. As a Canadian's income increases, the percentage of tax he or she pays increases. It is basically sound, basically fair. But the increase should be in real terms, it should not be in inflationary terms. The increase should be a real increase, and not just a numerical or nominal increase as a result of inflation. If a Canadian gets a 5 per cent pay increase, and inflation for that year is 5 per cent, the increase is really illusory, it does not exist. He has the same purchasing power. There is nothing more. But under the tax system we had then and under the tax system the Minister proposes for us now, that person will be worse off, because for every 3 per cent in inflation his real purchasing power will diminish and he will get caught by the new system proposed by the Minister.

In my Budget I moved to eliminate that unfair and unintended result from our tax system by indexing deductions and tax brackets as the consumer price index increased each year. That move was supported by the Conservative Party when the Conservatives sat in opposition under the former Leader of that party, the Hon. Mr. Stanfield. The only people who opposed that move at that time, as I recall, were the other Parties.

Mr. Gauthier: The NDP.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The tax system would no longer erode a person's purchasing power and individuals would no longer pay tax at a higher marginal rate simply because inflation boosted him or her into a higher tax bracket.

For a person on fixed income, the result of indexing was to reduce taxes each year of prices went up and leave him or her with the same real tax to pay but not the same nominal tax, which was inflation. That change put Canada on the vanguard of nations with progressive, humane tax systems. No longer were the neediest hit. No longer was the tax system claiming higher and higher shares of an individual's hard earned money simply because of inflation. That system, I believe, Sir, has served us well since it came into effect in 1974.

Last Thursday, the Minister of Finance turned back the clock and virtually wiped out one of the most progressive and humane changes in tax legislation in our history.

[Translation]

We Liberals know what our principles are. And since last Thursday, when this Budget was brought down, we also know what the real principles of the Conservatives are. The Conservative Government has finally shown its true face. Last Thursday's Budget has made a mockery of the Prime Minister's solemn commitments made during the election campaign. This Budget is a betrayal of the trust of Canadians. The Minister has deceived the Canadian people.

This Budget is a direct attack against Canadian men and women on low incomes who are being hit by a whole series of tax increases. A real downpour, as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said. "Taxes, taxes, taxes!" to use the words of the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien). The tax on gas: 2 cents more per litre. The Government is going to use the money to pay the oil multinationals the $2 billion it agreed to pay them under the Western Oil Accord.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) promised the House that this measure would not result in any tax increases for Canadians. We have been deceived. This Budget contains a whole list, a series, an avalanche, a veritable downpour of taxes: federal sales tax exemptions on certain products have been withdrawn; a 1 per cent increase in federal sales tax; a 25-cent increase in excise tax on a large package of cigarettes; a 2 per cent increase in the excise tax on alcohol. Even candy is being taxed! This is a cruel Budget, a cowardly Budget!

It is also a regressive Budget. It hits those least able to pay. It hits the consumer. There is a 1 per cent hike in the federal sales tax to 11 per cent. New items not previously taxed have been added—everything from children's candies and soft drinks to pet foods and alternative energy equipment. The 11 per cent tax now applies to health care products as well, such as bandages. Scrapes and bruises are suddenly taxable items, as well as soap and shampoo. It will cost more to stay clean. It really is a dirty Budget.

In 1982, the average family of four in the under $20,000 income range spent $372.60 per year on health care products. The Minister has just raised that bill by $41, 11 per cent, to $413.60. Again it is a tax which will hurt those who can afford it least. They will be the hardest hit. Most important is that the 11 per cent sales tax now applies to surgical supplies in doctors' offices, dental instruments, X-ray apparatus and X-ray film. A trip to the dentist will be more expensive, especially if one has children. These increases are expected to cost the health field alone some $75 million per year in additional costs to average Canadians going to a dictor or going to a dentist.

Mr. Nystrom: That is painful.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Hon. Member to my left says: "That is painful". I want to tell him that trying to get any information from the Minister of Finance is like pulling teeth.

What does the Budget do for women? First, there is no mention of the promise of a home-maker's pension, which was in their platform during the election campaign. The Prime Minister was committed to it in the Leaders' debate on women's issues. There is no mention of compulsory credit splitting on marriage breakdown. There is no mention of continuation of benefits on remarriage. There is no mention of improvement of survivors' benefits. There is no mention of improvement if disability benefits. All of these were commitments of the Prime Minister and of the Conservative Party during the election campaign, commitments made by the Prime Minister on television when he debated the other two Leaders. There is no promise to improve child care as undertaken by the Conservative Party during the election campaign. More than 70 per cent of single women live below the poverty line. Why is there no shelter allowance, as we promised? There is no protection against inflation for senior citizens. Most senior citizens living in poverty are women, and their pensions will be eroded 3 per cent per year, and there is no additional protection. The Minister says the Guaranteed Income Supplement is not touched. However, the base is touched, so the total of the pension and the GIS come down 3 per cent a year or whatever the lower percentage will be after calculating the GIS.

Let us look at health care. The health care system in Canada is under attack. User fees and extra billing are undermining the equality of that system. The health of Canadians is too important to be played around with. We all have a commitment to preserve that system. However, in the Budget the Government intends to cut by the year 1990-91 over $4 billion in cash transfers to the provinces under EPF. Another $1.6 billion will be cut from post-secondary education transfers. Two key areas where we share responsibility as parliamentarians with provincial Governments are health care and education. Can you tell me, Mr. Speaker, two more important vital priorities for the country than a decent, universally accessible health care system and improvement to education, particularly at the technical and post-secondary levels? I do not know of any stronger priorities for Canadians, yet these are proposed to be cut under the Budget.

The Minister is also imposing a two-cent per litre tax on gasoline, indeed on all other transportation fuels. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) signed the deal with the western provinces, we called it a giveaway to the multi-nationals which would cost consumers. She said to us in the House that the consumer would not pay. She accused us of pitting region against region. She told me that we were causing hatred and division. She promised that there was nothing in that agreement "that hurts consumers", as reported in Hansard of March 29. We were undermining the future of the nation by even suggesting that the consumer in Atlantic Canada or in Ontario would have to pay. I hope that Minister will at least have the decency to apologize today for misleading the people of the country in the Parliament of our country.

That tax is also being applied in a very sneaky way. It does not come into effect until September. The Government hopes the consumers of the country, motorists and those who drive trucks for a living, will have forgotten by then. It hopes the people who drive and who depend on transportation for a living will not remember why they are being hit at the pump. The simple reason is that it is to pay for a giveaway to multinational oil companies. The tax also applies to aviation and other transportation fuel. It means that everything that moves gets more expensive, including air fares. Less than a year ago, the now Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), then finance critic and lusting after the portfolio, as quoted in The Citizen of Ottawa on July 26, 1984, said:

> We are not planning any gasoline sales tax increases on the Canadian public.

Oh, those broken promises; oh, how they must hurt.

Mr. Nunziata: Who said that?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Laymen would call him "John Crosbie"; we call him the Hon. Member for St. John's West. At the same time, the Government is increasing user fees and putting a larger tax burden on farmers.

Let us look at the agricultural picture. The Government increased fees in November on inspection services and grading up to $32 million per year. The Minister says that the capital gains exemption will solve the problem. That is the one commitment they lived up to, that a capital gains exemption would be applied immediately on the transfer of farm land. Mr. Speaker, you were sitting in a less exalted place when I eliminated the capital gains tax on the transfer of a family farm from one generation to another. That being said, all the other promises were reneged on.

The Minister says that the capital gains exemption will solve the problem. It will only help more people get out of farming. What about the 39,000 young farmers caught in the debt crisis? The Government did not keep its promise of an agri-bond program with long-term lower interest rates. Farmers are hit with the increased fuel tax, two cents per litre. The average farmer uses 14,000 litres of fuel per year. His increased cost as of September will be $280 per year.

There is $50 million chopped from the departmental budget on top of the cuts in November, endangering dairy programs, freight assistance, crop insurance and other programs. Sales tax increases mean higher input costs for farmers. We in this Party are committed to the family farm. This Budget is great for the farmer, but only if he wants to get out of farming. For his family who wants to stay in agriculture, this Budget is a disaster.

How has the agricultural community responded to the Budget? Henry Pelissero of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture says that he is disillusioned, disappointed, upset and angry and that the Budget mocks the consultative process. That is what the Ontario Federation of Agriculture thinks about the Budget.

[Translation]

Michel Lord of the Union des producteurs agricoles had this to say about the Budget:

> —it was a great disappointment there were no measures to help farmers in financial difficulty, no proposals for overhauling farm financing.

[English]

How about fishermen? In November, fishermen were subjected to a cut of $40 million. Their fees for weather reports, dockage and berthing were raised. This Budget imposes an additional $25 million cut on fishermen. The average fisherman in British Columbia, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec or Newfoundland uses thousands of litres of fuel per year. I have not been able to obtain that statistic as I was able to do for farmers, but the two-cent increase in fuel taxes means that fuel will cost fishermen hundreds of dollars more.

● (1620)

I now turn to the subject of mining, which is a major industry in British Columbia, the province which I have the honour to represent. Mining is not even mentioned in the Budget. There is not even one single line with respect to it in the budget speech or in any of the supporting documents. Where are the promised changes to the tax system to encourage exploration, processing and development? There is not one single line with respect to those changes.

I would now like to deal with another major industry in British Columbia, that is, forestry. Where is the aid for B.C.'s declining forest product companies? Why is there not assistance to allow for recapitalization of these companies through transfer of tax bases, capital cost allowances and investment tax credits to investors? When one reads the letters investment bankers send out with respect to the Budget one sees that they state, "Stay away from western forest product companies". That is exactly what has been said. Where is the promised increased funding for the Canadian forestry service and the regional forestry agreements? Where is the national forestry internship program which the Government promised during the election campaign?

With respect to the areas of forestry, fisheries, mining—and I will mention tourism in a minute—there is nothing in the Budget. The Province of British Columbia is a monumental loser with respect to this Budget.

Let us now consider VIA Rail. The Government is cutting service with respect to this corporation by some $200 million per year. This hits the outlying regions of the country. The new philosophy seems to be, "Use it or lose it". This from a Party which vowed to reinstate VIA Rail routes. It is the end of a commitment to the disadvantaged regions of the country.

The Government is cutting regional industrial incentives by $100 million this year and by $100 million next year. Business will concentrate through the private sector in central Canada. The weakest regions of the country are being hit. Cape Breton has been devastated by this Government. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) promised, and I am quoting her words:

> My plan (in Cape Breton) to close the two heavy water plants will not proceed before alternate employment opportunities can be found for displaced workers.

What do they do? There is no plan for employment in Cape Breton. There is no economic plan for less disadvantaged areas. All we have for Cape Breton is a so-called tax free zone. That is a joke. Without the infrastructure in place, where can we get the private sector to invest in Cape Breton?

I would now like to speak about another region which has been absolutely devastated right here in the Ottawa Valley. I am speaking of Deep River, Chalk River, Arnprior, Pembroke and Renfrew. Funds to Atomic Energy of Canada have been cut by some $100 million. In addition, $70 million of its earned surplus has been diverted into government revenues. That is a devastating comment with respect to what we are doing through the Government to Canadian research.

In my hand, Mr. Speaker, I have an advertisement which appeared in The North Renfrew Times on August 22, 1984, which is entitled "The P.C. Commitment to Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories. Elect Don Whillans. Time for Change". The advertisement states:

> Chalk River has been the heart and soul of this nuclear program. A P.C. government will not only maintain this facility, it will consider providing additional funds to allow greater Canadian involvement in the massive fusion energy projects underway in other countries, building on the Laboratory's experience with tritium-based fusion cycles.
> The future of Chalk River is closely linked to our Party's commitment to research and development. We will develop a co-ordinated approach to government-sponsored research, strengthening the linkages between public sector and private sector research activities, and setting priorities in close consultation with provincial government engaged in similar research.
> This is the Progressive Conservative commitment: Job security for you—and jobs for your children.

How about that?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I wish to show you, Mr. Speaker, a copy of the The North Renfrew Times for Wednesday, May 29—today. The headline is "Budget Gores AECL". On the front page of the newspaper is reprinted the advertisement to which I have just referred. It has been surrounded in black crepe. I understand the rules with respect to this matter, Mr. Speaker, and I will desist. However, I wish to show visibly how hypocritical the Government has been.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Finance has said, "The approach we are following in Cape Breton reflects the basic philosophy of this Government". I tell you, if I lived in the Atlantic provinces, Gaspé, northern Ontario, up in the Ottawa Valley, or even in parts of western Canada, I would not take the Minister's commitment too seriously. The Minister has also said, "We must ensure that adjustment takes place in a humane way". That is like saying to a condemned man on death row, "Do you want the noose, the electric chair or would you like it intravenously?" That is what this Government is saying.

What about tourism, which is so important to British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec and Atlantic Canada? The largest potential customer for our tourist industry is the United States. What have we done in this regard? We have raised gasoline prices and liquor prices. Frank Miller, on his last leg, breathing his last priministerial air, claims he kept the price of gas from going up by 22 cents per gallon. The following is what Frank Miller had to say with respect to his claim:

I'm delighted to see the discussions I had with the Prime Minister . . . about the potential 22-cent-a-gallon gas tax had some impact on his final decision.

Frank, you did a great job. You cut it down to about 10 cents.

This is what the Prime Minister said last summer during the election campaign as reported in The Globe and Mail:

We will examine gasoline, alcohol, food and lodging taxes which are reducing the competitiveness of Canada's tourism industry.

What has the Prime Minister done? He has examined them all right. He took one look and jacked them all up. He jacked up the price of gasoline, liquor and food.

The Minister of Finance has said that the reason for the tax hikes is to lower the deficit and to stimulate confidence. However, all this ballyhoo and noise about confidence does not even accomplish what he set out to do.

If we look at the Minister's objectives with respect to dealing with the deficit, he does not measure up. During the election campaign I was the only one who spoke frankly about the deficit. I analysed it into a structural and cyclical component. I made a commitment to reduce the structural part of the deficit in a period of five to seven years. However, not at the expense of the weak, the unemployed, the aged, the handicapped or the weaker regions of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If the Minister is looking for applause from the investment community, he will not receive it since the deficit has not really been reduced. He took the deficit at $29.6 billion from Mr. Lalonde's February 1984 Budget to somewhere between $30 billion and $32 billion. Through the actions of his Government, he took that deficit up to $38.2 billion. He took it up as a result of the Western Accord, transfers to the provinces and other actions. At best, the figure of $38.2 billion is his figure and not something which he inherited. In fact, he inherited something between $30 billion and $32 billion. He now says he is bringing that deficit down to $33.8 billion. Mr. Speaker, he is not even back to where he started. He has not broken even.

In November, the Minister predicted a deficit of $1.5 billion lower than that which he now has. In his financial statement just six months ago that is what he said. Six months ago he was wrong by $1.5 billion. The minister now responds by saying that he is not going to bother making projections any more. I do not blame him. At least, his projections will not be published. He states at page 20 of the budget speech:

It is more misleading than helpful to present a precise view of the deficit five years from now . . . It would be foolhardy to finetune policy to precise estimates that we know are uncertain and will inevitably be proven wrong.

At least the Minister of Justice, when he was the Minister of Finance—during that short, abortive period in Canada's history—had the guts to come up with projections.

Three sentences down in the same paragraph of the budget speech the Minister states:

The measures I announced in November and today will ensure that the annual deficit is $20 billion lower than it would otherwise have been by the end of the decade.

Three sentences prior to that he said there would be no more projections. He stated it would be too tough to predict employment figures, interest rates and inflation rates. He has said he will make no more projections. Yet, just three lines later we are given a $2 billion deficit reduction. Those are selective projections. He draws what he wants. He publishes what he likes. I say to the Minister that that is intellectual dishonesty.

● (1630)

The Minister claims to have cut $4.4 billion from the deficit this year and over $8.6 billion in 1986-87, the next fiscal year. In fact, the Minister's own figures show that the deficit reduction will be only $2 bilion lower than forecast this year and only $1 billion next year. Which is it to be? Are there going to be projections or not?

The Minister has already acknowledged that in six months they were out by $1.5 billion. In five years, that works out to a margin of between $10 billion and $15 billion. This is an important fact. It is at the core of the Budget and is the Minister's own argument. It is the way he wanted to do things.

The Government is putting all its hopes for growth on building what he calls confidence in he private sector. However, in one paragraph, the Minister undermines that whole approach. How can the business community have confidence when the Minsiter will not tell us on what he bases his figures? He simply says, "Trust me". I simply say that that is not good enough. Confidence is fragile enough without adding to the confusion.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) went to St. John's, Newfoundland recently. He goes back there every once in awhile to refresh himself. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) mentioned earlier today the article in the Evening Telegram of May 25, 1985, which quoted the Minister of Justice. The Minister is even more loquacious when he is in St. John's. I suppose it is contagious. The article quotes the Minister as saying:

"If it turns out that in any of the approaches taken in this budget there is any possibility of any damage to regionally deprived areas, then there will be changes made to deal with that," he said.

I think we ought to invite the Minister to Cape Breton. Perhaps we ought to invite him to Deep River. How about Chalk River?

Mr. Chrétien: In B.C., what about the forestry, the mining? He should be there.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You've got it, Jean. The article indicates that the Minister went on to say the following about his brother Ministers:

"If they can't do it, if they can't produce the jobs and the economic growth, then we won't hesitate to go in a different direction. Although I don't know what other direction you can go in because the other direction has proved to be a failure for the last 20 years."

The article indicates that he went on to say:

"If they don't perform, then big brother will have to be given the job back again," he warned.

I wonder if the business communities of Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver have read about that particular remark.

These boys will change their minds pretty quickly. They do not really believe in what they are doing. I ask them to show us the calculations. I would ask the Minister to show us how he came up with such optimistic projections. I would like to remind the Minister of Finance of what his leader, the Prime Minister, told us during the election campaign about public finances. He said that they were going to tell the people the facts, that they were going to share them with Canadians and that they were going to set out a true and honest accounting. Well, give us that accounting.

We know that over one-half of the deficit reductions, $2 billion this year and $1 billion next year, are put down to what the Minister calls better program management. When we were in the lockup, my colleagues from Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and Laval-des-Rapides asked the officials who wrote the Budget what that meant. We asked them from where that money would come. They did not know. They had no answers. Neither does the Minister of Finance. As Jeff Rose, the President of CUPE, has said about this Budget, this Budget is about leaps of faith and starry-eyed assumptions that the private sector will provide jobs while consumers spend less.

I say that it is lousy economics to take $4 billion out of the economy next year and to take $4 billion away from consumers. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, made this argument earlier this afternoon. The Budget takes $4 billion out of demands. From where does the cash come to buy the goods being produced by the private sector? How does taking away spending power from the Canadian consumer create jobs? How does it help small business?

The Government is relying on the United States market to keep our exports going. It is relying on the United States market to keep our big business going. However, when small business is the core around which this Budget is being directed, it takes $4 billion out of the demand of this country, money which can ony be directed to small business and the products of small business. The answer is that this will not help small business. It will hurt the average businessman and woman in this country. We predict that on the basis of that withdrawal of $4 billion worth of demand in the Budget, 125,000 to 150,000 jobs will be lost.

Data Resources, a well-known forecasting firm, has just come up with its calculations. Its report indicates:

The Government's bitter medicine will reduce growth of real output by 0.3 per cent this year and by 0.2 per cent in 1986.

It goes on to indicate:

The restraints may raise the unemployment rate in the next year by as much as 0.3 per cent.

That is not a job-creating Budget. That is not an agenda for growth. That is not an agenda for jobs.

The Minister is relying on opening up the rules for the application of funds from RSPs and pension plans in order to invest in small business. I do not know how realistic that is. I have been a trustee for pension funds for a large number of workers. I know that I and the other trustees of such funds have a fiduciary duty to protect and increase the capital of those funds. I want to know how many pension funds or RSPs will really invest in high-risk ventures when the duty of the trustees who manage those funds is to protect and enhance their capital. I think there is a lot of smoke and mirrors and a lot of wishful thinking here.

We suggested that the best way to help small business in this country and to persuade Canadians to invest in small business would be to allow a complete deduction of a capital loss against income for investment in small business. I believe that that would have done far more for small business than any measure that is in this particular Budget. What about our young entrepreneurs program for which we suggested $100,000 worth of start up moneys? What about one-stop shopping for all government services at the Small Business Development Bank?

Where are the promises the Government made to reduce the tax burden on small business, to simplify the tax system, to review government purchasing policies so small business can get their fair share and to create more accessible methods of financing? The Minister claims that the half million dollar exemption for capital gains will go to small business, but again that exemption is not targeted. There is no assurance whatsoever that any of that money invested and claimed by way of exemptions by wealthier citizens will go to small business.

By the way, only 4 per cent of Canadians make capital gains. There are only 150,000 Canadians who invest in ways that will allow them to get capital gains exemptions, and there are no strings attached to those exemptions.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we in this Party are committed to the private sector. The Budgets I brought down were committed to the private sector. We believe that the small business sector is the engine of growth in this country. We believe that the small business community can and will give us job creation. That is why during the election campaign we presented the programs I have just described. We believe in rewarding success. We believe in rewarding risk. Those are basic principles of our Party.

As reported in Hansard of May 24, the Minister has said:

One of the things that has characterized the response of a broad range of people to this Budget is that it has been fair.

However, $350 to $500 will be taken from the average family and there will be a $125,000 cash bonanza for the wealthy who can afford to invest and be eligible for capital gains. However, there is no relation between that exemption and small business. There is no guarantee that that money will be invested in a business in Montreal, Saint-Maurice, Vancouver Quadra or Ottawa-Vanier. That money could go to a condominium in Florida, a hotel in California or Palm Springs, European art or a number of objects that have nothing to do with jobs in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister says that he has been consulting and listening. It has taken eight and a half months for him to bring down this Budget, the longest time it has taken in modern Canadian history. Today the Prime Minister said that he thought that the Budget was generally regarded as a helpful document for the economy.

To whom has the Prime Minister been listening? To whom has the Minister been listening? It sure wasn't Lesley Silver of the Social Planning Council of Ottawa-Carleton who said:

> This Budget is a strong step in the direction of entrenching inequality . . . In fact, a de-indexing of Old Age Security will mean the poorest of the elderly—those living on incomes comprised solely of OAS and GIS—will suffer a 1 per cent reduction in real income.

He didn't listen to Sally Hall, President of the Consumers' Association of Canada, who said that middle-income earners are going to be hit hardest and that the consumer is going to have less money. Nor did he listen to representatives of labour. Dennis McDermott has said that the Budget:

> —studiously ignores labour . . . there is a violation of their election promise to get the country working again—

He went on to say:

> This is a Budget of continuing recession. There is no hope out there.

James McCambly, President of the Canadian Federation of Labour, said that the $125,000 capital gains tax bonanza for the rich means:

> —high income people will get off scot-free but middle income and average wage earners are going to get hit.

He didn't listen to Cliff Pilkey, President of the Ontario Federation of Labour, who said:

> —the unemployed people of Canada have been betrayed.

Nor did he listen to the President of the Canadian Ship Building and Ship Repairing Association who said of the Budget:

> Our worst fears have happened and all the promises (made by P.C. politicians during the 1984 election campaign) have been abandoned.

● (1640)

Nor did he listen to the Executive Director of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, who said:

> It was a pretty depressing message . . . It will help farmers sell and get out of farming, but there was little to help them stay in business . . . There was nothing that dealt with the issues that we raised with them and nothing that had been promised in the federal election proposals.

Nor did he listen to the Secretary-Treasurer of the B.C. and Yukon Building Trades Council, who said:

> Once again we have a federal Budget designed to make ordinary wage earners and the unemployed pay to meet the never-ending demand for increased profits from speculators and major corporations.

Did he listen to the 13 member Canadian Council of Churches and Citizens for Public Justice? They said:

> In fact, the Budget will deepen poverty in Canada. Changes in the federal sales tax, for example, are regressive and mean additional tax costs for poor families.

We do not know to whom the Minister has been talking and where he got the idea that people think it is fair to attack middle and lower income groups. I am outraged that the Minister would dare to say that I agreed with his over-all approach to capital gains exemptions for the rich. Not only is the measure unfair, but put together with the tax increase for the average Canadian it will not work for the purposes which he says it will work. It will not be invested in Canadian small business.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is great for real estate in Florida, buying a race horse in Kentucky, or a hotel in Hong Kong, but it will not put a cent into Canadian business. When I asked the Minister why the exemption was not limited to Canadian businesses, he said:

> —if we put those rules into the tax system it would result in a tremendously complex tax system . . . people would be able to find ways around it.

What a pathetic excuse. What a sad and sorry abdication of ministerial responsibility. The Minister of Finance said that the Budget was about jobs. That is pretty rhetorical, but the truth is that there is nothing in the Budget which will create jobs. It will not even create training, as it has cut $100 million from training programs.

On CTV's Question Period, May 25, the Minister said that it was:

> —a very slight amount less money spent on job training—

I have said that budgets are not just graphs, jobs or projections. Budgets are about human beings. An economy only works if people are at work. A budget is only successful if people can find meaningful employment, educate their children and provide for their retirement.

[Translation]

A Budget is not just the sum of a column of figures or a series of graphs. A Budget is people. It deals with men and women and families across the country. A Budget concerns our way of life, the careers of your young people, the future of our children. This Budget, however, is not a Budget of hope, it is not a Budget of jobs, it does not have the confidence of Canadian men and women.

[English]

The sad thing is that the people of Canada honestly believed that the Prime Minister meant it when he said the priority would be jobs, jobs, jobs. They believed him when he said that social programs were a sacred trust. They believed him when he said that the economy could be made to grow, that prosperity was just around the corner and that the unemployed would be put to work. They believed him when he said that the poor would not suffer. They believed him when he said that the elderly would live in dignity. He said the Government would be fair, but the first Budget, the first opportunity the Government had to demonstrate what it really means for Canadians, where its heart really is, and the first chance it had to demonstrate that fairness is something which counts, is an astonishing betrayal of the trust which was placed in the Government by Canadians last fall.

It is a gutless Budget. It is ruthless. It is a heartless assault on the weak, the poor, the unemployed, the elderly, the disadvantaged, middle-income earners and average Canadian families across the entire country. The average Canadian is being hit to put money into the hands of the rich and powerful.

There is no agenda for growth. In fact, the Budget is anti-growth, anti-family, anti-youth, anti-women, anti-senior citizens, against the regions of the country and anti-research. There are no jobs available in the steel and automobile industries. There is not a single word about mining. There is nothing for forestry or housing. There is nothing for tourism, and there is virtually nothing for agriculture or fishing. There is only the vague expectation of the Minister of Finance that somehow, out of the goodness of their hearts, the corporate sector will invest a bit more and create a few more jobs, but the Minister will not say how. He will not say it because he does not know. His incentives are not targeted to achieve that result.

That is why we in the Liberal Party have no confidence in the Budget. It presents a vision of Canada which we do not share. It is a vision of Canada which denies the contribution of the elderly. It is a vision of Canada which denies equality to every individual in every region. It is a vision of Canada which says that the poor are not worthy of our compassion. It is a vision of Canada which denies the social contract. It is not a Budget of hope. It is a Budget of despair. It is a Budget which we cannot support. We will continue to condemn the Budget from one end of the country to the other.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to participate in the budget debate. Although, Mr. Speaker, you have been kind enough to recognize me on various occasions to permit me to comment and make observations on matters before the House, my remarks today constitute my maiden speech.

It will thus come as no surprise if I digress briefly from the important budget debate to make several comments about my riding of Esquimalt-Saanich, which I have the great honour and privilege to represent in the House. Some Members who are present, having been here awhile, will remember several of my predecessors—the Hon. George Pearkes, P.C., and holder of the Victoria Cross; George Chatterton and Donald Munro. I know my distinguished predecessor, Don Munro, would want me to extend his felicitations to his many friends and former colleagues on both sides of the House.

Where, one might ask, is Esquimalt-Saanich? It is on southern Vancouver Island, adjacent to the riding of Victoria. It has a population of 115,000. Its make-up is diverse. Esquimalt includes our western naval base and Work Point Barracks, the home of the 2nd Battalion Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry. The Saanich Peninsula includes rich farmland and a growing scientific community. We share a major university and community college with the riding of Victoria. Thanks to our temperate climate, we have a large number of retired residents. Given the immense natural beauty of Vancouver Island, the mild climate and the ocean as a doorstep, it is not surprising that tourism is a major industry.

Greater Victoria, which includes my riding, is the sports capital of Canada. We have produced a long procession of national championship teams in basketball, soccer, lacrosse, softball and field hockey. The heart of our Gold Medal Olympic Rowing Team lives and trains in my riding. Many Canadians will be surprised to learn that we even won the Stanley Cup a few years ago. Sports flourish across the full range of age groups and areas of endeavour. It is truly a favoured land. Some have called it a Garden of Eden.

Thus far, I have been describing the physical aspects of my constituency. The economic situation is not so happy a story. Unemployment is at 15 per cent in the greater Victoria area. Energy prices are high. Small business has been depressed. Tourism has been down and mills have been closed. Young and old alike have suffered.

The first tentative signs of economic recovery are showing. As a province heavily dependent on resource industries, we in British Columbia require stable markets, affordable wage scales and responsible federal Government fiscal management for business to flourish. Until recently, these necessary ingredients have been missing.

• (1650)

Initiatives taken by the new Progressive Conservative Government beginning last September have helped to start the turnaround, not just in British Columbia but right across our nation. The Budget introduced by the Minsiter of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is an important milestone in this process of economic renewal. Hon. Members opposite are attempting to portray this Budget as some isolated incident which is unrelated to the legislative program which began last autumn and which will continue over the months and years ahead. They could not be more mistaken, Mr. Speaker.

We began with the economic statement in early November, followed by the First Ministers' conference in Regina, the conference in Quebec and the economic conference here in Ottawa. Overlaying and connecting all of these events has been the extensive and unprecedented consultation between the new federal Government and all of the provincial administrations. Many other important legislative initiatives have been taken since November which have inspired Canadians from coast to coast. This is an ongoing process and there is much more important legislation to come.

This budget, very significant though it is, is not the end of the battle to make sense out of the nonsense we inherited. Indeed, this is barely the "end of the beginning", to paraphrase the words of that great Englishman, Sir Winstor Churchill.

What do British Columbians in general, and my constituents in particular, think of this Budget and the approach of this Government? They like it very much, indeed, Mr. Speaker. It begins with that very basic of requirements, attitude. We are the first federal administration in a long while which has genuinely listened to western Canada. In a federal state such as Canada, there is a partnership between the federal authority and the various provinces. Practically all of our national programs are funded and administered jointly. To presume to govern nationally, to presume to be acting on behalf of all Canadians, without consulting promptly, thoroughly and reasonably with each and every provincial jurisdiction, is to perpetrate a fraud, a hoax on the people of Canada. That is exactly what our Liberal predecessors did. They perpetrated a fraud and a hoax. They did not consult, did not account and they did not care. It was a splendid example of "fooling enough of the people most of the time". In 1984, Canadians said, "Enough".

The people of Esquimalt-Saanich are very much in favour of the consultative process. They are fed up with the bickering between jurisdictions. They want effective, efficient administration from Ottawa. I don't know how Ottawa is viewed from Cape Breton or Saskatoon, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, Ottawa has been known in British Columbia these recent years as "fat city". Fat city, Mr. Speaker, is that shameless place which is untouched by the recession and populated by legions of faceless bureaucrats and eastern politicians. It is inured from the vicissitudes of inflation and high unemployment, with fat salaries, fully indexed pensions and other assorted perks and benefits.

No one in the former Government cared what westerners thought. Let us take the Liberal national energy policy. That alone tells the story of the Liberal attitude toward western Canada; repressive, vindictive, disinterested and disdainful. Western Canadians have long wanted to be consulted, to be treated fairly and honestly. They have been consulted these recent months. They agree with the policy thrusts of this Budget.

This past weekend I met with hundreds of my constituents in a public forum. They agree that the deficit must be controlled and reduced. They acknowledge that the private sector, most especially small business, is the vehicle for economic growth and job creation. The tax incentives and the changes to the capital gains legislation are important ingredients in the policy to help small business.

The pioneer spirit is alive and well in British Columbia. It is a frontier land of rugged beauty and rugged individualism. The entrepreneurs, the risk takers, are more than willing to take up the challenge of business development, business growth and to be the engine of economic renewal. They have been waiting for a Government which is prepared to reward the successful and the risk taker, a Government which does not dictate everything from the bowels of "fat city" but consults and puts faith in the individual Canadian. That states plainly that the Government wants to unleash the little bit of genius which lurks in every Canadian, whether it be a labourer, union member, farmer, scientist or artist. We have said in the Budget, "You, the average Canadian, choose which artist deserves support, which business has a saleable and worthy product and which initiative deserves public support". That is what my constituents tell me, that is what this Budget tells my constituents and all Canadians, and that is how we intend to proceed.

We intend to manage our nation's affairs prudently and efficiently. We intend to be accountable and to consult. The farmers in my riding are very pleased with the capital gains legislation. The entrepreneur and the small businessman are very pleased with the tax breaks offered in this Budget. Those involved in research and development are delighted with the revised rules. The many retired people who have worked long and hard to build this country, the men and women from right across Canada who suffered through war and depression and who have retired on temperate Vancouver Island, viewed with particular alarm and concern the profligate and irresponsible financial management of this country over the past two decades. They applaud this Budget because that for which they had worked so long and so hard, and for which they had risked so much, was being eroded, thrown away, before their eyes.

None of us is happy with the need to touch modestly the old age pension indexing, but senior Canadians recognize, as do all other thinking Canadians, that full indexing itself is inflationary. Our retired citizens are prepared to make any modest and reasonable sacrifice, providing all Canada joins in the battle to straighten out our financial affairs. The senior citizens in my riding are well aware that our social programs, in order to be sustained, and to be improved and strengthened, require a vibrant economy in which Canadians have jobs and our finances are properly managed. We have extended benefits to widows and widowers between the ages of 60 years and 64 years. We have increased veterans pensions. We have broadened the scope of eligibility for disability pensions, which will benefit an estimated 120,000 additional Canadians. We do indeed take our social responsibilities seriously.

The Western Accord on energy is a great boon to British Columbia, indeed to all of Canada. In the fishing treaty with the United States, we have at long last started on the road to re-establishing our valuable salmon resource in British Columbia. I had the privilege of attending in Vancouver on Saturday the signing ceremony for the IRDA sub-agreement on forestry involving $300 million. There has never been a larger forestry agreement signed in Canada. This means thousands of jobs in B.C. in the immediate future. This agreement is six times larger than any previous federal forestry agreement with British Columbia.

In this debate on Monday, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) stood up and said we had done absolutely nothing for forestry. I suggest that shows she and her Party are completely out of touch with what is going on in B.C. The right hon. gentleman who spoke ahead of me, representing the Liberal Party, said we were doing nothing for forestry. This agreement was signed in a city in a riding which he purports to represent. I suggest he does not know what is going on in B.C. either.

The rest of the IRDA agreement involving joint expenditures of an additional $275 million to be devoted to tourism, research and development, agriculture, and the economic development funds provided for in this Budget are all positive steps toward economic renewal and new jobs in British Columbia and in my riding. These are all positive steps, all part of the new and enlightened administration of this country. This Budget is an important milestone in this process of renewal and regeneration.

In summary, my constituents in Esquimalt-Saanich support the initiatives taken in this Budget. They consider it to be fair and even handed. They are fully aware that our financial affairs will not be put straight overnight. They expect us to develop a lean, efficient and accountable administration, one that is frugal with their tax dollars, and one that returns control and decision making to the people of this country. They are fully aware that the initiatives in this Budget, although significant and important, are but one milepost in the long and difficult road back to prosperity in our country. My constituents support this Budget, I support this Budget, and I am very pleased to have this opportunity today to say so.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, first let me congratulate the Hon. Member on his maiden speech. He indicated that people like this Budget. I would like to raise some concerns expressed by an important group of people who do not like the Budget; that is, members of the Canadian Armed Forces who are penalized by the Budget and the Conservative Government.

New provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act have placed retiring members of the Armed Forces at a serious disadvantage when they retire. Many former members of the Armed Forces have retired after long years of service to Canada with low pensions because in former times incomes were very low. They have now lost the benefit of full indexation. Servicemen who live in permanent married quarters on Canadian Forces bases, particularly CFB Comox, are facing dramatic increases in rent, some in the order of $100 to $150 a month. I would like to point out to the Conservative Government and the Hon. Member who just spoke that this Budget is unfair and unacceptable to members of the Canadian Armed Forces. It imposes harsh treatment on them, and I think these matters should be raised and responded to by the Government.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the observations of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). I am not entirely sure exactly which members of the Armed Forces he is speaking about because the ones I have spoken to support this Budget. There is indeed a problem with housing for servicemen living on base. The Hon. Member might not know it, but this is one of the questions I raised just recently in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. I did so because clearly action is required in this regard.

As to the matter of de-indexation, I think it best to repeat the comments made by the Minister of Finance earlier today. Finances which are out of control, rising costs, interest rates and inflation, affect all Canadians. Any thinking Canadian will appreciate that any government which does not take action to get our finances under control does a gross disservice to the people of this country. That is precisely what we are attempting to do, to get our finances under control, and that is what we were elected to do.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, there is of course another group of people who live in the Hon. Member's riding who are concerned about this Budget. If you include the cuts announced in the November Economic Statement along with those announced in this Budget from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, that Department is not going to be able to enforce habitat protection and fisheries management. They are not going to be able to provide a $200 million salmon enhancement program or the $100 million buy-back program. Many people are dissatisfied with this Budget, and I think it would pay the Hon. Member to take a very close look at people in his riding who are not satisfied.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

● (1710)

And being returned:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bill:

Bill C-52, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971—Chapter No. 18.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 5043).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Caldwell).

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House we are unable to ask any questions of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). Since they both come from the same province, I will ask my question of the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Crofton). The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition indicated that he did not see any area in the Budget where a minimum tax was mentioned. Can the Hon. Member tell us whether he saw mention of a minimum tax in the Budget and whether he read the same Budget as did the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his question. The Budget presented by the Minister of Finance which I read did indeed make reference to a minimum tax. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said all sorts of things in his presentation that were, as far as I could determine, a combination of flights of fancy, misrepresentation, and a whole flock of other things. He drew attention to forestry and tourism. As I endeavoured to point out in my presentation, the Budget happens to be one of a series of documents. Unless one is going to have a budget speech that goes on for two days, it is impossible to touch on everything.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) on debate.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the one thing that we can say with some confidence about this Budget is that it is clearly unfair to ordinary Canadians. It is a kick in the teeth of the ordinary taxpayers. The real question that must be asked about the Budget is who pays the bill that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presented with his Budget in the House. It is obviously the ordinary taxpayer of the country who will pay. Every ordinary family across the country will be paying an increase in taxes of approximately $500 a year. That is one heck of a wallop in terms of increased taxes. That increase in taxes comes on top of the $500 increase in taxes of ordinary Canadians by the Minister of Finance last November 8. That is unfair, Mr. Speaker, because at the same time as he is asking ordinary Canadians to pay increased taxes, he is telling other Canadians that they can rest in the sunshine of paying no taxes.

• (1720)

As a result of the Budget, the Government will have collected $4.1 billion in personal income taxes by 1990-91. As a result of the Budget, the Government will be collecting $2.6 billion more in sales tax by the year 1990. At the same time, corporate taxes are going down and by 1990-91, they will be $2.2 billion less. This obviously makes the Budget very unfair and unbalanced. Ordinary families will pay $500 more in taxes while corporations will benefit next year by some $540 million less taxes. They will pay even less in corporate taxes as years progress.

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) announced the Western Accord in the House, she was very proud to say that consumers would not have to carry the burden as a result of that energy accord. Of course, the day she announced that accord there was no mention of a tax for consumers, only the fact that the oil companies were getting a $2 billion tax holiday.

We waited some time for the other shoe to drop. When the Minister of Finance delivered his Budget, we discovered that the gift to the oil companies as a result of the Western Accord will come out of the pockets of consumers. The Minister of Finance raised the excise tax on gasoline by two cents a litre.

From a political perspective, the Budget was well crafted because the impact of tax increases on individuals are delayed and spread out among several groups. For instance, the gasoline tax increase will not take effect for a few months so that consumers will not feel its immediate impact. However, the truth remains that the Government has raised taxes on gasoline in order to pay for that tax holiday to the oil companies.

The measure which received the greatest applause from the Conservative caucus during the Budget presentation was the capital gains tax exemption of $500,000 over a lifetime. While I support a capital gains tax exemption for such things as the sale of family farms and individual homes, allowing $500,000 in capital gains tax exemption while increasing the taxes for ordinary Canadians is completely unacceptable. At a time when the Government is preaching restraint, it is unfair to allow capital gains tax exemptions to a select few. The Government is raising sales taxes and limiting indexation on personal income tax while allowing a capital gains tax exemption to those who have money. The most outstanding feature of the Budget is its unfairness. It favours corporations and the rich.

[Translation]

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this Budget is unfair, for it has raised taxes paid by ordinary people while at the same time reducing those paid by rich people and large corporations.

[English]

I hear comments about the coalition. I presume it is envy that this Party has been able to bring progress and a breath of fresh air to politics in Ontario.

Let me comment on the capital gains tax from the perspective of its use as an economic instrument. It perhaps would be possible to understand the Government's decision to tax middle income earners while favouring the rich if the capital gains exemption were to achieve a worth-while public purpose.

In the opinion of the Minister of Finance, the capital gains tax exemption would create employment and result in economic growth. I suggest that opinion deserves further study. First, the Minister has set no conditions for the capital gains tax exemption. For instance, he did not make this exemption conditional on creating employment in our country where there are 1.5 million people unemployed. He did not say that if you invest in Canada you can have this exemption on capital gains, which would be a worth-while public purpose. He just said, "You can have a tax holiday on capital gains whatever you do."

● (1730)

It is important for us to take note that even before this Budget, capital gains was treated much more favourably than ordinary income. Up until the Budget, half of one's capital gains would be tax free anyway. What the Minister has done is sweeten the pot, and the pot was already pretty sweet as it was.

What was the result of the previous easy treatment of capital gains by the tax system? Did it result in a great deal of new employment? Had the Minister examined the results of those capital gains, studied them and come up with documentation to demonstrate to us that this kind of use of the taxation system resulted in x number of jobs or that it directed employment into regionally underdeveloped areas? No, Mr. Speaker. The Government simply moved on the basis of blind faith, on the basis of philosophy and its ideological commitment to laissez-faire, to hands off, when it comes to the private sector.

Let us consider some other possibilities that capital gains might be used for. If you had a summer cottage and it was worth a tidy bit, you might want to sell it and realize a capital gain and a tax benefit therefrom. Would that create employment? Not necessarily. If you owned a duplex or a triplex, a building in which you did not live yourself, and you wanted to realize an exemption under capital gains so you sold the dwelling, would that result in more employment? No, not that I can see, Mr. Speaker. If you invested outside of the country, even if it created employment wherever you invested, would that make jobs for Canadians? It is pretty hard for me to see that it would. It is possible for somebody to sell a condo in Florida and realize a capital gain that will not be taxed, to get a gift from the Government, but it would not create any employment in Canada.

Another way capital gains will have an impact is that they are treated better under the taxation system than dividends or interest. It will favour trading in shares. Does that necessarily result in employment? Not necessarily, Mr. Speaker. What proportion of the economic activity that will take place under this exemption of capital gains will favour employment? I do not know. I am sure the Government does not know either. It did not provide us with any figures. If the Government did know, it would have provided us with solid figures to say that this tax holiday will provide 1,000 or 10,000 new jobs. The Government provided no figures because the Government does not know how many jobs will be created as a result. The Government does not know how much of this money from the Government going to those who have large capital holdings will be a waste because there will be no employment creation whatsoever.

When we are looking at this capital gains tax holiday, we are talking about a fair amount of money. It is not a minor item. This year we are talking about some $550 million. That is a lot of money which the Government is giving up, particularly at a time when it says that it is concerned about balancing the books and reducing the deficit.

Next year we will lose from public revenues some $700 million. In five years, when this capital gains exemption reaches its full proportions, you will be looking at billions of dollars, Mr. Speaker. It is a serious question. You have to ask yourself, why did the Government introduce this capital gains holiday? It could not have been because the Government was concerned about reducing the deficit. If the Government were, it would have sought to collect this revenue and to use it to bring down the deficit.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have another comment to make on the question of capital gains. It is important to me that the public be the real winner every time tax exemptions are granted, and the first and foremost consideration today is unemployment and jobs. Does the Government know how many new jobs will flow from this measure? I would suggest that no one not even the Government, can come up with exact figures.

Mr. Speaker, I want to know why they gave that tax exemption to rich people without any guarantee that it will create jobs in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: Thank you, I just keep trying.

[English]

I see, Sir, that I have only two minutes remaining. I want to be sure to mention one other item from the Budget because it is crucial. The most shocking element of this Budget is the meat axe which the Government took to the pension system. It decided to limit indexation of the old age pension. The Government is taking away from the people who built this country their sense of security. The Government has decided that the first 3 per cent of inflation will not be covered in pensions. This year I think pensioners will lose $100, and next year the amount will be more. The social policy reform group has estimated the cumulative loss to a single pensioner by the year 1987, two years from now, will be $1,577.

This Government has decided to pick the pockets of pensioners in order to give money to its friends in business to whom the Government is giving a tax holiday. That is the most cruel, insensitive aspect of this Budget. The Government has broken promises. It said universality was a sacred trust and that it would govern with compassion. Who did the government hit over the head?

Mr. Gauthier: The elderly.

Mr. Keeper: Yes, the elderly. The Government is taking money out of the pockets of elderly Canadians to give a capital gains holiday to its friends, a move which is of questionable benefit in terms of employment or of any economic impact.

It is shocking that the Government would tamper with the pensions of people who have built this country when the Government promised during the election that universality and pensions were sacred.

• (1740)

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute a new day for Canada. My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), has shown us the way to economic renewal. He has opened the door of success to Canadians. He has given us the chance to rebuild Canada. The future is ours.

For over a decade the door to success was kept closed, barred by a massive debt and the economic policies of the previous administration, policies which never recognized the great potential within every individual Canadian. Instead, we saw policies which shattered the morale of Canadians, that lead to stagnation in the economy and destroyed the dreams of millions of Canadians. A shattered dream is hard to repair; a shattered notion, even harder.

We have begun the process of repair and renewal, a process which will give new hopes to Canadians, a process which offers all Canadians a chance to grow, a chance to succeed. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), when he was Minister of Finance, showed us the way to go into debt. Canadians accepted it then; after all, it was not that much and they were told that it was necessary and unavoidable. However, it set a dangerous trend, a trend of always taking the easy way out, a trend which led to more and more debt, and a trend which has led to a deficit of some $35 billion this year alone.

Tough measures were needed a long time ago, but the previous administration was afraid to act. In 1975, one in eight tax dollars was used to pay the interest on our debt. The previous administration had set sail on a course which lead the country further and further into debt, with more and more misery for thousands of Canadians. It lead us to a point where 30 per cent of our tax dollars go to pay only the interest on the debt. When Members of the previous administration spoke to Canadians, they never told them that 80 per cent of the income tax they paid would one day go to paying the interest on the debt.

We have taken tough measures. They are fair and they are progressive. They are positive steps toward a new future for Canadians. I can understand the Opposition's mock rage, its posturing in the House, because the Budget shows Canadians that we are willing and able to make changes, fair changes which will provide more jobs and offer them new hope, something the previous administration was unable to do. Instead, it took us into debt and shattered our dreams. On September 4, Canadians voted for a change. They voted for a chance at a new beginning.

This Government has chosen a path which brings about positive, fair change. The Minister of Finance has adopted a fair approach which will solve the problem over time without threatening our economic recovery. This is not an easy task. We cannot ask Canadians to do it by themselves. Government must be a leader in cutting costs and eliminating waste. Eighty per cent of our actions to reduce the deficit will result from our efforts to cut government expenditures.

[Translation]

Very important though they were, these measures would not have been enough and some taxes had to be increased. As a whole, however, these increases will amount to only $250 million in 1985-86 and $1.7 billion in 1986-87. In other words, close to 80 per cent of the deficit reduction stems from lower expenditures. It is a fair and realistic strategy under the present circumstances with the result that, within a relatively short time, the Government will have more leeway to take yet more encouraging measures for Canadians.

Our goal is growth and new jobs. During the election we spoke of jobs, jobs, jobs. That is still our goal. Unlike the opposition Parties that are still wandering around in the dark, the Minister of Finance has lit a beacon of hope, a beacon which will guide Canada through the shoals of Liberal mismanagement to a new economic future.

This Budget will generate new economic activity and with that activity will come new jobs. The small business sector has long been proven to be the major source of new jobs in this country. In my own riding of Dollard, small business was stagnating, its spirit crushed by the ineptitude of the previous administration. It has been awaiting some sign that the Government cares, that the Government recognizes its ability to create jobs, permanent jobs. I was a small-businessman, and I beleive that small business is the single most dynamic force in the Canadian economy. More jobs, permanent jobs, have been created by this sector than by any other. The last Liberal Government with its spending on mammoth projects, work schemes, et cetera, which quickly became modern day dinosaurs, was not the answer. Past policies made it easier to keep wealth than to create it. These savings vehicles did not create jobs, they left investment decisions in the hands of bankers and their best customer has been the Canadian Government. I hope I need not remind too many people of issues like Dome and Maislin. I am not an economist, but I know that what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance and we in the Government have done in the Budget has broken with the past and has taken a gamble, a gamble on the Canadian people. A number of elements in the Budget will make it easier for the average Canadian on the street to say: "I would be better off investiong in a small business than just putting my money to sleep in a savings account."

In my riding, 61 per cent of Challenge '85 applications came from small-businessmen whose morale was on the way up, who say this Government take the first progressive steps in November and who wanted to show Canadians that our faith in them as the vehicle of economic renewal was not unfounded. We want to encourage Canadians to invest in Canada's growth. By giving Canadians a lifetime capital gains exemption of $500,000, the Government is giving individual Canadians a chance to invest in Canada's future. Unlike the NDP, we know that most investors are ordinary Canadians, not multi-millionaires.

We are rewarding success and challenging Canadians to invest in Canadian enterprise. We believe they will accept the challenge.

We have also for the first time changed the regulations governing RRSP and pension fund investment. RRSP funds can be used for investment in smaller Canadian businesses. Does the Opposition actually think this opportunity will be ignored? No, it will not. There will be a new influx of badly needed capital for business. This is but one important step which will create jobs. We have made other changes to pensions that will benefit all Canadians. Portability of pensions is now a reality. No longer will it be necessary for a Canadian to turn down a job offer or refuse a new opportunity because his pension is frozen.

Men and women are equal. They deserve equal pay for equal work, and they deserve equal pensions. The Government has recognized that equality and has acted.

As I mentioned before, we must be fair. The Budget recognized the fact that our social programs must help those in need. That is where the money must be channelled. We have kept universality but for the first time the Government is insisting that the moneys go to those who need it. We have increased the child tax credit, a credit delivered to low income families, to a level of $584 per child by 1989, an increase of $140. At the same time we have guaranteed that Old Age Security payments or family allowances will not be reduced as a result of the modification to indexation. They will be fully compensated whenever inflation goes over 3 per cent. The Guaranteed Income Supplement, as well as benefits paid to veterans, will continue to be fully indexed.

When one considers fairness, we cannot forget taxing the rich. All Canadians should be making a reasonable contribution to the tax revenues required to finance public sector operations which benefit all. This Budget recognizes that principle. Beginning in 1986 there will be a minimum tax. High income Canadians will pay their share. Unlike the infamous MacEachen Budget, which introduced 35 retroactive taxes, we believe in being fair and honest with the Canadian people. We have no retroactive taxes, and we are giving advance notice of when we intend to make changes. That is the fair way, the progressive way.

We recognize the role labour has to play in creating jobs. We have seen in Quebec the successful application of labour-sponsored venture capital funds. With the progressive use of tax credits to individuals investing in these funds, we will increase investment in small and medium sized businesses. This will create jobs.

Research and development in Canada has long been ignored. We recognize the vital contribution it can make to Canada's economic growth. We have made changes that will help these smaller companies, especially start-up firms. This Government will make 100 per cent of the tax credit they now earn for R and D refundable to them. This is a major, significant improvement over the 40 per cent of the credit that was previously refundable.

This sector was ignored by the previous administration. Its full job creating potential was never recognized, and its need for capital never realized. The Government has recognized the potential this sector holds for Canada. We have recognized its needs. If Canadian industry is to be successful in the 21st century, it must rely on research and development today. We recognize that and we have acted. Not only will we create jobs today, we have guaranteed them in the years ahead. We face a great challenge. Our challenge is to recreate a dynamic Canada, one of growth and prosperity.

Last Friday, in Paris, Yves Duhaime, Quebec's new finance minister, was asked what he thought of the P.C. Budget. Does anyone remember what he said? He stood up and declared loud and clear that it is about time somebody in Ottawa took a stand and said, "Enough is enough." What he meant, and what we mean, is that the federal Government cannot continue to support the country as if it were receiving welfare. It is about time the people of Canada did this for themselves. That is what my Party believes in. This is what the Minister of Finance's Budget is designed to achieve. It is intended to arouse the people of Canada so that they can improve the deplorable economic situation in this country through hard work, investment in Canadian business and intelligent risk taking. No Government in the world can tolerate an annual deficit as large as ours in relation to our country's size. The Liberals tried it and look where they are now. They deserve it.

When the Liberals came to power—there was no deficit. There was a surplus. Through their financial incompetence, the term "deficit" has become, unfortunately, a household word in Canada.

[Translation]

In 1974-75 the federal Government's net debt was 16.6 per cent of the Gross National Product. In 1984-85 it has reached 45.2 per cent—a totally unacceptable level.

The measures proposed in this Budget will directly reduce the deficit. That is precisely what Canadians expected us to do, and we will manage to reduce our deficit so that our children may look to the future with confidence.

[English]

During the election campaign we promised to act responsibly. Our Budget is the first step in that direction. I will tell Hon. Members something—it is about time! Through our Budget, every small and medium sized businessman in Canada is being invited and encouraged to invest with confidence in the economic future of Canada. This is what will provide jobs for Canadians. We have provided a way for the Canadian people to help themselves.

[Translation]

The budgetary proposals manage to reduce the deficit while introducing measures to help create durable jobs. To create those jobs, Canada needs a private sector that is dynamic and vigorous, flexible and innovative. Small- and medium-sized businesses in particular are the engine of our economy. By encouraging the private initiative of Canadians with measures such as the lifetime capital gains exemption of half a million dollars and allowing pension funds and registered retirement savings plans to invest in small businesses, we will create employment and provide for sustained economic growth.

Many jobs will also be created as a result of measures to promote investment in research and development.

[English]

Before our sweep of September 4, media commentators and other political observers were deploring the fact that there was little difference between the Liberal and Conservative platforms. The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) compared the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leader of the Opposition to Visa and Mastercard respectively. He implied the voters had no choice. However, the massive shift of allegiance has shown that the voters themselves saw the significant differences between our two Parties.

Our gains were most spectacular in Quebec. However, right across the country, French-speaking people and members of many ethnic communities joined their English-speaking brethren in deserting the Liberal Party. They rejected bureaucracy. They rejected federal paternalism and the period of confrontation. We must eliminate waste and inefficiency in Government. We want a Government which is efficient, effective and economical. Stop betting on the Government, and bet on the little guy.

Where was the Government in February of 1984 when the petrochemical industry of Montreal called? At that time, there was no response. What did the Government do with respect to the losses in Montreal's pharmaceutical industry? We waited some 15 years for a review of a patent law which was totally unfair. It was a law which cost us jobs and proved disastrous to the development of products.

This Budget is a call to arms to our constituency—the small businessman, the professionals and the farmers—all 700,000 of us. We form a veritable army in the war on unemployment. It is this army which will create jobs. This Budget is a break from the past. We want to use the creative energy of Canadians to build a better future for themselves.

What did September 4 signify? It signified a change of Government, yes. However, it also signified the beginning of a new political area. In November, we promised to put our House in order. This means a leaner Government, one which is more efficient—one which will create a healthier investment climate. We have said that Canada is open for business.

The Budget embodies three main principles of the P.C. Government: the encouragement of private initiative and job creation; the improvement of the management and effectiveness of government; and concrete action to control the debts.

Measures to encourage private initiative represent a break with the past. Personal capital gains exemptions are designed to let the people of Canada—not politicians and bureaucrats—choose where to invest and how to create jobs. What the Budget says to individuals and communities is, "For too long Government has made your decisions for you." Now is the time to translate ideas and energies into the type of Canada we want for ourselves and our children.

Canadians are not quitters, Mr. Speaker. We are tough and resilient. Together, we can work toward a greater future—a future with a job, success and where the security of one's family is guaranteed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part in the debate. I would also like to call it six o'clock at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are still a few minutes left which could be used for questions and comments.

Mr. Rompkey: I would very much like to take part in the debate, Mr. Speaker, if that is possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In light of there being a minute or so for questions and comments, perhaps we could have one question from the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to make.

This Budget is not a beacon of light, as outlined by the previous speaker. It is a revisiting of the Dark Ages. The Conservative philosophy is nothing more than economic Neanderthalism, which is no more apparent than in this Budget.

For one group in the economy, that is, people in communities dependent upon the fishing industry, the Budget is a complete disaster. For this group, the Conservative Party has broken all its promises. Instead of assisting these people with measures such as salmon enhancement programs, fishing vessel buy-back programs, more work on habitat protection, and the development of an effective fishing industry plan, the Conservative Government has cut the Department of Fisheries and Oceans' Budget by $65 million. It has increased user fees. It has increased mortgage rates and cut services to the industry. This Budget is not fair. It is not effective for the fishing industry and in fact it is irrational.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A short answer from the Hon. Member for Dollar (Mr. Weiner).

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comment. Of course he comes to it with a totally different perspective, and one that I cannot understand. We have apparently read two different documents. From my study of it, my impression is that what our Party is attempting to do is fair and honourable. I have been consulting in my community constantly and I have had overwhelmingly good—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On that basis, I must interrupt. I am afraid that I cannot recognize the Hon. Member.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 5043).

Mr. Speaker: There were nine minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech yesterday of the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner). Are there any further questions or comments with regard to the speech of the Hon. Member for Dollard? There being no further questions or comments, we shall resume debate.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to give my version of the events which have occurred since that so-called fair but tough Budget which was delivered in this House a week ago. I would like to comment on several areas of the Budget, but I will comment primarily on the areas for which I am the critic, that is, the treatment of our elderly and the families of our society. I will give a general overview of what I see as some great weaknesses in this Budget which was presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) several days ago.

I question very much, Mr. Speaker, the fairness of a Budget of which the Minister of Finance is so embarrassed that he has to use the word "fairness" some 26 times in his speech. It seems to me that if one has to resort to using the word "fair" so often, there must be some doubt about the fairness and equity of some of the measures which were put into that budget. I would like to speak about the fairness as it relates to the elderly in our society. I am going to quote from a program called CTV Question Period in which the Minister of Finance was asked about the shift in dollars which will occur within the package of spending for the Old Age Security. The Minister at that time said, and I quote:

> Yes, as a result of this Budget, there will be some shifting so that those who are in the lower-income brackets for the child tax credit or the Guaranteed Income Supplement will get more, but that is consistent with the principle that we did establish that the balance in the social programs should be weighted more towards those who need it the most.

I feel that this is an absolutely misleading statement with respect to what measures were put into the Budget by the Minister of Finance in both those particular areas. I noticed with care, Mr. Speaker, that this Government chose to put forward only the Estimates and the impact of the Budget in relation to the years 1986-1987. It took several days before we had a leaked document from the Department of Finance which indicated the full impact of those measures until the year 1990-91. When we see the actual impact which these measures are going to have, not only on personal incomes but on the incomes of the elderly and on those families with young children, we don't have to wonder why the Minister of Finance put forward only the years 1986-1987. In those two years, the full impact of the measures announced a week ago would hardly have impacted. It is only when we see what happens in the year 1990-91 that we get the true thrust of what this Budget is all about.

I would like to speak now about the commitment toward the people in the lower-income brackets of which the Minister has made so much. I find it rather mind boggling, to say the least, Mr. Speaker, to actually believe that the Minister thinks that people who live below the poverty line should be expected to share any of the burden of the deficit reduction. I am talking in particular about the 1.3 million Canadians who rely on the Guaranteed Income Supplement in order to make ends meet. Those are the 1.3 million Canadians who are over the age of 65 years and who no longer can avail themselves of jobs to protect them against the ravages of inflation. Their only relief is going to come from government cheques and from a Government which believes that in order to protect the dignity of an individual, they should have sufficient income to at least match Statistics Canada's definition of poverty.

Here we have a Government which, over the next five years, is going to take from the hands of those who qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement some 19 per cent of their purchasing power. All of us in this House recognize that anyone who is on the GIS today lives below the poverty line. That is a fact. However, this Government is going to take away a further 19 per cent of the purchasing power of people already below the poverty line, and calls that fair. I would like to read the words of some Members in opposition when we were in Government and brought in the six and five program. When he was in opposition the Minister of Finance said that "the Liberals are putting the boots to those who are hardest hit in the economy today; the low income people and the pensioners." His colleague, now the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), said that the caps on indexation were "the meanest move" that she has ever seen in a Budget.

Ms. Mitchell: And so it was.

Mr. Frith: That is what those key Ministers had to say. I want to remind my friend from the NDP who just said "so it was" just exactly what the Liberal Government did—

Mr. Gauthier: Ignore her.

Mr. Frith: —when we brought in six and five. We made sure that those people in our society who need help the most, those who qualify for the GIS, were going to be double indexed. That is a pretty complicated term, but it meant that in addition to fully indexing to inflation the GIS portion of the OAS cheque, we fully indexed the OAS portion to make sure that the poor in this country would not lose one cent of purchasing power because of the need for sacrifice to bring inflation down to a reasonable and acceptable level. That was the Liberal way. We asked the people of this country to share the burden of reducing inflation but not on the backs of the poor. Do we see that from this Government? Not at all. The Minister says one thing and does the opposite.

The Minister of Finance indicated as well that those in the lower income bracket would get more dollars from the child tax credit. Yet if one looks at the direct impact of his Budget measures on the national accounts component, by the year 1991 there will be a reduction of $80 million in that total package. People can be fooled by numbers, but the facts are that in 1985 dollars every family earning $12,000 a year or more is going to receive less from the child benefit package by the year 1991 than they do today. I question whether that can be termed a fair measure in the Budget.

I find it incredible that the Minister did not accept the advice of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs concerning the child tax exemption and tax credit, particularly when the majority of Members on that committee are Conservatives. Here is a Minister who, in the interests of fairness, introduces a tax measure which will reduce the cut-off point for the child tax credit from $26,000 a year of family income to $23,000 a year. I find it incredible that a Conservative Government—I should not say that; I should not find it incredible because, frankly, after September 4, I fully expected this would be a Tory Budget. However, I thought they would at least have the courage to say it was a Tory Budget. Do not try and fool the Canadian public by saying it is a fair measure to decrease the benefits for every family who earns $12,000 a year or more in 1985. At least be straightforward with the Canadian public.

Yesterday, in his speech to the House of Commons, my leader indicated that part of the problem with this Budget is that it is a sneaky Budget. It is sneaky in the sense that they thought they could fool the Canadian public by only showing the impact of these budgetary measures during the first two years. They were trying to hide the impact that this would have on the elderly and the young families in our society. I find it incredible that at the same time as the Government is giving $500,000 in capital gains exemption, it has chosen to hit the poor families in our society and expects Canadians to believe that this is a fair but a tough Budget.

I want to talk about the growth factors in the Budget. The Government, which has been in office since last September 4, was handed an economy which was growing at the rate of 4.1 per cent. That was the over-all growth in the country in 1984. In his own Budget documents, the Minister of Finance indicates that growth in our society in 1985 can be expected to drop to approximately 3.1 per cent. Although he is convinced that the measures in this Budget will lead to an economic renewal in the private sector creating thousands upon thousands of jobs, his own figures indicate that growth will be cut in half again in 1985 to the rate of 2.4 per cent. One must have an awful lot of faith in the engine of growth in our society to believe that a growth rate of 2.4 per cent in the economy will lead to the creation of thousands upon thousands of jobs.

Conservatives talk about the economic miracle that has occurred in the United States since the implementation of many of the fiscal policies of President Reagan. They point to the miracle that has occurred in terms of the freeing of free enterprise in the United States. I remind those Conservatives that free enterprise has been freed by putting tax dollars into the hands of consumers. Despite his talk of fiscal restraint, President Reagan has created a deficit in the United States which will approach $200 billion in 1985.

Despite all his rhetoric, President Reagan at least understood that if the fiscal tools of the Government are properly used and directed, they can do a great deal to speed up economic recovery. Do not assume, however, Mr. Speaker, that the direction of $200 billion toward the defence industry is my idea of creative, productive, and socially valuable fiscal spending. I am suggesting that, if properly directed, a deficit can do a great deal to speed up economic recovery. We have seen an example of that in the United States. In addition to increasing the size of the deficit, President Reagan cut taxes of middle income Americans so that they would go on a spending spree, and spend they did. As a result, there has been a decrease in the unemployment rate in the United States, and their growth rate has been higher than that experienced in Canada.

If the Minister of Finance were true to his Conservative beliefs, I would have expected him to have taken the examples of the United States and implemented some of those over-all general directions in Canada. He did not do that, Mr. Speaker. Instead, he chose the Margaret Thatcher way. He chose to increase taxes on middle income Canadians so that they will have less to spend on consumer goods. That will impede growth in our economy next year, as he has admitted. To suggest that he has had such a tough job in cutting the size of the federal deficit leaves little to be imagined.

Eight months ago, the Minister of Finance was handed a $30 billion deficit. By his gift to the multinationals of $2.6 billion and his increase in the size of federal transfers under Established Programs Financing, the Minister of Finance has increased the federal deficit from $30 billion to $38 billion. He then says that he has done such a good job in paring the deficit down to $34 billion that all Canadians should applaud. What hypocrisy and sham. The Minister of Finance cannot learn the lessons of the British economic experience in the last four or five years. Rather than President Reagan's policy direction, he chooses that of Margaret Thatcher. I hope some member of the Government will talk about the pros of Margaret Thatcher's direction.

• (1120)

There have not been many positive improvements to the British economy. Since Margaret Thatcher took office, the unemployment levels have not dropped. There is a lost generation of youth in the U.K. Unemployment for youth between the ages of 18 and 24 in the United Kingdom is approaching 26 per cent. That is a direct result of the economic stupidity on the part of a Government that focuses itself so narrowly on fiscal measures to reduce the size of the federal deficit. It believes so strongly in the private sector for recovery that it has led to an exact opposite result to its original goal..

The Minister of Finance admits that he is anticipating growth of 2.4 per cent in 1985-86. How does he expect there to be a cut in unemployment if the growth rate will be smaller than it was this year?

Let us talk about the Minister's concept of fairness. On Budget night, the Minister of Finance did not indicate to the Canadian public that he plans $2 billion of cuts in transfers to the provinces over the next five years. I assume he does not want that impact to be seen until the year 1989-90, after the next election. He is attempting to fool the Canadian public with this Budget. The impact of each of these budgetary measures will fully impact on the Canadian economy long after the next election. Canadians should be aware of the hidden agenda of this sneaky Budget.

What effect will a cut of 42 billion to Established Programs Financing have on the average Canadian? It involves a transfer of funds for money spent under the Canada Assistance Plan in transition homes and for people who are on welfare lists at every municipal level in this country. Cuts in Established Programs Financing and other such programs will impact on the dollars spent on medicare by the provinces and in post secondary education.

Do you really believe that if the federal Government cuts the transfer to its provincial counterparts by $2 billion that nothing will occur? Surely the provinces will be faced with either cut-backs in those areas or they will have to raise taxes to make up the difference in the transfer of payments from the federal Government to the provinces. That is not my concept of a fair budget. A review of the figures in the Budget documents as they relate to unemployment shows that the Government apparently accepts that unemployment will hover at the 11 per cent mark for most of this decade. Does the Government believe it is fair to expect 1.5 million unemployed to wait five more years for the economic recovery in order to get a piece of the pie, while it hands out millions of dollars of tax breaks to the rich in our society? Is that the Conservative's idea of fairness? It is certainly not the Liberal concept of fairness.

I have seen the attack on the regions of our country. I represent an area of this country that has been badly hit by unemployment in the nickel mining industry. I know what it is like to have an unemployment rate above the national average because we have lived with it for the last six or seven years. My riding had the highest unemployment rate in the mid 1980s. Our unemployment rate of 35 per cent was the highest in North America. When Conservatives tell me that make-work programs are not worth anything, they might want to visit communities in our country where it is the only means of job prospects. Without that, people in those areas face only one option, which is to go on the welfare rolls of the municipalities.

There are Members in the Conservative caucus who represent regions in this country that have similar problems to those experienced in Sudbury. I have not heard one Conservative backbencher attack this Budget. They know it will hurt the people whom they represent. This Budget will adversely impact on Atlantic Canada, on northern Ontario and northern Quebec, which are areas of this country that have traditionally relied on government programs. They have relied on the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion to fuel the growth so that while the unemployment rates are still unacceptable, at least they are lower than they would be without those programs.

The Conservatives used to complain about us, but we pale by comparison with the dollars the Government and its 40 Cabinet Ministers have spent jetting around the world. Now they tell us that they no longer have the money to pay for the programs that will protect the poor in our society who live below the poverty line.

This is sheer hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker. I think the people of Canada will be asking their back-bench Members of Parliament who represent the Conservative Party where they were in the debate of 1985 when the Budget came down. Were they defending the interests of constituents when everyone elected under the Conservative banner in Atlantic Canada knows that this Budget is no damn good for Atlantic Canada? This Budget will severely impact on the day to day lives of constituents, and Conservative Members are not saying a word to the Minister of Finance or to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

I must admit one did have the courage. The Member of Parliament who represents Cape Breton finally said that the measures in the Budget were not acceptable to the people of Cape Breton. No wonder, Mr. Speaker, because if he has any hope of being re-elected, he had better be seen to be voicing the concerns of his own constituents. It will be a mark of dishonour on Conservative backbench Members who have not taken advantage of this Budget debate and stood up to defend the interests of their own people.

If this Finance Minister is so convinced that the elderly in our society, those who live below the poverty line should share in the burden of the deficit reduction, then I ask the Minister to appoint a committee this month to travel from Vancouver to Halifax to all of the small centres and to listen to senior citizen organizations and organizations who represent the poor. Let the people voice their concerns about a Government that will take from them 19 per cent in purchasing power over the next five years. Can he tell them that is fair? I am convinced that if he has the courage of his convictions, he should have the courage to establish that committee.

I have already indicated today that I have talked to Patrick Johnston, the Executive Director of the National Association of Poverty Organizations. He is willing to set up part of that travel show. If we can do that and we report back to Parliament, the Government will see its folly and reverse itself in the Budget.

Ms. Mitchell: I have a question for the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). He shared experiences on the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs when we were reviewing child benefits. We put a lot of work into the report with some guidelines for child benefits. Does he think that this Government really paid any attention to that report and to some of the principles we felt were very important? The Government has reduced indexing on family allowance, which in my view really erodes the whole principle of universality as well as giving less money to families. Is that his view?

There is a very small increase in the child tax credit, $70 now and $70 later, which is far below what was considered in the options we looked at in the committee. The Government has removed savings from the child benefit package for governments, but not for families. Does the Hon. Member agree with these principles? What does he think should have been done?

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) for the comments and for her questions. Clearly the Government did not listen to the recommendations of our committee. If the Hon. Member remembers correctly, even the backbench Tory Members indicated that the cross-over point for the child tax credit should be significantly higher than what was presented in their own child benefits paper. Not only did the Finance Minister ignore the recommendations of his own Tory backbenchers, he took another Draconian step by reducing the changeover to $23,000 a year.

I find it absolutely incredible, naive and mean to suggest that a family whose total income is $23,000 a year should expect to have a decrease in the child benefits portions that governments gives.

Frankly, the over-all thrust of the Budget, in addition to being anti-old age, is also anti-family and anti-youth. In terms of 1985 dollars, if one takes a look at the national accounts component which I talked about earlier, it indicates that in real 1985 purchasing dollars, every family which earns $12,000 a year or more today will suffer a reduction of dollars to spend. The Government is going to hand out to the rich in our society $350 million next year in tax free capital gains, which amount will go up to the tune of $700 million by 1990-91. That is what they are doing on the one hand. They can actually hit low income Canadians in this manner.

• (1130)

I just want to point out that 67 per cent of the capital gains benefit will go to 4 per cent of the population. That kind of thrust in the Budget does not surprise me, as it is a Tory thrust, but I hope the people of Canada will remember it when they go to the polls the next time.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I have a quick question for the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). How did he know that there could be a stabilization of the transfer payments to provinces and that there might be an increase in the collection of revenues for the Government of Canada in future years?

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) look at the national accounts. I know they have now been released in the newspapers. Of course, these are all projections, but they indicate the full impact of these measures. It is indicated quite clearly that they are expecting a $2 billion saving in transfers to the provinces by the year 1990-91. Also, in those same papers it is indicated that by 1986-87 they do not anticipate any reduction in transfer payments. This is what led me to the belief that the Government will go to the polls between 1987 and 1988, before the full impact of these measures will be felt by Canadians. Government Members know that if they stick around long enough for Canadians to feel the full impact of these budgetary measures, they will not be sitting on that side of the House after the next dissolution.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Hon. Member. The point I want to make is that the Hon. Member for Sudbury deludes himself. He spent the greater part of his speech saying that it was a sneaky Budget. He gave as evidence of that, that certain facts would be coming forward in the future which he somehow claimed to be sneaky, and when I asked him how he knew that, he claimed that he read public documents. Obviously it is not sneaky; it is public.

We have laid out a long-term plan by which the country will create real jobs. The Hon. Member and the people of Canada know that taking tax money from taxpayers to pay for the jobs of other people simply creates ongoing situations wherein the ability of those who have the capacity to produce jobs is diminished to the extent that they cannot produce more jobs. The best Governments can ever expect to do is to redistribute wealth.

The Hon. Member talked about the capital gains tax. Surely he does not believe that Studebaker will buy out General Motors or that the owner of a large corporation who may earn $200,000 per year will be enticed to sell out to get the $500,000 advantage. Surely the Hon. Member knows that the capital gains tax applies to little store owners, clothing store owners, farmers, garage owners and people with service stations. Also he knows that after a lifetime of work, when one has the capacity as a result of a system which a Government has put in place to look after oneself as an individual, one does not need social services handed out by a Government. That is the point, and I know that we are trampling on this unholy marriage between the NDP and the Liberal Party.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I have a quick reply to the Hon. Member's question. I will not suggest that the Hon. Member is naive. I indicated that the budget document was sneaky because it only contained the full impact for the years 1985-86 and 1986-87. They did not have the courage to include the full impact for the year 1990-91 when it will really impact upon the Canadian public.

The only reason I ended up my remarks by referring to this secret document was that it was released by the Department of Finance because it wanted Canadians to see exactly what would be foisted on them. That is what I meant by "sneaky".

I just want the Hon. Member to understand that 67 per cent of the capital gains benefit will go to 4 per cent of the population. I am telling that Tory Member that when the Budget takes away 19 per cent of the purchasing power of the poor in society and hands it over to the multinationals through the oil agreement and to the top 4 per cent of wage earners, it is not my concept of fairness. If they go to the Canadian public, they will be given the same answer.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate to the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) that I just came from a meeting of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works at which officials of Atomic Energy of Canada appeared. They indicated that they recommended two years ago that the heavy water plant should be cut, that they had reached this conclusion only after detailed and intensive investigation, and that a certain Cabinet Minister of his Party decided that it was worth $100 million per year of Canadian taxpayers' money to keep his seat.

The cost per job is $200,000 per year, per employee, and the employee only receives $28,000. We can shut down this whole plant and for the same amount of money, for the same benefit, have 4,100 on the payroll.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that the 10-minute period for questions and comments has expired. I will recognize the Hon. Member on a very short response, like 15 seconds.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, his own Government's measures will create a large national park out of Cape Breton. That is all that will be left for those people once his Government is finished with that measure.

I should like to add one other comment. The people of Cape Breton will remember the gall of this Government to introduce tax measures to attract industry to Cape Breton when it knew dang well that the measures we put in did not attract one industry there.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as former U.S. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt once said in «Combats pour demain», to govern means keeping the scales of justice the same for everyone. In fact, these words could very well have been part of the Budget Speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), because they reflect the underlying philosophy of this Budget.

During the past few days, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the comments of Hon. Members on the Budget brought down a week ago by the Minister of Finance. Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate to point out that this first Budget is a courageous, realistic and above all fair reflection of the broad economic proposals made by the Government last fall, with a view to stimulating the economic renewal asked for by the vast majority of Canadians.

The basic goal of the Budget proposals is to encourage the initiative of Canadian entrepreneurs, to improve Government effectiveness and to put our financial house in order. In making these proposals, the Government has also acknowledged its responsibility for social programs, and it has taken this rigorous approach in order to be in a position to discharge its responsibility to the less advantaged in our society.

Unlike previous governments, we decided last November and in the Budget before the House today, to take immediate steps to control a deficit that we felt had become a veritable threat to the Government's ability to play its true role and that was draining the energy of the private sector of our economy. We have always maintained, and we still do today, that not governments but private enterprise creates that wealth we need to provide for economic growth and create the jobs Canadians need.

A government cannot act effectively if it has to spend $20 billion or more annually to pay the interest on the national debt. More than 20 per cent of the Government's total expenditure will be used to service the national debt during this financial year. Canadian entrepreneurs cannot find the investment money they need if they must constantly compete with the Government on the capital markets.

We have decided to break this vicious circle. In fact, Canadians have congratulated this Government on the courage it has shown in this respect. The constant upward spiralling of the structural deficit could no longer be tolerated. As a percentage of the gross national product, the deficit rose from 16.6 per cent in 1974-75 to 45.2 per cent in 1984-85. The overall impact of our Budget proposals will be to reduce the deficit by $4.4, $8.3 and finally, $20.1 billion, respectively, over the next three financial years.

As a result of the steps taken by the Government last November, we have been able to cut $8.3 billion in Government spending over three financial years. The Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will bring about an additional reduction of $12.1 billion over the same period.

The Government has realized it could not ask Canadian taxpayers to take on the entire burden of reducing the deficit. It had to set an example by controlling its own spending and by making a systematic study of every one of its programs and activities. The expected levelling off of the deficit will be largely the result of the Budget cutbacks we have introduced. We are particularly concerned about the cumulative effect of Budget deficits. Less than 20 years ago, the cumulative deficit or national debt reached $18 billion. Today, it is nearly $200 billion, and this progression could not be allowed to continue.

It will become clear that the Government has not merely paid lip service to the need for reducing this crushing deficit, but has taken steps to deal with it.

We made this decision, Mr. Speaker, because we believe that the vast majority of Canadians wanted us to do so. When they entrusted the Progressive Conservative Party with a mandate for economic renewal, they did so in the knowledge that they were asking for a solution to a serious problem, a solution that could not longer be postponed indefinitely. Since last fall, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance, my colleagues and myself have been conducting consultations with all groups of our society. More than ever, we remain convinced that the vast majority of Canadians not only support our economic proposals but are indeed prepared to shoulder their part of the load in dealing with this country's finances.

Mr. Speaker, we are keenly aware of the fact that this Budget demands sacrifices by all members of our society, and we believe that all Canadians will acknowledge that this effort is necessary. We know that Budget cutbacks will have an impact on certain groups in our population, but our proposals have in no way tampered with the Government's social commitment which it sees as sacred. We have taken this approach precisely to make sure that in the coming years we will be in a position to protect the needy. In my judgment, we would not live up to that commitment if we were to let ever rising expenditures for certain programs grow unchecked. We would then be ignoring a basic fact—the Government's financial resources are not unlimited.

A few speakers in this debate seemed to imply that the Budget measures advocated by the Government would be unduly favourable to certain groups in society at the expense of others. I quite agree with all my colleagues that many of the provisions announced last week will have a very positive impact on entrepreneurs in the Canadian private sector, particularly with respect to small and medium-sized businesses. Far from feeling guilty about this favourable prejudice, Mr. Speaker, we are proud of it.

We believe that our Budget measures will prove to be a historic new trend in the Government's approach to economic recovery and job creation. It reflects the change of attitude we promised Canadians last fall and stems from our vision of society.

The Government does not believe that the fairness of its Budget ought to be assessed only in terms of taxes imposed on a group of taxpayers or benefits given to another group. In our estimation, justice lies in the equitable sharing of responsibilities within the scope of a common objective.

The Budget incentives for Canadian businesses—the once-in-a-lifetime capital gains exemption, new pension plans provisions designed to spur investment in small and medium-sized businesses, and the small and medium-sized businesses exemption from the temporary corporate surtax, to name just a few—attest to the wide-ranging responsibilities given to the private sector. We are quite sure that the private sector will meet our expectations and that all Canadians will benefit from its contribution. In our opinion, Canadian entrepreneurs rather that Governments and public officials must channel most investments. We also believe that because they are prepared to take risks and work to achieve their goal, those entrepreneurs properly deserve to benefit from their own initiatives. It has been years and years since our business community got such a vote of confidence from Government.

In keeping with this vision of society whereby private sector interests have become partners of the State, the Government was prompted—in the Budget strategy under consideration today—to steer a new historic course in a sector which, I suggest, is just as vital to our collective existence as Canadians, namely arts and culture. This Budget marks the beginning of a new artistic and cultural era within Canadian society, not only because it offers lasting support, but rather as a result of its approach and its specific provisions. Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I failed to point out that, for the first time ever, a Government gives priority to this field of activity in an economic strategy document.

We formally acknowledge that arts and culture are not a negligible sector of our society and our economy, and it is that consideration which is the driving force behind all my endeavours as Minister responsible.

While it does not belittle their contribution to the quality of day-to-day life, the Budget and its provisions equate artistic and cultural activities with a genuine industrial sector. In 1980, the economic contribution of the artistic and cultural community amounted to between $14.7 and $16.8 billion and, in 1981, roughly 272,000 Canadians were gainfully employed in such activities. In terms of income, it ranked 11th among industrial sectors.

The formation of a Task Force on the Funding of the Arts is a Budget measure which faithfully reflects this new approach.

I shall soon be able to disclose the names of the members and the terms of reference of this group. It is the first time the Minister of Finances and the Minister of Communications initiate such a joint action. The task force will submit to the Minister of Finance and to me a series of concrete recommendations on the various measures, including tax breaks, proposed to encourage the private sector to contribute more generously to artistic and cultural activities. True enough, we are looking for an increased participation by the corporations, but we must also find ways to convince ordinary Canadians to play a more active part too. Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize that this review and its orientation are in no way an indication of the government's intention to turn over to the private sector the main responsibility for supporting the arts, but rather a desire to increase the financial resources made available to participants within the Canadian artistic communities and cultural institutions.

As a matter of fact, the budget introduces several measures which are of immediate interest to Canadian artists. For instance, it proposes tax relief for visual artists through a change in the method of valuing their supplies, work-in progress and finished works of art. This means that when computing their income, they will no longer have to include the cost of such inventory. This change will simplify the tax affairs of individual artists and allow them to write off the costs involved in a work of art in the year they are incurred, rather than waiting until the work is sold.

We are currently considering other measures with the same outlook. Members of the artistic communities are more than creators, they are driving forces, a fact which our programs and policies should reflect. The Government wants to make sure that the financial resources whether they are provided by the public or by the private sector actually end up in the hands of Canadian men and women who can use them productively. This global approach to artistic and cultural financing is necessary in this period of budget restraint, for it will associate the public as a whole with the artistic community and extend the financial base of that industry. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the multiplicity of funding sources is for the artistic community the best guarantee of its freedom.

In the area of radio broadcasting and telecommunications which also are part of my responsibility, the Government has put forward several major proposals. Having identified, as early as last November, the telecommunication industry as one of the main motors of economic growth, the Government has sought in its budget strategy to favour the tax environment within which corporations involved in this industry must operate. The research and development provisions especially will have a major impact on the telecommunication industry. An easing of the rules governing R and D will encourage the corporations involved in this industry to substantially increase their investments and help maintain our industry's reputation abroad as a source of quality programming. The budget also provides measures to help Canadian corporations involved in telecommunications and other high-tech industries become more competitive on international markets.

In the area of radio broadcasting, the budget proposes for instance to increase from 20 to 30 per cent the rate of capital cost allowance available to cable television systems for cable TV converters and descramblers. This new rate will apply to equipment purchased since last September, the start of the 1985 taxation year for most cable companies.

In this spirit of equitable sharing of responsibilities which I described a few minutes ago, the representatives of the radio broadcasting and telecommunication industries will have to co-operate with the Government in its efforts to put its financial house in order. Thus, the budget provides that my department will implement during the next financial year a series of measures aimed at recovering the costs of a number of services. Those measures should yield additional revenues of $15 million for the Treasury. The broadcasting and telecommunication industries will assume the operating costs of the CRTC and relevant regulating costs. The David Florida Laboratory of the Department which has been testing satellites and advanced technological products will also review its schedules of user fees to recover as soon as possible its entire costs.

Those are examples, Mr. Speaker, of the great equity of this budget. On one hand, the government has recognized that it was essential to encourage and promote the private sector in Canada, but it also makes sure that all Canadians will not have to assume the cost of services used essentially by specific concerns.

With respect to the basic principles which are part of our socio-political fabric as those dealing with social security, arts and culture, our government provides a continuity in the spirit of Canadian traditions. However, we have undertaken since September last to find new avenues and solutions. We have chosen to break free from a past the legacy of which is a financial disaster, adversarial relations in our society and intergovernmental relations lacking a minimum of respect. In this regard, this budget breaks off with the past. It rejects the notion of a society made up of diverging interest groups intent on destroying the system and grasping privileges and benefits. On the contrary, since last autumn we are trying to abolish that adversary system and to create at the social and political levels a new spirit of association and co-operation.

Mr. Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister. Why has the Government tried to control the deficit rather than unemployment? Why the fight against the deficit rather than unemployment? I think that you are putting the cart before the horse! Why has the Government decided to reduce the deficit and not unemployment? In British Columbia where I live there is 15 per cent of unemployment and we are not trying to control the deficit—

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I would say it is because we believe that the deficit in largely responsible for unemployment. As I told you, the public debt was $18 billion 20 years ago. The previous government, under the instigation of the NDP, decided to increase the deficit to reduce unemployment. As a result, our national debt has almost reached $200 billion. Today, almost 25 per cent of our revenues is used to pay interest. Such a policy has given us 1.5 million of unemployed in Canada. We believe that the other policy is sound, that is to reduce the deficit, to stimulate the economy while creating jobs through the private sector rather than public programs responsible for huge deficits.

• (1200)

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, as usual I listened very closely to the Minister's speech.

An Hon. Member: You were reading the paper!

Mr. Prud'homme: Listen, you have to choose: either I will not listen to you or I will. I am listening carefully. I did not go to the trouble of coming here and listening to the Minister in order to shout at him. I was in my office when I saw that the Minister opposite whom I sit as a critic, was going to speak so as a courtesy I came in to listen to him and I intend to ask him questions.

I would like first to ask him about the rather troubling statement that was made by a very worthy lady, the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand). I do not believe that lady, a newly elected Member in this House, would indulge in pure demagogy. She made a statement I find quite troubling, and I am asking myself this question: Was she speaking on behalf of the Government when she stated it was not bound to all of its promises, that after all what importance does it have? Senior citizens will lose some $100 a year, which is not quite fair. And what does that amount to per day, 365 days, $100 a year? We know those are hundreds of dollars taken away from senior citizens, who are the most needy in our society, who have not enjoyed in the past all our social programs, who built this country.

Therefore, I would like to know first whether the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi was speaking on behalf of the Government, since she is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister in charge of all those programs, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, (Mr. Epp)? And if it is true that the Government does not feel bound by its commitments, how is it then that the former Minister of National Defence, whom I still call my hon. friend, who had promised during the election campaign that no later than July there would be new uniforms—certainly a futile, needless expense—nevertheless managed to keep his promise? And we know that as early as next summer, that promise will be fulfilled at an extra cost of $35 million for this year, and over $20 million next year, in addition to causing complete havoc in the Armed Forces.

How is it that they could find $50 million of extra money this year, and $100 million in the following years, to increase by 1,150 our troops in Germany, as of this year, at a time when troop reduction is being negotiated in Geneva? We in Canada are increasing them, and we find the money for it, but we do not have the money needed to help our senior Canadian citizens who certainly are the most in need. They certainly will not be getting from this budget unbelievable capital gains.

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to see my Hon. colleague in this House today, rushing to his seat because the Minister of Communications is going to speak. But I had hoped his questions would have dealt with cultural affairs, broadcasting or communications in Canada.

But he is asking two questions. First, about election promises. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well, and his wide parliamentary experience should inspire him in that respect, that election promises made by political parties are government commitments, mandate commitments, and that it is over the whole of their mandate, when the parties go back before the electors, that the latter will pass judgment on the carrying out of their election platform. So we will see at the end of our mandate, and I can assure the Hon. Member that the commitments made by the Progressive Conservative Party before the Canadian people will have been fulfilled when we go back before them.

Second, the Hon. Member has mentioned uniforms. It is not my responsibility on behalf of the Government to engage in debate on national defence. But I would like to point out, after certain comments made by Members of his party a few minutes ago for instance concerning Government or programs in the economy, that on the one hand, members of our armed forces are entitled to programs that meet their needs, their wishes, their abilities, their pride. And second, that the implementation of that program will widely benefit the Quebec economy, because if I remember correctly, more than or close to 50 per cent of those uniforms will be manufactured by small and medium-sized businesses in Quebec. And to that extent, I do not understand why the Liberal Member indulges in demagogy when there is a real need in the textile industry in Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister based on his thorough and extensive knowledge of agriculture. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said the Minister in his speech had the horse before the cart. I would like to ask the Minister if that is not the right place to put the horse?

Mr. Waddell: I said the cart before the horse.

Mr. Malone: And is it not the case that the Liberals and the New Democratic Party have had the cart before the horse for all these years, and it is those Hon. Members who have an economic mix-up because they believe Governments can create jobs and not the private sector? Would the Minister, out of his knowledge of agriculture, tell the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party that the horse is supposed to be in front of the cart?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps there is something lost in the translation or perhaps it is my French, but I thought I said, "le chariot avant le bœuf". That means, as far as I understand, the cart is before the horse not the horse before the cart.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: I do not want to open a debate on the realities of agriculture in Canada, but I know for a fact that in a public budget, revenues must come before deficits if jobs are to be created.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that the ten-minute period for questions or comments has expired unless the House, by unanimous consent, wishes to continue. We shall resume debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Budget which was delivered here last week described as "sneaky, cruel, harsh" and "Draconian". I think there is another word I would use to describe this budget.

An Hon. Member: Careful, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: I would think this Budget is "crafty", Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Mitchell: Crass, too.

Mr. Rodriguez: Crass and crafty. It was very craftily drawn, Mr. Speaker. I am not surprised that the Conservatives would bring in this kind of Budget. Every time the Conservatives govern in this country, we hear the old saying, "Tory times are tough times". As I watched last night the trek on to Ottawa from Vancouver back to the 1930s I could not only see the R. B. Bennett days formulating over on the other side of the House, but I could see something much more insidious and vicious. What I see in this Budget is a reinforcing and restructuring of the class system in this country. In fact, we are going back to a very class conscious society between the wealthy and the poor.

I would tend to call this budget "the Robin Hood Budget" with a twist. Where Robin Hood used to take from the rich to distribute to the poor, this Budget, this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and this Government, takes from the poor to give to the wealthy of this country. When one looks closely at the measures in this Budget, the pension provisions, the federal sales tax provisions, the RRSP giveaways and the capital gains giveaways, the message is very clear. The Government is taking from those who have the least and giving to those who have the most. It is all based on the fallacy that when those who have gorged themselves on the labour and fruits of those who are at the bottom end of the economic scale, somehow or other some of it will trickle down to the people at the bottom and jobs will be created.

• (1210)

Mr. Waddell: The trickle-down theory.

Mr. Rodriguez: Trickle-down theory, and it is liquid and amber coloured and I am running for cover, brother; I am not sticking around. People had better get out their umbrellas.

Let us look at the whole question of pensions, Mr. Speaker. One of the things this Budget does is reinforce the cynicism among people about politicians; when politicians are trying to get into office they make all sorts of promises. But lo and behold, once they have achieved office, they turn around and go against the very things they promised. We have many examples of that kind of cynicism building again in this Budget. We have examples of taking from the poor and giving to the wealthy. Look at deindexing. In 1980 the Conservative Party placed ads in newspapers across the country criticizing the Liberal Government. They said:

> You've heard a lot about the Constitution lately, but how much have you heard about deindexing?
> Deindexing is a system to guarantee that you'll pay higher federal income taxes year after year.
> Deindexing would mean a massive tax increase for all Canadians.
> Deindexing would raise a lot of money. Fast, $1.6 billion in the first year alone.
> Deindexing would hit people living on low incomes the hardest.
> The Progressive Conservative Party of Canada is providing the opposition.
> Indexing was our idea in the first place.
> And we are determined that you should continue to receive this fundamental protection against inflation.
> But we need your help. It's time for all Canadians to speak up.
> An important message from the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada.

The Tories placed those ads pointing out the dangers of deindexing. Now that they are in Government, what have they done? They have deindexed old age pensions, and old age pensioners are being asked to take up the first 3 per cent of inflation. This contradicts what they said in their public advertising campaign. This is in complete contradiction of what the Prime Minister said when he promised "complete indexing of old age pensions to the actual cost of living". What we see here is a direct attack on the principle of universality. Because of deindexation, the old age pensioners will receive $100 less next year and that will put them even further below the poverty line. The cumulative effect will be $203 the following year, and by 1990 seniors will be $512 further below the poverty line.

As well, Mr. Speaker, de-indexation contradicts the Tory promise that as soon as the Government's financial position allows, it will provide increased financial assistance to single senior citizens whose incomes are below the poverty line. So the Government puts these people below the poverty line, takes money away from middle and low income Canadians, increases the federal sales tax and allows the poorest of the poor to fall even further below the poverty line.

Mr. Gagnon: Do you know what the word "honest" means?

Mr. Rodriguez: But how does the Government treat high income earners? The Hon. Member across the floor says "be honest".

Mr. Gagnon: Tell the truth.

Mr. Rodriguez: He says they have kept the index on the GIS. I said that full indexing remains on the supplement. How do they treat the wealthy?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rossi): Order, please. Will the Hon. Member be polite enough to listen to the comments of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How does this Government treat the wealthy? Looking at RRSPs, those who earn $86,000 a year or more will now be allowed to increase their tax deductible RRSP contributions from $5,500 to $15,500. Where is the principle of deindexation there? The $15,500 will be fully indexed. There is no discounting of the first 3 per cent of inflation. It is fully indexed. These people can sock away the $15,000 each year plus the fully indexed cost of living. Do you know what that means? It means people in the 50 per cent a year bracket can pocket $5,000 more of what they earn. That is as much as some people in my riding live on. That is the Government's view of fairness!

Mr. Thacker: Louder, I cannot hear you.

Mr. Rodriguez: What will that cost the Government? Its own figures indicate that giveaway will cost $235 million. The Tories are taking that $235 million from the poor and middle income Canadians and transferring it directly to the wealthy.

You might ask how do they treat the person earning $30,000 with respect to RRSPs? Instead of allowing them to deduct up to 20 per cent of their income, they are cutting back so that they will only be allowed to deduct up to 18 per cent. On the one hand, we give upper income Canadians a bonanza, and on the other hand the people at the middle and lower income level get cut. Is that the Conservative sense of fairness?

Ms. Mitchell: Yes, it is.

Mr. Rodriguez: I suspect it is much more machiavellian. Right through this Budget we see a constant shifting of income from low and middle income Canadians to upper income Canadians. If there is an honest Conservative in the House, they will admit that.

From the Government's own figures, Mr. Speaker, by March 31, 1991, the children's benefit will be $635 million less than under the present program. This has to be a Titanic Budget: it is children and senior citizens first. They are taking $635 million out of the child benefit program of this country, as well as a massive $1.6 billion less for old age pension benefits, and what are they doing with it? What are they doing with this theft from Canada's social programs? Are they doing something creative?

Mr. Waddell: Giving it to the oil companies.

Mr. Rodriguez: They say they are going to reduce the deficit. I know this Government has a fixation about reducing the deficit, just as Margaret Thatcher has a fixation about reducing the deficit, yet unemployment problems remain in Great Britain. We know that the Premier of British Columbia has a fixation with reducing deficits.

Mr. Fulton: And they are getting bigger.

Mr. Rodriguez: Deficits are getting bigger and unemployment is getting higher. There are no jobs for anyone in British Columbia. But when I hear about this fixation with deficits I am reminded of a quote by Kevin Doyle, the editor of Maclean's magazine. I would like to read that quote from the February 4, 1985 issue of Maclean's. It reads:

● (1220)

The preoccupation with the deficit has become a menace. The word has become a little-understood part of the jargon that men without imagination and governments without direction use to disguise their poverty of purpose. It is a blind to be drawn over any discussion of the real economic challenges that face us, as well as over any argument that threatens to disturb the comfortable, conventional maunderings of the uncaring.

I think that is a very appropriate way of describing the obsession of this Government and governments like it with the deficit. Is the most creative use that we can make of the money removed from the economy through the Budget to put it toward reducing the deficit, in spite of the fact that that completely contravenes and contradicts what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said on November 17? He said that money saved by retargeting social programs would not be used to reduce the deficit but redistributed to the neediest. Well, it is not being redistributed to the neediest, it is being given to the greediest in society.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Another area in which they have socked it to ordinary Canadians is in the deindexation of personal income tax. By 1990, as indicated in its own figures, the federal Government will collect $4.4 billion more in income tax revenue. On the other hand, corporations will receive $540 million next year and $2.2 billion by 1990 as a direct transfer. It is taken from those who have the least and given to those who are already enjoying a very low tax rate in the economy.

When I returned to the House in September of 1984, I was struck by the proliferation of powerful lobbies on the Hill. The oil companies have one of the most powerful lobbies. They pay very little tax, only 7 per cent in 1979. The Bankers' Association has a very powerful lobby. They float around in their pin-striped suits. The drug lobbies are getting what they want now, which will sock it to individuals who have the misfortune of being sick. The Manufacturers' Association has another very powerful lobby. It is time that we considered registering the lobbies on the Hill. This might be the appropriate time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: There is no more regressive tax in any land than a sales tax because it does not take account of the ability of an individual to pay. It is a regressive tax which goes with a regressive Conservative Government. By 1990 the Government will collect $2.6 billion more in federal sales tax. Sales tax is being slapped on candy, confections, pet food, soft drinks, health goods, surgical and dental instruments, X-ray apparatus and films, wood-burning stoves, wind deflectors, heat pumps, solar heating panels, furnaces, insulating materials, wind generators, windmills, and other such goods. Having socked it to people who were trying to save on energy through the elimination of COSP, the Government has now socked it to them through federal sales tax.

The sneaky thing about this is that the federal sales tax is rolled into the price. Therefore, the provincial sales tax is applied on the total price, including the federal sales tax. We therefore have a tax on a tax. Ten per cent will be applied on those items. In fact, it increased by 1 per cent in November and will increase by 1 per cent in January. That is a 2 per cent increase in federal sales tax in the space of one year.

This Budget emphasizes and reinforces the class structure in the country. There is no minimum tax on the rich and the wealthy escape the puff-ball attempt to implement a surtax because, if they do not pay tax, they do not pay the surtax. According to the Budget, the surtax is to take in $550 million next year. However, on the other hand, through capital gains tax exemptions and RRSPs, it gives the wealthy $640 million in the same year.

A report prepared by the Department of Finance indicates that the removal of the capital gains tax means that Canada will be taxing its rich much more lightly than any other industrialized country in the world. The Government is determined to redistribute the wealth in the country from the poor to the wealthy. This Budget does not deal with the most important problem facing Canada, unemployment. In our paper Canada Unlimited, we have targeted unemployment. The Government has failed to deal with that most pressing problem. This Budget could very well add to the deficit as well as exacerbating unemployment.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the Hon. Member's speech. He refers to a Robin Hood Budget. That is the quaint phraseology which the business sector used to refer to the Budget of November, 1981. As the Hon. Member says, this is different because it is taking from the poor and giving to the rich. Would the Hon. Member accept the terminology "a sheriff of Nottingham Budget"?

Mr. Rodriguez: I would certainly accept that, Mr. Speaker. I recall that the MacEachen Budget was a serious attempt to redistribute wealth from the wealthy to those who needed it. We have never heard such a howling as went up across the country. The lobbies were in full bay. The Conservatives were part of that lobby group. The MacEachen Budget was forcibly put aside. This is a Robin Hood Budget with the Prime Minister as Friar Tuck and the merry men of Nottingham. When the Budget was to be brought down, they were all in Europe. Phone calls were made to bring them back so that they could surround Robin Hood, Friar Tuck, and the merry men of Nottingham Forest. It was necessary to use the wide angle so that the folks across the country could see that they were indeed merry. Their merriment reached a peack when the Minister of Finance said that capital gains tax was being removed to a limit of $500,000. They stood to a person and applauded loudly. I think that is a fair indication of the kind of Budget this is. I think they ought to be very ashamed of this Budget.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I grew up on a farm. We used to put blinders on horses so that the horses would not be able to see people on either side of them. It seems to me that the Member is taking that kind of approach to the Budget. You are not prepared to look at what is happening around Canada and what must happen on a broad base. Of course, if we use tunnel vision, we can pick out any particular item in the Budget and say that it has some serious negative impact. However, if you look at the over-all broad issues, it seems to me that with thousands of small business people in the country who employ one or two other people and others who would like to quit jobs now to enter into small business, there is a possibility and the opportunity for those people to run their own small business and take some initiative.

It seems to me that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is putting on blinders. He is not prepared to look at the impact of this Budget on the very small businessmen in his constituency. I have visited his constituency, and I know what kind of people live there. I ask the Hon. Member, who certainly spoke a lot about small business during the election, how he would approach the problem of trying to turn the economy around by including small business initiatives in his constituency and across the country?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member represents Saskatoon East. As a matter of fact, I have a letter from one of his constituents. She is a 48-year old single grandmother of seven with a small business. She wrote a letter dated May 24, 1985, to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Let me read this letter in order to answer his impassioned plea about how the Budget helps small business:

Dear Mr. Wilson:

This is a letter about betrayal—the complete betrayal of the Canadian people by you and by your Party. Your actions since the September, 1984, election and the federal budget, have put the lie to everything you campaigned on during last summer's election campaign, while using the word "sincerity" dripping through every advertisement and speech. I knew then, and you have proven since, that this was honeyed venom.

This woman operates a small business. The letter goes on to point out how the Budget very seriously affects her business:

Until you are willing to listen to logic and reason from ordinary citizens in this country, and to make radical changes in this budget, as well as many of your other policies (not just bandaid measures), I am withdrawing completely from the payment of income tax, beginning immediately. Until you assign a decent amount of the revenue earned by your government to the wellbeing of Canadian citizens who are now suffering with unemployment, and on fixed incomes, I am conscientiously objecting and will not be able to live with myself by contributing to your cavalier attitude and actions toward those who are suffering around me.

When listened to the Budget, I hoped that it would effectively deal with creating employment in areas like mine, which is suffering from 16 per cent unemployment. We do not have a private sector base.

I questioned how the Budget would provide an incentive for Falconbridge and Inco to hire more people. It does not provide that incentive. The Budget will not motivate those who deal in RRSPs to invest in my riding, because they are highly speculative. How will the capital gains tax exemption stimulate employment in my area? Those Canadians will simply sell what they have and buy a condominium in Florida. It will not help create employment and, therefore, I honestly say that while my hopes were high, they were dashed.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc: Mr. Speaker, our country has a wealth of natural resources and an extraordinary human potential. The major problem in the past was that the Government stifled personal initiative and killed all hopes of succeeding. That is the cause of our main problem and disastrous situation in this country. It is absolutely essential to restore confidence to the people in research and development, and I wonder what the Hon. Member is trying to sell us today. He has absolutely nothing to sell since he said that we must help the poor and the needy. We have nothing against this, but if you get to the point where your only throught is of helping the poor and the needy, you disrupt the system by preventing those who are able to succeed from doing so. Then, your businesses close down, there is no more money for the Government and people stop working. When people no longer work, they cannot pay taxes to the Government. I would like the Hon. Member to tell me where we shall find all this money if businesses close down and if the people stop working. That is my question. I do not know where that reasoning can lead you.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member did not hear me. When the Government imposes a tax on pet food, soap and shampoo, regardless of the fact that people may not be able to afford it now, it is essentially punishing poor people. A sales tax is not progressive and simply dampens demand. It does not stimulate the economy at the consumer level.

The Budget seeks to inspire confidence in the rich. It does not matter if the poor have confidence and I suspect that if the Hon. Member is really interested in stimulating the economy, he would consider that.

I also pointed out that there is a disparity with respect to old age pensions. This year, the Government is taking $100 from old age pensioners. In my riding that is the only income for many old age pensioners because they worked for companies that never had a pension plan. They depend on that old age pension, and when the Government removes $100 this year, the cumulative effect on them becomes $512.

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to have this opportunity, first of all, to offer my sincere congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on bringing down a Budget on May 23 of this year that is realistic, effective and fair. I may add that I find it very exciting to be taking part in the Budget debate, considering its tremendous impact on job creation.

The Budget was so well received by tax experts and economists that it was even referred to by some as conservative, literally. A great deal of preparation went into this Budget, but I think that the Budget papers especially reflect some very positive aspects for small- and medium-sized businesses. This Budget has a direct impact on business people. On May 23, the Progressive Conservative Government brought new hope to small- and medium-sized businesses, and the time has come for the private sector to regain confidence in its potential. It is time for businessmen and women to show what they can do. Our party was put in power to bring about a change for the better, and that is what it is doing. As far as policy is concerned, this change represents a sizeable break with the past, and that is reflected in the Budget.

This Budget has benefitted from the most extensive round of pre-budget consultations ever held in Canadian history. Whereas before, the independence of private entrepreneurs was questionable, to say the least, they are now being encouraged to become more actively involved than ever before in increasing awareness of their strength and potential at the local, national and regional level. It is this involvement that will give our economy the clout it needs at the international level.

It would be too easy to say that the Budget is giving the private sector a chance to change the present state of affairs. However, it is challenging entrepreneurs to take the iniative. There is no longer any reason for the lack of initiative shown by business people so far in this country. Various business-oriented incentives have removed the taint from the word "profit". Creativity and innovation are high on the priority list, and productivity will at last be rewarded.

Yes, this Budget favours private enterprise. Yes, it is giving the private sector the tools it needs to overcome its economic stagnation. Yes, the entrepreneur must get involved. It is a must. It is a real must. Otherwise, the Budget will be useless.

● (1240)

Good intentions are not enough to bring about change. We need action! We need immediate, intelligent and genuine action. How are the measures this Budget contains going to help private enterprise prosper? Very simple: it will have to adopt as its motto the slogan of every good manager: product, quality and price.

We must make our products competitive. Well before they become obsolete, we must already be developing new ones. The Budget has introduced changes to the definition of research and development so that more enterprises will be able to benefit. Our small- and medium-sized businesses have not lost their sense of creativity, but it must be revitalized.

If we are not active in certain areas, perhaps we should ask ourselves why. Hi-tech companies are scarce in Quebec, that is a fact. But where are the incentives for such firms? Language and fiscal barriers, for instance, have tended to discourage companies and investment in this area. Although we may not get those hi-tech companies overnight, we can at least start by creating a climate that is favourable to their growth and development.

Our firms are just as competent as others in foreign countries. We have here in Canada everything we need to compete on international markets. Our efforts must be directed towards export products, but beware, they must bear the seal of quality. We do not stand to gain much encouragement by comparing the number of American-Canadian car recalls to that of imported cars. We do know that the standards are identical in both cases.

Canadian companies have to set their own production targets and, as required, replace obsolete equipment, expand or bring in new blood. I am proud to remind the House that small- and medium-sized businesses need look no further than the Budget to find provisions under which they can obtain the funds needed for such investments.

Businessmen now see a way out of their stagnant situation. Conditions will improve, businesses will gain strength, and at last they can see the light at the end of the tunnel.

Small and medium-sized company management fully appreciate that the incentive measures announced on May 23 will improve the economic and financial outlook. Success rather than effort will be rewarded. Every businessman will be goaded into action by the new Government tax measures.

And we know what those measures are.

One. The lifetime $500,000 capital gains exemption. This additional financial input will unable management to direct those funds towards better planning of future business. Close to one million Canadians will benefit from this measure, an open invitation to invest in small and medium-sized businesses.

Two. Budget measures make it easy for pension funds to invest in small and medium-sized company capital stock. RRSPs and registered retirement income funds can also be channelled into private Canadian companies. Even the labour movement is urged to invest in businesses. This can be a reliable pool of capital for small and medium-sized businesses, a new source a capital funding.

Third. The fully refundable tax credit on the first $2 million in eligible expenditures on research and development each year. As you know, Mr. Speaker, small and medium-sized companies were so far limited to 40 per cent of the tax credit and most of them could not really afford to go into research and development. The funds required to maintain day-to-day operations did not leave enough leeway to consider investment in research.

Four. The extension of the small business bond program, a readily available source of funds for companies temporarily strapped for cash.

Five. Unemployment insurance premiums will be frozen in 1986, leaving more money in the hands of companies. A thorough review of the UI program will be undertaken later.

Six. Small and medium-sized companies will be exempt from the 5 per cent corporate surtax.

Seven. Business fluctuations often made it difficult for small business owners to make regular contributions to an RRSP for their retirement years. Henceforth they will be able to carry forward unused contribution room for seven years.

Eight. A new tax credit to individuals investing in the Quebec Solidarity Fund.

Nine. The documents tabled with the Budget contain a proposition aimed at significantly reducing the basic federal tax of small companies—from 15 to 11 per cent.

The total amount of money that these measures will make available for the SMB's may help investment within the individual business in improving manufacturing processes, updating equipment, increasing production, paying interests on loans, and so on. The previous Government was unable to motivate the business community and neglected private enterprise. But this Government has brought down a political budget which by itself scorns the complexities of a strictly accounting budget.

The end result of all those measures will be a decrease in the burden of the SMB's. In turn, their financial resources will increase. New firms which to this day had difficulty attracting investment will from now on have all the support they need. The new budget will have reached its goal, which is to be a catalyst for the Canadian economy.

I for one am committed to using in my beautiful constituency of Quebec East all the energy needed to get business people involved, and I urge my colleagues to do the same, and make entrepreneurs aware that their daily involvement is vital to the success of this budget. I would even offer my support to other Hon. Members who defend that view.

Crippled businesses must be revived at all costs, business leaders must concentrate on creating jobs and carrying out the research work needed in order that the economy may go forward, for humanitarian if not philantropic reasons. Humanitarian, because even with the profit motive, a business can improve working conditions and help the cause of the unemployed. Profit is defined in the dictionary as: "An increase in the goods one owns, or the improvement in status resulting from some activity". I would even suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the concept of labour should be added to that definition.

We can say that the Government has honoured its commitment to ensure economic revival and job creation. What better way of helping the SMB's generate jobs and new R&D activities than our Progressive Conservative budget? The Government has realized that the only way to give the economy a forward push was to strenghten the SMB's and avoid hindering their development. As many of us have already said in this House, I will repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance is realistic, efficient and fair. The Budget does recognize that Canadians individually and collectively will be able to achieve the desired economic progress. At the same time, it does recognize that there is no wonder solution, but that a balanced program involving growth, better management, decreased expenditures, and tax increases, is a starting point for the reorganization of our finances and the nationalization of overall Government management.

The Government has put the emphasis on the private sector because it strongly believes that stable and meaningful jobs are better provided by business people. This Budget is clearly a step in the right direction towards an economic renewal.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that in my remarks up to this point, I have dealt mainly with that aspect of the Budget that promotes private initiative. This was the first of the three areas in which the Budget proposed measures for economic renewal. The two other areas are improving Government effectiveness and controlling the national debt. The Budget will enable the Government to better manage the affairs of the state. We have dealt with a few simplifications of Government programs, and finally the Government's financial responsibility takes precedence together with its will to cut down on the huge size of Government. The Government, in its capacity as a trustee, will reduce the funding of many Departments and review several programs, in order to better allocate whatever funds are available.

Mr. Speaker, the Government also is exercizing restraint at the financial responsibility level, by proceeding to reduce subsidies, to rationalize the public service, even eliminating 30,000 jobs, to improve cash management, to dispose of surplus buildings—to close down plants manufacturing products for which there is no demand—to increase cost recovery, to move towards on improved and renewed budget process.

The reduction in the huge size of government will be achieved not only by rationalizing the public service and various Government programs, but also by privatizing Crown corporations. Thirteen of them will no longer compete against small businesses. After they are sold, disbanded or integrated into existing departments, small businesses will be better able to develop in those specific areas. This will help restore their faith in the Government.

As much as small businessmen used to be suspicious of the Government, they will now be motivated to succeed. Their competition will no longer be subsidized by the Government. We are opening up avenues for conscientious and hard-working businessmen.

The last point I wish to raise is the matter of getting our national debt under control as soon as possible. This Budget counters the effects of the heavy legacy left by the previous Government. All those who have positive or negative reactionary tendencies should keep in mind that this Budget is only a partial aspect of the general policies of our Federal Government. However, the Budget projects our image to foreign countries. For instance, the Western Energy Accord will restore confidence in Canada at the international level. It will stimulate the flow of foreign currency into Canada. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, as far as investments are concerned, whether the bills are blue, red or green and measure 3 by 5 inches or 7 by 8 inches, we shall accept all of them equally for the simple reason that this is what we want from other countries. We do not want foreign workers who are supposedly better qualified to manage our businesses because many of our business people are said to lack intellectual vigour. We have the human resources we need. We only have to identify them, to go and get them and urge them to do their share in improving the economy.

Our Budget represents a major break with the past and gives us some hope of stabilizing our deficit. A reduction of the deficit means a decrease in interest rates for borrowers, which is economically beneficial for the Government, for businesses, and also for individuals. A reduction of the deficit also brings down inflation, which decreases the need for indexation, but let us leave this matter aside for the moment. Let us simply say that the approach chosen by the Government is a gradual one and that the Budget is the first step. However, the Nielsen Task Force is still considering ways to reduce spending.

In conclusion, I wish to emphasize that our Government is taking seriously the mandate for change it has received last September 4. Emphasis is on job creation, growth and Government responsibility. We are fighting three things: unemployment, unemployment, unemployment. Unemployment among young people, unemployment among the middle-aged and unemployment among people on the eve of retirement.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this Budget will prove effective by creating new jobs for Canadians. It will no longer be politicians and bureaucrats who decide for Canadians where to invest and how to create jobs. The initiative will now be taken by the people, not by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I have the great pleasure to confirm that our Government has taken the measures required to create a climate which will result in increased investments and more jobs. Our Budget asks Canadians to translate their ideas and energies into action in order to make of this country what we want for ourselves and our children.

Our job as Members of Parliament is clear. We, in the Government, must send to the business sector this message, on which I shall conclude my remarks: Take advantage of this opportunity! The Government has placed you in the forefront. It is up to you to put Canada back on its feet and make it competitive. You are competent, dynamic, creative, knowledgeable, proud, responsible, conservative and progressive! Finally, Mr. Speaker, I realize that they are all that as much as myself.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the Progressive Conservative Party has finally realized how eager Canadians are because I think that the comments which have just been made by the Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Tremblay) are the exact opposite of what his leader said when he gave his famous interview to Fortune magazine stating that Canadians did not want to work, were unable to deliver on time and unproductive.

Now, since September 4, did the Prime Minister and the Government make a complete turnabout considering the contradiction between the comments of the Hon. Member for Quebec East and the comments of his own leader when he stated to the Americans that Canadians were unproductive?

Mr. Tremblay (Québec East): Those who read the 3½ lb. budget and listened to comments different from those of prophets of gloom and doom are permeated with our new spirit of growth and pride. During the weekend, I attended a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce in Montreal North and about a hundred businessmen confirmed that if we kept our spirit, our aggressiveness and put the emphasis on private enterprise, they would each undertake to create one job. There are some 700,000 small and medium businesses throughout Canada. If each would hire at least one unemployed, we would solve 60 per cent of the unemployment problem.

An Hon. Member: There are also some new businesses.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask him . . . His comments will haunt him for years to come, up to the next elections. Does the Hon. Member for Québec East (Mr. Tremblay) endorse the policy of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who said to all senior citizens in Canada living under poverty level that 1.2 million of individuals will receive less to make up the deficit? Does the Hon. Member for Québec East agree with the policy of the Minister of Finance who will take money from senior citizens under the poverty level? Does he agree with that policy with respect to the deficit issue?

Mr. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, I noted during my numerous trips that the prime concern of older people was not indexation but the unemployment of their grandson or their granddaughter. I repeatedly said to them that our young people were not to blame. Healthy young people have to spend their energy in some way or another. When they are not busy, we have a society such as it is today. Thanks to our spirit, our aggressiveness, our desire to succeed, and you can be assured that I am part of it, the people will again begin to look for a job and try to improve their lot.

[English]

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Tremblay), on his very fine address and to express my disappointment, and indeed some sadness, that our colleague from Hamilton East has joined the rest of her friends and members of the New Democratic Party in the biggest put-down of senior citizens which I have heard for some time.

In my riding, the most understanding group of this Budget is senior citizens. They know that one gets nothing for nothing. They are prepared to pay. As the Hon. Member for Quebec East said, it is not that they worry about paying a little extra or not having indexing, it is that they worry more about their grandchildren. This is what they say to me as I walk down the streets of my riding of Guelph.

It is difficult to sit in the House, as we have for the past few days, and listen to the denigration of senior citizens. I do not think senior citizens deserve it.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

SPORTS

SOCCER RIOT FATALITIES—CONDEMNATION OF FANS' VIOLENCE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's violent attack which led to the deaths of 41 individuals at the European Cup finals soccer game between Liverpool of England and Juventus of Italy was a brutal, savage, and barbaric act. It is an act which has, unfortunately, begun to appear on the international sports stage, particularly in soccer, with all too much frequency. This is a cause for great concern.

S.O. 21

This violence needs to be condemned in the strongest possible terms. However, most important, such senseless and immoral events need to be brought to an immediate end. Strict and swift reprisals must be taken against any culprit wishing to engage in such perverse displays. Responsibilities on the part of sports organizations and Governments must be clearly defined and carried out.

There are those who suggest that harsh penalties might hurt the game of soccer. As a progressive society we cannot stand idly by and risk the lives of innocent individuals for the protection and sake of a soccer game on the field. Our priorities need to be clear, and vigorously pursued. Violence in the stands must be fully cleaned up before the whistle starting a game can be blown.

Canada has a unique opportunity to play a vital role in ensuring that respectability and civility are returned to sports competitions. Our record for sports-related incidents is highly envied throughout the world. Thus we can and should be sports ambassadors of goodwill.

EMBARGO ON HOG SHIPMENTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa, and Wisconsin recently placed an embargo on Canadian hogs saying that Canadian hogs contain traces of chloramphenicol, an antibiotic which has been recently banned from use in the U.S. Despite increased monitoring, not a single positive indication of the drug has been found in Canadian meat. Canada performs monitoring interprovincially, as well, and no traces have been found, even though the drug is used on occasion under veterinary order.

This embargo, coupled with the recent tariff increase which the U.S. has unilaterally placed on Canadian hogs going to the U.S., will have disastrous effects on our pork industry. Last year 96,000 hogs were shipped to South Dakota alone.

Chloramphenicol can cause aplastic anemia. Some researchers in the U.S. estimate one in 50,000 people may be genetically susceptible to the disease if chloramphenicol is used. The incidence of anemia, however, is no higher in Canada than in the U.S.A. where the drug has been banned, so the reason for causing pork to be stopped at the border is economic rather than medical or scientific. I call into question the whole affair. I think it is illegal.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his 90 seconds have expired.

THE FORMER ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I present this week's Survivor of the Week Award. Perhaps a more appropriate title might be the "S.O.W. Trophy".

Today's winner of this much-coveted award—the highlight of many a Liberal career, I am told—is Gayla Voorhees, the cousin of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Some years ago Gayla Voorhees was hired—surprise—as a secretary in the Hon. Member's constituency office on the Pembina Highway in Winnipeg. Then, in 1983, another surprise. Gayla Voorhees was appointed to the Immigration Appeal Board by the true Grits in the Privy Council. It was a 10-year appointment at a very large salary. What a survivor. She is still there.

Obviously, as the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) has said: "Patronage is a relative affair".

THE BUDGET

SPEECH MADE BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I was in the House yesterday afternoon when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) delivered his speech on the Budget.

Angel-faced and sanctimonious, he made utterly irresponsible statements. Hiding behind the immunity afforded him by the Standing Orders, he was able to avoid questions which he would certainly have found rather embarrassing. Here are some of them.

Do the Right Hon. gentleman and his Party not feel ever so lightly guilty and responsible for compelling us to present a Budget which calls on all Canadians to make sacrifices?

Is the Leader of the Official Opposition honest enough to admit that the Budget is the result of the most comprehensive consultation process ever undertaken in this country, and that makes it different from budgets introduced by his Party—oftentimes slapped together in 72 hours—such as the 1981 Budget which caused irreparable damage to our economy?

During the last election campaign, did the Leader of the Official Opposition not state on several occasions that the deficit was a serious problem with which we had to come to grips? No, Mr. Speaker, not quite. Contrary to what he said yesterday, this Budget does not mislead Canadians, for they knew that a Government had to assume its responsibilities.

Fortunately for all Canadians, a Conservative Government has been given the mandate to set our economy on an even keel.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

SITUATION OF TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Once again, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the Government to the alarming situation of the Canadian textile industry, a major employer in my constituency of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. Many Hon. Members have received letters from textile workers who are seriously concerned about the future of Canada's textile sector.

When the Quebec Conservative caucus met in Sherbrooke last July 26, they formally undertook to bring immediate and long-term assistance to that industry. Two full pages of promises were made about this during the election campaign, yet almost a year has gone by and people are still waiting for the Government to deliver.

The last Budget did not even refer to that industry. The Government must take immediate action to make sure that an early solution will be found to solve the problems now faced by the textile industry, otherwise it will disappear.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAYOFFS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to the layoffs announced yesterday by Canadian National Railways, where 4,100 employees out of the main shop's workforce of 5,500 will be laid off for an extra four weeks this summer over and above the usual summer shutdown.

Apart from my customary objection to this practice of the CNR, whereby it seeks to balance out its books on the backs of young workers and their families, it is interesting to note that the reason given for this layoff was flat traffic forecasts. I find it ironic, indeed, that within a week of the Budget, and some six months after the November 8 statement which was supposed to create all kinds of confidence in the economy and set the country rolling again, we have the major railway in the country laying off people because it does not expect the economy to be moving at all. It does not have enough confidence in the Government's own Budget to be putting people to work for the full year to prepare the rolling stock for the goods that will have to be moved. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has as much confidence in his Budget as he really says he does, then I suggest he get on the phone to the president of the CNR, Mr. LeClair, and tell him to cancel the shutdown and keep people working.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

IMPORTANCE OF BUDGET MEASURES

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I want to stress the importance of the research and development measures contained in the Budget brought down last Thursday by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Investing in research and development is essential to economic growth and job creation. Canada must keep pace in order to compete both at home and in foreign markets. To encourage R&D in Canada, our Government is proposing to refund 100 per cent of the tax credit earned on the first $2 million of qualifying R&D each year. Furthermore, the definition of qualifying R&D expenditures has been changed in response to requests made by the industry for many years.

Mr. Speaker, this measure reflects the Government's firm resolve to provide Canadians with durable and satisfactory jobs, specially young Canadians who want jobs and need jobs.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the residents of Montreal-Mercier, I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance on a Budget that demonstrates the fundamental confidence of this Government in the Canadian people.

SMALL BUSINESS

ENCOURAGEMENT BY BUDGET

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the major thrust of the Budget in connection with employment is to encourage the creation of new small businesses and the growth of existing small businesses. The logic behind this is well known and was put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his ground-breaking Agenda for Economic Renewal—A New Direction for Canada. The logic is that new small business has been shown to be the single most important source of new full-year jobs since 1978.

The Budget undertakes to encourage the channelling of private sector investment funds, technological support, and various other forms of start-up help, to assist the proliferation and growth of small new business. I fully endorse this approach. The previous Government would have borrowed money and hired staff to create make-believe, make-work jobs which would have added to the deficit and fizzled out as soon as the money was spent.

In my own riding I am emulating the Government's show of faith in the private sector. This summer I intend to propose a Prince Edward-Hastings bootstrap operation designed to encourage new business, using all forms of government help except tax money, plus the active help of big business, labour, and the other two tiers of government. I have the utmost confidence that this is the kind of initiative which will bring us back to high levels of employment and prosperity.

HAMILTON'S RECORD IN PARTICIPATION CHALLENGE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this is a great day for the citizens of Hamilton and Canadians everywhere who participated in the Great Canadian Participation Challenge. The City of Hamilton led all other communities in its population range by a wide margin. It beat out Ottawa, Calgary, and Edmonton. In fact 121,000 Hamiltonians participated in one way or another.

I have received reports of runners running at the YW and YMCAs, school children biking and hiking, senior citizens cleaning garages, and even patients in the hospital taking that extra step down the corridor. With the likes of Bobby Orr who is here in the gallery, we know that from the Tiger Cats to the Mahoney Bears, and from the Mountain Bees to the new NHL franchise, the people of Hamilton are good sports. We plead with Harold Ballard and his entire family to allow us an NHL franchise so we can allow that sportsmanlike attitude to pervade the whole country.

ENERGY

PARTICIPATION BY OIL CORPORATION IN IMPORTANT PROJECT

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to draw the attention of the House to a recent and laudable decision by the Esso Company to invest $200 million in the crude oil project at Cold Lake, which I visited not long ago with a number of my colleagues, thus creating 110 permanent jobs in addition to the 800 jobs that will be created in the construction industry.

This is one of the new investments that were planned and promised since the signing of the Western Energy Accord. These investments, representing $15 billion, will help to create 20,000 new jobs in the near future and increase oil production by 181,000 barrels per day.

Contrary to what our Liberal and New Democratic Party critics on the other side of the House have said about the impact of the Western Energy Accord, this is the direct result of an historic accord concluded by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss. Carney) with her Western counterparts.

It is a clear sign that the oil companies intend to meet their commitment to re-invest their new profits obtained as a result of the removal of that odious and discriminatory Liberal tax on oil and gas revenues.

It indicates that the Progressive Conservative Party—

YUKON

SWEARING IN OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on May 13, 1985, Yukoners went to the polls wisely to elect for an NDP Government the first time. On Wednesday, May 29, the new Government of Yukon was sworn in. The five-member Cabinet that now governs Yukon includes Tony Penikett, Government Leader and Minister responsible for Economic Development, Finance, the Public Service Commission, and Intergovernmental Affairs. Roger Kimmerly is the Minister of Justice and Government Services. Margaret Joe is the Minister for Health and Human Resources. Piers McDonald is the Minister responsible for Education, and Community and Transportation Services. Dave Porter is the Minister of Renewable Resources and Tourism.

When they went to the polls Yukoners wanted a Government that would effectively, efficiently, and sincerely address their concerns. They have elected just such a Government. I have every confidence that the new NDP Government will develop positive initiatives to create jobs, settle land claims negotiations, and serve individual Northerners to the fullest extent. The new Government is representative of natives and non-natives together.

I would respectfully request that the Government and Parliament respond to the new Yukon Government with co-operation and assistance, and I am sure we all will. The election of an NDP Government in the Yukon has given hope to all Northerners.

PENSIONS

INDEXATION—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped that in the days following the first Budget of the Government we would have had the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, or the Minister of National Health and Welfare present to answer our questions.

Mr. Crosbie: Where were you on Monday?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I've been right here.

Mr. Crosbie: You were not here on Monday.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They are listening to you in St. John's, but you are going to have a little more trouble here.

The Government has the responsibility of defending the Budget, and the Ministers responsible should be here.

The Deputy Prime Minister and his seatmate, the Minister of Finance, have heard what we on this side of the House have had to say about the Government's decision to deindex old age pensions. By now the Minister of Finance must understand that he was wrong, particularly about the sneaky way that he did this. I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he would prevail upon the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to reconsider that decision, to have some compassion for the senior citizens, and to restore the value of the old age pensions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this was a measure that was very carefully considered when putting the Budget together. I can assure the Hon. Member that the senior citizens of Canada have been very supportive, and all through the election—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: There is a high proportion of senior citizens in my riding and they have all said to me that they are concerned about jobs for our young people because they remember the Depression. They remember what it is like not to have a job. They have been saying to all of us that they are concerned about jobs and the future of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OLD AGE PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR LIST OF PERSONS SUPPORTING BUDGET MEASURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the circumstances I shall have to direct my question to the Minister of State (Finance). The Minister of Finance maintains that he spoke to many grandparents across Canada living below the poverty line, who were nevertheless in agreement with his decision to limit and devaluate old age security pensions. Within the next few days, Mr. Speaker, we intend to table in this House petitions from a great many grandparents who disapprove of this severe measure. My question to the Minister is as follows: Could the Minister, with her colleague the Minister of Finance, table the names of the grandparents, the senior citizens who spoke to the Ministers and agreed with the Government's decision to de-index pensions? Could she also table the names of young people with whom they spoke and who want their grandparents to continue to live in poverty as a result of the de-indexing of old security pensions? Table the names!

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, several blocks from where the Hon. Member lives you will find a number of senior citizens' homes, and I have been in touch with all of them. The senior citizens there have been supportive of our measures.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think it is absolutely ludicrous of the Minister to suggest, as the Minister of Finance has suggested, that the grandchildren of the senior citizens want their grandparents to live in a country which silently, secretly, in a sneaky way deindexes by 3 per cent per year the old age pensions of their grandparents. I just do not believe it. Will the Minister not own up to the fact that what she has really done, along with the Minister of Finance, is to provoke the most massive, hidden, sneaky, underhanded tax increase in the history of this country?

• (1420)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, if there is anything which people have asked us to do it is to get our house in order so that we can create jobs—

Mr. Deans: Not on the backs of the elderly.

Mrs. McDougall: —and so that we can look after the poor pepole in this country. We have done that. We have retained the indexing of the GIS. But the best way that we can protect the seniors is to get our house in order and to keep inflation at its lowest possible point.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAYOFFS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Budget last week promised a new economic order and I think we are seeing the first practical results of that. This new economic order has resulted in an announcement by the Government's own Crown Corporation of an extended layoff of over 4,000 workers in Moncton, Montreal, and Winnipeg. At the same time the Government is extracting an extra $46 million payment from the CN, which is more than sufficient funds to keep those people working over the summer months.

Does the Minister intend to review this decision with the CN? Will he meet with the union representatives? And will he sit down and determine how he can convince his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to hold back on the extraction of $46 million so that those people can stay at work over the very vital months ahead of us?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first with respect to the double payment which was paid to CN by the previous Government of Canada, it was drawn to the attention of the Canadian Public by the Auditor General, and others, that that payment was improper and that arrangements should be made for the recovery of that overpayment.

Negotiations are currently under way to work out a satisfactory arrangement whereby that money will be paid back to the Crown.

With respect to the layoffs in question, I think the Hon. Member knows very well that traffic has declined rather substantially. We have no control over the weather. The amount of grain which was produced in the prairie region has dropped substantially. The forest industry is down substantially. As a result of that, traffic is down.

Mr. Foster: It sounds like Tory times.

Mr. Mazankowski: I should point out as well, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the first time this kind of extended layoff has occurred. It occurred for a ten-week period in 1984, and for four weeks in 1977—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Axworthy: I will just say that the Hon. Minister has given a very accurate description of the new economic climate when even his own railway is forced to lay off thousands of workers simply because of a lack of confidence in the economy.

BOX CAR REHABILITATION WORK

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): I would like to ask the Minister about a very cruel joke which was played by one of his colleagues, the Leader of the Senate. He came to Winnipeg on the "budget sell" on Saturday and promised millions of dollars of new capital investment and new jobs in the Transcona shop. But instead of that we now have an announcement of 1,700 layoffs. When will the Government go ahead with the commitment, which was clearly made under the federal-provincial agreement, to rehabilitate 2,000 box cars and keep those 1,700 people in Transcona at work over the succeeding months?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad the Hon. Member doesn't follow the activities which go on within his own province—

Mr. Axworthy: They are not working.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and the arrangements which are going on between the Government of Manitoba and the Government of Canada. An arrangement has been made to proceed with the rehabilitation of the box cars. These box cars may or may not be needed, but nonetheless a commitment has been made.

With respect to the Hon. Member's complaint about the economy, the country is still suffering from the aftermath of the bad economic policies of the former administration—

Mr. Axworthy: You can't use that any more. That's all over with.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It's your Budget, your economy.

Mr. Mazankowski: The fact that grain sales are down and grain shipments are down—

Mr. Deans: Bring back the Crow.

Mr. Mazankowski: —is certainly not this Government's fault. It has something to do with the weather and with the previous economic policies of the former Government.

With respect to the expansion of Transcona, the Hon. Member should know that the future for Transcona and CN in Winnipeg is very bright. If the Hon. Member will just be a little patient there may very well be some announcements which will be very positive for the future expansion of Transcona, as referred to previously by the Hon. Senator—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE BUDGET

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO OFFICIAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I have been trying without too much success to get the Government to be completely frank about the Budget. Yesterday a 25-year-old man telephoned the budget hot line of the Minister of Finance. I want to know if the Government agrees with the response which this man received from one of the Minister of Finance's own officials. The official said the following:

> Unless you can get your boss to give you a $40,000 a year increase, I can't sit here and lie to you. Or unless you happen to own a few warehouses or something, then the $500,000 capital gains would be some help. There is really nothing in here for someone making your wage. I'm afraid there is just nothing in here for middle-income earners.

I want to know if this official in the Department of the Minister of Finance was saying what the Minister herself agrees with.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, what this Budget does is create opportunities and jobs for the middle-income people of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: It means that they will find jobs and their children will find jobs. And we think that is the most important thing we can do for Canadians, because that is what they have told us they care about the most.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Government would be just half as frank as the officials who speak for the Government.

TAX PROVISIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): There were two reports which came to the attention of Members of Parliament in the past 24 hours. Yesterday every Member of Parliament received a report which showed that the number of poor in Canada has increased by 24 per cent. Today tax officials have acknowledged that the rich in Canada pay a lower level of tax than the wealthy in any other industrialized country—thanks to the Liberals—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is a long preamble. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question, please?

Mr. Broadbent: —and that the Budget gives the rich more tax breaks. At a time when the number of poor in Canada is actually increasing, and the rich are already well off in terms of the tax system, why did the Government bring in a Budget which increases the financial position of the rich and makes everyone else, including the poor and the pensioners, worse off?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, if we don't find jobs for the poor, they will always be poor. Let me also say that some of the tax incentives in this Budget are directed at small business people. They have been asking, and asking, for consideration, and they received it in this Budget. They are the people who are creating the jobs and who are going to help us help the lower-income people about whom the Hon. Member says he cares so much.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister admit that she doesn't answer the question, just like the Minister of Finance and just like the Prime Minister, because she wants to use propaganda to try to convince the Canadian people—instead of admitting that this is the most unequal Budget probably in 20 years—that the Government is actually doing something for the people? Will the Government at last come clean and be frank with the people of Canada in what it is doing?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the people in this country understand two things—

Mr. Blaikie: Death and taxes.

Mrs. McDougall: —first, that the people of this country need jobs and, second, that we have too much debt. They are prepared to assist and support us as we seek to solve those problems.

SOCIETY SECURITY

FULL INDEXATION OF PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister admitted he reneged on the promises he made to senior citizens during the election campaign. Mr. Speaker, would the Acting Prime Minister agree that his Government reneged on promises made by his Government and his Minister of National Health and Welfare in the paper tabled in January, on page 6, and I quote:

> Any savings which may result from program changes will not be applied to a reduction of the deficit.

My question is as follows: Is the Acting Minister prepared to inform senior citizens that he is going to re-instate full indexation of old age security pensions, at least for the neediest in our society, in order to restore the Prime Minister's credibility?

● (1430)

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I might point out that the Hon. Member himself some time ago indicated that senior citizens were prepared to support a 6 per cent indexation with 12 per cent inflation. Can you tell me how we are letting them down when we are supporting indexation over 3 per cent with a 4 per cent inflation rate?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I shall try and keep my temper. But obviously the Minister cannot read French, because I never approved of my party... My party maintained full indexation for the needy elderly. If the Minister wishes to lie, let her do it somewhere else.

My supplementary is as follows: The Minister will agree, if she read the paper by the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is here to defend the elderly, that he did not respect, and I quote on page 9: "Changes in these programs"... Mr. Speaker, that is my question. Why she did not respect... "Changes in these programs which may result from this review should improve benefits for those most in need."

I want to ask the Minister why—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is already long enough. The point has been made.

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, we have kept our commitment to the poorest senior citizens in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: We have kept the indexing of the GIS.

Mr. Rodriguez: Check your nose, Barbara.

Mr. Nystrom: Your nose is growing.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, the worst thing that ever happened to the senior citizens of this country was the inflation induced by the former Government. We have kept our commitment to senior citizens, and we will continue to honour it.

TREATMENT OF SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. In the telephone conversation my Leader referred to earlier, the person on the other end of the line said that if there is no change in the inflation rate, that is, if it stays at 3 per cent or more, the cost to seniors will be quite substantial. Our estimate is that pensioners will have a real income loss over the next five years of something like $2,300, plus an additional loss of some $2,000 due to tax increases. Given that, would the Minister not agree that the Government is indeed putting the boots to senior citizens?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition and the NDP like to play games with numbers. They have come up with number, after number, after number. We have laid out an agenda whereby the low income senior citizens of this country will be looked after. We have laid out an agenda which is going to reduce the deficit and bring down interest rates. That will affect the inflation rate in a positive way and they should accept that.

SINGLE ELDERLY WOMEN

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister will listen to figures from the National Council on Welfare and their report Poverty on the Increase. Would the Minister not agree that somewhere around six out of ten single elderly women live in poverty? I ask her again whether she would not agree the Government is simply putting the boots to these grandmothers and grandfathers she likes to talk about?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member has forgotten that one of the first things we did was extend the spouse's allowance to deal precisely with that problem.

FARM DEBT—RESCHEDULING RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The Budget is really bad news for Canada's farmers. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture finds it so bad that it has called an emergency meeting of all directors a week from today. The Budget does nothing to cover the farm debt crisis which affects 39,000 of our young farmers, those who produce half of the agricultural commodities in this country.

Can the Minister say why the Government has not kept its promise on agri-bonds? Why is it not acting on the recommendation of the Finance Committee to establish a long-term rescheduling of farm debt with loans at 8 per cent? Why was action not taken on this emergency matter for farmers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to believe that the Hon. Member must be getting his information by reading old Budgets lying around in his office from the days of the Liberal Government. He is certainly not referring to the Budget brought in by this Government and our Minister of Finance on May 23. Since that time I have been in Saskatchewan, Alberta, Nova Scotia, and Ontario, and the message I am getting, on a one-to-one basis, from farmers and farm groups is that the Budget is extremely beneficial for and in the interests of Canadian farmers.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that he was talking to Tories.

INCREASED INPUT COSTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister say why he has deepened the despair of Canadian farmers by increasing their input costs? For example, there is the 9 cent a gallon tax on gasoline which will cost $280 a year for the average farm operation. The 1 per cent sales tax increase is another example. Why is the Government cutting back $200 million over the next four years in programs of the Department of Agriculture? Why is the Government determined to destroy the agricultural community by tightening ever more the cost-price squeeze for farmers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is really nothing more than sheer nonsense. As I indicated before, there are three or four very significant measures in the Budget which will benefit the agricultural industry. Indeed, starting on September 17 we can go through a long list of measures we have taken which provide great benefit to Canadian farmers. It was only on the Friday prior to the presentation of the Budget that I received the final recommendation and report of our pilot project in Bruce and Grey County.

The message I have been carrying to Canadian farmers, and the message I want to give here in the House, is that we continue to look at ways and means in which we can address this very serious problem of farm finance which has existed in this country for a long time but has only been dealt with effectively since last September 17.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

IMPLEMENTATION OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who will, no doubt, be aware of the recent PCB spills in Saskatchewan and Ontario. Much has been made of the new regulations coming into effect on July 1. The Minister and his officials have said in committee that those regulations with respect to the transportation of dangerous goods will only have the effect of making the response to a spill more accurate and will not prevent a spill itself because they do not deal with packaging as such. Can the Minister confirm that and, if so, when will he be about the business of bringing in a more comprehensive set of regulations so we can deal with the plethora of spills which seem to be happening all over the place these days?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Government has taken a number of initiatives to deal effectively with these spills. Number one was the issuance of the protective direction concerning the transportation of dangerous goods, which provides for the process and manner in which PCBs should be transported. That direction is in effect.

Secondly, we have dispatched inspectors from the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Directorate to the sites in question in the four or five cases reported. An analysis is going on and, if there is a contravention of the protective direction, clearly there will be charges laid.

With respect to the latest spill, at this particular time that evaluation is still going on, as is the evaluation with respect to the recent spill in Quebec.

FEDERAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the Minister said clearly that the regulations coming into effect on July 1 do not deal with packaging and that a more comprehensive set of regulations is necessary.

• (1440)

Is the Minister aware of the judgment of the Supreme Court of Ontario that, contrary to what the Minister of the Environment said some time ago when the spill occurred near Kenora, the interprovincial transportation of dangerous goods is strictly a federal jurisdiction and that there is a need for more federal involvement? If the Minister is aware of this case and accepts that jurisdictional responsibility denied by the Minister of the Environment at one point, what is the intent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Member has asked two questions already in that supplementary.

Mr. Blaikie: I had a couple more.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Without agreeing with the preamble of the question, I think the fact that we have taken a conscious decision to ensure that inspectors are on site immediately upon the report of such spills is a clear indication that Transport Canada is taking its responsibility and ensuring that all necessary steps are taken.

With respect to the promulgation of the regulations that will come into effect on July 1, they will indeed be more comprehensive. I think the Hon. Member realizes that there is joint jurisdiction involved with the provinces and industry. We are trying to work that process out in the most comprehensive and effective way possible. Clearly the combination of the issuance of the protective direction and the promulgation of the new regulations on July 1 will go a major distance to ensuring the safe transportation of these substances in the future.

SOCCER MATCH RIOT—SYMPATHY FOR FAMILIES OF ITALIAN VICTIMS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the horrendous suffering inflicted upon so many innocent spectators at the international soccer match in Brussels yesterday, and in view of the large number of Canadians with Italian backgrounds, will the Acting Prime Minister, on behalf of the Government and people of Canada, send a message to the President of Italy expressing our deepest sympathies, especially for the families so tragically bereaved?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that I speak on behalf of all Members of the House when I say that the very tragic incident that occurred in Brussels was deplorable indeed. It is my understanding, from the accounts that I have seen and read, that those who were killed and injured included nationals of several countries. I note the observations of the Hon. Member with respect to condolences. I am unaware of whether all of the surviving families have been identified, but his suggestion will certainly be taken into serious consideration.

PREMIER'S TRIAL—INTERNAL INVESTIGATION REPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In the report of Commissioner Simmonds on the Hatfield affair he wrote that members were all tarred by comments made by persons occupying high office in New Brunswick, and that the air of suspicion with respect to the force needed to be cleared up. On Tuesday in the Justice Committee the Solicitor General said that there was nothing he could do to clear the air.

There are times when a Solicitor General should not meet with a provincial Premier, but there are also times when he should meet with a Premier. Is the inability of the Solicitor General to do this obvious thing not a sign that he is a lame duck?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is sadly mistaken if he thinks that any person can direct a public official, particularly an official in the administration of justice in a province, as to what he should or should not do. In committee I expressed a very clear desire, as I am sure all Canadians would have wanted me to, that both Premier Hatfield and the Acting Attorney General of New Brunswick be gracious and concede that this report indicated that the RCMP acted in an entirely proper manner throughout.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT JUSTICE MINISTER MEET NEW BRUNSWICK MINISTERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, following that cop-out I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. The Globe and Mail was today added to The Gazette and other dailies which are demanding the resignation of the Solicitor General. Will the Minister of Justice himself take that step with the Government of New Brunswick which Commissioner Simmonds is obviously asking?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I well recall that when the hon. gentleman was Solicitor General there were calls from every corner of the country for his dismissal from his position, which were ignored by the then Prime Minister.

With respect to the question directed to myself, I have no doubt that that matter will be dealt with in due course by the people involved. We have no authority to direct provincial government officials as to what they should or should not do.

Mr. Nunziata: He is a friend of yours, John.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

TRANSFORMERS FILLED WITH PCBs

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, two more spills of PCBs have occurred this week, one in Saskatchewan and one in my riding of Thunder Bay-Nipigon. My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Why, despite his order of April 19, are trucks still moving PCB filled transformers with certificates that grossly underestimate the strength of the solution? Why are shippers not required to demonstrate in advance that the solutions are weak? Why are transformers not moved under proper escort when the contents are clearly dangerous?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is like asking me why motorists speed. If the Member wants to know why they do this, perhaps he should direct his question to them. We have issued regulations governing the transportation of PCBs. We expect those regulations to be carried out under the due process of law. If there is a contravention we will certainly exercise the right of laying charges as the regulations so imply.

TRUCKING INCIDENT AT CLAVET, SASK.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Would the Minister inform the House what procedures his officials will put in place at Clavet, Saskatchewan, to ensure that when that truck leaves that point it will be in no danger of spreading the high levels of PCB concentrates that it is carrying? What process have his officials put in place to ensure that that cannot happen again?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the protective direction which has been issued will clearly have to be—

An Hon. Member: It's not working.

Mr. Mazankowski: Of course it works if it's followed.

Mr. Deans: But it isn't being followed.

Mr. Mazankowski: In this case the truck will probably not leave until the protective direction is clearly followed.

Mr. Deans: Until the next leaking truck leaves.

Mr. Mazankowski: As I said in response to the previous question, if there is a clear violation of the protective direction, charges will be laid.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FAILURE TO COVER WEIGHTLIFTING CHAMPIONSHIPS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Two weeks ago the Canadian weightlifting championships were held in my riding and four Canadian records were set. The CBC was invited over a year ago to be present to cover this event. It did not do so.

Could the Minister inform the Canadian Weightlifting Association, and the citizens of the community hosting the event next year that he will ensure that the CBC will be there?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a weighty question. I will convey it to the CBC President who will certainly weigh the pros and cons of the CBC's presence at the next championships.

IMMIGRATION

GRANTING OF AMNESTY—CRITERIA USED IN CHOOSING COUNTRIES FROM WHICH CLAIMANTS MAY APPLY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but in her absence I shall direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister.

It was learned that the Government is preparing a partial amnesty plan for refugee status applicants. Claimants from certain countries will be granted amnesty, while others will have to go through the normal procedure leading to refugee status. That sounds like discrimination on the basis of country of origin. Can the Minister enlighten us about the criteria used in choosing countries whose claimants will be granted amnesty?

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I take notice of the question from the Hon. Member. I am sure that fairness and the attitude of the Minister will be reflected in her answers to her.

REQUESTS FROM BANGLADESH—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would also like the Minister to tell us why she considers requests from Bangladesh to be frivolous and unsupported, a country under a military regime and whose constitution and legislature have been suspended?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is as aware as other Hon. Members of the attitude taken by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Her attitude of fairness will certainly be brought to bear with respect to the questions that have been asked.

FISHERIES

SALMON FISHING BY JAPANESE OFF WEST COAST

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the United States is conducting talks with the Japanese concerning voluntary reductions of high seas salmon fishing by the Japanese off the West Coast. These talks are being held outside the bounds of the International North Pacific Fishery Commission and are as a result of the deep concern about the Japanese taking 20 million to 25 million tonnes of salmon out of the West Coast high seas fisheries.

Will the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans inform the House if the Government was approached by the American State Department to participate in these negotiations, and if the Canadian Government intends to conduct such negotiations with the Japanese?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire, because I do not have any information whether the Government of Canada was asked to participate in those conversations. I will report back to the Hon. Member as soon as I can.

Mr. Skelly: My information is that on two separate occasions the invitation was extended to Canada to participate.

STUDIES OF IMPACT ON WEST COAST FISHERY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the Japanese are not the only ones fishing in the West Coast high seas fishery. The Koreans and Soviets are taking large quantities of chum, Chinook and steelhead. Will the Minister inform the House what studies have been done to determine the impact of the current level of interception of salmon on the West Coast? Does the Government intend to begin talks with the Koreans, Taiwanese, and Soviets regarding these fisheries?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the Hon. Member is of considerable importance to all of us on the West Coast. Most of the studies, if they can be called that, are several years old. I have asked the Department to concentrate on this. We know that very high numbers of steelhead which are spawned in British Columbia's streams are being taken by the Japanese. We are not as certain about the amounts of salmon. The question is appropriate and I will be discussing it further with the Hon. Member.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

RAIL CARRIAGE HAZARD TO TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister knows that the Canadian Transport Commission has just rejected a recommendation to reroute trains that carry some 1,500 carloads of hazardous materials through downtown Toronto each month, and has also refused to slow the speed of those trains. There are some two accidents on those train lines every year. Will the Minister tell the House what steps the Government will be taking in order to protect the safety of 2.5 million people who live in Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the Burton-Post Report calls for either the rerouting of the railway or the diversion of dangerous goods which would normally proceed through the city. The implications of these two recommendations are quite severe and there has not been a clear consensus as to which, if any, should be proceeded with. Therefore the CTC has asked for further study and examination of this issue, and has asked all interested parties to come forth by October.

I should indicate that heretofore there have been a number of steps taken with respect to the roller bearing retrofit. There has been a slowing down of trains, double shelf couplers—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister may want to finish this under Statements by Ministers.

PENSIONS

TABLING OF PETITIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I wanted to ask questions about Atlantic Canada but half of the Cabinet is missing today.

My question to the Minister of Finance deals with her statements regarding the deindexing of the old age pension. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said that they do not have to keep their campaign promises. The Prime Minister admitted yesterday that they have not kept campaign promises. The Minister of State for Finance is saying in the House today that they have kept all their promises. My question to the Minister of Finance—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Tobin: Government Members are not concerned about senior citizens. Given that she argues that senior citizens support the Government's deindexing of this program, how many hundreds, or how many hundreds of thousands of names on petitions should we in the Opposition table in the House to convince her to change her mind and restore full indexation of old age pensions?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question by the Hon. Member. I thought that he was out looking for a fact today. I have said in the House, and we have produced a consistent message, that we have kept our commitment to the people of this country. It is hypocritical for Members opposite, who created the problems for senior citizens in the first place, to talk to us about sneaky things for senior citizens.

RECONSIDERATION INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister again, given that her only defence for this Draconian measure—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: —is that senior citizens want it and senior citizens support it, how many hundreds of thousands of names must we table in the House before the Government recognizes that senior citizens don't want it and it repeals this Draconian measure? We will do it.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Draconian measure for senior citizens in this country was a 12 per cent inflation rate and a proposal by the former Government that indexation be limited to 6 per cent. We are doing for low-income Canadians and low-income senior citizens exactly what has to be done in this country at this time, because of their policies.

ASSISTANCE TO ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister is probably aware that the President of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce, Robert Stuart, has criticized the federal Government's Budget. The basis of his criticism of the Budget is that the private sector fuels about 55 per cent of the economy nationally but only fuels about 20 per cent of the economy in Atlantic Canada. His complaint is that the Government is not doing anything to help the economy in that region. Will the Minister indicate anything in the Budget that will help that region?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Churchill asks that kind of question, he obviously has not read the Budget. The fact is that the Budget will ensure more economic growth in the Atlantic region. It will ensure that the Government will continue its supportive measures in that region.

Mr. Broadbent: Especially Cape Breton.

Mr. Stevens: It will ensure, most important, that employees who have been without work in that region will be back to work once again. I wish that the Party to which that Hon. Member belongs would start supporting the workers of this country instead of, through despair and doom, requiring them to remain on the unemployment lists.

Mr. Murphy: I was not making my own comment. I was quoting the President of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister would respond to this comment from the Treasurer of the Atlantic Economic Council, Mr. McCulloch, who says:

—there were three paragraphs talking about the regional nature of Canada's economy—

In the November 8 "New Direction" statement:

After our first discussion with the Hon. Michael Wilson, we became convinced that it wasn't just an oversight, that that was his measure of its importance.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Murphy: What faith can people in Atlantic Canada have in your Budget if that is what their spokesmen are saying?

● (1500)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again in reply to the Hon. Member for Churchill who refers to an officer within APEC, perhaps he missed that the Chairman of APEC has joined our advisory group in that area. He is most supportive of the budgetary measures that have been taken—

Mr. Tobin: That is a lie.

Mr. Stevens: I think the Hon. Member will see that in due course—

Mr. Tobin: That is a lie.

Mr. Stevens: —even the Chamber of Commerce—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe will withdraw the comment please. I ask him simply to stand in his place and withdraw the comment, please.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, this man is not telling the truth. He is putting words—

Some Hon. Members: Out.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. There is nothing to be gained here, I hope, except that I trust the Hon. Member will know that the traditions of the House require an Hon. Member, when something has been said, perhaps in heat, simply to stand and withdraw the comment, please.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the traditions of the House would require me to withdraw a statement which reflects a very accurate assessment of what is happening opposite, but I withdraw the statement nevertheless.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Johnston (p. 5043).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity this morning of listening to the interventions of a number of government Members who were prepared to stand in their places and tell the people of Canada that they were elected to fight a deficit on the backs of senior citizens from coast to coast. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this Government has clearly shown through this Budget for the first time a kind of cold blooded, blue blooded attack, not only on the middle class but also on those in our society who can least afford to a pay.

This Government is so arrogant that when it tabled the budget documents it even thought it could turn maple leafs into blue maple leafs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: As far as I know, the Canadian flag is a red maple leaf representing Canada from coast to coast. The Government has even gone to the extent, in its hungry search for publicity, of turning the Canadian flag into a blue flag indicative of the blue blooded, cold hearted, iceberg approach which the Tories have taken to deficit reduction.

Mr. Stewart: You are setting women's rights back one hundred years.

Ms. Copps: The Member has said I have set women's rights back one hundred years. I want to tell the Member that this Budget has set the rights of senior citizens back one hundred years because the Government has a Finance Minister who has the gall to stand here in the House and tell senior citizens that their purchasing power will be reduced by $500 a year as a result of this Government's budget cut-backs. Those are the very senior citizens currently living below the poverty line who are being expected to bear the brunt of an economy which offers tax write-offs to the very, very rich.

Congratulations. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has now said that anybody who leaves the country at any time can now write off $100 in tax free goods. Do you think the senior citizens who are scraping the bottom of the economic barrel can afford to travel on a regular basis, Mr. Speaker? No, they cannot. The beneficiaries of that particular tax write-off will be the business people who already have enough write-offs.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has quite clearly shown us how the half a million dollar capital gains tax write-off will put $125,000 into the pockets of the very rich. At the same time, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) have the nerve to stand here in the House and say that senior citizens should bear the burden of that measure.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Ms. Copps: That hollow argument is somehow saying that this particular initiative will result in job creation. We know the direct impact of this Budget—we have seen some of the results in the announcement today on Canadian National—, will be to cut 125,000 to 150,000 Canadian jobs. I plead with government Members, if there is to be job creation as a direct result of this Budget, to table the documents in the House, to table the projections in the House and to table the assessments in the House. It is quite clear that the Minister of Finance has taken a Pontius Pilate approach to job creation by saying to young people, "I wash my hands of this". There are 1.4 million people who are not working, yet the Minister of Finance has the nerve to cut back on job creation protection and projections through the federal Government.

Mr. Clifford: He is helping young people.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that he is helping young people. I am young myself, much younger than the Hon. Member who has just spoken, and I should like to ask him directly how this Budget will help in view of the 125,000 or so jobs that will disappear as a direct result of the Budget measures.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his "true blue" colleagues of this Conservative Government—"true blue" because of their blood and because of the "Blues" they are inflicting—do not care whether our senior citizens freeze next winter, because they are more eager to fight against the deficit "on the backs" of our senior citizens than to create jobs for our young people.

On the Liberal side, Mr. Speaker, we had hoped for a Budget which would have directly resulted in job creating schemes. Alas, it was in vain. What we see here is a Government which is prepared to give a $125,000 cash bonanza to every Canadian earning over $100,000.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that only 4 per cent of Canadians can benefit from the Government's initiative to exempt from tax the first $500,000 in capital gains. I repeat, only 4 per cent of Canadians is able to benefit from this initiative, and it is our senior citizens, our underprivileged and middle income people who will foot the bill.

[English]

During the campaign, many Canadians believed the promises of the Government. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that universality was a sacred trust, when the Prime Minister stood in the House of Commons and said that indexation would not be touched, people believed him. They thought him to be a man of his word, but the record and this Budget clearly show otherwise. They show that the Government is prepared in the most insidious way to reach out into the pockets of not only senior citizens, but of our children.

I received a telephone call this morning from a gentleman in my riding who is very involved in a local candy factory, Allan Dancy. Most of the Members on the government side may not know that 8,000 people are employed coast to coast in the confectionary industry. Those people are facing massive layoffs as a direct result of the Government's budget initiative which will literally be taking candy from the mouths of babies.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Government Members may laugh, but I want to tell them that three years ago there was a man in Ontario who was laughing.

Some Hon. Members: Who?

Ms. Copps: His name was Frank Miller. He introduced a budget which taxed candy for babies, which taxed sanitary napkins as a non-essential item, and which taxed a cup of coffee. Instead of learning from the Miller lesson, the Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, introduced a tax on soap, shampoo, candies and pet food which in the most regressive way hits out at those families that can least afford to pay. The facts speak for themselves.

Let us look at the impact of this particular Budget. GIS recipients, that is those who are in the worst position of poverty in the country, will see their own purchasing power, as little as it is, and their own income reduced by 33 per cent by the end of this decade. They will see a 33 per cent reduction in their purchasing power. In the first full year that this insidious Budget will take effect, $2.4 billion will be taken directly from the pockets of those consumers who pump money back into the economy by buying chocolate bars—heaven forbid that they should be allowed to have a chocolate bar—coffee and pet food, items which ordinary Canadians pay for on a daily and weekly basis.

This Budget is not a fair one. It cushions the rich and it says that a Canadian family of four earning $15,000 per year, which is not the lap of luxury, will be paying 36 per cent more in taxes in 1990, while a family of four earning $200,000 per year will be paying 2 per cent more in taxes. Where is the fairness in asking a family of four earning $15,000 to pay 36 per cent more in taxes at the same time as saying to a family earning $200,000 that its tax burden will be increased by 2 per cent? If we take into consideration the $125,000 cash bonus to the rich, we discover that the typical family of four earning $15,000 will be paying $413 more in taxes and the family earning $200,000 as a result of this cash bonus, this cash for life bonanza, will be paying $2,352 less in taxes than they paid before the Budget was introduced. The cash for life lottery does not only benefit people who buy tickets; the Government has given a $125,000 cash write-off to the rich. Is it fair to ask a $15,000 per year family to pay more and to give a tax break which will result in savings of more than $2,000 to a family earning $200,000?

I represent the most industrialized riding in Hamilton, the great riding of Hamilton East.

An Hon. Member: No, no.

Ms. Copps: If the Hon. Member would like to check the figures, he can look at the latest census. Then he will be aware of the fact that the people in my riding are steelworkers; they are construction workers. Many of them are working for the minimum wage. In particular, women are working for 63 cents of every dollar earned by men. Many of those people voted for the Conservative Party because they believed the message of fairness preached by the Prime Minister. They actually believed the Prime Minister when he said that he would not touch the pensions of senior citizens. In fact, he said it right here in the House last December.

If government Members had a modicum of integrity, they would rise in their places today and dissociate themselves from this vicious attack on the pensions of senior citizens, senior citizens who are living below the minimum wage. Also, they believed the Prime Minister when he said he would reach out to try to develop employment equity for women. What do we see for women in the Budget? For the women of the country we see absolutely nothing, absolutely no budgetary provisions for the introduction of employment equity into the federal Public Service. On the contrary, we see by the Government's own secret Cabinet documents that it is expecting to garner a savings of almost half a billion dollars as a direct result of Public Service rationalization.

We have heard government Members speak about rationalization and say how tremendous it is that the Government will be saving almost half a billion dollars. However, rationalization means that those women currently employed in ghettoized jobs in the Public Service, those women in private companies who are currently under federal labour law that does not respect the concept of equal pay for work of equal value, will be further reduced because the federal Government has made absolutely no provision to implement the kind of employment equity which the Prime Minister promised when he spoke to the women of Canada. If we look at the figures, we discover that rationalization in federal Public Service terms means dumping those women who currently occupy the lowest rungs of employment within the federal Government. It is anticipated that more than 60 per cent of those directly affected by rationalization will be women. They will also happen to be those women who are currently at the lowest end of the federal salary scale. Last August the Prime Minister went before the women of Canada and made promises——that as soon as he was elected on September 4, he would start fighting to ensure that Canadian women would get equal pay for work of equal value. And now we see what happened. The Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance got together to figure out how to take money from the middle class, from Canadian women and from the elderly and hand it over to their own Progressive Conservative friends. The real meaning, the true spirit of the Progressive Conservative Party has come through in this Budget, Mr. Speaker, because it is clear to see that the Prime Minister has decided to give a bonus of $125,000 to families already earning more than $200,000, while at the same time taking money out of the pockets of families earning less than $15,000 . . . they are going to be paying over $400 in taxes. Mr. Speaker, in addition to taking $400 out of the pockets of lower income families, they also felt they had to take money from the elderly poor in Canada.

When I have a chance to talk to senior citizens in my riding, I find that of course they would like to work together will all Canadians to create jobs, but Mr. Speaker, it is not fair to ask our own elderly people who are already living below the poverty line to give up 3 per cent of their benefits next year and 3 per cent the year after. By the time we get to the end of the period covered by this Budget, in 1990, the elderly will have lost more than 30 per cent of their purchasing power because of these budget cuts.

Mr. Speaker, it is not just the people who are already getting other pensions. Most of these people, 600,000 to be exact, are already living below the poverty line. And at the same time, the Minister of Finance comes up with some of the most extraordinary measures for the benefit of private companies and wealthier Canadians who can use retirement savings as a tax shelter. I think that this Budget, which for the first time has really shown the true colours of conservatism in Canada, has broken promises that were made to the Canadian poeple and betrayed hopes that were raised, after September 4, before the Budget was announced.

Mr. Speaker, about employment: this Budget does not contain a single measure that will directly create jobs for young Canadian men and women. There is not a single measure that will provide for this, because the Minister of Finance has washed his hands like Pontius Pilate by saying that the private sector is going to take care of everything for Canadian men and women. I beg the Prime Minister and I beg the Minister of Finance to at least do three things: First, to re-index fully all pensions and especially those of Canadians living below the poverty line. Second, to introduce measures that will directly create jobs for ridings such as Hamilton East where the unemployment rate is already over 11 per cent. And third, to give Canadians the assurance that the next Budget this Minister and this Government will bring down will bear the hallmark of equality and that the middle class will not bear the brunt of cutbacks while the pockets of the wealthiest in Canada are being filled.

That, Mr. Speaker, is conservative philosophy. I beg the Minister of Finance to turn away from the policy of conservatism, from this policy for the rich, and to remember that Canadians elected him to represent the middle class and all Canadians on September 4, and to act accordingly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Blenkarn: I have a question, Mr. Speaker. I am wondering if the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has had an opportunity to read the Ways and Means motion notation that sanitary napkins are not taxable.

I am also wondering whether she has had an opportunity to read the book written by her illustrious colleague, the finance critic, entitled How to Survive in Canada's Tax Chaos, about which the Montreal Gazette has said, "It is required reading for every Member of Parliament". The book goes into the inequities of capital gains tax and suggests how Canada should get rid of it.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) that I have had a chance to do a little reading. I am referring to the book entitled Where I Stand written by the present Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: Answer the question.

Ms. Copps: The fact of the matter is Where I Stand is a true representation of the position of the Prime Minister. Last December he stood in the House and promised us that he would do nothing to the indexation of senior citizens' pensions. Yet, he has written in his book that it should become a priority to reduce and eventually eliminate and outlaw indexed contracts and benefits.

Mr. Blenkarn: Right on.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South says "Right on" because that is the true Conservative philosophy. You want to do away with indexation. You want to attack the purchasing power of middle-income Canadians. You want to tell the poor, and especially the elderly, that they will have to pay for $1.5 million in capital gains write-offs.

Unfortunately, all Canadians did not have a chance to read Where I Stand before the Government took power. However, I am sure that over the next four years the policies of Conservatism and trickle-downism, which is telling Canadians that if enough oats get through the donkey they might make it through to the sparrows, will become clear. That is the Conservative philosophy that we will see unfold over the next four years. It is the philosophy which we in the Liberal Party will fight, and fight hard, on behalf of middle-income, ordinary and poor Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) for a question or comment.

Mr. Hamelin: For a comment, Mr. Speaker. The motto of the Province of Quebec is "Je me souviens", that of Canada "From sea to sea". I remember, just like Canadians and Quebecers, men and women alike, remembered last September 4 that interest rates had reached 22 per cent and inflation 12 per cent, that the construction industry was at a complete standstill. Workers in your riding were probably without jobs throughout that time. I also remember—as did Canadian and Quebecers, men and women both—that if for 20 years an approach does not work it has to be changed. During 20 years you experimented with that stupid liberalism which led us to the utterly unbelievable deficit that now leaves us with practically no room to manoeuvre.

Somebody once kept telling me about his 20 years of experience. I told him: You do not have 20 years of experience because you have been making the same mistakes for 20 years. You did that during 20 years, we believed you during 20 years, but it did not and still does not work. We are using other methods, taking a new approach. I am sure this Government will be able to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Hon. Member for Charlevoix is a newcomer in the House—sit down, please—a newcomer in the House but he has yet to say something about the Budget. Every time he gets up on his feet he keeps repeating the same thing. You have been in office for eight months, stop rehashing past events, Canadians want to hear about the Budget, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) has the floor. I would urge him to be brief.

Mr. Hamelin: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the concerted efforts we are asking all Canadian men and women to make to restore order in our financial affairs will bear fruit. The new programs launched by this Government have already had a positive impact in my riding, and I am glad about that.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the Hon. Member's comments are a sign of insincerity or, at least, of ignorance of the history of Canada and Quebec.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Liberal Party will not go along with the policy, and the Hon. Member for Charlevoix knows what I am talking about because there are some mayors in his riding who do not share his views. And as far as the Liberal Party is concerned, we do not go along with a policy that says: You get a job because you are a Conservative, or you get a job because you are a Liberal. That is this Conservative Member's policy, and I think it is shameful and I will have no part of it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin).

Mr. Hamelin: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member is making unfounded accusations. I have had occasion—

Mr. Rossi: Don't overdo it, fatso!

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I would qualify these allegations as gratuitous. In fact, in my riding I have had occasion to respond, in no uncertain terms, to these stupid attacks by the Official Opposition.

Mr. Rossi: Look in the mirror!

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, we have been watching the Official Opposition for 20 years, and I believe that we are in a very good position to put our financial house in order, and, as we did for widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64, in our last Budget reform, to give Canadian men and women the benefit of more effective and more intelligent government.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, to set the record straight, these were not statements by the Opposition but by mayors of his own riding.

Mr. Rossi: That is the whole point!

[English]

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I am starting to feel like someone who has to apologize for the mess that was created over the last 20 years, left to us by the Liberal Party. Believe me, I do not want to stand here and apologize to anyone in this country.

I visited every nursing home and every senior citizens' home in the constituency of Saskatoon East during the last election campaign. The least selfish of the entire electorate were the senior citizens of that constituency who never once asked for more for themselves, but asked for more for the youth of this country. It seems to me that more than anything else, the Budget has youth, jobs and promise for the future written all over it.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), who I think is using scare tactics in her presentation, if she can give me specific calculations for her figures indicating that there will be a tax increase of 30 per cent for a typical family earning $15,000 per year and a tax increase of 2 per cent for the typical family earning $200,000 per year. I would like to see some item-by-item calculations for that.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, unlike the Hon. Member, I have had the opportunity of reading the Budget. Those figures are drawn directly from the budget documents, directly from the Minister's own assessments and directly from the Government's decision to increase taxes, hidden and direct, on the middle class and in particular on senior citizens, and to in fact give a tax holiday to the same people on whom the Government promised to impose a minimum tax.

I am getting tired of the typical Conservative palaver on this particular subject. Conservative members seem to suggest that because senior citizens who are now living below the poverty line do not want to see a further reduction in their Guaranteed Income Supplements and their Old Age Security, they are being selfish. I am here for the future too. I want jobs for my brother, my sister, my children, my family and my grandchildren. However, I do not want those jobs to be delivered at the expense of those people who have built this country over the last 60 years.

The majority of those people living in poverty, as everyone in the House knows, are women who did not have the opportunity to accrue pension credits because they were not working outside the home. They are those people who have outlived their husbands and whose benefits from where their husbands worked have been cut or perhaps never existed. Those are the people whose pockets this Government is reaching out to pick of $30 per month. Perhaps $30 per month is not a lot to the Minister of Finance. Perhaps $30 per month is not a lot to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis). However, $30 per month is a lot for those seniors, and particularly women, who are being robbed by this Budget, which is a vicious attack on the seniors of this country.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal briefly with some of the concerns that exist in the country and then deal with the rationale behind the change in the tax system as regards capital gains. This last year, the debt of our country in relation to our Gross National Product reached 5.3 per cent of GNP, the highest level by far in the history of the country. That percentage is higher than it was during the Great Depression and higher than it was at any time during the war. It is a debt burden that was saddled on the country by administrations run by the now Official Opposition, administrations that created a horror show not only for us but for our children, our grandchildren and our grandchildren yet to come.

To hear the wailing, weeping, gnashing of teeth and nonsense that is coming from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) makes me sick. Her speech was a misrepresentation right from beginning to end. Through this Budget, we have protected senior citizens who need assistance. We have protected them with the Guaranteed Income Supplement, which will be increased and will look after any pension deficiency. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East knows that, but she is making misrepresentation after misrepresentation because that is all she knows how to do.

Let us deal with the financial position of the country. Last year it was necessary for us to go to the markets to borrow $30 billion. This year we will have to borrow only $28 billion. Through this Budget, we have managed to cut back our borrowing requirements by $2 billion. More than that, in the national accounts, we showed a deficit last year of $31.1 billion. That has been reduced to $27.5 billion. There has been a reduction of $3.6 billion in our national deficit. The deficit is down $3.6 billion in cash over the year ending March 31. I suspect it has gone down even more than that.

If you look, Mr. Speaker, at the calculations for interest made in the November 8 statement, you will note that interest calculations then were less than they are forecast to be in this Budget. Strangely enough, since we were elected in September, interest rates have dropped almost 3 per cent. I suggest that as long as we are fortunate enough to be able to continue to drive interest rates down, we will be able to carry the national debt more reasonably, and it may well be possible for us to reduce the deficit by $5 billion. That is an important consideration when taking into account the problems faced by young people, businesses and home owners when trying to make our country grow.

As has been pointed out earlier today, we cannot put people to work when interest rates are at 22 per cent. That is what we got from the Trudeau Government. It is important to take a look at where we are going. Bit by bit, through this Budget and with our change in philosophy, we are going to be able to turn things around and will eventually be able to whittle away at our enormous, suffocating, totally encumbering national debt.

A number of people have indicated that we were being a bit unfair by implementing capital gains tax relief. I would like to read into the record a memo I sent to my colleagues regarding the proposed Budget prior to the bringing down of the Budget. The memo is dated March 21, 1985. I had an opportunity to analyse the returns to the country from the taxation of capital gains. Total capital gains in 1982, the last year for which figures are available, were $1.6 billion. Against those taxable gains, the deductible losses were $240 million. The actual losses were $700 million, but as you know, Mr. Speaker, under the current capital gains law, one cannot deduct all one's losses, so taxpayers were able to deduct only $240 million. Therefore, capital gains subject to tax amounted to $1.36 billion. With that background information in mind, my memo reads:

Bearing in mind that the total taxable income in 1982, up substantially from 1981, was $158.3 billion. Taxable capital gains net from deductible capital losses represents significantly less than 1 per cent of taxable income.

● (1540)

If one assumes that both federal and provincial taxes are averaging no more than 35 per cent—this is undoubtedly high—the maximum collected both federally and provincially inclusive is $476 million.

Those from the Finance Department might say that this was a bad year for capital gains receipts. Clearly, it was not a bad year for other income receipts. Indeed, Table 1 clearly shows the progression of tax receipts. In 1982, the over-all taxable income grew by nearly $24 billion.

May I suggest, Sir, that when we talk about abolishing capital gains, it does not mean, that much revenue will be lost. Indeed, those who claim we are losing revenue, are wrong. The revenue loss in fact is negligible. That brings me to the question of what the Budget says. There is a provision for $300 million as a tax expenditure this year for capital gains relief and $600 million next year for capital gains relief. I suggest that the budget figures are out by at least ten times. I think that we in this House ought to have an opportunity—and we certainly will when Ways and Means motions are presented to us in the Finance Committee—to cross-examine the officials of the Department of Finance. In that respect, may I remind you, Sir, that earlier this year the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs had the opportunity to look into the whole question of capital gains taxes, particularly how they affect farmers. In that respect, the committee had before it officials from the Department of Finance. Those officials indicated that in the last year of reporting—that is the statistics for 1982—the total amount collected both corporately and personally, both by the provinces and by the federal Government, everywhere capital gains tax is collected, in any manner, anywhere, any time, was less than $1 billion.

How much real tax relief are we getting on capital gains? The figures indicate that it is pretty negligible. But it is not the relief which matters. It is the enthusiasm that capital gains relief brings to the whole community. I might point out, Sir, before I continue, that the committee report, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, recommended in recommendation No. 7 the total abolition of capital gains. The report said that "the Minister of Finance should consider the advisability of abolishing the taxation of capital gains in general". The committee's report was a unanimous report. May I point out to you, Sir, that representing the Official Opposition was the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) and the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). Representing the New Democratic Party was the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). The unanimous recommendation of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs was that there be a total abolition of capital gains taxes, and when we hear members of the Opposition standing in their place and telling us that somehow there is something wrong with what we have done, may I just tell them that the committee report was tabled in this House on April 1—and that is not long ago—and that that was the position on April 1 of the delegated Members from the Liberal Party and from the New Democratic Party. To suggest for one moment that what we have done in this Budget with respect to capital gains tax is in any way not the opinion of this House is a misrepresentation of the worst kind.

The committee went on to recommend, if you will recall, that if it was not financially possible to do something in terms of the total abolition of capital gains tax, consideration ought to be given to a once in a lifetime exemption to farmers of a capital gain of up to $400,000 on farm land. The Minister of Finance, in his wisdom, saw the importance of that recommendation and said that $500,000 was appropriate. Indeed, this Budget allows for the immediate recognition of a capital gain tax exemption of up to a $500,000 with respect to farm land. It allows businesses, and particularly small businesses to which an exemption from capital gains tax is so important, to be able to benefit equally from the incentive which this capital gains tax assistance creates.

I would like now to go into the theory behind the removal of capital gains tax. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is a vast difference between capital and income. Capital is something which we have acquired. Income is something which we have acquired. Income is something we earn when we do something in the nature of an adventure in trade. Capital is something we own. There really is only one form of capital which does not depreciate in the long run. A business or a building may go up in value because it is temporarily in a place where people want to rent it or own it. And some paintings, because of a shortage or the particular quality of a painting, may go up in value. But, generally speaking, everything created by man eventually becomes dust, and that includes buildings, cars, machinery, furniture and paintings. Indeed, everything ever created by man eventually becomes dust. Chattels, goods and things do not rise in value except by inflation and except if they specifically happen to be scarce, and then only for a short while.

The only thing that is permanently scarce in this world is land. It, of course, goes up in value as the number of people in the world increases along with the desire to own land, and because the land on this earth cannot be increased in amount. So land is the kind of capital which should be taxed, and we do tax capital in land. Every municipality in this country taxes capital on land on its assessed value. Every province makes sure that land is taxed on its assessed value. We tax land on its assessed value not for the protection of the land but to do all sorts of things. The other day I received a tax bill on some farm property I own. About $400 of the $2,800 bill was for municipal services which would help the land. The other $2,400 was for schools. The land does not send anyone to school.

We have a tax on land because that is a proper capital tax. But there is no justification for capital taxes on other forms of capital. Since we have a tax on capital in land of 1 per cent or 2 per cent of the value of that land annually, surely to goodness, in the interests of justice, we have already affected those who own land. Therefore, there is really no justification for any tax on capital gains except, perhaps, that sometimes we allow people in the organization of their affairs to treat what should be income as capital.

May I point out to you, Sir, the situation of a grocer who happens to buy and sell oranges. There is no question that if he buys oranges by the crate and sells them by the dozen, it is a transaction in the nature of trade. Obviously the grocer is taxable on the profit on the oranges. Is there any reason why those who trade in stocks, houses, boats, cars, planes or whatever should not be taxed as traders? I say there is not. That is in the nature of trade and it should never be treated as a capital gain. Unfortunately, under our existing law it has been treated that way. Therefore, I propose that the Minister, when he is organizing his regulations and statutes to define what is income and what is capital gain, perhaps think about using the time test.

The suggestion I have made to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and I intend to continue making it, is that when capital assets are sold before the end of the five year period that it be up to the taxpayer to prove it was really a capital gain. If you sell your house within a five-year period, you had better justify it; buying a bigger house or moving to another city, or something of that nature, not just turning it over to make a quick buck. On the other hand, after five years, it should be up to the Government to show that the transaction was in the nature of trade. I do not think there would be any problem with that. Most of these things are self-evident. It is important, if we are going to be fair, to make sure that transactions in the nature of trade not be disguised as capital gains. That is not the point of the removal of the capital gains tax.

Sir, removal of the capital gains tax will probably do more than any other measure to stimulate our economy. On the day of the budget speech I had an opportunity to slip out and chat briefly with a commentator from the CBC. He said that here is the day to do it, here is the day to go down to Cape Breton and start a new business. It will be tax free and look at the gain you can make. It is all tax free. Isn't that an incentive to do something? I said I had not thought of it, but maybe he and I ought to go down there together. But I say to you, Sir, that the opportunity to make a gain will encourage investment and create jobs. That is what we are here to do. The Province of Ontario was very anti-gambling for a long time, and then it got into lotteries. Lottery ticket sales today are several times in excess of the total betting on horse racing. Canadians are not afraid to invest; they want to take a chance, they want to buy something they think will give them a return of some kind. They want the sizzle and the go that tax-free capital gains will give them. They will put their money into venture after venture, and it is those ventures that will put our people back to work.

In reorganizing the capital system of our companies, it is essential that we have more money invested through equity and less through debt. One of the problems Canadian corporations face is that they are up to their ears in mortgages. What we offer here with capital gains tax relief is an incentive to corporations and businesses generally to issue more equity. This is because dividends are still taxed, and there is then an incentive for companies to plough their profits back into the treasury and build their equity even further. As long as the shares in the company can be traded, the retained earnings in effect create a larger share value, and that value can be realized tax free if capital gains taxes are removed. That fact alone will enable all sorts of investment to take place which would not otherwise be the case. It is that new investment that will change this country around. We cannot go on any longer the way we have. We must have a new way, and that new way is the way of free enterprise, and capital gains tax removal makes that possible.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Budget we are addressing today, the first Conservative Budget, is very clever, very cunning and very diabolical. There is much coming and going, pushing and shoving, pluses and minuses. There is a lot of shuffling about in this Budget, and I think it is so in order to confuse people. It is to give the appearance of something being done about everything. Then the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) can say to the poor people that there is going to be a minimum tax on the rich. Unfortunately, the date and amount are unspecified. But the taxes, which affect all Canadians, and disproportionately affect poor Canadians because they spend more of their money on goods and services, start immediately, and the excise taxes start promptly. There is going to be a large tax on corporations. However, it is only for the short term. Yet the other taxes, the partial deindexing, the excise taxes, increased personal income taxes, all start immediately and continue indefinitely. There is going to be a $500,000 capital gains exemption, a new tax holiday and a shameful one.

Over the long term we can see that the slide which the Liberals started and which has been going on for a couple of decades is now being accelerated by the Conservatives, higher taxes on individuals, lower taxes on corporations. The estimates are that by 1990-91 there will be an increase of $4.1 billion in personal income tax, $2.6 billion in sales tax, and a reduction of $2.2 billion in taxes for corporations.

Lower and middle-income Canadians may be relieved that the Minister of Finance did not go on to eliminate or substantially cut the old age pension and family allowance, but what we have here is much sneakier. It is an erosion. The amount being cut this year is not large, although it is still going to hurt a number of people. But the effect is cumulative. It goes on and on and on, year after year. Families are going to be paying more, their family allowance is going to be less. A person who is 50 years old now will receive $1,500 less by the time he or she retires 15 years from now than they would have prior to this Budget. A hundred dollars a year does not sound like very much, although it is a lot for some people, but it adds up year after year after and means that people who cannot afford it are going to be forced to pay more and a large number of people are going to be badly hurt.

Perhaps it is as important to comment on what is not in this Budget as what there is, that is, tax reform. We simply do not have tax equity here, and the kind of tax reform that the NDP raised throughout the election campaign and on which we got at least some positive response simply cannot be seen here. We see a surtax, a temporary one on high incomes, but note that 5 per cent of zero is still zero. If the loopholes which allow so many people in high income brackets to pay no taxes at all are not closed, this surtax is meaningless. It is, in fact, another incentive to use those loopholes.

• (1600)

All of these benefits for corporations and richer individuals are not tied to job creation. There is a notion of the trickle down theory in this Budget. That is, if you throw buckets of money at the big corporations and wealthier individuals, they will do something with the money and a certain amount of it will trickle down into job creation, some of it staying in the country. Undoubtedly some of it will trickle down in Canada and create jobs, but how much? Is this a responsible way in which to use the taxpayer's money? Taxes are collected from all Canadians, although disproportionately from lower and middle-income Canadians. Yet, they are being redistributed to those who are better off with the vain hope that some of it will come back. This is an irresponsible and immoral way to use the taxpayers' money.

In the fine print of the Budget there are provisions that up to 31 per cent of pension funds can now be put into foreign investments, whereas previously only 10 per cent could be so invested. Up to $28 billion of the $90 billion in pension funds currently being held in Canada could go into foreign investment. What will that do for job creation in Canada?

This is not a jobs Budget, nor is it one that will reduce the deficit. Although there is much talk about reducing the deficit, in fact this Budget only reduces the increase in the deficit. It is not an absolute decrease in the deficit which will continue to accumulate. The deficit will not decrease until Canadians are put back to work and are earning incomes and paying taxes rather than collecting unemployment insurance. The Minister of Finance had to admit that his own figures of last fall overestimated the revenues that would be generated. I expect he will find that he continues to be overly optimistic because the revenues will not come in while we have high unemployment and we will not get unemployment down when the priority is this fixation with the deficit rather than with job creation itself.

This is not a fair Budget, but is it tough? Unfortunately, it is for some people. It is certainly tough for those who will lose jobs directly through reductions in the Public Service and for those who will lose jobs indirectly, particularly in small businesses because purchasing power is going to be reduced by this Budget. The increase of sales tax and income tax along with the reduction in family allowance and old age pensions means that people will have less money to spend. Therefore, small companies which are at the margin will not get enough business. Estimates are that 50,000 people the year and 100,000 next year will lose their jobs as a result of the decline in purchasing power.

This is also a tough Budget for those concerned about international development. It is shameful that a country as rich as Canada should withdraw $50 million from official international development assistance. By digging into their pockets for famine relief Canadians showed that they cared. Yet an amount comparable to what they gave is being withdrawn by the Government from international development. There is no incentive or encouragement for Canadians to give generously when the Government is cutting back on its development assistance. Maurice Strong, a noted international expert on development aid, has stressed the need for international development now. The emergency is not over. Unless there is aid for development purposes, famine will continue. We must help to build self-sufficiency in these countries. This reduction in aid is a heartless measure.

This Budget is tough on pensioners. The President of the National Anti-Poverty Organisation has stressed the hardships that this will cause. To the financially secure, $100 a year does not sound like much, but to the elderly poor, any erosion of purchasing power cuts into life's necessities. It will increase poverty in the most vulnerable people, senior citizens, who will not be able to go out and find other sources of income. It is again the sneaky cumulative effect. It is not much now, but it is adding up.

The President of the Ontario Federation of Labour spoke about the heartlessness, futility and foolishness of this Budget. He said that it is not that the deficit is no problem, because it is, but it is not the only problem or even the most pressing. This Budget will, in the long run, end up boosting instead of cutting the debt. If the Government were serious about reducing the deficit it would reduce both unemployment and interest rates, two of the heaviest contributors to the national debt.

The capital gains tax exemption is one of the most flagrant parts of this Budget. It is an outrageous example of the Conservative Government's priorities. It is a $500,000 giveaway which will overwhelmingly go to the top 1 per cent of income earners. Canada is already very generous on capital gains. They were taxed at only half the rate of other income. When the Carter Commission on taxation recommended in 1967 that capital gains be taxed at the same rate as other income, there was a tremendous outcry from the financial community. That recommendation was successfully brought down and halved. A compromise was made and capital gains were taxed at only half the rate.

This matter has been explored over the years. A Department of Finance study in 1980 pointed out that Canada taxes capital gains at a lower rate than do other industrialized countries. The study concludes that even full elimination of capital gains could not be expected to have any noticeable impact on total investment. The idea that this giveaway to the rich will result in more jobs and greater investment is belied by studies of the Department of Finance itself. Other countries with economies at least as successful as ours and with lower rates of unemployment have higher rates of capital gains taxation.

There is an impact on fairness, if not on stimulating the economy. The exemption of capital gains tax would leave Canada as the only industrialized country which permitted large amounts of wealth to be accumulated and passed through generations without any tax liability. Five hundred individuals with incomes of over $100,000 derive almost all of their income from capital gains. This is flagrantly unfair, and in the last election campaign the Conservatives promised to address it. Instead, they will continue the tax holiday for these people.

Let us now consider arts and culture.

[Translation]

I was looking forward to some provision in the Budget which would make life easier for the artistic community, not as a result of promises made by the Conservatives during the election campaign—they broke them all—but because of the strong opposition expressed by artists when budget cut-backs were announced in the November economic statement.

Admittedly, their protests were not a total loss—arts and culture are mentioned with some deference in this Budget.

There are even two tax reform proposals, but they concern unfortunately very few people. The purpose of the first one is to rectify a fiscal aberration which caused works of art to be treated just as manufactured goods for income tax purposes. It was scandalous. Artist Tony Onley had even threatened to burn his works on a beach in Vancouver. Thanks to this budget, Mr. Onley can now put away his matches and his works have been saved from destruction.

The second proposal will make it possible for artists to have deductible artistic donations just as we have deductible charitable donations. The artistic community are being asked to continue being the patrons of the arts. Although Canadian artists make up probably the least remunerated occupational group in this country, the government wants them to continue working without pay. We, on the contrary, were hoping for initiatives to raise their incomes and give them the protection of our social programs, such as Unemployment Insurance benefits and Pension Plans.

Well, the Sub-Committee on the Taxation of Visual and Performing Artists and Writers had put forward during the last Parliament 31 recommendations aimed at reducing the tax burden of Canadian artists. These recommendations had been supported by Progressive Conservative Party members while in the opposition. Now that they have an opportunity to follow up on those proposals, they have shelved the major recommendations.

This Budget contains nothing for musicians. Yet, the subcommittee recommended that all their expenses be deductible and that they be deemed to be self-employed because of the high expenses incurred in that profession.

Still nothing for the writers in spite of recommendations that their expenses for research and writing purposes be deductible.

Another recommendation that grants be considered as business income was ignored. This recommendation would have authorized the larger deductions which are absolutely necessary for people with a low income and substantial expenses.

For a performing artist, still nothing, neither for the deduction of expenses nor for their inclusion under the Unemployment Insurance Plan. Yet, these artists are often unemployed for rather long periods without being eligible for benefits, which would not be so bad if they were better paid, but they are not.

The third Budget proposal related to artists is that a task force be established to develop incentives for the private sector to support the arts. No one can be against measures to increase support for the arts, but the difficulties must be pointed out. First, such measures must not replace existing Government support. The Government even promised during the election campaign that its financial support would be increased according to the increase in the cost of living. These other incentives should be over and above Government support. Unfortunately, the present Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) does not seem to be aware of those promises. He is banking on the possibility of an increase in private sector donations to justify the budgetary cut-backs. Obviously, a task force to look into a certain problem is not the answer. A task force does not put bread on the table.

[English]

The culture cut-backs are extremely disturbing. Since these are not new cut-backs in the Budget, the arts and culture community breathed a sigh of relief. However, the cut-backs continue and, for the first time in history, the Canada Council has less money to spend this year than the previous year. Although it suffered from inadequate increases in the past, it faces real hardship from a reduction.

The Budget is a severe disappointment for women. A number of promises were made to women in the course of the election campaign, including child care, credit arrangements and job training. These promises have not been fulfilled. The few measures that have been taken with respect to pensions for women are woefully inadequate. While I am pleased that there is an end to discrimination on annuities, I point out that this had been recommended as far back as 1970 by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada. Until the Canada Pension Plan is improved and women can take part in that plan and receive adequate pensions, women will face difficulties with pensions. It is not enough merely to improve pensions in the private sector because half the women in the labour force do not benefit from pensions in the private sector.

These reforms are welcome only to those who are better off. They do not address the problems facing the vast majority of Canadians.

Let me conclude by simply pointing out the futility of the Budget. It will not reduce the deficit or create jobs. Small business will be adversely affected as a result of the loss of demand. We recommended a very different approach to get people back to work and make communities economically active again.

It is fundamentally a dishonest Budget and pretends to be what it is not. The Minister uses a combination of threat and fraud; threat that unless people bite the bullet there will be even more jobs to lose, and fraud that the rich have to be bought off by even greater giveaways to provide even a small number of jobs.

There is the illusion of fairness because some minor measures have been implemented. They are overturned by the more serious matters, which means that the rich will profit from this Budget while low and middle-income Canadians will be badly hurt.

We are seeing a massive redistribution of income in this country. It is being done in a sneaky manner, gradually, year by year. It represents a very serious betrayal of the Conservative election promises. It is a sad day when we see the true colours of the Conservative Party. I hope the population of Canada will not be fooled by the shuffling and will see where this Budget is really taking Canada.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member explain to the House how she can rationalize her position in saying that this is an anti-small business Budget? All of the organizations representing small businesses herald the Budget as a very positive one for the small business sector, which is really one of the main engines of growth and economic opportunity in this country.

With respect to the application of the capital gains tax exemption, contrary to the Hon. Member's suggestion that it is a boon to the rich, it is considered in most corners as an excellent incentive to encourage individual entrepreneurs and families to engage in small business activites. It would be very similar to the family farm enterprise where families work together to create an investment in land, machinery and equipment that will become a retirement fund in later years.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, a Budget that reduces purchasing power as significantly as does this Budget will be very harmful for small business which depends on the purchase of goods and services. The Budget takes money from the hands of families who buy food, services and other necessities.

The Budget is reducing the family allowance and old age pension while increasing taxes. This means that people will have less money to spend. How can businesses be pleased that their customers will not have as much money to spend on their businesses? I suggest it will hurt businesses.

How will people increase their purchases? The unemployed will not be making large purchases and the Budget will not reduce unemployment. There will be direct lay-offs as a result of the Budget and indirect lay-offs as small businesses are hurt by it. A Budget that reduces the purchasing power reduces business.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what experience the Hon. Member has in running a small business, but when all the leading spokesmen for the small business sector in this country have heralded the Budget as very positive, particularly as it relates to the small business sector, how can the Hon. Member stand in the House and argue against it? What rationale can she use to challenge the statements of the respresentatives of the small business sector in this country?

● (1620)

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has simply not addressed the point in question, which is, how do people become customers if they do not have money in their pockets with which to buy? If you reduce purchasing power, what are people going to spend? If people do not have money, how are they going to spend it? The Minister has not answered how people are going to spend money they do not have.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could answer this question: is she saying that the small business sector is not happy with the Budget? Or is she saying that it is happy with the Budget but the small business sector does not know what it is talking about, that it is ignorant in its assessment?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am simply pointing out one of the unhappy facts of life, that reducing purchasing power is going to hurt. I think small business will be very seriously hurt. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. Let us talk about it a year from now and see who is right, the Member or I.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member answered the question. It is pretty clear from all newspaper accounts and from public statements made by John Bulloch and others representing small business that universally there has been acclaim for the Budget from the small business sector. Is the Hon. Member denying that that is true, or is she saying it is true that the small business sector does not know what it is talking about?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, it is not true that this Budget has been universally accepted. There has been some acceptance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. McDonald: The John Bulloch example is one significant example. It is not the only one. I go back to my point that the proof of the pudding is in the eating. Let us see what happens. In the economic statement of last year, the Minister of Finance was wrong. He was wrong on his predictions of revenue, and I think he was wrong because people who do not have money people, who are out of work, are not spending. The money is not coming back. We have a Minister of Finance who has not been in the position for a year but his first mistakes are already beginning to show. I suspect this is going to be a very sadly mistaken Budget. There is not much point in arguing about it here. We will see what those results are.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member rise to her feet and give the House, and through the House to the people of Canada, the name of one single leader of the business community who has attacked the Budget from the small business sector point of view? I ask her for the name of one person of the calibre of John Bulloch to whom I referred. Could she name one person who speaks for the business community and who is on record as attacking the Budget from the small business sector point of view, just one person, Mr. Speaker?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would not be able to give the name of a small business person who has attacked the Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: My point remains that the Minister has not been able to answer the question: How are people going to spend if they do not have purchasing power? The time to renew this debate is when we get some of the results from this Budget. I think they will be extremely unhappy results. We can debate them on the evidence when we see how the Budget actually operates. I repeat that the predictions from the economic statement of last fall were wrong. People welcomed them in the fall, and they were wrong when they welcomed them last fall.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to express appreciation for the Hon. Member's remarks—

Ms. Mitchell: Don't be patronizing.

Mr. Stackhouse: —expressing her concerns. I think we have all listened with benefit. I would like to thank her for the tone in which she expressed her views. She avoided some of the fabricated passion that many of her colleagues have demonstrated when speaking on the same subject.

However, I have to take issue with the Hon. Member on some of the substance of her address. I will take time, Mr. Speaker, to refer only to her references to the capital gains provision in the Budget, namely referring to it as a $500,000 giveaway. Where is the giveaway of half a million dollars? This would imply to someone who did not understand this Budget or did not understand the system of capital gains beforehand that somehow $500,000 would actually be given away.

We know, as the Hon. Member for Broadview Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) unintentionally admitted a few sentences later in the address, that the capital gains tax is imposed on only half of the capital gains to start with. We are now talking about a tax on $250,000 not $500,000. When we get down to the $250,000, it is not $250,000 that will be made this year because the provision involves a progressive initiation of the introduction of the capital gains tax exemption. What will we have this year? We will have exemption on only $20,000 in capital gains, namely, the tax that would be imposed on $10,000 of capital gains. Where is this half a million dollar giveaway which the Hon. Member is talking about? I think this is alarming people. I agree that, unintentionally, there has been a kind of scare tactic used. I would say unintentionally. Nonetheless it is a scare tactic that somehow this Government is giving the rich another half a million dollars when in fact we are offering an incentive for investors to do exactly what the Hon. Member should want, and I believe does want.

We have mentioned family farms and family businesses. What we are doing is trying to accomplish the objective which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) indicated, namely the need of private business to raise more capital through equity investment rather than going into debt. Small business needs that kind of assistance. I can take the Hon. Member to a constituent, the operator of a small business, who needs to expand, who is afraid to undertake more debt even at today's interest rates, but who would like to sell equity capital in his business. This provision will encourage individual investors and the Budget will encourage pension funds and other sources of capital supply. Just a half hour before listening to the Hon. Member I talked to an associate in Metro Toronto who told me that already pension funds are making provisions to enlarge portfolios through investment in small businesses. My friend in Scarborough will benefit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. Would the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) wish to reply?

Ms. McDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think my remarks are perfectly clear as to the nature of the capital gains exemption. I referred and stressed the cumulative nature of the giveaway. It begins small but it goes on year after year, after year. I think this is an extremely unfortunate matter. It is perfectly true that only half the capital gains are taxed right now, contrary, by the way, to the recommendations of the Carter Commission and contrary to the recommendations of many people who see this as being extremely unfair.

Let me also point out, with regard to the Member's second point, that the incentive to invest in small business for pension funds permits investment in foreign companies. We have, on the one hand, a good measure to encourage and invest in small businesses in Canada—

Mr. Stackhouse: Thank you.

Ms. McDonald: —on the other hand, it means Canadian business is going to lose other opportunities because money will flow out of the country. It is not an unmitigated good.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this budget debate. For me it is a double pleasure because I am making my maiden speech in this historic Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gottselig: The Budget brought down on May 23 by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is a continuation of the direction set out in his November 8, 1984, economic statement. It is a very clear signal to the Canadian people that we are a responsible Government and that we are prepared to make the tough economic decisions which are required to govern.

It is just over one year ago that I was seeking the nomination in my constituency and later fighting the election campaign. The clear message given to me by the people of my constituency was "give us less government. Stop forcing things on us like metrication and introducing new Crown corporations to compete with the private sector. Instead, get the economy moving". The Minister's budget will do just that. In addition, it will start to control that monster, the federal deficit.

I would like to thank the constituents of the Moose Jaw federal constituency for doing me the great honour of electing me as their Member of Parliament. I would also like to assure my constituents that it is an honour I do not take lightly, and I will continue to represent their concerns to the very best of my ability.

I should like to pay tribute to the former Hon. Member for Moose Jaw, Mr. Doug Neil. Mr. Neil was a Member of the House from 1972 until the last election. He served his constituency and Canada well during that time. This was particularly evident in the area of rail line abandonment and in his publication known as the Neil report. Many of the recommendations made in the report were adopted by the previous Government and will continue to serve as a guide in this vital area for some time to come.

The Moose Jaw federal constituency is located in south central Saskatchewan and is made up of people of all racial extractions and a wide variety of ethnic origins. While English is the mother tongue of most of the residents, we have people of other nationalities who are also keeping their cultures alive through their own groups. We have people from the British Isles, from many European countries such as the Ukraine, Germany, Russia and Poland and from Scandivanian and oriental countries. Many of these people are descendants of the original settlers who came to Canada seeking land and freedom. They were hardy individuals who adapted to the harsh environment and prospered. By helping each other, these people built the towns and cities and laid the framework of rural Saskatchewan as we know it today.

Moose Jaw is the focal point of the riding. It was known for many years as the friendly city. However, it has more recently been referred to as the band capital of North America. The City of Moose Jaw was incorporated in 1903, and there are some very interesting legends regarding the origin of its name. One legend has it that the course taken by the Moose Jaw River resembles the jawbone of a moose. Another has it that one of the early explorers, the Earl of Mulberry, repaired his ox-cart there with the jawbone of a moose. Another myth is that the early residents, some local Indians, used to winter in that area because the weather was much warmer, and they referred to it as Moosegaw, and of course the white man changed it to Moose Jaw.

Moose Jaw is a railway divisional point on the CP Moose Jaw division. It is the largest division in the system. It has 1,873 miles of track, and last year over 75,000 loaded cars moved out of that division. Most of these were destined for Thunder Bay with grain. However, there were also cars of oil, steel and potash. CP Rail employs approximately 700 people in the City of Moose Jaw. The Saskatchewan Technical Institute in Moose Jaw has been providing training for almost 30 years. The institute offers 34 business, engineering and industrial programs to over 5,000 students. In addition, it has an extension division which delivers programs throughout the province.

CFB Moose Jaw is adjacent to this city. Over 1,200 military personnel, as well as 300 civilian employees, provide the workforce to maintain the base. It is the busiest airport in Canada with either a take off or a landing every 45 seconds. With an annual payroll of over $21 million and a further $18 million worth of purchases in the area, it contributes greatly to the economy of Moose Jaw and district. CFB Moose Jaw is also the home of the Snowbirds, Canada's aerobatic air team. They perform at the Moose Jaw Air Show as well as at many other locations in Canada and the United States. The Moose Jaw Air Show attracts over 50,000 people each year.

The constituency of Moose Jaw covers a large rural area, roughly 10,000 square miles, and has a total population of 70,000 people. It runs north from Old Wives Lake in the south, to within 30 miles from the City of Saskatoon. Much of the west boundary is made up of the mighty South Saskatchewan River and Lake Diefenbaker. The area around the City of Moose Jaw has some of the finest farm land in the west. This area is known as the Regina Plains. It is known far and wide as being a top producer of high quality bread wheat. It takes in the towns of Pense, Belle Plaine and the area south to Drinkwater, Rouleau and Briercrest. West and south of Moose Jaw there are many areas of grassland where the mainstay of farmers and ranchers is beef. The Town of Caronport, west of Moose Jaw, has the Briercrest Bible College with a student enrolment of 793, most of whom reside on campus. These students come from all over Canada and the United States to take a Bible course prior to entering university and technical colleges. The east boundary runs up to Last Mountain Lake with the Town of Simpson, south through Imperial, Holdfast and down to Lumsden, to within 10 miles of the capital City of Regina. The Trans-Canada Highway borders the City of Moose Jaw. Another important highway is No. 11 which runs from Regina to Saskatoon, through towns such as Craik, Davidson, which is known as the midway town, and Hanley.

Many of these towns and villages have annual summer events such as the Davidson Kinsmen Rodeo or the Central Butte Fair. However, the most widely known event in the province is the Moose Jaw Kinsmen International Band Festival, which is the largest band festival in North America. This three-day event, held annually on the May long weekend, celebrated its thirty-sixth anniversary this year and was the biggest and best ever. From a humble beginning with 12 bands, it has grown to over 125 bands with over 7,000 competing members. In addition, there were 25 choral groups and 15 field marching competitions. Bands were in attendance from Ontario to British Columbia, as well as many from the northern states. One band was in attendance from Switzerland.

Another well-known location in my constituency is the Gardiner Dam. This is one of the largest earth filled dams in the world. It is over 200 feet in height and stretches some three miles across the South Saskatchewan Valley. The lake formed by the dam is rightly named in honour of the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker who had the foresight to commence construction of the dam in 1958 when he was Prime Minister. It was only after many years of work and study by many groups and individuals that the project finally became a reality. Much of the credit for the construction of the dam must also be given to the late Dr. Bill Tufts who practised medicine at Outlook for many years. Throughout the dustbowl years he recognized the need for irrigation and worked tirelessly for the project until it became a reality.

To give some idea of the importance of the dam, I should like to point out that approximately one half the irrigated acreage in Saskatchewan uses water either directly from Lake Diefenbaker itself or from adjoining water supply systems. The Town of Outlook where I make my home is known as the irrigation capital of Saskatchewan. It is the approximate geographical centre of this irrigation area. Irrigation has allowed farmers to grow a wide variety of new crops and to ensure that there will always be a good supply of fodder and grain for livestock feed even in years when we have severe drought, such as the one we experienced last summer.

In addition to irrigation, the dam is an important source of power for the province and recreation for many residents of the area. There are many provincial parks and cottage developments along the shores of Lake Diefenbaker. Water is also diverted into the Qu'Appelle River system which goes to Buffalo Pound Reservoir which in turn supplies water to the cities of Moose Jaw and Regina.

We have an abundance of migratory game birds throughout the constituency as well as good populations of white tail and mule deer which provide excellent hunting each fall.

The entire area has a solid agricultural base, and the people have become accustomed to the ups and downs of a farm economy that is influenced to such a large degree by weather. Lack of rain during the growing season is one of the most serious concerns of the residents of my constituency. We realize that we cannot control the weather. However, another concern had been growing in recent years about the uncaring federal Government. The fiscal mismanagement of the previous Liberal Government has greatly damaged the economy of Canada, and nowhere was this more evident than in the west.

The Liberal Party was unable to elect a representative from the area west of Winnipeg and, as a result, we had no one but a tired old Senator to speak for us at the decision-making level. We now have strong voices at this level as well as strong support on the back-benches. According to the media I am a back-bencher and far removed from the decision-making process. However, I do have a chance to put forth my ideas. I can assure my constituents that the Ministers of our Government listen and respond to our concerns.

We in the Conservative Party were elected to make a fundamental change in the style of government. This Budget will bring about that change in three vital areas. First, it will encourage the private initiative of individual Canadians and they, not the Government, will decide what is best. We must manage Government more effectively. We must cut waste and trim away the fat. By putting our own house in order, we will create a healthier and more effective private sector.

● (1640)

Finally, we must control the spiralling national debt. We all know that we cannot borrow our way out of this deficit. The Liberals tried that for too long—with disastrous results. We have only to look at our own operations, be they running a home, a farm or a business, to see that we cannot spend more than we take in. If we, as individual Canadians, spent one-third of our income to service our debt, we know only too well what the result would be.

This Budget was formulated by the Minister after the most extensive pre-budget consultations in history. We consulted with Canadians from all walks of life and from coast to coast. As a result, we have a Budget which reflects and addresses the concerns of all Canadians.

The main thrust of the Budget is to encourage the small business sector to expand and to create those permanent jobs which are required for all Canadians. The previous Government used a band-aid approach to create jobs through make-work programs—jobs that got people off the unemployment insurance rolls long enough to qualify them for unemployment insurance benefits again. That was no solution. It was a plan designed and administered by bureaucrats because the Government was bankrupt of ideas as well.

This Budget is responsible. It will be effective. Most of all, it is fair. As a Government, we have met the challenge of the 1980s head on. We have set a new course. We have reflected faith in the drive and the ingenuity of Canadians to seize the opportunities to invest in their own futures. We are saying clearly to entrepreneurial-spirited Canadians that, once more, there will be rewards for risk taking. We will reward success rather than subsidize effort.

Last July, in Prince Albert, we promised that when we formed the Government we would remove the very unfair capital gains tax with respect to the sale of farm land. We did just that. However, we did not stop there. We also removed the capital gains tax for the small business sector in order that ordinary citizens would be free to do what they do best. We are proposing a lifetime capital gains exemption of $500,000 for individual Canadians. For farmers, this exemption will be available immediately. We have also retained the tax-free roll-over provision for farmers. We said that we would reduce the price of farm fuel. Last fall, we introduced measures to provide this reduction.

In addition to that, we dealt with other issues vital to the farm sector. For example, our Government has taken steps in the area of western grain transportation. We are in the process of removing the very unfair volume cap of 31.5 million tonnes, which acts as a disincentive to increased production. We have preserved a number of rail lines and have reopened one in Saskatchewan which had been shut down.

We have amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act in order to put badly needed funds into the hands of producers prior to the seeding of the 1985 crop. We have made important changes to the Farm Credit Corporation Act by reducing the interest rate for over 5,000 producers, as well as introducing a shared risk mortgage program. We have allowed dual labelling in order that farmers, once again, will be able to understand the directions for the proper application of farm chemicals.

We have changed the attitude of the Department of National Revenue in order that taxpayers can be treated fairly once again. We are in the process of establishing a national voluntary tripartite red meat stabilization program.

The list of our achievements goes on and on—all of this in the short space of time since we formed the Government.

Controlling the national debt is a matter of great concern to all Canadians. It is important that Canadians understand the magnitude of the deficit and debt problem and why it poses a serious threat to our ability to achieve sustained economic growth.

The public debt is simply the sum of all past deficits. It took 100 years to accumulate a debt of $18 billion. Now, less than two decades later, the debt is approaching $200 billion. This is the vicious circle in which we now find ourselves. At some point, we must begin to pay the bills for current services and not pass them on to our children.

With this Budget, and through the actions taken in November, we have reduced every area of government spending. To spread the burden of expenditure reduction fairly, the Government believes it is fair to limit the growth of transfers to provinces as well. I said limit the growth—not reduce it.

The Government can save $2 billion by the end of the decade with no absolute reduction in federal transfers. Even after this adjustment, federal transfers to provincial Governments will grow significantly over the balance of this decade. In 1990-91, this would represent about the same share of total program expenditures as they do today.

I am sure we have all seen newspaper reports which state that the Government is obsessed with the deficit. That is simply not true. We are obsesed with jobs—good, satisfying and durable jobs for Canadians. The Minister of Finance said it himself. If he believed higher deficits and a rapidly rising debt would help create jobs, then he would gladly have increased the deficit. That approach has not worked in the past and it will not work now. If high deficits and high debt created employment, then there would not be one person out of work in this country.

This Budget is about equity and fairness, private initiative and enterprise, in an environment of economic, social and cultural progress. Above all, the Budget is about jobs. It realistically tackles the problems as they exist and how the Government found them on taking office last September. The Budget is not preoccupied with the deficit; instead, it recognizes the importance of controlling our debt before it ties our hands and stops us from taking the necessary steps for Canada.

The Government has taken its mandate for change and translated it into an agenda of action. We have recognized that individual initiative provides the economic strength of Canada. This Budget builds on that strength.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) on his maiden speech. It was an excellent speech which outlined the issues affecting his riding. In effect, it was a report card of some of the measures this Government has taken since it was sworn into office.

The Hon. Member made reference to the issue of capital gains. I know it was a prominent issue in the election campaign. Also, I know that he debated it vigorously on the campaign trail. Given the Hon. Member's knowledge, and for the benefit of the Members of the House, could he give us his impressions of the impact the capital gains provision in this Budget will have on the farming community which he represents? In replying to the question, could he enlighten us with respect to the position taken by his NDP opponent during the election campaign, having regard to the fact that the NDP in the House has been taking such violent exception to the capital gains provision which was included in the May 23 Budget? What was the position of his NDP opponent with respect to capital gains during the course of the election campaign?

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister of Transport for his comments. As the Minister has mentioned, the issue of capital gains was certainly an important issue raised during the election campaign. The removal of the capital gains provision will have a long-lasting effect on the West. Farmers will now be able to sell their farms without worrying about capital gains. It will mean that the generations can move as they should in transferring their land. Retiring farmers will know what they have to deal with when they sell their land.

In addition, the business sector will be able to move and thrive once again. My New Democratic Party opponent in the last federal election campaign also spoke about removing capital gains. Members of the New Democratic Party change their tunes quite often, so I suppose that that would depend on what day it is.

• (1650)

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I think the statement made by the Minister was somewhat misleading. As I stated in my remarks on the Budget, this Party has always supported the removal of capital gains taxes on farms. However, we take exception to the broad scope of the legislation. We take exception to the fact that people who speculate on condominiums in Florida or on stocks can have a $500,000 tax holiday.

I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member. He represents the riding of Moose Jaw which is right next to my riding. I know that he is as concerned as we in Regina are about getting better water. The Hon. Member mentioned that even though he is considered a back-bencher, he does exert some influence on the decision-making process. Therefore, I wonder if the Hon. Member could enlighten us on his progress in convincing the Government that it should move immediately to help finance, along with the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan, a joint venture that would allow for the buidling of a pipeline from Diefenbaker Lake so that the people of Moose Jaw, Regina and the surrounding areas could have good, safe, clean water. Perhaps the Hon. Member could report to us on the progress he is making in convincing the Government, of which he is a member, to do that.

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, the issue of a pipeline has been debated many times in Regina and Moose Jaw. There is a new water treatment plant scheduled to open fairly soon that will greatly improve the quality of water in that area. The matter of a pipeline or an open ditch will be debated for some time to come. I can assure the Hon. Member that I am certainly taking a positive stand on this and I have mentioned it and other concerns of the constituency a number of times. I am expressing the concerns of my constituents from Moose Jaw and surrounding districts and I am doing so as a member of a Government that is very responsive to the needs of the West as well as the needs of all other areas of Canada.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the Hon. Member represents a large number of retired people who live in the City of Moose Jaw. I wonder what he will say to his retired constituents when they find out that they will be receiving approximately $100 less from their Old Age Security this year and that by 1990 a couple will receive some $1,000 less per year in Old Age Security. How will he explain that to his constituents?

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, the matter to which the Hon. Member refers should be put in the proper perspective. It works out to about 27 cents a day. I think that senior citizens are quite prepared to pay 27 cents a day in order to preserve what they have now and to have a country with a controlled deficit so that their grandchildren and their grandchildren's children will not have to pay that tax share.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I represent the constituency of Swift Current-Maple Creek, a constituency which shares some 55 miles of boundary with that of the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig). On behalf of my constituents I want to thank the Hon. Member for his comments. Both the Hon. Member and his constituents are very much appreciated by my constituents.

I know that the Hon. Member is a producer. He has a farm that is a going concern and, therefore, a number of the matters which were raised in the Budget are of very real concern both to the Hon. Member and to his constituents. Some concerns have been raised about the possibility of increases in fuel taxes. I wonder if the Hon. Member could enlarge on that matter from the perspective of the producer.

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, there is talk of an increase in fuel prices effective September 3. We are going to have a reduction in the price of fuel of .7 cents per litre on June 1, and the increase on September 3 will supposedly be two cents per litre. Therefore, the net increase will be 1.3 cents. As we are moving to world prices and with the surplus on a world level, I expect that by September the price will be much lower than that because of the supply and demand situation.

I think farmers realize that they received a reduction of 4.8 cents per litre as a result of the actions taken last fall. We are going to institute this increase, if it is in fact an increase, on September 3 so that dry land farmers will have the benefit of buying fuel for this growing season at the lower price.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will recall that he was a member of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee and participated in the standing committee's study into tax issues in agriculture, capital gains tax with reference to agriculture, and indeed other matters. He will recall that the committee's unanimous recommendation was that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) consider the advisability of abolishing the taxation of capital gains in general. Did the Hon. Member not find that the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), who were also members of that committee, agreed to that recommendation?

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is correct. We had all-Party representation on that committee. Although I did not attend every meeting, each meeting that I attended was attended by a member of each Party, and each member of each Party rose to say how we must eliminate capital gains tax from farm land. A unanimous recommendation came from that committee.

Mr. Mazankowski: But Lynn McDonald doesn't agree with that.

Mr. Gottselig: Then she must not agree with what other members of her Party have said. I support fully the recommendation made by that committee. I was happy to be a part of it and to put my views forth. Once again, that indicates that the Minister has responded to our concerns. There is no doubt that this is a responsible Government.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I understand as well that that committee made unanimous recommendations for an agri-bond issue and for changes in the taxation system as it affects part-time farmers. I wonder if the Hon. Member is also in favour of those recommendations and if he is disappointed that he did not find them in the Minister's Budget.

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) for raising that point. The Minister of Finance was present at the first meeting of that committee. He told us all that he would do all of these things but that within the budget restraints with which we are faced, we may not be able to do them all at one time. He asked us to priorize the issues and to tell him which ones were number one, number two and number three. We did that. All members of that committee agreed that the single most important issue was the removal of capital gains taxes from farm land. We did that, and we gave small business people a break as well. All Canadians will now have $500,000 available to them free from capital gains taxes.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) on his maiden speech in the House and on the way he handled himself during the question and comment period. As I recall, I don't think I was as secure on my feet. We didn't have any question and answer period when I first came to the House. That was a long time ago, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) will remember. But the Hon. Member did very well. I did not agree with everything he said, but he said it very well.

• (1700)

I would like to talk about the Budget from a different perspective. I would like to address the Budget from the point of view of the impact I see on the Atlantic area. When my colleague from Kamloops, British Columbia, spoke the other day, he talked about the trickle down theory. He said the Government was hoping that some benefits in terms of jobs and revenues would trickle down. He used the analogy of the horse. He said that if you stuff enough oats into the mouth of a horse so that it has difficulty digesting them, possibly some of the oats will trickle down for the birds at the end of the process. That was an interesting western analogy. But the analogy I like and apply to the Altantic is one originated by my colleague, Don Jamieson, a former Hon. Member of this House. That was the analogy of a new symbol for Canada, taking into account the regional realities of this country. He said that Canada really needs a new symbol. There should be a cow on the flag of Canada. She is feeding in the West, they are milking her in the centre, and we know what she is doing to us in the Atlantic provinces. That is exactly what is happening with this Budget. This Budget, as I see it, will cripple the economy of the Atlantic area. It is a crippling blow, and I say that in all sincerity from my perspective. I hope that the gentlemen on the other side of the House are listening. The main fact is—if this is a gamble on the private sector—that the private sector in the Atlantic area is not as strong as elsewhere in the country. For example, in the four provinces, close to 80 per cent of the gross provincial product is Government and 20 per cent is the private sector, as opposed to something like 35 per cent from Government in other parts of the country.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sorry, I have to leave.

Mr. Rompkey: I am also sorry the Minister of Transport is leaving because I was hoping he would listen to this. However, I want to tell his colleagues that the main fact to recognize is that in the Atlantic area the private sector is not as strong as elsewhere in the country. If we put all the onus on the private sector, then I think we will have a great deal of difficulty, indeed. We are very heavily dependent on fisheries, on transport and on many other government Departments. If there are cut-backs in those Departments, then we have an impact on the Atlantic area. If, at the same time, the private sector is not growing as quickly as in other parts of the country, then we will have negative growth in the Atlantic area.

Our caucus heard the other day from the Atlantic provinces economic council. It has that fear as a result of its analysis and upon talking to its members. We are going to do some computer analysis, Mr. Speaker, to see if we can determine exactly what the effect is going to be, but we are afraid that the effect on the Atlantic area is going to be negative.

For example, going back to last fall, we lost $40 million a year from the fisheries budget. Another $25 million is chopped from the fisheries by the Minister of Finance in his Budget. Those funds go to build wharves, breakwaters, haul-outs and fish plants and to put in place the facilities our fishermen need. Our provinces, as you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, are very heavily dependent upon the fisheries. In addition to that, wharfage and dredging fees will be increased. The Budget talks about rationalization. I am afraid of that word because it translates to me into a loss of jobs and a loss of business activity.

The Government needs to have within its Budget process not only a provision for making sure that the private sector is helping this country—laudable as that objective might be—but it needs to have a concern for people and, most important of all, an understanding of regional differences. There has to be an appreciation that regions in this country are different. If a policy is brought in across the board, then it has to impact negatively on those regions which are least able to bear the burden.

For example, there is a cut in the budget of the Department of Transport of $75 million. How is that going to be translated? We don't know. We have to ask questions and we will be asking questions as to exactly what areas those cuts will affect. Will they affect CN Marine? How many boats are going to go? How many ferries are going to be lost? You can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that the only way to get to Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland is by ferry, if one is travelling by surface. If there are changes in those coastal services in terms of boats or in terms of rates, then there will be an impact on that area. Everything we use and most of what we eat in the Atlantic area is imported from elsewhere. We are an economy which is a main customer of central Canada, and those things have an impact on us.

With respect to tourism, for example, if the gasoline tax is raised or if the price of liquor is increased, it will have, it seems to me, a generative impact on tourism which, I believe, is a sunrise industry as opposed to a sunset industry in the Altantic area. We have lost the PIP grants offshore, the grants we depended upon to do the kind of drilling which was necessary in order to determine exactly what resources were there under the sea. They will be replaced perhaps. We don't know what is to come. But we know we had them and we made use of them. We discovered and proved up the oil which was there. More drilling needs to be done. We are not yet at the end of that process. The full field of oil off the Altantic coast has not yet been discovered and we will need incentive to further prove exactly what oil is there.

I recognize that there will be no diminution of transfer payments, but there will be a reduction as compared to what they would have been by 1990 because the Minister tells us we are going to lose $2 billion. So the Atlantic provinces are not going to get as much as they would have got. They are going to get more, yes, year over year, but not as much as they would have got. There will be a net reduction in 1990.

If we go back, Mr. Speaker, to the point I made earlier, that we in the Altantic provinces are dependent on government programs and on transfer payments—like it or not, that's the reality—and if we accept that reality, then we can understand the effect that any decrease in transfer payments is going to have. For example, in the Province of Newfoundland, between 50 per cent and 60 per cent of the budget of that particular province comes from the Government of Canada. So if the economy of Newfoundland is over 80 per cent dependent on government programs, then you can see, Mr. Speaker, the effect the Budget is going to have on us.

We are going to lose 15,000 people in the civil service. Where are those jobs going to be cut? How many will be cut in the Altantic provinces? I don't know. But they will certainly add to the toll of the unemployed which is already the highest of anywhere in the country. We have close to 50 per cent unemployment among those young people who are eligible to work, and that is a tragedy. These are some of the cuts.

What else is in the Budget that will have a negative impact on the Atlantic area? The sales taxes will increase. The gasoline and aviation fuel has been increased. All of those things are going to drive up costs in the Altantic area, particularly in the North. If we consider Labrador, for example, the only way to get in and out of there, particularly during the winter months, is by air. Already it is paying the highest air costs, not just for passengers, but for freight, of anywhere in the country. This is going to raise the costs even more. It is going to have a damaging effect on the economy in those areas. Consumers in those areas, who are already going to pay more—as will all consumers across Canada—will pay an even greater amount in areas which are rural, which are distant, and which are northern.

Then I could mention the income tax increase. So there is going to be a double whammy; a right-cross in cutting government programs, and a stiff upper cut through increased taxes. Both of these things, I believe, along with many other measures, are going to have a negative impact on the Atlantic area. Yet all the emphasis is placed and all hope is pinned on the private sector.

With regard to the transfer payments, I read in The Ottawa Citizen that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) is undertaking a sweeping review of federal programs and is recommending other cuts and changes which are bound to make the provinces hurt. For example, the federal Government wants to leave the provision of tourism facilities solely to the private sector and the provinces, ending its partial funding under existing economic and regional development agreements. Whether that is true or not, I do not know, but the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. McMillan) is here and maybe he can tell us whether the Government of Canada will continue with the existing policy or whether that sector will be dependent more and more on the private sector.

The article says also that the Deputy Prime Minister wants the Government to reduce subsidies for coastal shipping and ferries operated by CN Marine on the East Coast. These things worry not only me, Mr. Speaker, they worry the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). As I pointed out, the other day he went to the Atlantic Provinces and was less than enthusiastic about this Budget. Reading from The Evening Telegram of May 25, the Minister had this to say:

> Justice Minister John Crosbie says that if the federal budget has any negative effects on areas like Newfoundland, Ottawa will take measures to deal with them.

There is a direct quote which says:

> If it turns out that in any of the approaches taken in this Budget there is any possibility of any damage to regionally deprived areas, then there will be changes made to deal with that—

The Minister was not going down there with a glad heart to defend the Budget. Apart from being an intelligent and witty man, the Minister of Justice is a forthright man. What he is saying here is what he knew to be correct and what I find everyone in the Atlantic Provinces knows to be correct. He went on to say, referring to the private sector:

> If they can't do it, if they can't produce the jobs and the economic growth, then we won't hesitate to go in a different direction.
> If they don't perform, then big brother will have to be given the job back again—

Well, there is an underlying assumption that it is not going to work in the Atlantic area. The article goes on to say the followship:

He admitted the private sector in the Atlantic area is weaker than other parts of the country and said there will have to more government support in the Atlantic region.

Crosbie said he spends a lot of his time in Ottawa ensuring that support is forthcoming.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has cut government programs and government support in that area and depends on the private sector which both I and the Minister of Justice have said is weaker than that in other parts of the country. We may not like it, but that is the reality. Nor is it just the Minister of Justice who is saying that. The St. John's Board of Trade, which is not exactly a left wing organization, says, through its President:

I didn't see sufficient job creation activity that would do much for Newfoundland's high unemployment rate.

He said there were insufficient incentives for the housing and construction industry. He is also concerned about the phase-out of the Petroleum Incentives Program because the federal Government did not announce something to replace it. He says the board will encourage the Government to bring in other tax incentives to encourage oil companies to do exploration along the coast. Well, what about those tax incentives? The tax incentives were given to Cape Breton and maybe they should be extended elsewhere in the Atlantic Provinces, but I am not sure that the tax incentives are the right way to go because you can only get tax incentives when you start to make something. What we need in the Atlantic area, in addition to improved infrastructure, is up-front grants to start businesses going. Yes, you can bring in a multinational and if it has made profit elsewhere it can invest in the Atlantic Provinces and maybe create some jobs. But a local small firm that does not have that kind of profit, or an entrepreneur who wants to start, needs the money up-front and cannot wait until he gets his profit and tax write-downs. So I think a different approach is needed in Atlantic Canada, bearing in mind the underdeveloped infrastructure and the weakness in the private sector.

The Community Services Council of Newfoundland says that the assumption of the federal Minister that by providing private sector incentives, everyone will join in the entrepreneurial spirit, is less likely to hold true in Newfoundland than for a manufacturing economy such as it is in Ontario. That is exactly the point I make. You cannot see all regions of the country as the same. When you have a Budget which assumes that everyone is equal, then it has a negative effect on some people. It may have a positive effect on others, sure; I believe that John Bulloch says this is good for small business. He is a credible speaker for the small business community in Canada. He represents some people in my riding as well. But I believe he was speaking nationally. He was not speaking particularly for the area I want to talk about today. The President of the Chamber of Commerce in Grand Falls, which is a rural area representing a lot of small businesses, had this to say:

—Chamber members are extremely concerned that the federal Government has opted to go the route it has, that being taking such a gamble with business.

In their view the cards are stacked against this area of the nation. It is a workable formula for larger businesses and in places like Central Canada. Noted is the fact that the smaller businesses such as those to be found in Newfoundland have had to rely on Government grants—

Local business just doesn't have the wherewithal to expand and create jobs as hoped by Mr. Wilson.

Even the Premier of Newfoundland, while he said as much as he could say positively about the Budget, that it seems to represent a legitimate attempt to cope with the federal Government's financial problems and to assist economic growth through the private sector, went on to say that:

It has some negative impacts on an economy such as Newfoundland's and we will enter ongoing discussions with the federal government to ensure that proper attention is paid to overcoming regional disparities.

He is concerned about the effect any decrease in transfer payments might have. As well, he suggested that the tax increases will hurt the consumers who already have low levels of disposable income. He feels Newfoundland should be given special treatment as a province with an extremely low economic base, high unemployment and increasing cost of living.

That is the point I am making and the point I want to get across to Members on the benches opposite. You have to be flexible. In answer to my question the other day, the Minister of Finance used the word "flexibility". I encourage him to be flexible and not wait for another Budget or another four years, because we will not be able to wait. Every spokesman I have heard in the Atlantic Provinces has said the same thing. Unless changes are made, there is going to be a drastic and negative impact on our economy which we will not be able to overcome for a long, long time.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member. As an Atlantic Canadian, I am always heartened when even a member of the Opposition marshals his considerable eloquence on behalf of the people of the Atlantic Provinces. However, I find that there is a tendency among opposition members from Newfoundland to suffer from an inverse relationship between their eloquence on the one hand and the validity of their arguments on the other. Nowhere is that more true than with respect to the Hon. Member's comments on tourism. I want to assure him now, since he invited me to do so, that his concerns with respect to the Deputy Prime Minister's task force are not founded. He can look forward to many years of active federal government involvement in subsidiary agreements under ERDA in the tourism field.

I have two questions. The first is with regard to his remarks on the alcohol tax. He mentioned, rigthly, that when federal taxes and other taxes on alcohol rise, the tourism industry is affected, usually adversely. However, the implication was that in the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on May 23, the relevant provision on alcohol taxes would hurt the tourism industry. If it were not for the Budget, the federal excise tax on alcohol would go up 4 per cent because the relevant tax is tied to the Consumer Price Index. There is an automatic increase in the federal tax on alcohol as the CPI increases. By deindexing the federal tax on alcohol, as contemplated by the Budget, instead of that tax going up by 4 per cent this year it will be capped at only 2 per cent above the current level. Therefore, rather than hurting the tourism industry, the relevant provision will help it. Is he aware of that fact?

The Member stated that the Budget is going to slash equalization payments to the Atlantic provinces. The Budget makes no such provision. It simply reduces the rate of increase in equalization payments to the Atlantic provinces and other provinces. It does not reduce the equalization payments. Indeed, in each fiscal year up to and including 1990 those equalization payments will actually increase rather than be reduced, albeit at a slower rate of increase. Is he aware of the two points to which I made reference?

Mr. Rompkey: I thank the Minister for his comments, Mr. Speaker. With regard to his last point I would refer him to Hansard. I thought I was very clear in saying that I understood that there would be no reduction in transfer payments but that there would be an over-all loss from what the transfer payments would have been. The Minister of Finance said very clearly that there would be $2 billion less in transfer payments by 1990. They will go up, but by less than they would have. I thought I made it quite clear that I realized they were not going to be decreased.

With regard to liquor, I am pleased that the Minister explained about the cap. I would point out to him that, although the Government raised taxes in Newfoundland, taxes on liquor were put in abeyance for tourists only. If the same measure were taken federally, it would further help the tourism industry. Such a measure has been suggested over the years by groups and associations which are concerned with that particular industry. If he has gone so far as to put a cap on taxes, would he suggest to the Government that it go even further and put taxes for tourists in abeyance in order to bring revenue into the country? I believe, as I think he does, that that is a sunrise industry. There is money to be made in small business through tourism in this country if measures like that are taken.

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) raised a number of concerns during his remarks this afternoon. I would like to speak about the other side of the issues that he commented on. He spoke about the fishery in the Atlantic area. I believe he failed to remember some very important things that have happened in recent weeks.

For example, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) recently extended UI benefits to ice-bound fishermen in Newfoundland to ensure that their livelihood would not be lost when they could not get out to the fishing grounds. In the Bill which was recently introduced, the Minister extended the variable entrance requirement for another 19 months. Untill the end of December, 1986 the areas of the country which are hard-pressed in terms of jobs will be eligible for unemployment insurance with as little as 10 weeks of seasonal employment. The Minister also took steps to freeze premiums for employers during the next period of time so that employers and employees would not be unduly affected. This is particularly important to the fishery.

In looking at the Budget commitments made by the Government to the fishery in Atlantic Canada, I notice that our Government has honoured the commitments of a restructuring agreement for companies like Fisheries Products International and National Sea Products, and in fact something like $138 million is being spent up until March 31, 1985. In looking at what the Government has done for the fishery in Atlantic Canada I need only look at my own Province of Prince Edward Island. The new Minister has given us the appropriate allocation of things we had asked for for years. For the first time we have been let into the Atlantic snow crab fishery. Prince Edward Island has been asking for a part of that resource for many years but was denied it by the Hon. Member's Government. Our new Minister had the foresight and wisdom to know that this resource should be shared in Atlantic Canada. He has given us an opportunity to harvest that resource.

Only several months before the last election, the former Finance Minister of the Liberal Government went so far as to say that the inshore fishery in Atlantic Canada was obsolete and should perhaps be done away with. It is no wonder that Atlantic fishermen decided it was time to make the Government obsolete and turned to a new Government to tackle the problems. Our Government is doing that with the present Budget and the initiatives it has undertaken in the last few months.

The Hon. Member suggested that we might be losing ferries from our transportation system in Atlantic Canada. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is currently looking at the possibility of constructing two new vessels to serve the Wood Islands-Pictou run between Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. That would, of course, be a great asset to us. Through the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion the federal Government is also considering the possibility of constructing a causeway from New Brunswick to Prince Edward Island.

The Member mentioned concerns about the oil industry and said that we should be providing incentives. However, he forgot to mention the Atlantic Accord. What greater agreement than the Atlantic Accord has been signed between Atlantic Canada and the federal Government in recent times? We also met with the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council this week and were told that it was pleased with this Budget because Atlantic Canada is made up of small businessmen, farmers, fishermen, tourist operators, loggers, foresters, and so on. Those are the people who are being given the opportunity to unleash resources and create jobs and investment in Atlantic Canada. If the Hon. Member took those things into account, he would have to agree that this Budget will be great for Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. This Budget will have the most serious adverse effect of any economic measure in recent times. It will set the Atlantic Provinces back 20 years. The Government does not have any regional development policy such as has been put in place over the last 20 years in this country. That bias does not exist in this Budget.

I will deal with the specific points starting with the increase in unemployment insurance benefits for fishermen who were trapped by ice. I raised that issue at least twice on the floor of the House of Commons before the Minister eventually announced what I think was too little too late. I was pleased that she extended the variable entrance requirement. She should have made it permanent. The Minister knows that there is no way you can stipulate more than ten weeks in certain parts of the country to make fishermen qualify for unemployment insurance. It was a good idea to extend it for 19 months, but I would like to have seen it extended for 19 years.

With regard to the Government's commitments to the fishery, it is on the record, and the Hon. Member must know it, that $40 million was cut from the fisheries budget in the fall and then a further $25 was cut from the fisheries budget. That will have a negative impact on the Atlantic area.

The Hon. Member talks about the inshore fishery and how the people of Atlantic Canada dealt with this Party as a result of our treatment of the inshore fishery. In Newfoundland, we won 42 per cent of the popular vote and returned three Liberal Members to the House of Commons. That is not a bad record anywhere in the country. That is what the inshore fishermen think of our policy. Indeed, a very strong constituency of ours is among the inshore fishermen.

With regard to APEC, it is on the record and has issued press releases. What the council is saying is a matter of public record. I do not find any group in Atlantic Canada that will disagree that this Budget will have a serious impact on our economy over the next little while.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to join in this debate today, especially when our Government's first Budget is emphasizing our fundamental belief that a strong, healthy and unfettered private sector will bring about economic renewal.

From coast to coast, Canadians have told us that they agree with our initiative. They are willing and able to generate new investment, new business activity and new employment. However, they also told us that they need an environment free of unnecessary government intervention; they need greater access to financial resources for expansion and they need confidence that their hard work will lead to a better life today, tomorrow and every day after.

Moreover, they must believe that their successes will be adequately rewarded. That is why our budget proposals emphasize the need for individual initiative and private sector innovation. They must be supported by responsible financial and economic policies that will provide a durable framework for growth.

We have issued a challenge to the thinkers, doers and innovators in the private sector to help us create the jobs that Canadians so badly need. In order to respond to this challenge effectively, an atmosphere of opportunity and stability must exist. Since September 4, the Government has been assisting in creating this environment.

There has always been a shortage of start-up capital to help entrepreneurs with their ideas and putting their ideas into real businesses. Our work with Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, guaranteed the continuation of an important source of small business financing.

The life of the Act was extended to March 31, 1990. This longer term established a stable framework for the lenders and the borrowers who use this popular program. This initiative did not increase the size, the role or the power of the Government. Furthermore, our amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act enhanced both opportunity and stability within the private sector. This is totally consistent with the theme set out in the new Budget.

A further initiative is our work to replace the Foreign Investment Review Agency by Investment Canada. Our message is clear: Canada is open for business again. The Government of Canada is there to assist, not harass, the private sector in creating the new wealth and new jobs that Canada needs.

Historically, the Canadian financial markets have been equity poor. Investment Canada is designed to improve the investment climate and to increase foreign direct investment. We are attempting to create an environment of stability and opportunity, and the injection of new foreign capital will result in new jobs.

Today's reality is that government in Canada has become much too big. It intrudes in the market-place. It inhibits and distorts entrepreneurial activity by sending out false signals to investors. Bill C-15 will reduce government intervention in the economy, an action which is consistent with one of the main objectives set out in the new Budget.

The first Budget of the new Progressive Conservative Government faces head-on the two great problems facing our country—the vicious circle of high unemployment and our spiralling national debt. High deficits constrain our ability to create jobs. High unemployment, in turn, causes even higher deficits. The Budget proposes realistic, fair and effective action to break this vicious circle.

It is centred around three fundamental ideas. First, the Government has become too big. It has become part of the problem instead of being part of the solution. That is why we have been combing Government for waste and inefficiency since September and our efforts are starting to pay off.

We will be lowering government overhead, rationalizing and improving government programs and selling off Crown corporations which do not serve an essential public policy purpose.

The civil service will be reduced and public sector pensions put on a sounder footing. The search is still on to ensure that we provide maximum value for tax dollars.

Second, future Governments will not be able to support growth and jobs and provide all the services we want if we do not get control of our financial affairs. It is important that Canadians understand the magnitude of our deficit and debt problem and why it poses serious risks to our ability to achieve sustained economic growth.

The public debt is simply the sum of all the past deficits. It took 100 years to accumulate a debt of $18 billion. Now, less than two decades later, the debt is approaching $200 billion and doubling every five years.

Like any borrower, the Canadian Government pays interest on this debt. Like any borrower, the Government has been affected by interest rates. Interest charges have risen from approximately $8 billion per year in the late 1970s to $22 billion last year. When compared to a business situation, it is quite obvious that a borrower such as the Government of Canada, with assets of only approximately $40 billion, is in a situation in which most businesses would be refused loans by lenders. The Government will soon be facing that situation as well if we do not take proper steps to alleviate the problem and eventually solve it. These interest charges have become the fastest growing component of our government expenditures.

Unlike most people, the Government has been borrowing additional funds to pay the interest on past debt. That is why our debt is spiralling out of sight. If we do not show the resolve to deal with this problem, the inevitable result will be paralysis of the Government of Canada.

● (1740)

Third, this Government wants to encourage private initiative. The new capital gains tax exemption challenges Canadians by rewarding success and not subsidizing effort. It will encourage Canadians to invest a part of their savings in new ventures. It will allow the rewards to be enjoyed by the risk takers. We are not asking that every Canadian drain his or her savings account to purchase speculative stocks. Each investor has a different perception of risk and what his or her objectives and goals are for investment. However, the prospect of greater after-tax returns will inevitably shift savings to job creating investments.

The new proposals grant individual Canadians a lifetime capital gains exemption of a half million dollars. The lifetime exemption limit will be phased in over six years beginning with a $20,000 exemption for total capital gains this year, rising to $50,000 next year. It will go up until it reaches an exemption of $500,000. All capital property will qualify for the exemption.

Some earlier speakers have suggested that only 4 per cent of Canadians stand to have capital gains. I believe this is perhaps part of a misconception that some people may have. Many low income earners have capital assets. Many could consider the purchase of capital assets, whether through an investment vehicle such as a mutual fund, through a stock broker purchasing stocks listed on a stock exchange, or perhaps in the form of a cottage or a boat. These are assets which in some cases, over a long period of time, will appreciate and result in capital gains. Whether it is $5,000, $10,000 or $20,000, these are assets already unduly taxed. This tax is a fair tax which will encourage people to invest in situations not only where the risk is relatively low, but perhaps where risk is relatively high, and we have had trouble attracting equity capital in the past.

In the United States, because of favourable capital gains tax, many blue collar workers have seen fit to increase investment in shares of companies they work for and in other shares. The same initiative, I am sure, will be taken by many of our blue collar workers. They will realize that we need more equity capital if we are going to help create those jobs which we so badly need.

The capital gains tax, allowing immediately $500,000 in exemptions for the farm community, recognizes that farmers have traditionally invested a high proportion of their income back into their farms to build up assets which, hopefully, some day they will be able to sell. This sale will provide the funds required for their pension and adequate retirement. It was not too long ago I was speaking with a farmer in my community who had to sell his farm because of health reasons. He made the best deal he possibly could. He took a down-payment and paid off some of the debts he had, but he still had some debts left. After all the paper work had been pretty well done, the tax department came along and levied a capital gains tax on him. This is a capital gains tax which he cannot finance at a bank, a capital gains tax which is jeopardizing what could be a reasonable retirement income from a mortgage that he has. This very unfair tax in a situation like this and many other situations will be terminated and replaced by an incentive which is not only fairer—

I see, Mr. Speaker, that my time has come to an end. I assume I will have a few minutes tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Order. It being 5:45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 64(7) and put forthwith the question necessary to dispose of the amendment now before the House. The question is the following one. Mr. Johnston, seconded by Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"this House condemns the Government for its betrayal of the trust of the Canadian people by producing a budget that destroys jobs, that offers neither help nor hope to the working poor and the unemployed, that brutalizes the middle class, that imposes massive and unfair tax increases on middle and lower income Canadians and that is devastating to the economically disadvantaged regions of the country."

All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Johnston) which was negatived on the following division:

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

REPORTED COMMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told us that "Canada has an acute shortage of rich people".

[Translation]

Now that is a very shrewd observation on the part of our Minister and you know, Mr. Speaker, my constituents in Saint-Henri have been fully aware of that problem for many years. There is a lack of wealth and they would like to lend a hand to the Minister in his quest for rich people.

[English]

I have had calls from numerous Canadians this morning anxious to respond to this crisis and fill this shortage. The first one asked: Where do we line up? Another asked me whether rich people could not be imported. A third said perhaps they can be cloned from Bay Street. Another inquired whether they are really an endangered species which needs protection. Another caller suggested the creation of SPERP, a Society for the Protection of Endangered Rich People. Another one asked, and it is a legitimate question, whether the Prime Minister's patronage appointments would not go some way to offsetting this problem. Still another said—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

FINANCE

TAX MEASURES APPLICABLE TO THE RICH

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) said, we now know that we do not have enough rich people. Because of this we certainly would not want to tax the few we have. We want to make sure, through the budgetary process, that those among that elite few will be given the opportunity to enrich their position further. Heaven forbid that we should ask them to contribute their share. Heaven forbid that we should even ask them to pay tax at all in some cases. After all, a country without a large number of rich people is hardly worth living in, is it?

I have to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we seem able to tax the poor. We can tax the elderly, as you may have noticed. We can tax consumers until it hurts. We can tax families who work every day for a living, struggling to make ends meet. We can tax the middle income and low income earners, but we cannot tax the rich because we do not have enough of them. Therefore it is a good idea just to leave them alone and let them accumulate their wealth. In fact, encourage them by a series of tax measures not only to accumulate wealth but to accumulate upon the accumulation. If we do not have enough rich people, that surely must be a terrible thing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

THE ECONOMY

JOB CREATION—ROLE OF PRIVATE SECTOR

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): In my riding yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I attended a press conference given by the Chamber of Commerce of Sainte-Foy. Management personnel made public the Delta project concerning the development of local high technology industries, and I saw further evidence of the fact that the private sector wants to get in on the economic recovery. From now on, the private sector will be the driving force to stimulate the economy and create jobs.

The project unveiled yesterday has to do with the establishment of an industrial incubator. As we know, the incubator takes an entrepreneurship approach to economic development, and its main objective is to promote the creation of new and sound businesses and the creation of permanent employment. It also makes it easier for researchers and entrepreneurs to operate in surroundings conducive to good business and co-operation.

By putting emphasis on the development of local high technology companies, a centre of incubation for new businesses will also confirm and stress the vocation of the recently established Sainte-Foy-Quebec City technological park. Its role is to support the tremendous efforts made by the cities of Sainte-Foy and Quebec, the private sector, both levels of Government and various organizations.

By advocating such a wide-scale project in our region, the Chamber of Commerce of Sainte-Foy shows that it is anxious to contribute to the development of a challenging community project.

INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S YEAR

PROGRESS ACHIEVED OVER FOUR YEARS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, this year we are celebrating the fifth anniversary of the International Year of the Child.

On February 11 of this year, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) answered a question on the Order Paper about the status of the work of the Secretariat responsible for examining the progress made following the recommendations resulting from the International Year of the Child.

We were informed that the Secretariat had received responses from the 47 federal departments and agencies affected by the recommendations of the Canadian Commission for the International Year of the Child.

We are still waiting for a report on these activities. Incidentally, our Ambassador to the United Nations, the Hon. Stephen Lewis, will be the guest speaker this afternoon at the Canadian Council for Children and Youth.

The House will recall, Mr. Speaker, that there is still much to be done in the way of protecting our children's rights. According to one report published in this country, one child out of five in Canada is now living in poverty. The Government must take a position on this very serious problem and it has a duty to take any steps that are necessary to assist and protect our children.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON FOREIGN TAKEOVERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I released a balance sheet on the Canadianization record of the Government. Decima Research showed in September that 85 per cent of Canadians want more Canadianization of our economy. However, this balance sheet shows an abysmal record since September. It includes a warm welcome of the foreign takeover of Mitel, plans to change the CDC that will end its Canadianization function, lack of action on Canadian content laws in the auto industry, and a series of decisions in which FIRA failed to act to protect Canadian workers.

There are now five cases on which the Government can improve its record, and I challenge it to do so. It can help White Farm Equipment in Brantford, block two foreign publishing takeovers to allow Canadians to buy them, let workers buy out Canadian Porcelain in Hamilton, and block the rumoured sale of de Havilland to Boeing.

The Government says Canada is open for business, but its actions make Canada open for surrender. I call on the Government to reverse its sorry record.

INDUSTRY

NORTHERN TELECOM LIMITED—RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Northern Telecom Limited, located in Nepean-Carleton, is the second largest designer and manufacturer of telecommunications equipment in North America and is a significant supplier of integrated office systems. The Canadian-based corporation sells and services equipment in more than 90 countries, through an organization of 47,000 employees. Bell Northern Research, also in Nepean-Carleton, is 70 per cent owned by Northern Telecom and 30 per cent owned by Bell Canada. It is Canada's largest private industrial research and development company.

Northern Telecom was the first company to offer a complete line of fully digital telecommunication products with the DMS-100 family. It was the first to produce a fully digital private branch exchange and the largest selling PBX in the world. More recently, it was the first to produce the Meridian line of fully integrated voice and data office systems.

Yesterday in Nepean-Carleton the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) officially opened Bell Northern's $37 million Lab 3, designed to house more than 1,900 engineers, technologists, managers, and support staff. At the official opening the Chairman of the Board of Northern Telecom indicated that the company spent $1.3 billion on research and development in the past five years. More important, he announced that Northern Telecom would be spending $4 billion on research and development over the next five years. Mr. Speaker, think of what that will mean for innovation, for jobs, for exports, and for new wealth.

Northern Telecom is confidence—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

SOCIAL SECURITY

QUESTIONS ASKED BY THE ELDERLY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the elderly in my riding and across Canada have asked me to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) why he decided to cut $50 a month from their incomes in 1990 and waste $56 million on changing the colour of our soldiers' uniforms. They also wanted me to ask the Prime Minister why he is making those cuts and sending 1,000 soldiers more to spend $100 million per year in Lahr, Germany. They asked me why the elderly have to put up with cuts in their Old Age Security pension while the Prime Minister spends half a million on parties like the one held in Quebec City.

The elderly have asked me why the Prime Minister did not worry about the deficit when he gave away $95 million to a bank in Western Canada. The elderly asked me why the Prime Minister did not worry about the deficit when he signed an agreement that will give the oil multinationals a present of $2.5 billion. They want to know why the Prime Minister is asking the elderly to make sacrifices so the rich can get richer.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the elderly have asked me why the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are asking senior citizens to give up $50 a month to send a present of $125,000 to well-off Canadians.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CHANGES SUGGESTED

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be an acute shortage of Tories in the House today, certainly of Ministers. The Budget is a travesty. It is worse than a crime; everyone now knows it is a blunder. Certainly all Members of the House know it. Yet the Ministers and backbenchers are out trying to sell this can of worms to the Canadian public, and they will not buy it.

I appeal to the good sense of the Deputy Prime Minister when I suggest to him that we get Members back in the House and back to the drawing board to correct the obvious injustices in the Budget before we rise at the end of June.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear a question in that statement but, if you will permit me, I will reply with a statement.

The Hon. Member knows from sitting on this side, and now sitting on that side, that Members of Parliament have many other responsibilities that they must fulfil, both throughout the country and in committees. I simply ask you, Mr. Speaker, to compare the ranks over there which are quite thin. I do not see his Leader, his House leader, or a few others.

Mr. Johnston: He knows that his Members are out on the road trying to sell this can of worms.

APPEAL FOR ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS IN CHAMBER

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance has been spouting the Party line. We want Members of the Conservative Party to think about the Budget and the fact that a senior citizen living in Montreal will be more than $4,000 below the poverty line by the year 1990 under the Budget. I appeal to the good judgment and sense of the Deputy Prime Minister to bring Members back to the House and to the drawing board, at least to correct that injustice before Parliament rises at the end of June.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Members on the government side are doing precisely the same thing as Members on the Liberal side.

However, let us look at it in a positive light for a moment. Real output in the Canadian economy, as measured by constant dollar gross national expenditure, grew by 0.9 per cent during the first quarter of 1985. Members opposite have been told, and know, that interest rates have dropped by three percentage points since we took office. They know that 150,000 jobs were created immediately following the November 8 statement, and that the number of jobs since the time that the Government has changed has increased some 350,000. That would not have happened if he were still sitting on this side and that honourable bunch over there were still in office.

REQUEST THAT GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT BE DOUBLE INDEXED

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, we seem to have trouble having a meeting of minds during the Question Period. I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Finance. The Gazette referred to the Budget's provisions on deindexation as an inhuman course. Will she at least recommend to the Minister that the guaranteed income supplement be double indexed as it was when our Government introduced the six and five restraint program, in order to protect those people living at and below the poverty line who will lose up to $4,000 of purchasing power by the year 1990 as a result of the Budget?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that it was our Party that increased the GIS in 1979. The reason for all the smoke and mirrors and talk about deindexing while the opposition Party was in Government was that it allowed inflation to get so far out of control that senior citizens could not live with it.

THE BUDGET

CAPITAL GAINS TAX—IMPACT ON SMALL AND MEDIUM SIZED BUSINESSES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, after the Budget was brought down, that same evening the Leader of the Official Opposition expressed his doubts about the impact the capital gains tax exemption would have on investment in small- and medium-sized businesses and job creation. Yesterday, three different groups of experts confirmed his apprehensions and maintained that this bonanza for the wealthy would encourage speculation in real estate, discourage small investors who create jobs and reduce the Government's revenue.

I shall, if I may, direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board, in the absence of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. Considering this unanimity among experts from the private sector and the academic world, does the Government intend to reverse its decision and immediately close the door on this tax break for the wealthy and restrict it to capital gains as a result of investing in small- and medium-sized businesses that would create new jobs, but only in Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides is well acquainted with the Government's position. In fact, it is a position that he himself has held for quite a long time. De-indexing—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I am not getting a chance to reply. Give me a break for two minutes. You might learn something. You have not even read the Budget.

Mr. Speaker, the measures in this Budget... this is a job-creation Budget, a Budget that has confidence in Canadians. It is a Budget that restores confidence, that is finally telling Canadians: Listen, our Government does not intend to intervene in the daily decision-making of every Canadian. We will give you the room to manoeuver, which is only fair, since according to the statistics it is clear that the vast majority of jobs have been created by small- and medium-sized businesses. And the measures in the Budget are going to encourage small- and medium-sized businesses to create more jobs.

TAX INCREASES—IMPACT ON SMALL AND MEDIUM SIZED BUSINESSES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the President of the Treasury Board is very disappointing. I am not referring only to the concern expressed by the Official Opposition, but also to the advice made public by academic and private sector experts.

Still concerning small- and medium-sized companies—and again, Mr. Speaker, I am not referring to my own observations—the President of the Treasury Board must have read newspaper reports about a panel of tax experts, lawyers and accountants who stated that the capital gains tax exemption was not going to do anything at all for small businesses.

Here is my question. Does the Government not agree that such a huge tax increase will deprive Canadians of the purchasing power they need to buy goods and services offered by small companies, and that by reducing the purchasing power of Canadians, small- and medium-sized businesses in turn find themselves short of investment funds because they no longer have a market for their products?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): That, Mr. Speaker, is the same argument we heard throughout the debate after my colleague made his economic statement last November 8. They kept saying: It is terrible! We cannot believe what is happening! It will throw hundreds of thousands of people out of work! But let us have a look at the figures: since this Government came into office, more than 200,000 new jobs were created. This Government has done more for economic recovery since it assured power than the previous administration did in a number of years.

That is just an argument. I know all about economic models!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. de Cotret: Listen, I know all about economic models. The facts are there. If you want to question the figures released by Statistics Canada, go ahead. In my opinion, it does an outstanding job. We have created more than 200,000 jobs, and there will be more new jobs as a result of the measures we have just announced.

PENSIONS

INDEXATION—EFFECT OF BUDGET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been conveying to the House the reaction on the pension proposals that it has obtained, either when the Minister of Finance goes to the Albany Club in Toronto or the Prime Minister attends a black tie dinner at the Toronto Club.

I have a copy of a telegram that was sent to the Minister of Finance yesterday about which I would like to question the Deputy Prime Minister. The telegram comes from the President of the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Association of Canada. It reads as follows:

The National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation representing more than 400,000 Canadians strongly protest recent budget proposals to reduce the income of our elderly by restricting indexing protection of federal pensions and income tax exemptions. This violates the often repeated promises of Prime Minister Mulroney and constitutes a transfer of funds from the elderly to fulfil budget promises to the business community.

• (1125)

My question to the Minister arising from this concerns a particular pensioner. Does the Government realize that the pensioner particularly hurt is the man or woman who grew up during the Depression, lived through, or fought in, the Second World War, was expecting to obtain a full and adequate pension in five years, and instead will have his or her pension reduced by $600? Is that the Government's concept of justice?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I always like the assumption of the Leader of the NDP that he has some kind of monopoly on morality.

Mr. Broadbent: No monopoly.

Mrs. McDougall: It was this Government which increased the GIS in 1979. It was this Government which extended the spouse's allowance last fall. It is this Government that is attempting to keep inflation under control, which is the best thing we can do for senior citizens. By keeping inflation under control, the costs of everything they buy will be lower than they would be otherwise.

Mr. Axworthy: Then why did you raise the sales tax?

Mrs. McDougall: We have kept senior citizens at the forefront of our minds in planning this. We have looked after the ones at the lowest income level. We will continue to do that. We have made that commitment and we have done it, and we will carry on doing it.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians know that the Government is hacking away at pensions like no other Government in the past history of the country; that is what Canadians know.

My supplementary question concerns the extraordinarily insensitive statement of the Minister of Finance yesterday when he said: "There aren't enough rich in Canada". Is this why the Government, in its own budget forecasting document which it tried to keep secret, revealed that within five years Canadian pensioners would be losing $1.6 billion, and at the same time the rich in Canada would be gaining because of the scandalous introduction of the new capital gains tax provision, $1.3 billion? We do not have enough rich, according to the Minister of Finance. Is this why the Government plans to take money from the pensioners to give to the rich?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members of the NDP have been calling, for a long time, for a minimum tax. We have committed ourselves to doing that in the Budget. They may have missed that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: I know that boys will be boys, but they might actually want to hear the answer.

NDP Members, in their rather bemuddled economics, think that a minimum tax will solve the deficit problem. A minimum tax will not solve the deficit problem because of the debt which had been built up over the last 10 years by the Official Opposition Party. We could go into that further, if they would like to, but senior citizens know about debt. They know that it is a bad thing. They know that young people need jobs, and that the measures which we have brought in will produce those jobs. They also know that we cannot go on building up debt forever. Even the economics professor who sits on the other side of the House has said that we cannot go on with deficit financing forever.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO BUDGET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Minister and the Government, which make much about consultation, that 400,000 Canadian pensioners think the Government is wrong. Do you get that clearly? They are saying that you are wrong. I say to the Minister that if they had brought in a minimum tax this year, the way they are imposing a burden on pensioners and a tax increase on ordinary Canadians this year, they would have received an additional $400 million which they could be using to help pensioners, instead of taking away more money from them.

Since the Conservatives are going out all across the country this weekend, they will hear some interesting things if they talk to ordinary Canadians, not those in the Albany Club, but those in senior citizens' homes and in little communities. Will they be prepared to change their Budget and restore indexation to Canadian pensioners?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we made our stand very clear in the Budget on modifying indexation. It is in the Budget. It is a policy to which we are committed. Our conversations with Canadians have included discussions with respect to fairness, equity, balance, and the need for the Government to reduce its debt. We have conversations with people; we do not shout at them.

• (1130)

Mr. Broadbent: Girls will be girls.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. If the Minister really believes that Canada's senior citizens who live below the poverty line should share in the burden of deficit reduction, will he not test his Government's convictions by referring the deindexation proposal to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs in order that Canadians 65 years of age and over can tell the Government firsthand that they want the decision to deindex reversed?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if you read carefully the Budget papers tabled by my colleague the Minister of Finance last week, it is quite clear that no senior citizens in Canada and no beneficiary of any social program in this country will receive less than formerly. On the contrary, some increases are still provided for in the budget. Any attempt to interpret our Budget as an attack against older and poorer citizens is an absolute misrepresentation of papers introduced—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: Wait a minute! It is a misrepresentation of papers tabled by my colleague.

[English]

REQUEST THAT STUDY BE COMMISSIONED

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, the definition of the poverty line supplied by Statistics Canada is fully tied to the CPI. As a result of deindexation, thousands of Canadian seniors who find themselves above the poverty line today will find themselves below the poverty line by the year 1990-91. Will the Government do the honourable thing, and commission and table in the House a study to show how many thousands of Canadians will be affected and pushed below the poverty line as a result of the Government's decision to deindex?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first, the GIS remains fully indexed. Second, there were no measures with respect to deindexation introduced in the Budget. We placed a cap on the level of indexation in a way which would—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Is this a new Budget?

Mr. de Cotret: No. You have not read the actual Budget; that is your problem.

Through the Budget presented last week we have said we will protect Canadians at any rate of inflation above 3 per cent—and we will protect them fully. The GIS is totally protected.

There is no question of trying to solve the fiscal mess which we inherited from the Hon. Member's Government, on the backs of poor Canadians.

POSITION OF PENSIONERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister was reported to have said yesterday in Toronto that he wanted to reward those Canadians who get up half an hour earlier. Is the Government saying to retired Canadians, who worked hard all their lives to provide the benefits we now enjoy, that they did not work hard enough while they were working, and if they got up half an hour earlier today then the Government would restore the financial security it is proposing to take away from them?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is not usual for the Hon. Member opposite to distort either numbers or facts, from my observation of him in the House of Commons over the years.

Mr. Deans: That is unfair.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not see how such a compliment can be unfair, Mr. Speaker. What is unfair is that the Hon. Member's colleagues do not follow his shining example in getting their facts straight.

What the Budget is all about is putting people back to work. Since when has the NDP been against the creation of jobs?

EXISTENCE OF POLL QUERIED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, if the statement is inaccurate, then the Minister can blame The Toronto Star, since that is where it was printed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm to the Members of the House that the Government has in its possession the results of a poll which clearly indicate that the overwhelming majority of Canadians do not support the Government's move to deindex old age pensions?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that, to my knowledge, no such poll exists.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR IDENTIFICATION OF GROUPS WHO RECOMMENDED 3 PER CENT DEINDEXATION FOR ELDERLY POOR

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday, I had a chance to talk to the President of the Association québécoise des retraités et des préretraités au Québec, and I can assure the Members of this House that they are not very happy, and that at the first senior citizens' "Salon" to be held in Montreal, a petition will be circulated, condemning the Government for having failed to meet its commitments.

Mr. Speaker, could the President of the Treasury Board explain to the House why the Prime Minister admitted that he failed to meet the commitments made to senior citizens during the election campaign? In its January consultation paper, the Government made a formal and solemn commitment, through the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is the official spokesman, according to the Prime Minister, not to apply any savings to a reduction of the deficit, and the purpose of the consultation exercise was to improve the situation of those most in need.

I have here the paper released by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, on which Conservative Members... 92 groups appeared before the Committee. Could the Minister identify those groups which recommended that the Government cut indexing by 3 per cent for the elderly who are most in need in Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie. He has been promising me a question and I want to thank him for his good intentions. I simply want to repeat that if the Hon. Member had taken the trouble to read the Budget in detail, he would have realized that one of our major considerations throughout has been to avoid making the neediest in our society bear the brunt of the enormous deficit we inherited from the previous Government. And that is why we have exempted certain groups, especially among the elderly, from any measures that might reduce their purchasing power. I also would like to point out, once again, that no one in Canada, either among our elderly or among those Canadians receiving family allowance benefits, will receive a monthly cheque that is lower than the one he or she is receiving at the present time.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING PENALIZED ELDERLY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the President of the Treasury Board that I did read the Budget. Unlike him, however, I went to see elderly people who feel the impact of the Budget every day. Perhaps I ought to warn him that next time he goes back to his riding people will remind him about the $50 monthly income increase they will not get and point out to him that the child tax credit is no longer fully indexed as it was when the Liberals were in office.

I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board if he can explain to elderly Canadians and families that will be penalized by the Budget why he chose to deprive them when he wasted $56 million only to change the colour of military uniforms? Why do you ask the elderly to pay for that?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, my colleague is confused and has got his files mixed up.

But still there is a question to which I would like to give a direct answer. Nobody is going to be penalized to the tune of $50. After reading the Budget, it is absolutely misleading to claim that somebody is going to be penalized. On the contrary, I repeat that the Budget makes it clear that not a single elderly Canadian will suffer from loss of income. Making such a statement in public is an attempt to mislead Canadians and elderly people in this country. I can say that my constituents are fully aware of the Budget provisions and they know their monthly cheques will not be reduced.

SASKATCHEWAN SENIOR CITIZENS' ORGANIZATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Finance). It is a question with respect to consultation prior to the Budget. In the week of May 13-17, six representatives from the official Saskatchewan seniors organization called "Action Now" spent a week lobbying in Ottawa. They tried to see the Minister of Finance, but his door was closed. They tried to see Saskatchewan Cabinet Ministers, but they could not get by their doors. They even tried to see Saskatchewan P.C. MPs, but they could not get by their doors.

• (1140)

Why were Conservative Members of Parliament scared to meet with the Saskatchewan senior citizens' organization? Why would the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance, or anyone, including the Minister of Transport, not meet with that group which represents the official organization of Saskatchewan senior citizens? What does consultation mean, if they would not meet with that group?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have been involved in a volunteer capacity with senior citizens all my life and I have never once refused to meet with a senior citizens' group from anywhere. Perhaps that was the week I was in Saskatchewan.

I would like to tell the Hon. Member that in the consultations which I undertook throughout the winter months with many groups, including senior citizens, people who were interested in children and youth, and cultural groups, I always closed with one question: If there was one thing which we could do for the people of Canada what would it be? Every one of those people said the same thing. They told us to look after those who need it most. That is what we have done with the GIS. We have looked after the people who need help the most.

ORGANIZATION'S ANNUAL CONVENTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance is not here this morning I want an answer from the Minister who is responsible saying why the official organization of Saskatchewan senior citizens was not able to meet with a Saskatchewan Minister, Saskatchewan MPs, or the Minister herself. Why did that happen?

Because they wandered the hallways for five days to no avail, will the Minister now make a commitment with respect to the annual convention of the organization, which takes place next Monday and Tuesday in Moose Jaw, to send a member of the Cabinet to Moose Jaw to consult with the senior citizens of Saskatchewan? Will she make that commitment here and now? I want to know this morning.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I know who will be at the convention. I am sure it will be the Hon. Member, who will spread fear and scare tactics, as his Party has been shouting and doing since this discussion began.

When he is talking to them, will he talk to them about the other things which are important in the Budget, such as the need to keep inflation down and the jobs which will be created? We do not want another Depression such as that through which many of those people lived. The seniors will understand that. He should go and talk to them and explain what the whole Budget is about, not just one part of it. He should not use any more scare tactics.

EXTERNAL AID

FAMINE RELIEF—EXTENSION OF MANDATE OF HON. DAVID MACDONALD

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, during the last several months Canadians have responded with great generosity to the famine in Ethiopia and in other parts of Africa. The response has come from Canadians, young and old.

In its response to the MacDonald Report, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence recommended that the mandate of Mr. MacDonald be renewed so that the aid program could continue at maximum efficiency. I would like to ask the Minister for External Relations whether anything has happened with respect to that particular recommendation?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the question put by the chairman of the Standing Committee gives me the opportunity to thank him and the members of his committee for their excellent work and his quick reply to the report of our co-ordinator, Mr. MacDonald.

I am pleased to advise the House this morning that I have decided to extend the terms of reference of the co-ordinator, David MacDonald, until the end of December 1985 with three additional months to submit his recommendations and reports.

I have also made available to him a $18 million fund for rehabilitation projects developed by non-governmental organizations.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to thank Canadians for their generosity and invite them to continue to support us.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. In reply to a question yesterday the Minister spoke of the Chairman of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. The Minister said:

> He is most supportive of the budgetary measures—

That is absolutely and completely untrue. We met with the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, and its representatives agreed, as they stated publicly in their press releases, that because of the economy of the Atlantic provinces—the Gross Provincial Product is only 20 per cent in the private sector—the Budget will have an absolutely disastrous effect on the Atlantic area.

As our champion in Cabinet—there is no one on that side who will speak for the Atlantic; he is all that we have—will he now withdraw what he said? Will he come clean with the House and with the people in Atlantic Canada and admit that the Budget will have disastrous consequences for Atlantic Canada? Will he propose special measures to promote growth in that area?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not want to withdraw something which is true. I would go further to say that, if the Hon. Member would present the Budget fairly to his area, he would be able to translate to his constituents and others the fact that it is an approach which, hopefully, will reduce the unemployment level which has plagued that area so unfortunately. It is an unemployment level which, under the previous Government, in the 15 years it was in power, jumped from slightly below 5 per cent to, in some cases, over 20 per cent. What an indictment of the Party which he now represents!

ATLANTIC PROVINCES ECONOMIC COUNCIL—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, we have heard that Tory times are hard times, but I never believed it until now. Not only are they hard times, but we are seeing a callous and uncaring attitude, and insensitivity, and dishonesty is patent. I will give the Minister one more chance to withdraw what he said yesterday and to admit that the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, and every major spokesman—the Premier of Newfoundland on through—have said that the Budget will have disastrous consequences for that economy because the private sector is weaker than in other parts of the country. Will the Minister withdraw what he said yesterday? Will he say that he was wrong? Will he bring in special budgetary measures to improve the economy in Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Hon. Member was not at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Regional Development last night. If he had been, many of the doubts which he seems to have, would undoubtedly have been settled.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. On May 10 the Prime Minister said that his Government would never do anything which would be a hindrance to native and aboriginal peoples. But the Minister should know that Indian people already suffer from the highest poverty rates in Canada. They depend twice as much on government programs, such as Old Age Security. Why has the Government gone back on the word of the Prime Minister and reduced the purchasing power of senior Indian people by $100 next year, $200 the following year, and so on in a cumulative manner, so that Indian people will be trapped in a cycle of poverty forever?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, native people will benefit from the positive measures in the Budget, the same as will other people. They will benefit from the job-training programs.

Mr. Broadbent: Capital gains is great! Boys will be boys!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. McDougall: There are positive measures in the Budget for native people, as there are for others. One of the problems in the native population, as the Hon. Member knows—and I appreciate his question—is lack of jobs. The types of job-training programs which the Government has come up with, and the kind of job creation which will come out of the Budget, as it did from the economic statement, will benefit native people as well as other Canadians. We are very sensitive to those issues, as the Hon. Member well knows.

REQUEST THAT PENSIONS BE FULLY INDEXED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the same Minister. The jobs have not yet materialized. We will wait a long time before we see jobs materialize in Indian communities. In the meantime, the seniors are suffering.

Considering the poverty of Indian people, will the Government reverse its policy of deindexing and cutting the purchasing power of Indian seniors, and commit itself to full indexation so that in 1990 an Indian senior on Old Age Security will be able to buy the same basket of groceries that he can buy in 1985?

• (1150)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, with the long-term programs we have started to put in place, and the improvement already—already, Mr. Speaker—in the number of jobs which have been created, and the amount of investment which is going on in western Canada, which does have something to do with job opportunities for natives, we will see Indian people and native people much better off by the year 1990, as we will see all Canadians better off by then.

VIA RAIL

FARE INCREASES—THE ELDERLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Transport).

Yesterday, in committee, VIA Rail officials confirmed that a fare increase would be needed to make up for the cuts in the Wilson Budget. They referred to increases ranging from 30 to 65 per cent. Will the Minister of State now assure this House that the elderly at least, who travel by train to a very large extent, will not be imposed a fare increase on top of what has already been inflicted on them by the Wilson Budget?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the Hon. Member for Papineau. Concerning the assessment of cost increases, allow me to be somewhat skeptical. It is not possible in my view at such short notice and in such a fuzzy way to claim there will be a 30, 40 or 50 per cent increase. Although it is quite possible that fares may be increased, this could also have occurred independently of the Budget as tabled, in the sense that we are subsidizing that corporation to the tune of $400 million, and I am referring to former statements made by the Hon. Minister of Transport or myself in which we indicated that VIA Rail should strive for a better performance, if not for operating self-sufficiency.

As to the suggestion made by the Hon. Member concerning senior citizens, I am taking note of it. We cannot tell VIA Rail how to go about increasing its fares. But it would be relevant, wise and logical in my view to have some consideration for our senior citizens, the handicapped and other groups of people.

TRANSPORT

HORNER REPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

The Minister of Transport has received the report from the task force headed by Mr. Horner. Will the Minister of State assure Hon. Members that the report will be tabled in this House within the shortest time frame possible, as hoped for by train users who want the report to be made public as soon as possible?

Also, will the Minister take note of the representations that have been made for a freeze on any fare increase until VIA Rail has received the passenger cars that have not yet been delivered but should soon be? In other words, no fare increase until VIA Rail can offer its passengers clean and modern trains?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I would not dare say that we are going to insist on the company's refraining from increasing its fares, since there are technical factors involved. And I would hate to see the Hon. Member in a year from now having to blame me for having compelled the company to increase its deficit. Definitely, in that context, we are going to make sure that is done within the most reasonable period of time. For the information of the Hon. Member for Papineau, the same answer would apply to the question of tabling the Horner report. As soon as it is available and its contents are accessible, I believe it will be submitted to this House.

MULTICULTURALISM

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. This weekend marks the end of this year's Folk Art Festival in the City of St. Catharines. The festival, which is in its seventeenth year, brought together 35 different ethnic groups from the Niagara region, and is the largest folk art festival in southern Ontario. In view of this successful folk art festival, and in view of the Minister's recent successful multicultural convention in western Canada, could the Minister tell the House what further programs he intends to initiate to promote the cause of multiculturalism?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for the question, and congratulate him and the associations involved in the very successful festival which has been held. It is the kind of festival we can all be proud of as Canadians.

The first ever federal-provincial conference on multiculturalism was successful because it brought the two levels of government, federal and provincial, together for the first time ever to discuss this very important issue. That in itself is a major step. What we will be doing now, and our thrust over the next few months, is to take a very hard look at multiculturalism in the business sector and how the two could be combined. We will be making a major effort in terms of race relations, working with governmental and non-governmental organizations—

Mr. Axworthy: Order.

Mr. Murta: —to make sure that there is more sensitivity in this country and, goodness knows, we need it.

PENSIONS

DEINDEXATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Oral Question Period could perhaps be extended, since there are no Ministers in the House.

My question is for the Acting Prime Minister. This partial deindexation of pensions is unfair. It goes against the promise made to pensioners and has been strongly criticized. When will the Government be willing to admit its mistake in introducing this measure and when will it reverse its position on the deindexation of pensions?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to deindexation. There is no such thing. There is a limit, an established rate so that all Canadians who now receive payments from the Federal Government will have their cheques fully indexed if the consumer price index rises over 3 per cent. There is no deindexation at all.

I would also like to tell my hon. friend that there is absolutely no danger that any recipient of benefits under our social programs will get less than at present.

Mr. Keeper: The Progressive Conservatives give the same reply to this question as the Liberals when they were in power.

An Hon. Member: It is the same!

INQUIRY WHEN PENSIONERS WILL BE TREATED IN FAIR MANNER

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

When will the Government realize that it cannot treat unfairly the pensioners of this country and when will it truly break with the past and treat our pensioners fairly?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Budget treats all groups in our society fairly, honestly and honourably. I can assure you that, as for me, I am not ashamed to trust the Canadian people. You, on the other side, may be ashamed to say that you trust the Canadian people. We inherited a problem from a financially irresponsible Government which accumulated an incredible debt of over $38 billion a year. This could no longer be tolerated. We took fair measures for all Canadians and they are responding very well to our appeal. Mr. Speaker, what we have done has been done fairly.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—OFFER OF CONTRACTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Reported in the Winnipeg newspaper this morning was a confirmed statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the U.S. Defence Department is now free to offer contracts to Canadian companies under the SDI research program. This makes a total sham and mockery of statements made in this House that there would be no such involvement until a direct policy decision has been made by the Government and reviewed by this Parliament and by the Canadian people.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to repudiate that stand and clearly indicate to the U.S. Department of Defence that no contract should be offered to Canadian companies until there has been a very clear policy decision on the part of the Government on whether Canadian companies should be involved in any way, shape, or form?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry certainly takes a quantum leap with that question. What he is asking the Government to do, if I understand him correctly, is to put a total ban on any trading relationships, particularly in the research and high tech area, between Canadian companies and the United States in connection with its SDI program. He should, I would think, have been cognizant of the fact that when he was sitting on this side in government, some of those very contracts were entered into between Canadian and U.S. companies to do the precise kind of work he is talking about now.

● (1200)

There never has been any impediment or barrier to Canadian companies entering into contractual relationships with firms in the U.S., the U.K., Japan, or anywhere else for that matter. If I have interpreted his question wrongly, then my answer will have to be amended. But if that is what he intended, I would think it would be a terrible impediment to place in the way of the free enterprise system in this country and on Canadian companies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A very short supplementary.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, that is an incredibly convoluted answer. We in this House have debated, time and again, whether Canadians should be involved in star wars research, and the Minister has now openly admitted that Canadian companies can be involved.

Is the Government clearly going to indicate there should be no research involvement in SDI related subjects until the Government has made a clear decision to have it debated in Parliament? For goodness sake, will you make up your minds and be clear for the Canadian people on what you are all about on this very vital issue?

Mr. Stevens: You are the only one that is confused.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): It is the Hon. Member who should make up his mind, Sir, because it was him who was a member of a Government sitting here—

An Hon. Member: "He".

Mr. Nielsen: He, sorry; you are quite right. It was he who was sitting as a member of a Government on this side when contracts were entered into by at least two and, I think, three universities with U.S. firms in the laser and optics fields. Now he is saying that that was some kind of wrong decision.

Some Hon. Members: You're right.

Mr. Fulton: Lloyd signed the contract.

Mr. Nielsen: We know that the Government has in place—I hear the NDP saying that is wrong, that Canadian businesses—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Broadbent: We are saying that you are right.

Mr. Nielsen: —should not be in the area of high tech or any of these futuristic businesses.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We said you are right.

Mr. Nielsen: I think that is a shameful attitude to be taking.

With respect to the process, the Hon. Member knows we have set up a process whereby we expect to obtain the hard facts upon which to base a value judgment on whether or not the Canadian Government is going to become involved in any way with the United States SDI program. We expect a report in due course, a decision will be made, and he will be aware of it in the normal course of events.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Thursday, May 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, on May 23 my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presented his Budget to the House of Commons. This is the most comprehensive statement of the Progressive Conservative Government's principles and policies to date. It has taken the mandate for change which we received from the voters last September and translated into an agenda of action. This has been accomplished through a commitment to consultation and through listening to the concerns of Canadians. The message has come to us loud and clear: Canadians want jobs and economic renewal. They want a rejuvenated private sector where success is rewarded instead of effort subsidized. Canadians want a Government that is more efficient and less wasteful of taxpayer's money. They want the spectre of our huge and growing national debt to be dealt with effectively. This Budget has centred around those themes and taken decisive action on the difficult issues of the day, issues which the previous Government chose to ignore. It has done this with measures which are realistic, effective and fair. The Budget is a document that is truly national in scope.

Today I would like to tell you of its importance from an Atlantic Provinces perspective. We all know what our probelms have been for the last 50 years. We need real, productive, satisfying jobs rather than government make-work projects. We have seen the wealth of our reserves tapped, but the profits ended up somewhere else. We have seen our youth move west and south looking for opportunities. We have had to fight with a Government in Ottawa which thought it knew more about what we needed than we did. The new Progressive Conservative Government's change in attitude came almost immediately. The Atlantic Energy Accord signalled a new day for Newfoundland and for all the Atlantic Provinces. The benefits from our resources will stay at home where they belong. The Budget recognizes this need for self-reliance and private initiative.

For budding entrepreneurs, assisting small business starving for capital, there is the personal lifetime capital gains tax exemption of $500,000. This will be phased in over five years beginning with a $20,000 exemption in 1985. This change will allow small businessmen to reap the rewards of their achievement when they sell their business. In recognition of the special circumstances of the agricultural community, farmers will be allowed the full $500,000 personal lifetime exemption immediately.

Capital will also be made more available by changes to the investment rules for pension funds. Large funds will be encouraged to invest in Canadian enterprise through special small business investment corporations and small business investment limited partnerships. RRSP funds will be eligible to invest in private Canadian corporations with which they deal at arm's length. These measures will allow Canadians and not the Government to decide where to put their money and how to create wealth, economic activity, and, most important, jobs.

The small business bond program has been extended for two years. This will allow farmers and business people to obtain lower cost capital through financial institutions. Special venture capital funds administered by labour groups will be enlarged to invest in small businesses as well. These measures and many others will aid the private sector in Atlantic Canada to grow and flourish. Regional development funding will continue, of course, but we have clearly placed the emphasis on private initiative and local decision-making.

We have also taken some fundamental steps to put the Government's own house in order. In this Budget the Government has set itself the goal of eliminating the obstacles to economic renewal posed by waste and inefficiency in Government itself. During the past few months many Canadians told us that they are willing to share the burden of deficit reduction if the Government would first put its own house in order; if it pulls out of wasteful and ineffective programs and allows the private sector to get on with the job of economic renewal. The actions that we are taking with this Budget prove our commitment to do just that. The Budget contains measures that will result in more efficient, effective, and responsive Government.

Last November, only six weeks after taking office, the Government took action to cut its expenditures by $4.2 billion. Since then the Government has been looking at other ways to increase efficiency by cutting out unproductive programs, reducing overlap, and introducing cost recovery measures. A number of internal management initiatives to recover costs, streamline Government, and reduce expenditures have been taken in the Budget.

In addition, the Government has identified the programs and policies where further significant savings can be realized. The task force chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) has carried out a comprehensive examination of government programs, the results of which are reflected in the measures we have announced in the Budget. The work of these joint private and public sector committees will continue to improve the management of government programs and services.

The Budget also sets out a number of additional internal measures that the Government is taking to tighten its own belt and increase the effectiveness with which taxpayers' money is spent. For example, the Public Service pension plan will be put on a fully funded basis with no taxpayer subsidy. The guarantee of full indexation of MPs' and Senators' pensions will be ended by January 1, 1986. An aggressive program is being put into place to improve the Government's management of its cash and to dispose of property that it no longer needs. The size of the federal Public Service will be reduced by 15,000 positions over the next six years and there will be no compensation for inflation in the Government's operating and capital budgets. As a result of these measures, and those taken in November, the Government will save more than $2 billion this year and that figure will grow to over $3 billion by 1990.

Some of these measures will have an impact on Atlantic Canada, but there is a hard reality which we must face. Unless the Government takes action to reduce the deficit and control the debt spiral, its ability to provide essential programs and services will be threatened. Care must be taken to balance these expenditure reductions with tax increases for people and corporations that can afford to pay them. The Budget has struck a careful balance which is realistic and fair while taking effective action on many fronts.

The special nature of the economy of Atlantic Canada is recognized in the budget package. The variable entrance requirement for unemployment insurance has been extended. This will allow many Maritimers to continue to qualify for benefits that they need because of the seasonal nature of their industries. The Budget also announced a major review of the unemployment insurance program. The objective is to improve and simplify the system to make it fairer and more responsive to the labour market. Let me emphasize that we are not undertaking this review with the objective of reducing federal contributions to the unemployed in the country.

At the Regina First Ministers' Conference, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) announced a new and innovative approach to training and job creation based on greater private sector and local participation. This approach was unanimously endorsed by provincial Governments and has received broad support from private sector and community groups across the country. We have allocated $900 million to these programs this year. Agreements are now being negotiated so that they can be implemented as quickly as possible. For 1986-87 the Government will allocate $900 million to these programs. This commitment now will be of great help to those designing and implementing those programs. It should help get them off the ground and operating more quickly. This means better and more effective job-creation and training programs in the future.

Federal funds will go to projects developed in local communities that have a purpose and a future. This symbolizes our approach to government management and debt control. We realize that we must begin by putting our own house in order. We also made sure that all parts of Canadian society pay their fair share. The Budget includes a number of actions that will be taken now to ensure greater fairness in the tax system.

For example, a minimum tax will be imposed on upper income Canadians in time for the 1986 taxation year. There will be a temporary deficit reduction surtax on high income Canadians and large corporations and a tax on the capital of large banks and trust companies. There are amendments which prevent taxpayers from avoiding tax by splitting income through the use of loans to spouses and children. There will be further amendments to the Income Tax Act which better meet the needs of disabled Canadians. There has been an elimination of tax shelters involving property such as yachts, recreational vehicles, hotels, and nursing homes.

Equally important, Mr. Speaker, is how the Government collects taxes. The Budget also includes a number of measures to achieve fair tax administration consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. For example, we have extension of the "innocent until proven guilty" concept to cases involving sales and excise taxes under the Excise Tax Act. There are clear limits to Revenue Canada's powers of search and seizure, and limits on the Government's authority to make retroactive income tax regulations. These changes will make the tax system fair and responsive to the needs of all Canadians.

The Budget further recognizes that reducing the deficit and controlling the national debt is in everyone's interest. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, cutting the deficit and reducing unemployment are not mutually exclusive. They are two aspects of the same challenge—building economic renewal and Canadian competitiveness. These problems are a vicious circle, Mr. Speaker. High deficits constrain our ability to create jobs. High unemployment, in turn, causes even higher deficits. The Budget proposes realistic, fair, and effective actions to break this vicious circle. It is centered on the three fundamental strategies that I outlined earlier.

The first is that the Government wants to encourage private initiative. We want Canadians, not politicians and bureaucrats, to control their own destiny and the future of the country. We want Canadians to invest in their own future. Second, the Government has become too big. It has become part of the problem instead of part of the solution. That is why we have been combing Government for waste and inefficiency since September. Our efforts are starting to pay off. The third key idea in the Budget is simply that future Governments will not be able to support growth and jobs and to provide all the services we want if we do not take control of our financial affairs.

The public debt is simply the sum of all past deficits. It took 100 years to accumulate a debt of $18 billion. Now, less than two decades later, the debt is approaching $200 billion and is doubling every five years. Our debt is spiralling out of sight. If we do not show the resolve to deal with this problem, the inevitable result will be paralysis of the Government of Canada. In such a situation Atlantic Canadians would pay the highest price. If this paralysis were allowed to set in, we could not do the things we must do to promote growth and jobs in the Maritimes. That is why the Budget takes action to reduce the deficit over the medium term, not so fast that the recovery is threatened, but not too slow to stop the build-up of debt.

As all Members of the House know, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada announced in its Budget that funding of the heavy water plants in Port Hawkesbury and Glace Bay would be discontinued. This decision had been recommended to the Government of Canada for several years. In 1985, the Government of Canada found itself in such adverse financial circumstances that funding of these operations could not be continued.

There will be consequential hardships for the employees of these plants. It is for this reason that the Government of Canada has directed AECL to present a fair and generous settlement package to the employees of these plants. The Prime Minister repeated that commitment this week in this Chamber. Although the exact terms of this package are not yet clear to the workers, I am confident that the workers at these plants will be satisfied when a fair and equitable settlement is agreed upon.

We must now move on with the job of creating new employment in northeastern Nova Scotia, not only for workers laid off from these plants, but also for the hundreds of others who have been unemployed for some time. We recognize that it is time for the Government of Canada to address the unemployment problem with a view to solving it. No previous administration has shown the present Government's commitment to creating employment.

• (1220)

The Cape Breton tax credit makes northeastern Nova Scotia the most attractive place in Canada to invest from a federal tax point of view. The visit of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to Cape Breton on Friday, the day after the Budget, highlights the Government's commitment to northeastern Nova Scotia.

This Budget has looked realistically at the problems of Atlantic Canadians and of all Canada and has taken effective action to solve them. It is a Budget built on our strong belief in the ability of Canadians and on the strength of this country. The Budget builds on this strength.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil) on the content and delivery of his speech to the House of Commons.

I was particularly interested in his comments concerning the deficit and unemployment. He made the point that those two subjects, although not mutually exclusive, in fact seemed to be very interdependent. Would he comment on the response that he has received from his constituents with respect to the Budget and its thrust? Is there a growing awareness in his part of the country, as I believe there is in mine, that we cannot solve one problem without the other? In other words, we cannot continue to let the national deficit rise and at the same time hope to create employment.

Inasmuch as the Budget contains tax incentives for his part of the country, I would be particularly interested to know what initial reaction he has received in that respect. I know that he keeps very close contact with his constituents and the people of that part of the country. What is their initial response on both those issues?

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, first I would say to the Hon. Member that we, like all Canadians, having gone through a period of spiralling deficit and high unemployment, realize that deficit spending does not necessarily result in job creation. I believe that the proof is here today.

We have gone through the other scenario and my constituents realize, as do all Canadians, that with approximately one-third of their tax dollars paying interest and servicing the national debt, the Government's flexibility with respect to introducing new programs and creating jobs in any area of the country is severely restricted.

With respect to the tax incentives, my constituents are very hopeful that this incentive package will attract new industry. I was very pleased to learn from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion last evening during the committee meetings that he has had eight to ten inquiries from business people and entrepreneurs who are interested in taking advantage of this additional incentive to locate and create jobs in northeastern Nova Scotia. We are very hopeful, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is certainly aware of the Department of Transport's closure of the Eddy Point Traffic Centre in his area. Does he support this decision, which has apparently been made by reason of cost effectiveness? The decision has been appealed. There are a number of organizations and individuals who are very concerned about that cost effectiveness concept being applied to the safety of human lives and the protection of the environment.

Is the Hon. Member going to join forces with those who want the reopening of the Eddy Point Traffic Centre, or would he prefer to approve the unilateral decision of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) which has created much uneasiness, dissatisfaction and apprehension in his riding?

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, first, I shared the concern of my constituents upon the announcement of a decision to close down the Eddy Point Traffic Centre. I put the case very aggressively to the Minister of Transport on behalf of continuing the operation.

However, it is not solely a question of cost effectiveness. There are other factors that come into play. The Hon. Member will know that one of the primary incentives for establishing this traffic centre was the existence of an operative oil refinery at the Strait of Canso. That refinery closed down several years ago under the previous administration.

I would say at this time that were it not for the very severe financial situation of the Government and the irresponsible spending of the previous administration, and had we not inherited such a massive deficit, we would have the revenue not only to fund and continue an operation such as the one at Eddy Point but to create many more Eddy Points, expand safety programs and address all the environmental concerns we have.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I see quite clearly from the answer that the Hon. Member is ready to approve a Budget that gives millions of dollars to multinationals. He is approving the additional two cents a litre on gas that will be a bonanza for American multinational companies. He is also saying that he is ready to accept the Government's penalizing the poor and those who live in remote areas, including people in his riding, in order to satisfy the multinationals.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Hon. Member that the greatest penalty that has been inflicted upon my constituents has been the gross unemployment they have incurred over the last number of decades under his administration.

Let me tell the Hon. Member that this Budget introduced a Cape Breton tax credit. It is that tax credit that we identify as the hope that jobs will be brought to the area, jobs that have been denied to my constituents for decades, and not by a Conservative Government. It is a new incentive and there will be jobs.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I want to welcome the Hon. Member to the House as an Atlantic brother. However, I want to ask him some questions about some matters he raised in his speech.

First, with respect to the tax incentives, does he really believe that a tax incentive in the Atlantic area where the private sector is already weak, not to mention below capacity, will be of any value? Indeed, there has been and at present there is a tax incentive program in place. It is a 50 per cent tax relief for businesses setting up in the area. The problem is that in order to get tax relief one must have a profit. You have to make money in order to pay taxes. Entrepreneurs and small businessmen who want to establish businesses in the Atlantic regions need something up front. They cannot wait until they get into business and begin making money.

● (1230)

Would the Hon. Member not think it would be a better idea if the Government were to take a position that it was going to build up infrastructure in the Atlantic area, which is weak, and if the Government were to provide up-front money for businesses wanting to start up in the Atlantic area rather than extending a tax incentive which, I submit, as the record will show, has already been in place and has not been effective?

Second, the Hon. Member talks about the impact of the Budget on the Atlantic area. I think all of us from the Atlantic area have a responsibility to put the case of our people and the case of the Atlantic Provinces was put, it seems to me, by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. It stated that in the Atlantic area 80 per cent of the gross provincial product comes from government sources, only 20 per cent from the private sector, compared to 55 per cent from the private sector in other parts of Canada. In other words, the important point is that the economy of the Atlantic area is more dependent than any other area of Canada on government spending. When you cut government spending and increase taxes you have a negative impact on a weak economy where the private sector is unable to respond.

I wanted to put those cases to the Hon. Member. Does he agree or disagree with them? If he agrees, would he take that position in his caucus with Cabinet and would he try to help all of us from the Atlantic area who want to see a fair deal made for our people?

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, first I would say that the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) does not understand the tax credit of which I spoke earlier. The tax credit is designed to attract business to the area. It is not only designed for the businesses and the entrepreneurs already there. There are people in other parts of Canada and in other parts of the world whom we are enticing to northeastern Nova Scotia and to Nova Scotia to create employment.

When the Hon. Member talks about the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council and its statistics about dependence upon the government coffers, he is identifying the greatest failing of the previous administration, that is, its failure to develop a private and independent private sector in Atlantic Canada. That is what we are seeking and what we are going to accomplish, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On that note, questions and comments are now terminated.

I would like to recognize the next speaker, the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is not especially surprising to find the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil) being seduced by the Budget of his Party and seeking to find all means available to adapt it, in terms of his local riding, in the most attractive of terms even in the face of the facts that have been repeatedly revealed to him.

This Budget oozed in on the soothingly silken yet not really sincere promises of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that fairness would be assured to all. It is packaged in pounds of paper camouflage, partial data and hidden facts. It was so seductively wrapped that, in addition to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, it fooled many of the rest of us. It did not appear to initiate a new era but at least it seemed to avoid serious mistakes, and it did contain some elements attractive to many of us, such as the beginning of pension reform, the making available of our RRSP in pension funds for small business investment, labour-operated venture capital funds, and some slight redistribution of child benefits to low income families.

On closer examination, the Budget turns out to be machiavellian in its deviousness and unscrupulous in its results.

This Budget turned out not to mark a new era but to repeat old errors. It was the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who, when he characterized the last Lalonde Budget, equally characterized this one. It is like a beached dead fish, all shiny on the outside, but give it a poke and there is nothing but rot on the inside. If there is doubt about the similarity of this Budget to the last Lalonde Budget, we should recall the unintentional but nevertheless enthusiastic acknowledgement of that fact by Members opposite when the Lalonde Budget was read to them by my colleague. They responded to it with reflex enthusiasm and with reactionary rhetoric that characterized that Budget as well as this one. But it is not just the rhetoric that is the same, so is the substance. It is the same substance which led the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) to condemn benefits to the wealthy at the expense of the poor. It is the same substance that drew scorn, again from the Hon. Member for St. John's West, in its failure to deal with consumer demand. It is the same substance which the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) savaged for failing to address the aspirations of youth and for failing to create employment.

We could rebut this Budget quite effectively with speeches made by government Members when they were in opposition. We remember that the Prime Minister said that Canadians are over-taxed and that he did not favour higher personal taxes to reduce the deficit. We remember the Tories promised once more to index the OAS to the cost of living on a quarterly basis. When our ears reject as background noise the empty Tories' slogan of jobs, jobs, jobs, we recall again the words of the Hon. Member for St. John's West that "the people see a Government ripe with dishonesty and they make all politicians seem the same".

This Budget causes us all, and should cause us all, embarrassment. Look at the benefits to small business, Mr. Speaker. My God, this is supposed to be the pet constituency of the Party in government. Stimulation of small business was supposed to produce jobs. New rules would provide equity financing for small business from RRSPs and pension funds. Economists are already beginning to question whether these funds will be diverted to equity, risky investment, as compared to the secure investment that in the past has characterized the placing of such funds. On the other hand, we see the three-fold increase in foreign holdings allowed which could see billions of dollars leaving this country rather than being invested here.

The $500,000 capital gains exemption is unlikely to help either. We can already see evidence for a thousand budding Mort Schulmans quick and ready to invest in real estate, precious gems, gold, art, and antiques. There is no particular inducement whatever to invest in any useful job-creating enterprises or even in our country.

There is no other inducement to help except patriotism, and that has not so far characterized the kind of investor which the $500,000 exemption has benefited.

Sure, the research and development tax credit for small business may help. The release from the surtax being imposed on large corporations may help. Perhaps the most significant step for smali business is the fact that $7.6 billion will be removed from the hands of consumers in 1986. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, will that condition induce small business people or anybody else to rush out and invest when so much buying power is taken away from them? Of course, the money is being taken out of the hands of the consumers, at least in part to benefit the wealthy and the oil companies, mostly foreign-owned, which are the most clear beneficiaries of this Budget. The benefits to small business are left to fate, but there is certainty with respect to the oil companies.

There is no direct attack on deficits—which has resulted in weak economic conditions and unemployment, whether that attack has been in West Germany, Great Britain, or British Columbia—that has been successful in achieving its end. It was not successful when it was done by MacEachen or Lalonde. It will not be successful when it is done by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The pattern of the attack on the deficit is always the same. Use the poor, use the elderly, use lower middle-income people and the unemployed as cannon fodder in the war on the deficit.

The PC attack on the deficit is a little less blunt. It is more like a guerilla war with hit and run attacks, so that at first the wounds are slight and the long-term effects deliberately obscured. Next year the last of personal income reductions will amount to a mere $80 million. By 1990, $695 million will be taken in the form of loss of income tax reductions. The change in the child tax credit is a subtle one. There is no loss, and the implication of some gains in 1986. However, by 1992, $235 million will be taken from the hands of low and middle-income people.

The loss of the indexation of pensions is another sneaky one, but we are catching on. Old age pensioners and senior citizens across the country are beginning to realize that $35 million in 1986 will grow to $2 billion in 1990. Sales and excise tax increases of $250 million now will grow to nearly $3 billion by 1990.

In terms of ordinary Canadian families, they will experience in that period a 30 per cent increase in income tax. On average, old age pensioners will lose $680 per year, for an approximate total loss of $2,200 by 1990. At a time when the National Council on Welfare indicates that the number of poor people has increased by 660,000 over a two-year period, we witness a continued massive transfer of wealth from the poor to the wealthy and from individual taxpayers to corporations. However, I understand that just yesterday the Minister of Finance said that we just do not have enough rich people. He also told us that pensioners were knocking down the door in an orgy of self-sacrifice in order to attack the deficit, and that senior citizens were telling him that they know there will be some small sacrifice but that they thought the Government was on the right track. Well, 400,000 members of The National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation, 8,000 members of the Association of Jewish Seniors, 10,000 members of Canadian Pensioners Concerned Inc. of Ontario, and 300,000 members of The United Senior Citizens of Ontario do not agree.

It is a mystery why the rich have not been given an opportunity to exhibit their patriotic zeal. Surely the immediate imposition of a minimum tax would have sent them into an orgy of delight. Instead, we receive this curious document indicating a minimum tax for Canada. What an amazing document it is! After some fast footwork we realize that there are only about 4,000 rich people, and that it is such a complicated matter to tax them that it is too much bother. Come on, give us a break!

The Tories promised to reduce the deficit. They have not done very much and will not do very much because as the rate of unemployment continues to increase, as purchasing power continues to be eroded and as social payments continue to increase, it is a race in which we cannot catch up. They are taking the wrong approach. They make the assumption that the deficit is the cause of our economic problems rather than the result.

What we need are increased jobs, but there is not a word about jobs in the Budget. I understand that the Minister of Finance said in Toronto the other day that perhaps they would create about 500,000 jobs. A careful examination of the Budget reveals nothing in terms of parameters, terms of reference or imposed mechanisms to achieve that end, with the possible exception that there very well may be 500,000 new jobs for accountants as they find ways to ensure that those who already have money will have more. It has always been beyond my understanding how it is possible to justify the opposition of a capital gains tax, while the work of ordinary labourers has always been considered to be taxable, whether it be physical or mental work. There is no thought of the depreciation of the body, nothing of the sort. The basic thesis, totally unquestioned by anyone on the other side of the House, is that if one has money, one deserves to get more money, that every encouragement should be offered, and to hell with the rest of the population which does not have those benefits.

An Hon. Member: Unparliamentary language.

Mr. Benjamin: No, it ain't.

Mr. McCurdy: Then I withdraw the word "hell".

Mr. Benjamin: Don't do that; it is hell.

Mr. McCurdy: However, Canadians still have deep suspicions about the motives of those who would make that argument.

I should like to refer to what members of the New Democratic Party would have done. We would have declared that a goal should be established year by year for the reduction of unemployment and for the production of jobs. Our Party did not play games with consultation. It consulted across the land. The answer it received from Canadians was that cutting the deficit was not the goal. They had a greater economic appreciation of the significance of deficits and they knew that if jobs were created, a deficit reduction would follow because it is occasioned by unemployment. What we would have done in some respects is similar to what the Conservatives have proposed. Indeed we would have offered stimulus to small business. We would have proposed, as did the Budget, that RRSP and pension funds be made available to small businesses. However, no one on our side would have been foolish enough to take money away from the people upon whom we depend most to purchase from small businesses.

Mr. Manly: The consumer.

Mr. McCurdy: Yes, the consumer. We would have initiated tax reform to put money in the hands of consumers and in the hands of the unemployed. Indeed, even large corporations would have benefited from tax measures, if those corporations had undertaken to commit themselves to job production and other steps in the interests of the Canadian economy.

Increased consumer demand would have increased investment, jobs and revenues, and would have decreased social expenditures and the deficit. Of course this would take time, so we would have made an immediate investment intended to accomplish economic and social ends. Direct job creation would have more immediate effects and, in the long run, would contribute to economic growth. In forestry, fisheries, agriculture and energy we would have created, by the investment of some $800 million, a great many jobs over a five-year period, perhaps as many as 400,000.

Our municipalities are falling apart—roads are decaying, water is polluted, basements are flooded. There are various kinds of immediate physical and infrastructural changes which are necessary. They have been documented by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities which recommended that $1.2 billion be spent each year to take care of the needs of the municipalities, at a cost of $450 million per year on the part of the federal Government, and would have created 40,000 jobs per year.

Housing is a national disgrace. It is made worse now by the fact that a key area of capital investment, by virtue of the capital gains tax exemption, will be in real estate. It will likely spur a degree of real estate speculation the likes of which we have not seen for many years. It will increase the cost of housing for ordinary Canadians. We would have recommended an increase in expenditures on social housing of $500 million, supplying 50,000 units and creating 66,000 new jobs in the construction industry where unemployment is very severe.

We have received pleas from across the country for opportunities to take control of economic growth at the local community level. We would have committed $850 million to community initiative funds for new co-operatives, community development corporations and small businesses, to give opportunities to local communities to create jobs and to take advantage of the resources and talents at the local level. Instead of taking $2 billion out of the hands of the provinces, we would have ensured that expenditures on education and social services would have continued. New revenues would have been brought about through the implementation of a minimum tax, a more progressive income tax and through changes in corporate taxes and lesser expenditures as a result of a decreased requirement for social measures.

Before I close, I wish to take notice of two issues of particular concern to me. I am the youth critic for my Party. In none of the pounds of literature is there anything which addresses the needs of youth, who now have a 17 per cent unemployment rate. The only reference in this area is to some streamlining of employment centres in universities and a cut of $78 million from training programs.

In Windsor, where we are awaiting government action on quotas, on Canadian content, we are further burdened by an increase in the sales tax which, no doubt, will decrease the sales of automobiles, not to mention a 2-cent increase on gasoline, which will not help either.

There is not only that to consider, Mr. Speaker. Windsor is, essentially, a one-industry town which has a future in tourism. We have been told that the federal Government will no longer be involved in ERDAs involving federal funding of tourism at a time when it is critical for job creation in Windsor.

This is not a Budget which is fair. This is not a Budget which creates jobs. This is not a Budget which will knock down the deficit, since it is a foolishly designed approach to that end. This is a Budget which will leave us waiting another year for what the Canadian people want—economic growth based on job creation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann).

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member what his ideas are with respect to the area of job creation. The last administration pumped in billions of dollars with respect to this area but unemployment continued to rise. The Hon. Member opposite has said that we should place $500 million in this area and another billion dollars in that area. He thinks that will create jobs. It did not do so in the past. All of a sudden, the dreamer and schemer opposite supposes it will work now. On what basis does he make the claim that jobs can be created by throwing funds into these different municipalities? How will this create jobs when it did not create them before? I would like him to comment on that.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I am a microbiologist. I really am not qualified to give lessons in economics.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: However, I can read. I want to assume that the Government and its members are engaged in the type of consultation about which they talk so much. The Federation of Canadian Municipalities has provided for our benefit a detailed examination of the serious needs of the municipalities in the country. These are severe needs which must be met.

I agree with the Hon. Member opposite when he says that the short-term measures in which the last Government engaged were undesirable and useless. What we are talking about is job creation through meeting serious economic needs. If he is not aware of this, then he can come to my office and I will give him a copy of the report from the federation. He will then understand how jobs can be created in the public sector.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a $200 billion debt at this time. That works out to some $8,000 to $9,000 for every man, woman and child in this country. How would the Hon. Member opposite deal with this problem?

It seems to me that everything the Hon. Member has been calling for was tried by the Mitterrand Government in France after 1981. In that country there was massive nationalization and spending. Some 50,000 new public servants were added to the Government's payroll. As the Hon. Member well knows, the French franc has been devalued three times. Bankruptcies have increased in France, as has unemployment. The policies which the Hon. Member seems to be advocating have been a total failure in France. That country has reversed almost all of them. Will he speak to those matters?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the Thatcher Government attacked the British deficit. The Governments of West Germany and British Columbia attacked their deficits. To what end? To create unemployment. In fact, in the final analysis, it discouraged investment.

The President of the United States, however, in his supply side rhetoric, did not attack the deficit. He built up the deficit. I am not suggesting there should be increased investment in Canada with respect to the area of defence. However, the fact of the matter is that government expenditures in the United States have created jobs. That has been the most effective attack on the problem of unemployment.

I suggest to the Hon. Member opposite that he look at the Swedes. Then, perhaps, he would learn the lesson of how a country of similar size with similar problems has dealt with the problem of unemployment and economic growth in all its elements in a far more effective way than this Budget attempts to do.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I have some comments to make. I hope I will be allowed the use of the word with which the Hon. Member opposite seems to be obsessed, that is, the word "orgies". The only orgy I can see coming out of his proposals will be with respect to a massive increase in the deficit. If a massive increase in the deficit would have worked, then we would not have any unemployment in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraleigh: The Hon. Member admits he is a biologist, or something or other. I refer to those people as being academics who have no idea of what makes the country tick. If they want to find out what makes the country tick, then they should get out and talk to the small businessmen and the farmers in the country who create the jobs and wealth on which the rest of us survive. I hope that he will urge his western counterparts who represent rural ridings to return to their ridings and tell the farmers and small businessmen there what a tremendous rip-off the capital gains tax exemption is. I urge the Hon. Member to do that. I urge each and every one of the Members opposite to carry that message back to their western ridings. Tell the farmers that, because they will receive a tax break on something they have worked hard for all their lives, it is a rip-off.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear such a spurious and ad hominem argument. Am I supposed to be incapable of being effective in representing my constituency simply because I am a biologist? I do not know what the Hon. Member opposite is; but I am sure 90 per cent of the subjects debated in the House are not closed to his intelligent consideration because he is not those 90 things. That is simply ridiculous.

I have talked to small business people and they do not see how it is possible for them to be successful—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his allotted time has expired.

As a humble and ordinary Canadian who is sitting in the chair today, may I take the opportunity to congratulate a hometown team which has won a great Stanley Cup. I feel another dynasty has started in Edmonton.

It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1.00 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock, I believe that the period for questions and comments had terminated. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise, as so many Members of this House have done, to speak to the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Right Hon.

Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I would like to consider, in an objective and positive manner, what this Budget holds in store for our senior citizens. I do not think anyone will be surprised to hear I was very disappointed when the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister decided to maintain in the Budget the discrimination against the elderly, especially women, who are single, separated or divorced.

I believed and hoped that at least the Minister of Finance, following consultations, petitions and meetings of the Parliamentary Committee, where all groups were unanimous in asking the Government to extend the spouse's allowance to all persons living alone, whether they were single, separated or divorced . . . Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Finance has a heart or a bank vault, because he has failed to understand what the point is and has maintained discrimination against the elderly who are single, separated or divorced. I hope there is still a possibility changes can be made when the Bill is considered in committee. I hope the Minister and the Prime Minister realize that if the Bill is not amended, in every riding in Canda, individuals between the ages of 60 and 64 who are in need and living below the poverty line will not be eligible just because they are single, separated or divorced.

Mr. Speaker, let us take a look at what the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have decided to do about our elderly. During the election campaign, in Sherbrooke in the Province of Quebec, we received a solemn commitment and the Prime Minister's word of honour, on July 26, when he told the Canadian people, followed by all his Conservative Members and candidates, that if he was elected, he would restore full indexation for Old Age Security pensions. Who would doubt the word of a Prime Minister? Even I said: Bravo! I think he is sincere, I think he is honest. Like all people across this country, I took the Prime Minister at his word. Mr. Speaker, a little later, in January, in a consultation paper tabled by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in the House, and announced at a press conference to the entire public here again, on behalf of the Government, on behalf of the Prime Minister there was solemn commitment that consultation and restructuring of social programs would have the result of improving the situation of the neediest in our society. Even then, Mr. Speaker, I believed that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would keep his word.

As the Prime Minister has said in reply to my questions, the Parliamentary Secretary speaks in his own name and not on behalf of the Government. He told us where we stand. The only two persons in this House who speak for the Government about social programs are the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Everyone, including myself, the entire population and all Members of Parliament, whether they are New Democrats, Conservatives or Liberals, believed in that document. It is written in black and white in paragraph 3: "Any savings which may result from program changes will not be applied to a reduction of the deficit."

Who could question the word of honest people? No one! Everyone believed in the promise and the commitment made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign and the commitment made in his name by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who said on page 9 of the discussion paper: "Changes in these programs which may result from this review should improve—and I emphasize the word "improve—benefits for those most in need."

Mr. Speaker, it is important that I repeat this for the information of all Members of this House and the general public listening to us: "Changes in these programs which may result from this review should improve—and I did say "improve"—"benefits for those most in need."

That is the second commitment made by the Government. I can honestly say that, following publication of this discussion paper, the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin), myself and other Members of this House head in committee 92 groups representing senior citizens and Canadian families, who also trusted the Prime Minister and the Government. Those people took the trouble to come here. They are people who often do voluntary work in addition to raising their families. They are middle-aged people who came from Western Canada, Vancouver, the Maritimes, Quebec and Ontario with confidence, and I believe that the word "confidence" is very important for the population, they came to say to the Prime Minister, to the Government, to the Minister of Finance, to the Minister of National Health and Welfare: "Here are the recommendations to improve benefits for those most in need, which you requested in your discussion paper."

• (1410)

All groups recommended improvements to the child tax credit in order to help low and middle income families, all groups believed that, as promised in the discussion paper, there would be no immediate changes affecting senior citizens. The Government had promised to set up another task force. During the election campaign, the Prime Minister made a solemn commitment in Sherbrooke to consult senior citizens before making any changes.

Mr. Speaker, what do we find in the Mulroney-Wilson Budget? What do we find in this document which affects our senior citizens? Contrary to what the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare had promised, not only there is no improvement for our senior citizens, but their purchasing power is reduced and their income will increase at a lower rate.

What happened, Mr. Speaker, is that, contrary to what the Mulroney, Wilson and Epp trio had formally and solemnly promised in this House, senior citizens will face a 3 per cent decrease in the indexation of their income.

Remember all the fuss about universality! The Prime Minister was the first one to say that bank presidents did not really need allowances. But bank presidents have remained untouchable. The Government went as far as penalizing 1.3 million elderly Canadians who get the guaranteed income supplement, 60 per cent of whom live below the poverty line as it is. So much for the promises and commitments of that trio.

Let us consider together who are those senior citizens who will be shortchanged as of next January. I recall that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bertrand) said that a $100 reduction spread over a number of weeks does not amount to very much. It may not be very much for a well-heeled Member of Parliament, but it is quite a lot of money for someone whose only income is the old age security pension. The prospect of a $10 monthly income drop next year can be quite depressing for that person.

I wish Members on the other side, the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Minister of Finance would tell us just how elderly persons can cut expenses. What can they do without? The steak they can afford to buy once a week? Will they cut $10 a month off their meagre entertainment budget for that outing with the local Golden Age Club? Should they stop buying newspapers? Will they stop living because their income has gone down? Not only did the Conservative Government cut old age security pensions, it even imposed a hidden tax on essential services. Who is the smart and intelligent Government Member who suggested that a bar of soap is not essential and should be taxed? Mr. Speaker, who is the genius who said that toothpaste is not essential? Tax it! Who in that Party made the bright suggestion that shampoo is not important, let us tax it? Not satisfied with reducing the purchasing power of elderly Canadians through a 3 per cent cut in future old age security pension increases, they turn around and shamelessly increase inflation by 1 or 2 per cent. This Government has said: "We will arrange it so that everybody will be taxed. We will see that inflation is increased. Inflation will increase by 2 per cent because of the Wilson, Mulroney and Epp decisions. But that will be absorbed by the people because the first 3 per cent, are not to be given to you."

Mr. Speaker, this is unheard of. Even the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the former Prime Minister, would not have accepted that, because he was in Government in 1979. Even the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), who was then Minister of Finance, would not have had the gall to do something like that to his fellow citizens. And even the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), who was then Minister of Health, would not have dared do anything like that, Mr. Speaker. Those three guys have betrayed the people. And this has not been said by Liberals. Those commitments are written in black and white.

Mr. Speaker, if the Government does not change that, I can imagine what will happen to the Conservative Members when they go back to their constituencies; their senior citizens will tell them: "Mr. or Mrs. M.P., you will have to dig for votes comes the next election." The Members will answer: "We need you people 65 or 68 years old". But the senior citizens will ask them this: "Where were you when the Budget was brought down, when your Government in its Budget denied me the spouse's allowance because I was separated? And now you have the gall to come and see us? Go your way, Sir, go away Madam! You were not there when we needed you."

• (1420)

Senior citizens as a group have the poorest organization in Canada. Next to them are the families. We saw a report on television saying that the big corporations', the multinational corporations' lobbyists are spending millions of dollars to keep a bunch of suckers around Parliament to live off Members of Parliament and get contracts. But is there one group of senior citizens in Canada who can afford to organize itself, to come over here and make representations on the assistance they need? They are not looking for million-dollar contracts like the one the Minister of Finance's brother will be getting without tender. They want to get and keep getting their little cheques each month, Mr. Speaker. Let us see who those people are, whom the Progressive Conservative Government wants to penalize starting in 1986. Those people have known the hard years. They have lived through the great depression. They are the mothers and fathers of all of us here, the people who made every sacrifice to send us through school at a time when education was not free. It is our fathers and mothers who had to foot the bill when we were ill and there was no Medicare. In my own riding, there are now senior citizens who, as parents long ago, had to agree to abide by the provisions of the Lacombe Act, because they could not pay the doctor's bills for their sick children. I think that most of us have experienced this in our own respective ridings and regions. And now the Minister of Finance, who associates with the pick of the crop of big business, is trying to con us into believing that he has consulted and told these senior citizens: "You should sacrifice a little, for you would not want the Mulroney or Wilson kids who are so pampered to pay our debts later on, would you?"

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the children of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance do not want us to leave any unpaid debts. I have a heart, Mr. Speaker, and several other hon. members have hearts too, I am sure. I would not want my mother . . . Is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance saying that he will ask his own mother to add these new sacrifices on top of all those she has already made for him? If he is against that, and if he has any guts as a Parliamentary Secretary, he will stand up in his caucus and say: "I refuse to ask my father and mother to make any more sacrifices and I strongly urge you, Mr. Minister of Finance, to reverse your decision and maintain full indexation of the Old Age Security pensions at least for needy senior citizens who are living below the poverty line."

Now that I have described for you the older people the government is viciously attacking, Mr. Speaker, let us consider now the families, especially those with dependent children. All those groups who came here were seeking improvements, Mr. Speaker. I realize that I am running out of time, and I have still so much to say. We have reached a point in Canada, and it is not up to Parliamentarians to decide whether married couples can continue living together. Problems can and do occur, and even Parliamentarians are not exempt from that. There is an increase in the number of single parent families. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) is certainly aware that women most of the time are left with the financial burden of raising the children.

In the area of family allowances and children tax credits the purpose of which is to help poor families which, according to the most recent statistics, are on the rise in Canada—

The same government decides to index the child tax credit beyond 3 percent. Not only does it de-index basic family allowances up to 3 percent, but the supplement it grants them to make both ends meet is reduced by 3 percent, Mr. Speaker. That is the result of this government's decision.

Mr. Speaker, I am ready to trust once more this Government and its Progressive Conservative members, because I believe they will think it over in their caucus. The word of the Prime Minister may still mean something because it is written. The word and honour of the Minister of Finance mean something and the honour of the Minister of National Health and Welfare may still have some meaning in these written documents. But let us see who will benefit from this budget. Oil multinationals will get $2.5 billion, and there is a giveaway of $125,000 for the wealthiest people who want to speculate in this area.

Mr. Speaker, I had a lot more to say but you have just indicated to me that my time has expired. I am sorry, but I wished to say a lot more than that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is referring to his mother—and mine, because they are probably the same age—I should like to remind him what happened during our brief stint in office in 1979. We introduced a bill to assist widows and widowers, providing an allowance for spouses between 60 and 65 years of age, the spouse's allowance. The Minister of National Health and Welfare succeeded in having that bill passed by this House but unfortunately it was part of the budget on which the government was defeated. Thus, spouses were deprived of that assistance. Eventually, Mr. MacEachen restored that measure and today, those who were members of his government are trying to say that it was a Liberal measure. It is entirely false.

Secondly, we increased the price of gas in our budget because we had to face a substantial deficit causing punitive inflation not only for senior citizens but for all Canadians. What did they do, Mr. Speaker? They rejected the budget because it was awful to ask for such an increase. They then proceeded to tax heating fuel, which we had not done in our budget, and that tax was very harmful to old people. Since he is referring to our mothers, I would like to ask him a question. Today I met university women between 40 and 50 years of age. They are not rich because they probably paid their own fees and stayed at home to raise their children. Do you know what they told me? Well done, Mrs. Mailly. Your government understands that I do not want to be dependent on my children. I would like the economy to allow me to save and look after myself when I retire. They told me: "Well done, Mrs. Mailly, because I do not want to be dependent on the State, I do not want to live in a nursing home, I want to look after myself, I am a responsible and proud individual". You should not forget that when you criticize the steps taken to promote the creation of jobs.

I would also like to tell the Hon. Member about a retired gentleman of my constituency, Mr. Tassé, who has a $17,000 income per year. He is not rich. He sent back to me his pension cheque for May telling me precisely what those ladies told me today. He said: "Mrs. Mailly, I do not want the deficit to increase because the Liberals are doing the same thing they did in 1979, frightening the elderly and the poor. What they say is wrong. I want you to remain determined to control inflation and create jobs for our grandchildren. So Mr. Tassé sent me his cheque and he invited Mr. Pierre-Elliott Trudeau who is now retired and very rich as well as all the Liberal ministers and senators who are retired to do exactly the same thing.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Order!

Mrs. Mailly: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like the Hon. Member to explain to us how he can complain about this so-called enormous cut now that inflation is a mere 3.9 per cent, while he voted in favour of limiting indexation to 6 and 5 per cent at the time his party was in power and inflation was rampant at 12 per cent?

• (1430)

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister in front of me was raised as a rich kid who rejoiced whenever the poor suffered.

Mr. Speaker, the show the Hon. Member for Gatineau has just put on clearly indicates that when she talks . . . I beg your pardon . . . when she pontificates—

Mr. Masse: Ouch! That really hurts!

[English]

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to assure the Hon. Member that as a prairie boy growing up in Alberta with five brothers and sisters I was supported by a father who cut hair for a living.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member gives me as an example the retired fellow with a $17,000 income. Do you know how much an individual who relies on the guaranteed income supplement gets?

Mrs. Mailly: It is entirely indexed.

Mr. Malépart: Do you know how much that person gets: $7000 a year. Do you know how a couple receiving $10,000 can manage? With an additional $7000, you can save and give some away. I am referring to poor people. There are 1,300,000 of them, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Gatineau understands nothing. She should read the budget over again. When she speaks about those ladies who attended the university I agree, but her government, instead of changing the colour of the soldiers' uniform and wasting $100 million per year to send troops to Lahr in Germany, should keep that money to reduce the deficit. Instead of joining the star war, the government should launch a fight against unemployment. The Hon. Member for Gatineau was not honest enough to say so. The Prime Minister wasted half a million to give a Tory party for Mr. Reagan. He should have saved it rather than pay, as Mrs. Michèle Tremblay from the Journal de Montréal pointed out, $1000 a minute to act hypocritically at the economic summit convening groups to do afterwards exactly the contrary and let our national Kid Camera appear in the limelight.

Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Tory members . . . I thought that the Minister of Finance was the only one to have a safe instead of a heart but I realize that there are others like him in his party. I realize that some among them, as the minister has just mentioned, were raised in poverty. They have long forgotten it. He has forgotten that others need him. He forgets that some older citizens made sacrifices to allow him to become what he is today. However, he is not ready to let those people take advantage today of the wealth which he and his children are enjoying.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in listening to the comments of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) with respect to old age pensions and allowances for people between the ages of 60 and 65. I was very interested to hear what he had to say today and since November when the House reconvened. While listening to his comments it struck me that he is certainly a great advocate for senior citizens. I thought that perhaps he is now taking the place of the dean of the House, Mr. Stanley Knowles, in that regard. It struck me that he must have had some very interesting things to say about senior citizens in the past. I was sure that in the time that he has spent in the House his speeches must have been constantly and continuously emphasizing the plight of senior citizens. I was sure that every time he rose to speak he must have had something to say about senior citizens.

I looked back at some of the things which the Hon. Member had to say in the past. I brought with me today the index of the Debates of the House of Commons of 1983-84. I see that under the heading, Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart, Liberal Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, there is not a very long list. He made comments on the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, government buildings and interest rates. He presented a report on labour, manpower and immigration from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. He made a statement under Standing Order 21 on medicare. He made a comment on the National Housing Act and on the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. Nowhere in that list did I see any reference to pensions, spousal allowances, or anything of that sort. I was rather surprised in light of the fact that he now seems to be such an advocate of those issues.

This afternoon the Hon. Member said that very shortly the people of Canada will be asking all of us where we were when this Budget was passed. Mr. Speaker, where was the Hon. Member when his Government, of which he was a Parliamentary Secretary, dealt with the deindexing of old age pensions down to 6 and 5 per cent when inflation was 12 per cent, and when there were no dealings with spousal allowances or allowances of any kind for people between the ages of 60 and 65?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, the time for questions and comments has expired. I will give the Hon. Member 30 seconds.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, with the consent—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry—

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the House, may I be allowed to answer?

On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker . . . It is unfortunate that conservative members should play politics on "the backs" of senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to say that even with the 6 and 5 policy pensions were fully indexed in the case of the most destitute among senior citizens those who received the guaranteed income supplement, which does not happen with the present government, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal government had agreed to the full indexation of the supplement and of the basic pension to make up for the loss. I would ask the member to withdraw his remarks concerning me. What he said is false; he is a liar.

Mr. Lanthier: It is not true! Order, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the point of order, I think I heard something from the Hon. Member which should not be said in the House. I hope that the Hon. Member will retract that statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my remarks if the Conservative Member who has just spoken on the 6 and 5 program agrees to tell the truth.

An Hon. Member: Do not start all over again your little game of the other day!

Mr. Malépart: The House of Commons is a place where truth must be spoken and not—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, the Hon. Member knows that we should not use words like that in this Chamber. The Hon. Member realizes that he has done this once before in this session. We realize that in the heat of battle people sometimes say things they should not say, but I hope the Hon. Member will retract the statement. Let us leave it at that.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I do not think you got the point. I said that I would agree to withdraw my remarks, if the member would do the same. However, even if he does not do so, I will withdraw my comments.

[English]

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise in the Chamber this afternoon on behalf of the residents of Nepean-Carleton to offer an analysis of our current Budget and to participate in the debate on it. This is a Budget of opportunity, change, redirection, innovation, and hope. This is a Budget which the Canadian population has been waiting for. It comes at a time when our unemployment rates are falling but are still unnecessarily high. It comes at a time when interest rates are lower than they have been in many years. It comes at a time when mortgage rates are falling.

• (1440)

We must consider the Budget as a whole. I suggest it is unfair to isolate parts of the Budget because it has far reaching measures that affect every segment of society and business. It is a fair and balanced Budget which must be considered in its entirety.

The two thrusts of the Budget are to reduce unemployment and to tackle our over growing deficit. It will attempt to reduce our deficit by approximately $4 billion next year and $8 billion the following year. It is a noble attempt to address a great malaise in Canada.

In many ways my riding of Nepean-Carleton is a microcosm of Canada. It has a population of approximately 122,000 people and is a community with an agricultural base, small business base, high-tech base and a public sector base. There are approximately 1,100 operating farms in my riding, one-third of which are associated with the beef industry, approximately a quarter with the dairy industry, and others run by pork producers, poultry producers and cash croppers.

The small business community is far-reaching, as is the high-tech community. In my riding lies the high technology centre of Canada. Nepean-Carleton is a microcosm of a country which is dependent upon jobs in the small business community.

Nepean-Carleton was originally an agricultural community. As Ottawa grew, it took on the form of a bedroom or urban riding where people resided but worked in the metropolitan area. That dimension of the riding has changed in the recent years to the point where yesterday, at the opening of the Bell Northern Laboratories in the City of Nepean, the Mayor indicated that in the City of Nepean alone there were 30,000 jobs created. Nepean-Carleton leads the nation in some aspects and is a self-contained, self-producing, proud and dynamically growing community that is a microcosm of the country.

The total workforce in my riding is 70,000, 30,000 of whom are women. The riding has had great representation over the years. At one time, Sir John A. Macdonald represented Nepean-Carleton. Others to follow were Bracken, Drew, Bell and Baker. They were great men who have contributed to the nobleness and productivity of the House.

I became involved in a very competitive nomination and election campaign in 1984. During those campaigns, I consistently emphasized four issues, not only with people in my Party but with the constituents of Nepean-Carleton. I stressed the importance of the farm community and the farm family as a basic unit in Canadian society. I recognized that Canada could be a superpower in agriculture with tremendous opportunities to produce far more food, given the right opportunities and incentives. This would not only help to raise the standard of living of Canadians but would also help others around the world.

I also recognized the importance of the small business community in that process. Small business in Canada is really big business. When one takes into account the family and corporate farm in that milieu, at least two-thirds of the workforce in Canada and two out of every three jobs created in Canada are from the small business community.

I also recognized the importance of research and development which is as crucial to my constituency as it is to the rest of Canada. The high-tech industry could be a tremendous economic innovator and creator of jobs.

Yesterday, when I attended the opening of the Bell Northern Laboratories in my riding with the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) and other members, the President of Northern Telecom announced that his company will be spending $5 billion on research and development during the next five years. The President and his company know the importance of research and development for innovating our way into international markets.

At the same time, I also recognized the importance of a strong, viable and responsible civil service to help the Government and the nation develop and grow.

In his Budget speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said:

> In these three areas—small business, research and development and energy—the government has clearly identified the components of economic growth most likely to result in the greatest and fastest response.

You can understand my belief in the importance of those words to people in my riding. Let us study the Budget in more detail to find those measures which relate to the small business community. First, there is the capital gains initiative of a $500,000 once in a lifetime deduction to be introduced generally in Canada over a number of years but starting immediately for the farm community. That is a tremendous economic multiplier. For example, the number of new businesses that were created in the United States a few years ago as a result of a similar measure was overwhelming. We fully expect that to happen in Canada.

Second, the small business bond program will be extended for another two years to the beginning of 1988. Farmers and small business people can finance up to $500,000 at interest rates several points below the market value. One can imagine the benefits of that program for the farmer, small business person and the high-tech innovator.

The small business community is exempt from the 5 per cent corporate surcharge that is being levied on big business. Pension funds will be relaxed to allow those moneys to be invested as equity capital in small- and medium-sized businesses. Although it is difficult to predict how much will be available at this time, consider the benefits from the estimated $2 billion or $3 billion that will come on stream in the next four to eight months.

The Budget also provides for a freeze on unemployment insurance rates through 1986, which indicates to the farm community and small business community, which face difficulty with these deductions, that they will not be faced with an increase in unemployment insurance rates for the next 20 months. Furthermore, the small business community will note that there will be a thorough and fair review of the unemployment insurance program in order to ensure fairness and equity.

● (1450)

As well, there are many things relating to pension reform in the Budget that dramatically affect the small business community, especially the self-employed person. Over the next five or six years they can increase investments in retirement programs from $5,500 to $15,000 annually. Think of how that will allow the small business person, who cannot rely on a company pension, to build up his or her equity and to have some protection for himself and his spouse when the time comes to lay down the work mantle and enter into the senior years.

There is an array of very delightful measures that are associated with small businesses that will help them to become the innovators and big business in the days ahead.

Let me quote a few things about this Budget that I have run across recently. Marcel Côté, an economist with Radio-Canada, said:

> This is a Budget which is not as tough as we had anticipated, it is quite skillful over all, I think it is fair.

John Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business said:

> This Budget is a small business blockbuster.

In some private conversations I have had with Mr. Bulloch recently he has indicated that the small business community in Canada in the first half of this year will create at least 200,000 new jobs. When you superimpose on that the new flood of investment money, think what will really happen, Sir.

Geoffrey Hale, speaking on behalf of the Canadian Organization of Small Business, said:

> The most encouraging Budget in the past ten years. Mr. Wilson has acted in a number of ways to get individuals greater control of the spending and saving of their money. The changes have been approached with the maximum of common sense.

The small business community across Canada and in Nepean-Carleton very much welcome the initiatives in our Budget.

Can I take us back to July and August of last year when we were in the midst of an election campaign, Mr. Speaker? This is what we said then about the small business community:

> As a vital part of our economy in every community in Canada, our 750,000 small businesses create half of all new jobs in the private sector. We are committed to reducing the barriers facing small businesses and providing them with as much support as possible through: reducing the burden of excessive regulations and reporting requirements with which small businesses have to cope.

We have met that commitment, Sir. We also said:

> Reviewing Government purchasing policies to ensure small businesses obtain a fairer share of Government business.

We have met that. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) has enunciated across the country how businesses and suppliers can participate in government purchasing.

> Third, we promised to reduce the level of taxation facing small businesses and the complexity of the tax system with which they must cope. We have responded to that. Our Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) has been very enlightening with the small business community.

Finally, we said, "We will do everything in our power to improve the economic climate to reduce interest rates and stimulate investment in the small business community". Point after point in the short life of this Government we have worked to improve health and innovation, and to increase the productivity of the small business community in Canada.

I can identify with those facets of the Budget in a remarkable way. They are important to Nepean-Carleton. I wanted to go on and say a great deal about research and development but I see I have used up my time.

So much of what applies to the small business community also applies to research and development. The capital gains aspect, the small business loan and the pension fund diversion are all important to research and development in freeing up funds for that purpose. Equally important is the initiative to refund 100 per cent of the tax credit which is earned on the first $2 million of research and development. Furthermore, we have broadened the definition of research and development so that it is a much more realistic definition and identification of what research and development are in Canada.

I have gone through the effects of our campaign initiatives on the small business community, I could equally well do that with our commitments to research and development. The Minister of State for Science and Technology tabled some remarkable information about Canada's potential to increase its endeavour in research and development with the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates yesterday morning. It was a remarkable document, one that strongly suggests we can meet as a Government our commitment of 2 per cent to 2.5 per cent investment in research and development in Canada in four to five years' time.

From the standpoint of a constituent in Nepan-Carleton, the emphasis in this Budget on agriculture, on research and development, and on helping the small business community, our real engine of growth in Canada, shows it to be a Budget with which I can identify, worth which Canadians are generally happy, and a Budget for which Canadians have been waiting. It is a Budget of opportunity. I hope this House will endorse it with enthusiasm.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I was interested to hear the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper) say it would be unfair to isolate a part of the Budget and to look at it by itself. I do not think the Opposition has been doing that. Rather, we have been focusing on one particular part of the Budget and looking at it in relation to what other parts of the Budget have been doing. We have been focusing on the fact that this Budget, by deindexing seniors' pensions, by deindexing the first 3 per cent of Old Age Security, is robbing seniors. They will lose $100 next year and more than $200 the following year, for a total of $6.6 billion at the end of five years. That is on what we have been focusing on. We question the fairness of that when we compare it to the fact that oil companies will get $950 million through the removal and the phasing out of the PGRT.

We question the value of this Budget. The Government says it is a Budget of opportunity and one that will create jobs, but the Government will be losing some $1 million a year by making capital gains exempt from taxation up to a total of half a million dollars per person.

A representative from Coopers, Lybrand said how surprised he was by the wide open tax exemption given under this section rather than focusing specifically on some kind of venture that would create jobs. John Bossons from the Institute for Policy Analysis pointed out that the removal of the capital gains tax will result in real estate speculation. It will not result in increased jobs. In fact, it will result in the transfer of money from high risk venture or start-up businesses into real estate speculation.

What does the Hon. Member consider to be fair about a Budget which takes some $6.6 billion from senior citizens in the next five years and gives it to oil companies and real estate speculators? What does he think is in the Budget to create jobs? There is opportunity for people with money to speculate, but I do not see any opportunity for ordinary Canadians. I would like the Hon. Member to account for that.

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to respond, and I welcome the opportunity to do so. I understand what the Hon. Member is speaking about, but I am not sure that he listened carefully to the introductory part of my remarks. I tried to share with him my feeling that the Budget extended out to every person and to every home across Canada, and that in that sense I felt it was fair.

If I can be somewhat personal, my father is a retired, very senior person who resides in Nova Scotia. Over the weekend I telephoned him in particular to obtain his reaction to the Budget. I wanted his feeling on how he thought it would affect him, and I was also interested in the reaction in Nova Scotia about the heavy water plants. He said to me: "Bill, I don't know very much about heavy water plants, but I know that they should have been closed a long time ago". He said that it would have been cheaper for Canadian taxpayers to have given every employee in those two heavy water plants a pension and to put the matter to rest. I said: "Dad, what about yourself?" It was on Sunday night, and he said: "Bill, I can live with it".

Some senior citizens have telephoned me in a moment of annoyance or of concern, but when I have had a chance to share with them the problems in the Canadian economic and social fabric, they indicate that they are willing in 1985, and as it grows into 1986, to give up a small amount so that Canada tomorrow will be a better place for their grandchildren and for our children.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to two points in particular. First, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper) did not answer the question put to him with respect of the effect of these capital gains incentives. We learned that his father was happy with the Budget, but I should like to say to him that there are many people in my riding receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement, particularly those in the Saint-Henri portion of the riding, who now know that their purchasing power will be eroded. They now live under the poverty line as defined by Statistics Canada and now know that they will lose at least $50 or $60 per month by 1990. I know the amount is debatable because it is difficult to calculate. However, I find it difficult to believe that they will be happy. Has the Hon. Member spoken with people in his riding who are on the Guaranteed Income Supplement? Has he asked them whether they are prepared to sacrifice that amount of purchasing power in order to reduce the federal deficit? That is my first question.

I have a second question for the Hon. Member. He talked about the investment climate and made reference to the tax changes. We would all like to see more investment in the small business sector, but the capital gains exemption, the way in which it is drafted, allows the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton to make a decision as to whether he would invest in a piece of real estate or in a small business here in Canada, perhaps in the Ottawa area, or in the State of Massachusetts. If the same benefit accrues, surely the investment, whether it is Florida real estate, Massachusetts real estate of whatever, will be attractive to him. Would he not consider making representations to his Minister to ensure that if he insists upon continuing in the vein of accepting capital gains within the $500,000 range, that money at least goes into the Canadian small- and medium-sized business sector, not into real estate speculation, as suggested by economists, not into yachts, Florida real estate or condominiums outside the country? Would he at least do that? Would that not be an appropriate role for him to play as a concerned and intelligent Member on the government back-benches?

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, I thank my Liberal colleague for the compliment of being a concerned and intelligent back-bencher. I am proud to be part of this House and to be part of the process of allowing Canada to grow and develop. I hope the atmosphere in this House will be one of team-work, problem solving and going forward together.

The small business community in my riding talks about investing at home. It talks about investing down the street, in our industrial parks. It does not talk about investing in Massachusetts, about yachts or recreational vehicles. It talks about Canada, Canadians and their families.

In an attempt to answer part of the Hon. Member's other question, I receive concerned telephone calls from senior residents in my riding. I do not hide that fact. I use the opportunity to chat with them and to share with them the various problems. I ask them what will happen if we do not attack the deficit or where we will be in five years' time. We will be bankrupt. There is not a senior citizen out there who wants that to be the heritage of their children or their grandchildren.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper) for the outstanding manner in which he is following in the footsteps of his predecessor, who was an eminent Member of the House and whom we all respected greatly.

I want to say by way of observation that some years before entering into public life I acquired a piece of property in the United States, not far south of the border. I intend to sell that piece of property because I think I should bring the money home to Canada where it will do a much better job for the benefit of Canadians, industry and enterprise. The reason I was not prepared to sell my property previously was because of the repressive capital gains legislation brought in by the Liberal Government in 1971, legislation which has hung as a millstone around the neck of the country, in terms of attracting investment and encouraging economic growth.

In response to the comments of my hon. colleague, I would point to the decision by Northern-Telecom to invest $4 billion into the Bell Northern Research Laboratory, Phase III. This represents the confidence which that corporation places in this country. Could the Hon. Member relate the some 10,000 person-years of new jobs which that facility represents—and they are over and above its previous investment in research and development—to the present unemployment rate in his riding? There will be 2,000 new jobs per year arising from this investment. Would the Hon. Member comment on how important this will be?

• (1510)

Mr. Tupper: Bell-Northern and Northern Telecommunications, of course, is one of the most significant tandem research, development and production high-technology teams in existence in Canada today. Over the past four years, they have invested about $1.5 billion in research and development. With about 40,000 employees—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that questions and comments are now terminated.

I wish to recognize the next speaker, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais).

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I must say, quite frankly, that ever since 5 p.m. on Thursday May 23, I have been absolutely bursting with enthusiasm. That day, at 4.30 p.m., the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) finally decided to do what no politician had done before, which is to act. Before that day, the word deficit sent shivers up and down my spine, as it does even now, but I can say now: We have a handle on it, things are going to start moving. After all, it is the Progressive Conservatives, not the Liberals. Mr. Speaker, since May 23 I have been terribly excited. Whenever I meet people, in my riding or elsewhere, they are talking about the Budget. I have yet to meet a single person, except for the Opposition, of course, who is against the Budget. Everyone is saying it was high time we chopped Government spending, it was high time we stopped Government waste, and I for one am proud to be a Progressive Conservative.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure my dear Liberal friends are going to say: O.K., but what about jobs? Believe me, if we cannot get jobs by reducing the deficit, they certainly did not get any by increasing it, because at the rate their deficit was going, we would have had minus zero jobs and minus zero unemployment insurance. The unemployment rate was at 10, 11 or 12 per cent and varied from time to time because to get the rate to go down a mere fraction, they would send three people out to work and that would do the trick. That is exactly what they have been doing during the last 18 years.

Upon analyzing the Budget of the Minister of Finance, we see that for once, a Government has had the good sense to stop minding other people's business and let small business take over. I thought there were only half a million small companies, but during the debate on the Budget, I heard, and I did not know this there are 700,000 small companies, 700,000 companies that could be helped, but not like the Liberals used to do. They would say: Here, take $200,000, shut up and work. You don't need ideas or enthusiasm. Spend the money, there is more where that came from. Now this Government is saying: We will help you but you will have to show what you can do. Which reminds me, I had a terrific argument last week with a Liberal, and I told him: When you went to school, they gave you a gold star if you got good marks on your test. But under the Liberals during the last 18 years, people were given gold stars before, not after. That does not make sense. They seem to be pretty intelligent people and they are supposed to be very able and some of them are economists, teachers, lawyers, in fact, people from every walk of life. They are supposed to be intelligent, but as soon as they get to Parliament, that's it!

I can tell you, quite honestly, I am a small businessman from a region that is as big as Saint-Henri and Point Saint Charles. I always hear the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) saying: My people in Saint-Henri, but he is really only concerned about the people on the other side of the hill. They are going to be as pleased as Punch. And we did not do what he said, which was we ought to tax businessmen. I think he would have to shell out his whole Member's salary if we decided to tax him, because he comes from the top of the hill!

I have been a Conservative since I was 18, which means that I was fighting against arrogance all that time. I have heard people indulging in petty politics since the age of 18. I see some Members rising now, and in fact, one Member rose earlier and said: Enough petty politics! It is not true, I did not speak four times. I have risen in the House three times in four years. That is what is happening to him. I have been waiting for this opportunity for a long time, for weeks and months. And finally the Budget came and now i am going to say what I think of the previous Government. There was one of them, I think his name was Trudeau. Trudeau was the leader. Today people tell me that I am lucky because I can talk to Brian. We do not say Mr. Mulroney, we do not say Mr. Prime Minister, we say Brian. That is what the Progressive Conservative Party is all about, that is why we have a Budget which will help the people in my riding, as it will those in Saint-Henri and Westmount, believe me.

When I came here I decided I would sit on several committees because I really wanted to work, 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and 30 or 31 days a month. I recall a minor incident that hurt and upset me. One evening I attended a sitting of the Committee on Regional Economic Expansion where we were discussing those programs and how the famous Liberal system of patronage hand-outs worked. We were listening ot the explanations, then all of a sudden we were interrupted by a man who came in, a Quebec Minister of Expansion who looked at us and said: I must tell you, I have just managed to obtain more, and I was able to make myself better understood in two hours than I ever could in six years with the Liberal Party. That is harmony, that is understanding, that is the Progressive Conservative Party.

Since September, or in fact since November we have begun to show how Government should be run. There have been many changes in immigration, new employment and training programs, and there are more to come. Believe me, I will make sure that unwarranted hand-outs are a thing of the past. We have launched quite a few regional economic expansion projects and awarded contracts in energy and resources from one end of the country to the other, and we did not even have a Budget. It is fantastic! Well, we have a Budget now, so just watch out, there will be lots of jobs because we have just told businessmen: Go ahead, we will not lead you by the hand, we will stay out of your business, we will give you tax credits. People will get down to work and invest their extra earnings in Pointe-Saint-Charles, Saint-Henri and La Prairie instead of buying boats, going down to Florida or travelling through foreign countries.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) said earlier that he was going to sell a property he has in the United States. Let me tell you that the Progressive Conservative Government is honest and open, and it will stand as an example for other people. Lots of people own a business or a building, or have something they could sell to make a capital gain. I am sure my colleague from Saint-Henri-Westmount has had 15 or 20 offers to sell his business under the table so he would not have to pay the capital gains tax—better to keep the money for himself. I am sure this sort of thing has happened. I have businesses, I have industries. Well, a business rather than an industry. I own commercial buildings and I have had offers not so long ago, but I said to myself: Just a minute, things are going to change. Everything will be in the open, you will be able to act honestly, and then you can invest your money and create jobs. That is what I have decided to do.

What I like about this Budget is that it will help small businesses, the corner stone of our economy. We are going to tell the businessman: Help yourself, then we will help you. The Liberals did as they would have done with a six-month old child. You hold his hand when he starts to walk. When the child is 10 years old, he is still being held by the hand. At 15, he is still being held by the hand, but he has become an invalid and he no longer wants to help himself. That is when businesses go bankrupt, like Maislin did. It is exactly the same situation. Maislin Transport on Newman Boulevard got $5 million, my friend, so that they could spend it.

When I look at the deficit, being a businessman, I ask myself how intelligent people in Parliament could have decided to stay in the red, as we, business people, would say. To show a deficit is to be in the red. They would have gone on being in the red. If we had a company as large as the Government, I can assure you that not one businessman, not one financier, not one bank, and certainly not the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), would be willing to lend it any money. You can bet on it no one would want to.

You know, some will say, and it is unfortunate that he is no longer here, the Hon. Member for . . . I am sorry, but I cannot say that. I no longer call him "the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie" but the champion of old age pensions that he failed to defend when his Party was in power. It is unfortunate that he is not in the House because I would have liked to tell him something. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but we are not supposed to say that someone is not in the House. He was here earlier. He had promised that he would listen to me. I hope that he is watching on television. Some have said that, by deindexing the old age security pensions, we would take $50 or $100 away from senior citizens. Astronomical figures have been mentioned. People are being scared, and it is exactly what happened in Quebec in 1976 with Brinks, for those who remember, and there also had been an election at the time. I must say that I really like senior citizens. In my constituency, there are 31 or 32 senior citizens' organizations. I take care of them, but there are about 12,000, 15,000, 18,000 or 20,000 young people whom I do not want to put into debt, children who have not even started to walk yet. My grandson, who is 2 years old, already has a $24,000 debt, and because of whom? Because of the former Liberal Government. Believe me, I have nothing against the elderly, because they have built Canada and they have helped us. If they worked hard during their lifetime, they will understand. They will not let themselves be deceived by the free spenders in the New Democratic Party, those charitable people who play Santa Claus. They do not even have any money and they want to give it away. For their part, the Liberals say: "It is dangerous, you will not get it. You will not be able to buy a pound of butter. You will not be able to buy such and such a thing." As recently as yesterday, I saw a Liberal Member eating chocolate even though it is now taxable. She did not care about her grandfather and grandmother. She did the same thing.

I could go on the whole afternoon. Believe me, I like it, because all this has to come out. I have been waiting for a long time to say these things. I could speak about the famous grants. Apparently, that is not what caused the deficit to increase. Apparently, they created one-, two- or three-week jobs. That is what those grants did. I would like to tell you a story about my constituency. However, I would like to tell you first about a whopper. During my campaign, when I said that I would abolish tolls on Champlain Bridge, I was asked: Where will you get the money? With the sports car that belonged to Minister Olivier from Longueuil. That was $1.5 million a week and I needed $3 million in one year. It was a cinch. However, when the Conservatives were elected, we said: This has to be cut. We already had saved of $1.5 billion even before the Budget. It is great.

I have another one I could tell you about the constituency of Longueuil. If someonw wants to buy a museum . . . there is one for cheap sale. I do not know how the Liberal grant was called at the time, but in my eyes it was a slush fund, a money bucket, a money spender. They built a museum worth $1,400,-000 that is now on sale for $40,000 because the organization that was to operate it does not have the money to do so. It is going for $40,000. That is business management for you! With that, you will have a job and you will be somebody! They call that helping small businesses! True! And then they cry and lament, they scare people and they say: Watch out, you will you no longer be able to afford chocolate, toothpaste, or whatever. This is just too bad, my dear friends, but it is not the mere $50 tax difference or $1 if you want per day, as the Liberals have been clamouring about for I do not know how long. If it is not worth $1 to be a Canadian, my friend, it is not worth a peanut, and that is just too bad.

I am a Member of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration . . . Concerning the Liberals again, I have a file that thick, believe me, that thick, of people ready to put $100,000 and $200,000 to come to Canada. Surely it is not that bad here. Those are not refugees, people in dire straits, hungry people. They are people with money, and if we do not have money, we will not go through.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) must be aware of it. My examples relate to the richest people. This is the way things go. He does not remember me. The first year he was elected, he came to one of my shops. I remember. I did not vote for him. Do not fret about it. I did not vote for him because I was not in his constituency.

I could mention a grant in my constituency. This is what I am against, the wasting of money. You are going to say: The Budget, he only talks about that. Yes, because it is important to stop throwing money around. I have nothing against charitable institution. I have nothing against non-profit organizations, but I cannot stand people picking my pockets, especially against my will, to give it away as Government grants. He told two or three people: Shut up and go to work, this will do. We create jobs. Sometimes we were lucky, they lasted 48 hours.

In my constituency, I was lucky enough to open, believe it or not, a youth center, and this made headlines, believe me! I am allowed to quote the name of the guy I defeated, Pierre Deniger. He gave a $700,000 gift to a youth organization called "Intersection Jeunesse", a very five organization, very laudable goal, very good idea, but alas, they had forgotten about the revenues needed to operate the building from then on. Since I have been elected here, I have been fighting, trying to help them, not by getting funds here, but by helping 10, 12 organizations to make sure that this organization will keep afloat. I did not do it with money takes from the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) or the Hon. Member for St. Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) or any other Member. I think the Hon. Member for Ahuntsic, in Montreal, would be willing to help with her money, not with Government money. Well, that organization just sold the building, believe it or not, for $1. This is what they call doing business, $700,000 for $1. You do not go bankrupt by charging 25 cents for a package of cigarettes, but by selling something worth $700,000 for $1, a museum for $90,000, $700,000 worth for $1.00. Surely, they know nothing about business.

I have so many things to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not know where to start. Yes, indexation. The famous 3 per cent was discussed. I think the cost of living index is at 4.5 per cent right now, so an indexation of 1.5 per cent will be allowed.

Mrs. Mailly: 3.9 per cent.

Mr. Jourdenais: 3.9 per cent, this is even better, thank you. That means pensioners will get an indexation of 1 per cent and will lose 3 per cent. Have you ever thought that the Liberals were to blame for this regrettable 3 per cent contribution? They should not have made my father and my grandmother pay. It is awful to make them pay. But the cost of living will not get higher. For instance, products will not cost more because we will see to it and we will put small industries to work; we will help small business operators, not only one, two or three, but 700,000 small businessmen. Have you thought about it? There will be no more unemployment. I own a small business and I know it will be the easiest thing to do. I remember something now that I forgot to tell the Opposition. If I were given $700,000, I would create fifty jobs that would last twenty years. That is the amount that was given in my riding to create about fifty jobs for a month and a half. That is interesting.

I repeat that I have been a member of this party since I was 18. I heard someone say in 1974 that the 5 to 6 per cent controls Mr. Stanfield was proposing to increase profits was not a good proposal. Then the man who came into office, what was his name, I forget? Trudeau! He said: Now that we are the Government, the proposal makes send. Do you not see that the Liberals change their minds when they change sides in the House? Once in office they implemented policies taken from the Conservative Government they said they did not like. The same thing happened in 1979. The Clark Government was defeated. Why? For 30 cents worth of gas. That was increased to $1.18 once the Liberals were back into office. They had plenty of money that did not come from their pockets but from those of all the taxpayers. It is about time this should be stopped.

Mr. Speaker, I still have five minutes, right?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Three minutes.

Mr. Jourdenais: My goodness, I must hurry!

I sit on the House Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration. There are 20,000 outstanding cases. I do not know how much that costs because the system developed by the previous Government is too fouled-up. I cannot say. There is nothing one can do but leave one's name and wait until Mr. So-and-So of one of the departments get hold of the file. It may take as many as four years. What is the cost? Who cares? The people of Canada, the people of Laprairie, Saint-Henri and Westmount also, my friend, are the ones who will pay. I should like to reply to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who complained about the new uniforms for the Armed Forces. We cannot let them walk around naked, damn it! Do not try to con me into believing that red, blue, yellow or green uniforms—I should have left red out—will cost more than bottle-green ones. Do not bother me, for we must clothe our soldiers so they will look like something to be proud of, instead of a gang of nincompoops who could not be found in the fields because their uniforms were the same colour as the trees.

We are going to help people, starting for instance with widows and widowers 60 to 64 years of age. When they were the government, they used to limit the pensions to senior citizens over 65. Those who were only 64 would have to kick the bucket before getting a pension. We want to give it to them when they reach age 60. They insist on our paying the pension to people who are separated, divorced or what have you. One day, have no fear, they will get it. We will lower the age limit and we will have the money to do that, thanks to the small businesses which are supporting us.

Because I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker, I will take a sip of water and explain something that will knock over all those who are still here. Believe it or not, I have just learned, and I would appreciate the members of the opposition—

[English]

—so that you would listen, especially to those who were in power before, who thought they were in power.

• (1530)

[Translation]

I have just heard that in my constituency there are $3 million worth of goods for Bolivia, I repeat, $3 million, packed in containers since January 1982. What about that? Three million dollars, would that pay for what the people of Saint-Henri want? Would it pay for the increase? There are $3 million worth of goods in my riding, and how many elsewhere? Reporters who might be listening to me can always call me at home; I am prepared to tell them all about it. It has gone on long enough. In containers, $3 million worth of goods: the rent costs $4,000 a month! If you add it up, since 1983, it's $200,000 wasted! And then people say that the budget is not good. Here, you can have quotas, containers; $3 million for Bolivia! Three million dollars.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Masse: You can have another five minutes!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry but the Hon. Member's time is expired. Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston).

Mr. Johnston: I have just one question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) whether he gives shows in some other place than the House so that we can go and see them sometimes.

Mrs. Mailly: Just like you!

Mr. Jourdenais: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to answer either his question or his comment; it was all mixed up and I did not understand anything. I would like to know what he told me because I was not plugged in and he does not speak loud enough.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of comments and a question. No doubt the Hon. Member is asking us what was in the containers. That is a good question. Perhaps it was fish or beef because the smell was sort of coming over—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: —as the speech went along.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Do not put the cart before the horses.

Mr. Waddell: —the beef, if was the beef!

[English]

I understand also that there is not going to be much change in uniforms since the Minister of National Defence has departed. I am told there will be the same pants but different coats.

I have a question I would like to ask the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

He suggested, I think, that it was possible, or he favoured the situation where a person can buy a Canadian passport; if you have money, if you are rich you could come in Canada. Are these the Hon. Member's policies?

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, first, I am going to answer his question. It was not fish, and my speech did not smell, but school equipment. Believe it or not—

[English]

It was school furniture, two trucks, two tractors and 38 full containers of merchandise which had been there for over three years. The cost price is exactly $3 million, plus $4,000. The first year I am told $15,000 a month was paid for rent. This is what is in it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. This is not a show and tell. I have let the Hon. Member show the picture once. I wish Hon. Members would stop bringing in to this chamber their little signs, otherwise the next thing we will be doing is stopping for commercials. The Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) has the floor to comment.

[Translation]

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, I hope we will not have to bring more pictures. For the sake of Canadians, I hope there is no other similar situation across Canada.

You misunderstood what I said regarding immigrants. I mentioned that a large number of applications which have been rejected came from people, from businessmen who are willing to pay if necessary, to give money, to be able to come to Canada. I did not say we were going to accept such a thing. I said these people want to become Canadians because we have a great country, with a better economic climate than many countries. These people are probably even told that money grows on sidewalks. This is what I said, my friend. I am not in favour of people paying in order to come to Canada, but I would like to bring more business people into our country and to change the rules, for instance. I do not want to discuss immigration matters with you. Come anytime when the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration is sitting, three or four times a week, and you will see. We try to bring investments to Canada through small businesses. Why should we not bring immigrants with capital to open small businesses and create jobs? This is what I said, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to compliment the Hon. Member on what I think is a first rate speech in this chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: He has brought several things to our attention. I think it behooves us all to read his speech when we receive Hansard on Monday because there is a lot of thought and merit in it.

The Hon. Member has raised the issue of waste. The Budget does deal with the reality that 80 per cent of the deficit cuts are coming through reduced expenditures. We on this side of the House are looking for as much waste and as much duplication as we can find. I wonder if the Hon. Member might tell us how he became aware of these examples? I suspect that people in his riding brought them to his attention. If that was the case, perhaps he could inform us. I think we are all looking for those examples of waste wherever we can find them, and we need as much help as we can get. Would the Hon. Member share with us his thoughts as to how he found out about these examples?

[Translation]

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I got the documents and I know what is happening in my riding because I returned to my riding last week-end and gave a speech to people who have decided to bring their organization under control. They need $600,000 and already have $100,000. They told me: "We will not have to go very far to find the money, because there is some lying around in the yard over there." This is exactly what I was told. Because I am a government Member who wants to help people and not waste money, I decided to have a look. So I went there and discovered $3 million worth of goods which have been in containers since 1982, two trucks which have never been moved, which have never been used. They were supposed to—

[English]

—for Bolivia. I don't know why it is there. I am sure there must be some other examples of waste because this was done by the previous administration, which worked in this way. I am positive that there must be some millions, probably in Liberal ridings, perhaps not now in Conservative ridings but probably in Liberal ridings. So this is the way I found out. If you want to know more—

[Translation]

— sorry, the Right Hon. Member—

[English]

—come and see me and I will tell everything because right after I think I will have a press conference.

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member a question. Has he changed his carpet since he became a Member of the House of Commons? . . . I do not mean here, but in his office.

Mr. Jourdenais: I thank the Hon. Member for asking that question, Mr. Speaker. No, I did not change my carpet. I still have the same carpet, but I had one room painted because I wanted it blue and not red. That's it.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no further questions for the Hon. Member, we shall resume debate.

[Translation]

The questions and comments period has now expired.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I asked about the carpets because I understand a lot of Conservative Members of Parliament like to change their carpets from brown to blue, at the same time as they talk about government waste. However, I am not here to talk about carpets. I want to talk about the Budget.

Outside this House at this very moment, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is touring the country and speaking about his Budget. It is the first Conservative Budget, indeed, the first full Conservative Budget before this House which will pass the vote in 20 years since the Diefenbaker era. It is an important Budget because it finally forces this new Government to show its true colours, to finally commit itself to something. The Canadian people began to see the choices they made, the groups they accepted consultation and advice from, and who won, who lost and who did or did not benefit from this Budget. That is what I want to talk about today.

The Minister of Finance said yesterday in Montreal that we do not have enough rich people in this country. Well, in this Budget he seems to be trying to show how he can create more rich people. What we need to do in this country is not create rich people. We need to eliminate the existing poverty and help the middle class, the ones who always seem to be victimized by these Budgets, because they end up paying more and more in taxes. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said this is a fair Budget. My question is: fair to whom? The Prime Minister and I have something in common, we are both sons of electricians, working people. I can imagine what the average electrician will think of this particular Budget when he realizes who wins and who loses and who pays.

Over the last few days, and in the days to come, we have seen and will see an opposition attack on the pension aspect of the Budget. Let me just explain how I see it, and if I am wrong, I no doubt will be corrected or challenged by Conservative MPs. As I understand it, the old age pension which people get at age 65 is universal and indexed. As inflation goes up, people get more so that they do not fall behind the increase in the cost of living. That is also true of the GIS, which goes to the poorest of pensioners. This Government has now cut the indexation of the OAS for any amount under 3 per cent. If inflation goes above 3 per cent, then it is indexed for that amount, but that 3 per cent is cut right off the top. Now, we are going to have inflation. We have now what, 4 per cent or 5 per cent inflation?

Mr. Kilgour: Four per cent.

Mr. Waddell: In previous years we have had 8 per cent, 9 per cent or 10 per cent. We are going to have inflation at leat over 3 percent. That will mean that pensioners will lose, and calculations have been made as to how much they will lose. Pensioners will lose $100 a year, or $200 million for all pensioners. This, of course, is contrary to Conservative campaign promises. As the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) pointed out, it is even contrary to a newspaper ad taken out by the Conservatives when they were in opposition. They tell the Canadian public and the old people one thing when in opposition, and another thing when they become the Government. I am told that over five years, pensioners will lose over $1,000. We are talking about the lowest income segment of our society. When people realize what has been done, I predict we will see a reaction, and I hope it is a reaction like the Government has never seen before.

Why has the Government done this? The Government's line is that it is attacking the deficit, which is the real problem. I said the other day—

[Translation]

The other day, I said in this House that it was putting the cart before the horse. In my opinion, we have a struggle against unemployment. We must create jobs. This is not a stuggle against the deficit. This budget is wrong about unemployment. It is placing the cart before the horse.

[English]

The Government is focusing on the deficit at the expense of jobs. The Government cannot have it both ways, but I think that is the position the Government is taking.

I now want to refer to energy. The other day the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) claimed that as a result of the Western Accord, some $15 billion worth of investment would be created and there would be 300,000 jobs. The Government's case involves subsidizing the oil industry. It is removing taxes from the oil industry. One tax alone, the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, involves $5.6 billion over five years. The oil industry has had some difficulty, but over the last year it has been recovering, thank you, but the Government is removing that tax and ploughing more money into the industry. The Government's line is that it is doing that in order to create more jobs.

That is what the Government has to prove, and if it fails, then the Government is really negligent and breaking faith with the pensioners and other taxpayers, ordinary Canadians who pay for a transfer of money like that to the oil companies. The Government is taking money from the pensioners by eliminating indexing and giving the money in tax breaks to the oil companies. I challenge any Member of the House to challenge me on that particular statement. I hope they will get up after I have finished, because that is certainly what the Government is doing.

The Minister said that there has been $3.6 billion worth of investment already as a result of the Western Accord. Well, I made a list and checked it out to see what the investment was. The first one amounts to $1.75 billion for TransCanada Pipelines. The Western Accord was reached about a month ago, in April. It turns out, according to the senior vice-president of TCPL, that this project has been planned for a couple of years. It had nothing to do with the Western Accord. Then the Minister said there was $500 million for Nova Corporation to expand its gas gathering system. However, the vice-president of Nova said in Calgary that the application for that system was placed before the National Energy Board on February 13, 1985, two or three months before the signing of the Accord.

The next project is Esso Resources, $200 million at Cold Lake. It turns out that is in the 1984 annual report of Imperial Oil. This project has been long planned; it is phases five and six and they are going ahead. There was $80 million, she said, for Ocelot Chemicals, covering an ammonia plant near Kitimat,British Columbia. We find that was planned in 1984 and, therefore is not as a result of the Western Accord. There is a fertilizer plant worth $600 million proposed by Westcoat Transmission Company Limited before the Accord was signed. Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company, $75 million to change the pipeline, and that was proposed before the Accord as well. To top it all off, the Minister cites the Wolf Lake oilsands project, British Petroleum, $450 million. She opened the project on Tuesday, May 28, so it is laughable that the Minister would count that as part of the fruits of the Western Accord. When you analyse those projects, you can see that they are all going to happen anyway.

She also said that $11.8 billion in investment would come in the future as a result of the Accord. She cited Petro-Canada's oilsands plant at $4.1 billion, but it has been in the planning stages for two years. Talk to Petro-Canada officials. Then there was Husky Oils upgrader at $3.2 billion. A 1984 report of Husky Oil says that the work on the upgrader is well underway. The Syncrude expansion, costing $4.1 billion, is already planned. The Trans Mountain pipeline from Edmonton to Vancouver, which will cost $400 million, has already been planned.

This is shocking, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is misleading the Canadian people about the results of the Western Accord and the Budget. The onus is on the Government to show the pensioners of Canada that jobs will be created as a result of the Budget.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gatineau on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would need guidance from you. If I understand correctly, the Hon. Member is directing his whole speech to a Minister who is not in the House to answer his questions. Consequently, I was wondering whether that was acceptable.

[English]

Mr. Manly: Where is the Minister? Why isn't she here?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We are on the main motion and it is very general. It is not a requirement that the Minister be in the House. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has the floor.

Mr. Waddell: I challenge any Member of the Conservative Party to answer my questions. This is very important for the pensioners of Canada. The Government is saying that it will create jobs as a result of giving this windfall to the oil companies. The Minister said that 300,000 jobs will be created.

I found the submission of the Canadian Petroleum Association to a standing committee on energy. It is dated April 10, 1984. The Canadian Petroleum Association is the lobby group for big oil. This town is full of lobby groups for big business, big oil, manufacturers and so on. There is not much for the ordinary people of Canada, and very little for pensioners and consumers, but the big boys have their people here.

The brief of the Canadian Petroleum Association is very interesting to read. It asks for increased security of supply to consumers at negligible cost. It suggests 1 to 2 cents per litre at the gasoline pumps. In the Budget, the Government announced a tax of 2 cents a litre at the gasoline pumps. The Association asked for market prices for oil and natural gas. In the Western Accord, the Government announced market prices for oil and natural gas, deregulation, and great windfalls for the oil companies. It asked for increased revenue for the industry.

According to The Financial Post, this industry will get $9 billion by 1990. Compare the $9 billion going to the oil industry and the almost $1 billion taken away from the Canadian taxpayers. The Association asks for a tax based investment incentive rather than grants. Soon there will be new depletion and super depletion allowances for the industry. It asked for a phase-out of the Petroleum Incentive Program and the Government has announced that. It wants elimination of the 25 per cent Crown back-in in Canada Lands, which the Government has announced. Finally the brief says that 300,000 jobs will be created. That is the figure the Minister used. It is the figure of the Canadian Petroleum Association.

In committee I asked the Deputy Minister whether there were any studies on the jobs that will be created as a result of taking money from pensioners and giving it to oil companies. He said that they had studies and would get them for me. They delayed and delayed, so on May 8 I filed under the Freedom of Information Act asking for the studies. I said, "I seek documents produced by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources which show that between 100,000 and 300,000 jobs will be created as a result of the specific provisions of the Western Accord. These documents would include impact studies on the employment which would be generated by the Accord in its present form."

I received a letter signed by the Co-ordinator, Access to Information and Privacy, Energy, Mines and Resources. It says, "I regret to inform you that after thorough research and consultations with our Department's officials, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources holds no such documents that include or show impact studies on the employment which will be generated by the Accord." It is negligent to give $9 billion to the oil industry without having their own studies on the number of jobs that will be created.

There is a study of the Economic Council of Canada which I traced down. The Council's director estimated that 100,000 jobs could be created by 1990, but that is based both on oil and natural gas prices reaching world levels. Natural gas prices are not at world levels. World prices for natural gas would be responsible for creating energy industry activity that would probably result in one-half of the 100,000 jobs. There is a fat market for natural gas, so let us eliminate the 100,000 and make it 50,000.

John Helliwell, a renowned economist in British Columbia, said that the removal of $5.6 billion from the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax by 1990 would create 15,000 jobs. He said, however, that a general reduction in personal income taxes in an equivalent amount would create 40,000 jobs. The Government has raised sales taxes, which means that people will have less money to spend on things that would create jobs. He said that since the Government would have to raise taxes in order to make up for the money lost to the Treasury through the removal of the PGRT there will be a net loss of 35,000 jobs.

The Government is giving all that money to the capital intensive petroleum industry, which spends most of its money on equipment from abroad. It is true that some jobs will be created, but jobs may be created more cheaply in other places. The point is that the Government has no studies and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been misleading the Canadian people about the jobs that will result from the Western Accord. She has been misleading the Canadian people about the reinvestment rate of the industry. She said that the Western Accord requires the companies to reinvest their windfalls in job creation although that is not what the Accord says. Reinvestment will only be monitored. The companies could take the money and run back to the United States where the majority of them are based.

We have an unfair system of taxation in energy. Money is being taken from pensioners and given to big business, especially the oil companies. I think there will be a reaction from the pensioners of the country. Although they do not have a lot of power, they will have to mobilize because the Budget does a real injustice. The Budget is unfair in taking money from the pensioners, who have worked hard for the country and deserve those benefits, and giving it to the oil industry which is already very rich and is 55 per cent foreign owned. The Government is doing that on a hope and prayer that the money will be reinvested, but that will not necessarily create jobs. I think that is criminal negligence of the worst sort, and the victim is the Canadian pensioner.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, since this morning allegations are being made about what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) might have said. I would like, for the record, to make a correction about what he said in his speech yesterday. This has been mentioned all day and I would like to quote what the said, to avoid that he be quoted again by others and his words taken out of context. He was speaking at the annual meeting of the Canadian Economics Association, in Montreal, yesterday afternoon, and—

Mr. Speaker, it was alleged a moment ago that the Minister had unfortunate choice of words when he said that there were not enough rich people in Canada. This is the part I would like to correct for the record. I would like to quote what he said in English in order for everyone to understand. Here is what the Minister really said, in the proper context, and I quote:

● (1600)

[English]

Now I acknowledge that it would be just delightful if we could solve our fiscal problems by asking only rich people to carry the burden of restoring fiscal responsibility. But this brings us face to face with another one of those sobering realities that finance ministers cannot escape: No matter how we define the term, Canada has an acute shortage of rich people.

For example, those reporting total incomes greater than $60,000 in 1982 accounted for—

If they want the exact quotation of the Minister of Finance they can either ask the Minister of Finance or me. It will be a pleasure to supply the exact phrase he said without interpreting it.

Second, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) alleged that 45 per cent was Canadian owned because he said 55 per cent was foreign owned. It is not something that we can neglect in the treatment of our fiscal responsibility to the oil industry.

[Translation]

On the other hand, domestic or foreign investments will create jobs for Canadians because the majority of people working in these areas either as wage earners, subcontractors or small businessmen, who are in a way "commercial parasites" of larger corporations, a term without derogatory meaning nowadays, are Canadians. We therefore suggest that any supportive action like the new proposal will promote employment. I would remind the Hon. Member once again that the President of the Treasury Board stated this morning that we were not in any way taking anything away from pensioners. As a matter of fact, we are making sure that over 3 per cent, they will be protected against inflation, against the spectre we once faced, that there will be no more 6, 8 or 10 per cent inflation rate as we have known with the famous 5 and 6 per cent magic conjured up by the former government. Pensioners will not lose anything this year and nothing will be taken away from them next year, of course. But nevertheless, we will ensure payments to the most needy. That is exactly what the Hon. Minister intended to do in his Budget. I believe, like all of us and indeed the majority of Canadians, that he was successful.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I will then recognize the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) and the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I said in my speech that the Government makes wild statements that it will create jobs. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been the worst offender, saying that the Government will create 300,000 jobs. She cannot name the jobs that will be created and she has no studies to prove that. All she has is the Canadian Petroleum Association study—

Mr. Lanthier: Experience.

Mr. Waddell: She does not have experience. You are like Tinker Bell who once advised the kids if you want to fly, put your hands over your eyes, and say "I wish I could fly". That is not how you fly.

I am not opposed to more people being rich. I wish we were all rich. However, the fact is that the Government had to get the money from somewhere to replace the money that it transferred to the oil industry. An Hon. Member spoke about the deficit. The Government got the money partly through taking away from the senior citizens; by making them poorer. That is undeniable. They will be poorer.

Mrs. Mailly: Eighty per cent comes from—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, sometimes the intelligence of what is said by Members opposite absolutely appalls me, especially in regard to the oil industry. What does the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) know about the oil industry?

If he were to tour Alberta, which contains the bulk of our oil in this country, he will know that when the oil industry boomed, jobs were created in Ontario, Quebec and all across the country. Pipes were manufactured in Ontario and boilers were manufactured in Quebec for the good of the whole country. When that industry boomed, industry throughout the country flourished. That would be very evident to the Hon. Member if he were to see what is happening. I am surprised that he does not know any more about it other than to say that we have taken money from senior citizens to put into the oil industry.

Mr. Langdon: It is true.

Mr. Keeper: It is in the Budget.

Mr. Holtmann: That is absolutely ludicrous. The Hon. Member takes a narrow view because the fact is that investment in the oil industry will probably create more jobs than any other single industry in this country.

An Hon. Member: Wow!

Mr. Holtmann: He is excited too. The previous adminsitration could not achieve self sufficiency in oil. When we can't achieve that self sufficiency in oil, we lose millions of dollars in revenue as a result of having to import foreign oil. The Hon. Member says that everyone opposes the Budget. I have been reading some of my mail. The Prairie Theatre Exchange in Winnipeg is an arts group which also employs people. This letter was not solicited, but it states:

> Having been quick to protest the November cuts to cultural agencies, I wish to be as quick to congratulate you on what you and your colleagues have achieved in the May budget.

The author is talking about the arts community which they believe was threatened. The arts community also employs people.

Mr. Keeper: More than the oil industry.

Mr. Holtmann: Perhaps more, but we cannot be sure because the Hon. Member does not know where all the jobs are created. He wants the Budget to be specific and name where each job will be created. That does not make sense.

We will know where the jobs are when the financial atmosphere is ready to create them. I am not talking about the kind of jobs that the Government stipulates because we know that they never lasted. They are the kinds of jobs that his Party would create. They did that in Manitoba and it does not work. The letter goes on:

The task force to investigate the stimulation of private and individual investment and contribution to cultural activities is a superb initiative.

That is the reaction we are getting to the Budget. We will point out further reactions to the Hon. Member as they come in, because he will turn a blind eye in the same way he described before. His Party wears blinkers that extend around to the front. Before the Hon. Member makes statements about the oil industry, rather than referring to documents, I suggest that he visit those working on the oil wells to discuss what has actually happened. Don't make blanket statements like that.

Mr. Waddell: I know that the Hon. Member farms pigs. He knows a lot about pigs. Let me tell him that I tried to learn about the oil industry. I am a senior member of the energy committee and I have visited virtually every large oil project in the country in the last 10 years.

Let me make two brief points to the Hon. Member. First, it was my understanding that police, firemen, teachers, garbage collectors and construction workers on public highways also held jobs. Let us not criticize them. I realize that programs such as LIP and OFY were of no benefit, but they do not attack the real public sector jobs. The Canadian Federation of Municipalities suggested that if it was given half the money being given to the oil industries, it could create 300,000 jobs repairing some of the cities in this country.

• (1610)

Second, of course giving money to the oil companies, the biggest windfall of which was to Texaco, was a strange choice, but that money will create some jobs. It will if you give anybody money. Do not buy the line that the Canadian Petroleum Association has succeeded in implanting in the Conservatives brains that it is the engine of economic growth, the only engine. In fact, it costs a heck of a lot of money to create jobs in the oil industry because it is a capital intensive industry. The Conservatives have bought the line hook, line, and sinker and it is taking the money out of the pockets of the Canadian pensioner to pay for it.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, did the Member seriously tell my colleague, the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) that he visited every oil installation in Canada?

Mr. Waddell: That is not what I said.

Mr. Kilgour: Does the Hon. Member stand for repealing the National Energy Program or changing it in any way? Does the Hon. Member stand for leaving in place the PGRT? Does the Hon. Member want PIP to remain? Could he answer some of those questions, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Very quickly, please.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I will need two hours. I told the Member that I visited the major projects. We have the Beaufort, the off-shore, east and west, the tar sands, the heavy oil, the light crude and the natural gas. Those are the plays, if you like, in the oil industry. I have tried to listen to the oil industry. I know a lot of people in the oil industry with whom I disagree, but I respect a great deal. We did not support the National Energy Program. Look at the vote. Look at the record. We supported the thrust of Canadianization, of energy security and of a fair taxation regime, and that is where the new energy policy of the Budget breaks down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I will recognize the next speaker. The Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais).

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, although I have previously spoken under Standing Order 21 and I have asked questions during Question Period, I rise for the first time today to address the House on what I consider to be one of the most important documents ever brought before this assembly, the Wilson Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gervais: It is a good Budget, one which will help create a turning point in Canadian history, just as the election of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and a majority Progressive Conservative Government on September 4 was the beginning of a new era.

Before I turn to the Budget itself, I would like to mention that I represent the Riding of Timmins-Chapleau, a great riding in northern Ontario, one of the largest in area in Canada. I live in a town called Iroquois Falls. Timmins is the major community in the riding, consisting of 46,620 square kilometers. Timmins is probably one of the best known cities in all of Canada. As a major mining community since 1909, Timmins is known around the world. For the first 52 years of its existence, Timmins was known as a gold mining centre. Since 1964 it has been known as the home of the fabulous Kid Creek Mine. This mine ranks as the world's number one producer of silver and zinc. It also produces lead, copper, gold, and cadmium, as well as sulphuric acid as a by-product.

I started with mining because mining is one of the economic pillars of Canada. In my riding, it is the number one employer in terms of jobs. It employs 5,735 out of the 29,540 total workers in the riding. When one thinks of Timmins, one automatically thinks of mining.

I might mention there is some good news for the mining community in the Wilson Budget. I refer to the Minister's decision to correct the inequalities in the current system regarding tax treatment of certain allowances and benefits paid to persons residing in the North and in other isolated communities. There is a tendency to think of northern allowances and of problems in isolated communities as relating only to the North or north of the 60th parallel, but in reality we have those problems in every province.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to give Hon. Members some information on the mining association since there is a problem in my riding. It is a fact that mining operations are removed from large centres, so that it is difficult to attract and keep workers in those communities. Not only are there centres such as Timmins, but new development like Detour Lake next to my riding, and also Hemlo which is located in the northwestern part of Ontario.

I am quite happy that Mr. Wilson's Budget states:

> The current system does not apply uniformly to employees in these communities. Consultations are commencing on how the existing system might be improved.

[English]

That is one major problem. There is a second one in connection with mining. What happens to the community and to the workers when an ore body is exhausted and the operation is closed? Again, I know I speak for the thousands of miners in my riding and the many thousands of miners throughout Canada when I say the initiatives outlined in the Budget are most welcome. Let me quote the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson):

> The Government believes that when industrial closures occur, it is often appropriate to join with employers to assist those who were displaced. Accordingly, the Government remains ready, on a case by case basis, to consider exempting severance pay and termination payments from tax in the case of closure of the principal industry in remote communities where alternative employment opportunities are limited or simply do not exist.

I am also pleased the Budget calls for reform to the pension system. As a result of the new Budget, employees under federal jurisdiction will have their pension contributions locked in after two years and their pension plans will be portable. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this cannot be extended to the mining and forestry sector at this time because those sectors come under provincial jurisdiction. Workers in the forestry and mining sectors have long requested the portability of pension plans due to the transient nature and the many closures within the industries. We will continue to negotiate with the provinces with a view to having them follow our lead on pension reform.

I am proud of the strong economic base in my riding, a strength which has increased with the election of a Progressive Conservative Government and the start of a renewal of the nation as a whole. The three major mining companies in Timmins, Kidd Creek Mines Ltd., Pamour Porcupine Mines Limited and Dome Mines Limited returned to the proper side of the ledger for their local operations in this first quarter of 1985, and the outlook for mining appears bright for the years ahead, especially since I am expecting the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) to do someting to protect those mining communities from fluctuations in the price of gold. Elected municipal representatives from my riding have headed two delegations from the community which have met with the Minister of State for Mines.

As well, the outdated regressive taxation system imposed on the mining industry by some provincial governments should be examined. As part of our ongoing consultation process with the provinces, taxation reform to the mining industry should be set as a priority.

Another major mining centre in my riding is Wawa. Again there were problems as the workforce was substantially reduced between 1981 and 1984. The economic turn-about as a result of this Budget should offer some security to those employed in the iron ore operation on the shores of Lake Superior.

The second most important industry in my riding is forestry, which is based on a renewable resource, in comparison with mining, which is based on a non-renewable resource. Lumber and waferboard, as well as pulp and paper, are the products. Not only does our forest provide a means of livelihood for 2,550 men and women but for entire communities such as my home town of Iroquois Falls and Chapleau. My constituents were pleased when the Hon. Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) signed a recent, long overdue, forestry agreement with the Ontario Government under ERDA. A long lasting supply of timber is paramount to the continued prosperity of those communities, and reforestation is therefore vital.

I hope all Hon. Members realize that the Budget is a turn toward economic sanity. There is an ancient Chinese saying that the longest journey starts with a single step. The Budget now before this assembly is that step. We are embarking upon a long and difficult journey toward the day when there will be a fair and just tax system which Canadians will support and of which they will be proud.

I should now like to deal with a rather amazing situation, that is, the reaction of some senior citizens in my riding to the news that they were being asked to play a part in the great renewal taking place in Canada. I am happy and proud to say that not a single complaint by senior citizens was registered either in my constituency office in Timmins or with any of my six contact people who work in such communities as Iroquois Falls, Wawa, Chapleau, Gogama, Cartier and Foleyet; not a single one.

[Translation]

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform you that many senior citizens have called me to say that it is time that we put our economic house in order and that we try to redress the damage caused by the wasteful years of the previous Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gervais: Senior citizens are important in my riding since there are 5,445 people aged 65 years or older, who represent 8.3 percent of the population. Mr. Speaker, these people have nothing to prove and they should not have to be obliged to anyone.

Many pioneers are still living in Northern Ontario. Those men and women arrived when that land was still wild in order to build railways, industries and communities. There are still log cabins that were built by these people who are senior citizens today.

[English]

Recently I had the honour to present a remarkable woman, Mrs. Annie Wilkes, with a plaque from the Prime Minister and with one from myself on her hundredth birthday. Mrs. Wilkes came to Iroquois Falls in 1916 by canoe, where she raised a large family while coping with a harsh climate and a lack of amenities and services which those in large centres took for granted. It is people such as Mrs. Wilkes and her younger associates who deserve and will get protection and help from the federal Government. In the Budget of the Minister of Finance, the Guaranteed Income Supplement continues to be fully indexed against inflation and benefits to veterans remain fully indexed.

The decision to rationalize soaring social costs, a central part of the deficit, was a courageous one. I commend the Minister of Finance for tackling the issue head on. Northern Ontario seniors have fought all their lives, and I sense in their comments both in my office and on the street that they are prepared once again to be part of the national effort. The decision to increase old age security payments by the amount which exceeds 3 per cent of annual hikes in the Consumer Price Index is a clear signal to the world that Canada and its Government are desirous about getting control of spending.

Despite the overwhelming need to get everyone involved in the fight to restore a balance to spending and income, the Government has found a way to help needy families with children. The child tax credit will be increased by $70 per child, from $384 to $454, in the 1986 taxation year. This is important because of the large number of children in my riding—19,850 or 30.9 per cent under the age of 18 years at the time of the last census in 1981.

My riding is a perfect example of why the Government is trying to help low income families through the child tax credit system. Of the 16,505 families in my riding, there are 2,535 that earn less than $10,000. This represents 15.4 per cent, and is just one of the many examples of Liberal Government policies harming Canadians who cannot help themselves. It is a situation which must be changed, and I will dedicate my term in the House to improving the lot of those families.

At this time I feel it is appropriate to explain my personal philosophy about the economy in general and its effects in my riding in particular. I feel Canada is blessed with an abundance of natural resources. As a nation which must trade to live, I believe we must use these resources. Therefore, the first point in my economic creed is to protect existing jobs and, where possible, to expand them. My second point is to build upon what we have. In northern Ontario, we have minerals and trees and a workforce of dedicated men and women who ask nothing of anyone but a chance to support their families through their own efforts. We in northern Ontario, in Timmins-Chapleau, have clean air, fresh water, wildlife and basically an unspoiled wilderness. I feel tourism is the answer when one considers how best to expand the economic base.

[Translation]

I am proud of my French heritage and my ability to communicate in both official languages of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gervais: As regards bilingualism, I wish to inform the House that Timmins-Chapleau is an example for the nation: 31.7 per cent of the constituents speak French at home and 64.8 per cent speak English. However, 48.3 per cent of the residents of Timmins-Chapleau speak both French and English fluently.

[English]

I never forget, however, that people of many backgrounds played an important role in developing northern Ontario, especially my riding of Timmins-Chapleau. Ethnic groups, such as the Finns, Croatians, Ukrainians, Polish, Chinese, German, Italian and Jews, all played important roles in creating a cultural mosaic as varied and strong as any area in Canada.

• (1630)

It has often been said, and I am proud to repeat it here today, that Timmins—in fact, any community in my riding—is an example to the rest of the nation, and the world, with respect to how people from different ethnic backgrounds can work, study, play and live together. Among those playing a key role in the cultural development of the riding are the native people. While there are five reserves in my riding, only 220 native people have chosen to live on them. There are 825 living elsewhere. We are proud to have them as friends and neighbours.

I wish to state that I was born, raised and have lived all my life in northern Ontario and, more specifically, in the territorial district of Cochrane, in the federal riding of Timmins-Chapleau. I am proud to represent the residents of that riding.

[Translation]

I am very proud to be the first Progressive Conservative Member to be elected in the riding of Timmins-Chapleau.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gervais: Mr. Speaker, it shows clearly that my constituents wish more than anything else a positive change for Canada.

[English]

In closing, I am proud of My French-Canadian parentage. I am proud of my family. I am proud of the accomplishments of the residents of my riding. I am proud of my riding. Today, I am also proud to be a Member of the present Prime Minister's Government, a Government which has such people as the Minister of Finance in it. I am proud that he is our Minister of Finance. I am proud of his Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gervais: I have always been proud to be a Canadian. When the Budget becomes law, I will be especially proud to have played some small part in bringing it about by speaking here today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Member on a heartfelt and carefully constructed maiden speech. I do have several comments. I do not wish to make them critical since it is the Hon. Member's maiden speech. However, I do wish to raise two or three points.

First, I want to say that our action group visited the constituency of the Hon. Member in Timmins-Chapleau. Our visit brought to us many of the same points we heard elsewhere across the country, with the same sense of urgency people have with respect to rising unemployment. Timmins itself has shown a significant increase in unemployment, unlike some other parts of the country in recent months, because of problems in the resource sector.

With respect to the position of pensioners in this Budget, is the Hon. Member prepared to recognize that they are, in fact, being hit twice? They are being asked to pay the great range of increased taxes which all other Canadians—apart from the very rich—are being asked to pay. They are being asked to pay increased sales taxes because of the 1 per cent increase in federal sales tax. They are being asked to pay increased taxes because of the extension of sales tax to other items. They will pay higher income tax because of the elimination of the $50 deduction. They will pay other increases because of deindexation. Thus, pensioners are being asked to pay a significant share. We have estimated the figure at something in the order of $2,000 per pensioner family over the next five years as a result of this Budget.

The question is not whether it is fair that pensioners should pay some share with respect to the sacrifices which are being borne by all Canadians. That is not the issue being debated in the House. Given the sincere presentation the Hon. Member has made, I would like to ask him if he truly thinks that it makes sense to ask for an extra burden from pensioners, an extra burden over and above the amount of tax burden which they are required to pay already. I am speaking of the extra burden which comes from the loss of indexation with respect to the 3 per cent figure.

Has the Hon. Member received letters from constituents, such as the ones I have received, pointing out one of the other major costs for people who will be retiring? I have a letter in front of me which I received today. It is from a person who is now 56 years of age and who will be ready to retire in nine years. This person has an income of $17,000 and was able to contribute 20 per cent of his income to an RRSP. The amount of his contribution has been cut back to 18 per cent, thereby costing him the possibility of tax relief now and an improved pension in the future. This is a fact which has not been widely recognized, but one which is contained in the Budget. Does the Hon. Member recognize the fact that these extra burdens have been imposed on pensioners over and above the extra taxes they have to pay, along with other Canadians?

Mr. Gervais: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his kind words following my inaugural speech.

In reply to his question with respect to unemployment, I, too, am concerned with the high unemployment rate, not only in Timmins, and throughout my riding, but, indeed, throughout the country. It was precisely to that point I was speaking in my inaugural address and in respect of the turnaround in the economy.

We cannot sell mineral products produced in Timmins when the economy has slowed to the pace which it has since 1981. Before the recession, Timmins had no unemployment. Why? Because the oil industry was booming. All types of equipment were being built around the areas of Hamilton and Toronto for use in the oil fields. This equipment was being made out of steel and other types of minerals which come out of northern Ontario. It was being used for expansions in paper mills and sawmills. During the recession, that expansion slowed to a crawl and, consequently, there were no buyers for our products. With the turnaround in the economy this Budget will bring, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the question of unemployment should resolve itself, not only in Timmins but throughout the country.

With respect to the point he makes concerning the hardship on pensioners, as the Minister of Finance has said so often, and as I think the Prime Minister has said on a number of occasions, the economic pain of this Budget has been spread as evenly and fairly as possible.

To illustrate my point, on the plane coming back from my constituency last Monday, I sat beside a gentleman from the banking community in Toronto. I know very well that this gentleman is the first vice-president of a mine close to Timmins and travels to and from the area on occasion. His comment was very interesting. He asked me why, after all the taxes that Canadians are required to pay, the Government placed another two surtaxes on Canadians and another tax on capital. He asked me why the banks had not been singled out.

It is not only the older people who will feel the pain of the legacy of the tremendous national delficit which has been left to us. That deficit must be resolved. Opposition Members have referred to the middle-income earners. Sure, they will suffer as well. Everyone will suffer. That is the way it was meant to be in the Budget.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment. The Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais) made his maiden speech today. I have been in the Chamber for six years and I continue to be in awe of the new Members in the quality of their thinking and in the quality of their speeches.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: I wanted to make a comment, because the NDP was on its feet so quickly as the protector of the poor. My maiden speech in the Chamber followed the Budget which was brought down by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) when he was Minister of Finance in 1979. He brought a Budget into the Chamber which the Canadian Welfare Council said was the fairest Budget to the poor people of the nation in the decade of the seventies. At that time, the NDP moved a motion which tossed out that Budget. It reached an unholy alliance with the Liberal Party of Canada and succeeded in tossing out a Government on a Budget which was viewed by the Canadian Welfare Council and other analysts as the fairest Budget to poor people in the decade of the seventies. I would like to say to all new Members in the Chamber that when NDP Members stand up and try to portray themselves as the champions of senior citizens, they are talking to somebody whom I have not yet met. Every senior citizen whom I have encountered wants to be a part of society and wants to contribute to the nation. Senior citizens understand that the contribution of 3 per cent will let them do their part to ensure that in 1990 they will not be $3,000 more in debt than they are today. That is what the Budget is about. That is what the Hon. Member has outlined. He knows that senior citizens want to be a part of the country and not hived off into some Never Never Land.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) on debate.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who has just finished his remarks, that the senior citizens of Canada know that the Liberal Party has done more for them over the years and has made them a real part of society than any Party in the country.

Mr. Siddon: They voted you out, Len.

Mr. Hopkins: I can understand that my comment hurts, because everyone wants to be a hero.

During election campaigns, promises are made by candidates. Promises are also made by potential Prime Ministers. There is always a certain amount of distrust on the part of the public toward politicians, and that is sometimes justified by the results.

On August 22, 1984, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sent a telex to the Progressive Conservative candidate in my riding. That telex was eventually transformed into a newspaper ad which was accompanied by a picture of the present Prime Minister. The article was entitled: "The P.C. Commitment to Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories." The article read:

> Since September 1945, when Canada's first civil reactor started to produce energy at the Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories, Canada's nuclear power program has grown with each new step—the NPD at Rolphton, Douglas Point and finally Pickering—to become the most successful nuclear power system in the world, CANDU.

That was stated by the late Hon. C. D. Howe. However, the Prime Minister did not mention Mr. C. D. Howe in the article. The article continued:

> Chalk River has been the heart and soul of this nuclear program. A P.C. government will not only maintain this facility, it will consider providing additional funds to allow greater Canadian involvement in the massive fusion energy projects underway in other countries, building on the Laboratory's experience with tritium-based fusion cycles.
> The future of Chalk River is closely linked to our Party's commitment to research and development. We will develop a co-ordinated approach to government-sponsored research, strengthening the linkages between public sector and private sector research activities, and setting priorities in close consultation with provincial governments engaged in similar research.

As a final comment, the Prime Minister's ad stated:

> This is the Progressive Conservative commitment: Job security for you—and jobs for your children.

Then we came to reality, the Budget which was brought down last week, and are told the results of that firm commitment. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) slashed research and development funding for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited from the present $200 million level down to $100 million by 1990. Since more than $110 million of the current $200 million goes to Chalk River—

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) on a point of order.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House on this matter. He has cited from the Budget and alleged that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) slashed research and development funding to AECL by $100 million. I would challenge the Hon. Member to produce such a quote or statement from the Budget. Indeed, it is not true.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is a point of debate. I believe that the Hon. Minister and the Hon. Member will have a chance to go at it during the period which is allotted for questions and comments.

Mr. Hopkins: The Minister should read his Party's Budget. Since more than $110 million of the current $200 million goes to Chalk River, and provides 75 per cent of its total budget, the planned cuts to AECL will have a devastating effect on the laboratory the Prime Minister promised in writing not only to maintain, but possibly to consider expanding. Another $70 million was taken out of the company's earned savings.

If AECL's research and development effort is decimated every year until 1990, as the Budget of the Minister of Finance requires, the loss to Canada in scientific and technical capability will be enormous. If we as Canadians continue to accept the breaking of promises as a politician's right, we stand to lose as much in our nation's character.

Only two years ago, a study by the U.S. Office of Naval Research pointed to AECL as the second most productive organization outside the United States in one field alone—basic physics. The only institution with a better record was in Juelich, West Germany. IBM Switzerland was third. The measure of each laboratory's success was the number of times its results were published in the prestigious American journal, Physical Review Letters. The journal has a strict refereeing system which accepts for publication only the very best international work.

• (1650)

The report notes that over the 10 year period from 1970 to 1980, the success of U.S. laboratories in basic physics declined, while that of foreign laboratories like those of AECL increased. The report also expressed concern that U.S. industry is "just not playing the game" in its support of science.

The budget papers of the Minister of Finance suggest that the cut in government support funds to AECL should be made up from other sources, but he has not come up with any. Presumably, he is thinking of Canadian industry, although it is not usually noted for doing better in R and D than its U.S. counterpart. No body, whether it be Government, business or agency of Government, has come forward to take up the slack as Atomic Energy of Canada's research and development allotment of funds decreases. Therefore, it almost looks as if it is the gradual winding down of one of the greatest long-term success stories of high tech in this country and this happens at a time when the Minister of Finance comes in with a Budget which he says stresses research and development in Canada. However, his Budget is winding down one of the best we have in the country.

Many businesses and organizations inside and outside Canada which have done business with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited over the years know that its research capacity is not debatable fact. Federal funds for research and development by Atomic Energy of Canada are cut in half by the recent federal Budget of the Minister of Finance. This cut could cripple Canada's nuclear industry and cause significant damage to many sectors of our economy, because this industry does a lot of work with private enterprise inside Canada and internationally. Prospects for foreign sales of the Candu power reactor in an already tough market will suffer if Canada's commitment to the system now falters.

The statement by the Minister of Finance that federal support for nuclear research and development would be cut in half over the next five years is causing grave concern among members of the society of AECL professional employees at the Chalk River nuclear laboratories of Atomic Energy of Canada, and, indeed, it is of grave concern to the Crown Corporation in general.

The AECL laboratories were established 40 years ago to exploit peaceful—and I emphasize the word peaceful—uses of atomic energy. Its most visible product, Candu, has been acknowledged by the present Prime Minister as the most successful nuclear power system in the world. It is a leader in reliability of operation and low electricity costs. However, any high-tech activity must have continuing development to stay competitive. It must have continuing research. Tomorrow's buyers of power reactors will be interested in only technologically advanced models. They will not be interested in those of yesteryear.

Research and development, associated with the upkeep and maintenance of current Canadus, can be the responsibility of existing users—that is the great theory—but users' interests do not guarantee adequate funding for future development. If the ongoing development of Candu and other nuclear technology is curtailed, the future energy needs of Canadians, and the commercial prospects of a key Canadian industry, will indeed be jeopardized. These cuts come at a time when foreign competitors are increasing their commitment to, and investment in, nuclear technology.

In his budget speech, the Minister of Finance said that Candu technology is now well established. There is a quote, Mr. Speaker, in the May 31 edition of the Ottawa Citizen. James Donnelly, the President of the Crown Corporation, told the House of Commons National Resources Committee yesterday that he does not share the Government's view that the Candu reactors' program is established to the point it no longer needs a large infusion of research money. In fact, he said, Canada is only at the threshold of nuclear science. The Liberal energy critic, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), said that the Tories are hanging AECL out to dry by cutting support to power reactor development.

No product, certainly not a high-technology product like a reactor can stop developing and still remain competitive. That argument is ridiculous. The United States, France and Germany, our competitors in the reactor market, all maintain strong government funded research laboratories. Their products will continue to develop while ours, without AECL's research and development, will not. The result will be the death of Canada's nuclear industry. That means a total of about 30,000 lost jobs and there are up to 55,000 indirect jobs involved.

AECL is like a service industry to many private industries, Mr. Speaker, and works with them on a continuing basis year by year. Research at Chalk River is not only a matter of reactor product development, as some people know. The laboratory is a national resource with an international reputation in many areas of pure and applied science. In fact, together with the White Shell Laboratory in Manitoba, it constitutes a unique blend of pure and applied skills which are not matched anywhere else in the country, nor, indeed, in most of the western world. This means that in solving many technical problems, the laboratory can draw on scientific depth to whatever level is necessary, and it can do so rapidly and at one site.

One consequence has been the effective response to requests from the nuclear industry to diagnose the recent problem with the Pickering pressure tubes, for example. Chalk River's contributions to a wide spectrum of science on an ongoing basis has been very important. Chalk River is doing world class science of which our country should be proud. It is also keeping an important national industry competitive. If the cuts by the Minister of Finance are proceeded with, the best of the scientists and engineers will be lost, many to other countries. It will be another Avro Arrow. We will lose talent from Canada, driving it out of the country. Surely it is not the intention of the Government to dissipate its research and development resources at a time when they are most needed. Surely the national good will be better served by the Prime Minister keeping his promises of last August rather than accepting the budget statement of last week.

The cuts in research and development have great significance which may not even be appreciated by the Government itself. The statement of the Minister of Finance to Parliament explicitly promised no reduction in spending on R and D related to health and safety. It implies that the Candu is sufficiently mature that its future is not jeopardized by a winding down of government support, something with which the president of the company does not agree. There is no evidence of the government's appreciation of how lean Canadian nuclear R and D already is.

AECL operates two nuclear research laboratories at Chalk River in Ontario and at White Shell in Manitoba. While they are smaller versions of the nuclear laboratories found in almost all of the developed countries, their 3,500-strong work force is unique in Canada in its capabilities to bring together long-term peer research and large mission oriented development and application. The work covers a vast range. It includes world leadership in aspects of nuclear physics, cancer research funded by the U.S. National Institute of Health, a dominant world position in production of some of the radio isotopes most widely used in cancer therapy—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Should the Hon. Member wish to continue his speech, he will have four minutes, plus a question and comment period, the next time we debate the Budget.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Friday, May 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, when I interrupted my remarks at five o'clock on Friday I was talking about Canada's dominant world position in the production of some of the radio isotopes most widely used in cancer therapy and the tremendous work done by the Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories. I spoke about the development of small reactors for heat and electricity in remote communities, which is very useful for a country like Canada. There are numerous other programs designed to ensure that nuclear power is the safest form of energy; I talked about continuing the development of nuclear science and to apply it in many different and peaceful ways. I emphasize "peaceful" because that is the type of nuclear energy I am talking about today.

The Government does not seem to appreciate fully the fact that all the technical and scientific capabilities of this program cannot be picked over to select some for continuation and some for termination. This has been done before anything has been put in place to take up the slack. Will the question of who should have been funding an abandoned program be addressed only when some unexpected technical difficulty has idled Ontario Hydro's reactors and we have an energy problem? We have been assured that health and safety aspects of the atomic energy programs will not be cut, but has the Government really examined the effect on these programs of the envisaged reduction in AECL research manpower? Radio isotope production for cancer therapy, for example, depends on the operation of reactors serving many other purposes. Extracting the isotopes is dependent on many technical skills. You cannot cut off the muscle power in the human limbs and still run a competitive race any more than you can cut off in-depth research and development on nuclear energy or Candu technology, and still remain competitive in the reactor market of the world.

The most worrying aspect of the comments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on AECL is that none of those considerations seem to have been discussed. One wonders if they have been addressed or whether one of Canada's few successes in high technology is going to be casually sacrificed, bit by bit, for a superficially favourable entry on the right side of the budget ledger. The Government just wants AECL to make it look good. The Government wants $100 million of the research and development money of AECL over the next five years. It wants $50 million of the earned savings of AECL this year and another $20 million next year.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is telling AECL not to worry about all the firm commitments the Government made to the Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories during the last election campaign. The Prime Minister's commitment was not worth the paper it was written on. Because of Candu technology, Canada is today the fourth largest producer of hydroelectric power in the world. Only the United States, the Soviet Union, and Japan produce more hydroelectric power than Canada. Pickering is one of our prides. There is far more power generated there since its beginning than it was ever thought would be produced at Niagara Falls.

The people working and living in the communities for many miles surrounding the Chalk River laboratories are worried. Deep down they are hurt and angry because they feel that they have been had by the Government. In the next two years alone, $110 million will be taken from them. That is a sudden shock which the industry cannot absorb at a time when nothing is in place to take up the slack. On the basis of this budget decision the nation is wondering whether it can remain competitive or whether one of the greatest successes in science research in the country, namely Candu technology, will be gradually destroyed.

I appeal to the Government to give the Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories a chance to continue this program. Keep the faith with them. Our science and research is in good shape in that area in this country. I appeal to the Prime Minister and the Government to keep this commitment. No one in the country will ever be sorry. Indeed, we will become competitive in the world, and AECL will become a jewel of pride for the country. I ask parliamentarians, as loyal Canadians, to take part in that pride in the production of modern technology, such as the Candu reactor, cancer research and other AECL programs for the good of Canadians and indeed for the good of the world.

• (1110)

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member elaborate on what he believes the future of nuclear energy will be, particularly with the NDP-Liberal alliance in Ontario? Does he think that this bodes well for the future of nuclear energy, particularly with respect to the very clear policy espoused by the federal NDP?

Would he also comment on the fact that it was John Diefenbaker and John Robarts, who was then Premier of Ontario, who initiated the construction of the first commercial-sized Candu reactor in Canada?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I expected the pressure in this debate to be diverted from the main issue in the very manner shown by the Hon. Member. It is the present Government that is cutting $100 million from Atomic Energy of Canada research and development for Candu reactor technology. It is also removing $70 million from its reserves.

The Hon. Member should not tell me about what Mr. Diefenbaker did for high technology in this country. We remember the Avro Arrow and we know what is happening today. There is a parallel between that Government and the present Government.

I would remind the Hon. Member that it was the Right Hon. C.D. Howe who started this high technology research in Canada 40 years ago. He must be turning over in his grave today at what is happening to that jewel of high tech which he created together with the Liberal Government of the day.

The Hon. Member talks about the Liberal-NDP alliance in Ontario. That is nothing compared to what is happening with the present Government. During the last election campaign, the Prime Minister sent a telex stating his commitment to the Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories, a commitment which is stronger than a promise. Yet the Minister of Finance introduced a Budget which is cutting research and development of Candu reactors in this country by $100 million over the next five years. As if that is not enough, the Government wants to make itself look good by reducing the national debt, so it will take $50 million from the earned savings of the company in 1985-86 and another $20 million next year. That is $110 million in total to be taken from the company in the first two years. That is a clear indication of the Government's intent to kill that company.

Furthermore, the discussions, which have presumably taken place, have produced nothing to replace those cuts. The Budget indicates that the Government will negotiate with Ontario Hydro, the provinces and other agencies to try to find people to take up the slack and work with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. We have heard nothing about any action in that regard.

There are 2,350 employees at Chalk River who are concerned about what is happening to them today and to the 40 years of research that has taken place. The Government ran a campaign on what it would do for research and development. At the same time, it is downgrading and gradually destroying Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. That industry does a great deal of work for private enterprise. The Government correctly puts emphasis on private enterprise. I favour private enterprise, particularly when it produces jobs and works well. However, private enterprise cannot afford the equipment used in high-tech research at Chalk River nuclear laboratories and within AECL generally. Therefore, it contracts out to Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories, which can take on any problem and come up with an answer.

• (1115)

Do not try to pass the buck to the Ontario Government. The new Ontario Government, hopefully, will have a new resource available to it called decision-making. This Tory Government we have here today has obviously been talking to the Government of Ontario over past months, but what has it come up with? Both Governments are Conservative. Do not talk to me about an alliance. The Government has decided to go ahead with this cut, upsetting the science community. For every scientist who becomes unemployed or goes south of the border or elsewhere, we will have a brain drain once again for which the Conservative Party was famous under the leadership of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, something which the Hon. Member mentioned, not I. Right now we can make the decision whether to continue to move ahead with high-tech and whether we shall service all those companies that need research and development, whether we shall continue in-depth cancer research, because not very many people realize that Chalk River is the birthplace of the cancer therapy unit.

Mr. McDermid: It was not touched.

Mr. Hopkins: Of course it was not touched. It was first put into action in London, Ontario. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) said it was not touched. I did not say it was touched. What I said in my speech, and I will back up, is that you cannot be selective. You cannot go to an organization with in-depth expertise such as is in the Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories and, on a selective basis, say, "We are going to cut this and shove it aside. We are going to shove this aside but we are going to keep research on health and safety". You cannot do that.

Mr. Andre: Why not?

Mr. Hopkins: You need reactor research to produce medical isotopes. You cannot cut off your left arm and still carry the same pile of papers you carried before.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has established several things. First, he does not care about the debt. Second, he likes to talk about the livestock after the horses are out of the barn. One of the things in which people who might read these debates on Chalk River will be interested in what C. D. Howe actually did. Those who go back far enough and really understand what happened at the time know that because of him we lost ten years in our nuclear energy program. He did not like what they came up with. He said no, and it was held in abeyance for ten years. That is not a very broadly known secret, but that is the truth. When John Diefenbaker came to power he had a choice between an aeroplane that would not travel high enough and the Candu system. He chose the Candu system. That is why Ontario is where it is and why Canada is where it is.

Would the Hon. Member comment on the number of engineers who have been laid off by AECL in the past two years and the difference between that and what he is trying to tell us? He is very good at raising fears and concerns among people in the nuclear industry.

Could the Hon. Member explain to us the real strength in the nuclear industry and whether he thinks things have been OK in the last four or five years in the way Canada has been proceeding with the Candu system and the whole nuclear energy system? Has it been fine and dandy? Would the Hon. Member have kept the two heavy water plants going the way they were going? Could he comment on why we have had so many sales of Candu reactors abroad in the last four or five years? Could the Hon. Member explain some of those things to us? Is he arguing for the status quo?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member starts talking about the great successes of the previous longer term Conservative Government in the late 1950s and early 1960s. If that Government had been so good it would have lasted a few more years than it did.

The Hon. Member said that I do not care about the national debt. Let me tell the Hon. Member that one does not solve the national debt by destroying the very base of the high-tech research and development in Canada that helped companies around the world to solve problems. They in turn create capital. The Hon. Member knows that industries cannot go on year after year without in-depth research. If they cut back on research and development, where does it leave productive companies which in fact produce the tax dollars that help to retire the national debt? When they start cutting back one, two or three research laboratories and saying that they are doing something for the national debt, it is a farce.

• (1120)

The Hon. Member also talked about employment, scientists and so on. Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories have the kind of scientists who do not have to worry about jobs. In fact, we have many friends around the world because these scientists are members of various world organizations. I pointed out some time ago that possibly the lowest level of employment at Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories in the last 20 years occurred in December 1979 when his Party was in power. If he wants to check the facts and figures, they are there. He should not try to throw that red herring across the floor of the House. He accused me of raising fears. Who is really raising the fears? Who started this great scenario? It was the Minister of Finance who started this scenario in his Budget a week ago on Thursday night. It was the Prime Minister who sent a telex to Chalk River Nuclear Laboratories and made a firm commitment that the Conservative Party, if elected, would be solidly behind them. Then what happened?

Mr. McDermid: Answer the question.

Mr. Hopkins: The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown has a lot of shouting to do. He can shout away. I do not blame him for shouting. He should have a guilt complex. The Minister of Finance came in here and virtually cut this Crown corporation by $170 million, a corporation which has been productive over the years. I just want to say—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but unfortunately the period for questions and comments is over.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) that I don't have a guilt complex. I have listened to the budget debate and that to which I could not listen, I read about. It established clearly in my mind—and I think it would be the case in the mind of any objective listener—that the two opposition Parties have transformed themselves—perhaps they have always been that way, but in disguise—into the two most reactionary Parties the country has ever seen. All I have heard in the debate, stripped of its frills, was a demand that we continue the economic policies of the last 15 years—spend, spend, spend; do not cut, do not cut, do not cut; forget about the future. Occasionally there has been a genuflection toward the fact that we should be concerned about the deficit, but there has not been a single worth-while suggestion as to how in fact the deficit should be addressed.

Fifteen years of those policies have led us to the point where we have had one of the worst recessions since the 1930s, highest unemployment rates and a monstrous debt which we are leaving as a legacy to our children. That is what the last 15 years of Liberal policies, supported by the New Democratic Party when it really counted, have brought us.

What do the Members of the opposition Parties say? They say that they want more of the same. Last September, Canadians voted for change. They voted not just for a change in policy—though they certainly wanted a change in policy—but for a new approach to making public policy.

As Hon. Members will recall, there was good reason for this new approach. After all, what state were we in last September? We were a country whose confidence in the future had all but disappeared. We had more than 1.6 million unemployed. We had a budgetary deficit so out of control that it had to be revised upwards on a monthly basis. We had a national debt approaching $200 billion and threatening to double within five years. In western Canada, the economy had been totally throttled, destroyed by a disastrous national energy policy. What have we heard from the NDP Members during this debate? "How dare you undo the national energy policy," they said. They want it to stay in place. It amazes me when members of the NDP from the West say that. It is almost as if they needed the votes of the unemployed in order to get re-elected. It seems as if they might be in danger of losing their seats if people were put back to work.

Among other things, farmers and small businesses were going bankrupt in record numbers last fall, due partially to record high interest rates brought on by economic policies about which the opposition Parties say we need more of. At that time, our investment capital supply had completely dried up.

As we discuss some of the implications of the first Budget of our Government, it is worth remembering where we started, Mr. Speaker. In November, the Government set out an agenda for economic renewal. It set out its principles and new policy directions. We said we would make the necessary changes to promote growth, to create jobs and to improve social programs. We said we would act fairly. We said we would consult with Canadians before we acted. We said we would avoid unilateral decision making wherever possible. Also, we said we would bring government spending under control.

Since then, we have listened to the concerns and aspirations of Canadians, in the most extensive consultative process ever undertaken in Canada. This Budget reflects the sound advice we received from Canadians with respect to a wide range of issues.

The first Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) focuses upon three strategic means to address our economic problems. It focuses; first, upon the encouragement of private sector initiative and risk taking; second, upon the improvements to the efficiency and management of government programs and services; and third, upon the control and ultimate reversal of the spiralling deficit. The encouragement of initiative and risk taking in the private sector is fundamental to new job-creation efforts. New business activity and employment will be created in an environment free from government intervention. The Government will be a catalyst—not a hindrance.

In order to encourage more Canadians to invest in Canada's growth, the Government is proposing a lifetime capital gains exemption for individuals of $500,000. The full $500,000 exemption will be available to ranchers and farmers immediately, in recognition of their special problems and their contribution to Canadian society. I wonder if members of the New Democratic Party from Saskatchewan are opposed to this particular provision.

This measure alone will benefit over one million Canadians. I have heard members of the Opposition say it is of benefit only to the rich. It might interest Hon. Members to know that the vast majority of Canadians who are taxed for capital gains earn less than $40,000 a year. The vast majority are not rich, as implied by the opposition Members in their criticisms. The vast majority who fall into this category are middle class and lower middle class Canadians.

What the Government is saying loudly and clearly is that we want to reward success and not subsidize effort. We just heard the tail-end of a speech by the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) in which he suggested we should continue our subsidies to effort. He said we should continue that even though, after years and years, that subsidy has not produced any economic benefit. It has not provided the value it ought to have provided.

• (1130)

The Government is challenging Canadians to create jobs and wealth by investing in Canadian enterprise. The capital gains incentive is a strong signal indicating that the Government wants people with good ideas and the will to persevere to be rewarded for their success. We are confident that Canadians will accept that challenge and we have reason to be confident as evidenced by the reactions of spokesmen for the small business sector.

Small and medium-sized business will also benefit from our proposals to change regulations governing RRSP pension fund investments. These changes will encourage investment in small business by two of the largest and fastest growing pools of capital in Canada.

There are other measures to encourage private-sector growth and job creation. These include tax credits to individuals investing in labour-sponsored venture capital funds set up to invest in small and medium-sized business. I have not been able to discern the reaction of members of the NDP to that particular giveaway, to use their language. Perhaps that is because it was a suggestion made by Louis Laberge of the Quebec Federation of Labour that we encourage investment by labour people in the small business sector, something we applaud greatly. I would hope that one of the members of the New Democratic Party would have the grace to applaud the Government for exempting the small business sector from the 5 per cent corporate surtax.

Contrary to the statements made as recently as last night by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) who said on television that taxes to corporations have been cut, there is a 5 per cent corporate surtax. That does not represent a cut in anyone's language except that of the Leader of the New Democratic Party. As well, the small business bond program will be extended until 1987.

In addition, the Western Accord signed last month signalled a new era in the relationship between western Canada and the federal Government. As well, it will end the unmitigated disaster of the National Energy Program. These changes, among others, indicate the Government's commitment to fairness and equity and brings to a close that chapter of western history in which the federal Government unilaterally changed the rules of the game and indeed became one of the players, costing this country at least 150,000 permanent jobs.

All of those mesures and incentives have a single objective, and that is, to put economic decision making back in the hands of private entrepreneurs so that they can create jobs and be rewarded for their success. The potential of these changes is enormous. It has been said before, but bears repeating, that if every small business in Canada generated one single job, the unemployment rate would decrease by 50 per cent.

In the last 12 years, over two-thirds or something in the order of 70 per cent of all new jobs in Canada were created by small business. During the recession, more than 100 per cent of all new jobs were created by small business because big business was cutting back. There are 20,000 fewer employees in the auto industry today than there were a few years ago because of automation and improved productivity made necessary by international competition. It is the small business sector that is generating those meaninful, long-term jobs that count ant that contribute to wealth.

Those who suggest we should carry on the practices of the last 15 years through the so-called government job-creation programs, through which grants were handed out for people to paint for the fourth year in a row the white picket fence around the local cemetery, call that job creation. Those are the kinds of absurd policies which have led to this disaster. It is difficult to understand how any responsible parliamentarian can continue to advocate that sort of thing, yet that is all I have heard from both opposition Parties.

Opposition Members want more of what we have had for 15 years. Surely modern history demonstrates that the private sector is the only sector in which meaningful, long-term jobs are created. It is the small business sector which will be the generator of those jobs. I hope that, at some point in time, some members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party will have the grace to acknowledge that fact. We are not asking for applause, but I hope they will at least acknowledge the fact that this Budget will be of very significant help to the small business sector. The small business sector is responsible for the vast majority of job creation in this country and in that regard at least, the Government deserves applause.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: This Budget also takes up the challenge of fiscal responsibility that has been ignored for so long that it has become the very root of our economic problems. In this Budget, the Government has set for itself the fundamental goal of eliminating the obstacles to economic renewal posed by waste and inefficiency in Government itself. During the past few months, Canadians have told us emphatically through extensive consultations that they are willing to share in the burden of deficit reduction as long as the Government demonstrates its commitment to the same process. They want us to get our house in order.

The Budget contains measures that will result in a more efficient, effective, responsive Government. In my Department alone, we have managed to save $100 million within Statistics Canada without reducing the level of service. The Supply side of my Department is on full cost recovery and more of my Department is moving to full cost recovery. The Supply side is on a program of increased efficiency that will see the reduction in the next three years of some $20 million in the charges we make to other Departments for the services we provide. As the old joke goes, with $20 million here and $20 million there, we will soon be talking real money.

As we announced in the Budget, we are privatizing Canadian Arsenals Ltd. Corporation. We have already folded up Crown Assets Disposal. We have integrated the management of the Supply side and the Services side to eliminate duplication and prevent unnecessary growth. That will result in substantial savings to the taxpayer and will increase efficiency and effectiveness. These things are being pursued by every Department of Government. Every Minister is aggressively pursuing these kinds of initiatives, leading to a much more efficient, effective use of taxpayers' dollars and, incidentally, to a happier Public Service.

Mr. Gauthier: What a statement! Read the weekend press.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) laughs.

Mr. Gauthier: Lose your job and you'll be happy?

Mr. Andre: He is implying that his constituents and other public servants like to be associated with inefficient, wasteful activities, and he is dead wrong.

Mr. Gauthier: Not when they lose their jobs.

Mr. Andre: They do not want to be associated with such activities.

In addition, the Government has identified programs and policies that can be eliminated as they serve no useful purpose, and this will create further significant savings. The task force chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) is carrying out a comprehensive examination of government programs. It did an inventory and found that there are 1,053 different government programs. Not surprisingly, there is some duplication. Some of the results of that study were reflected in this Budget, and others will be forthcoming.

The work of these joint public-private sector committees will continue to improve the management of government programs and services. The Public Service Pension Plan will be put on a fully funded basis with no taxpayer subsidy. Full indexation of MPs' and Senators' pensions will be terminated effective January 1. The size of the Public Service will be reduced. There will be no compensation for inflation in the Government's operating and capital budgets. We are operating with no indexation for inflation within our own operations.

Making programs more effective does not simply mean cutting expenditures. It aslo means that limited resources must first go to those in need. The Government is taking action to ensure that our social programs are more progressive and fair. We have announced changes to a wide range of social programs, job benefits, pension reforms and RRSPs and greater fairness in the tax system itself.

The first two goals which the Budget is designed to address are encouragement of private-sector initiative and improvement of effectiveness in the management of government services. The third goal is the control of our spiralling national debt. This Budget attacks that major problem.

Control of the debt is critical for a number of reasons, not the least of which is the crippling effect of the deficit on our ability to respond to new social and economic needs. Hon. Members opposite have talked about the cuts which have been made, the adjustments and so on. They have told us that we should have more compassion. I would ask them to show a little bit of compassion for people in the future and the situation in which they will find themselves if the deficit is not controlled. If the deficit is not controlled, Canadians will look forward to the same situation in which Argentinians and Brazilians find themselves in trying to cope with monstrous inflation rates which are a direct result of those Governments running deficits year after year. We cannot continue to do that without putting the future of all Canadians, particularly young Canadians, and the economy into jeopardy.

Some will say that we have not cut the deficit enough. Some will say that we have cut the deficit too much. Bringing the deficit under control in the right way is the way to maintain confidence in the economy. There are no magic studies to which the NDP continues to refer. There is no computer program which will indicate the right level of deficit to reach—the nirvana which we all want. We know that the deficit must be controlled. The right level is a question of judgment. We have consulted widely with Canadians, more than any other Government in Canadian history, in trying to establish what would be the appropriate level. If we cut too far, we are in danger of affecting confidence because of the reaction which would result from the cuts. If we do not cut at all and the deficit continues to increase, we very seriously jeopardize the confidence factor in the economy and the future ability of the Government to act.

We have made some very significant steps in the right direction. We believe that it is the appropriate level. Had we not made the changes and followed the advice of the Opposition—no cuts, continue spending, and more programs—we know that the situation in the country would be worse next year than it is now. We have had 15 years of those policies.

We have also had to deal with the question of indexation. I was a strong advocate of indexation. When indexation was proposed, we were dealing with constant dollars and it seemed to be a fair system. However, after reading extensively and talking with senior economists, the Government of Brazil and the Government of Israel, I am satisfied beyond a shadow of a doubt that indexation is not a cure for inflation; it is a part of the problem. It had to be addressed. We have taken—

Mr. Murphy: You did not say that when you were on this side of the House.

Mr. Andre: That is right. I have changed my mind in the last 10 years.

Mr. Cassidy: You promised to keep it during the election campaign. That is what your Leader said.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat what I said. Members opposite have established for me my original thesis, namely, that the most reactionary Party in Canada is the NDP. Don't change anything, even if it does not work! Carry on with what we have been doing for 15 years, even if it does not work. Never change. That is the NDP line.

Change is what Canadians voted for in September and change is what we are bringing for a better future for Canadians.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have two or three comments which I would like to make. First, as he is the Minister of Supply and Services, he will understand the concern of people in the Public Service of Canada over the cuts which have been proposed. I would like an assurance from him that there will be no lay-offs in the Public Service as a result of the cuts which have been announced by the Government, which will take effect over the course of the next five or six years. Certainly, it is feasible to have that shrinkage without lay-offs. While I have concerns about the direction in which the Government is going, if it feels the need to shrink, I would like the assurance that it will be achieved without lay-offs.

Second, the Minister said that the Conservatives promised change when they assumed power on September 4. It is now clear that they have changed their minds on absolutely every policy which was advocated during the course of the election campaign. The Minister knows that it was the Progressive Conservatives who originally advocated the indexation of the personal tax system. Now they are abandoning that to the tune of 3 per cent a year. The Minister knows that during the election campaign the Progressive Conservatives promised to maintain, not to undercut, the indexation of pension incomes. However, now that they are in office, they are undermining those pensions to the tune of 3 per cent per annum. That will mean that a person who is 50 years old today will have a pension which will be worth only half of his current purchasing power by the time that person reaches the normal retirement age of 65. That is not the maintenance of a sacred trust. It is an erosion of the sacred trust to the tune of 3 per cent per year.

Does the Minister believe that it is equitable to remove taxes from 5 per cent or 10 per cent of the population of Canada who invest heavily in the stock market or in real estate? They will be in a position to benefit from the capital gains tax exemption to the point where they will be able to save $125,000. Does the Minister believe it is fair to those people to do that at the same time that the Government has decided to erode progressively the old age pension for people who often find themselves in poverty, who have worked a lifetime, and who expect, when they retire, that the sacred trust, which the Government is now abandoning, will be honoured?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to address the question of lay-offs. There is no intent to lay off public servants. The intent is to downsize the Government in a reasonable and proper manner, by virtue of the fact that in the 1,053 different programs which the Deputy Prime Minister has discovered there is duplication and activities which no longer make sense in terms of the changing needs and priorities of Canada. By way of example, one of my first responsibilities was to wind up the Canadian Unity Information Office. There were approximately 79 employees involved. Ultimately, only one person was laid off after eight months. We tried everything possible to avoid that. We did everything we could to find employment for that person in the Public Service. He had received several offers, but had turned them down because they did not meet his requirements. That is the kind of approach which we will use. It should not be difficult. Within my Department, the normal turnover is more than 500 employees a year, due to retirements, transfers and so on. With that kind of turnover, there should be no difficulty in accommodating the downsizing without resorting to lay-offs.

The Hon. Member referred to indexation. He is right. In 1972 and 1973 I was a strong advocate of indexation. I believed in that because we were dealing with constant dollars and we could stop the bracket creep produced by the so-called progressive income tax system. It was fair. It was a restraint on Government if taxes did not automatically increase due to inflation. In fact, if Governments wanted to increase taxes, they had to make that concrete step. I still feel that way, but the result of full indexation has had the effect of automatically biasing things toward inflation. In a free market situation, when prices increase on a commodity—and the one law of social sciences which I accept absolutely is the law of supply and demand—there should be a decrease in demand. But when prices go up and there is an automatic salary adjustment to meet that increase, the market does not get a chance to operate and you have an inflationary spiral.

That is most emphatically the reason why countries like Israel have 300 per cent inflation today, and they will tell you point blank that full indexation is the reason. They admit it was a terrible error because it stopped the law of supply and demand working in both directions. But the Hon. Member is being unfair in the extreme in relating that to the question of pensions and our alleged lack of concern for senior citizens. He forgets that the first piece of legislation we brought in was the extension of the spousal allowance. An early piece of legislation, I do not know whether it was the second, third or fifth, was to increase veteran's pensions to reflect the fact we owe so much to that group of Canadians for what they have done.

The Hon. Member talks about this 55 year old working person reaching retirement age and finding his or her pension will be somewhat less than it might otherwise have been. However, he forgets to acknowledge the very important changes we made to the pension system so that this 50 year old worker will be in a better position to look after himself when he reaches retirement age. Surely the NDP would agree with me that in the best of all worlds each of us would have the means to look after ourselves. Well, we have made important changes in this Budget so as to make that possible for more Canadians. I hope he will have the good grace to acknowledge that and express his appreciation for those particular changes.

He also made the statement that the capital gains tax changes benefit only a small percentage of the population. Perhaps he was not in the House when I pointed out that, based on data from Revenue Canada—

Mr. Hovdebo: Selective data.

Mr. Andre: —something over one million Canadians have been taxed on capital gains. The vast majority of those people earn less than $40,000 a year. The Hon. Member sitting next to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy)—

Mr. Hovdebo: Prince Albert.

Mr. Andre: Sorry, Stan. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) is heckling a little bit, but I have not heard him stand up and say he is opposed to the capital gains exemption for farmers. If it applies to farmers, ought it not apply to small businessmen? If it applies to small businessmen, have we not, in essence, said that in the Budget? How can they, in all good conscience, heckle and complain and say this measure is for the rich but, on the other hand, want it for the farmers? They want it for some small businessmen but apparently not for corporations because corporations are bad. But they do not want to talk about that; they want to talk about the rich who are going to benefit. Yes, some rich people may benefit, but they are a very small chunk. The real beneficiaries of this measure are people who are going to create jobs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Questions and comments?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, the Minister wound up his speech in a very strong fashion, but a strong pair of lungs is no substitute for logic.

Mr. McKenzie: Then sit down.

Mr. Hopkins: The Minister stated that he had consulted with more groups than any other Government in Canadian history. But there are many groups out there today who are saying: You may have consulted, but you certainly did not listen. The Minister started his speech by saying: "They want us to spend, spend, spend". But we are not asking the Government to spend, spend, spend. All we are asking Members opposite to do is to keep their election promises. Is the Minister telling us that when he went around this country talking about a 5 per cent or 6 per cent real increase in defence spending, he did not know it was going to cost money? Today we have an increase of 2.1 per cent in real defence spending, and yet this Government is accusing the previous Government of not doing enough for defence. All the Minister has to do is to look at the record over the past few years and the billions of dollars spent to upgrade the Canadian Armed Forces.

Mr. McDermid: After you let them go down the tubes.

Mr. Hopkins: Is the Minister saying that he cannot spend today? I say that if he did, he would be keeping his election promises. Is the Government going to keep those election promises? Obviously not.

I am glad that the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is in the House because she assured me that she was going to be very sensitive to the wishes of members of the Armed Forces regarding severance pay and unemployment insurance. She said that the early retirement pensions of members of the Armed Forces and severance pay of public servants and people in industry would not be deducted from their claims for unemployment insurance when they became unemployed. But we have not heard any firm statement from her as yet. Where is the commitment?

Without mentioning the LLAD program which was in the making when his Government took over, or the North Warning System which was 90 per cent completed before his Government took over, I want to ask the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre) if his Government is going to keep those promises, or is it going to say that it cannot keep them because, if it does, it will be spending money? Is he really telling us that they made those promises last summer without thinking it was going to cost them any money? Is that really what he is telling this House? Is this Government going to keep its firm commitment to the members of the Armed Forces?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask the Minister for a short answer, please.

Mr. Andre: I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. The Liberal Party defence critic talked about the North Warning System being 90 per cent completed before this Government took office. I wish he would communicate that information to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who keeps insisting this is some sort of sneaky plot on our part to bring in SDI and star wars. As defence critic he has the responsibility of bringing the knowledge level of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry to the point where he can start asking intelligent questions in the House.

Yes, we are committed to increasing Canada's defences. If you look at the Budget and the fiscal plan as well as at the projections, you will see that this is very clearly indicated because after 15 years of rule by the Trudeau Government, as the Hon. Member well knows, we are only ahead of Luxembourg in our ability to defend ourselves.

Mr. Hopkins: It was 4.1 per cent last year. Canada was one of three countries—

Mr. Andre: That has to be remedied, and it is going to take us more than nine months to undo 20 years of misrule by the Liberal Party.

Mr. Hopkins: Same old song.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am going to take up the Minister's challenge. He asked what our basis was for saying that the Government is not keeping its promises. I want to go through the PC campaign handbook which was used last year in talking to Canadians. It was authorized by the PC Canada Fund, which was the registered agent for the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. This booklet was sent to all the candidates, and all those PC Members who are here in this House now used it when they were talking to Canadians. It contains the promises that they made to Canadians.

• (1200)

Mrs. Mailly: It contains the solutions to problems.

Mr. Murphy: I agree that a lot of the things said in this campaign handbook were solutions to problems. The problem that we have now is that they did not keep their promises to Canadians. What they said to Canadians is not what is found in the budget papers. When the Conservatives came to power they followed the old Liberal tradition of not keeping promises.

On page 83 of their campaign document they said, "We will establish an agri-bond program to provide loans at reduced rates to producers". It goes on to say that funds invested in agri-bonds can then be lent to farmers by the Farm Credit Corporation at interest rates below prevailing bank rates.

Mrs. Mailly: The rates are lower now.

Mr. Murphy: The Deputy Whip, who never seems to get up and speak intelligently, seems always to yap from her chair. If she wants to enter debate, she can do that.

Mrs. Mailly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is the second time that the Member refers to the fact that I am commenting, as he did all through the Minister's speech. He refers to my comments as "yapping". I presume he refers to his as intelligent conversation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, that is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has the floor.

Mr. Murphy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. She may yap if she wishes to. The issue is that the Government did not keep its promise to the farmers of the country. As a result of that, they are still paying the prevailing bank interest rates. One of the main problems which farmers in the country face at the present time is the amount of debt that they are carrying on their businesses, debt which has increased rather than decreased since the Government has been in power.

Many of the government Members who have participated in this debate have spoken about the fact that the Government kept its promise on capital gains. However, what the Government actually said was that it would abolish "the imposition of capital gains tax on the sale of farm property for continued agricultural purposes". That happens to have been the policy of my Party for many years. When the Government created this new tax loophole for the rich of the country, farmers were included, but there was no attempt to ensure that the land would be used for continued agricultural purposes. This means that we will continue to lose valuable agricultural land which is needed to feed our people and the hungry of the world. Now land will go to the highest bidder. With the removal of taxation on capital gains, more and more farmers are likely to be forced into the position of having to sell their land to those who will no longer be involved in agriculture.

The Government broke its promises made to Canadians in other areas as well. With regard to the CBC, the Government said that it believed in the need "for the CBC to serve special interests in our society". As a result of the cut-backs in the CBC, Our Native Land, the only program provided to the native people of our country as a special need, is being cut. That is another broken promise.

With regard to excise tax on alcohol and tobacco, the Government said in its document that the present policy of the Liberals has had a "negative impact on both the tobacco and tourist industries". The Conservative Government increased the very taxes which it had criticized only a year ago. The Conservatives said that they could "reduce the deficit without increasing taxes or reducing the level of social services". That promise is obviously not going to be kept. The net effect of the Budget has been to increase the cost of living to an average family by $500 a year in increased taxes on top of the $500 a year in taxes and loss of services which resulted from the November 8 economic statement.

With regard to oil and gas, the Progressive Conservatives said that the "tax system must be adjusted to help lower the price of consumer oil and gas products". They broke that promise to Canadians as well. They have made promises to the women of the country. They talked about improving "federal housing, employment, and public education programs to assist victims of family violence". One of the results of funding cut-backs will be that there will no longer be transition houses for victims of family violence.

I can go on and on, Mr. Speaker, and I will because it is very important that Canadians realize that when the Conservatives were campaigning last year, they were not telling the truth. They had no intention of keeping the promises they made. This Budget has proven that Conservatives do not keep their promises.

With regard to post-secondary education under Established Program Financing, the Conservatives said that they would "return to the 1977 funding formula". That formula provided more money for post-secondary education and medicare than did the 1982 formula which was then in place. Through the Budget, the Government is going to reduce by $2 million by 1990 the amount of transfer payments for post-secondary education, medicare, and the provision of a basic level of services to Canadians. Since that reduction will be phased in over the next year it will obviously mean less money for post-secondary education. That is again a complete contradiction of what they promised during the campaign.

The Conservatives also promised to ensure that "Canada had a sufficient supply of tradesmen to meet our needs". In the Budget they cut $78 million from the critical trades program, with no new program yet in place. Our nation is suffering from a lack of qualified tradespeople. Over the years we have had to import such people. We have a large number of unemployed youth who would love the opportunity to take the necessary training, and yet the Government cuts the existing program.

In relation to the disabled, the Conservatives said that they would assist "Canadians who, due to age, disability, or lack of employment opportunity are unable to provide for their own needs". They also talked about affirmative action. Yet in the Budget they announced that they will be cutting back the Public Service by 15,000 positions over the next few years. It means that women, native people, and handicapped people who are not in the Public Service at the present time will have very little opportunity of ever moving into that system.

I received a letter from one of my constituents who has already suffered because of the cut-backs introduced by the Government. Let me read from part of the letter:

● (1210)

I am a handicapped person who is a single parent with a ten year old child. I was employed with the Canada Employment Centre in a term position.

I just cannot understand why a Government that says they are pushing for affirmative action, could cut back person years so much that it won't allow me to work.

Although I have some vision, I am registered with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. I am enclosing a letter of reference which my former manager wrote for me. This will prove that I was capable of my duties and not layed off because I couldn't perform them. I am not the only one whom this cut back has affected. A native woman who has worked in the office for two and a half years has also been layed off.

I don't want to be on unemployment benefits, I want to work, and I know I was good at my job. As I said before, how can you say that you are pushing for affirmative action and not go through with it?

Please try to understand my situation and look at it from my point of view.

Her local manager said in his letter:

Her employment with us was terminated due to cut-back in staff and not due to her performance. We would not hesitate to rehire her should a position become available.

The point I am making is that in eliminating full-time jobs in the Public Service of those who were hired last, that will continue the lack of opportunities for women, the handicapped and native people within the Public Service. This is another example of the Government doing the exact opposite of what it has promised.

The Government promised "to create more job opportunities for youth and to reduce the number of students requiring student loan assistance". I have had an opportunity to see the amount of money coming to my riding under the Challenge '85 Program for students announced by the Government. In my riding alone, there has been, in effect, a one-third reduction of the number of jobs from 581 to 395 over a one-year period. Furthermore, that funding has been cut by 40 per cent from $1,293,593 to $762,568. Therefore, in my area of the country there are fewer jobs for students who are looking for employment in order to continue their education.

The Government came into power on the basis of change and on the basis of trust. Canadians were angry and frustrated with the former Liberal Government because they felt it was arrogant and uncaring. The Progressive Conservatives received a sweeping majority on the basis of change and the need for a Government that could be trusted. In the time available to me today I have pointed out numerous areas in which the Government has reneged on promises it has made. It has reneged on its promise to farmers, to women and to the handicapped of this country. Although the Government has been very generous to its friends, it has not established the trust or the credentials for implementing the changes it promised.

In closing, let me refer to a final promise that the Conservatives have broken. It is typical of what the Government has done. During the election campaign, the Conservatives promised old age pensioners that, "a PC Government would once more index the old age pension at the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis". They said that they would respect the right of pensioners to receive the full amount of any increase in the cost of living. That has not happened.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), said a few moments ago in response to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Andre), as a result of breaking that promise, the Government has told Canadians between the ages of 50 and 55 that their pensions in ten years will only be worth one-half of what they are worth today. The old age pension will no longer be a universal benefit which Canadians can rely upon in any significant manner.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked about sacred trusts. If the Government cannot provide trust to our seniors, obviously it is not concerned about providing that trust to others in our society. It made a specific promise and then broke it as soon as it introduced its first Budget. Canadians deserve better, because although they voted for change in September, they got a repeat of a tired, cynical Government that does not believe it is necessary to keep its promises. They have a Government that is showing no concern for the ordinary Canadians, working women or senior citizens. It is a Government of broken promises.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to comment on the Hon. Member's speech. Before doing so, however, I may recall that this is my first term in the House and that I have a great deal of respect for the institution. Unfortunately, the attitude taken by the Hon. Member who just spoke is so obnoxious that it certainly diminishes much of the pleasure of being present in this House. I wish the Hon. Member would follow the example of new Members in the way they speak and their concern for maintaining a climate of respect in Parliament.

As for the points raised by the Hon. Member, there is one I would like to comment on and that is the elimination of capital gains tax on farms. He says we failed to keep our promises. As I informed the Hon. Member earlier, our campaign manual, which I helped prepare because I was executive director of the advisory committee on policy, so I know the manual very well . . . What the Hon. Member calls promises were solutions we were proposing to problems created over the last two decades, and created partly because at the time the Liberal Party was in a minority position and it had been obliged to bow to the doctrine and ideology of the Hon. Member's own party. The Liberal Party was obliged to alter its perspective, and although it might have preferred to add a measure of discipline to Government operations, the fact that it was in a minority position and dependent on a party that had no financial responsibility, that had no administrative responsibility because it had never had a hope of forming a Government, was instrumental in making the Liberals adopt policies that created the situation we are trying to remedy today.

What he refers to as promises, Mr. Speaker, were the solutions we were proposing to problems his party had created for Canada. These include, for instance, the screening agency which his party made the Liberal Party adopt when it was in a minority position, an agency that did not accomplish what the New Democratic Party thought it would accomplish, which was to Canadianize our economy. All FIRA has managed to do is to weaken that sector of our economy, and I am referring to the oil industry, that might have been able to create the jobs we needed. Furthermore, it established a system that discouraged investment that could have created jobs. Today, we have one million and a half people out of work. So when the Hon. Member talks about promises, he should remember that these were the solutions we were proposing for specific problems. And, Mr. Speaker, we are providing those solutions.

For instance, the Hon. Member said no provisions are made for training. He was referring to one specific program that was terminated because it was due to expire. However, $100 million in training funds are being provided under this Budget. The same amount was already earmarked for 1985-86, and another $900 million has been allocated for 1986-87.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration is drafting a training program that at last will provide for a complete re-training program and a training program for youth in Canada's growth sectors.

The Hon. Member is therefore wrong to say that just because we eliminated a single program that was about to expire anyway, we are doing nothing for training. We are, Mr. Speaker.

With respect to women, I am always inclined to laugh when I see the New Democratic Party posing as the great defender of women. Which portfolios are women in that Party responsible for? Traditional portfolios, for women have nothing to do with those portfolios which can have an impact on the future of this country. But in our Government we do have women in energy, a leading sector, in finance, again a leading sector. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) holds the Government's most important portfolio, and she is a woman. Our Party does more than pay lip service to women.

Mr. Speaker, they keep forgetting as well that their image of the Canadian woman is not that of a woman living on social welfare. Unfortunately, too many women depend on social benefits. Why? Because traditionally women used to rely on men as wage earners. But nowadays there are independent women and they can look forward to a better retirement. They can prepare for their own retirement. Some women operate small and medium-sized businesses and they will avail themselves of the Budget measures to create jobs. The Budget provisions will enable them to put money aside for their retirement years. These are Canadian women and, fortunately, they make up an ever growing majority because they are no longer satisfied with social welfare benefits, they want to be self-sufficient. They would rather not have to depend on men—husbands, brothers—or on the State. The New Democratic Party wants to substitute the State for men in the lives of women. They want women to be dependent on the State. The State will tell them where and what to study, how much they will earn. That is altogether different, it is not freedom.

The NDP also talks about the handicapped—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

• (1220)

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, let me first respond to the Hon. Member's beginning remarks. I certainly do not mean any disrespect to her. Unfortunately, when she does heckle, which is on a fairly constant basis—and I do not mind people reacting in the House—my problem with it is that she is not loud enough for me to hear her, but she is loud enough to create some noise in the Chamber. That is my particular problem with the Hon. Member's heckling. If she wants to be louder, I do not mind responding to her.

Mrs. Mailly: You are loud, but I do not say you are yapping.

Mr. Murphy: I am not sure what the Hon. Member talked about after she went through her initial concern about my reference to her yapping. I did not talk about FIRA. I did not talk about a number of things which the Hon. Member went on to talk about. I did not talk just about the Liberals' broken promises. In the Hon. Member's remarks she said that we forced the Liberals to do certain things and that perhaps if the Liberals were left alone they would be more like the Conservatives and somehow that would be better. What I objected to was not the Liberals stealing our ideas, but the fact that the Member herself was part of the group that put together the PC campaign handbook which took a lot of our ideas that were quite good and on which our people had worked for many years but which the Conservatives did not implement. I talked about capital gains being handled in such a way as to make sure that land is there on a continued basis for agriculture. That is what the Conservatives promised and that is not what they have done. They talked about making sure the old age pension was there and that it was fully indexed to the cost of living. Good. That is something we agree with, but it is not a promise the Conservatives kept.

With regard to women, the Conservatives made various promises regarding child care to help women get out into the workforce, a promise yet to be kept. What about transition houses? Again that was a promise made in the campaign. I referred to it by quoting from the appropriate section of the PC campaign handbook. Again that is a promise not kept.

The Government can implement the policies it wants. What I have been saying throughout my speech, and what I am saying now in my rebuttal, is that the Conservatives made a whole bunch of promises to specific groups, to farmers, to women, and to old age pensioners, but they were not kept.

For that matter, in some areas, such as, as I have said, in the case of the old age pension, the Conservatives have not only not kept the promise but they have gone in the opposite direction. It is the same thing when we talk about money for post-secondary education. The Conservatives talked about a formula that existed in 1977 that would have provided more money for post-secondary education. This Budget talks about cutting money for transfer payments in such a way that obviously there will be no more money, and it is obvious it will not be as rich as the 1977 formula.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers).

Mr. Desrosiers: I have a question for our colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). He was talking about public servants a moment ago. I hope he is not really concerned about public servants. You know, Mr. Speaker, this is such a nice day that I would dare you to find one, especially the senior officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration. They have all gone to play golf while we are working here in the House. Perhaps some of us would enjoy a game of golf, but we have to stay here. I hope the Hon. Member is aware of that. You know that Canadian taxpayers are paying for all that. The Liberal Party hired too many employees, five where one would do. Hopefully the Hon. Member is not worried because the Government will put an end to that one of these days, and I wish he would comment on that.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I was alarmed when I heard the specific reference which the Hon. Member made. He said that he cannot find a director of the Department of Immigration and Employment because they are all playing golf. I see the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) sitting in her seat. I hope she will look into it.

Mr. Lanthier: She is doing her job.

Mr. Murphy: If the Hon. Member wants to list specific examples and say that every director—and I am not the person who should be defending the Department, it should be the Minister herself—is out playing golf, and I noted some of the Tory back-benchers were clapping when the Hon. Member made remarks to that effect, then I think he is not doing a very good job of checking his facts. What concerns me about what the Member said is his attitude. I believe the people who are working for us are working for the benefit of the Canadian people and they, just as much as anybody else and any Member in this Chamber, are doing an honest job for Canadians. Certainly you can find exceptions and certainly the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) can mention teachers who may not be quite perfect, but most of them do a damn good job for Canadians. That kind of insidious remark is completely despicable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise in this House today to take part in the debate on the first Budget brought down by the new Government under the leadership of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I want to tell Members present about the fine reception to the Budget that I am receiving in my riding from all people in all segments of society and their approval for the actions we have taken in this Budget.

The great riding of Mississauga North which I have the pleasure to represent in this House is one of prosperity and growth with its almost one quarter million Canadians working very diligently for themselves and their families. Many of the families in my riding have both spouses as wage earners. Many of the changes in this Budget are particularly important to them. I refer to the beneficial changes in the area of pension reform introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and I will elaborate on that further a little later.

First, I wish to discuss a few of the important background reasons that this Budget has received such high acclaim from the people in my riding and from a great majority of the people across the nation.

As is the habit of the Conservative Party of Canada, our Members have gone out and consulted with the widest possible cross-section of community members to ensure that what is being done by our new Government is what is best for Canada and for all Canadians. Evidence of the success of this endeavour is the high amount of popular acclaim we have received to our Budget as it was presented. It is through this process of consultation that we have come to understand the need to work closer with small business people to provide better benefits for all, to work hard to ensure that everyone is treated equally and everyone is given the same chance in achieving his or her goals.

I wish to direct the majority of my comments today to the many improvements offered in the pension programs available to all Canadians. I shall now do a quick review of these many excellent improvements.

● (1230)

Amendments to the Pension Benefits Standards Act, affecting directly and indirectly some 4.5 million Canadians, will be tabled in Parliament and will be brought into effect on January 1, 1987. Through close co-operation with the provinces, the federal Government has worked hard to ensure that amendments to pension standards legislation in different jurisdictions are comparable. We are working to ensure that uniformity and fairness is the order of the day for all Canadians affected by the Pension Benefits Standards Act.

Today's rapidly changing economy makes mobility the key to success in nearly all occupational groups. With this reality in mind, the federal Government has taken dramatic steps through the Budget to increase the portability of pensions. Working hand in hand with high mobility is the amendment that ensures that pension rights will be acquired much more quickly. These two changes are of great significance to many young people who have found early on in their careers that, through moving from one job to another or from one area of the country to another, they can best prosper and provide for their families. We have provided for them the assurances that while they are working hard to support their families, they will not, through poor government regulations, be losing rights to pensions they will require in their later years.

I am pleased to say that after only two years of participation in a plan, employees will be entitled to retirement funds including that portion provided by the employers' contribution. Hence, vesting will occur after a minimum of two years instead of the five years of the past. These vested benefits will become far more portable, ensuring that employees will not lose what they had paid for in those two years, when they move on to seek better opportunities to support their families. Under the new program, they will be able to transfer the vesting accumulated to a locked in RRSP or directly to their new employers' programs. Another option includes leaving vested pensions with former employers until retirement or, finally, transferring their own contributions together with interest to a locked in RRSP while leaving the remaining entitlement with their former employers as a deferred benefit for their retirement.

It is the concept of choice, the choice of the individual Canadian to decide what is best for him or her in determining his or her own future, which is key to this proposal and indeed to the entire theme of the Minister's Budget. We firmly believe that all Canadians have the right to determine what should be done with their own lives and with their own earnings. Through these steps we are ensuring that these rights will be protected.

To show the sensitivity of the Minister of Finance to the small business sector in particular, and the understanding which we in the Conservative Party have gained from our years in private business and through our extensive consultations with all members of society, provisions have been included which will lessen the administrative burden for small business when maintaining records and providing payment on extremely small pension amounts.

It is thoughtful consideration and action on problems such as these which have generated such an overwhelmingly positive response to our budget proposals by the small business sector. Any Member should know from speaking to small business people that one of their greatest concerns is the concept of free enterprise. I am pleased that the Budget takes us along the path that we have laid down, freeing enterprise from government over regulation and interference.

Another important change in the program so far as contributions by employers are concerned is that there will be regulations which require employers to contribute at least 50 per cent of the value of pensions earned. This is necessary because in some plans employers do not contribute to workers' pensions until after many years of service. This will ensure that employers share the cost of their employees' pensions and that short service workers are treated equally with long service workers. Of course, this measure is extremely important to individuals who return to the workforce after staying in the home with children, to ensure that they will receive fair pensions when they retire and that they are not penalized for working many years in the home raising their families.

Another change in the plan is that employers will be required to refund employees' contributions to any plan less than two years old, and along with those refunds there must be interest paid not less than the amount currently being paid on non-chequing savings accounts. This is important in that it ensures that individuals do not lose the money they have put into pension programs before vesting takes effect.

In the beginning of my remarks I talked about the tremendous importance and impact that the amendments brought forward by the Budget would have on the many families in Mississauga with two working members. Of particular importance to many of my constituents is the extending of eligibility to all full-time and part-time workers. Under the new program, part-time workers who have earned in two consecutive years at least 35 per cent of Canada Pension Plan yearly maximum pensionable earnings, which in 1985 will be $23,400, will be eligible to join pension plans available to their full-time co-workers. This measure recognizes the tremendous contribution which so many individuals make through part-time work and rewards them in a just and fair way when the time comes for their retirement.

A further change, which allows plan members to elect early retirement beginning at age 55, is yet another indication of our commitment to giving Canadians the greatest possible freedom in determining their own lifestyle. It is again an indication that we in the Conservative Party feel that government is here to serve the people, not the people to serve government. I suggest to Hon. Members of the House that all Canadians will benefit from these proposals. However, those individuals who will benefit the most will be women in our society. After over 10 years of Liberal indecision, we in the Conservative Party have acted on the appreciation and respect we have for the contribution which women make to the Canadian way of life. We have taken major steps to ensure that they receive the equality and just treatment which they have been denied for so long.

Perhaps the most important change in this regard will require plan sponsors to provide equal periodic benefits to men and women retiring in identical circumstances. Such has not been the case in the past where women have been unjustly discriminated against due to the use of annuity factors which differentiate between men and women, or due to inequality of pay received for work of equal value. There are also many changes which will positively affect women who are working in the home. These include pension plans which will be required to provide benefits to surviving spouses of plan members who are retired at the time of death. The benefit to the survivor must be no less than 60 per cent of the amount payable had both spouses lived. The pension plan will also be required to transfer the full lump sum value of the pension earned by a plan member who dies prior to retirement to a locked in RRSP of the surviving spouse, or to provide a monthly survivor pension for the remaining spouse; again the option being their choice.

In the event of marriage breakdown, the value of pension credits and pensions already being paid will be split equally among spouses or will be split as determined by the courts or by the individuals themselves. An important consideration in this item is that marriage breakdown will include the ending of common law relationships. There are not only benefits for women but indeed for all individuals who are surviving spouses in that survivor pensions will no longer be terminated if a survivor remarries. All these steps will do much to help soften the blow of the move to retirement years which is currently a problem for many Canadians, particularly women.

It is important also to note the many flexible and varied programs from which employees will be able to choose when deciding how best to deal with their own future. To enable maximum flexibility, it is essential that employees be allowed access to all information about their plans in regard to accumulated contributions and degree of funding on the part of the employer. To this end the Government will require annual disclosure of this information to members of plans and their spouses. The same information will also be made available to individuals dealing with the affected people serving in the capacity of financial adviser or agent.

Under the terms of the Pension Benefits Standards Act, there will be requirements that plan members be represented on management committees if they so desire. It is important that employees not only have a say in what they do with their money upon completion of their working years, but also that they have input as to how it is invested and used prior to retirement benefits commencing.

The Budget goes further, in that the Minister of Finance has proposed a form of tax assistance for retirement savings. This new system will result in an expansion of the Canadian system of tax assistance for private pension arrangements, both in terms of the number of Canadians covered and in the amount of income funded. The Government has been mindful of the need to limit the complexity and reporting requirements for employees and employers in the design of the new system. The changes will be phased in over the next five years in recognition of the current fiscal constraints of the Government.

There currently exist three vehicles by which individuals can establish retirement funds. These three vehicles can be transferred into two methods of disbursement of income at retirement. Under existing legislation there are a great number of disparities in these programs. Many of them serve to discriminate against people in the various schemes of tax assistance available for retirement savings. Accordingly, there will be major changes to all three of these vehicles by which contributions can be made to ensure that all Canadians, regardless of the occupation they choose, will be better able to provide for themselves and their families in the long term while taking full advantage of all tax incentives.

Perhaps the most important consequence of these many changes is the raising of the ceiling on RRSP contributions through several of the programs to where, over time, it will be set at $15,500.

Again, in recognition of the special problems faced by small business people in this country, the Budget also proposes that unused contribution amounts will be permitted to be carried forward for a period of seven years. As suggested, this is of particular importance to small business people, since they experience wide fluctuations from time to time in their capital requirements and, therefore, may not be able to provide for their own retirement funds on a consistent basis.

In my speech today I have touched on a few of the many important changes which are being made to pension programs in Canada. These are changes which will be of great benefit to all Canadians, particularly those who have been discriminated against in the past, including part-time workers and women.

After extensive consultation, the changes introduced in the pension program are a hallmark of Conservative approach to government. They represent our underlying philosophy that government should be a servant of the people and not vice versa. We want Canadians, not the politicians and the bureaucrats, to control their own destiny. We want Canadians to invest in their future.

We have a different philosophy from that of the members of the Opposition, who want government to control everything. It would appear that members of the Opposition have no faith in ordinary Canadians. We have that faith.

I know Canadians do not want hand-outs; they want opportunities. Over the past 20 years, the Government has done everything possible to stamp out the dreams of Canadians. An entire generation has grown up with a Government of fear and negativism. It is a testament to the strength of the desire of Canadians to improve their lot that on September 4 ordinary Canadians proclaimed their belief in their ability to control their own destiny. This is the philosophy of the ordinary Canadian—this is the philosophy of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) referred to the abundant consultation which took place before the Budget and the enthusiasm with which it has been met. This has been referred to repeatedly by members of his Party. With respect to the issue of pension reform, the direction of portability, vesting and the extension of pensions to part-time workers, I am willing to concede, as will most Members of the House, that that probably does reflect consultation since these are matters which have been raised over a good many years.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member the following question, and I hope he will be clear in his answer for the benefit of his constituents: Am I to understand that prior to the election, his constituents who are recipients of OAS clamoured to ensure that their payments would be deindexed and that they now approach him in his riding saying, "Thank you, oh, thank you, for cutting down my pension; do some more for me next year in the same fashion"?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I would like to inform the Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) that I have received quite a few calls from senior citizens in my riding. While I was in my riding over the weekend, I received close to 20 calls. What I told these callers was that we were not deindexing pensions and that they would not be receiving less. I told these people we were modifying the indexation system so that on the first three points of the CPI they would not see indexation.

I also told them that, as a result of the provisions in the Budget, they would be paying approximately 27 cents per day this year. I told these callers that that was a small price to pay to ensure that they would have any pension at all 10 years from now. I also told them it was a small price to pay for an insurance policy which guarantees that their grandchildren will not be saddled with a debt which would place us in the same class as countries such as Argentina and others which are totally out of control.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner) on his maiden speech and for the way in which he has handled himself in the House. One would think he is a 20-year veteran of this place.

Contrary to the comments of the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), it is encouraging to see that seniors are finally speaking out on their own behalf. Mr. André LeBlanc, Director of the National Council on Aging, said his 18-member body of government appointees is determined to start projecting "a more positive and realistic image" of seniors in Canada to counter the prevailing impression of older people as poor, unhealthy and living in long-term care facilities.

The impression given by members of the Opposition is that every single senior citizen in the country is hard up and broke. That is one of the most insulting insinuations which could be made with regard to our senior citizens.

Statistics show that many seniors are comfortable, healthy and well-educated. The National Council on Aging maintains that that reflects the situation of the majority of seniors in the country.

The Council states that 37 per cent of those 65 and older now participate in sports or exercise, compared with 13 per cent in 1976. A 1984 Statistics Canada publication indicates that 40 per cent of families headed by seniors have an annual income greater than 25,000. It also indicates that 25 per cent of men and 10 per cent of women are still in the labour force, and that 90 per cent of elderly Canadians live in private households as opposed to institutions. These are not ramshackle homes in which they are living. They are beautiful homes and apartments. They also have automobiles, and condominiums in the southern United States. The 10 per cent of seniors who cannot maintain a home live in modern, high-rise homes and small side-by-side duplexes. My riding is full of them.

The Progressive Conservative policy is for seniors to maintain the quality of life they had upon reaching retirement age. With the improvements to the RRSPs, all Canadians will be able to retire in comfort. Also, many seniors who still live in their own homes are assisted by the provinces in paying their municipal taxes. There is no impoverished group of senior citizens in my riding who are starving, hard up and broke. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Mississauga North if he finds that the senior citizens in his riding are starving, hard up, broke, destitute and living on the street, as implied by members of the Liberal Party and the NDP.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) for his question. In Mississauga, there is a group of seniors who have looked after their own needs. There are people who need extra help. We all know that and that is no problem. The Guaranteed Income Supplement will be fully indexed. These people will get the help they need.

Let me describe the type of senior citizens who live in Mississauga North. They are people who have looked out for their dollars. They have lived through two World Wars and a depression and they have learned how to save and get along. All of those people to whom I spoke told me, when I mentioned 27 cents a day, that they were perfectly willing to give that up. They told me that they realized that this country had been put in a terrible financial position and they wanted to create employment for their children and granchildren.

As an example, I could tell the House about my own mother. She worked for 27 years as a school teacher. The highest salary she ever received as a school teacher was $7,800 per year. Out of that she was able to save enough to support herself and invest money so that today, with her pensions and everything else, she receives more than double that. She is better off than she ever was before. I realize that not everyone is in that position, but the senior citizens are a very responsible group of people. We should be very proud of them. We should not degrade them the way the Opposition does.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, it being seven minutes to one o'clock, I wonder if I might have the unanimous consent of the House to complete my remarks by extending past the lunch hour.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. de Corneille: In that event, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the House would consider my calling it one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 12.56 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

DISARMAMENT

WINNIPEG PEACE WALK

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, last week the Liberal Task Force on Peace, Security and World Disarmament began its first week of public hearings to consult with Canadians from coast to coast on Canada's future role with respect to peace, security, and world disarmament.

The Winnipeg Co-ordination Committee for Disarmament presented a very thorough and comprehensive brief to our committee. That committee represents a coalition of over 30 organizations working for peace. The committee made many good recommendations, some of which need to be urgently and seriously considered.

The Winnipeg Co-ordination Committee for Disarmament is holding its fourth annual Walk for Peace in Winnipeg, Manitoba, on Saturday, June 8, 1985 at 11.30 a.m., beginning in front of the Legislature. Its representatives have asked me to extend an invitation to Members of Parliament and Senators from the three political parties, and any other Canadians who wish to express their concern for peace, to join them on Saturday, June 8, in Winnipeg.

DUMPING OF TOXIC WASTES—EMPLOYEES' ROLE

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, in recognition of Environment Week, June 2 to 8, I wish to raise a matter which concerns all Canadians.

S.O. 21

In this age of industrialization we must constantly seek ways to ensure that the rules and regulations which are laid out for the safety of our citizens are followed. We also have a responsibility to protect those citizens who carry out their civic duty and report the illegal or unethical activities of which they have knowledge.

For example, if an employee knows that his or her employer is dumping toxic wastes illegally, the first step is to approach the management directly. If the employer then tells him or her to keep quiet or risk losing his or her job, the person is faced with a moral dilemma. The choice is to say nothing and keep the job, or to blow the whistle and risk losing the job.

The people who blow the whistle should be protected from dismissal or other retaliatory measures. These are people who are convinced that there are illegal or unethical activities going on, and have been specifically directed to say nothing.

A "Whistle Blowers' Protection Act" would ensure that the people who step forward to report such activities are not punished. They should not have to pay, in real terms, by losing their jobs, their seniority, or financial security, as a result of making the public aware, as it is the public's right to know of potentially hazardous situations.

It is time for us to examine the necessity of bringing in legislation to protect such civic minded people.

THE BUDGET

LETTER FROM WINNIPEG SECRETARY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to tell the House about a letter which was sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), with a copy to me, concerning the Budget. The letter comes from Cathy Syse, a constituent of mine, who is a secretary in Winnipeg. She has been working for nine years, grosses $15,204 a year, and nets $12,376. She wants the Prime Minister to understand better how middle working class people live. She wrote in part:

> The following list are the payments that I have to make this year. Rent $4,140; hydro $360; telephone $240; gasoline $1,440; food $2,040; cigarettes $780; liquor $120; insurance $500.
> The balance of $2,756 has to go for clothes, entertainment, Christmas and increases in my rent, food etc.
> The car that I am driving is a 1973 model and I haven't bought any new furniture for the last five years. My holidays are spent sitting at home and I don't go to nightclubs or out for dinner because it's too expensive.
> I simply cannot afford this new Budget of Mr. Wilson's. Perhaps Mr. Wilson can draw up a budget for me so that I can afford this new federal Budget.
> I am a simple average working person with very few luxuries—and now you want to tax the only luxuries I have so that I won't be able to afford them either. Is that what you had in mind?
> I doubt Mr. Prime Minister if you will ever read this letter or if I'll even get some sort of reply. It will probably be thrown in the garbage—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENT WEEK

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to draw the attention of the House to the fact that this week, from June 2 to June 8, is Canadian Environment Week. One priority has been set aside for each day: parks, wildlife, research, volunteers, acid rain and hazardous products.

[English]

The purpose is to demonstrate how each affects the environment.

The reason I think this is important is because I represent the South West Nova area which is known for its beautiful beaches, rivers, lakes, and unspoiled lands. I realize that I am not the only Canadian who is blessed with such magnificent natural gifts in his backyard.

We have to be vigilant if we want to protect our environment. The threat of acid rain is real, and only through co-operation can we achieve success.

The point I want to make is that the concern for an improved environment is everybody's responsibility.

We can all, by our behaviour, help improve the environment: from the driver who can demand unleaded gas to industries that have a responsibility to control the environmental consequences of their activities.

Each and every one of us has a responsibility and I am very pleased that the theme for the Canadian Environment Week is "Environment . . . A Shared Responsibility".

FINANCE

DEMANDS OF CONFEDERATION OF FAMILY GROUPS OF QUEBEC

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, after making a number of attempts to arrange a meeting with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Quebec Confederation of Family Agencies has yet to receive a favourable reply.

That is at least what was reported in La Presse on May 8. The organization in question, referred to as COFAQ, is an umbrella organization for fourteen federations of family agencies across Quebec, and had asked for an urgent meeting with the Minister of Finance to inform him of the concerns of Quebecers with respect to the Minister's "sacrifice Budget".

The Confederation is asking for a Budget that is fair and equitable for our families. It is also asking that child tax credits and family allowances be left intact.

Everyone knows that family agencies have a reputation for being understanding and cooperative. However, Mrs. Denise Laporte-Dubuc has informed the Minister of Finance that if he did not take their recommendations into consideration, the COFAQ would feel obliged to react by organizing a demonstration in Ottawa after Budget Day.

I hope the Minister, who claims his Government is one that consults, considered the requests made by the Confederation of Quebec Family Agencies.

THE BUDGET

COMMITMENT TO IMPROVE MANAGEMENT OF TAX REVENUE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as a taxpayer I was delighted to hear in the Budget of the Government's commitment to manage more effectively, as evidenced by its undertaking to improve cash management and to dispose of unneeded property.

I am sure the Government will also move quickly to correct the numerous other areas of mismanagement and misspending which were identified by the Auditor General in his 1984 report, including the misclassification of public servants which he estimated costs us all $125 million each year.

In addition, I was pleased to learn of the progress which is being made by the Task Force on Program Review which is headed by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). That task force is aimed at simplifying programs and eliminating duplication. It is a task force which should produce not just millions, but billions of dollars in savings that should be reflected in a lower deficit next year.

Improving government management is the key to ensuring that our tax dollars are being spent as effectively and as efficiently as possible. I am never really happy, as a taxpayer, to pay taxes, but the next time I write a cheque to the Receiver General of Canada I will feel a lot better to know that my tax dollars are not being wasted.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) delusions of grandeur keep growing. I am referring to a newspaper article on Friday which stated that, from now on, when the Prime Minister travels abroad it will be with two aircraft, one for him and one for the press. I guess two jets constitute an "airfarce".

The way the new system will work is that the plane with the press in it will touch down first. Then, all the journalists will run to position themselves, and wait for the great event. Finally, the announcement will come—"The ego has landed".

The Prime Minister brags about being able to pick up the telephone and talk to Ronald Reagan any time, but I think it's Uncle Ronnie who does the talking. He tells the Prime Minister how to act like a President. "Get your own podium", Ronald Reagan says, and presto, the Prime Minister has a podium. "Get your wife her own office and staff", and presto, the Prime Minister's wife is installed in the Langevin Block. "Pretend that you are the head of state when I come to call; it will make for better television", and presto, the Governor General is not even invited to Quebec City. What is next, a helicopter pad at 24 Sussex?

● (1410)

The latest advice from Uncle Ronnie is that separate planes will help in news management. For once maybe the President is right. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does need two aircraft when he travels: one for himself, and one for his ego.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—DENIAL OF EMIGRATION TO SOVIET JEWS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, a few nights ago I attended a very moving ceremony in Willowdale, presented by the National Council of Jewish Women. The guest speaker was our Ambassador to the U.N., Mr. Stephen Lewis. In an eloquent, dignified ceremony, 14 Canadian students in cap and gown received graduation diplomas on behalf of 14 Soviet Refusenik students who were denied the right to Jewish religious education and university admittance. These are basic rights we take for granted in Canada and the western world.

In his address Ambassador Lewis stressed five key points to help Soviet Jewry. Each Member should continue to speak up in Parliament for human rights; the issue should be stressed through quiet diplomatic manoeuvres; the issue of human rights should be kept at the forefront of bilateral negotiations; debates in international forums, as my colleague for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) did so effectively at the U.N., and through human rights conferences such as those currently taking place in Ottawa; public pressure should be kept up by keeping their cause alive every day.

The gravity of this issue is illustrated by an important fact. In 1979 some 51,000 Soviet Jews were allowed to leave, while in 1984 the number was only 876. I applaud the tremendous and courageous action taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in Russia this spring. As a Government we must continue to press the Soviet Government to release another 50,000 Jews. This would show the world the good will of the U.S.S.R. and its humanitarian interest in family reunification.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has been caught with a snout in the trough in the latest incident of pork-barrelling.

The people of Newfoundland thought they had left the merchant family mentality behind after 1949, but now it appears the Minister of Justice is trying to revive the good old tradition. A merchant family, as we know, must have one member in business, one in government, and a few scattered around the courts. The Minister's family has one member who is a prominent businessman, and from whom Revenue Canada is now claiming $380,000. Both of the Minister's sons are legal agents for the Department of Justice, courtesy of their father, and have as their responsibilities the task of acting on behalf of Revenue Canada.

The question is: will the Minister's sons, who were named as federal legal agents by their father, act to prosecute the uncle, who is their father's brother, and who owes the Government of Canada $380,000?

This whole incident gives new meaning to the theory of relativity, and this outrageous conflict of interest makes Billygate look mild by comparison. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ought to relieve the Minister of Justice of his responsibilities until this whole mess can be cleared up and corrected.

SUPPORT FOR PROVISIONS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal and NDP Members of the House are demoralized and confused. For years Liberal Budgets put Canada deeper and deeper into debt, reaching a total of $200 billion, with an annual deficit of $38 billion. They threw money around like drunken drug addicts. For example, they sent a secretary to the Riviera to improve her French, and threw millions of dollars at jobs which actually increased the number of unemployed, and so when the PC Budget, (1), reduced the deficit and started Canada on a free enterprise road, by creating a climate and providing incentives for small business that will encourage investment, and which will mean jobs instead of increasing the debt; and (2), it offered a glad hand of co-operation to all provinces, instead of the former one finger salute with policies which crippled their industries; and (3), it placed a surtax on corporations and the banks, along with a notice to the wealthy that a minimum tax is coming later instead of destroying incentive by heavy taxation, the Liberal and NDP went into a mad frenzy. They moan because interest rates are down, and weep because the deficit is decreasing. Yes, their negativism and confusion are evident every day. But who cares? The people of Canada are happy because the Budget is the beginning of a new and prosperous Canada, a Canada which will pay its debts. So I say, down with the negative opposition, and up with the people!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING OLD AGE PENSIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will put my question to the Minister of Finance. Like thousands of other Canadians, I suppose, I received a letter from the Hon. Member for Pembina suggesting that Canadians write to myself and the Hon. Member for Oshawa urging us to take the heat off the Prime Minister as a result of the Budget. The Hon. Member says in the letter: "I would not even think about writing you now except that the situation in Ottawa is critical. If we don't help, our Prime Minister will have great difficulty." I will have to have some private consultations with the Hon. Member for Oshawa to see how we respond.

The Minister of Finance knows that, as a result of his Budget and the deindexation of old age pensions, the value of an old age pension by the year 1990 will be lower by $30 a month in real terms. During the election campaign the Prime Minister said in Sherbrooke, on July 26 of last year, that he was committed to "complete indexing of old age pensions to the actual cost of living as of January 1, 1985." I ask the Minister if he would repeal the deindexing of old age pensions, not only because of the justice of doing so, but to render his Prime Minister honest once again in what he said to the old age pensioners.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the NDP were able to break up their consultation in time to make it into Question Period today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I do not think they liked that, Mr. Speaker. Let me respond to the question—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Try a two-liner next time.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Orlikow: It is about time you tried.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If they would like an answer. What we have set out to do in the Budget is to attack two major problems with which senior citizens are very concerned. The first is unemployment, the unemployment of their children and grandchildren. The second concern is the rising cost of debt, which last year grew at fully three times the rate of growth in the economy. It is in that context that we are approaching a broad expenditure control program in which we have asked senior citizens to participate. I believe that senior citizens, when they see the range of people in Canada who are participating, are quite prepared to be part of that over-all effort.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we suggested to the Minister's colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, last week that we did not think there was a grandchild in the country who wanted his or her grandparent to have their pension reduced by $30 a month because of this Budget. No one.

[Translation]

FAMILIES WITH MODEST INCOMES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary on the Budget. I am absolutely flabbergasted at the Government's claims that the Budget will increase the child tax credit for families in need.

Is the Minister of Finance prepared to admit that the real value of these benefits to families with an annual income of $12,000 will be less in 1990 than it is today? Is he going to admit that he is actually reducing the real value of benefits earmarked for hundreds of thousands of Canadian families living below the poverty line? Is he going to admit that de-indexing of family allowances deprives all low-income families of hundreds of thousands of dollars, in real terms?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to the fact that through the Budget we have done something to address a fundamental problem in family benefits. That is that today, under the regime that has been in place for a number of years, those who are earning $10,000 or $15,000 receive less from the family benefit package than those who are earning $20,000 and $30,000. I think that we have taken a major step forward, and I believe the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would agree with that. As a result of the Budget low income Canadians will receive $100 more by 1989 than is the case today. That is a good step forward.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is not what the numbers say, Mr. Speaker, but we will address that on another occasion.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): As the Minister knows, the capital gains tax exemption which he announced is not targeted to investment in Canadian small business. An investment is eligible for that exemption whether it is in real estate or in South African diamonds. Since the Minister trumpeted that exemption as a stimulus for Canadian small business, will he revise the provision to target it more specifically as an exemption available only for investment in Canadian small business?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal way is to target things so precisely that there is no freedom left for Canadians to decide how they should deal with their investments. We looked at that but decided that it would have added a tremendous amount of complexity to the system. There would have been multitudinous ways in which Canadians could have gotten around that. As a lawyer he knows that, because that is probably how he made a lot of his money before he got into politics.

As I have said before, by making the environment much better for investment we will attract investment capital here. In the first quarter of this year we had real growth of 4 per cent. Last year we had a surge of real growth at the end of the year directly in response to the things that we are doing. Things are going well in our country and all Canadians know it.

Oral Questions

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had wanted to ask the Minister of Justice about his two sons who have received important agency work from the Department of Justice. I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister instead. I would like to remind him that when the Secretary of State for External Affairs saw his brother become an agent of the Department of Justice with a very large award in the Province of Alberta, and when the Minister of Finance saw his brother-in-law and sister similarly rewarded by the Government, the Prime Minister made the point that this was not nepotism because it was another Minister completely who had made the award.

In this case two young lawyers, who were called to the bar in 1983, have received very significant appointments out of their father's Ministry. Did an outside member of the Government look at the award in this case as well? Is this not a clear case of patronage and nepotism which even the Conservatives in Newfoundland must find insulting and unacceptable to themselves?

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to acquaint the Hon. Member with the following facts. Firstly, firms were appointed rather than individuals.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speyer: Secondly, the amounts that have been billed in the eight months to date amount to $712 in income tax, $891 in oil pollution, and $983 in the Fisheries Act.

In contrast, in the last fiscal year the fees of the standing agents appointed by the Liberal Party amounted to $84,000 and $75,000 respectively. The article to which the Member refers views this as a plum. I view it more as a crumb.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPOINTMENT OF NEWFOUNDLAND FIRMS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to table those figures so that we can look at them. I certainly recognize that the amount billed depends on the amount of work done. If a Russian or Spanish trawler comes into our waters, we will have a lawyer who was called to the bar in 1983 to deal with that. If there is another terrible oil spill or other type of disaster, we will be defended by a young man who failed two years in law school. Would the Parliamentary Secretary check his assertion that this work goes to the firm? My understanding is that it is addressed to the firm, attention young Mr. Crosbie.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the appointments were made on the basis of competence and frugality, characteristics to which the Hon. Member is probably a stranger. These firms are capable firms which are doing an excellent job. We make no apologies whatsoever for their appointments.

FINANCE

MINIMUM INCOME TAX—ESTIMATED REVENUE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who made what could euphemistically be called an interesting speech to a group of economists last week in Montreal. In the course of that speech he noted that, in his view, there were not enough rich people in Canada and therefore the Government, in his judgment, had to turn to other Canadians for a source of revenue.

Will the Minister admit to the House that if the Government had imposed a 20 per cent minimum tax on the rich, and restored the tax level which the rich were paying before the Liberals cut it in 1981, he could have obtained an additional $2 billion in tax revenues from upper-income Canadians and left pensioners and other Canadians alone?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member neglected to say that in the Budget we have imposed a surtax on upper income Canadians who are earning over $40,000. We have introduced new rules which will eliminate fairly widespread use of income splitting among family members which we felt was unfair. We have also removed a number of loopholes for invesment, one being the scientific research tax credit which the Hon. Member has raised in the House before. Therefore we are doing a number of things to impose a heavier burden proportionately on upper-income Canadians in order to create a balance among all Canadians to share the load as evenly and equitably as possible.

REQUEST THAT MINIMUM TAX BE INTRODUCED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, the surtax he has talked about is on tax payable. Since he did not introduce a minimum tax on the rich, the same people who did not pay tax last year can get away without even paying the surtax that he is talking about now. He also knows that the surtax is on for only a limited period of time, whereas he will continue to hit pensioners for an infinite period.

If the Minister was concerned about fairness which he and the Prime Minister talked about, why did he not simply restore the tax on the rich to the level it was before 1981, and bring in a minimum income tax for the rich now? Reagan in the United States is talking about increasing the minimum tax on the rich, and this Government has not yet even introduced one.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The Hon. Member knows full well that in the Budget it says that we will introduce a minimum tax for the taxation year 1986. He wants us to impose it without consultation or trying to get a degree of harmony between the provinces. When we have Saskatchewan going one way and Quebec another, it is very important that we have taxpayers in different parts of the country being treated equitably. That is the purpose of this consultation paper.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister likes to make much out of a federal system that recognizes different jurisdictions and, in terms of their responsibility, they ought to note what he has just said. We know, and the Minister knows, that one can have a federal minimum tax on the rich and it is up to the provinces to do what they want. If they are just, they should do the same thing. He does not have to wait for Saskatchewan or Quebec; he should do it now in terms of setting a fair tax.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF FULL INDEXATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. When he was in opposition he made an interesting point on June 29, 1982, when he noted the responsibility of the Minister of Health to speak out for those who needed assistance in Canada, particularly noting pensioners.

Clearly, the Minister of Finance stands up for the rich in Canada. In terms of the responsibility of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in Cabinet, will he act as a spokesperson for the pensioners? Furthermore, if pensioners let him know that they want the indexation system restored to their pensions, will he promise to take their battle back to Cabinet and insist that the Government restore indexation for our pensioners across the country?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the NDP looks at the statements on June 29, 1982, the deficit that was operative at that time, and the cost of paying the debt at that time, he will know that it was a very different scene from what it is today.

There is another point to be made with respect to pensions. I spoke to old age pensioners again this weekend. They very much understand the cost of debt which today, in fact, is greater than the total expenditure on health care on the federal side, on old age pensions, and GIS. They are telling me to bring down that debt—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —in order that our services can be protected.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary's answer to my colleague's question regarding the appointment of the sons of the Minister of Justice to patronage appointments in Newfoundland was indeed unbelievable and in complete disregard of the public interest.

Robert Pittman, the campaign manager of the Minister of Justice, was appointed to be prosecutor for all drug cases in the Avalon Peninsula, at approximately $200,000. Was that also prompted by the same great principles which led to the appointment of the two sons? Are there no Tory lawyers in Newfoundland who are neither related to the Minister nor worked on his election campaign?

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I said, the standards that are employed are based on competence, and they have been vetted through the Department of Justice. To hear the other side make these hypocritical statements is nothing short of stunning.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I wish that the Prime Minister were here, but I will direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Are appointments such as the two sons of the Minister of Justice and his chief campaign organizer the new direction, or new beginning, that the Prime Minister spoke about during the election campaign? Does the Deputy Prime Minister approve of these kinds of appointments? Does he realize that he and the Prime Minister had a choice; they could have said no to the Minister of Justice, and cancelled those appointments? Does he realize that he had that choice?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member does not know the answer to that kind of question—

An Hon. Member: Neither do you.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, I do know the answer, in reply to that intervention. It is glaring evidence of the reason why he did not hold a Cabinet post for very long.

The answer is simply that the Minister of Justice has made these appointments on the basis of well recognized, longstanding principles of competence and frugality.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Even you can't say it with a straight face.

Oral Questions

PENSIONS

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, last week every major pension organization told the Government that under no circumstances did they support what the Government was doing to old age pensions. During the weekend I and members of my caucus also spoke to seniors across the country. I want to tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare that over 1,000 Canadian seniors told the Government that they do not support what it is doing. As the Minister responsible for the welfare of Canada's senior citizens, why the hell is he cutting them loose the way he is?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we all recognize that we want to protect senior citizens and their pensions. Inflation protection is not fully indexed on the OAS as of January 1, 1986. That is the contribution that we have asked senior citizens to make to the debt. We have made that very clear.

I say to the Hon. Member that when he looks at that $100 for 1986, while that is a reduction against the total amount of income or purchasing power that they would have had if full indexing had been maintained, it should also be made very clear that the services that they require must also be maintained. We must have a method to prevent being consumed by the red ink of the national debt. That impacts on pensions, health care and other programs—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Let me tell him what seniors understand. It is that the Government has put the boots to them. That is what they understand.

Perhaps the Minister will be interested in a petition that was taken up in the riding of the Minister of State for Finance, in the constituency of Eglinton-Lawrence. That Minister has been telling the House and seniors that they support the Government. The Minister's own constituents don't support it. As the Minister responsible for the seniors, will he fight within Cabinet to make sure that the Government does not deindex old age pensions but reindexes them? I want to tell the Minister that this is only the beginning.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, before I answer the Hon. Member I want to tell him that Eglinton-Lawrence is the riding of a Member other than the Minister of State for Finance. Perhaps he should look at those details as well. He should be accurate with what he says in the House.

The Member wants to suggest that there is disagreement in the Cabinet. The general argument is that we must protect seniors, but we must also protect them from the very debt load that has been impacting upon them and every Canadian. That is also a priority, and they understand that.

I understand the Hon. Member when he says that not every senior citizen in Canada prefers the option that was put forward.

Mr. Deans: There was no option.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): However, I believe that senior citizens understand the cost of debt and the reduction of flexibility. If the Hon. Member is honest as well, he will note that there is full indexing for those receiving the GIS. He should mention that as well.

ENERGY

WESTERN ACCORD—EFFECT ON DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. If he sees the Minister of Energy I hope he asks her to drop in for Question Period now and then.

Last week the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tabled a list of projects, saying that these projects will only proceed now that the Western Accord is in place. The Government knows that most of those projects were announced well before the Western Accord.

Is the Government saying that the prospects for creating jobs as the result of the Western Accord are so dismal that it must reannounce programs that were already planned, and thereby mislead the Canadian people?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Government that the only reason it is reannouncing projects is that, in its desperation, it must try to justify the money grab from the Canadian people to finance the Western Accord.

● (1440)

Mr. McDermid: That was a statement, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it is worthy of a reply.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You will never get to the Cabinet that way, John.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the carrying on by the Minister of Justice of that great Liberal tradition of patronage by the appointment of the Minister's own sons, Michael and Chesley, as standing agents of his Ministry. These are appointments which were made with the personal knowledge of the Minister.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister accept this blatant pork-barrelling by his colleague, the Minister of Justice? Will the Deputy Prime Minister indicate to this House under what circumstances the Government feels it is appropriate for Ministers to appoint their own sons and daughters to positions at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was sitting in his place when he heard the Parliamentary Secretary respond to that question—

Mr. Broadbent: He didn't answer.

Mr. Nielsen: —in sufficient detail even for him to understand. The explanation is there. The appointments are the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice has made those appointments—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On merit.

Mr. Nielsen: —on the excellent criteria of merit and responsibility.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT APPOINTMENTS MECHANISM

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. If in fact the appointments are to be made on the basis of merit, is the Government at least prepared to accept that there should be an independent mechanism for the appointment of standing agents to avoid this obvious scam of the Minister of Justice appointing his own sons?

Will the Deputy Prime Minister not recognize that the time has come to put an end to this kind of patronage, because Canadians are sick and tired of sons and daughters, brothers and sisters, aunts and uncles of this Government being appointed purely on the basis of their own political connections?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The only scam, Mr. Speaker, is that which is imbedded in the preamble and the questionable question put by the Hon. Member himself, in attempting to lead the Canadian public to believe a scam that he and his colleagues are attempting to perpetrate on the floor of the House of Commons so as to leave that kind of impression in the minds of the public.

The Hon. Member knows, as well as all Members of the House know, that his Party is participating, as is the Official Opposition, in a special committee set up under the leadership of the distinguished Member for St. John's East to look into the whole broad question of reform of the parliamentary process.

Mr. Broadbent: It will be too late by the time they make the report.

Mr. Fulton: There won't be a single, breathing Tory left, not even you.

Mr. Nielsen: Even he or the worst advocates of those statements the Hon. Member professes would not surely subject the whole process of thousands of appointments to the kind of detailed examination the Hon. Member would suggest, at the consequent cost that that would incur to the Canadian taxpayer.

PENSIONS

ACTUARIAL VALUATIONS OF PUBLIC SECTOR PENSION PLANS

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. When the Minister was a member of the Opposition he called several times for the publication of actuarial valuations of the Members of Parliament and Senators' pension plan as well as of other public sector pension plans. Has the Minister caused actuarial valuations for these plans to be made? Do the valuations indicate that the assets are sufficient to cover the liabilities, and will the Minister table the valuations in the House?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to the Hon. Member by saying yes, in fact I have sought out this information in the Government. I might say it did not come to light until quite recently.

We are looking at a specific report that had been prepared in 1983 but, for some reason or other, had not been made public in response to the requests that I had made. I hope I will be in position to make this public shortly.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS—CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am prompted to rise as a result of the replies of the Deputy Prime Minister to questions relating to the Minister of Justice. I am going to call him the Archie Bunker of Parliament, star of All in the Family.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to read from Section III of the Conflict of Interest Guidelines relating to Ministers:

Ministers shall not accord preferential treatment in relation to any official matter—

That includes an agency. It continues:

—to relatives or friends or to organizations in which their relatives or friends have an interest.

That includes a legal firm.

Is it the Deputy Prime Minister's view that the Minister of Justice has or has not contravened these guidelines for Ministers?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Very clear guidelines.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows better than to expect me to pass, in effect, a judicial judgment on a question such as that he put to me. I can say that those guidelines for the time being are in force and all Ministers of the Crown are expected to abide by them.

DISASTERS

TORNADO DAMAGE AT BARRIE, ONT.—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the disastrous tornado which struck Barrie and several surrounding communities last Friday afternoon, resulting in some 12 tragic deaths, several hundred injuries, the destruction of several hundred homes, as well as thousands of people being left homeless. I know that every Member of the House would want to extend the sympathy of the House to the relatives and loved ones of the victims of that tragedy.

Is the Government prepared to make a commitment today to implement the provisions of the Disaster Financial Assistance Arrangements Program between the federal and the provincial Governments, as well as to clear away red tape through CMHC, to assist the victims in expediting insurance claims so that they may begin to rebuild their homes and their lives?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker, I am sure I am speaking on behalf of all Members of the House when I say how appalled we were at the tragic proportions of the disaster that struck Barrie.

As soon as that occurrence took place, the Prime Minister appointed the Hon. Minister of National Revenue to co-ordinate all federal effort to extend all possible assistance to the area. For my own part with respect to the Ministry of Defence, I think all Hon. Members should note the immediate and extremely helpful response that was made by some 700 of our Armed Forces who were on the scene very quickly to assist with local authorities.

A telegram was received today from the Government of Ontario requesting assistance under the legislation mentioned by the Hon. Member. My response has gone today to that telegram, offering every possible assistance available under the legislation to the Government of Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DESTRUCTION OF GREENHOUSES IN LEAMINGTON, ONT.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): I thank the Minister for that statement, Mr. Speaker.

Last Thursday night there were serious storms in the Niagara Peninsula and in Leamington affecting many farm and agricultural producers, involving some $15 million worth of damage to greenhouses alone in the Leamington area.

Last December 21 the Minister of Agriculture announced that the federal Government would not provide ad hoc disaster assistance to farmers due to crop damage. Have the provisions of the Disaster Financial Assistance Arrangements Program been cancelled for farmers? Does that mean there will be no assistance made available to these farmers who suffered losses in the storms last Thursday night?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member should not draw that sort of conclusion. The legislation is in place for assistance in the area affected by disasters. The process is triggered by a request from the provincial or territorial authority, to which the Government of Canada responds. As far as I am aware, no such request for assistance has been received concerning the incident about which the Hon. Member speaks. However, there are others of like kind which have been received and upon which the Government of Canada will act. I emphasize that it is a sharing exercise which is envisaged by the legislation, but in all cases requiring triggering by the provincial or territorial authority.

SHIPBUILDING

DEEP SEA MERCHANT MARINE PROPOSAL

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He knows full well that all segments of the marine industry are in a sad and depressed state. What action is being taken to reinstitute or reinvigorate the deep sea merchant marine industry, or to bolster the shipbuilding industry in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the task force which was assembled by the previous Government will be issuing its report; I believe it will be released today. Hopefully it will contain some positive recommendations and will be of such a nature as to contribute toward the establishment of a positive environment for the gradual development of a deep sea fleet in Canada.

PENSIONS

ADVISORY COUNCIL'S ADVICE ON INDEXATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. That Minister and the Minister of Finance are very fond of saying that senior citizens support the deindexing of old age security pensions. I have a statement prepared by the National Advisory Council on Aging in which it is indicated that deindexing is most unfair. The Council asks the Government to reconsider and to keep indexing for our senior citizens. This organization is the Government's own organization, it is its advisory council, its advisers. Will the Minister accept the advice of its own Council and ensure that pensions for senior citizens remain fully indexed?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member had also read other parts of the press release in which the National Advisory Council on Aging made very strong and positive statements on other aspects of pensions, especially the Pension Benefits Standards Act. They made very positive statements about that section.

Regarding the second point in the Hon. Member's question, I said in a former answer that, given the circumstances, no Member of the House—and I am sure no senior citizen—would not have opted for an option in wich full indexing would have been retained both for the GIS, as it is now, and for the OAS. That is a statement which everyone accepts and recognizes, but that is not the only issue which applies to pensions of senior citizens. For instance, if the Hon. Member takes a look at page 134 of the Budget he will see that we have said very clearly that we will monitor the situation and address it as needs arise.

SASKATCHEWAN SENIOR CITIZENS' ORGANIZATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. When he was not here on Friday I asked the Minister of State for Finance why the Government had snubbed the senior citizens' organization of Saskatchewan three weeks ago by refusing to meet with its members. I have a copy of the telegram which they sent to the Minister this morning, inviting him to its annual convention today and tomorrow in Moose Jaw, and inviting him to answer their concerns about deindexing. In light of the snub by the Government three weeks ago of that seniors' organization in Saskatchewan, is the Minister now ready,—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: At least Jake goes to Saskatchewan more than once a year.

Mr. Nystrom: —despite the protest of the Government House Leader—to go to Moose Jaw tonight or tomorrow, or send one of his colleagues to meet with them to discuss their concerns about the deindexing of old age pensions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the Hon. Member can refer to this as a snub. My colleague has met on many occasions with a wide range of senior citizens' groups, as have I.

Mr. Nystrom: Not in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If it was three weeks ago, that request came right in the middle of the final throes of preparation of the Budget and it was not possible for me at that time to meet with people. However, if they would wish to meet with me at some time in the future, I would be glad to consider it.

FISHERIES

DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS—ALLEGATIONS OF IMPROPRIETIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister is aware that extremely serious charges of fraud and bribery are being directed at his Department's handling of illegal fishing activities by 17 nations fishing within Canada's 200-mile fishing zone. Since contradictory statements were issued by his senior officials regarding these matters, particularly regarding prosecutions, will the Minister today order that all records and allegations of violation be turned over the RCMP for investigation, or is he satisfied with the status quo?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the allegations appearing in the press are very serious. I advise the House and the Hon. Member that tomorrow I will be meeting on this issue with the chief of enforcement for the Newfoundland region, the co-ordinator for the observer program who wrote the letter to which reference was made in The Globe and Mail today, the chief of enforcement for the Scotia Fundy region, the co-ordinator from that region, and the regional director from Newfoundland and Labrador.

RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the problem seems to be that the people responsible for reporting the violations, recommending on the violations, and acting on the violations, are also the ones who regulate the allocations to foreign fleets. My question to the Minister is a very simple one. Is he satisfied with the status quo, or will he do the proper thing, show some leadership, and get the Solicitor General to send in the commercial crime squad to get the crime out of our offshore fisheries?

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the Hon. Member is referring to justice which, in his mind, would be to accuse and condemn without a hearing. I hope Hon. Members will let me proceed in the way that I am doing. As the Hon. Member knows, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is already conducting its investigation. There is an internal audit ongoing within the Department. I met the senior people in that audit this morning. As a consequence of discussions with them, and the information revealed in The Globe and Mail this morning, I ordered these particular officials to see me tomorrow. I will report back to the House as soon as I can.

TAX EXEMPTION FOR MIDDLE-INCOME FAMILIES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On December 20 of last year, the Prime Minister promised the House of Commons that he would not touch tax exemptions for families with dependent children.

[English]

The same doublespeak is now being used by the Minister of Finance when he says that the Budget is fair. Does he think it is fair that, by 1990, a $15,000 per year family of four will pay $413 more in taxes while a $200,000 per year family of four, which takes advantage of the capital gains bonanza, will pay $2,352 less in taxes as a direct result of his blue blooded Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the way that question was phrased, I have some grave doubts as to the accuracy of those numbers. However, I will say to the Hon. Member that in the Budget we have increased the Child Tax Credit substantially. We have reduced the child tax exemption substantially. Those two measures are very progressive in their nature. As I said to her Leader a few minutes ago, they have the effect of increasing the amount of family benefits payable to those Canadians or Canadian families earning between $10,000 and $15,000. Whereas now they receive less than those earning $20,000 to $30,000, after this Budget they will receive more. I think that is a very progressive move.

LETTER SENT BY PC ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows quite well that this shell game which he is playing on families of $15,000 to $20,000 a year will not be bought by Canadian people. Is the selling job so difficult for his 211 Members in the House of Commons that he has given the task and responsibility for marketing the Budget to the Hon. Member for Pembina, the President of the Progressive Conservative Association of Canada, who said in a letter to all Canadians: "If we fail to assure each Canadian of our commitment to the plan for job creation and deficit reduction, I fear the whispering campaign and outright attacks by our Liberal and New Democrat opponents could severely undercut our efforts"? The undercutting of the efforts is not by the Liberal and NDP whispering campaign; it is by the Budget which is hitting out at Canadian families earning $15,000 and $20,000.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this Budget will sell by itself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1500)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member giving me the opportunity of telling her—and I hope she will convey these views to the Canadians she is speaking to—that there is a special tax on banks, a surtax on large corporations, a surtax on upper income Canadians, that an end has been brought about to income splitting and other loopholes in the tax system, and that there will be a minimum tax in the next taxation year. These are measures which make this Budget a fair and equitable Budget, one which will be accepted by Canadians from coast to coast.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Solicitor General. This weekend a 15-year old, said to be armed with an automatic pistol, was arrested in connection with the slaying of a Port Credit, Ontario, woman and her daughter. According to a senior officer of the Peel Regional Police, difficulties in making the arrest resulted from the Young Offenders Act. In view of repeated claims by police that their work is being handicapped by this Act, will the Minister initiate a review of the legislation?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member who is always sensitive to matters of great importance which occur not only in his own province but across the country. I wish to point out to him once again that the administration of the legislation of which he speaks is in the hands of the provincial authorities.

Having said that, there is to be a meeting of federal and provincial authorities with respect to the operation of the legislation. The federal Government and the Department of the Solicitor General are monitoring the operations of this important legislation. The Hon. Member can rest assured that the representations made by him and by the police forces of the country will receive serious consideration.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) on Friday, May 31, 1985, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader what business he proposes to call for tomorrow and the balance of the week.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. Having regard to the overwhelming support indicated by the most recent Gallup poll with respect to measures which will bring investment to Canada, it occurred to me that we should perhaps deal with the report stage of Bill C-15 tomorrow. I would like to put forward Wednesday as an allotted day under the supply period.

Mr. Speaker, we will continue to have consultations with respect to the business of the House. I will advise the House at the earliest possible date with respect to business for the balance of this week and the beginning of next.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT IN QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, earlier in Question Period I suggested to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) came from the riding of Eglinton-Lawrence. That, of course, is not correct. The constituency of the Minister of State for Finance is St. Paul's in Toronto. That is the place of origin of the petition which I wish to present now.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PETITIONS

CHANGES TO OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions to the House. One is from senior citizens in the constituency of St. Paul's who protest the Government's proposal to deindex pensions and who respectfully ask the House to reverse that decision.

The second petition is from residents of the constituency of Beaches, also senior citizens, who complain that the Government's proposal to deindex pensions does not have their support. They ask the Government to reverse that position.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present from people in the Province of Manitoba, who indicate their opposition to the Government's breaking of its promise with respect to indexing pensions on a quarterly basis.

The second petition I have the honour to present is also from the Province of Manitoba. The people who have signed this petition complain about the fact that the Government has not kept its promise when it said it would index old age pensions to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions from people in Manitoba who consider the Budget unfair in that it deindexes pensions. They point out that this will cost senior citizens $100 next year and $600 in six years' time.

This is a break with the Government's promise—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A summary of petition is all that is allowed.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents from one of the senior citizen apartment buildings in my riding. They protest the Government's decision to deindex the old age pension. They call upon the House of Commons to ensure that the Progressive Conservative Government's promise given in the election campaign with respect to indexing the old age pension to the actual cost of living on a quarterly basis should be honoured by the House and not abandoned.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, on this first day of Senior Citizens' Month, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of Thunder Bay-Atikokan, seniors and their supporters, who state that the Budget imposes an undue and unfair hardship on pensioners by indexing the Old Age Security. They call upon the House to reinstate full indexing of the OAS.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the signatures include that of the Conservative Member of the provincial Parliament for Fort William.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from Windsor-Walkerville, and elsewhere in Ontario, signed by senior citizens to whom the Budget has not sold itself and who protest the suggestion that they be asked to sacrifice their indexation on behalf of the rich.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of senior citizens in Winnipeg who protest the lopsided nature of the Budget and the unfair demands which are being made of seniors in the country in contrast to the demands which are being made of the rich.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of 40 or 50 citizens from the great city of Yorkton and the Towns of Churchbridge, Ebenezer, Springside, Kamsack and Willowbrook. Through their petition, these people are protesting the undue hardships imposed upon senior citizens because of deindexation. They are calling upon the House to restore and reinstate fully the indexation of the Old Age Security Program in the country.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from citizens in my constituency who protest the fact that the May 23 Budget imposes an undue and unfair hardship on citizens. They protest the fact that the promise which the Conservative Party gave in the last election campaign was broken. The petition calls for a return to full indexing in order to ensure that the poor, the unemployed and women do not lose anything, as they are faced with losing under the Budget.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents from my riding. Their petition points out that the May 23 Budget imposes undue and unfair hardship on pensioners by deindexing the Old Age Security Program. They call upon the House to reinstate full indexation of the Old Age Security Program for Canada.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 238.

[Text]

REYE'S SYNDROME

Question No. 238—Mr. Howie:

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare undertaken any studies in relation to the increased possibility of sick children being treated with aspirin contracting Reyes Syndrome and, if so, what conclusions were reached?

2. Are protective measures such as warning labels on product containers justified and, if not, will the Department undertake such a study?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare has not undertaken any studies relating to the use of ASA in children and the possible association of such use with the subsequent development of Reye's Syndrome, except to gather information on the incidence of the disease. In 1984 about 15 cases were reported.

2. The detailed results of the latest United States pilot study are not yet available to the Department for analysis, and are only expected in the fiscal year 1986-87. The Department has in the past drawn the attention of health professionals and parents to the problem by way of cheque inserts and newsletters. It has counselled caution in the use of ASA in children to reduce fever associated with viral illnesses. Manufacturers in the United States and Canada are voluntarily taking steps to add warning statements to their labels.

Mr. Dick: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I speak in sorrow and in anger with the Government for its absolute and abysmal failure to live up to the explicit promises it made during the election campaign to the charities, to the voluntary sector of the country, to take action on the proposals which was and is called "give and take". It is just one more of the many promises, sacred and otherwise, that the Tory Government has broken.

The give-and-take proposal, as it is called, provides for a 50 per cent tax rebate on what people contribute to charity regardless of their income. For example, for every one dollar a Canadian gives to charity, that contributor would receive a rebate of 50 cents on their income tax return. This would have the benefit of equalizing the cost of giving by offering equal incentives to all regardless of earnings and the rate at which they are taxed.

At present, as I think we all know, the higher one's income, the more benefit one receives from being able to deduct charitable donations at a higher tax rate. For example, right now a person who earns $50,000 per year and gives $200 to charity will be able to get back $100 because he is taxed at 50 per cent. A person who now earns $30,000 per year who gives the same $200, which is taxed at 30 per cent, will only be able to deduct 30 per cent of his or her gift, so that that person will only get back $60 rather than $100. It is unequal and unfair that one person gets back $100 and the other gets back $60. It is unfair that the one who earns more gets back more. The give-and-take proposal would equalize the benefits to all Canadians and of course encourage them to give more to charity.

Because the give-and-take proposal would encourage more people to give to charity, it would also secure larger memberships in charitable organizations and more participation in the voluntary sector. There is a proven relationship between one's giving and one's participation. It is a well-known axiom that where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a promise which was printed in the bulletin of the umbrella organization that relates to the voluntary sector. The bulletin reads:

> We are committed to implementing a Tax Credit equal to a percentage of donations made to registered charities.

That was a firm commitment and it is here in black and white. Tory Members made this promise or, as they called it, commitment, but that was when the Prime Minister was in opposition and running for office. That was before the election. Since that time, he has become the Prime Minister. Where is this promise after almost nine months? Of course, the place for this promise to have been kept was in the Budget.

Voluntary organizations across the country waited for an announcement. Where is this announcement? Where is the give-and-take tax credit program in the Budget recently tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)? It has vanished. It is not to be seen and not to be heard.

The Opposition of old has now become the Government and, abracadabra, it has become a Government of magic vanishing acts. With the Prime Minister, now you see it, now you don't. Not only did we not get jobs, jobs, jobs, but we did get promises, promises, promises which have been broken, broken, broken. The Prime Minister has done it again, and three million volunteers working for 40,000 charities now know the value of the promises made by the Prime Minister.

What about the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean)? He made the give-and-take proposal his pet crusade while he was on the opposition side. Let us take a look at a few of the promises he made. It would require days and even weeks to recite them all to you, Mr. Speaker. I can hardly do justice to all of the commitments and promises made by my hon. friend on the issue of give and take. For example, when he was in opposition, the present Secretary of State said the following:

> We are committed to a fundamental realignment of the tax treatment for charitable giving—the principle of a charitable tax credit—which will offer equitable incentives to all taxpayers to support their charities.

In other words, he said that he was entirely for the give-and-take proposal. He also said that the voluntary sector was the largest employer of lower and middle-class Canadians, and he was right when he said that. In addressing the voluntary sector, he said the following:

> You (the Voluntary Sector) offer many less advantaged Canadians a bridge to employment. Canada's Voluntary Sector is an untapped resource that not only can reduce government spending but can actually create jobs in the process.
> This is why we are committed to a principle of a charitable tax credit, to a tax environment which will offer equitable incentives. Give and take is on the agenda.

He said that give and take was on the agenda. Where is it on the Tory agenda? Is it only on the Tory agenda when Tory Members are in opposition? Now we have a Tory Government but we do not see that promise. Give and take was on the agenda of the Secretary of State when he was the Conservative critic for this area and spoke to the National Voluntary Organizations in the spring of 1984. All of the quotations which I have just read come from that one particular speech addressed to the National Voluntary Organizations.

Give and take was on the agenda then. Only a year ago, the Secretary of State told us that it was on his talking agenda, his speaking agenda, his promises agenda and his "get-the-Tories-elected" agenda. Where has the give-and-take proposal gone? Is the Secretary of State a magician as well? It appears as though we had another vanishing act here. I could paper my office with the promises made by the Secretary of State throughout his years in the House of Commons. He made promises not only in the House of Commons but in committees and in speeches to voluntary organizations across the country. Whenever he had a chance, he made these promises.

It is interesting to note that in 1980, the Secretary of State told us that the Government must act on this issue on behalf of the voluntary organizations "to provide voluntary agencies with financial aid to support their fund-raising activities". Then in 1982 he told us not to think "of the decrease this would bring to federal coffers but to think of this as an engine for employment creation". Those were the words of the Secretary of State. As far back as five years ago, the Secretary of State was telling us that the voluntary sector needed this give-and-take program so that it could create jobs.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) insists that, above all, his Budget is designed to create jobs. If so, why did the Secretary of State not tell the Minister of Finance about this marvellous way to create jobs? It is a marvellous way to create jobs. If the sorrow of the Secretary of State was so great, why did he not cry on the shoulder of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), on the shoulder of the Minister of Finance or on the shoulder of the Prime Minister in order to make sure that give and take really got on the agenda as he promised? I am afraid his tears were crocodile tears. Now that Tory Members have been elected on the basis of their election promises, they can forget all of them.

The Secretary of State accused the past Government of being guilty of a stark contrast between words and deeds, rhetoric and action, but the former Liberal Government never made a promise to instate the give-and-take proposal. However, the Secretary of State and the Prime Minister did make that promise. They are the ones who are guilty of rhetoric rather than action.

Is this House an echo chamber? Indeed, the Secretary of State really shot himself in his foot with his own words, words which I am sure he wishes the voluntary agencies and charities across the country would quickly forget.

● (1520)

The Secretary of State saved the best for last. On December 7, 1983, the Throne Speech of the Liberal Government proposed to set up a joint parliamentary task force consisting of Members of the House of Commons and the other place to consider all issues related to formulating an appropriate definition of a charity and what a charity could do under the Income Tax Act, in order to speed up the possibility of moving toward the consideration of the give-and-take program. The Liberal Government realized that it was an important issue to resolve. It was important enough to be in the Throne Speech. What happened to the proposal? Did it have an opportunity in its important work? Clearly the answer is no. It was obstructed by the present Secretary of State. He blocked the formation of the task force. He said that it was not good enough for the Liberal Government to deal only with the important definition of a charity. The Secretary of State maintained that he wanted a package deal. He wanted to tie it to the consideration of give and take. His position was: unless there was a discussion of give and take, then there would be no consideration given to the definition of charities. According to the Secretary of State, the agenda of the task force had to be all or nothing at all.

At the National Voluntary Organizations consultation meeting in 1984, the Secretary of State was heard loud and clear on the issue. Quoting from a copy of his speech which he circulated to members of the National Voluntary Organizations:

> Just last Thursday, the Hon. Serge Joyal called to discuss the task force and to seek Progressive Conservative Party support for a resolution in both the House of Commons and the Senate.

The present Secretary of State continued:

> I have responded that quick agreements can be achieved, if the frame of reference is broadened to address the fiscal framework as well as the legal. Your tax proposal should be part of the reference, not just the definition of charities.

The Liberal Government was blocked by the present Secretary of State and the Tories from doing anything constructive in attempting to resolve the issue of an appropriate definition of charities for income tax purposes. It was a very important issue, and it still is.

The Secretary of State cannot be proud that he, the most vocal spokesman for the Tories for voluntary organizations, should have blocked the progress of the former Government. He made promise after promise and then blocked action on the very things which he had promised were most dear to his heart. That was unconscionable.

In 1985 the Tories formed the Government. Finally, the first Budget was brought down. What is in it? I can hardly believe it. The Tories have decided to do something about part of the issue of the definition of charities for income tax purposes. Wonder of wonders. The Secretary of State blocked the former Government from forming an all-Party committee to consider the whole definition of charities, including the political activities which they would be allowed and many other complex aspects of what constitutes a charity. It is now a year later. What have we got? We have less than that which he blocked the former Government from doing. It does not include the former Government's proposal of a fiscal give-and-take program. Where is the give and take? It is not even on the agenda. It has vanished by Tory magic. One and a half years later, voluntary organizations are less well off than they might have been. They owe that to the man who was purported to have fought the hardest for them, the present Secretary of State. It is unbelievable. It is a "now you see it, now you don't", brought to us by the Tories. "Give and take" the proposal is called. That is precisely what the Tories have done. They promised to give but have taken away what they promised. The Secretary of State has found a new way of communicating on the issue—absolute silence. Mr. Speaker, have you ever heard him speak one word in the House on give and take since the Tories were elected? You haven't, not a word. Why did he not dig in his heels the way he did with the previous Government and say to the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Finance, or the Prime Minister that he wants a fiscal and legal framework, a definition of charities, and give and take considered in one package? Now that he is in government where are the eloquent speeches and demands? Silence, like the silence of the Berlin Wall.

Did the Tories think they could get away with this? Apparently they did. They thought they could distract attention from broken promises by offering partial action on the definition of charities to voluntary organizations. They thought the National Voluntary Organizations, its constituent organizations, and some 40,000 voluntary organizations in Canada, would buy the pay-off to forget.

The press release from the National Voluntary Organizations and reactions from a number of societies, associations and churches show that they are not amused. The Government will be hearing from them. The Tories' sop to voluntary organizations and charities has not worked. The Tories have underestimated the wisdom of such organizations if they believe that they can get away with this ruse. It will not work. The people of Canada are too smart for the Tory shell game. Regarding the give-and-take tax credit program for charitable organizations in Canada, the Tories gave and the Tories have taken away. Blasted be the game of the Tories!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault).

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I am sick and tired of hearing Opposition Members using the elderly and volunteer agencies to make political points, and I hope Canadians are not taken in by what the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) said about charitable organizations. I would qualify as self-serving and political rhetoric what the Hon. Member has been saying today about the voluntary sector and non-profit organizations, for which my Government, Mr. Speaker, has boundless admiration and respect, which is reflected in the Budget by a proposal that makes it easier to donate gifts to charities, and by a consultation process that will help us do even more for these organizations. The Hon. Member fails to mention this. He is setting himself up as the defender of the voluntary sector by indulging in a lot of calculated rhetoric.

Mr. Speaker, we all know we should not expect others to do what we cannot do ourselves. The Liberals should not ask this Government to accomplish in nine months what they were unable to do in 20 years. I would like to hear what he has to say about that.

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, first, I am not sure that was a question. It sounded like a rather pathetic attempt to shake off some dust, in view of the fact that the Secretary of State has said nothing and done nothing about give and take. There is no suggestion of trying to hurt anybody. On the contrary. The point is that those people were given solemn promises by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State. The voluntary organizations are searching through the Budget and finding that there is not a single, solitary mention of the give and take, 50 per cent—

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) keeps coming in the House and standing in the back, where he shouts all kinds of stupid remarks. He should at least have the courage to sit down and wait his turn. I am sick and . . . He has been doing this for months—

An Hon. Member: That is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —that this is a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Do your homework, bossy!

Mr. de Corneille: I would suggest that the problem has to do with the question of—

Mrs. Mailly: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I would like to listen to the Hon. Member's reply to my colleague's comments. Could he stop shouting back there?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask all Hon. Members to please listen to the reply by the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille).

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, obviously I woke them up. They are staring at one more in a long line of broken promises. Tragically, these people were elected by promising the moon, sky and the stars. Then, once into office, they conveniently forget all those promises. The Canadian people are not amused, and that is what is stirring them up. They have seen the senior citizens of this country betrayed by the Prime Minister's broken promises. Now, again, one of the clearest promises which has been made year after year has been broken.

Mr. Lanthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I realize I am a new Member and this may not be a point of order. However, I think that what is happening at this time is highly improper. First of all, we are getting comments from the other side of the House, making it impossible for us to listen. We cannot hear the other side. Second, some highly inappropriate comments are being exchanged from either side of the Table. It seems to me that Members should be called to order once and for all. We each have our own seat. There is a procedure, and as a junior Member, I wish the confusion would stop, with all this procedural wrangle.

Mr. Rossi: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), on the same point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member on the other side of the House that often his own colleagues are behind the curtains making inappropriate remarks. They can't take their own medicine, Mr. Speaker. Well, they might as well learn! Your colleagues are doing the same thing we do on this side of the House. We are not going to take this lying down!

Mrs. Mailly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, you did remind me that the only way to seek redress in the House from this Member who does not know how to behave is to rise on question of privilege. The Hon. Member has been doing the same thing for weeks now. He stays behind the curtain and insults me. He calls me the "Hitler-woman", he calls me "dictator" and all sorts of names which are unacceptable in this House. If ever he should decide to enter the House, I wish he would sit down like everybody else and do his work. I am really fed up with the way he behaves. He is vulgar, unfair and boring.

Mr. Rossi: Talking about vulgarity, Mr. Speaker, I can tell my colleague that she too is vulgar because she does the same thing when she is behind the curtain. I learned my lesson from her, Mr. Speaker, ever since she first came here. I learned from her.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to show courtesy to their colleagues. That is the proper attitude, in keeping with the traditions of the House of Commons.

As to the question of privilege raised earlier by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), I will take it under advisement and make a ruling later.

For the fourth time, I would ask Hon. Members to be courteous and listen to the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) who is trying to answer a question.

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple observation to make. First, the give-and-take proposal is a good one. It was endorsed by the then Secretary of State and promised by the present Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) as well as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It was a good proposal which Members of the Liberal Government wanted to move toward. The Government which is now in power promised that it would bring this about. That is fact number two. Fact number three is simply that it has vanished.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has yet to answer my question. We all know that charitable organizations had difficulty in the past because it was not easy to obtain a tax credit for a donation. The Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) makes it easier for individuals this year, enabling them to help charitable organizations indirectly. How come the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) did not mention that? This has to be a step in the right direction! I told him we could not do in nine months what the previous Government was unable to do for 20 years. I should think he would take that into account.

In 1979, my learned colleague and I had a motion under consideration by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, but it was defeated by the Liberals. The motion was on that issue, but you rejected it. Answer my question. You do not agree that we should make it easier for organizations and individuals, to help the voluntary sector?

[English]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I think she is obviously at a distance from reality. I do not know what she is talking about when she says this Budget makes it easier to make donations. I can advise her that in order to facilitate this whole process and move it along, the previous Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, eliminated the $100 automatic deduction in order to make it possible for people to claim their charitable donations separately. They would be able to estimate what their loss might be and what the gain might be and how much would be involved, and we would then be facilitated in taking the next step. That was put in place not by this Government, but by the previous Government. It was applauded by the voluntary organizations because it was a step toward being able to assess what was involved in charitable donations. As to this Budget making it easier to make a charitable donation, I cannot imagine what she is talking about. It certainly does not have anything to do with a tax credit.

Let us be clear. The issue is that a promise was made. Strangely enough, we are told this Budget is about jobs. Strangely enough, the Secretary of State said that if you allow this 50 per cent tax credit, it will create jobs. The Prime Minister acknowledged that. If this Budget is about jobs, why is this provision not in the Budget? That is the question. We are talking about give and take; where is it?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) for a question or comment.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Hon. Member that this give-and-take program was introduced when the Clark Government was in office. I was then political advisor to the Minister of Finance, and the National Volunteer Organization came to see us. What we did was to put a note in Mr. Crosbie's 1979 Budget to the effect that the measure would be considered by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and also by the special committee struck to study the rights of the handicapped and services to be offered to the handicapped and the voluntary sector.

We were then quite anxious to study that very good measure and Mr. Crosbie had urged the committee to consider it. Unfortunately, as we all know, his Government defeated the Crosbie Budget and our Government along with it.

Now, five years later, the economic situation is worse than in 1979 and we simply cannot promote all the measures we would like to implement in order to help the voluntary sector, charitable organizations and community groups. But it is only a matter of time because our Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs are fully aware of the contribution of voluntary organizations.

That is why the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) encouraged all Canadians to help relieve famine in Ethiopia instead of again letting the Government alone contribute funds to assist that country. We know very well that the voluntary sector in Canada is second to none and that Canadians are very generous. So we will study the measure he mentioned, along with all the others. Given the deficit we inherited and our sluggish economy, we simply cannot afford to promote all worthy causes. That is precisely why we are so pleased that the Canadian people turfed out that Government and put us in office so we may at last take a different approach and improve the quality of life for all Canadians.

● (1540)

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I am very interested to learn that this is a great trump up their sleeve. With all the unemployed people around, I wish they would play this trump which would create jobs. If what the Hon. Member said is true, it is even worse than I thought. She is saying that when the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) was Prime Minister, they were aware of this program. It was recommended, but did not even appear in the Budget of the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). Therefore, it seems that they have missed the boat not once, but twice. It had already been proposed and they knew about it. They had looked at it once already and did not put it in the Budget of the present Minister of Justice.

The present Budget took nine months to create and was supposed to be focused on jobs. Everyone has agreed that this give-and-take process is valuable, but there is not even a suggestion in the Budget that it is going to be studied. I looked through the budget papers and saw no reference to indicate that the subject of give and take would be studied. I would certainly welcome an immediate move by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), with the support of the present Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) to set up such a committee to allow us to study the implications of this for the sake of employment and the charitable organizations of the country.

The Budget—Mr. Jepson

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today, on the sixth day of the budget debate, to support the measures announced in the Budget by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

For almost 14 years I have experienced the ups and downs of trying to run a small business in my riding of London East. I think it is extremely important that this Budget reflects the views, not of politicians, but of Canadians from all regions and many backgrounds who have brought their different perspectives to Ottawa to serve the national interest.

As a small businessman, I believe that the collective wisdom of the market-place must be given priority that it has not received in the past. To restore a body to health and to make it grow, the first requirement is nourishment. At long last our economy is now receiving more than the temporary band-aid solutions of the past. Although these might have provided some short-term relief, they only dealt with the surface problems and not the root causes.

Small businessmen, and indeed most Canadians who have experienced the problems first hand, realize the previous approach has not worked and the time has come for a new direction. We believe this Budget reflects the views of the Canadian people because we have benefited from the collective wisdom of many Canadians from across Canada who have generously shared their views with us these past months.

In rising to speak in the budget debate, I can tell the people of London East that the commitment for change that was made to them by our Party has taken a progressive step forward. The discussion surrounding the Budget projects two emergent themes. The first of these reflects the approach of the previous administration. That approach was rejected by the Canadian people. It consists of judging Government by what it gives out. Members of the Opposition Parties are telling each Canadian to look at the Budget and ask what it does for them personally rather than looking at it collectively in the best interests of all Canadians.

This approach did not accomplish what it hoped to achieve in the previous Government, although I am sure it was brought in with the best of intentions. It did nothing to encourage investment and create jobs and opportunity, but rather saddled our recovery with a debt load that now absorbs one of every three dollars paid by Canadian taxpayers.

I ask both my Liberal and NDP colleagues in the House to consider looking at the Budget from a more positive and objective viewpoint. The questions that should be asked in order to arrive at an objective evaluation of the merits of the Budget look at it as a whole and with the big picture in mind. We all realize that the prime function of the Budget is to begin the process of restoring confidence in our business communities and our country. A working economy reduces employment and will allow the Government to provide effective protection and renewed hope for those experiencing the perils of a struggling economy,

In view of the critical state of our economy, I believe the time has come to put aside the temptation to score political points and to work together in the best interests of all Canadians. The best thing about our Budget is its realistic approach to alleviating Canada's problems of unemployment and economic inertia. This has to be the focus of any responsible Budget because these fundamental problems lead directly to the countless serious problems experienced by Canadians that the Government is committed to assisting.

This Budget is a realistic answer to the record of the last Government. That Government was faced with serious problems and decided that a strategy of massive government spending would be the best route to go. However, we still have the problems of unemployment, a spiralling debt, and a structural deficit which has limited the opportunity for recovery.

I would like to speak to this Budget from the perspective of a small businessman. Everyone knows the importance of this sector. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business estimates that it creates at least 80 per cent of all new lasting jobs. The key to a healthy economy is a healthy small business sector. The health of the small business sector depends on the commercial environment which is, to a great extent, determined by the tax framework. This has a direct influence on the willingness of people to invest, of businessmen to take risks, on the flexibility and supply of labour, and on the ability of consumers to buy.

Today I will focus my remarks on the effectiveness of the Budget in changing the tax structure into one that will allow small businesses to start the process of economic renewal. The single most impressive change announced in the Budget is the long overdue measure that extends to all Canadians a $500,000 lifetime exemption from capital gains. In 1972, on the recommendation of the 1966 Royal Commission on Taxation, the taxation of capital gains was introduced primarily in the interest of equity. The decision at that time to include only one-half of capital gains as taxable income reflected the concern that such a tax would have some adverse effects on the economy. Furthermore, the erosion of the cost base of assets by inflation was also regarded as something that should be compensated for.

In 1985 it is appropriate to adjust this legislation because of the circumstances. The balance has shifted in a way that makes it necessary to use new measures to encourage investment and enterprise, thereby creating jobs and opportunities for Canadians. Businessmen and women are not taking the initiatives that will lead to the growth of our economy, but with this Budget, we believe they will.

The capital gains tax made it less attractive to make equity investments. The system allows a limited deductibility of capital losses which are particularly significant during a recessionary period. The hidden tax effect of inflation has already been mentioned as creating a taxable capital gain on paper even when an asset has actually lost value. Finally, the capital gains system tends to lock in investments, or to inhibit their investment altogether.

The point of these observations is that the capital gains exemption gives small business a more just return on the risks they have taken with the hope that they, in turn, will invest and expand in their business, thereby creating more jobs and opportunities for Canadians. If money invested in a small business is given a better rate of return, we believe that more money will be invested than has been in the past.

A final point I would like to make with respect to capital gains concerns the signal it sends to all Canadians. All of the measures in the Budget, but particularly this one, tell people that we are counting on them to go out and do well. If people get the feeling that they can succeed by using their resources, then this Budget has accomplished a great deal.

Reflecting their grave doubts about the character of the Canadian people, the Opposition say that the capital gains exemption will only result in rich people benefiting from the purchase of a Florida condominium. We are different as a Progressive Conservative Government. We have great faith in the Canadian people, that they will respond to those initiatives and share this opportunity with all Canadians.

Unfortunately, they do not seem to make the connection that the single most important reason for taking capital out of Canada and investing it in another country is a taxation and regulation environment that made Canada a bad place to invest. We say that Canada is a good place to invest and this will be reflected in the days ahead. Already, we have seen many positive economic signs in the market-place and sense a renewed feeling of confidence and optimism. FIRA tried to keep jobs in Canada, but in the long run it destroyed them by making other countries more attractive places to invest. This was the same short sighted philosophy underlying the National Energy Program and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax.

In 1985, Canada is turning into one of the best places to invest because of the confidence we have shown in the decision-making of consumers and business persons alike. Two years from now, we believe the Opposition will be surprised to see how Canadians of all income levels have responded in a positive way to invest in their own country. We believe in Canadians. A capital gains exemption will not mean much if there is no money available to be invested. The Budget addresses this question and contains a number of measures that compliment the exemption in ways that will channel the benefits toward the ordinary Canadian. The Budget opens a number of new sources for investment capital that will find its way into investments that will create jobs.

Venture capital funds patterned after the Quebec Federation of Labour Fund will be encouraged by the Budget. This is a direct instrument, to benefit both labour and small business, that will be advanced by the extension of a generous tax credit for people taking advantage of this opportunity. Investment tax credits have been recognized as one of the most positive ways to encourage entry into the market. This credit will bring the coverage up to a possible 40 per cent of the value of the investment. Sixty per cent of this investment will go into the equity of the small and medium-sized Canadian businesses.

The innovative Quebec Federation of Labour program that inspired this measure has been a genuine success story. Le Fonds de Solidarité des Travailleurs du Québec was the initiative of workers who wanted to help themselves out of the doldrums of the recession. The Quebec fund has been in operation for two years and has been a significant benefit to participants, both for its investment value and as a tax credit. Furthermore, it has been said to have provided Quebecers with 1,000 jobs through the impetus it provides for the economy.

This measure has been largely ignored by the Opposition speakers, which I suppose is the highest endorsement we would expect from them. Since it is a tax credit, this is a very progressive instrument to bring about the objective of labour participation in business equity. It will also present the opportunity for people with lower income to take advantage of their lifetime capital gains exemption. It is hard to say whether the investors or the businesses will benefit more from this, but it is good to see policies that do not lopsidedly distribute benefits while taxing the system as a whole. I hope all Members will join me in congratulating the Minister of Finance for extending this innovative proposal. I believe that it merits encouragement as something that will be of great economic significance to all regions of Canada.

Another progressive measure announced in the Budget was raised in the course of the exhaustive consultation process. Both the Canadian Organization of Small Business and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business strongly recommend the making available of certain pension funds to provide equity for small business. The availability of several billion dollars for equity financing will have considerable impact in making our small business sector one that will be able to respond to changing technologies and market conditions. By giving small business both the incentive and the opportunity to increase its equity, the Budget has taken a giant step forward to achieving a secure economic renewal.

A key to any competitive economy in the next few decades will be the priority it places on high technology and research. Both Japan and West Germany have recognized this and their economies reflect it. Unfortunately, our social and economic policies in the past have all but ignored the need for a thoughtful approach to fostering innovation that can both be developed and applied to the manufacturing process. Other major industrialized economies average close to twice Canada's proportionate expenditure in R and D as a percentage of Gross National Product. The R and D tax credit for small businesses consists of 35 per cent of research and development spending up to a total of $700,000. This credit will be refundable in full to the company that uses it. This will make it a much more direct benefit, since only 40 per cent was refundable in the past.

The resources for this program are closely focused on the small business sector. This is a progressive step because this money will get some operations off the ground that would not otherwise have existed. If an economy is to adjust to a format that is both specialized and flexible, this is exactly the sort of policy that we need. The essence of the idea of competition is efficiency, that is the most productivity for a given level of available resources. I believe the specific tax measures described in the Budget serve very valuable policy objectives. At the same time, it is good to see that the system itself will get a comprehensive review through the corporate income tax system discussion paper.

In the pre-Budget consultation, representatives of the business community never objected to paying their fair share of tax, but they did wonder why the system had to be so complicated. This was seen as a cost in the same way that high tax rates area. A complicated tax system absorbs time, energy and expense. It deeply affects the profile of corporate structures and planning for both small and large businesses. Our Government is sensitive to the problems created by a complicated tax system.

Let me conclude my remarks with some observations on the deficit. All thinking Canadians realize that we cannot continue to spend beyond our means, but we cannot accomplish this reduction overnight. We must, at the same time, maintain that high level of effective social programs which is important to all of us. The Minister of Finance considered this carefully, and I support the resulting Budget. Important programs have been maintained and the tax level remains at an equitable level. At the same time, we have launched a vigorous program to reduce the level of our deficit.

Budget '85 is an historic change for Canadian Government; it charts a bold new direction, rightfully placing responsibility in the hands of the private sector. This is the only basis for a strong and viable economy. I urge all Members to avoid spreading fear and to join the Government in supporting a Budget that is clearly setting a new, positive direction for Canada. It is a direction that will utilize the vast and rich natural and human resources we possess in this country and that have been left untapped for far too long.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a couple of comments on the speech by the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson). I think there are some basic inequities in the Budget that I do not believe Members of the Government have accepted or understand. He is defending the fact that the capital gains exemption will now allow people to make $500,000 in capital gains without paying any tax at all. What he does not speak about is from where that money is going to come. It will come from the imposition of deindexing the old age pension.

• (1600)

That will go on year after year. It is $100 a year for a pensioner in 1986; $200 in 1987; and $300 in 1988. You can double the amount for a couple both receiving the old age pension. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or his colleagues say that pensioners have to contribute to bring down the deficit, the fact is that is not true. Pensioners are being asked to make that contribution from the pittance on which they have to live to finance this enormous tax exemption on capital gains, a tax exemption which will rise to more than $1 billion a year within the course of two or three years. It starts small and gets bigger and bigger.

It is argued by the Government that that is OK because it is putting a surtax on people who are well off, on corporations and the banks in 1986. That is correct, but what the Government does not say is that it is for only one year. The benefits in terms of the tax exemption on capital gains will go on in perpetuity if this Government has a chance to stay in office. The cost to pensioners in order to take tax off the rich will go on in perpetuity.

Is it any wonder that millions of Canadians are skeptical about the Budget? They look at the fact that the Canadian association for small business, big business, corporate presidents, people in the investment community on Bay Street and St. James Street were amply consulted. The pensioners' organizations and organizations representative of the aged were either not consulted at all, or what they had to say was completely ignored, Mr. Speaker.

How can the Hon. Member defend in glowing terms a Budget which on the face of it is so inequitable? It takes from the poor, particularly the elderly poor, and particularly from that group of women who are 65 or over, widowers, separated or divorced and who have only one income. They will have to pay for the tax exemption on speculation in real estate, art and perhaps the occasional investment in small business. Is that really fair? I ask the Hon. Member to defend that.

Mr. Jepson: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. We believe it is a fair Budget. We believe that with the election of 211 Government Members, people were telling us very clearly that it was time for a change in the economic policy of Canada and that it was time to make some of those hard decisions.

As I have studied this Budget, I believe the Minister of Finance is to be congratulated on distributing those changes in a very fair and equitable way. I believe all Canadians, including seniors, are prepared to make those sacrifices in the short term to look for the long-term benefits, benefits that will not be there when many people reach retirement because the pension funds have been seriously depleted, and virtually exhausted, covering the massive debt we have had to finance these last years.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member there is an overwhelming feeling that we must come to grips with this debt and make sure that we have a vibrant and secure economy to allow those Canadians in the years ahead, when it comes time for them to retire, funds for their retirement and security.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson). Has the Hon. Member read the article in The Citizen dated May 30, 1985, under the heading, "Federal Budget presents problems for small business"? The article in part reads:

> The small business community might have been too quick to sing the praises of last week's federal budget, a panel of Ottawa tax experts said Wednesday.

The article goes on:

> The only jobs that are sure to be in demand as a direct result of the Budget are those of professional tax advisers—because many of the measures will be hard to understand without professional advice.
> And because some of the measures go only halfway—for example, increasing the limits of registered retirement savings plan contributions without allowing entrepreneurs or their relatives to invest RRSP funds in their own businesses—they are virtually useless for small business.

Could the Hon. Member comment on such a statement?

Mr. Jepson: I thank the Hon. Member for his question, Mr. Speaker. I did not see the article in the paper. I did speak to Mr. John Bulloch, who heads up the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, who is representative, I would say, of a clear majority of small businesses in Canada. Mr. Bulloch was overwhelmingly impressed with the Budget. He sees it as a real vehicle, as a springboard for the economy for small businesses to create jobs. He is looking with great anticipation, as are I believe most Canadians, to the positive results that will come.

Let me underline to the Hon. Member that this is not an overnight situation. It will take time. We as a Government are clearly saying to the people that we have faith in them and faith in the business community. We have a country that is rich both in human and national resources and we trust the business sector to play a large role in the recovery. We have every confidence that it will do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We shall now resume debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak at this very critical time. It seems to me that what this new so-called Progressive Conservative Government is doing with this Budget is beginning the destruction of the social security system which has been built up in Canada over the past 50 years.

An Hon. Member: Who are you trying to scare?

Mr. Orlikow: We have seen one of those hidebound, old-fashioned—and when I am talking about old-fashioned, I am talking about a million years ago—Conservatives who just asked who I am trying to scare. I do not have to scare anybody. Any person, except a few of the very rich, who looks at this Budget will knows and recognizes that substantial cuts will result in every person's standard of living. Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker. I do not have to scare anybody.

We are back to debating some of the first principles which we thought we settled a long time ago on such matters as pension policies, social services and the support which Governments should give to those people in need. Let me bring to the attention of those Conservative Members who would like to ignore the real facts some of the very timely information which was contained in a report issued recently by the National Council of Welfare called Poverty on the Increase. Those are not my words. That is the title of a report put out by the National Council of Welfare.

Let me indicate briefly what this report says. This report indicates that Canadians have been hurt very badly by the recession. It reports that the decline in the number of people living in poverty which had been going on since 1969 has now stopped. From 1981 to 1983, there has been a substantial increase in the number of people who are living in poverty. From 1981 to 1983, 600,000 more people were added to the number of Canadians living in poverty. We now have over four million Canadians living in poverty; a 24 per cent increase in two years.

One person in six in Canada is now living in poverty, a sharp increase from the best performance of a few years ago when one person in seven was living in poverty. This is a very significant deterioration. The Budget will compound the trend of the last couple of years and will prove to be a disaster for people in lower income brackets.

Let us look at what will happen to pensions. We have been repeatedly told that the deindexation of pensions will not reduce the living standards of pensioners in the next few years. I do not think, in the years I have served as a Member of Parliament, that we have ever made a more important decision than we did when we indexed old age pensions. I ask Hon. Members to think back to how the system operated before pensions were indexed. In particular, I remind Conservative Members that one of the biggest factors in defeating the Liberal Government, which was in office from 1945 to 1957, was that in 1956 or 1957 the then Liberal Government with its very great revenues was only prepared to increase pensions by $6 per month. The Conservative Leader who brought the Conservatives out of the wilderness and into Government for the first time in generations, Mr. Diefenbaker, went across the country, quite properly heaped scorn on the Liberals and called them: "Six-buck boys".

Mr. Diefenbaker won the election and increased pensions, but despite the calls by pensioners and people who spoke up for them, calling for fairly regular increases in pensions because the cost of living was rising, they did not get pension increases except in election years, at which time a Conservative or Liberal Government, trying to get support from pensioners, would increase pensions. One of the most important decisions made by any Canadian Parliament—and if I remember correctly, it was done with the unanimous support of all Parties then in Parliament—was to index pensions so that as the cost of living rose, the real standard of living of pensioners would not be reduced.

Now the Government has decided to deindex pensions. The only increase pensioners will receive will be if the increase in the cost of living rises by more than 3 per cent, at which point they will receive the difference between 3 per cent and the actual rate of inflation. This means that the standard of living for all people receiving OAS—and I am not talking about the Guaranteed Income Supplement—will be reduced by 3 per cent each year as long as we continue with this deindexation.

Mr. McDermid: Unless inflation falls below 3 per cent.

Mr. Orlikow: I hear the Hon. Member's interjection. Inflation is now beginning to rise in the United States and in Canada. I ask Hon. Members to think of what this means to someone who will retire this year at age 65. In five years—and more and more people are living longer—the real value of old age pensions will be reduced three times five, compounded, or by more than 15 per cent.

What about the person who is now 50 years of age and is thinking about how he or she will manage after reaching retirement age at 65? They had every reason to believe that they would receive their Canada Pension, whatever it would be 15 years from now; whatever was in their private pension plan to which they may belong; and whatever they had in savings or in RRSPS. However, the most important part about the way in which most of them would live was what they would receive from OAS, which is now about $269 per month. If the cost of living rises each year for the next 15 years by 3 per cent or more, it will mean that when they retire at age 65, 15 years from now, the value of their old age pension through OAS will in fact be just about half what it is now. This has tremendously disturbing implications for all those people who are trying to plan for their retirement, people who were hoping, expecting and were led to believe that they would live on retirement in some comfort and dignity. This deindexation of OAS destroys that belief.

If it is right or necessary to deindex OAS, I ask government Members whether there is anything wrong with deindexing the Canada Pension Plan. Will we get that next year? At the same time the Government is doing this to ordinary people, it is giving rich people the opportunity to invest $15,500 in RRSP plans each year. Who can invest $15,500 in an RRSP each year—only people with very high incomes.

The former Liberal Government lowered the marginal rate at which high income people paid income tax. Now they are being told not to worry about paying that lower rate of income tax, and that they can avoid paying any income tax, while in high income brackets and before retirement, on $15,500. This will give them a tax break of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $6,000 or $7,000 per year. Let us compare that with what the Government is saying to old age pensioners.

It has been estimated that this reduction or deindexation of old age pensions will save the Government $1.6 billion, but of course that will be taken away from old age pensioners. At the same time—and I do not have the time to discuss it today, but I will certainly do so on another occasion—the Government has given tax concessions and tax breaks to the wealthy. The Government will lose $1.4 billion in revenue and the wealthy will gain almost that amount. In other words, the Government is saying that it will take away $1.6 billion from old age pensioners and give almost that amount to the very wealthy. That is where the Government wants to take the people of Canada. The Government cannot fool old age pensioners. It cannot hide the facts from them. Our pensioners may be old, but they are not stupid.

Mr. McDermid: That is right.

Mrs. Mailly: Exactly.

Mr. McKenzie: That is right.

Mr. Orlikow: That is right. I must have hit a nerve because suddenly Conservative Members are interjecting. It will take a few months for old age pensioners to realize what is happening. They will know what has happened when they go to the supermarket to do their shopping and find that the price of groceries—meat, milk, cheese, everything—has risen, and when they receive their pension cheques and discover that they are not receiving the kinds of increases they used to get until now. They will not have to depend on the Members of the Opposition. They will not have to depend on old age pension organizations, which are already speaking on their behalf. Each and every one of them will know what has happened because they can clearly see what has happened.

● (1620)

A large percentage of our old age pensioners, particularly single women, widows, those who have never been married, and those who stayed home while they were married bringing up their children and who have certainly not worked in recent years, are living in poverty now, It is a sad fact that we really do not know how they live. We do not know how bad it is for them.

I see that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) is here in the Chamber, Mr. Speaker. Since Parliament will not be sitting in July, I invite the Hon. Member to spend a half a day with me to visit some of the soup kitchens operating in our great City of Winnipeg. Let us go to the soup kitchen off Broadway which is operating in the Broadway Optimist Building. Let us visit the Salvation Army and some of the native centres which are feeding people. Let us visit those Catholic churches which are handing out parcels of food, groceries and canned goods. Let us talk to the people at these centres. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine and I could urge the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) to do the same type of thing in Toronto. It will be seen that there are hundreds of thousands of people in this wealthy country who are living in conditions akin to the way people live in the Third World.

In Winnipeg, we have a successful school nutrition program in place. When it was first started, many people said it was not necessary. It was said that this was not the responsibility of the schools. There are young people in Winnipeg whose one and only nutritious meal a day comes from the school. I say that is a disgrace. It is a disgrace to every Canadian. It is a disgrace to every Member of Parliament that this type of situation can exist in our country.

I say to the Members of the Conservative Party: Go out and look at what is happening. Go out and see how people are living. If those Members have any kind of heart, they will say to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), "You are moving in the wrong direction." We cannot, in all conscience, permit so many people to continue in the way they are living, not if we have any shred of compassion, any shred of decency.

I would like to deal with what the Budget means for children. What we have in place is a clearly regressive plan. By the very calculations of the Minister of Finance, there will be a withdrawal of some $15 million from families in the period 1985-86 and some $40 million in the period 1986-87 because of cut-backs in the family allowance program. These family allowances are being cut back because we are abandoning their indexation. In fact, the purchasing power of that money has lost one-third of what it could buy 10 years ago. The child tax exemption is being significantly reduced through this Budget. The child tax credit has been significantly altered through a reduced income threshold for qualifiers and through reduced indexing.

I would now like to deal with poverty in families. According to the report to which I referred earlier, the poverty rate for a family with one child increased by 17.2 per cent from 1980 to 1983. The poverty rate for a family with two children increased by 25.7 per cent from 1980 to 1983. The poverty rate for a family with three or more children increased by 33 per cent from 1980 to 1983. These are shocking figures. I urge the Government to consider the real situation and increase the disposable income of people in low income brackets instead of decreasing it, as has been done through the proposals in the Budget.

I suggest we should not be thinking about increasing regressive sales taxes on essentials. We should be removing these taxes. We should be removing the sales tax from the important and necessary items required by all families. We should not be increasing these taxes. In conclusion, I say again that this Budget is probably the worst I have ever had to deal with in my more than 20 years in Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the Hon. Member's speech, I found it regrettable that all he had to offer was doom and gloom. It is unfortunate that he dwelt on the negatives and the past. We have a Budget which sets a new direction, one which creates a spirit of optimism and hope. I would ask the Hon. Member to consider that.

I sincerely believe the reason the New Democratic Party is suffering at the polls is because of the negative approach taken in looking at the situation from a textbook perspective as opposed to the real world perspective. I would ask the Hon. Member to consider looking in the new direction we are setting for Canada. I ask him to do this objectively. I ask him to join with us in giving all Canadians a new future and new hope.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson) says that the Budget and his Government are taking Canada in a new direction. There is not very much new about the Budget. Several years ago, when Mrs. Thatcher was first elected, she started to carry out the very same measures which this Government is proposing. I suggest the Hon. Member look to what has happened in Great Britain where unemployment is at an all time high.

Mr. Riis: All time high! It is the worst it has ever been.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, I think you are right. It is the worst it has ever been. It is certainly worse than the situation which existed during the time of the Great Depression in the 1930s. I would ask the Hon. Member to look at the situation in Germany. A few years ago, German voters defeated a social democratic Government.

An Hon. Member: Turfed them out!

Mr. Orlikow: An Hon. Member says, "Turfed them out!" That is a true statement. They had every right to do that in a democratic system. It was assumed, and reported by all the so-called experts, that it would be a generation before the social democratic party would come back to form the Government in Germany. The present German Government is following the same type of policies which this Government is proposing for Canada. Recently, elections were held in the two largest states in Germany. Some two years after the election, the popularity of the government party has dropped by some 7 per cent.

I wish to make one more prediction for the Hon. Member. If it were not illegal, I would like to make a bet with him. I am prepared to make a small wager with the Hon. Member that in a year from now, because of this Government's policies, there will be 100,000 more people unemployed than there are at the present time.

• (1630)

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy listening to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Here we come with pearls of wisdom.

Mr. McDermid: His sincerity is unquestionable, unlike that of the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). I would like to say one thing about the approach taken by the Hon. Member. Certainly we have problems in this country. There is no question about that. However, the deficit is growing at an unconscionable rate. We are now paying 25 per cent in interest payments alone on the deficit. This leaves us with 75 per cent to spend on the various programs of the federal Government.

All I hear from members of the New Democratic Party is that we should be spending more and that we should not be paying any attention to the deficit, except in one area. They say that we should cut out defence, get out of NATO and get out of NORAD. That is the only area in which they suggest we cut expenditures.

If we go on running up our debts at this crazy breakneck speed, the senior citizens and the health care and post-secondary education programs and the other myriad of programs that come from the federal Government will suffer. They will suffer even more if we do not tackle the problem now so that down the road we can assure the senior citizens and all those people who need our help that it will be there for them.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, of course we have a large deficit about which we should all be concerned. I would ask the Hon. Member to think about why we have this very large deficit. I say to him that we have this large deficit not because the Government is spending too much money and not because the Government is providing too many services, but because there are a million and a half people who are unemployed.

I urge the Hon. Member to read an article which appeared in the New York Times a few days ago, a copy of which I can send to him. The article was about a report from the OECD. What the OECD predicted for Canada next year was that this country would have a rate of unemployment of 11.5 per cent or 11.6 per cent and that that would be the highest rate of unemployment of any country in the OECD. That is not my estimate, that is the estimate of the OECD.

Let me deal for a moment with the deficit. We have a deficit because we have an unemployment rate which is over 11 per cent. There are a million and a half people who are unemployed. Those people are either drawing unemployment insurance benefits or welfare payments. We have a deficit in the unemployment insurance account of $5 billion or $6 billion, I have not looked at the exact figures lately. If one million out of the 1.5 million unemployed were working rather than unemployed, they would not be drawing unemployment insurance payments and they would not be drawing welfare payments. They would be working and they would be paying income tax. They would have the money to purchase things and those purchases would generate sales taxes, both federal and provincial. If one million of the 1.5 million people who are now unemployed were working, the deficit would be quite small.

It is much more important to deal with unemployment than it is to make the number one issue the reduction of the deficit. That is what the Conservative Party and the Prime Minister promised during the election campaign, when he promised "Jobs, Jobs, Jobs". Since the election campaign, unemployment has been forgotten by the Government and they tell us we must now concentrate on reducing the deficit. We are going to do that on the backs of the poor and the old.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) agrees that the problem is the lack of jobs. However, we differ about the methods that should be used to solve the problem. In 1979, when the Conservative Party was in Government for a few short months, the deficit was $11 billion. Today it is $35 billion. A lot of money has been spent in the interim, but the employment situation has not improved. Obviously we must change our methods.

We are trying to create jobs because we believe that in the chicken and egg situation, the chicken is private enterprise and it, rather than the state, must lay the golden egg that will create the jobs. The Hon. Member believes that it is the state that should create the jobs. However, when the state does that, the jobs do not last.

I have heard some of the Hon. Member's colleagues ask how we can talk about reducing the deficit and giving incentives to industries when we have full capacity or close to full capacity in some of our industries. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg

North does not seem to realize that we have structural problems. We have capacities in industries which do not have markets. We must find new industries for which we have markets so that we can sell our goods and create the jobs we need. We agree on the problem. We simply differ on the method that should be used to solve it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, of course we agree on the problem and of course we disagree on the method. The method of this Government has been tried in Great Britain and in Germany. It would have been tried in the United States in a more obvious way than it has been tried there. The United States has avoided the kind of problem with which we will soon be faced because that country, under the leadership of President Reagan, has pumped billions of dollars into defence. This has been called by some who are better economists than I "military Keynesianism".

This Government is proposing to follow the words of President Reagan who has said that they must deal with the deficit. But under President Reagan, the United States has the biggest deficits it has ever had. If we follow that prescription, then a year from now, as I mentioned to the Hon. Member's colleague, there will be much more unemployment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired. Questions and comments are now terminated.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, the Budget speech and the Budget papers demonstrate, in my opinion, an attitude on the part of the Progressive Conservative Government and its Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that is realistic, courageous and honest. This Budget reflects a new vision of Canada.

The Budget reflects a realistic attitude because it truly addresses the deficit. The present Government knows that if it does not reduce future deficits and the upward spiral of the national debt, it will inevitably be necessary to increase taxes drastically and make cuts in basic social programs. The present Government is very reluctant to take such measures, because a drastic increase in taxes would have a disastrous effect on the country's productivity and our international competitive position, and as for cutting social services, the human cost would be totally unacceptable. The Budget is realistic because it takes a balanced and sensible approach. It is balanced because tax increases will be phased in gradually up to 1990-91.

The Budget is sensible because as we all know, increasing taxes too quickly would have undesirable effects on our economic growth. It is sensible, Mr. Speaker, because it leads the way to further reduction of our deficit. It is sensible, Mr. Speaker, because it takes into consideration the position of Canada's economy vis-à-vis that of the United States. On a per capita basis, our national debt is twice that of the United States. However, our tax field here in Canada does not afford the same possibilities for taxation as in the United States, because much of the territory is already covered.

Mr. Speaker, this Budget is courageous because it increases indirect and direct taxes, a measure that is not particularly popular with the general public. We must act immediately, however, because the Budget reduces Government spending and in so doing, has a direct impact on groups with specific interests and privileges.

We are also well aware, Mr. Speaker, that such "house cleaning" measures may alienate certain interest groups. The present Government, however, will continue to act in the best interests of all Canadians.

This Budget reflects an honest attitude on the part of the Government, Mr. Speaker, because it candidly discusses the not very encouraging state of our finances. Today, we have an annual deficit of $35 billion. We have a national debt of over $190 billion. Twenty-five per cent of all Government spending now goes to service debt charges. In five years, if no action is taken immediately, this will rise to nearly 46 per cent.

I also want to say that this Budget reflects a new vision of Canada, a faithful reflection of the Throne Speech and the financial statement, tabled last November. Mr. Speaker, this Budget gives form to the new vision of Canada that all Canadians supported by electing a Progressive Conservative Government. A new vision of Canada, where politicians and public servants will have a more modest role to play. No more almighty government, no more omnipresent government! A new vision of Canada where individuals and the private sector will play an increasingly important role. The birth of a State that creates freedom and the spirit of entrepreneurship. A new vision of a Canada where the State will act as a mediator, and the ultimate goal will be our common prosperity.

The Speech from the Throne, last November's financial statement and the present Budget have proposed a new direction for Canada: a balanced vision of a strong and united Canada where the provinces are given their due.

I would like to discuss some of the principles contained in this Budget. I also intend to provide evidence to support these principles.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, this Budget constitutes a turning point in Canada's social and economic evolution. It uses the living strength of the market and banks on the entrepreneurship of Canadian men and women by placing at their disposal new financing tools and sources.

Let us look at these new financing tools and sources. There is the $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption for an individual taxpayer. This proposal promotes risk-taking and investment in small and medium-size businesses in order to create permanent jobs.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I would like to set the record straight on two points, one of which concerns an allegation made by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). He said in this House last week that such a proposal would give rise to land speculation. This allegation surprises me all the more as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides was once Minister of Finance in Quebec. Mr. Speaker, under the Income Tax Act and Canadian law, and this is very clearly explained in the interpretation bulletins of the Department of Revenue, any gain derived from any land, speculation, any gain derived from the sale of real estate involving speculation, is not taxed as a capital gain, but as income, fully taxable income. This means, Mr. Speaker, that this $500,000 capital gains tax exemption does not apply to such gains. It is quite untrue to suggest the contrary. I also heard certain Members and other people say that this proposal might promote speculation or the purchase of real estate in the United States or in other countries. Once again, Mr. Speaker, under Canadian tax laws and international tax treaties, which avoid double taxation in principle, if someone invests in the United States or elsewhere, the resulting capital gains will be taxed in that country. Here, in Canada, we are taxed on our total income, domestic and otherwise. What we do is to take these gains, to tax them in Canada and to apply the foreign tax credit against the taxes payable in Canada. Mr. Speaker, this proposal to abolish the capital gains tax not only will fail to promote investments in real estate in other countries, but will have the opposite effect and allow investments to remain in Canada, for the simple reason that there will be no capital gains tax payable in this country, while a capital gains tax will be payable in other countries but no tax credit applicable in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the cost of this measure will be $550 million in 1985 and $700 million in 1986. The principle is as follows: instead of collecting this potential revenue, we are relying on the private sector to put it to good use. We feel the economic impact will be greater this way than if the Government had spent the same amount of money. Mr. Speaker, this has been amply demonstrated by the results of the previous Liberal Government's way of doing things.

I realize I do not have much time left, but we have a number of measures I could mention to support the first principle I mentioned earlier. There is the new tax credit encouraging individuals to invest in labour-sponsored venture capital funds, a measure that will help create new jobs and help maintain existing ones, a measure, Mr. Speaker, that demonstrates the cordial relationship between the new Federal Government and the provinces.

There is also an extremely innovative measure aimed at tapping a new source of financing, in a fact, a very important new source of financing, for small and medium-sized businesses that are Canadian-controlled and located here in Canada. This measure makes available, as a source of financing, funds in registered retirement savings plans, registered retirement income funds, deferred profiteering plans and pension plans. A very innovative measure, Mr. Speaker, that will help create permanent jobs.

There is also the measure concerning housing loans aimed at facilitating mobility, which will help both the employee and the companies involved.

I could go on to mention the new tax measures for the oil industry in connection with the National Energy Program. A while ago, I heard the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) claiming that the Progressive Conservative Government was subsidizing the oil industry. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the subsidies that were paid to the oil multinationals were in fact paid by the previous Liberal Government. We are eliminating those subsidies. As a result, in 1985-86 we will be saving $800 million. In 1986-87 we will be saving another $800 million. I felt I had to set the record straight, Mr. Speaker, despite the fact the Hon. Member is not in the House at this time.

Once again, I would like to mention that the National Energy Program was designed to subsidize the price of oil.

Mr. Speaker, new taxes were levied and new grants awarded under the National Energy Program. Oil prices were subsidized to prevent them from going up. At the same time, a litre of gas was selling for half the price in the United States, and without any grants either.

Since I have only about five minutes left, I will deal more quickly with my second point. This Budget faithfully reflects Canada's changing approach to social services. Those measures include assistance to poorer families through the child tax credit of $70 in 1986 and $35 in 1987 and subsequent years. Help will be extended to the voluntary sector, among other things by making it easier to donate to charitable organizations. More handicapped will receive assistance since the basic definition is now less restrictive so that 185,000 rather than 65,000 people will be entitled to claim the $2,590 exemption for 1986. Through tax incentives, Canadian men and women will be encouraged to save more for their retirement years, and well-to-do individuals, major corporations and financial institutions will pay more taxes.

My third point, Mr. Speaker, is that the Budget shows our growing concern for the situation of women and provides a retirement income plan which is more equitable for women. Here are some of the highlights: the survivor's pension will continue to be paid in case of remarriage; pension plans will have to pay benefits to the wife of a deceased pensioner; the value of pension rights and existing pensions will be split between spouses upon divorce, separation or a break in common law relationships, subject to a court decision; an additional $900 million earmarked for job creation by the Department of Employment and Immigration in 1985, and again the same amount in 1986-87, Mr. Speaker.

The fourth point is that the Budget makes for greater tax equality by asking rich people to pay their fair share. The tax credit for scientific reearch—a tax loophole as big as they come, Mr. Speaker—has been eliminated. Some $100 million will be recouped in 1986 by doing away with tax shelters where a tax credit was given to the investor or the individual who bought certain things. This relates, for example, to companies offering leisure services, pleasure boats, recreational vehicles, hotel accommodation and the like.

Amendments which will prevent taxpayers from avoiding tax by splitting income between spouses.

A minimum income tax.

Next to last point, Mr. Speaker. This budget proposes measures to streamline the tax system, rationalize the many government programs, encourage financial responsibility and reduce the enormous size of the bureaucracy.

I wish I could mention measures to support this statement, but I am running out of time.

Sixth point, Mr. Speaker. This budget takes into account the inequalities between the regions, especially the more disadvantaged ones.

Again, I could provide concrete proof of this.

As a seventh and final point, Mr. Speaker. In this budget, we practice what we preach by asking senators and former members of Parliament for additional sacrifices, in the direction shown by the Speech from the Throne and last November's economic statement. In this regard, I should like to remind the House that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has asked Canadian men and women for sacrifices. He was the first to lead the way by initiating a 15 per cent put in his own ministerial salary.

Finally, by way of conclusion, the Progressive Conservative government has asked all Canadians, especially those with higher incomes, to make sacrifices themselves, in order to put Canada back on the right track financially and to ensure for our country a sound economic future.

Following a dramatic turn all the while striking a happy medium, the Progressive Conservative government is striving for economic renewal as a source of real and permanent jobs and increased and enhanced basic social programs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has the floor.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleague for his speech, and also ask him a question.

In his speech the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) referred to the experience in other countries, like Great Britain, the United States. However, it seems he failed to tell us what is happening in France. Therefore could the Hon. Member tell us whether the measures proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North were used in France and whether the success was tremendous, as he suggested we should do in Canada.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member knows we should not comment on the previous speaker's speech.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I had not finished asking my question. Could the Hon. Member comment on the present situation in France?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) can answer that question briefly.

[Translation]

Mr. Toupin: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to stray from what I said in my speech. And, clearly, in view of the situation in France, I would not want either to perhaps create problems internationally. Simply said, the situation in France is very well known. The thrust of the Hon. Member's comments indeed agrees with the general opinion shared by most people who are really aware of the situation.

I would like to mention, without further discussing the subject, that previously, that person indeed discussed this situation in Britain or elsewhere, or in Germany. But I would also have wanted her to deal with the situation in the United States. This is all I want to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for recognizing me in the waning hours of the Budget debate. I recognize that in this, the last lap, spirits are flagging a little and, from what I heard in the last speech, some of the acumen is obviously growing weaker as time progresses.

It is a privilege for me, as it is for every Member of Parliament, to speak in a debate which is certainly one of the high festivals of parliamentary democracy. It is a very important event in the parliamentary calendar. Not only are we debating specific measures of economic initiative, we also have the opportunity to ferret through the various contradictions and high-falutin but broken promises made over the years in order to get to the gist of what the Tories are trying to achieve in their Budget.

A Budget is probably more than the sum of its parts. It is not just a series of strung-out measures. If you bring them all together, it reveals an approach or the blue-print of what a particular Government is trying to achieve for the country. Therefore, we must read into the Budget what it tells us about the modern day conservatism, the new "Mulroney revolution", the new social aura that has been heralded far and wide as being the hallmark of the new Government.

● (1700)

Unfortunately, there has been one basic mistake. We have been trying to analyse the Budget by finding some unifying or organizing principle in economic textbooks. We have tried to decide whether it is a form of Reaganomics, Keynesian, supply side, or a Thatcherism. This Budget does not fit any of those current definitions. It is impossible to go into economic textbooks and find a proper definition of this Budget. One must really go into the works of fiction. One must look at how our novelists see things in order to properly describe what the Government is trying to achieve.

This weekend I had the opportunity to reread some novels which I thought might give me a better sense of perspective. As I first reached into my bookshelf, I saw a novel which cut through all the confusion, obfuscation, and public relations to get to the heart of the matter. It was a wonderful novel written in the 1920s by Sinclair Lewis called Babbitt. All of a sudden it struck me that the Budget is all about Babbittry. This Budget was not conceived in terms of the broad range and perspective of all Canadians. It was conceived by the Babbitt minds of our country in the private schools, private clubs and private boardrooms. It was not done in a malicious or malevolent way, but in a narrow-minded way that does not see the full range of concerns anxieties, hopes, and fears of Canadians. It was conceived in the hothouse atmosphere of a very restricted business community which wants to be the economic elite to lead the salvation.

It was no accident that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in one of his all too frequent mistaken statements, once again told us the truth. He did not think we had enough rich people in Canada to supply the tax revenue. That clearly described the whole problem. The Government really believes, as Babbitt did in the 1920s, in a form of social Darwinism. It believes in some kind of natural order of economic elite that will make decisions for the rest of Canadians.

When the Government talks about inspiring and stimulating Canadians to produce better, it is talking about a very narrow range of Canadians. It is not showing any understanding, comprehension, sensitivity, or feeling for the family of a miner in northern Manitoba who waits week after week for a decision to be made in a Toronto boardroom as to whether the mine will stay open or not, knowing that the Government in Ottawa does not give a damn whether it is open or closed because it is not providing any support or encouragement.

That famous line in the Budget said that the Government will reward success, not subsidize effort. I do not believe there has been a crueller or meaner statement issued by a Minister of Finance in the history of this Parliament. That goes right back to the philosophy of the 1920s that there is an economic jungle out there and only the fittest will survive. The Government is going to reward the survivors, but the rest of them can take their lumps as they may.

This Government does not care much about those people who have to strive in other ways. It does not care much about a young family that wants to buy a home. With one stroke of the pen in the Budget, the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan was wiped out. That was the one avenue through which young families could hope to put money aside as an incentive to eventually get their own homes.

There is probably no more deep-rooted feeling of concern and interest of young Canadians than to acquire a stake in their own community. What does that matter to the Minister of Finance or the Government? Those young people do not play squash at the Albany Club, so why bother with them? Well, they represent a large majority of young Canadians who are trying to achieve something with important economic benefits. That young family who would have some day bought that home would have provided the market for the lumber, craftsmen, and tradesmen which would generate the economy.

What does the Government care about the young farmer in western Canada or southwestern Ontario who has been striving to keep his head above water against drought, falling commodity prices, and hard to achieve capital? Those farmers looked hopefully toward the recommendations of the Commons committee and listened to the promises made by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the election campaign. He said he was out to help the farmers, and in this Budget they got higher fuel taxes and higher user fees. The only assistance they will get is if they sell their farms to a big corporate business. There is no assistance for the farmer who wants to stay in business to keep growing his commodities and developing his property. That is not the interest or concern of this Government.

The single parent mothers in downtown Winnipeg have always felt that the federal Government had a basic willingness and generosity to assist them in raising their children. The Minister of Finance tells us how he has increased the child tax credit. However, he does not explain that the figures of his own budget paper indicate that by 1990 some $550 million will disappear from the family trust in the federal Budget. It will no longer be there to help children or to keep families together. It will just disappear. If you combine the deindexation of the family allowance and the child tax credit and the reduction of the exemption, the net loss to lower income families in the country is substantially more than if things had remained the way they were. Do not believe the Minister of Finance when he tries to throw up a dishonest smoke, screen which is fooling a lot of Canadians. It is once again the young Canadian families who will suffer from the measures of this Budget.

What about the young people who are looking forward to achieving new skills and abilities to meet the world of change in which they live? What more important investment can any Government make than an investment in people? The last speaker proudly beat his chest and said that the Government is going to spend $900 million next year on training. However, in the previous Liberal Government, $1.4 billion was spent on job training and creation. How can the Government justify a net reduction in this year of $75 million? That affects the women who are trying to get back in the workforce. They are not being accepted in our community colleges because there is no allowance for them, and still the Government cuts $75 million from that budget. The Government cut the direct assistance to provincial Governments to build new classrooms and provide new laboratories and technical equipment to allow workers to be retrained for the new world in which we want to live.

The Government does not want a new world. It wants to return to the age of Babbittry, back to the 1920s. It does not want to help people to deal with the new world of change. It only wants to ensure that its friends in the investment clubs are happy and that the security funds are satisfied. The Government says it is making these changes to raise the money to reduce the deficit.

However, it will not reduce the deficit. The money which is being denied to senior citizens, young families and housing will be used to pay the $2 billion price tag for the Western Accord and the capital gains investment of $700 million. It has nothing to do with deficit reduction. I suggest that Tory backbenchers conduct their own study because they will see that the budget papers say that the deficit reduction of two billion dollars will come from "better management practices". Those practices involve a classic example of paper shuffling. The Government will not have Supplementary Estimates and will not provide any inflationary increases. The Government will not realize a saving of $2 billion from that procedure.

The Government is not really interested in economic growth. Growth is not simply generated by giving a tax relief to the investment community. Businesses grow when there is a market and people can buy goods and services. The removal of $37 billion from consumers between now and 1990 will result in fewer homes, cars, furniture and other products being bought from the small business community. If the business community cannot sell its products, it will not invest new capital, expand factories and develop new products for which there is no market. One must wonder about the strange, neurotic, ideological thinking taking place in the minds of the Cabinet when it reduces consumer demand by $37 million while saying that it wants the economy to grow. One need not be a genius in economics—which the Government obviously is not—to know that there must be a demand factor in the economy.

What sort of factors are there in the Budget? There is the capital gains exemption which has some marginal benefit. However, the Minister has provided a carte blanche capital gains exemption with no rules or conditions. The Minister of Finance does not believe in rules or conditions in his wonderful free enterprise society. Once given these capital gains, will people invest in blue chip stock or in venture capital in a small business? Will they invest in speculation for a quick turnover or for a long term development in small business?

I suggest that the majority of that capital will not go to aid small Canadian businesses, but there will be an increasing inflation in this country because of the speculative fever that will be released by that measure. There will be large investments on the stock market, but the stock market does not create a lot of wealth in the country. Wealth is created by people going to work and by factories expanding. It is not created by a paper economy in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver. While investors have fun creating their mergers and acquisitions, it does not create the wealth. Wealth is created by ensuring that there is a market and that the capital serves that market.

The Budget is not designed for all Canadians but a select and privileged group of Canadians. All budgets should attempt to release those energies of growth that provide a sense of aspiration by Canadians. This Budget does not do so.

The Budget has another great flaw. We hear Conservative members say in the committee and in the House that private enterprise will create the growth in this country. While private enterprise creates growth, it does not do so by itself. The history of this country has been a clear partnership between Government and private enterprise in a mixed economy. The Government has always supplied important investments in transportation, in infrastructure and research and development. It has provided the basic sinews of economic strength that allows the private market to proceed and build.

Private companies do not build the roads, bridges, ports or schools. They cannot supply the type of collective co-operation that only Government can provide. However, the Government is so paranoid about itself that it refuses to recognize that the Government has a constructive and positive role to play in the economy. The Government should be used rather than feared. It can be used to stimulate because it is an investor in the economy.

From the time of the CPR, the St. Lawrence Seaway and the Trans-Canada Highway, the Government has been a major investor. When the Government calculates the deficit figure, it should recognize that part of that deficit goes into long term investments that will create wealth in this country. Government basically supplies what no one else can.

The Government does not recognize the importance of government as an investor in capital goods. The Federation of Mayors and Municipalities released a very important report at their meeting taking place this week in Calgary. The cities of this country will require $12 billion of new capital in order to simply maintain the present sewer and road systems. If those deteriorate, the productivity of this country goes down. The ability of trucks to move goods across rutted roads costs more. Each time there is a pothole, a weak bridge or a sewer that gives out, we are losing in the economy. At a time when we have to be at our competitive best and meet incredible international challenges, we are surrendering one of our advantages, which is a highly modern efficient infrastructure.

When I was the Minister of Transport, we made some major decisions to invest capital in projects such as the Western rail system. That is paying off because it will ensure that foreign buyers will have a sure market for our grain commodities. We had the nerve to take that decision. Although it cost money, if we had not made that decision, the ability of the country to maintain a competitive edge in world grain markets would have been sadly reduced.

However, the Government has nothing in its Budget for that kind of capital investment. It has reduced the Budget for the Industrial Regional Development Program by 50 per cent during 1984-85. It has given up on regional development with the assumption that the private market will respond. Will that happen with the private market in Cape Breton? Will it happen with the private market in northern Manitoba? Those are markets which require the full partnership and co-operation between levels of Government and the private sector.

This is not a growth Budget, one that is designed to stimulate growth or even reduce the deficit. Its purpose is to serve the interests of those who already have a certain advantage in this society. Its greatest weakness and its greatest tragedy is that it does not unleash the energies of all Canadians. It does not meet the concerns of workers who must meet new technological change and will need the Government to help them.

The Government has cancelled the Industrial Renewal Board. I must tell those brave Members from Quebec who stand up in support of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board that it is no longer in the Budget. It has been put out of business. Those Members will have to rewrite their speeches when they go back to their textile towns. There is no mechanism to help those industries modernize.

This Budget does not encompass the aspirations and hopes of all Canadians, but serves the interests of those who already have advantages. Canadians do not want to have their economic future determined by a corporate elite. They have no interest in letting a small, privileged group of Canadians make their decisions. The Budget has provided the subject for the great debate in this country between those who believe that Canada will prosper by making sure everyone is treated equally and fairly and those in the Government who believe that the economic future in this country can be determined just by their friends.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was a member of the Government that introduced the National Energy Program and a budget in 1980 that devastated the western economy. Today he tells us that he is amazed that we signed the Western Accord. I cannot understand why he thinks restoring the economy in western Canada is bad. The economy in Calgary, Alberta and western Canada generally was not bad when the Government introduced the NEP. However, a year after its implementation, the economy went downhill. Now he criticizes the new Accord which brings hope to western Canada.

● (1720)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could help the Hon. Member to reinterpret history somewhat differently. I know it is part of the Tory mythology that the National Energy Program was the sole cause for our problems. That is part of the propaganda. It is like what the Soviets said when they took over in the 1920s. They rewrote all the history books to make sure it was their interpretation. The National Energy Program was brought in at a time when oil prices around the world were soaring. It was brought in at a time when there was a great fear because of the actions of many multinationals that this country would not be self-sufficient. It came in at a time when the opportunity for small Canadian oil and gas producers was very limited. The National Energy Program responded to each of those concerns. First, to Canadianize the industry—

Mr. McDermid: Nationalize.

Mr. Axworthy: —so we would not be totally at the mercy of large multinationals. We said Canadianize it.

Mr. McDermid: Nationalize.

Mr. Axworthy: We said Canadianize it because the National Energy Program provided through the incentive program the opportunity for a number of Canadian firms to get into the gas and oil business.

Mr. McDermid: You chased them all out of the country.

Mr. Axworthy: No. The Tories seem to forget that the oil rigs down in Oklahoma, West Texas and that the oil industry around the world was going through a recession at that time because of the change in prices and the change in supply.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that if the Tories were going to sign the Western Accord, and they had a right to do it, did they have to pay for it by taking money away from senior citizens, taking money away from families and by increasing taxes by $400 or $500 a year on middle class Canadians? If the Tories wanted to sign the Western Accord, they should have had the guts and the fortitude to bring in a proper tax rather than trying to hide under a bunch of hidden taxes like sales tax and deindexation. That is what the Government is doing. If the Tories want the Western Accord, that is their business, but they should not try to pay for it by hitting the people who can least afford it. That is exactly what the Tories are up to in this Budget.

Mrs. Mailly: That is not true.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I tend to disagree with the Hon. Member. What we got rid of was the PGRT which taxed the oil industry on gross revenue. It selected that industry specifically. There is no other industry in Canada taxed on gross revenue. That was an unjust tax.

Mr. Deans: It was not unjust.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member called it an unjust tax. That is how we tax people. We tax people on their revenues. We also say that corporations should somehow be treated differently. The PGRT was used to gain revenue because why should windfall profits gained by exceedingly large oil prices be given to multinational corporations?

Resources that are in the ground did not get there because Esso created them. Esso might have found oil, but Esso did not create it in the ground. The money that came from that kind of tax revenue was to pay for the total rehabilitation and development of the western railway system so the farmers of western Canada could move their grain in an effective and efficient way. The money was used to reinvest in the country to pay for things which this country needed rather than simply being transferred out of the country into the coffers of oil companies outside.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers).

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member whether he is not ashamed now of throwing at us all kinds of insults, like paranoiacs, and others, when he was one of the people in high places responsible for everything that is now happening in Canada. He is one of those responsible for that gigantic $224 billion bankruptcy. I would like to ask, since he made reference to a novel a while ago, whether he has read the Auditor General's novel describing the biggest Liberal scandal of all times, the wastage of billions. I am at a loss to find names to call these people today, but I would like to quote one of our great authors, Corneille, who said: "Even in a drawing-room, one must not hesitate to call a pig by its name".

Mr. Rossi: Look who is talking about scandals.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will say to the Hon. Members that I am quite proud of the Trudeau government record—

Mr. Desrosiers: Shame!

Mr. Axworthy: —because we had the answer for the poor in this country. We were also taking regional responsibilities and the tax rates set by the former government—

Mrs. Mailly: On heating fuel!

Mr. Axworthy: —and unemployment, yes—

Mrs. Mailly: On heating fuel!

Mr. Axworthy: —and unemployment. When I was Minister of Employment and Immigration, we had some 300,000 jobs. It was a better record than that of this government in the current year.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, it is always fun to come into the House and listen to the Liberals' public apologist. He did it again today.

When we talk about the PGRT, the Member said that the money derived from that tax went for real services in the west. We have also heard from the Liberals that it went to pay for the PIP grants for exploration. We have also heard that it has gone to pay for pensions, health care and post secondary education. All the speeches from the Liberals and the New Democrats have said that is where the money went. Now that the PGRT is off and there are more areas where that money is going, if the Hon. Member were honest in his presentation, he would see that the cancellation of the PGRT comes very close to the phasing out of the PIP grants as the PGRT is phased out, including the cuts in expenditures in the Department of Energy which, next year, will be some $333 million less than this year. To equate the cancellation of that tax being placed on the backs of pensioners and those on welfare or unemployment insurance is grossly unfair. I wish the Hon. Member would get his facts and figures correct when he is making that type of presentation.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am always pleased to take the advice of my hon. friend when he is right. Unfortunately this time he is not. He was right in the first half of what he said. It is true that the revenue we got from the PGRT did go to help build the railway system, for the PIP grants and for other investment over a period a time.

Mr. McDermid: It does not add up.

Mr. Axworthy: I commend the Hon. Member for being accurate and fully understanding the value of that important source of revenue, but when you look through the budget papers to determine how the Government is paying for the elimination of those revenues, we see the answer. People, ordinary Canadians, are now having to pay for it. Ordinary Canadians will have to pay for that giveaway to the multinationals, for which we will gain very little benefit that we would not have had anyway, because the real determination of health in the oil industry is dependent upon the kind of price in effect. I agree with the Hon. Member when the Tories talk about deregulation which was a move started last spring—

Mr. McDermid: Sure.

Mr. Axworthy: It was. I know the Tories do not read history much. I know they only read the novel Babbitt because we have already discovered that in the speech, but I will not repeat myself, Mr. Speaker. I think enough has been said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): One short question and one short answer please.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a short comment. It has to do with honesty and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) even believing what he said.

I come from western Canada. I was a small businessman. One of the reasons I am here today is that the MacEachen Budget of 1981 got me so frustrated as a small businessman, and I expect dozens and dozens of other people here felt the same way, that I eventually ran for Parliament. Here we are today with a mandate of 211 seats. It seems to me the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry should ask himself what happened to the great Liberal Government when it brought down its Budget. He should be standing here apologizing to Canadians, not chastising this Government for the Budget brought down last week.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) does not want to make a very short reply, and since the period for questions and comments has now terminated, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) on debate.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, in recognizing your outstanding job on a continuing basis in the chair, I am sure you will ignore the clock at 5.45 in acknowledgement of the fact that you have given opposition Parties much more time to speak than they were allotted. However, I pay sincere tribute to a dear friend, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), who has done an outstanding job in the chair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: It is a privilege and honour to serve in this Chamber with you, Sir.

I regret that I cannot say the same about the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). However, there is one area upon which we agree, that is, the belief that a small, select group of people should not govern the nation. This is exactly why his Party was thrown out of office, because a small, select group of people governed the nation. We are taking the reverse approach. We want to consult with Canadians. We want to allow Canadians a greater opportunity to participate in their own affairs.

He asked what we were doing for young people, among other things. Since we became the Government, interest rates have dropped close to three percentage points. That will have a substantial impact on all mortgage holders. In relation to the farming sector—and I will say a great deal more about that sector if I am allowed the time—the Hon. Member indicated that fuel costs have risen, whereas in reality under this Government they have gone down. It is just another area in which opposition Parties are attempting to mislead Canadians with their deceit and dishonesty.

I do not want to dwell on those matters because I believe that we as a Party are participating in "new time" politics. Canadians want to know for what we stand. We have indicated it on a consistent basis, unlike the opposition Parties which have nothing but criticism for our sound economic proposals. We have come forward with a clear-cut Budget. I am honoured to stand in my place today to endorse the proposals of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) which he started on February 8 and which he brought down in his Budget on May 23.

For the first time we are at a crossroads in the history of our great nation. For the first time we have a sound economic Budget which will restore economic activity in this great country. On September 4, Canadians voted for change. They voted for a change in the national affairs of our nation. As I indicated on November 8, the Minister of Finance began the process of change. On May 23, we saw more of that. Our economic documents are tough but fair.

We recognize that no one wants to pay additional taxes, but 80 per cent of the budgetary deficit reductions are reductions in government expenditures. We are asking all Canadians to participate to a small degree in restoring an economic climate which is suitable and will encourage growth in many sectors—small business, energy and agriculture.

I say in all sincerity—and I look at the three opposition Members who are in the House on this important debate—that all of us are in the Chamber because of our deep love for the nation and our deep concern that in some respects we can contribute to making the country a better place for all. Our Budget represented a turning point, whereby in reality Canadians again enjoy the opportunity and freedom to invest money in areas as they see fit.

We are asking the average Canadian family to contribute $1 per day to budgetary deficit reduction and the restoration of our economic activity. I would think that the majority of Canadian families would be happy to contribute, on average, $1 per day so that we can turn around the sad inheritance which we were left by the Liberal Party.

Our Budget tackles three areas—deficit reduction, job creation and more freedom for Canadians to participate in their own investment choices. We have just come through a period of difficulty. Canadians have suffered anxiety, fear and anger at, as my hon. colleague from Calgary just mentioned, the suggestion that this Government attempted to stifle the engine of growth, not only in the energy sector but also in the agricultural sector. In my travels throughout my constituency I sense that a mood of optimism and a mood of faith have been restored because of the actions we have taken. We are encouraging that very important engine of growth by reducing the budgetary deficit by some $4.4 billion. The projections indicate that it will be reduced by another $8.3 billion next year, and individual constituents have indicated that that is not enough. We approached it on the basis that we did not want Canadians to suffer any more than was necessary and that we would not hurt them. We have lived up to our commitments.

Our major commitment during the election campaign was budgetary deficit reduction. We indicated that we would create jobs. I recall my friends opposite, on November 8 when the Minister of Finance brought down his economic statement, indicating how many jobs would be lost in Canada. In reality, 100,000 jobs were created because of the incentives we offered to Canadians. We are asking for an act of faith by the business community, to live up to its commitments to the free enterprise system. It is when Government, business, labour and management are working together for the betterment of our country that we will truly succeed.

If budgetary deficits created jobs, as my friends opposite indicate, we would not have any unemployment today. If we look at the record of previous administrations and their budgetary deficit spending, we see that it is unreal. I would feel truly ashamed, if we as the Government did not tackle this area while I was here as a Member of Parliament, to think of the sad legacy we would leave our children.

Our Leader has approached Canadians on the basis of compassion and fairness. We will ensure that those in the lower income levels are cared for. We have made sure that the safety nets remained in place. Individuals opposite have indicated that we cut back on pensions. That is another area in which they are misleading Canadians. The Guaranteed Income Supplement will continue to rise with the full rate of inflation for those individuals who require that safety net. They are spreading all types of falsehoods, simply for their own shallow, political ends.

I recall as a youngster sitting on my father's knee when he indicated why he immigrated to this country. He emigrated from Holland, a country which was liberated by Canadians some 40 years ago, because Canada was a country of hope and of opportunity, a country wherein if one worked, one prospered. However, that opportunity has been stifled by consistent socialist Governments over the last number of years. Canadians are looking to us and expecting us—and we shall deliver—to restore economic stability. I could go through a long list of what is included in the Budget and the number of positive measures which it contains.

I would like to indicate something with respect to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of this nation. Our Prime Minister has a sense of purpose. He is a healer. He has brought together the various regions of our country. He has indicated on a consistent basis that if the candle burns a little brighter in one region, then it burns that much brighter in all our country. He has shown a deep sensitivity to the regions of the country. He has shown a deep sensitivity to the minorities of the country, whether they be religious, linguistic or ethnic. I salute him, as many Canadians do, for his deep, compassionate attitude which he has shown to all parts of our great nation.

I wish to touch upon some of the specific initiatives which are beneficial to the agricultural sector. We have reduced the excise tax on primary fuel. There have been substantial payouts under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) reduced interest rates under the Farm Credit Act. There is a Bill presently before committee which will truly help the red meat industry in Canada. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has introduced measures with respect to seaway tolls. A substantial item in the Budget deals with the relief of capital gains. My friends opposite cannot say that in every rural community of the country the citizens did not push for the removal of these capital gains.

If one were to review our record of action, one would see investment now in place which will produce jobs for Canadians. We have successful energy agreements in both western and Atlantic Canada. We have made progress in terms of our environment. We have extended the spouse's allowance to some 85,000 individuals in low income brackets. Severance benefits have been extended. There have been amendments made to the Criminal Code. Over all, in excess of 200,000 jobs have been created.

I wish to close by dealing with two points, Mr. Speaker. The first point is with respect to the appointment process which we have in place and which we as a national Government are exercising. We face criticism from Members of the Opposition with respect to the individuals we appoint. However, to implement the change we have been elected to implement, it is important that we put in place individuals who have the same philosophy as we on this side of the House. There has never been a Prime Minister in the history of this nation who has been so non-partisan in his appointments.

I would like to share with the Members of the House some facts. These are facts with respect to the appointment process. The prime prerequisite to date of every individual who has been appointed is competence. In looking at the list of appointments, there are a number of Liberals and New Democrats of promiment stature who have been appointed to various positions. I am speaking of Senator Pierre De Bané, David Smith and the Hon. Don Johnston, who received Queen's Counsel appointments from our Government. Ms. Sylvia Gold, a well-renowned New Democratic Party supporter, was appointed as chairperson to the Advisory Committee on the Status of Women. The Hon. Bud Drury was appointed to the Official Residences' Commission. Mr. Gerry Kaplan, another prominent NDP supporter, was appointed as co-chairman of the task force on broadcasting. The Hon. Lloyd Francis, another Liberal, was appointed as Ambassador to Portugal. Stephen Lewis, another strong New Democratic Party supporter, was appointed Ambassador to the United Nations.

These are all excellent individuals. We are not so narrow-minded as our friends opposite. We seek talent wherever it lies. We have sought talent. The prerequisite with respect to every one of our appointments has been competence. We cannot help if there are more competent Conservatives in the country than there are New Democrats or Liberals.

We can assure you, Mr. Speaker, as we can assure Canadians, that the prime prerequisite for all of these appointments is competence. We will continue, on a competent basis, to appoint individuals to positions of responsibility so that we as a national Party can carry out the mandate which we were elected to carry out on September 4.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 64(8) and put forthwith the question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House. The question is the following one. Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre), seconded by Mr. Mulroney, moves:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)), which was agreed to on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, May 2, consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions No. 23 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 4358) and No. 24 (Mr. Axworthy) (p. 4358) and No. 25 (Mr. Axworthy) (p. 4358).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, sometimes one does feel lonely.

[Translation]

Being in the Opposition can be a lonely business. Perhaps some of my colleagues would like to join me—

If I am not mistaken, Mr. Speaker, today we are considering the report stage of Bill C-15, and more specifically, a number of amendments that require some serious consideration. The Government, of course, is getting impatient and has imposed closure, thereby restricting speaking time for Members. We shall therefore try to make the best possible use of the time at our disposal, and in fact we shall be trying to improve and make substantial amendments to the legislation before the House today. If I am not mistaken, the motion to be debated now is Motion No. 24, and there are a few comments I would like to make.

[English]

This important amendment deals with rental property acquisitions by foreign interests. We are concerned that the kind of blanket exemption currently proposed in the Bill makes it difficult to prevent the occurrence of fiascos such as the Seaway Trust and Greymac affair.

[Translation]

There are no rules to prohibit the kind of transaction we saw in Toronto, where a group of numbered companies, largely financed with foreign capital, spread panic among some 13,000 tenants. Mr. Speaker, I believe we all remember this financial disaster, and I have a few questions. What conditions does the Minister, who is of course again absent from the debate today... what proposals or amendments does the Minister intend to introduce to prevent a recurrence? What sanctions are provided when certain conditions are not observed? Will the Minister go on attracting the big multinationals?

[English]

These questions should be answered. They lead us to another important issue, rental housing. Indeed, what has the Government done about rental housing, particularly in a city like Ottawa where the vacancy rate is next to zero? What are the Government's plans in this regard? The Budget did not bring any good news. We saw the Budget of CMHC savaged by the Government. The cash flow of some $30 million was removed from CMHC. We saw no new co-op support and no increased financial support for the housing needs of Canadians.

I am quite concerned that the rental housing market is in particular danger of becoming—

[Translation]

—the prey, as they say in French, of investors whose interests do not really lie in helping Canadians get better housing but in making substantial profits, and it worries me that Bill C-15 does not deal at all with this problem, with a situation that can have disastrous consequences, as we all know.

[English]

Indeed, what are the Goverment's plans in this area? What happened to the promise by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the last election campaign when he said that co-op housing will continue to have a high priority in the Progressive Conservative policy for housing? I ask this in light of major cut-backs in co-op housing in Halifax, Vancouver and Toronto.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Gauthier: I hear the Hon. Government House Leader saying "order".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Relevance.

Mr. Gauthier: I am trying to improve the Bill which you have put on the Order Paper for today. In my view, it is in dire need of improving and if you listen, I am talking about rental properties and how they can be the object of foreign takeovers by foreign capital. Remember the Greymac scandal in Toronto. Hundreds of millions of dollars were artificially inflated in the housing rental market in Toronto, bringing about a catastrophic situation. I take it that the Minister understands what I am talking about now.

I do not know the answers to the questions I have put to the absent Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) regarding rental properties. I hope someone from the Government can give me the answers to those questions because they are important. They must be considered under the purview of this amendment in light of the already stretched housing capacity in our major cities and in light of the blanket exemption currently embodied in the Bill regarding rental property acquisitions. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary what the Government intends to do to prevent rental properties from being acquired by foreign owners who have no interest in the housing markets of today. I put the question in a very serious tone because I believe this begs a serious answer.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this starts the final day of clause by clause debate on the Investment Canada Bill. From our point of view, it should not be the final day of clause by clause consideration because there exists within this Bill a great many serious problems and flaws that deserve to be corrected before this Bill goes forward. We had hoped it would have been possible to have sufficient time to talk in detail about each of these particular attempts we have brought forward to improve the character of specific parts of the Bill.

Because we have just this last day been able to consider a whole host of different amendments, for our part we as a Party intend to put up a minimum number of speakers and to try to see to it that it is possible to have at least brief debate on each of the different groupings of amendments before the House for debate.

At the start of today's discussion, I want to point out to Members here in the House and to the public that what we are talking about with this Bill and what we are talking about with the crucial issues of foreign investment is the question of Canadianization of our economy.

We know from public opinion polling that has taken place across the nation that a vast majority, 85 per cent, of Canadians believe in increased Canadianization of our economy. That polling indicates a significant increase in the commitment to Canadianization. The polls in June 1983 indicated only 75 per cent of Canadians at that time felt a strong commitment to Canadianization whereas the most recent polls indicate 85 per cent. This legislation and the attempt we are trying to put forward to improve the Bill focuses on this question of Canadianization.

Are we as a country going to get a greater capacity to put the key parts of our economy into the control of Canadians through the Canadian private sector? Are we going to be able to use the public sector and its regulations to achieve greater Canadian control? Are we going to be able to claim a country for ourselves, for our people and our children in the future that will give the jobs and the economic security so important for all of us?

As this debate goes forward point by point today, I will not be discussing this grand theme of Canadianization, but I hope Members in the House and the people will realize the thrust of the amendments we are bringing forward is to attempt, despite a Bill which has some fatal flaws, some real problems that we cannot correct, to bring forward some positive suggestions for improving the Canadianization of our economy insofar as this Bill can be made to contribute to that goal.

The amendment before us at the moment, Motion No. 23, was moved by myself. Motion No. 23 deals with Part II of the Bill. Within the Bill there is quite a long section which exempts certain important categories of enterprise from review, despite the fact that the Bill provides for some review. As Hon. Members know, it provides for the review of acquisitions of companies which have over $5 million in assets, are Canadian controlled and are taken over by foreign companies. Within the attempt to maintain at least some kind of review process, certain exemptions are set out, some of which frankly make sense, but a number of which do not make sense.

For the benefit of Hon. Members, I point to the specific clause to which Motion No. 23 applies, subclause (c) on page 6 which indicates that the acquisition of control of a Canadian business is exempt from review in connection with the realization of security granted for a loan or other financial assistance.

Quite recently there was a case in Smiths Falls, Ontario, concerning a small company called R-J Stamping which employed a significant number of people. That company was forced into bankruptcy and as a result, its physical assets were sold off to a foreign purchaser. The jobs which existed within that community, and of course the potential for future jobs, disappeared as the physical assets were literally shipped out of the country. In that particular case, the local provincial Member, who happens to be a Conservative, raised serious questions about it with the Premier of Ontario, the Hon. Frank Miller. Mr. Miller took this case very seriously, if not others, perhaps because it was the middle of an election campaign. He probed the case of this particular company and indicated that it should not be possible for its physical assets simply to be sold out of the country without any review process. Mr. Miller, as Premier of Ontario, said: "Let's get the Foreign Investment Review Agency to look at this case".

Mr. Boudria: Frank Miller said that!

Mr. Langdon: He said that, believe it or not.

Mr. Boudria: Unbelievable.

Mr. Langdon: Unfortunately Mr. Miller did not realize that FIRA, as it had been put in place, had as one of its weaknesses the fact that it did not cover such cases as this, where a company went bankrupt and its assets were then sold off to foreigners.

Being a loyal citizen of Ontario, and seeing that the Premier of my province wanted action taken on this particular gap in our capacity to review foreign takeovers, I moved this motion. Unfortunately it was voted down, unbelievably, in committee by members of the Conservative Party, the very Party which Frank Miller represents. Once more I bring this case before the House of Commons in the hope that common sense will somehow prevail, in the hope that government Members sitting here today will recognize that this amendment is not meant to be frustrating to this Bill. It is not meant to be somehow destructive, but rather is an amendment which aims simply to fill a gap which exists in the legislation. It is a gap which we have discovered also existed in the previous legislation and, frankly, deserves to be corrected. I strongly urge government Members to support Motion No. 23 because it will have the effect of filling a gap which even the Premier of Ontario has recognized needs to be filled.

• (1120)

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to address Bill C-15 with respect to Investment Canada today. Recognizing that what is being proposed here is that increased capital and technology will benefit Canada and that the purpose of the Bill is to encourage investment in Canada by Canadians and non-Canadians, I rise to support such an activity, and I do so with pride.

If Bill C-15 achieves the two fundamental objectives of more economic growth and more employment opportunities, we will have to recognize the problems that existed with FIRA. I have taken the opportunity to ask my constituents how they feel about foreign investment in Canada and if they feel that it helps create jobs.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are presently dealing with Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25. I think the Hon. Member should address the subject matter of those particular amendments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is correct. I am sure the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) will act accordingly.

Mr. Holtmann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will get to that, as the Hon. Member will see if he has any patience. The Hon. Member who spoke previously referred to polls which indicate what he felt the people of the country wanted. The results of a recent poll just came out. I found it interesting to note that that poll indicated that only a bare minimum of New Democrat voters wanted foreign investment in Canada. That is all part of this Bill. Let me address that very phrase.

There is an NDP Government in Manitoba right now. Although Members of the NDP state philosophically that they are not in favour of any foreign investment in Canada and that businesses in Canada must be totally Canadian owned, the NDP Government in Manitoba will put its arms around foreign companies, give them a kiss, make love to them and then, when they make a profit, call them corporate welfare bums. That is the attitude of the NDP Government.

The Hon. Member proposes changes, but they are not changes that will benefit this Bill. In fact, the changes go to the very heart of what they feel, which is that foreign investment in any form is not the greatest and is not highly desirable. He is never happy with that. When we encourage investment being brought into the country, that stops us from importing goods. It stops us from importing goods which could be manufactured here in Canada. That will certainly help our entire situation. In effect, we would be using our natural resources right here. We would be using Canadian labour and gain from the resources and technologies brought in by foreign companies. Surely the Hon. Member cannot be opposed to that.

• (1125)

The Hon. Member mentioned that some 80 per cent of the population was in favour of Canadianization. If a product is manufactured here in Canada, then is that not Canadianization of that product? Is that not better than importing goods made completely in some other country? The Hon. Member suggests we wait until a Canadian can put a company in place which can perform the research and development with regard to the production of a product. He would allow a limited amount of foreign investment while Canadianizing the other part. I am sorry to say we probably would not have 90 per cent of the products we have here in Canada if we had to wait for them to be developed in this country. As a matter of fact, the country is comprised of people who come from many countries and who brought with them their ideas and technology.

If the Hon. Member wishes to point out the results of a recent poll in support of his point of view, then I suggest we must look to all areas of investment. We must consider foreign capital which comes into the country. We must take into consideration FIRA. Those in favour of FIRA claim a success rate in that regard. However, if you were to talk to international people from places such as New York and Tokyo, you would find they did not want to come here because they did not want to deal with FIRA. They did not want to deal with the types of laws which were in place.

There are no simple solutions. However, some of the amendments have to be addressed. I must ask whether or not they have been well thought out. Are those who propose the amendments aware of the ramifications? Is it just a matter of these people sitting back and dreaming? All too often Oppostion Members dream these amendments up because they hate the fact we have changed something which they put in place. Why do they not stand up and admit that? That would give some honesty to the system.

The Hon. Member recommends a change to a specific clause. That is not the total solution. The change has not been well thought out. We must take into consideration the manufacture of Canadian products with Canadian raw materials through the use of foreign research and development. That is the idea here.

In my riding alone, as a result of FIRA, three large investment groups were turned away because there was too much negativism involved in the whole system. There was just too much red tape to go through. Those three groups would have been in place in my riding had it not been for FIRA. There could be an additional 700 jobs in my riding now had Investment Canada been in place then as it has been proposed today.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would it be possible for the Hon. Member to use the last minute of his 10 to deal with the subject of debate?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Since the Hon. Member opposite raises the point, I would like to say the matter goes both ways. It is fine to have debate within the confines of the motion, but Hon. Members opposite will have to adhere to the same rules. If they want to play the game in that way, then I would point out that we have been here longer and we can do it better.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Government has brought in closure on the report stage of this Bill. The Government is imposing a restriction on the time we are allowed to debate the amendments before us. There are some 94 amendments. We are only at the point of dealing with 23, 24 and 25. I would like the Hon. Member to address those matters. The amendment being discussed deals with rental property and insurance. It would be best if the Hon. Member were to address these concepts with some relevancy in mind in consideration of our time and his.

• (1130)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The comments of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) are taken very well by the Chair. Members should be aware, especially at report stage, that comments must be strictly relevant to the motions which are before the House. The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) has the floor for one more minute.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, it is amazing how excited Opposition Members get. They have introduced all of these motions to change the Bill and make it better. It flabbergasts me, but I do understand. When they use tactics such as this, it is no wonder we have to invoke closure. They would go on forever bringing in all sorts of ridiculous motions to change the Bill back to FIRA.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holtmann: If there were substance to the motions, I would address them.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be drawn to the attention of the previous speaker that, in fact, it is not possible, once motions have been tabled for debate, to bring forward additional motions. The motions which are presently before the House are the only motions which can be debated. Other motions cannot be brought forward—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that that is not a point of order. Resuming debate. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, as you said, the remarks which were made by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) did not constitute a point of order, but he did make a very interesting point. Perhaps Tory Members who failed to speak on the main motion could remember that. Perhaps Tory Members should read the motions which the House is debating before making speeches. I am sure it would be most constructive if you brought that to their attention, Mr. Speaker.

I found it interesting that the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) challenged Parliament's right to amend Government legislation. That shows the respect for democracy which Tories have. They are challenging the fundamental right of Parliament to amend Government legislation. I see an Hon. Member opposite who is laughing. Some day in the future when factories close down in his riding because of this legislation and his voters knock on his door to ask him why he failed to amend and improve the legislation, they will know what he did.

We are discussing Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25. With respect to Motion No. 25, we are proposing an improvement in the Bill which is a form of preventive medicine. We want to ensure that insurance companies are included in the notification and possibly in the review process of foreign acquisitions. We know that increasingly the ownership questions related to large pools of capital are accumulated by major financial institutions. In that case, there appears to be a loophole for foreign insurance companies. I had hoped that the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake would have referred to that. Perhaps he is not concerned about that issue. He is only concerned about challenging Parliament's right to amend Government Bills.

It should be remembered that opposition Members have never stated they were against foreign investment. The Opposition wants what is best for Canadians. The Tories have no right to stop us from presenting motions which will improve the legislation. Ronnie and his nephew, Brian, had a little duet in Quebec City.

Mr. Blenkarn: What is the amendment?

Mr. Boudria: When the Government and its Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) failed to put a stop on countervail duties in the United States, where were Tory Members? Why were they not acting in the best interests of Canadians? Why did they not bring forward amendments such as Motion No. 25 in order to ensure that the Bill would be better for all Canadians?

I notice an Hon. Member opposite who was once a Liberal. He too lost his way. Perhaps, he could find the energy to speak on the Bill. Perhaps he could tell the Prime Minister not to make the statements which were reported in Fortune magazine when he spoke against Canadians and the workers of the country. In the article he said:

Who wants to buy it? What is there so compellingly attractive about Canada that causes us to think that anybody is going to rush in simply because somebody says, "I'd like to do business with you." We do not have a very good track record. Our products have not been of the highest quality. Our deliveries have been lacking in reliability. Our expertise has been in large measure borrowed. Our technology has been purchased. What the hell makes us so special?

Those are the comments of the Conservative Prime Minister. I wish some of his back-benchers would stand and speak in favour of the positive amendments which are being presented today in order to ensure that we will have a fair share of Canadianization, and that the Bill and the amendments which have been proposed will ensure that in the future we will not see large foreign takeovers. Obviously, that will happen if the Bill is passed without amendments. All Conservative members opposite and the book-ends and surfers on this side of the House should remember that and stop thinking that they are only here for a short time. They are making the best of it. They are not here for a long time, they are here for a short time, but a good time. Nevertheless, they should stand in the House and speak on behalf of their voters. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) should state clearly that he is against the countervail duties of the United States. He should take the opportunity to speak about Canadianization.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) is saying is entirely irrelevant.

Mr. St. Julien: It is not the first time, either.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we have been very patient, but I think he should be called to order, as you did earlier on the point of order of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). I think he should limit his remarks to the motion before the House at this time.

Mr. St. Julien: Right on, it is about time he learned how to behave.

Mr. Blais: This is not the appropriate time to discuss other matters that concern to the House and the standing committees, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member could come to the Standing Committee, but we never see him when these questions are on the agenda.

Mr. St. Julien: He never came!

Mr. Blais: He comes here and talks about agriculture, and when it is time to talk about it he doesn't show up.

Mr. St. Julien: That is true!

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does not totally agree with the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary that the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is not speaking on the motion. However, the last part of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) may not have been on the motion, so I would ask him to be more relevant.

● (1140)

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your usual excellent ruling and for bringing the Parliamentary Secretary into line. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, of course, that he badly needs it. He does get that way whenever he feels threatened. It's not his fault. If I were a Tory, I would be embarrassed right now as well. Thank God, that will never happen because happiness is never having to say you're Tory, and I will never have to say that, hopefully.

We were discussing Amendments Nos. 23, 24 and 25 to this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gormley: Why don't you discuss them?

Mr. Boudria: I've been discussing them all along, Mr. Speaker, and I challenge the Hon. Member to say, for instance, whether he is in favour of the very excellent real estate amendments under Motion No. 23 and whether he thinks, as we do, that Motion No. 25 would indeed act as preventative medicine in ensuring that insurance companies be included in the notification process? I would like the Hon. Member to stand in his place when I complete my remarks and tell us what his views are on this issue because myself and the other Hon. Members of the Opposition have been speaking to those amendments. Perhaps we should speak a little more slowly so that the Conservatives could understand. I will try to do that in future just to ensure that they keep up to our train of thought.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Motion No. 25 should be adopted by this House because it would vastly improve the proposed legislation. Actually, the only way to amend this Bill would be for the Government to abandon it forthwith. However, if the Government does not give up its proposed legislation in favour of what we had before, the second best option is for the Government to adopt the amendments proposed by the Opposition.

[English]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak to these amendments and I invite all Hon. Members of the Conservative Party to do so, particularly those representing urban ridings, such as the City of Toronto—and it is unfortunate that there are a number of Hon. Members from Toronto who are not here—and the Cities of Vancouver, Montreal, Halifax, Edmonton, Calgary and all of those areas where tenants rely on the protection of government to ensure that their particular stability is not threatened.

Some Hon. Members may not remember that I was in the Ontario Legislature at the time of the famous "flip" deal when more than 10,000 apartment units in the City of Toronto changed hands. Their rental value would have doubled, tripled and, in some cases, quadrupled, as a direct result of a transaction which would have been, under the current law, deemed to be illegal. Without these amendments, the Government is saying that any real estate sale to a foreign company will not be subject to review by Investment Canada. Those 20,000 tenants who live at the corner of Yonge and Eglinton in the City of Toronto, who received protection from the Government at the time of that flip-flop deal—and people like Howard Brown were involved with the tenants' organizations in their fight against those particular increases—will now have no protection. This Government has failed to protect tenants by omitting to include the amendments which have been proposed by both Opposition Parties.

I would like to ask those Hon. Members from the urban centres, and particularly those from the City of Toronto, to talk about how they are going to fight for tenants' rights. They have a chance with this amendment to put their money where their mouths are. Any Hon. Member who supports this government's move to remove this real estate protection from consideration has, in fact, abdicated his or her responsibility to the tenants in his or her riding. I ask all Hon. Members of the Government to take a look at the amendment to see what is involved because this particular amendment will ensure that foreign investment in Canadian real estate is subject to review by Investment Canada.

Not only has this Government said that all investment under $5 million will no longer be subject to review, but that any investment in Canadian real estate over $5 million, will not be subject to review. The particular amendment which we are proposing would in fact ensure that at the very least the rather flimsy review provisions of Investment Canada of transactions over $5 million would include the real estate market.

We are not talking simply about company transactions as has happened recently with the Nabisco deal. What we are talking about is the kind of direct cause and effect relationship which a purchase of Canadian real estate can have not only on the Canadian stock market and the Canadian investment community, but on Canadian tenants. I remind those Hon. Members from the City of Toronto who have failed to speak up on this very important issue of a real estate deal which turned sour. It was a trust fiasco, according to the Financial Times of Canada, dating back to January 31, 1983. Right from the start it was a deal of daunting complexity punctuated with pure theatre of the absurd. Witness, for example, the closing on the sale of 10,931 Toronto apartment units which formed the core of the most celebrated real estate deal in Canadian history. The apartments were to be flipped through several hands from Cadillac Fairview Corporation Limited to a series of numbered companies later said to be controlled by Saudi-Arabian investors. That particular celebrated flip of more than 10,000 apartment units would have obviously impacted directly on the lives of the people in the City of Toronto.

It was as a result of the combined efforts of the Foreign Investment Review Agency and provincial government legislation that we were able to ensure that the cost pass through, which was to have been passed on to tenants and which would have resulted in increases of 300 per cent, 400 per cent, 500 per cent and 600 per cent in direct rental charges, was disallowed. Those tenants were saved from having to pay for the flip-flop deal which was the most celebrated deal in Canadian real estate history.

I hope that those Hon. Members who are seeking re-election in the City of Toronto, in the City of Vancouver, which has one of the lowest vacancy rates in Canada, and in the City of Halifax where the rental housing situation has reached crisis proportions, will realize that in defeating this amendment they will be placing themselves in the position of having to go to their constituents in the next election campaign and saying to them, "We had a chance to protect you or to even offer the minimal $5 million protection under Investment Canada, but we turned our backs because we are not interested in protecting tenants". Instead the Conservatives have said, "Come and invest in Canada. You can buy up millions upon millions of dollars worth of Canadian real estate without being subject to any kind of notification analysis or review by the Government of Canada". The particular decision by this Government to wash its hands of concern for tenants, as it has so clearly indicated by exempting real estate specifically from the provisions for the $5 million review, is just another indication of how this Government is prepared to let those people who are in the least position to protect themselves hang out to dry.

We heard the Government promise to protect the housing situation in Canada. We heard the government promises to senior citizens. Of the tens of thousands of apartment dwellers in the City of Toronto and the thousands in the City of Hamilton a great proportion are senior citizens. Those are the same people from whom the Government is taking $30 a month and calling it chicken feed. The Government says that it can take $30 a month from the senior citizens because they do not care.

An Hon. Member: Order.

Ms. Copps: Perhaps the Member does not see the relevance. I am talking about a government exemption of real estate purchases by foreign companies which will directly impact upon the cost of rental for people living in highly populated urban areas, the majority of whom are single and living alone, many elderly widows, who are extremely concerned about the negative impact of the Government's initiatives on senior citizens' pensions. Those same people will now be faced with a further potential rent increase as a direct result of the Government's failure to approve the amendment that we have suggested with respect to real estate.

Mr. Blenkarn: Nonsense.

Ms. Copps: The Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) says "nonsense". I urge the Member for Mississauga South to speak on this issue because Mississauga happens to be one of the largest growing tenant areas in Canada. If the Member were truly representing his constituents, he would say that real estate, as any other investment, is an investment in Canada and subject to review under the Canada Investment Act or by the Canadian Government. In fact, if the Member for Mississauga South had read the amendment, he would have been aware that we are attempting to allow the Government the same possibility of review that it had on the Player's flip-flop apartment takeover. Conservatives in the City of Toronto were scurrying on side on that issue. They realized that rental increases of 100 per cent, 200 per cent, 300 per cent, and 400 per cent for senior citizens in those areas was unconscionable.

The Government is going to wash its hands of the whole issue by telling the world that Canada is open for business, to come in and buy up our apartment blocks by the hundreds and thousands and the purchases will not even be subject to notification, let alone review. The cost pass through of the flip of 10,000 apartments in the City of Toronto was prevented because of Liberal legislation in the Federal Investment Review Agency. Such cost pass throughs will be paid directly on the backs of tenants.

I am sorry if the Member for Mississauga South does not want to speak for his constituents. I am sorry that Government Members have not taken the time to read this amendment. If they had done so, they would not be so quick to tell their constituents that they are fighting on behalf of poor people.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais).

Mr. Blais: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Earlier, Mr. Speaker, I was attacked most unfairly and very deeply hurt. I was called a former Liberal, and I feel that my parliamentary privilege has been grievously infringed upon as a result of this allegation that I was a former Liberal . . . The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) . . . I would ask that those words be withdrawn. It is absolutely false, Mr. Speaker, and my privileges as a Member of this House have been most adversely affected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think it is a question of privilege.

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: The same strategy . . . I can see the Hon. Member smiling, Mr. Speaker, because it is all part of a strategy to cut down on the time allowed the Hon. Member and keep her from saying what she wants to say. It is obvious from the Hon. Member's snarky smile that this is a delaying tactic, and I demand that the Hon. Member's time be compensated, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time allowed the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) had expired.

[English]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if the yahoos on the other side of the House would have stopped screaming and yelling at us during our discourse—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —it might have been possible for me to say what I had wanted to within my time limit. I would call upon the Speaker to enforce order in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) may have a point about order and decorum in the House. I appeal to all Members to show courtesy to the Members who are speaking. Resuming debate, the Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley).

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address some comments to the amendments to Bill C-15. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) mentioned that these were good and fair amendments and asked whether a Conservative would rise to speak on these good and fair amendments. If these were in fact good and fair amendments, a Conservative could stand and support them. However, they are neither good nor fair.

Mr. Blenkarn: They are not very intelligent either.

Mr. Gormley: The Hon. Member notes that neither are they very intelligent. I am pleased to endorse that sentiment with regard to these amendments.

The exemption in Bill C-15, which is addressed in Motion No. 23, relates to security granted for a loan. Members have not yet spoken about this. It would be instructive for Canadians to learn more about what the unholiest alliance in Canadian history, the Liberals and New Democrats, is purporting that the Government should consider.

The motion deals with the deletion of certain lines and clauses in the Bill to the effect that the exemption for acquisitions resulting from the realization of security granted for a loan would not be dealt with. The intent of Bill C-15 is that non Canadians should be able to enforce the security provisions of a loan agreement and acquire control of a Canadian business without being subject to the notification provisions if a Canadian business has sought a loan from a non-Canadian financial institution and signed a loan agreement such as a Canadian would sign with a local bank. The Liberals and New Democrats are saying that they want the access to capital by small, medium, and large Canadian companies limited. This motion would restrict the security of the person or institution lending the money. Who would willingly lend money without a guarantee of security? This motion makes that subject to notification and frightens lenders about doing business in Canada.

Bill C-15 is trying to address the problem of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. Investment Canada is trying to deal with that problem by restoring confidence. Such motions as these moved by the New Democratic Party take away confidence. They tell non-Canadian lenders that they will be subject to all sorts of notification in order to enforce a security agreement in a loan. That does not inspire confidence.

Earlier some of my colleagues were citing statistics and figures. The poll published in the media yesterday shows very clearly that the average Canadian supports the initiatives of the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Most important when we look at the motions, the average Canadian recognizes that when we do not accept those motions and the frivolous measures being brought in by the Opposition, they can have confidence in us. It is investment confidence that Canadians see in the Government, Members of the Cabinet and the overwhelming number of Conservative Members of Parliament who outnumber the dwindling numbers in the Opposition ranks every day.

Motion No. 23 shows what the unholy NDP-Liberal alliance is doing once again to small, medium and large Canadian businesses that simply want to turn to a non-Canadian lender for some capital so that they may create jobs and create confidence in our economy.

Mr. Rossi: Talk about senior citizens.

Mr. Gormley: Let me make some remarks about the senior citizens and rental housing. In Saskatchewan, the NDP goes to nursing homes and tells senior citizens that someone will take away their medicare. It is a shameful act. It is no surprise that the Liberals, supported by the NDP, would single out a provision of the Bill, saying that it will affect and frighten senior citizens. That is no responsible way to conduct oneself in the House of Commons.

If one looks at Motion No. 24 and the movement of real estate as it affects condominiums, apartments and public housing, one can see that the provincial legislation, residential tenancy acts and others deal with the security and safety of those affected. However, the Liberals talk about senior citizens without putting forward any facts about an increase in the cost of rental. They simply say that senior citizens will be affected. I suggest that is the most irresponsible use of the valuable time of the House. They have taken up 70 hours of valuable time by frightening elderly Canadians.

Let us consider Motion No. 24 that would remove the rental real estate exemption. We can agree that rental real estate is, by its nature, a passive transaction—

Mr. Axworthy: God, you're dumb!

Mr. Gormley: —and the sort of transaction that within the integrity of Bill C-15 makes Motion No. 24 unnecessary. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), the former Minister who knows a lot about scaring and frightening people, is using the word "dumb" I believe.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes.

Mr. Gormley: Two-thirds of Canadians agree with the thrust of this Bill and I would not call two-thirds of Canadians dumb, although that Liberal Minister obviously did.

Mr. Gauthier: He did not say that.

Mr. Axworthy: I was just referring to the Member who is speaking.

Mr. Gormley: That is why he is in the opposition ranks and may he languish there for many years. He believes that the Canadian people are dumb because they support Bill C-15.

Mr. Axworthy: No, you are. You are certainly not part of the Canadian people.

Mr. Gormley: Again, I think that is indicative of what the Liberal Party is trying to do, and for that reason those who regard this Bill with seriousness and integrity can see that Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25 dealing with foreign capital are not, in fact, entitled to scrutiny.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that the Hon. Member who spoke is used to yelling in a rain barrel. However, I do not believe it is a custom in the House for him to simply reflect himself in his own mirrors to the judgment of other people. Clearly I did not call the Canadian people dumb. I called the Hon. Member dumb, and his speech certainly reflects that. I think the record should state that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order. I am not dumb and I do not believe that the people of my riding, including those from North Battleford where the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was born, would send someone dumb to Ottawa. If there was any reflection on lack of intelligence, I would say again that it was perhaps an aspersion on Canadian people, because I meant no aspersion by it.

[Translation]

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, we have been listening to the Liberal and NDP members for a long time. I see the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is leaving the House. He should stay, what we have to say might interest him.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have to make a phone call.

Mr. Gérin: He is going to make a phone call, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps he should have done that earlier. Not so long ago, last May 25, he said, as reported in Hansard:

I do not have to worry, I have a comfortable majority. What I am telling you is that you do not have that kind of majority from Canadians.

Obviously he has not heard the latest news.

Call an election tomorrow on this issue, show that you have guts. But no, they would not do that.

He was then talking about the Bill now under consideration. Now then—

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against the Hon. Member reading what I said in the House, that is fair enough. However, perhaps I might ask him to deal with the matter under consideration, namely Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25. If he wants to read my speeches, he ought to do that on his own time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) was about to speak to the motions.

Mr. Gérin: Surely, Mr. Speaker, we have to take measures which people can readily understand. I fail to see why the Liberals—turfed right out as they were last September—cannot understand that Canadians want to be open to the rest of the world. As evidenced by the poll published yesterday in newspapers across the land, Canadians do welcome foreign investment here. That is quite apparent among people who generally support the Conservative Party, as it is among others who generally favour the Liberals or the NDP. Perhaps I ought to say who used to favour the Liberals or the NDP because there has been a radical change in voters' preferences.

Mr. Boudria: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Hon. Member would be impressed by public opinion polls, but I suggest he has yet to deal with Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25.

Ms. Copps: That has nothing to do with the amendment.

Mr. Gérin: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, Canadians do welcome foreign investment in this country. The Gallup poll showed that 62 per cent—

Ms. Copps: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think we have risen three or four times to ask those who want to take part in the debate to speak about investment, and foreign investment in real estate as well. Those who refer to Conservative Party polls are not speaking to the amendments under study. Mr. Speaker, I would urge you to ask those Hon. Members who do not understand what this Bill contains to speak to Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25, or else remain silent.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I suggest that noting the fact that 62 per cent of Canadians want more foreign investment in real estate is speaking to the question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair understands that Members may want to make preambles when talking on specific motions. In the past, the Chair has allowed short preambles at report stage. However, I would ask Members not to use the 10 minutes they are given on a specific motion to speak to the Bill in general terms. Members know that they must speak to the motion specifically, be it Motion No. 23, No. 24 or No. 25. The Chair would ask Members to make an effort to speak directly to the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, it is absolutely vital that Canadians realize the Government is taking a new and open attitude toward foreign investment, an attitude that can be felt among all Government Members here in the House and across the country. In fact, according to the polls, 62 per cent of Canadians are urging the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to go on attracting foreign investment. Only 19 per cent are against foreign investment. If we were to add respondents who said they did not know or did not want to give their opinion, we would have 70 per cent in favour of the position taken by the Progressive Conservative Government, by the Minister and the Prime Minister. In this perspective, I think it is a brilliant idea of the Liberals to create committees and travel across the country to find out what people think and to get together to change their campaign program, because they have none now. They seem to be completely at sea.

• (1210)

I listened to the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St-Julien) make a remarkable speech in the House quite recently. My colleague the Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) made an equally remarkable speech. These are speeches that have made a positive contribution, to this country.

An Hon. Member: That is constructive.

Mr. Gérin: Yes, constructive speeches and not speeches like the Hon. Member . . . Listen to her shout, Mr. Speaker . . . Is that a way to act? Listen to her shouting. I realize she is the only Liberal Member in the House right now, but that is no reason to shout like that and interrupt my speech.

Mr. Speaker, I saw an article in Le Devoir yesterday, an analysis that said protectionism as an alternative was obsolete. Word for word, the article said: "Protectionism no longer constitutes a realistic option". Crystal clear, I would say. "In fact, among the seven major OECD countries, Canada is, with Germany, the country most oriented towards foreign markets. In 1980, Canada's exports of goods and services represented 29.3 per cent of the Gross National Product, while the average was 18.7 per cent for all seven countries." This means what? It means that we cannot close our doors. We must accept foreign investment. "Considering its very substantial dependence on foreign trade, it is inconceivable that Canada should adopt a strategy of self-centered development, protected by tariff barriers and quotas. External constraints are now a major given of our economic policy."

So this new approach is going to neutralize the effects of 20 years of Liberal mismanagement during which the country was saddled with debts so that today, we have a total debt of $200 billion which must be dealt with through the Budget by making cutbacks that are not always pleasant, in order to pay the staggering bill left us by the Liberals who preferred to ignore foreign investment and thought the economy could continue to function with that kind of spending, while they did not even have the guts to raise taxes and bring down the deficit—

Ms. Copps: That is not true—

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member could stop interrupting me. It must be the sixth time since I started speaking. I think it is time she stopped doing that.

All I am saying is that it is no longer possible to reduce the industrial policy debate to such simple terms as protectionism. We must now extend our vision to include the other countries and offer them opportunities to invest in Canada. In my judgment, that is the way to bolster our economy.

I suggest that everybody should read over again the speech delivered in the House by Mr. Stevens on December 11 last. The Liberals have wasted the time of the House for six months now and it would be in their own best interest to go over the principles advocated at the time. "It is a debate on getting Canadians to be more confident, more willing to invest their huge savings in productive investments." Between now and 1991 Canada needs $100 billion in new investments.

The new agency described in Bill C-15, on which we are now commencing second reading debate, I would suggest will, in concert with the private sector, provincial Governments and our trade services, work with Canadian investors and non-Canadian investors to ensure that there are productive jobs created for Canadians between now and the 1990s.

Indeed, you should have been listening! We have wasted God knows how much time in the House. As a newly elected Member I think that what the Liberals have done is terrible. In addition to driving the country into debt you make us waste our time here.

An Hon. Member: What a shame!

Mr. Gérin: A survey made by the European Management Forum ranked Canada last among 22 countries when it comes to our approach and receptivity concerning foreign investments. Do they realize that 21 countries like Australia, New Zealand, Japan, the United States, the United Kingdom, Ireland and Greece are ahead of Canada? Does that make any sense? I do not know whether the Liberals agree with that, nor do I know whether they understand that our pitiful performance is the outcome of their policy. Have faith, we have a new policy!

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I know you share my views on this.

We have not been in office for very long, yet interest rates have dropped, unemployment has gone down, the economy is gaining strength and, if the Liberals were out of the picture, things would be even better!

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few comments to this debate on Motion No. 24. It deals with the whole question of notification relating to rental accommodation. Several Members have mentioned the kind of takeover we have seen by groups such as the Seaway Greymac incident which could have had a very devastating effect on the price of rental accommodation for senior citizens. I want to call on members of the Government to take a very close look at this.

If we look at the recent Budget, the cutbacks in old age pensions will be devastating. If we have rental accommodation going up dramatically, how will senior citizens be able to find accommodation? Practically every senior citizen has to look at the prospect of $200 less in purchasing power next year. If they are receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement, that will be reduced as well. These people are living at or below the poverty line.

I think Government Members would be sympathetic to anything that would benefit our senior citizens. In the projection of the cut-backs in old age pensions over four or five years, we are talking of some $1,500 according to a recent study done by the Canadian Press. We have to be concerned about our senior citizens.

When a deal like the Seaway Trust Greymac flip goes bad, it not only affects housing accommodation, but it affects all kinds of other businesses and properties throughout the country that are held by the institutions as well as the individuals involved. In my own constituency, there is a very important recreational area, a ski hill development, which was thrown into turmoil and still has difficulties because of that takeover problem. I think Motion No. 24 would be very acceptable to Government Members who would be concerned about those kinds of takeovers. There are many actions in the Budget which relate in a similar way. I see the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has left. He is the chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. That committee conducted an excellent study of the farm debt crisis facing some 40,000 young farmers across the country. That committee made an excellent report, calling upon the Government to establish a rescheduling of farm debt and to institute a program of medium term loans at 8 per cent interest up to $300,000 which it was estimated would benefit some 14,000 of the 40,000 farmers facing serious financial difficulties this coming year.

• (1220)

Although the committee made those recommendations to the Government and to the House in its report, when the Budget came down, lo and behold, there was no decision by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to do anything about them. This is viewed by the agricultural community as a total abandonment of the Government's responsibility in this regard. In southwestern Ontario, as Canadian farmers go out of business, face foreclosure or go into bankruptcy, farm after farm is being bought up by foreign interests from Europe. If those interests settled down and lived on the land, that would be one thing, but often the houses and barns are simply razed and the land is put up for rental. The whole community life is destroyed by such action.

We see a Government hell bent on foreign investment at any price, regardless of whether there are any benefits for Canada. At the same time, it exacerbates this by completely abandoning its traditional role in agricultural financing. We really have a double whammy in that regard.

When we look at the Western Accord and at the budget Bills which were introduced relating to foreign investment, we see that multinational oil companies—and this is according to an estimate by Informetrica—over the next five years will actually be given $10.9 billion. I suppose the sad part is that it does not come from someone strange; it comes from Caandian taxpayers—little pensioners who are having trouble financing their rental accommodations will each have to give up $100 per year, the average family of four will have to pay some $400 extra per year, and people who have to commute in northern areas will have to pay an extra two cents per litre or nine cents per gallon starting in early September. What is this all for?

I read a report this week which indicated that Trilogy Resource Corporation of Calgary, a junior Canadian company producing only 800 barrels per day, was concerned about all the riches which were showered on large multinationals like Imperial and so on, and that there would be massive takeovers as a result of the budget Bills and the Western Accord. Let us look at the financial picture of Imperial. Its 1984 profits over 1983 were $533 million. I speak about this because of the whole attitude of the Government in this Bill, in the amendments, and in the discussions on the amendments, that all foreign takeovers and all foreign investment are good, without regard to Canadian ownership. I would think the Government would want to strengthen its position.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) said in a speech in Inuvik that the policy of the Tory Government of Canada was greater Canadian ownership. How do we square that with this Bill which just leaves everything wide open for foreign takeovers below $5 million? We are dealing with a Government which seems to be talking out of both sides of its mouth. Supposedly it wants greater benefits for Canada, but as far as screening companies and investment groups from West Germany, Austria and Europe in general coming in to take over farms—and they are taking over dozens of them in southwestern Ontario—no questions are asked, regardless of whether they raze the buildings, rent out the land and completely destroy community life. As long as the cash is there, it does not seem to matter. That is the same with the Western Accord. Small Canadian oil companies are being led to the slaughter and will be taken over by large multinationals which will pick up $800 million in existing oil reserves.

We should be instituting some of the amendments such as Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25, which I think can be very beneficial to Canadian ownership in the country. The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) talked about the confidence of the country in the Government. If the Hon. Member is so confident, why is the President of the Conservative Party of Canada, the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), sending out a letter in desperation asking: "Please help the Prime Minister. He is in terrible shape. Send your money. We have to advertise. We have to save the Government because people are rallying against the cut-backs in the old age pensions and the raising of taxes for ordinary Canadians". The confidence in this Government is badly shaken, not only by the Budget but by the Bill which we are debating today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion No. 23, Mr. Langdon, seconded by Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques), moves that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out lines 6 to 10 at page 6. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 79, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (1230)

On Motion No. 24, Mr. Axworthy moved that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out lines 43 to 48 at page 6.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On Motion 25. Mr. Axworthy, seconded by Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques), moved that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When you asked if it was the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion, I said, "No."

Ms. Copps: No, you did not.

Mr. Lewis: It is my understanding that we are in debate on it.

An Hon. Member: It is a new motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: I said, "No" very distinctly.

Mr. Fulton: You are reflecting on the Speaker's judgment.

Mr. Gauthier: We are now on to Motion No. 25.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the Hon. Member completed his point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Even if that were the case, in my opinion the yeas had it. The motion is carried.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in that case, the record should show that you definitely said, "In my opinion the yeas have it."

An Hon. Member: He did!

Mr. Lewis: If I may, Mr. Speaker, in speaking to my point of order, may I make it very clear that what we have tried to do to assist the Opposition—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) will verify this. There were a number of speakers today who discussed at length the three motions. There has been input from both sides.

Mr. Fulton: Is this a point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, it is. The Hon. Member for Bourassa came over and asked how many speakers we had left on those motions. In a spirit of co-operation, we said, "Fine. If you have exhausted your speakers, we will sit down and let the vote proceed on Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25." We did that, Sir. We then proceeded to the next motion. It was our understanding that the Members of the Opposition would proceed to debate that motion—

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Fulton: We just finished debating it.

Mr. Lewis: —or, speak to it. Thus, they were grouped. Do we not now proceed to the next motion? We have proceeded to the next motion for debate.

Mr. Gauthier: No, you are all wet. I regret to say it, but you are all wet.

Mr. Lewis: That could be. On occasion, I have been all wet. If that is not the case, then I would ask the Chair to explain the situation to the House because we intend to defeat every motion of the Opposition. We intend to be given the opportunity to stand and vote, if it is necessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions numbered 23, 24 and 25 have been grouped for debate by the Speaker and are presently being voted on separately. The Chair must presume that all Members are aware of that. We have now taken votes on Motions Nos. 23 and 24. The Chair is now proceeding to take a vote on Motion No. 25. On Motion No. 25. Mr. Axworthy, seconded by Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques), moved that Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out lines 49 and 50 at page 6 and lines 1 to 43 at page 7.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, just so I have it clear. There have been occasions when matters have moved a little more quickly than I might have liked. Does this mean that the amendment on Motion No. 24 has been approved by the House, in the Chair's opinion?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Then, with all deference, I must tell the Chair that I intend to proceed from this Chamber to view the videotape to see exactly what happened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion No. 24 has been voted on and approved.

An Hon. Member: It has not been voted on.

Ms. Copps: Yes, it has been. You guys just do not know the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There was a voice vote. The Chair said, "Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?" and the answer was, "Yes."

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) on a point of order.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I think that no one is better placed than me, after you—and I am quite close to you—to have followed exactly what was going on. In fact, one only has to see the Liberals laughing to realize that they are attempting some procedural hocus-pocus which has nothing to do with logic. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the vote was taken on Motions No. 23. We are now voting on Motion No. 24. The Members started to shout. We then shouted also to show our disagreement. It was left at that. I feel we are entitled to have a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that he should be in his place when things are happening in the House.

First, Motion No. 23 was put by the Speaker and the vote was deferred. Then, Motion No. 24 was put by the Speaker. Since there was no sound at all from the Government side, the Speaker was quite right in saying that the motion was agreed to.

Mr. Speaker, I support you in this matter. What the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead is saying is sheer nonsense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: He was asleep, Mr. Speaker. It is not your fault!

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, speaking of being asleep, you beat the record. You have had plenty of experience, you were asleep for a long time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, all I want to say is, to come back to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, I was in my place as soon as a vote was called. You rose to put the question to the Members in this House on Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 25. I voted on Motion No. 23, I was here to vote on Motion 24 but we have not yet voted. I voted on Motion 25, to reject all those points.

Therefore, I am asking that it be clearly set in the record that contrary to the misstatements made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, I was in my place.

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the House of a very fundamental rule, that is, the Speaker's ruling has been made. The fact that many Conservative Members were not aware of what they were doing, through their lack of administerial responsibility, is not our responsibility. The House has decided. Members opposite are now taking up the time of the House which should be properly devoted to the next round of amendments. I think we should move on.

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say a very similar thing to that which has just been said. A long-time rule of the House is that an Hon. Member cannot reflect on a ruling of the Speaker. That is a rule, like it or not. It may have been a proper ruling, or it may not have been; but there was a ruling by the Speaker. We are not allowed to reflect on that ruling whatsoever. Therefore, I think these comments are out of order and we should proceed.

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, I was present throughout the debate. I listened very carefully. Mr. Speaker, I will tell you one thing, I am not sure that the motion was actually put. In this case, I would suggest very strongly that you defer the decision—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Merrithew: —and view the tape.

Mr. Gauthier: That is intimidation!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will have the last word on this matter. If some Hon. Members feel that they voted no, then what they had to do was stand. If five Members had risen, then that would have been the case.

The next three motions will be grouped for debate and voted on separately: Motion Nos. 27, 30 and 67.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor) moved:

Motion No. 27

Investment Canada Act

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 11 by striking out line 11 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canadian business unless it is reviewable under Part IV; and".

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) moved:

Motion No. 30

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 12 by striking out lines 19 to 21 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"an making the investment shall, at least forty-five days prior to the anticipated implementation of the investment or, if this is not possible and the Agency has been notified that it is not possible, at least one day prior to implementation, except as provided elsewhere in this Act, in the".

Motion No. 67

That Bill C-15, be amended in Clause 22 by striking out line 40 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"thirty days from the date, or in the case of investments enumerated under Section 15, forty-five days from the date of the sending of".

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I must begin by congratulating the Conservative Members who have finally, after much urging on our part, taken a non-partisan and careful approach to each of these amendments. I congratulate them for doing so and I hope that this approach will continue.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture rising on a point of order?

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) clearly is trying to make fun of us here. He is referring to something that has already been dealt with in your opinion, and I think this is totally irrelevant—

On another point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know whether the rules have been changed so that there is no more voluntary call for yeas and nays on motions. I would like to know, because we would have to inform Hon. Members in this House, both on this side and on the opposition side, that changes have suddenly been made to the rules. I would like to know it since I am a new Member here, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to take part in the debate, and I would like to know when I can vote, whether I can vote or not, and if there have been changes to those rules. I would like to know.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would simply ask the Hon. Member to read Section 12 of our Standing Orders.

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I shall avoid paying further compliments to Conservative Members as they do not seem to be in the mood to accept them this morning.

We have before us a group of amendments that attempt to improve in this case in relatively minor ways the Investment Canada Bill. I shall speak specifically with respect to Motion No. 27. The clause that we are suggesting should be amended is one which deals with the question of notification.

For Hon. Members who have not followed this debate in detail, I would make the introductory point to Hon. Members who are present that this Bill identifies within it three categories of enterprises. The first category of enterprises comprises take-overs by foreign companies of Canadian companies with assets of at least $5 million. For that particular category of enterprises, there must be notification and there must be review of that take-over.

There is a second category of enterprises which is composed of foreign companies entering this country to establish new businesses. Under the present Bill, each new business established through this kind of foreign entry must notify Investment Canada that a new business has been established. However, there is a third category of enterprises within this Bill comprising the set of enterprises which are subject to special consideration because they have an impact on the cultural heritage and national identity of Canada.

With respect to the third category of enterprises, it is possible, if the Minister wishes to do so and subject to certain regulations that are set out by the Governor in Council, for a firm to be subject to review despite the fact that that firm may have assets of less than $5 million being taken over and despite the fact that it might be a new business which is being established. In short, this is a category of enterprises for which it may very well be possible for a review to take place as well as for a notification to be required.

The way this particular part of the Bill is set up suggests that certain enterprises are subject only to notification. According to this part of the Bill, if a firm is subject to notification, it is not subject to review as these are two different categories of firms.

Our amendment makes it clear that there is the possibility that an investment that is being made to establish a new Canadian business may be subject to review even though it is included in the category of businesses subject to notification. The reason for that is the existence of that special clause which deals with cultural heritage and national identity. In a very real sense, we are talking about a technical amendment that would make the Bill itself consistent.

I would refer Hon. Members to Clause 11, Subclause (b) of Bill C-15. Clause 11 presently reads:

The following investments by non-Canadians are subject to notification under this Part:

(b) an investment to acquire control of a Canadian business in any manner described in subsection 28(1), unless the investment is reviewable pursuant to section 14.

If the business is reviewable, it will then be subject to review and not notification. However, Subclause (a) of Clause 11 suggests that a business subject only to notification is:

(a) an investment to establish a new Canadian business;—

As I have indicated, it is possible under this Bill for a new Canadian business being established by a foreign firm to be subject as well to review. That is why we have moved an amendment in Motion No. 27 that will simply change Subclause (a) so that it will read:

(a) an investment to establish a new Canadian business unless it is reviewable under Part IV;—

This Motion simply clears up what could be a potential conflict that could emerge when the Bill becomes an Act.

Our amendment simply provides that when there are cases in which the Government wishes to use its cultural heritage and national identity clause, it will be possible to use that clause with respect to new investments in Canada by non-Canadian firms. That is the technicality of the amendment. The substance that lies beneath the technicality is that the operative part of this Bill which is very important to the future is the clause that permits review to take place in cases where we have a potential threat to the cultural heritage or national identity of Canada. It is a part of the Bill which Conservative Ministers have been quite anxious to highlight in the public debates which have taken place.

In order for that particular clause to be operative, I would argue that an amendment must be accepted with respect to the clause which permits exceptions to exist, in which new businesses coming in from the outside will be subject to review, not just to notification. If that is not included, then there is a potential conflict between this clause and the clause in the Bill which permits the Government to designate, for review, cases in which cultural heritage and national identity considerations are concerned.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, now that Parliament is once again working as it should and we are into a period of constructive examination of a number of important amendments—and perhaps the new atmosphere is a direct result of not having the esteemed Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) with us—I hope that the new aura of an open-minded and constructive approach will continue on the part of the Government. The amendments which we have introduced are an attempt to improve the legislation and not in any way to interrupt or disagree with the principles of it. Again, the amendments are based upon the proposals and representations which were made at committee hearings.

Motion No. 30 is a very important amendment. It deals with a problem which we detected in the legislation, whereby the proposed foreign investor has the right not to provide notification until 30 days after the fact. In the amendment, we are saying that there should be a requirement of notification before implementation of a particular investment, so that the Government would not be put in a position of having to review an investment—and at times be forced to disagree with it and reject it—and force a major divestiture on the part of the investor.

Under the present legislation, investors can indicate their acquisitions or takeovers, acquire the properties and notify after the fact.

As the Chamber of Commerce pointed out, that would result in a forced fire sale of a number of acquisitions if the Government were to decide that the investments should not be approved. Therefore, a number of companies would be faced with a degree of uncertainty. In the amendment, we are attempting to deal with what was probably an oversight, lack of experience, judgment or analysis on the part of the persons who drafted the legislation or the Minister. For the sake of the business community, according to all the proposals and presentations which have been made by the Government, it wants to provide more flexibility and an easier sense of procedure. This particular clause forces the business community to face the potential awkwardness of having to divest itself of a holding after that holding has already been acquired. Therefore, Motion No. 30 seeks the requirement that notification be given up to one day before implementation, so that the agency would have the right to provide a signal to the company and not have to wait for a post hoc situation to occur.

Government Members who are concerned and interested in ensuring that the legislation is simplified should carefully examine the amendment and realize that it meets one of the major objections which was brought before the committee by members of the business community. I do not know why the Minister ignored that representation. He has said that he believes in consultation. However, in this particular case he ignored it. We are proposing the amendment to respond to what we believe is the general interest which has been put forward by the Government. It will provide a review procedure which is simple and easy to understand. It will not carry with it any awkwardness or the potential problems of post hoc decisions which would force major fire sale investitures.

Motion No. 67 refers to a matter which is important to the legislation. The Government has indicated very clearly that there should be a special set-aside provision for cultural industries. It recognizes that those industries are a part of the area of foreign investment which have particular sensitivities and require special examination. If that is the case, then sufficient time should be given to fully examine the full range of potential problems. Therefore, in the amendment we have proposed that an extra 15 days be allotted for the review of areas dealing with the cultural or national identity parts of foreign investment takeovers or acquisitions. The reason for the extended time, and it is not a great amount of time, is to take note of the requirement that, in complicated areas such as book publishing, there should be sufficient time for the necessary consultation, and particularly in areas where there could be potential Canadian buyers.

We introduced an earlier amendment which was rejected by the Government. It proposed that the Minister be responsible, in cases concerning cultural industries, to seek out alternative Canadian buyers for industries such as book publishing, records and electronics. The Government rejected that amendment. However, it would seem that the purpose of Investment Canada is to secure Canadian investment. That should be its primary objective. Therefore, that amendment would only seem reasonable when there is a proposed takeover by a foreign company.

There are a number of such takeovers presently on the books. For example, the Minister has taken over six months to examine the Prentice-Hall takeover. However, under this legislation, he said that it would be done within 30 days. Well, if he cannot conclude his examination of Prentice-Hall within six months, surely some extra time should be allowed.

I do not want to prejudge the motivation of the Minister. Perhaps taking six months is a good thing. If I were the Minister, I would have decided within 30 days that the Prentice-Hall takeover made absolutely no sense, because Gulf and Western already have a substantial number of publishing holdings in Canada. However, it is already taking an exorbitant amount of time for key acquisitions which are on the table. Therefore, it would seem only logical that the same kind of consideration be accorded to this amendment which would allow additional time for consideration of investments by foreigners in the cultural area. It is a part of our society which we cannot afford to deal with in an offhand manner.

I have heard the Minister say that FIRA applications should be passed without much review or examination. Certainly, we have seen in the months since the Government has come to power that there has not been one rejection of a FIRA application. Surely if the legislation denotes a consideration for cultural industries, then sufficient time should be allocated to ensure that all the questions pertaining to the acquisition are properly examined, and, most important, that the Minister has sufficient time to make arrangements for alternative buyers in the Canadian market-place.

That is the primary purpose of the amendment. We hope, as we saw in the last round of considerations, that government Members will again show good judgment and agree to what is obviously a very helpful amendment to their cause.

IMMIGRATION

PARTIAL AMNESTY FOR REFUGEE STATUS APPLICANTS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, it has been reported that the Government is drawing up a partial amnesty plan for refugee status applicants. People from some countries are automatically amnestied. The nationals of other countries from which a certain number of frivolous and baseless applications are supposed to have originated will have to go through the whole process to obtain the refugee status. Obviously, despite appearances of fairness, there is discrimination and racism.

Humanitarian organizations and lawyers involved in that field disagree on the 65 per cent figure of baseless applications. Moreover, if a number of applications are effectively baseless, it is mainly due to the fact that the system is unfair and entails undue delays.

Mr. Speaker, officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration do think very highly of Bangladesh since they do not believe the refugees from that country, which is under military rule with its constitution and legislature suspended. I think that it is time that the Department take into account the political conditions of the countries when dealing with refugees. It is not only a humanitarian issue but also a matter of common sense.

SUPPORT FOR PROVISIONS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, the greatest hallmark of the recent Budget is fairness. While tackling the stark reality of the massive public debt and encouraging economic growth the Budget also protects those most in need. The alarm which is being sounded by the New Democrat-Liberal coalition is a false alarm.

The Budget does not reduce pensions for seniors, Mr. Speaker. In fact old age security benefits will increase if inflation exceeds 3 per cent. The universality of the old age security is not affected. Benefits will continue to be available to all. Low-income seniors will still receive GIS payments, which are fully indexed to inflation, and the benefit levels will be reviewed on an ongoing basis.

The seniors of this country will not be fooled by the permanent alliance of the negative alarmists opposite. This Government is committed to fairness and compassion. Our senior citizens will always receive the kind of assistance they deserve. Our social benefits system remains unchanged. Modified indexing does not mean that senior citizens will suffer.

The fear and misinformation which are being spread by the new Democrat-Liberal coalition are irresponsible, and are a direct attack on the intelligence of our respected senior citizens. Let the truth be told.

QUEBEC

BY-ELECTIONS—VICTORY FOR ROBERT BOURASSA

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Liberal Party won all 4 provincial by-elections which took place yesterday in the Province of Quebec.

These by-elections marked the return to the National Assembly of Mr. Robert Bourassa, with whom I had the honour to work at the time I was a Quebec MNA. I am very pleased when I see Quebec men and women show again their confidence in this man who has done so much for our province. It is under his leadership that Quebec experienced the extraordinary development of social programs which characterized the '70s. It is also under his leadership that Quebec pushed back its modern frontier, thanks to the faith Mr. Bourassa had placed in the development of the James Bay hydro-electric power project. Moreover, Mr. Bourassa has always shown his concern for people at the lower end of the economic scale by giving them an opportunity to protect themselves against the problems of today's living.

I want to congratulate Mr. Bourassa on his election as member for the Bertrand riding, as well as the three other Liberal members who will join the Quebec National Assembly before the end of the month.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ESTABLISHMENT OF WILDLIFE TOXICOLOGY FUND

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and Monte Hummel, President of the World Wildlife Fund, jointly announced the establishment of a million-dollar wildlife toxicology fund for 1985.

[Translation]

As this Environment Week, such an announcement could not be more welcome.

[English]

This fund, Mr. Speaker, besides showing the high priority the Minister attaches to wildlife toxicology, also reflects, by its mechanism, the Government's approach in co-operation with the non-governmental and private sector. This fund is supplementary to existing government programs. It will be administered by the World Wildlife Fund of Canada at no cost to the taxpayer. Noranda Incorporated has made a $50,000 grant to the wildlife fund to cover the administrative costs.

The wildlife toxicology research fund will be a matching fund, providing up to 50 per cent of the cost of approved research. Applicants will be expected to find the balance of this funding from non-governmental sources.

This is an example of what co-operation is all about. As a western Canadian I take special pride in supporting this announcement, particularly in view of the strong public concern about toxic chemicals in our environment. Canadians are showing their concern, ready to participate in the improvement of our environment. This week's theme is indeed appropriate; environment is a shared responsibility.

CLOSING OF CAPE BRETON HEAVY WATER PLANTS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the recent "Wilson wallop" was particularly devastating to the people of Cape Breton Island. With no prior notice the Government shut down the heavy water plants at Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury. The workers were left hung out to dry by an uncaring, heartless, and cruel Government.

The Government trumpeted its promise of generous severance benefits to those laid-off workers. But, as a result of the November economic statement, these severance benefits will not be as generous as the Government claims. Under the new Unemployment Insurance Commission rules the Government requires laid-off workers to exhaust their severance benefits before they can qualify for unemployment insurance. Laid-off Cape Bretoners will not be able to use their severance pay to learn new job skills or to move to other job centres. The least the Government should do is scrap this unfair severance rule which robs workers in Cape Breton, who are laid off by the federal Government, of their eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits.

APPROVAL IN PRINCIPLE

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, as evidenced by last night's vote, approval in principle of the budget was a simple matter of routine. How could we not vote for such a good package?

However, I could not but notice the absence of the Opposition financial critics. Should we conclude that this budget, which was widely welcomed and so positively received by businessmen, was also welcomed by the Opposition? Were those Liberals, by failing to take a position, indicating that they would have voted for the budget?

Let us recall the economic situation and the deficit inherited from the previous Government: during the 100 years ending in 1967, an accumulated $18 billion; after only 18 years of Liberal administration, a total of $190 billion in accumulated indebtedness. By reducing its expenditures and increasing taxes, the Government will collect extra revenues. But the budget cannot be broken into separate parts because it is a whole, an indivisible entity.

Have those Opposition Members resigned themselves to accepting this as the only way to reduce the deficit and control the growth of our national debt? How are we to explain their many absences during the vote on the approval in principle of the budget? This in unheard of, Mr. Speaker!

SASKATCHEWAN SENIOR CITIZENS ORGANIZATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, during the week of May 13 to May 17 the organization of the Saskatchewan senior citizens was lobbying in this city for things of importance to them. Yet its representatives were snubbed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who would not meet with them. They were snubbed by two Cabinet Ministers from Saskatchewan, including the Government House Leader, who would not meet with them. They were snubbed by all of the Saskatchewan Conservative Members of Parliament.

In the House yesterday the Minister of Finance said he would not meet with those senior citizens because he was in the final throes of preparing his Budget and it was not possible to meet with people. Yet right before his Budget the Minister of Finance flew to Toronto and met with some very exclusive and wealthy senior business executives. He had time to meet with these people in secret. He had time for the privileged Canadians, but not time for ordinary Canadians.

The Minister of Finance said yesterday that he could not go to the Saskatchewan senior citizens' meeting in Moose Jaw because he is too busy. Yet this morning where was he? He took the Prime Minister's place at a meeting in the Harbour Castle Hilton Hotel in Toronto, where he spoke to the Canadian Pension Conference. The fees for that conference, Mr. Speaker, were $350 for members, and $420 for non-members. The Minister of Finance meets with the privileged people. He speaks with people who can pay $400 to go to this meeting, but he will not meet with the Saskatchewan senior citizens in Moose Jaw.

It is about time the Government across the way started listening to ordinary Canadians. The Minister of Finance is as bad as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who went to Toronto last Friday and met with senior business executives, and on Thursday in Montreal he met with the Chamber—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his 90 seconds have expired.

THE BUDGET

RECOGNITION OF VOLUNTARY SECTOR

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, finally the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) recognizes in a concrete way people who give their time and effort to improve and increase our collective welfare.

Not only did the recent Budget recognize donations to organizations, but it has dealt in a more enlightened way with one of the most active segments of our society. Indeed, for a long time our taxation system has been recognizing those who make monetary contributions to charities, but never until how has any Government thought of recognizing the voluntary sector as a social and economic factor. We are often too prone to forget that this type of community work, namely the voluntary sector, allows our Governments to save millions of dollars which they would have to pay out if our Canadian citizens did not contribute their own time.

I hope the recognition granted by the Wilson Budget to the voluntary sector will be extended over the next few years, because this would be of benefit to all taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, in these difficult times for our economy, the voluntary sector must be increasingly protected against the discouraging effect of the economic recession that is starting to be seriously felt, especially within the non-profit groups.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNED JAPANESE CANADIANS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, this morning in Ottawa members of the Japanese Canadian community once again urged the Government to deal immediately with the issue of redress. One of the underlying messages was clearly of sadness and frustration with a Government that has failed to act in a decisive manner, with a Government that has failed to match the high expectations it created for an immediate and fair solution, with a Government that promised compensation and then offered a watered down version instead, with a Government that promised negotiations for a settlement and then retracted and hid behind the word "consultation", with a Government that promised progress and process and then met officially only twice with the Japanese Canadian community, with a Government that promised openness and accessibility only to find a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who continues to refuse even to meet with representatives of the Japanese Canadian community.

The Government has lacked decisive leadership and genuine compassion in addressing this most serious and sensitive issue.

The unfortunate reality is that the Issei population, that is, first generation Japanese Canadians, who wish so much for this matter to be resolved are, one by one, passing away without having lived to see that day. Mr. Speaker, the community has had to endure enough suffering. The time for consensus, the time for action, the time to end that suffering is now.

EXTERNAL AID

ALLEGED MISMANAGEMENT OF MATERIAL

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, in my speech on the Budget last Friday, I blamed once again the previous Liberal government for the mismanagement and waste of public funds. I give as example the storing of school equipment on the lot of P.A.K. Inc. of Laprairie which is to be shipped to Bolivia under a CIDA program. Such equipment, Mr. Speaker, includes two trucks and 38 containers worth $3 million which have been standing there since January 1982 at a monthly rent of $4,000. This is shameful, and it is the result of mismanagement. Why have those goods not been delivered? What happened?

I ask my Government, especially the Minister responsible for CIDA to take action in order to avoid paying thousands of dollars waste fully and see that the goods are properly delivered.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, the Opposition parties are constantly criticizing and misrepresenting the facts but they forget that the former Liberal government was a first-rate waster of public funds and accumulated an unequalled deficit. The Tory government was elected on September 4 last to put some order in public affairs and it is merely sticking to its promise even if the Grits are not happy about it.

SHIPBUILDING

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian shipbuilding and repair industry feels more and more betrayed by the Conservative Government. Last August the Atlantic caucus of the PC Party declared the creation of a more viable and prosperous shipbuilding industry to be a priority for a PC Government. Increased activity in our shipyards would be an important element of a "jobs, jobs, jobs" program. The harsh reality now is "cuts, cuts, cuts", and that in spite of valiant efforts by the industry through both corporate and labour activity, and by private Members of the House.

The Budget Papers tabled on May 23 stated that "production subsidies under the Shipbuilding Industry Assistance Program are currently being phased out", but noted continuing activity under the Productivity Improvement Grant arrangements. The very next day, however, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) announced action to end the earning of Performance Improvement Grant credits after June 30 of this year.

Like many of its Depression predecessors, the Government is determined only to achieve greater fiscal responsibility, and reveals no appreciation of the importance of public investment. The time has come to rename the Minister's Department "The Department of Regional Industrial Stagnation", unless election promises are kept before it is too late for both labour and capital in our shipyards.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, having gotten the facts yesterday from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice. We heard all kinds of defences yesterday for the granting of an award for legal services by the Minister of Justice to his two sons. We heard about merit and frugality. We heard that the amount of the awards was small potatoes. We heard that it was firms rather than the boys themselves who got the awards.

None of those defences touch the conflict of interest guidelines. None of them respond to the clear requirements which my Leader read yesterday, and which the Deputy Prime Minister confirmed were in effect, which indicate that the Minister of Justice has taken a public trust and betrayed it to benefit his two sons.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, who is responsible for the organization of the Cabinet, whether clear grounds have not been demonstrated for having the resignation of the Minister of Justice.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in my 20 years in politics I have been subjected to some low blows and low attacks. However, never in my life, when I was absent, did anyone ever attack my family, my sons, or my children in a cowardly—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: For the first time a personal attack was made on the professional reputation and competence of my son, while I was absent from the House. It was a cowardly, despicable, dastardly act of a cowardly, despicable, dastardly Member of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the Hon. Minister to withdraw the words. No Hon. Member of Parliament can have those words used about him without those words being withdrawn.

Mr. Crosbie: In accordance with your injunction, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw those words. I will deal with the hon. gentleman outside.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Let's have a 30 second recess.

Mr. Crosbie: I assure Members of the House that there is no conflict of interest, and no violation of any conflict of interest rules in this situation. There are 23 firms appointed as legal agents in Newfoundland. The firm of Chalker, Green & Rowe is one of those firms. My son works for that firm for a salary, and is not a partner. It is an outstanding firm in Newfoundland. My son is not a partner of the second firm, Kendell and Crosbie, either. There is no conflict of interest whatsoever.

However, as a result of the malicious and cowardly attack yesterday of the former Solicitor General, my sons and these firms have requested that I withdraw their names as legal agents as they do not wish to be legal agents of the Government of Canada and be exposed to the calumny of the cowardly and vicious attacks such as that of the hon. gentleman opposite, who maligned their professional integrity without any cause or reason. Reluctantly, and against my own better nature, I have agreed to withdraw them as legal agents of the Department of Justice, because of your scurvy behaviour.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have no criticism of the Minister's sons. They are not bound by the conflict of interest guidelines; the Minister is. He is the one who brought his sons into public life by giving them the public trust in their firms by having these awards.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: I am not satisfied that what the Minister has done, although it corrects matters for the future, deals with what is a blatant conflict of his responsibility—not his sons—but his responsibility. That is why I asked the Deputy Prime Minister, and why I am asking him again what action the Government will take to inform the country, and to inform the Ministers, that these conflict of interest guidelines are in effect and that they mean something.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will answer for myself.

Ms. Copps: You obviously can't.

Mr. Crosbie: There is no conflict of interest in this case. What the hon. gentleman is stating is that the son, daughter, or relative of a Minister can no longer work for anyone because, if they work for anyone, that firm can do no business at all with the Government. That is the position that the hon. gentleman is putting forward.

What the hon. gentleman did yesterday was impugn my son's competence by saying that if we use that firm, and he acted, we would be defended by a young man who failed two years in law school—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Crosbie: —a deliberate attempt to damage his professional reputation—a boy who is a Rhodes Scholar, and who is a university medalist in political science at Queen's University.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Apologize.

Mr. Crosbie: So this is not a question of conflict of interest; this is a question of honour and integrity, and whether you can be in public life without having scum splattering you with mud whenever you do anything.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Perhaps the Canadian public would have been more tolerant of these appointments if the Prime Minister and the Conservative Party had not been so sanctimonious during the election campaign, and so categorical that they would bring in changes with respect to appointments, if elected. However, what do we see? We see a blatant disregard of those commitments. We see cynicism and hypocrisy.

Mr. Crosbie: Look in the mirror.

Mr. Allmand: Does the Deputy Prime Minister really believe in the type of appointments made recently and, if so, why does he not come clean with the Canadian public, say that is the policy in which he believes, and not pretend to stand for something new and different?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the greatest of integrity has been used in connection with the appointment of legal agents in the Department of Justice. It is a shining star compared to what it was a year or two ago.

When the hon. gentleman asked a question yesterday—and I hope he will apologize to the House—he tried to intimate that I had my campaign manager appointed to be prosecutor in all drug cases and that he had received $200,000, one Robert Pittman. He never did a day's work for me in my life, never one jot, one tittle, never worked on a campaign for me.

He never acted for me, and he is not my political manager. You are a scandal monger, that is what you are. There is absolutely not a word of truth in what the hon. gentleman said yesterday, and you ask us about integrity? Look at your own integrity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Justice will know that to call another Hon. Member a scandal monger is equally unparliamentary, and he will withdraw it.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the term scandal monger and say monger of scurrilousness.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Minister is correct and the statement I made yesterday is incorrect, I will apologize to the House. However, that is not the information I had.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I have a long way to go to duplicate some of the things that he said in opposition.

My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The conflict of interest guidelines clearly state that "A Minister shall not accord preferential treatment in relation to any official matter to relatives or friends or to organizations in which relatives or friends have an interest". There is no exception for sons and daughters, no matter how brilliant. Either the guidelines apply or they do not apply.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister's interpretation of the guidelines permit the type of appointment that we have referred to yesterday and today? You are not the Acting Prime Minister, but the Minister of Justice.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): You want to impugn my integrity and you try to question someone else? Here I am, brother, come and get me! I am the one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Copps: Is there a doctor in the House?

Mr. Crosbie: Just quieten down, baby.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: In other words, cop out. The short answer to the question—

Mr. Nunziata: Sexist.

Mr. Crosbie: There was no preferential treatment because the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Axworthy: You are a disgrace.

Mr. Nunziata: Shame on you.

Mr. Crosbie: You bunch of poltroons can shout all you like.

Mr. Nunziata: Shame on you.

Mr. Crosbie: The rat pack can quieten down. The titmice can quieten down. When I am defending myself and my family I am not afraid of anybody in this hall, I'll tell you that!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Sheila will get you outside.

Ms. Copps: Don't talk to us about families.

An Hon. Member: Sheila wants you outside, John.

Mr. Crosbie: Loudmouth punks.

An Hon. Member: Don't like the truth, John?

Mr. Crosbie: We are done with the rabble; now on with the other guys. What do you have to say over there, Robinson?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

APPOINTMENT OF LEGAL AGENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, former Liberal Cabinet Ministers are the last people on the face of this earth who should complain about porkbarrelling and patronage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: Talk about sanctimonious.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, there is a fundamental issue at stake here with respect to the hiring or the awarding of contracts to members of Ministers' families which are not done on the basis of merit.

Will the Minister of Justice confirm that it was Conservative Members of Parliament and defeated Conservative candidates who were consulted with respect to appointments of federal agents for the Department of Justice? In light of that, does he not recognize that he has breached not only the conflict of interest guidelines but has betrayed the trust of the people of Canada? In those circumstances will he not do the honourable thing, recognize that he has breached those guidelines and betrayed the trust of the people of this country through this kind of blatant porkbarrelling, and submit his resignation as did his colleague, the former Minister of National Defence?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman has a serious question that is not put in a scurrilous manner. My answer to him is no. I would certainly resign if I thought in any way, shape, or form that I was not complying with the conflict of interest rules and regulations.

I have resigned from Governments before. I am my own man. I have never done anything but act in accordance with my own conscience. If I thought for a minute that there was a conflict of interest here, or any impropriety, I would be gone like the birds—and I would miss the hon. gentleman.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: In deciding who should be legal agents for the Government of Canada, the first consideration is competence, as it must be. The second consideration is whether or not you know the people. The third consideration might well be whether or not, in a political sense, they are known to the Government. Therefore one knows whether they can be trusted. There are all kinds of considerations that enter into this practice. It has been the practice in Canada for 120 years. It is the practice in Manitoba and in Saskatchewan when there was an NDP Government—

Mr. Speaker: Order—

Mr. Crosbie: I think we are acting no differently from that.

Mr. Speaker: —I think that answer is long enough.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, now we get to the root of the matter. The Minister is saying it is a matter of political trust. You do not appoint legal agents on the basis of their political stripe, Mr. Speaker, you appoint them on the basis of their merit and their competence. That is what this Minister has not done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: My supplementary question is to the Deputy Prime Minister. The guidelines with respect to conflict of interest are very clear in these circumstances. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not recognize that the Minister of Justice has flagrantly breached these particular guidelines and, if they mean anything at all, will he not suggest politely to his colleague that he do the honourable thing, step down as Minister of Justice, and recognize the blatant political pork barrelling for what it is?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Deputy Prime Minister—we are heart to heart and soul to soul—for allowing me to reply.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I would not brag about that, John.

Mr. Crosbie: There is no violation of conflict of interest guidelines. There has been no preferential treatment for anyone. As a matter of fact I feel sorry for the two firms with which these young fellows are associated. They did work amounting to $900 in the case of one firm, and $700 and some odd in the case of the other firm, while other firms in Newfoundland were making many tens of thousands of dollars.

The decision is made by departmental lawyers whom they wish to appoint. In the case of the Income Tax Act, three firms in St. John's and nine firms in Newfoundland can be appointed to do income tax prosecutions. In the case of the Fisheries Act, six firms in Newfoundland can be appointed. The Department decides, not the Minister. There is no preference, Mr. Speaker, for anyone involved in the situation as far as the Minister is concerned. Nine firms in one case, and six in the other.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EFFECT ON LOW-INCOME GROUP

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who, last week in Montreal, said that before the Budget there was an acute shortage of rich in the country. That may be debatable. What is not debatable is that after the Budget we now have a surplus of poor. Was the Minister aware, and I suppose more important, does he really care—and these numbers have been confirmed by the Canadian Council on Social Development—that, as a direct result of his Budget, from now until 1990 there will be an additional 750,000 Canadians, three-quarters of a million, thrown below the poverty line?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me say quite clearly to the Hon. Member that, yes, those figures are important to me if in fact they are accurate.

I have said on a number of occasions here that what we are trying to do is meet in this Budget two major problems, that of unemployment and that of controlling the national debt. If we do not address those two problems in a clear way, and a way that can be successful, then action that is forgone today will force out good programs tomorrow, regardless of what the Hon. Member and I might think. That is why we have to take action today. As I have said before, everybody in Canada has been asked to play a small role.

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF FULL INDEXATION OF SOCIAL SECURITY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Where we differ, Mr. Speaker, is that deficit reduction should not be put on the backs of the poor. My question is very simple. Will the Minister of Finance do the only thing that is honourable and morally acceptable, take the right course, and restore full indexation to both the family benefits package and the elderly package?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wonder where the Hon. Member was in 1982 when the action of the Government at that time reduced the indexation factor from about 11.9 per cent to 6 per cent. I do not recall hearing the Hon. Member speaking out at that time.

What we did in this Budget, and in November, was to bring in a much enhanced spousal allowance. We brought in the new definition of disability which will affect a number of senior citizens. We have left in place the pension fund income deduction, and we have left in place the $1,000 interest deduction of which many retired Canadians were making use. This is a fair Budget, and I think it is widely regarded as such.

GOVERNMENT'S CONSULTATION PAPER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He will recall that in January of this year he presented a consultation paper called Child and Elderly Benefits. If I can refer it to him, he said "In the Government's view no change is required in the old age security-guaranteed income supplement payment system."

Given that the Government has now brought forward changes which the Minister indicated to the public of Canada and, in particular, to our seniors would not take place, will the Minister explain to those people how he can stand in his place and defend the government proposals to deindex pensions, given that he made a solemn promise to them that that would not happen?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member takes a look at the words he used, there is full indexing on the guaranteed income supplement.

An Hon. Member: There is not.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): There is partial indexing on the old age security. Let us keep that in mind first. Second, if the Hon. Member takes a look at the comments, the question being debated, and that he and I debated on the floor of the House of Commons, which was the question of universality, and any change with respect to people who were getting old age security on the basis of having reached the age of 65, as a result of the Budget he will very clearly see that the point of universality has been maintained. Everyone who was eligible pre-Budget is also eligible post-Budget.

OLD AGE SECURITY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the same document the Minister said: "After careful consideration the Government has decided not to put forward a consultation option for the reform of elderly benefits". Why has the Minister decided to support what the Government is now doing by way of reform of elderly benefits by way of deindexing the old age security, without the benefit of allowing those citizens most affected to bring to the Government's attention, by way of petition or otherwise, their views about the actions of the Government? I repeat: why has the Minister defended the Government's action when he publicly said that there would be no change to the old age security or the guaranteed income system as a result of the Government's review?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is the same question which the Hon. Member just posed.

Mr. Althouse: You avoided it the last time.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The same answer is applicable to the second question as to the first.

I also remind the Hon. Member that he has said nothing about changes to the Pension Benefits Standards Act. Those changes also were introduced. Those are positive standards, and the Hon. Member has not asked for the same application to be applied to those positive steps as well.

The last point I make to the Hon. Member is that he keeps using the word deindexing. I suggest he not use the word because senior citizens' pensions have not been deindexed fully, as he likes to leave the impression. There is full indexation on GIS and partial indexation on OAS.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister stood in his place, and when he travelled across the country trying to defend what the Minister of Finance was attempting to implement, namely, changes to the pension systems of the elderly, prior to Christmas, he said quite clearly that there would be no change to the old age pension system.

I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare again how can he stand in his place and defend the changes which the Government has brought forward to the old age pension system after having said to the pensioners that he, the Minister of Health, would defend them against any possible change by the Government that would be detrimental to their pension income? How can the Minister stand up and defend those changes? Has he no shame, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I go back to the first answer I gave the Hon. Member. What he is now trying to say is that the pre-Christmas debate, that the issue at the time of the Christmas debate—

Mr. Deans: You focused it.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I listened to you. Would you be so kind?

Mr. Benjamin: Pray.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The point made at that time and the charges made as to the points which the Minister of Finance made was that universality would be changed, that this Government was not committed to universality. That was the point.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member when he looks at those comments and the issue he will find that universality has been maintained in the Budget, as we said was going to be done before Christmas, and that has always been the position of this Party.

FINANCE

MODIFICATION OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS—IMPACT ON DEFICIT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I made a list, in chronological order, of statements made inside and outside the House by the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance, statements in which they were all committed to the premise that changes in social programs would not be used to reduce the deficit. My question to the Minister of Finance is as follows: Could the Minister inform the House why his Government has not met the commitments made in this House, especially in connection with the paper tabled in the House in January by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, which, in referring to the elderly and low-income families, says that any changes made in income programs will improve benefits for those most in need?

● (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have responded in part to the question of the Hon. Member. We have enhanced the spousal allowance for many low income Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64. We have broadened the disability definition which will help 125,000 Canadians, many of whom are senior citizens.

In addition, so that the Hon. Member does not get as aggressive as he likes to get in the House, let me recall to him that during the last 10 years federal government spending on social programs dropped from about 50 per cent to the current level of less than 44 per cent. There is a very good reason for this. It is the same reason which has motivated us in this exercise here. We have the huge problem of the federal government debt. The Hon. Member may not understand it, but senior citizens understand it, and they understand that it is necessary to take action now because, if we do not take action now, we will lose more programs in the future.

PENSIONS

INDEXATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party always manages to get its priorities wrong. They now have a new Robin Hood who steals from the poor to give to the rich.

My supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the Minister inform the House whether he will have the same courage shown by Miss Bégin, former Minister of National Health and Welfare, and Mrs. Gold, who is responsible for the Advisory Council on Aging, and go back to Cabinet and demand that his colleague grant full indexation, not only for the supplement but also for the basic Old Age Security pension for the elderly who are most in need?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member of his speech of November 30, 1982, in which he was defending the six and five program, and said that senior citizens understood deindexing, that they understood inflation, and that they understood what inflation did to pensions. I say: read your own words.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Hon. Member's discomfort at having had his words read back to him. My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Despite what he said to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, three facts remain—first, that the Minister made a commitment that there would be no changes in the system; second, that he led Canadian pensioners to believe that changes in the pension system were not even at issue, that it was not something on which they needed to be consulted; and, third, that there is—

Mr. Speaker: And, third, there is a question, please?

Mr. Blaikie: How much will it take? How many national and regional pensioners' associations, how many petitions, how many Conservative back-benchers, how many individual pensioners telephoning constituency offices across the country? How much will it take before the Minister gets his courage back, goes to Cabinet and says to the Government: "You are going to keep that commitment I made to the people of Canada in my consultations with them"?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member, when he talks to his senior citizens, will also explain to them that to maintain pensions and the social programs which we want to maintain, and that Canadians, regardless of political background, want to maintain—

Mr. Althouse: Why didn't you say that in your paper, then?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We have said all along that if we continue with the largest single amount being debt payments, it takes away the flexibility not only of the Government but of our senior citizens. I remind the Hon. Member again that in the Budget it was very clearly pointed out that the matter would be monitored. I said yesterday in the House, as well, that we will continue monitoring. However, I say to him that the greatest damage which can be done to Canada's senior citizens is through the inability of the Government to maintain those programs, because they will be drowned in red ink.

CONCEPT OF FAIRNESS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, senior citizens, like everyone else, not only recognize the problem of the national debt but the moral question of fairness. I ask the Minister, on their behalf, what is fair about debt reduction which involves sacrifices on the part of old age pensioners that they were promised by this Government they would not have to make, and involves shelters, loopholes, and profits for the corporate sector and the rich? What is fair about debt reduction in that way? Why should he expect pensioners to accept that kind of debt reduction? They did not vote for that.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member what is fair about jeopardizing future plans and programs because of debt? What is fair about asking generations yet unborn to pay for a debt which will reduce their opportunities? They will also be the relatives of senior citizens. I say to him that there has to be a balance. We are maintaining the programs, we are maintaining universality, and we have to look at other issues. I hope, when he talks to senior citizens that he looks at those issues as well.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF YUKON GOVERNMENT LEADER, TONY PENIKETT

CANADA POST CORPORATION

POSTAL DELAYS—REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF RATE INCREASES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue I will direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. I have here an envelope which took 147 days—

Mr. Speaker: Just the question; no displays.

Mr. Attewell: I have seen envelopes, Mr. Speaker, which took 147 days to reach Vancouver, and 145 days to reach Scarborough. Surely we should not be considering a rate increase before we make the Post Office more efficient?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I can inform him that today, the Minister is in his riding to deal with the problems of his constituents. His question has been noted and will be passed on to the Minister.

WOMEN

TRAINING PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. During the election campaign the Conservative Party promised women all sorts of good things, especially jobs and effective measures to help them cope with the technological revolution. Like the President of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, whom you referred to, I would like to know why the Budget does not contain tax benefits or other incentives to encourage companies to invest in training programs designed to meet the needs of women?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am really quite taken aback by that question. Obviously the Hon. Member has not gone through the Budget. I agree with the comments that it is a big Budget. There is a lot in it, including $900 million in a very innovative program for training and development, a large part of which will be directed to the benefit of women, to the benefit of youth, and to the benefit of middle-aged people who lose their jobs. In addition, I am sure she is aware of the spousal allowance which we enhanced last fall, and the very, very far-reaching changes in pension plans, particularly the provision for membership in pension plans for part-time workers, many of whom are women.

EQUALITY IN EMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read what the President of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women is asking for. She also states:

—where are the specific measures forcing companies to use tax benefits in the form of investment in human resources? What measures have been established to make sure that companies offer training programs to meet the needs of various labour market target groups, especially women?

Why does the Budget approach belie the lofty challenges of the employment equality program announced last March 8? Why this sudden reliance on free market forces to given women a decent place on the labour market?

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member is speaking for Canadian women across the country. That is certainly not the message which my colleagues and I have been receiving with respect to this matter. In that $900 million fund we have set out an innovative way of providing some degree of direct job creation—not dead-end jobs, as was the case with the previous Government, but jobs that have a degree of career development which women can use, as well as youth, and middle-aged Canadians. That was a positive step forward. However, a far more positive step forward in the Budget is the encouragement of small business. Many women are small business people. They will benefit from these provisions. Many women will be hired as a result of these job creation activities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PENSIONS

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare of the third commitment he made in his January paper with respect to applying any savings in program costs to pressing social objectives, as opposed to deficit reduction. How can the Minister now get up in the House and defend the damage done to old age pensioners on the basis that it will reduce the deficit, when he made the commitment in his paper that he would not apply any savings to such deficit reduction?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would take a look at the expenditures with respect to the Guaranteed Income Supplement, the OAS, veterans pensions and the social policy, including the fiscal plan and the increases in that fiscal plan, he will see that there has not been a reduction in that envelope.

AMOUNT OF FUNDING

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I can count better than the Minister. It is clear to me, just as it is clear to old age pensioners, that they will lose up to $1,500 over the next five years. How can the Minister justify that? Is he not aware that, in fact, a few simple increases in tax, such as putting a minimum tax in place now instead of later, and such as taking interest deductions out of the tax system, would bring in at least as much money to cover deficit costs as the incredible amount he is taking out of the pockets of pensioners?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has changed the premise from the first question he asked, when he went from a global figure to an individual one. If the Hon. Member would take a look at the pension plans, having in mind the principles which the Minister of Finance and myself have stated, he will see that we are preserving pensions. He will see that we want to increase pensions, such as we have done through the spouse's allowance program.

The Hon. Member can look at any example he wants. I suggest he take a look at Sweden and consider what is happening there in terms of social policy and marginal tax rates. I say to the Hon. Member that those programs are being retained and enhanced. However, we have to create wealth, which the Budget will do.

PROTECTION OF PENSION FUND INVESTMENTS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the Minister is aware, all Canadians have been waiting for pension reform. That reform will now come about, complete with a wide range of pension plans and a greater use of pension funds. What protection, or insurance, will the Minister give to those employees having an interest in pension funds deriving from the failures or bankruptcies of employer-sponsored plans?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member points out is that there are far-reaching pension reforms contained in the Budget, in terms of the pension benefit standards, the ability of Canadians to save through pensions, and the investment of those pension plans. The Hon. Member raises a good point, which he has raised before. I appreciate his interest in this matter. It is a question for which my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, is responsible. I will certainly discuss the matter with him.

STATUS OF WOMEN

REPRESENTATION ON GOVERNMENT PROGRAM STUDY TEAMS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In studying the budget document entitled New Management Initiatives we have found that in the 12 important study teams which have been put in place to review all government programs, appointed by the Minister, male representation is 87 per cent as compared to only 13 per cent for women. If one removes the junior administrative positions from the equation, female participation is less than 10 per cent. Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with the comments of the Minister responsible for the status of women who said in committee last week that this is "totally unacceptable"? How can the Minister justify this totally unacceptable situation? Is this another example of the Government's lack of commitment to equality for women?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is certainly no lack of commitment. I agree with the assessment made by the Secretary of State that it is unacceptable that we have such a low number of women participating in this very important work. I can assure the Hon. Member that, as part of the terms of reference which Ministers provided to the private sector advisory committee, that was one of the most important criteria advanced. They, in their search for women, were often disappointed, and were refused for one reason or another by women of great talent and ability, who were asked to serve. However, every effort has been made, and is continuing to be made, to involve women in this important work.

I might use this occasion to tell the Hon. Member that, in a related but separate task which I have in reviewing the regulatory agencies of the Government, Ms. Louise Martin of the private sector has agreed to head up that study team, along with her appropriate opposite member from the public sector. I am grateful to be able to make this announcement now.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we want to leave the people of Canada with the impression that this matter deals only with private sector appointments. It also includes government support staff and members of the public sector.

I am glad to hear what the Deputy Prime Minister had to say in terms of his commitment. However, last November the Leader of the Opposition asked a question with respect to the concern he had about this very study group. I can say that the Deputy Prime Minister met—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The first question was long. Is the Member now ready to come to a question?

Mr. de Corneille: Yes, he is, Mr. Speaker.

What type of commitments can the Minister now give to reinforce the promise he made last November 19 to the Leader of the Opposition that the dimensions the Leader of the Opposition mentioned will be eventually included? Is the Minister going to wait until these study committees have completed their tasks?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, not having described the particular dimensions to which the Hon. Member refers, it is difficult to respond in a dimensional way to his question. Assuming that those dimensions were the inclusion of women in our work, we continue to exert every possible effort to involve women in that work, together with other criteria which come to bear on the recruiting for that work, including regional representation and the fullest possible cross-section of Canadian participation in the work, business, labour, and so on.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Earlier in the Question Period he said that when it comes to the appointment of legal agents the Department decides, and not the Minister. Why is it that when the question of the appointment of the brother of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as a legal agent in Alberta came up, the Minister said in the House on May 6, and I quote: "I can inform the House that I appoint legal agents for the Department of Justice." Surely the Minister did the same thing with respect to his sons and the firms with which they are associated as he did with respect to the brother of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Why isn't the Minister of Justice giving a clear, straight, and consistent answer today along the lines of the answer he gave on May 6?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if I am asked a straight and consistent question, then I can give a straight and consistent answer.

The answer to the question is quite simple. The Minister approves certain lists of legal agents. For example, there is a list of legal firms in Newfoundland approved to be used by the Department. There are six firms approved to be used for income tax prosecutions, and I believe nine for prosecutions under the Fisheries Act. Then, when a matter comes up, the Department will decide who on the list it wishes to use or, if it thinks there is no one on the list who is competent, then perhaps it will turn to the Minister to see if "X" will be all right or if he can recommend "Y".

• (1500)

With respect to the Olympic matter referred to by the hon. gentleman, that was one particular matter. That was not a matter of a standing agent. We have been discussing standing agents under Statutes of the Parliament of Canada for criminal prosecutions, not for advice on Olympic matters. Those are two entirely different matters. The hon. gentleman should try to exercise his mind a bit so he would comprehend that difference.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Monday, June 3, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED OBJECTIONABLE REMARKS OF MR. CROSBIE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, earlier today in the House I was told by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to "Quiet down, baby". Subsequent to that—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Subsequent to that, the same Minister referred to me and some of my colleagues as titmice. I would like to inform the House and those Conservative Members who find this very humorous that I am a Member of Parliament, I am 32 years old and I was elected to represent the people of Hamilton East. I resent the comments of the Minister who is responsible for the equality of women in this country. I resent the remarks he made in the House when he said, "Quiet down, baby". I am not his baby, and I am no one's baby. I would like him to withdraw those remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member was referring to me, I might respond. I certainly would not think of saying,, "Quiet down, baby," to her. I was talking to another opposition Member. Why she should think she was the baby involved is beyond me. However, if it is not the rat pack or the titmice, whoever the shoe fits should wear it. That is all I can say, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I perceive that to be an insult not only to me but to the women of Canada. It was a sexist remark directed at me personally and I would ask the Minister to withdraw it.

STATEMENT MADE BY MR. ROBINSON

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of privilege with respect to a statement made by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) during Question Period. He accused me as a former Liberal Minister of the practice of pork-barrelling.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: If the shoe fits, wear it.

Mr. Allmand: That is right. I was a Minister of the Crown for seven years. I would like to assure the House that I never made any appointments that could be considered pork-barrelling. I challenge not only the Hon. Member for Burnaby but any Member of the House to give the House one example of my appointing a member of my family or a friend or of doing anything resembling pork-barrelling. If they can do so, I will resign. I put that challenge to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: There is clearly no question of privilege here.

ACID RAIN

COMPOSITION AND ORDER OF REFERENCE OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: How many brothers do you have?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: All of you in this House are my brothers.

Mr. Nystrom: Are you saying that Pauline is your brother?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I had better not comment on that. You are my brothers and my sisters.

I rise on a point of order with respect to two items of House business on which there have been consultations. At this point in time, I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, that if you were to ask for unanimous consent to two orders, which I would bring forward at this time, you would find that there would be a disposition to pass them by unanimous consent. The first order relates to committee on acid rain and reads as follows:

That a Special Committee consisting of Messrs. Blaikie, Caccia, Darling, Ferland, Gurbin, Schellenberg and St-Julien be appointed to act as a Special Committee on Acid Rain;

That the Committee hold hearings to review all aspects of acid rain;

That the evidence adduced by the Sub-Committee on Acid Rain of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry in the First Session of the present Parliament be deemed to have been referred to the Committee;

That the Committee have all the powers provided to standing committees pursuant to Standing Order 69(8);

That the provisions of sections (4) and (9) of Standing Order 69 of the House of Commons should be suspended, unless otherwise agreed to by this Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT

ORDER OF REFERENCE OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there has been a further matter of agreement between the Parties, and it is an order of reference with respect to the Standing Committee on Transport. The order of reference reads as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Transport be empowered to study and report on federal transportation policies and programs affecting Northern, remote and isolated areas, and in particular,

(1) the criteria which should be used to define the adequacy of transportation services to a community;

(2) the manner in which the cost of services should be assessed in terms of cost to the government versus the need to provide a necessary transportation infrastructure; and

(3) the degree to which the government should participate in the provision of a transportation infrastructure in the North as opposed to the government revising its role in the ownership or regulation of transportation services themselves;

That the Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That the Committee have the power to retain expert, professional, technical and clerical staff.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Government House Leader. I am wondering if he would hold this motion in abeyance until tomorrow. I believe the matter needs further consultation, so perhaps he could hold it in abeyance until tomorrow.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if the transport critic for the New Democratic Party requests that I hold it in abeyance until tomorrow, I would be glad to do so. I had understood that there had been a consensus on this motion, but I would be glad to hold it in abeyance for another day.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-15, an Act respecting investment in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Regional Development; and Motions No. 27 (Mr. Langdon) (p. 5367) and Nos. 30 and 67 (Mr. Axworthy) (p. 5368).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in an effort to be sure that the record of this morning's proceedings will show what actually took place. I would like to ask the House and the Table to take a look at what happened.
