(c) Turkeys—frozen—Tariff item 9—Poultry and game, n.o.p., 12½ per cent, but not including turkeys prepared by removal of the feathers, heads, and all or part of the viscera, with or without removal of the feet, but not cooked or divided into portions.

Under the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Turkeys prepared by removal of the feathers, heads and all or part of the viscera, with or without removal of the feet, but not cooked or divided into portions are dutiable at the ad valorem rate of 12½ per cent, the duty to be not less than 5 cents per pound, nor more than 10 cents per pound.

INCOME TAX INTEREST RATES

Question No. 59—Mr. Hodgson:

1. What rate of interest is charged for overdue income tax payments?
2. What rate of interest is allowed by the income tax department for overpayments collected by their officials?
3. Is any interest allowed on advance payments of income tax, such as collections at source?

Answer by: Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue):

1. 6 per cent.

2. Where ordinary overpayments of income tax are being refunded interest at the rate of 2 per cent is included in such refunds. Overpayments arising from decisions subsequent to the filing of notices of appeal or objection by taxpayers are refunded together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent.

3. No.

HOUSING STATISTICS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 64—Mr. McCulloch (Pictou):

1. What was the estimated number of houses in Nova Scotia in 1935?
2. What is the present number?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

1. No estimate available for 1935. At the time of the 1931 census there were 106,223 houses in Nova Scotia, exclusive of hotels, large rooming houses, institutions and camps.

2. The estimated number of houses in Nova Scotia in September 1956 was 165,000. This is the latest estimate available and the definition of a house used here is comparable to that in the answer to No. 1 above.

SALES TAX, FLOWERS, VEGETABLES AND FRUIT

Question No. 66—Mr. Hansell:

1. What is the sales tax on the following: potted plants, cut flowers, fresh vegetables and fresh fruits?
2. At what point of sale is the sales tax imposed; at the source, at the wholesale or at the retail price?
3. Is there a difference in the rate of sales tax on these items? If so, what explanation does the government offer in not (a) removing the tax; (b) making the tax uniform?

Answer by: Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue):

1. Ten per cent on potted plants and cut flowers if the annual sales thereof exceed $500.

Fresh fruits and fresh vegetables are specifically exempted.

2. On the sale price of the manufacturer or producer.

3. No. The rate is 10 per cent.

MARITIME PROVINCES POPULATION

Question No. 69—Mr. Buchanan:

1. What was the approximate combined population of the provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia in 1931, 1941, 1951?
2. What is it today?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

Questions

1 and 2. Combined population of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

1956	1951	1941	1931

VESSEL CONSTRUCTION PAYMENTS TO FISHERMEN, N. B.

Question No. 79—Mr. Robichaud:

1. What is the total amount paid up to December 31, 1956, to fishermen of the province of New Brunswick, under the subsidy program for assistance in the construction of vessels of the dragger or long-liner type?
2. What is the total amount paid for the same period to fishermen of Gloucester county, New Brunswick?

Answer by: Mr. MacNaught, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Fisheries:

1. $413,206.25.
2. $353,553.80.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENTS—ACTION OF GOVERNMENT ON FINANCING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Trade and Commerce tabled the order in council concerning Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. Apparently there also were agreements between some department of the government and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, or between Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation and the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. I wonder whether the minister would also table such agreement or agreements.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): When the documents left my office the agreement affecting Trans-Canada Pipe Lines was tabled with the order in council. I think the hon. member will find that the Clerk has both documents, but if not I will be glad to furnish anything which has been prepared and not tabled.

While I am speaking on this subject I might say that the financing of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines has now been approved by the conservation board of the province of Alberta and by the board of transport commissioners as well as by the government of Canada. So I think we can assume that that subject need not be pursued further.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): On that subject, would the minister say whether last year, when I understand there was a new agreement following the steel strike in the United States, the deadline for construction to Winnipeg was extended, and, if so, to what date; or was it simply lifted without any definite date being set?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There was no new agreement after the steel strike in the United States. The only agreement which had been made affecting the western portion provided for protection against force majeure, and if the cost of the line is not repaid before the due date, which, I think, is April 2, the question as to whether force majeure occurred would be interesting; but as we are quite sure that the advances will be repaid shortly, the matter is purely academic.

Mr. Fulton: Am I not right in understanding that the agreement provided for construction to Winnipeg by December 31, 1956, in the absence of strikes or something which rendered supplies unavailable? Surely a deadline was written into the agreement. Was that deadline extended to another date or was the company relieved of any obligation to meet the deadline with respect to construction?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, the company was not relieved of obligation to meet the deadline, but the obligation can be discharged under the agreement by the repayment of the government loan, and it will be discharged in that way.

Mr. Fulton: So there is some deadline by which the company is obliged to complete construction to Winnipeg?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Or by paying back their debts to the government.

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): May I ask a supplementary question with regard to the proposed public financing. Has the minister considered whether the proposed offering of bonds and common shares in a package, or unit, complies with the agreement of the Trans-Canada company to make a public offering in Canada of common shares?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, sir, the common shares are being offered in Canada and considerably more than half the total of the outstanding shares will have been offered in Canada when the financing is complete.

Mr. Michener: The reason I asked whether the minister had considered this matter is because I understand the public offering would be an offering of bonds and shares, whereas the agreement called for the offering of common shares. Presumably, common shares cannot be purchased alone.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is true, but the agreement nevertheless calls for an offer of shares in Canada, and shares are being offered.

Mr. Fulton: On condition you buy bonds.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What difference does that make?

Mr. Fulton: It amounts to a condition of sale.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There was no offer of that kind in any agreement. It was a verbal understanding with the group that represented the ownership of the pipe line, which I conveyed to the house. The understanding was that after the financing had been completed more than one-half of the total outstanding shares would have been offered to purchasers in Canada; and I may say, from reports reaching me, that all those shares will be taken up by purchasers in Canada, and I am satisfied the demand for further shares will still exist.

Mr. Michener: May I take it that the minister considers what is being offered as in compliance with the agreement?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

[Later:]

Mr. Fulton: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the agreement of May 8, 1956, clearly provides that the Trans-Canada company undertook to build the western section of the line by December 31, 1956, why has the company been relieved of all obligations with respect to a deadline for the completion of this section of the line and the only obligation remaining is to repay the loan? How could they just be relieved of that obligation?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, Mr. Speaker, possibly if the government had wished to acquire the western section under the terms of the mortgage and had wished to foreclose the mortgage, they could have attempted to declare the company in default. I think the company would have had a good defence because, as everyone knows, the cause of their default was that a steel strike in the United States had interfered with the delivery of pipe into western Canada for a period of about two and a half months. However, the government has not claimed default and, as I say, the company can discharge all claims of the government of Canada by the repayment of the money that was advanced to the company for the western section.

Mr. Fulton: My question is, why was not a new deadline established? Granted, for the sake of argument, that we agree with the statement, why did you not negotiate a new deadline instead of lifting all obligations with respect to a deadline?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We lifted no obligations and we set no new deadline. We wanted to reserve the position if at any time we desired to contest the position of the company as being in default, we would base our default claim on the original agreement. No new agreement was made and no agreement was lifted.

Mr. Fulton: The company is in default? Is the company in default?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You say so. Let the courts say whether you are right.

Mr. Fulton: How can it not be in default under the agreement?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is a matter for the courts to decide, namely to what extent the force majeure provision remedied the apparent default.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The courts cannot decide after the order in council was passed last Friday.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Would you like us to declare the company in default? I know you are trying to kill this pipe-line project—

Mr. Harkness: That old canard will not get you anywhere.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): —instead of taking the logical step which will permit it to be completed on time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that why you made the order in council?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Certainly, that is why we made the order in council. We wanted our money back and the pipe line built.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was wholly improper to have made the order in council.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am glad to hear that legal opinion from the leader of a great party, and I will remember it.

Mr. Fulton: In view of the fact that parliament was told last summer that the bill had to go through by June 7 in order that construction could be completed by a certain date, and construction was not completed by that date, why has the government not held the company in default when construction was not completed?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The reason that the bill had to go through by a certain date was so that the company would be justified in undertaking the building of the line under the then agreement. That was the agreement with the company which was prevailing at that time. As I say, if we had preferred ownership of that uncompleted pipe line to the return of the money advanced by the government we might have gone into the courts and tried to enforce default against the company. We are anxious to have a pipe line completed from Alberta to Montreal. In spite of all the efforts to prevent it from across the house we believe that the project will be completed, and completed by autumn of 1958.

Mr. Fulton: No matter how many times they break their word you will do nothing about it.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask an overall question. Is there any doubt in the mind of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that this pipe line is not going to go through? Is there any doubt, anywhere, east or west? I think that should end it if we get a good answer.

Mr. Pearkes: There is no answer.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited has ever met any deadline that was set for it?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, the pipe line met the deadline of satisfying the government that the pipe line has finances and that it is able and willing to pay back the advances relating to the western section by April 2, 1957. That deadline will be met.

Mr. Knowles: How did they meet that deadline?

Mr. Castleden: I would like to ask—

Mr. Knowles: I would like an answer. How many extensions had the company been given before they met that deadline?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the document giving that information was tabled yesterday. The order in council sets it all out in detail. If my hon. friend has not read the order in council he is not as well prepared as usual. Perhaps he has read it and knows the answer himself.

Mr. Knowles: Yes. It had four extensions.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): All right.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—ATTITUDE OF ALBERTA GOVERNMENT TOWARD EXPORT OF GAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the fact that there are no plans at the present time for extending the branch pipe line to Emerson in any way affected the attitude of the Alberta government toward the export of gas from that province through this line?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My hon. friend is asking about the attitude of the province of Alberta and I think he had better ask Premier Manning that question. As I say, the conservation board of the province of Alberta has approved the financing of the pipe line. Apart from that I have no information as to the attitude of the province of Alberta toward the pipe line.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Was not the consent with regard to the export of gas from that province based upon an offer by this government and an understanding by this government that there would be transmission allowed to the United States through Emerson?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That was the original proposal, yes, that the government would combine two companies, one of which was formed to export gas to the United States and the other of which was formed to take gas to Toronto via an all-Canadian route. The purpose was to preserve the permits of both companies. The government has not interfered with export to the United States; the company has decided that it does not plan to provide for export at the moment.

NATIONAL CAPITAL PLAN

REQUEST FOR APPROVAL OF SPORTS STADIUM AND EXHIBITION GROUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister consider asking parliament to approve the expenditure of public funds for the building and construction of a national sports stadium and exhibition ground as currently proposed by the city of Ottawa?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I do not recall, Mr. Speaker, that that matter has yet come before the government for consideration. All the proposals that seem to apply to the general capital plan and which come before the government are seriously considered, and if and when that happens in respect of a stadium an announcement will be made.

Mr. Argue: Was this item not included in the recommendations made a few years ago for improving the national capital area?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I would not want to answer offhand. I would want to have my answer very accurate and I would want to look at the report referred to to see if that subject was mentioned in it.

Mr. Argue: I believe it was.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—SITUATION ON HOBBEMA RESERVE, ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Carl O. Nickle (Calgary South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Would the minister comment on the charge by Mrs. John Gorman, legal counsel for the Alberta Indian association, as reported in this morning's Globe and Mail, that the action of the minister in holding up a petition directed to the Queen is an act contrary to British justice and a denial of the right of subjects to petition Her Majesty in a case where it is felt an injustice is being done and solemn Indian treaties of the 1870's are being broken by representatives of the Queen? Will the minister indicate whether or not he will send that petition to Her Majesty, to whom it is addressed, and also by what authority the petition was transferred from the Governor General's office to him?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have said once or twice before in the house that I did not think it would be wise for a minister of the crown to give legal opinions of his own in the house.

Mr. Nickle: Would the minister advise the house of the number of petitions and resolutions he has received protesting the Hobbema Indian reserve action from home and school associations, church organizations, bar societies and other groups of conscientious Canadians, and will he advise the house of the nature of his replies to each of the three or four specific requests for amendment of the 1951 Indian Act and Indian policy in general contained in these resolutions and petitions?

Mr. McIlraith: What subject are you debating now?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I can give offhand the number I have received. It is quite considerable. As to the second part of the question, I have given the same answer to these petitions as I have given in the house, namely, that a procedure was laid down by parliament for an appeal to the courts and I think it would be a very extraordinary thing to change that law in the midst of a proceeding and to deny to those who now have an appeal to the courts the appeal that was given to them by parliament. I repeat what I have said before, that there is an opportunity of appeal to the courts provided by parliament, that it seems to me that advantage should be taken of that opportunity, and it seems to me it would be a very wrong thing and, indeed, rather contemptuous of parliament, to attempt to interfere in any way with that.

I should like to add one other thing. There seems to be a misapprehension that the act of 1951 changed the definition of an Indian. Those hon. members who are lawyers know perfectly well that it did nothing of the kind. No change whatsoever was made in the definition of an Indian by the act of 1951. All it did was to provide legal procedure for determining in certain cases any dispute as to whether a particular person was or was not an Indian. But the law setting out those who are Indians and those who are not Indians still is the law that was in existence at the time this reserve was set up. What is being suggested by the representations that have come to me is that people that some persons allege are squatters on the reserve and have no rights to share in the trust—

Mr. Diefenbaker: After 60 years?

Mr. Pickersgill: —should by an act of parliament be given a share of the trust. That is what the proposition is. If these people are Indians according to the definition which existed at the time the reserve was set up they are entitled to remain on the reserve. If they are not Indians but people whose ancestors squatted on the reserve, the fact that they have been there for a long time does not, as I apprehend it, change the legal situation. It seems to me that until this matter can be brought before a competent court and settled we should not be discussing it here.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the minister whether, in view of the three judgments handed down by courts in Saskatchewan recently, he will reconsider the statement he made a moment ago that the 1951 amendments did not have the effect of changing the meaning of the word "Indian"? I refer to the three judgments given by district court judges within the last few weeks in connection with appeals launched by Indians whose names were erased from the band membership.

Second, I should like to ask the minister this question. In view of the fact that so-called squatters—to use his expression—had in many cases been on the lands of the reserve without challenge for 50 years or 60 years, does he not feel that common justice to these poor unfortunate people demands an amendment at once if the law be what he says it is?

Mr. Pickersgill: If I might answer the second question first, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. It does not seem to me that if the hon.

gentleman's grandfather had had a farm and if he had tolerated someone living on that farm for a long time, it would be an appropriate thing for parliament in our day to pass a statute giving half that farm to the descendant of the person that he and his family had tolerated living on it for that time. That is what his suggestion amounts to. As for the judgments of the courts in Saskatchewan, as I understand it the judgments of the courts in Saskatchewan reversed the registrar. That is why there is an appeal, namely so that the registrar's decision can be considered. If the courts in Saskatchewan reversed the registrar, it will be quite open to the courts in Alberta to do exactly the same thing if there is the same evidence. It does not seem to me that it is proper for me or for anyone here to attempt in advance to prejudge the decision which this parliament, not I, left to the courts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I just ask the minister this question. Is it not a fact that in Saskatchewan where appeals took place—three of them in three different judicial districts—the judges held that the provisions of the act of 1951 did not apply to those who were on the reserves prior to the date on which the statute was passed? If I am correct in my premise, then why does the minister not end this tyranny in the Hobbema reserve on the basis of these judgments which apparently the minister is not going to appeal and which, unless they are followed by Alberta, will result in the law being interpreted in one way in Saskatchewan and in another way in Alberta?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, do you not think that we ought to wait until the courts in Alberta have interpreted it in order to see whether that situation would arise which the hon. gentleman is attempting to forecast as the decision of the courts in Alberta?

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. From whom did he receive the legal advice that the definition of an Indian, as contained in the 1951 amendment, did not change the previous definition of an Indian? Is he aware that at the time the ancestors of these Indians who are now being expelled from the Hobbema and other reserves settled on those reserves the definition of an Indian was anyone who followed the Indian way of life?

Mr. Pickersgill: I should think, sir, that as to the first question my reply would be that the advice I received was advice from the appropriate officer of my department. As to the second question, I would not venture to give an opinion without consulting the documents.

[Later:]

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Will he please answer specifically that portion of my question asked earlier which had nothing whatsoever to do with any legal action under way in Canada at the present time? In other words, by whose authority was the Indians' petition to the Queen transferred from the office of the Governor General to himself? Furthermore, will the minister please indicate whether he will send this petition on to Her Majesty to whom it is addressed?

Mr. Pickersgill: I answered that question yesterday when I indicated that I was seeking advice on this subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we are met with an adamant refusal on the part of the minister to do anything in connection with these unfortunate Indians, I intend to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would he consider looking into this matter and in the meantime giving a stay of proceedings in so far as the eviction of these Indians is concerned? Will he also give consideration to setting up a royal commission to determine the rights of these people who may not have votes but who have the right to consideration by this parliament?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should answer the question just put by the Leader of the Opposition in any way that would commit the government. It may be a very popular cause at this time to try to make much out of the unfortunate situation in which some of those find themselves who have been found to be residing on this reserve and not to be Indians. However, there are legal proceedings that can be taken and should be taken and which I hope will be taken. If they are not taken they can be supplemented by action recommended to this parliament to see that there is consideration by the courts of the question of fact involved in this matter.

This is something which was apparently not considered of very much importance by anyone until a very greatly enhanced value was given to the lands of this reserve by the oil finds either on it or in the surrounding territory. Proprietary rights are now involved and I think they should be decided by the courts, as is always the case.

I have not gone into all the facts but the information I have is that the definition of who is or who is not an Indian entitled to be on the reserve has remained unchanged over the whole time since that reserve was set up. There was a procedure instituted under the act of 1951 to have the question of fact tested if there was a contest as to who had or who had not the right to be treated as an Indian on the Indian reserve. That procedure involved an investigation by commissioners, then a finding by the registrar which was subject to appeal to the district court.

As the hon. gentleman has stated, there have been three cases in the province of Saskatchewan where after investigation and a finding on the investigation by the registrar the courts have found that the registrar's finding was wrong and quashed it. There is nothing to suggest that the district court would now confirm or quash a finding of the registrar in this case, but it is the district court which has been given by parliament the responsibility of doing that. I do not think it would be proper when there is a dispute about proprietary rights to attempt to set up a royal commission to make a decision on that dispute instead of having it decided by the ordinary courts of the country.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Does the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration believe he is holding a pretty hot potato when he delays for 24 hours a message sent to Her Majesty the Queen by her subjects; when he takes over 24 hours to get some legal advice on diverting a petition to Her Majesty? Who is he? Who is the gentleman who dares to do that?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Shall we proceed with orders of the day?

[Later:]

Mr. Harkness: I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister in view of his statement a little while ago that he did not believe the definition of an Indian had been changed. If the definition was not changed in the act of 1951, can he explain to the house why the wording and the clauses defining an Indian which appear in the original act of 1892, I believe, are completely changed in the act of 1951?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I will look at the statute and perhaps the hon. gentleman himself will look at the statute—

Mr. Harkness: I have.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): —and he may be able to find a sufficient explanation in the statute. If not, perhaps he will do as I will do and refer to the discussions that took place when the bill providing for this legislation was before the house. Perhaps we can find there the answer that the hon. gentleman is asking me to give in the house. I think it would help in the expedition of the business of parliament if a lot of us did such work ourselves and got the information by our own research instead of using this period as an opportunity to advertise our interest in the subject.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harkness: In view of what the Prime Minister has just said I would inform him I was on the committee which studied the Indian Act from 1947 to 1949, again in 1950 and 1951 and also last year—

Mr. McIlraith: Is this more advertising?

Mr. Harkness: —and that to my knowledge it has never been maintained before that there was not a very definite change in the definition of an Indian which was written into the act in 1951.

[Later:]

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the minister given consideration to following the course established by a Tory government in the thirties by setting up camps at 20 cents a day to take care of the Indians on the reserves?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DOMINION STORES—REFERENCE TO ADVERTISEMENT IN "GLOBE AND MAIL"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister had a chance to determine whether or not the two-page advertisement in this morning's Globe and Mail by Dominion Stores offering a prize of $2,500 to a lucky customer is a violation of section 179 of the Criminal Code which prohibits the element of chance being used in disposing of merchandise?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the notice I received from my hon. friend of his question, for which I thank him, is divided into two parts and I should prefer to answer the second part of it first. That was as to whether or not the federal Department of Justice is concerned about the testing of possible infractions of the Criminal Code.

Of course the Department of Justice is always interested in the results of criminal proceedings in the courts, particularly from the standpoint as to whether these results disclose the need for amendments to the Criminal Code which it is the responsibility of the Department of Justice to recommend to the government and to parliament. But as I have stated on many occasions in the past—and apparently from this question that is now asked, it should be restated—the responsibility under our constitutional system for the enforcement of the criminal law rests with the provincial attorneys general.

It is for this reason that, in reply to my hon. friend's first question as to whether or not the two full pages of advertisements in this morning's Globe and Mail are violations of section 179 of the Criminal Code, I would point out first that traditionally the Minister of Justice does not express legal opinions in parliament; and second, that if he did so, I cannot see that there would be any purpose in his expressing a legal opinion in respect of an alleged offence which it is the responsibility of the provincial attorney general to prosecute. In the third place, I would not wish to express any kind of opinion at all with respect to these advertisements until I had before me a detailed police report of the complete set of facts upon which crown counsel would have to rely in any prosecution based upon such advertisement.

PERJURY BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE—RESPONSIBILITY FOR ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. If it is not possible for him to get legal advice can he explain the procedure? In other words, will the minister explain to the house how, if a member of the House of Commons receives what he believes to be responsible information relative to alleged perjury before a divorce committee of the other house, a charge of perjury can be laid? Will the minister, if he can, further explain, if no action is taken prior to the transcript of evidence and the divorce bill being received by the House of Commons, what procedure on perjury may then be pursued? I feel that this is a question of urgency, Mr. Speaker, because only a few moments ago you mentioned that divorce bills have been passed by the other place and referred to the House of Commons.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): In reply to my hon. friend's question, I apprehend that where a crime takes place in Ontario the proper official to prosecute is the crown attorney representing the department of the attorney general in the particular judicial district in which the crime took place.

Mr. Winch: But who lays the information if the crime took place in a divorce committee of the other place?

Mr. Garson: I think any interested person could lay it if he wished to do so. My hon. friend himself could do it.

[Later:]

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary question which I think is important. Will the Minister of Justice inform the house whether or not the courts of Ontario have jurisdiction over the other place and the House of Commons and the evidence or operations given before or carried out by a committee of the other place? Will the minister in answering that also inform the house whether if a bill is passed in the other place and the House of Commons dealing with divorce that would not negate any charge by a private member of perjury, with the act having been passed. Third, as a further supplementary question, would the Minister of Justice also tell the house why a private member should have to do the minister's job for him?

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend has been here for a sufficient length of time to have learned some of the basic rules of this house. One of those rules, as has been stated by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) yesterday and by myself just a few moments ago, is that the Minister of Justice does not give legal opinions on the floor of the house to members of the house. If he did and if he were a prudent lawyer I think he would not give an answer to the type of question which my hon. friend has just asked inside of ten seconds after my hon. friend took his seat.

Mr. Winch: Will the minister take that question as notice in order to give himself time to think out a further answer?

FINANCE

REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORT OF STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister correctly reported in a Canadian Press dispatch from Toronto as having said last Monday evening that little businesses may have felt the scarcity of credit more than others? If so, will the minister assure the house that he will do something about his credit restrictions to end such discrimination against such small businesses?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I think I will answer as I answered the questions yesterday, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I will be glad to send a copy of my notes to my hon. friend.

INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF PAYMENTS UNDER MUNICIPAL GRANTS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. As municipalities are now making up their budgets and tax rates for 1957, can the minister say when they will be notified as to what the government will pay them under the Municipal Grants Act?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Yes; I shall be glad to say that. I hope that when we have disposed of the supplementary estimates and such days as are allotted for private members, the Canada Council bill and the Canadian wheat board bill, we will then come to the municipal grants resolution.

Mr. Knowles: Then it will be time to dispose of the government.

HEALTH INSURANCE

REPORTED DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister comment on the report on the front page of this morning's Globe and Mail to the effect that the federal government is now hedging on the question of health insurance? Will he also indicate what steps the federal government proposes to take to make it clear to the Canadian people that this important matter will not be delayed?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for asking this question. I may tell him that a few moments before coming into the house the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Reinke) expressed the feeling that the editorial in the Globe and Mail this morning was one that did not represent the situation—

Mr. Knowles: I referred to the article on the front page.

Mr. Martin: —and that the article on the front page was one that likewise was so far away from the facts that perhaps I should comment on both. I told the hon. gentleman that I thought the editorial and the article spoke for themselves—that there was no one in this house who would not conclude, having followed these events, that I have been interested in this matter from the first and that the government had given every indication, by the initiative it has taken, that it, too, was interested in the matter of hospital insurance.

The government is, of course, not "hedging" in any way. The hon. gentleman has given this matter a great deal of study, and he knows it is very important in all questions of this kind that before we embark upon agreed procedures we clearly understand what we are seeking to do. The important thing to keep in mind is what the federal offer means to Ontario and to other provinces. It means, for Canada as a whole, that the federal government will be meeting half the cost of standard ward care, laboratory and radiological services for all persons in the population who are brought within the scheme.

The federal government, together with, I am sure, every hon. member who has studied this matter, wishes to see everyone possible brought within the scheme in order that the reduced charges which are made possible by this generous offer—and that is what it is—may be made effective for our people. We do not want to see a situation develop in any province where only a small portion of the population is covered and the rest are not. In such a situation, while the federal expenditure would be proportionately reduced, the result would be far from satisfactory. The population covered under the federal proposal would be receiving hospitalization at a greatly reduced cost as a result of the federal contribution, while the population not covered would have to go on as before, meeting the full cost of its hospital care.

I indicated previously in this house, following the tabling of the plan by the premier of Ontario, that I had every reason to be optimistic and that I felt it would prove possible for the premier and the government of Ontario, after negotiations which are necessary in a matter of this sort, to bring their plan within the principles envisaged in the federal proposals. I am still hopeful as to the outcome. The federal government put forward this plan a year ago. Three provinces have accepted it. The province of Ontario has taken a step which would seem to advance that proposal, and there would be no one more happy to see this proposal realized at the earliest possible date than the present government.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister a supplementary question? Now that four provinces representing 54 per cent of the population of Canada have virtually agreed to enter the plan, what steps is the government taking to persuade some other provinces to agree, particularly the three provinces in Canada which have Liberal governments, not one of which has yet agreed to the federal proposal?

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend has asked this question before, and he always asks: what steps are we taking to bring in other provinces, including those provinces with Liberal governments? That is a fair question, but this is a fair retort: it is a Liberal government which took the initiative in this matter.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a supplementary question. Is it a fact that the area of disagreement between the federal government and the Ontario government relates to the percentage of the population that would be covered; and, if that is correct, what is the percentage which the federal government regards as a minimum?

Mr. Martin: The hon. member for Kamloops asked me that question last week, and he will remember that I told him that until the correspondence between the premier of Ontario and the Prime Minister of Canada has been tabled in accordance with mutual arrangements, I could not disclose the nature of that correspondence. When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked me the other day if we would table that correspondence I said I would take steps at once to ascertain the wishes of the premier of Ontario in the matter. That has been done, the premier of Ontario has consented to the tabling of this correspondence, and I hope that can take place on Monday or Tuesday of next week.

Mr. Knowles: In view of the minister's admission that my previous question was a fair one—the question regarding negotiations with other provinces—will he also table the correspondence he has had with the governments of provinces which have not yet agreed to the scheme, particularly his correspondence with those provinces that have Liberal governments?

Mr. Martin: As the hon. gentleman well knows, the government has been active in this matter since it was first introduced. The persuasions we have sought to exercise have not always, as he knows, been contained in letters, but to the extent that this is the case I should be very glad to ask the consent of the governments concerned to publication.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): I wonder if I could obtain a little more information from the minister on this same subject? The alleged hospital insurance scheme of the Ontario government will not become operative until 1959. Does that mean that, if the federal government is successful in getting the percentage of the population that is required into the national scheme, the national scheme would be held up until 1959?

I am interested in this date 1959 because that happens to be election year in Ontario.

Mr. Martin: The hon. member is always very perspicacious in these matters, but I cannot comment on his last observation now except to say that once six provinces representing a majority of the people of Canada accept the federal proposal, there is no reason why we cannot proceed without delay.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO RESEARCH IN HEART DISEASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Campbell (The Battlefords): I would like, Mr. Speaker, to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What heart foundations exist in Canada today, and, second, what moneys have been allotted by the federal government for research in heart diseases to each of the different provinces of Canada?

Mr. F. G. Robertson (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer this question on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I thank the hon. member for having given notice of his question in advance.

The answer to the first part is: the National Heart Foundation of Canada and the Ontario Heart Foundation. The National Heart Foundation was established through the work of the Department of National Health and Welfare and other interested parties.

The answer to the second question: a total of $1,189,343 has been made available to the provinces under the national health program from 1949-50 to date for heart research. Details by provinces are as follows:

	Research projects	Special equipment
Quebec	$240,454	$363,097
Ontario	492,916	26,413
Manitoba	12,348
Saskatchewan	46,081
British Columbia	8,034
All provinces 1949-57	$799,833	$389,510

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FEED GRAIN SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is he now in a position to answer the question with respect to feed grain subsidies that I asked on January 25 during the discussion of estimates?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. At the conclusion of that debate I asked that the various questions be answered for me, particularly the financial ones, but I have not received the answers yet.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

EXTENSION OF RIGHT TO VOTE AT ADVANCE POLLS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill No. 5, which is identical with a bill I had the privilege of presenting to the house last year, is to extend the privilege of voting at advance polls in federal elections so that that privilege may be enjoyed by any qualified elector who finds that he will be absent from his home constituency on election day. Hon. members who may have looked at the bill, either last year or this year, will recognize that it is a document of some nine pages and that there might seem to be quite a few details in it. Let me make it perfectly clear that all the other changes in the act proposed in Bill No. 5 are purely consequential changes arising out of the change with regard to voting at advance polls.

I wish also to make it clear that the particular changes suggested by my bill consequential upon that major change are not sacrosanct. I mean by that that it would be quite satisfactory so far as I am concerned if the details of those consequential changes were altered by a committee after second reading of the bill. What is important in the bill and in any event what one should stick to in speaking to its second reading is its main principle, which is to make it possible for any qualified elector in a federal election to vote at an advance poll if he finds that he will be away from home on election day.

As hon. members are aware, the Canada Elections Act as it now stands makes provision for advance polls but the right to vote at those advance polls is limited to a very few categories of Canadian citizens. The only ones who may vote at advance polls are commercial travellers, fishermen, employees on railways, vessels, aircraft and so on, who in the course of their duties are required to be away from home on election day, together with members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

I think all members will agree that one of the most common grievances drawn to our attention at election time, and all of us in this place have had experience with elections, is the fact that many ordinary people who find they will be away from home on election day cannot vote at an advance poll. It is particularly annoying to voters to discover that they cannot vote at an advance poll when they are aware of the fact that an advance poll does exist. This strikes those so denied that right as a form of discrimination, and I am sure all of us can tell stories of many protests that arise with regard to this matter at every election.

There is another way in which it seems to me there is a form of discrimination with respect to this matter. It arises from the fact that when a general election is held in the summertime, and most of our elections are held in the summer months, there are always people who are away on holidays at that particular time. Some people can afford to return to their homes for election day in order to cast their vote. Others who happen to be away for their holidays during a period that runs over election day cannot afford to make the trip home, and there again one comes up against a feeling of discrimination.

Not only because grievances of this kind should in my view be met, not only because any element of discrimination should, if at all possible, be removed, but because the bill is in line with the basic principle underlying the establishment of the franchise in a democratic country do I feel that it should be supported by the House of Commons. That basic principle in a democracy is that the right to vote should not be restricted but rather should be made available to as wide a group of our citizens as possible, and if one is going to carry out that principle barriers such as this should be removed.

Let us tell ourselves, as has often been said when the elections act is under discussion in parliament, that the matter of voting is not something that belongs to us because we happen to be in parliament. It does not belong to the government. It does not even belong to parliament. It is a right that belongs to the people of Canada. Our only job on their behalf is to make sure that the law governing that right to vote is as fair, generous and democratic as it can possibly be. So long as some of our citizens on election day, because they find they will have to be away from home, are denied the right to vote whereas some other citizens away from home on election day get the right to vote there is this feeling that there is unfairness and discrimination. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge that consideration be given to the principle of this bill which, as I say, would make it possible for any qualified elector away from home on election day to vote at an advance poll.

I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to violate the rule which I myself quoted a moment ago concerning the requirement that discussion on second reading relate only to the principle of the bill. However, I might perhaps point out some of the details of the bill which, of course, flow from this general change. For example, if more persons are going to be permitted to vote at the advance poll than is now the case, it would obviously be necessary to hold the advance poll a little further ahead of the general election day than is now the case.

My bill makes such a provision. The particular provision that my bill makes, as I have already indicated, is not sacrosanct. That provision can be changed. I mention that point simply to express the hope that hon. members will not take a stand in opposition to the bill merely because there is in its mechanics some detail with which they disagree. I for one would be quite happy in the committee on privileges and elections, if this bill is referred to that committee, to see any change made in mechanics of that kind. The same comment goes for the change as to the date of nomination made necessary in order to facilitate the taking of an advance poll amongst more voters than is the case at the present time.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that this privilege of voting at advance polls on a universal basis already obtains in some of our provinces with respect to their provincial elections. Most of the provinces have some advance poll privileges but in several of the eastern provinces, at any rate, those privileges are restricted along lines similar to the restrictions that are still in the Canada Elections Act. But in the four western provinces—I refer to British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba—there are provisions for voting at advance polls by any qualified voter who finds that he has to be away from home on election day. As a matter of fact, even more generous provision is made in two of the western provinces, unless British Columbia has changed it; I have not been able to ascertain whether or not they have done so in recent changes in the election act. With that qualification I say that in two of the western provinces, namely British Columbia and Saskatchewan, even more generous provision is made in that there is absentee voting so that persons who are away from home can vote on election day in the constituency in the province where they happen to be on that day. In the case of Saskatchewan both absentee voting and universal voting at advance polls is provided. So far as Manitoba and Alberta are concerned, there is no provision for absentee voting but the right to vote at advance polls is universal. In other words, any person who is a qualified elector and who finds he must be away from home on election day may vote at the advance poll.

Some of those who have not been too sure whether they can support my bill have thought that maybe its provisions were too wide and that maybe it makes it too easy to vote at the advance poll. May I point out that my bill makes it not quite as easy to vote at an advance poll as is the case in provincial elections in my own province of Manitoba. I quote my own province of Manitoba to my friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard), who no doubt will speak on this matter, because after all it is the only province on the mainland of Canada with a Liberal government. I am therefore sure that he would be interested in the provisions there.

In Manitoba all that is necessary for a qualified voter to vote at the advance poll is to appear in person before a returning officer and obtain a certificate. No affidavit is required. All that is required is simply a personal appearance. Form 19 which is included in the election act in my province simply provides for the returning officer to issue that certificate to any qualified voter who merely appears before him in person. In the case of my bill, it goes at least a little further in that, in order to obtain the right to vote at an advance poll, a voter must not only appear in person before the returning officer but must take an affidavit to the effect that he has reason to believe that he will be away from home on the general election day. I think that is a sufficient protection against abuse of the privilege. I think it is sufficient protection against people voting at the advance poll if it is not necessary for them to do so.

In another debate on this matter the Secretary of State expressed the fear that if advance polls were open to all voters the number of people voting at advance polls would mount until it might exceed the number left to vote on general election day. I still make the point with him—and I hope he accepted it when I made it last year—that it is rather hard to argue in that way when, in any of the provinces where universal voting at advance polls is allowed, there is no experience that would support that idea. In my own province of Manitoba, as in the other western provinces, those who require to vote at advance polls in provincial elections do so, but percentagewise their number is still very small. Nevertheless, the fact that the right is there removes this grievance that is felt very keenly at election time by so many people. That indeed was one of the principal arguments advanced last year by the Secretary of State, namely the feeling that this provision would lead to several election days rather than one main election day. If I thought there was any substance in that fear I certainly would have to give some weight to it. But I suggest to him that he should take note of the experience in the provinces where we have universal voting at advance polls, and that if he does so he will see that that fear is really quite unfounded.

Another objection voiced last year was that made by my friend the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Boisvert) who also spoke against this bill. He criticized my proposal on the ground that, if my bill went through, it would be possible for people who were just going away on trips or people who were just going away on holidays to vote at the advance polls. Let there be no secret about it, Mr. Speaker. That is one of the purposes of the bill. Surely, it is not a crime to go away on a holiday. Surely, that is not something that should cost one his right to vote or cost him any of his rights of citizenship. Holidays are becoming more and more general. They will be more general still if certain bills of mine receive favourable consideration before this session is over. At any rate, it is now accepted as part of our life in this country that people should have an annual vacation, and should have it with pay as well, Mr. Speaker.

Also, it is becoming fairly general for our elections to be held during the summer months. If one goes back over quite a number of years, but for the winter election of 1940, one finds that all of our federal elections have been held in what might be called the summer months. I should think there is no doubt but that the general election this year will be held in one of the summer months. At the moment, it looks as though it will be either in the month of May or the month of June; certainly, it will come no later than June 17.

Mr. Pinard: You can still speculate on that, as you did last year.

Mr. Knowles: I thank the Secretary of State for saying I am still free to speculate. I suggest if it does not come by May 27, it will be delayed until June 17.

Mr. Pinard: You have not informed the chief electoral officer as yet?

Mr. Knowles: Not privately, but this information which I am giving here will perhaps suggest to him that he should get his machinery ready. Since the election is coming within a matter of weeks, I hope consideration of this bill might not take too long so that if the House of Commons sees fit, as I hope it will, to adopt it, its provisions can be effective at this year's general election. As I say, I believe it will be on May 27 or in the month of June; certainly not later than June 17.

One or two other objections were raised last year. One that was put up by one of my friends to the right was the extra cost that might be involved in providing for these extra advance polls. Of course, one could use that argument against the franchise generally, that it is a costly business. But surely, it is one of the most beneficial expenditures that we make in a democracy, namely any expenditure that is made to provide for the people to express their views freely as to those whom they want to represent them in parliament.

Some objection was raised in one quarter last year as to whether a provision of this kind might open the way to a greater amount of impersonation at election time. From the experience in my part of the country, that is not a fear that I entertain. The act is well drawn in that respect, in terms of preventing fraud and impersonation. I have tried in this bill to add any additional precautions that are necessary in connection with this further right so that there will not be fraud or impersonation.

In connection with the drafting of this bill, I should like once again to express my thanks to Dr. Maurice Ollivier, our parliamentary counsel, and Mr. Nelson Castonguay, the chief electoral officer, for the help they gave me something over a year ago in preparing this bill. I want to make it quite clear again, as I did last year, that in mentioning their names it does not mean they are either for or against the principle of the bill. It was a real help to have their assistance in putting in concrete form the changes that would be necessary to carry out this principle.

Mr. Speaker, this right to vote is the property of the Canadian people and not something that belongs to us here in parliament. I feel it should be made as widely available as possible, without any barriers such as the real barrier that is there when some people have to be away from home on election day. I hope that the house will give favourable consideration to this bill, and I hope that it will vote for second reading so that the bill can be referred to a committee where we can make any changes in the mechanics that may be necessary. Nevertheless let us now write into our election law the basic principle that everyone who is a qualified voter should have a right to vote at an advance poll if he finds he will be away from home on election day.

Hon. Roch Pinard (Secretary of State): After reading this bill and comparing it with the bill introduced last year, it is obvious that the two are identical. I can add also that, so far as I am concerned, I thought the arguments advanced in favour of the adoption of second reading of the bill by my hon. friend were substantially the same. I do not think he added very much to what he said in favour of the bill last year, except that he expressed certain views on the arguments advanced by other members in the house who opposed the measure last year.

As I said before, I intend to be very brief because I do not feel it would be proper for me to repeat the arguments against the adoption of this measure which I advanced last year. I think the fact remains that, in my opinion, the main argument to be put forward in opposition to the measure resides in the fact that, as the hon. member indicated himself when he referred to what I said last year, if we allow a multiplication of these advance polls you will defeat the main purpose of the act which is to permit the Canadian people to choose their representatives in this house on one specified date. In other words, if one reads the Canada Elections Act and studies it carefully, he must come to the conclusion that all the sections of the act converge upon one main event which is polling day itself.

The hon. member said that, under the act as it now stands, there are very few people who are authorized to vote at an advance poll. I admit that, and I say that there are very few because they have to be exceptions to the general rule and there have to be very serious reasons to justify the electors of Canada not to take advantage of that one occasion they have every four or five years to freely choose the men or women they wish to represent them in parliament. I feel that if we were to multiply these advance polls, if we were to accept the very wide proposal put forward by my hon. friend that whoever believes he is going to be away on polling day will be able to cast his vote at an advance poll, then I am sure the result would be that a great many would vote at such advance poll. Last year, my hon. friend said he thought this argument was absurd. He said the suggestion was absurd because that had not happened in his province.

I do not know exactly when these advance polls were established in his province, but one thing is certain. If you allow a greater number of people to vote at the advance polls, if you tell them they do not have to concern themselves about being in their constituencies on election day but they will be entitled to vote on two or three days other than on polling day, then a great number will take advantage of that privilege. Surely the number will increase. Will it increase to the extent some day of having more people voting on these other polling days than on polling day itself? I do not know, but one may suspect and may have reason to believe that eventually the interest in polling day itself will be completely lost. In other words, is it not a true contention that there might be more people voting at these advance polls? I submit that you could have the result of having fewer people voting on polling day itself because they will say, "We have the opportunity to vote on three or four different days" and the interest of the electors will be lost, in my opinion, in the very day on which they have to make their choice.

My hon. friend has referred to the delay between nomination day and polling which, under the proposal, will be extended to 21 days. He thinks that 21 days should be allowed instead of 14 days. So far as I am concerned, the 14 days that do exist under the act are very important for the electors to form a judgment as to whom they are going to choose to represent them in parliament. In other words, if the elector is going to be away, as the proposal suggests, during the nine days, if he is going to be away on his holidays—it is true he has a right to have his holidays—nobody will contest that, but is it not a fact that he should, when he knows that arrangements are made long in advance and election day has been announced a long time before, feel that it is his obligation, if he wants to have the privilege, to see to it that he is well informed as to the candidates who are running in the election so that he can form a sound judgment and make a proper choice? In other words, I am trying to make the point as clear as I can that we should not destroy the significance of polling day as being the one day under the act when an election is to be held, and that we should not, by allowing other days to be used for the purpose, destroy the significance of polling day itself.

The hon. member referred to costs and said that this point was raised last year. I also raised it myself. It is true that the matter of costs should not prompt us to decide against the principle underlined in this bill. It is true that the question of costs should not be sufficient for us to dispose of this matter and say, "Because it is going to be too costly we are going to vote against this bill." But surely one should think of the additional costs that these advance polls would entail. I was informed last year it would cost approximately $500,000 to create the number of advance polls in rural and urban districts which would be necessary to have this proposal implemented. Well, the cost in itself may not be of prime importance; but surely, if, as my hon. friend himself says, it did not produce very much in the way of additional votes in his own province of Manitoba we are going to spend $500,000 to have, in his opinion, the same result of not getting very much more interest on the part of voters in these additional days set out in the proposal? The hon. member will probably say, "You are making your choice in your argument". In other words, it is either going to decrease the importance of polling day or it is going to increase the importance of these additional days. My own view is that if we allow two or three more days besides polling day for voters to exercise their right we will have a greater number of people taking advantage of it and thus diminish and reduce the importance and significance of polling day.

I also said last year that the matter had been discussed before in committee. My hon. friend said that this should not be a matter for us alone to decide; that it should not be a matter for the government to decide. I fully agree that it should not be a matter for the government to decide but it should be for the people of Canada themselves to decide whether or not there should be more advantages given to the people to vote at these advance polls. Surely, this has to be done one way or another. I suggest it has to be done by parliament, and parliament has agreed to have this matter discussed by a committee. The matter was referred to a committee and was fully discussed there. The proposal was then negatived on division and by a large majority in the committee. Last year the very same proposal, advanced with, I believe, no better arguments than those the hon. gentleman used this year, was also negatived on division by a large majority in this house, and I see no additional reason this year why we should change our minds.

Mr. Knowles: It was negatived on the basis of no better arguments than my hon. friend has produced today.

Mr. Pinard: I am going to say that maybe my arguments were not considered by him to be any better than his; but surely there was also the expression by this House of Commons of the views of other people who thought that even if my arguments were not good enough to oppose the measure, they also thought that my hon. friend's arguments were not good enough for them to change their minds. They voted against the measure. I believe the same attitude should be taken this year and that we ought not to change the situation for the moment, at least until the time came when we were convinced of the soundness of the proposal. After all, provincial governments, after having decided they should do so, have established advance polls and experience has been gained in four provinces, according to what my hon. friend has said. I would like very much to be able to study statistics of what actually happened there. It is quite difficult to do so because you have a number of people who cast their votes in one election, and you see that in another election the issues were of such greater importance that you have a greater number of voters at that election. To my way of thinking, this does not establish the fact that it was simply the normal procedure. There was simply a more important issue. For instance it could very well be the fact that the people were so satisfied with the government they had in Manitoba that they felt they should not take too much advantage of the advance polls created by the government to express dissatisfaction, with the result that the same government was re-elected.

I say it is difficult in studying statistics to come to a conclusion which will be different from the argument I think I was making rightly. I would like my hon. friend to be able to convince me that I am wrong. It is not enough for him simply to say that my argument appears to be absurd to convince me that I am wrong, unless he proves the absurdity of the argument.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a question?

Mr. Pinard: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Does the Secretary of State know of any cases to prove his assertion with which he can answer my drawing on certain examples where it has not happened?

Mr. Pinard: No. The only thing my hon. friend has been able to give us is the experience in his own province. Whether that was the province which adopted the system many years ago I do not know. I do not know how many years ago it was adopted by Manitoba.

Mr. Knowles: Many years ago.

Mr. Pinard: Has more than one election been held in Manitoba since the system was adopted?

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry; I am unable to give the year, but I myself voted at an advance poll in 1936.

Mr. Pinard: Maybe my hon. friend was a commercial traveller at that time?

Mr. Knowles: Oh, no. It was universal in 1936.

Mr. Pinard: In other words, at that time my hon. friend took advantage of the system by simply taking advantage of the same proposal that he now has before the house.

Mr. Knowles: That is right.

Mr. Pinard: It would be quite interesting to make a study of the statistics to find out whether his claim is right that there has not been a very substantial increase in the number of voters at advance polls, because it is very difficult for me to believe that if you allow practically anyone who feels that he is going to be away on election day to vote at an advance poll, you will not increase by a very large number the proportion of people voting at these advance polls.

You say it is not an argument simply to affirm that, but to me it is pure logic to believe that if one can perform that duty, on two occasions, 10 or 11 days before polling day, you will have a greater number of people taking advantage of that opportunity than otherwise.

Mr. Knowles: Is it pure logic to believe that what has not happened would happen?

Mr. Pinard: What has not happened in the provinces. I do not deny what my hon. friend says, that the situation may have not changed materially, but I think he has also admitted that there was in fact an increase in the number of voters who voted at advance polls in his own province. I think he said that last year.

Mr. Knowles: I do not think there has been, but I agree that it might be wise to have statistics collected. Perhaps the minister is now in a position—

Mr. Pinard: I know my hon. friend is going to suggest that we send the bill to a committee, but that is not the only reason why I object to it. I submit that it would not be a wise thing to do to destroy the significance and importance of polling day. It is all right for us to say that it is a privilege, that the people should be able to enjoy that privilege; I agree with that general principle. But there is also an obligation on the part of the electors to have enough interest in the election to cast their votes.

Mr. Winch: Suppose an elector cannot be in his riding on that day?

Mr. Pinard: There are many things that would prevent a person exercising his right to vote, but is parliament to be asked to arrange mechanics so that people may vote on days other than polling day simply because electors find themselves in some difficulty? I do not think that the purposes of the act would be served if we did that. So far as I am concerned I am not convinced that we should go as far as my hon. friend suggests and I do not think that we should for the time being go further than what the act provides.

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, having examined the bill, having listened to its sponsor and having just heard what the minister had to say I am thoroughly convinced that the sponsor has won by a margin of about 75 to 1. We realize fully that there are difficulties in making a move in a new direction, difficulties which have to be met and overcome. We in Canada frequently deplore the fact that such a substantial percentage of qualified electors do not vote. Some have legitimate reasons, some have reasons that are not legitimate, but surely there is a responsibility upon us to make it possible as far as is reasonable for all qualified electors to vote. In some countries they have compulsory voting, something to which I am wholly opposed, but on the other hand if we are not going to have more and more people talking in terms of compulsory voting we must make every conceivable effort to make it possible for those who are qualified to be able to vote.

Throughout his remarks the minister laid emphasis upon the significance of a day. To me that is wholly wrong; the emphasis should be on the significance of a fact, not upon the significance of a specific day. If voting is the important thing which we all regard it as being, surely whether it is done on a Friday or Monday, or even on both days, or on any day during a period of four days, does not detract from its significance.

Surely we all look forward to election day, but I cannot for one minute find any validity in an argument based upon a day rather than upon a fact. The minister indicates that he believes more and more people would take advantage of the advance poll. That would be the case even if no change were made because with our increases in population there are going to be more and more persons occupied in those professions or activities or lines of work which would qualify them to vote in an advance poll. That is not a legitimate argument as far as I am concerned. Numbers should not enter into the matter, it is the principle of the thing upon which we should base our thinking.

Surely the federal government is no less desirous of granting to the electors of Canada the right to vote than are certain of the provinces. There are four provinces which have considered it advisable, based upon experience, to permit certain qualified electors to vote at advance polls. I have not heard any argument advanced as yet that leads me to believe that the federal government should not pursue exactly the same course in relation to the consideration of qualified electors in the federal field.

The minister referred to statistics indicating the experience in the provincial field. Surely there has been enough experience in those provinces where advance polls have been provided to warrant the minister's department examining the statistics.

Mr. Pinard: Does the hon. member think that there is an obligation upon the minister, who is responsible to parliament only as a spokesman for the chief electoral officer, to gather those statistics? I think the matter of statistics is something for anyone to deal with. What I would have thought is that this would have been an excellent occasion on which to supply these statistics so that hon. members would know.

Mr. Shaw: If the minister intended to make any reference whatsoever to statistics in this debate I would have thought he would have obtained all available statistics before participating in the debate. As members of this house we are all interested in this matter and those of us who come from provinces which are more generous with respect to advance polls are convinced that those provinces are right in doing what they did in that connection and permitting qualified persons to vote at advance polls. As the minister of the department under which the elections act is administered I would have thought he would have secured statistics in order to bolster whatever argument he may have wanted to make today.

With respect to this question of holidays, it is a fact that nowadays holidays for employees are often established six, seven or eight months in advance. Most employees get from ten days' to two weeks' holidays, and with travel conditions what they are today reservations must be made frequently some time in advance. While it may be argued that an elector could defer his holidays one day in order to vote, it is equally true that a great many complications would be created as a consequence of such a change.

I wonder why the sponsor of the bill, instead of suggesting a certain number of days for advance polls, did not suggest an extension of the voting period for three or four days. I am not advancing that as a suggestion, but if that were done it might result in even greater simplification. Once again the minister would probably suggest that that would reduce the significance of the day, but I still say to him that it is not a matter of one specific day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Shaw: If there are going to be interjections I wish they would be made in such a way that I could understand them. Many of these interjections manage to get into Hansard when the hon. member who is speaking has not even heard them and therefore cannot answer them. I did not say I was advancing that idea at all. I am supporting the measure sponsored by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wherein he is asking, in the main that a greater number of the qualified electors of Canada be permitted the opportunity of voting at advance polls and I, personally, have heard no argument yet that leads me to believe that such a thing should not, or could not, be approved by the government. I am sure it would be to the advantage of all Canadians and that we would find the total over-all vote in Canada, among those properly qualified to vote, increased very substantially.

After all, it should be one of our duties to enable just as many Canadian electors as possible to vote. I am not overlooking the fact that there is also a great responsibility upon the shoulders of the qualified electors themselves to go to the polls. I have said that in the past, and I will continue to say it. We see no reason whatever, Mr. Speaker, for not supporting the measure which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has sponsored.

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this bill. I have been a member of the election committee for a number of years; I have also taken part in a few elections.

I do not know whether or not I know anything about elections, but I have studied the Elections Act and I think I know a little about that.

The Elections Act has been amended over the years, and I think that each time it has been amended something was done that has proved to the advantage of the voters throughout Canada. However, I certainly do not feel, Mr. Speaker, that this bill should be brought in at this time, just a few months before elections take place. What I am afraid of is this: newspapers are circulated, people read Hansard—as a few of them do—and they may get the impression, despite the fact that this bill may not become law, that they would still have an opportunity to vote on an advance poll. Because, at an election time, many people get queer ideas as to where they should vote, how they should vote and everything else.

As to the suggestion that was made a moment ago about the advanced polling day—making it three or four days instead of one—people might get that into their heads, and, instead of turning up on voting day, choose the next day to go to the polls. I am very much afraid of that. It occurs to me, also, that some people might come to the conclusion that they could go to an advance poll nine or ten days ahead of time, and that everything would still be all right. They might make arrangements, ahead of time, to go away on the regular voting day, and I believe that, in fairness to the voters and to hon. members of this house, this bill should be shelved at the present time and brought up in committee next year when the committee on elections would have an opportunity to call in witnesses and find out just what we could do about the proposals.

When this matter was before the elections committee on a previous occasion, I myself advanced the suggestion that we should extend the privilege of the advance poll, but my proposals were turned down. I feel that during the coming election which, I understand, is not many months away, the members here may also have an opportuniy to prepare suggestions which they could put before the elections committee at the next session of parliament.

I understand that at present practically all the literature and necessary instructions have been sent out to the returning officers throughout the country. Those instructions could not very well be changed at the present time because in some cases the returning officers have, in turn, sent out literature to the deputy returning officers. One thing I do object to is the change which this bill proposes in the nomination date—a change from 14 to 21 days. I think that is entirely too early before the election.

It has been suggested—and I know the chief electoral officer has so stated—that these proposals would cost the taxpayer a great many thousands of dollars more. Personally, I feel that anything that could be done to help the voter should be done, despite what it might cost. I do not think dollars should enter into this; I think it is the principle that matters—the question of what is right and what is wrong. I myself, am in favour, as I said, of extending the privilege of the advance poll but I do not feel that this is the time at which to do it. I believe that in Ontario, at the last election, extension of the privilege of the advance poll did help to some extent but not to any great extent; I do not think the vote was any higher than it would have been if facilities had not been widened as they were. Under this bill, as I read it, the advance poll is to be nine or ten days before voting day. The voting list would have to be marked, checked and so on, and I feel that that, also, would cause quite a lot of difficulty at the present time in view of the short time that would exist in which to make arrangements.

Then again, if this were "wide open" there is every possibility that people might flock to the poll nine or ten days ahead of time and forget about the poll on election day; and we might have them voting nine or ten days ahead of time, instead of on voting day. Whether that would be true or not I do not know.

At the present time, commercial travellers, people on vessels, aircraft and so on are covered. I remember that at the election which was held on the 10th of August, 1953, there were in my riding some 32 school teachers who were attending summer school at London, Ontario. They all lost their votes because they were too far away to return to Peterborough to vote. Moreover, their examination in London took place on the same day as election day. They were quite sore about it, but I think that is not the fault of the Elections Act; it was the government's fault because they must have felt that these school teachers would vote for the Conservative party. I see the minister shaking his head, but I know I would have received a lot of those votes if those teachers had been able to vote on that day.

Another point: if this were "wide open", and a person could vote nine or ten days ahead of an election, there would be the possibility that between that date and election day the government might move one of its military commands into another riding about which they might have felt doubts.

Whether that could be done or not, I do not know, but there has been skulduggery in the past, and I think all this machinery should be worked out and considered well in advance.

Some time ago, hon. members may be interested to hear, I discovered that two men who voted during the election in my own riding had also voted in a riding very close to mine, and had I not been elected I would certainly have taken the matter up.

An hon. Member: Maybe they voted for you.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I know perfectly well they voted against me because they were rounding up votes for the other side—not in my riding but in the neighbouring one.

An hon. Member: That is not always a clear case.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): No, but it was in this case. It was mentioned in the elections committee that the cost of an advance poll was $130. I believe there will be four advance polls in Peterborough riding for the forthcoming election and I doubt whether they will get away with $130 because the inflation brought on by the government will mean that the cost will likely be $160 or $170.

Mr. Green: Or $260.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Or $260, as one member mentions. I said at the beginning of my remarks that I object to the bill at the present time. I also object to certain changes proposed in the bill. One thing in particular to which I object is the provision that nomination day shall be 21 days before election day instead of 14 days. Therefore I will not vote for the bill.

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the bill. Very often I find myself in support of some of the proposals of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) but I cannot find too much to support in the bill now before us. I have been thinking about the matter since last year and I have not found any new reason why the bill is deserving of support. As far as I am concerned, I am quite frank in saying that I think it will do no great harm. If there were wide open advance pools at which electors could vote a week or two in advance of the regular polling day I believe it would do no harm. It would probably cost the country a little more money to register the vote but in my opinion it would not likely alter the result.

[Mr. Fraser (Peterborough).]

But I believe there are certain very real technical objections to the proposal. There seems to be some validity in the argument that if you confine advance polls to a few categories like commercial travellers, railroad men and so on you are discriminating in their favour compared with other people, and I think that is quite correct. But it is also true that no matter how you extend the categories you are going to discriminate against some people on some ground. At the present time voting is confined to one general election day for all the people plus one or two extra days for a certain few categories. But if we widen that to include all categories it will still rule out certain people who cannot be there on the particular days that the polls are open. It seems to me that the hon. member's definition is wider this year than last year.

Mr. Knowles: The same bill exactly.

Mr. Philpott: In any event, taking the bill as it stands and taking the hon. member's own argument about people who go away on holidays, there will always be some people who will be ruled out on the ground that they are away on holidays because people now go away on two week vacations or three week vacations. Incidentally, my hon. friend has another bill having to do with vacations which would make more people eligible for longer vacations, and as far as that bill is concerned I am certainly with him 100 per cent.

The more I think about the bill now before us the more I think that it really would not do too much good for the country. In my opinion the onus is on anyone who wants a reform of any kind to prove his case by logic in advance, and it is not a bad thing for democracy to have the dead weight, if you want to call it that, of lethargy on the other side with respect to all these reforms.

Reference was made this afternoon to the fact that the four western provinces have adopted some of these innovations and it was said that the four western provinces have set us such a good example that we in the federal field should do the same thing. In all earnestness I cannot honestly say that since the four western provinces adopted some of these new voting techniques we have had any more intelligent verdicts from the people of those provinces than we had under the old system. I for one am quite interested to note that while the present government of British Columbia came to power under one voting system it was not too long before it switched back to the old voting system. I notice that even my hon. friends of the Social Credit group, who for so many years were so proud of the switched vote system, have now switched back to the good, old, tried, trusty and reliable one X system of British voting.

I for one do not believe that we should go overboard too quickly or introduce too many of these innovations. While I am quite frank to say that I would not have any objection to the bill because I do not think it would do any harm and might do a little good, nevertheless I think it would be costly and expensive and that the expense would probably outbalance the benefit.

There is one final point I wish to make. The most serious objection I see to my hon. friend's bill, having reflected about it since last year, is the provision whereby nomination day would be fixed even farther ahead of voting day than under the present system. I think that our election procedures in Canada are too long drawn out, too laborious and too expensive. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw), for whom I have great respect, suggested that we might keep the general polls open for longer than one day. I think most of the expense of holding an election is centred right around one day now and if we kept the polls open for two days the expense would be twice as great. If we kept them open three days it would be three times as great.

I think our election techniques are now too expensive and long drawn out. I have had the great privilege in my professional capacity of having to cover British election campaigns. In 1951 I had the great privilege of following the then Mr. Churchill on his election campaign. I was interested and amazed to notice that they can dissolve their house and complete the holding of an election in less than one month. If there is one reason why my hon. friend's proposal has more objections to it than advantages it is that by setting nomination day ahead we would make our elections even more prolonged than they are now.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question before he sits down? Is he aware of the fact that he voted for the bill last year? The hon. member and the hon. member for Mackenzie River (Mr. Hardie) both voted for it. I hope the hon. member is not slipping backward.

Mr. Philpott: No, I am not. I have since given the matter very careful thought. At that time I had only given the matter off-hand consideration. I am sorry that I voted for it then and I have given my reasons today for not supporting the bill.

Mr. Wylie: It would not be the first time that the hon. member changed his mind.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I was rather surprised to hear my fellow British Columbian from Vancouver South get up today and say that he was going to oppose the bill because I had some recollection that he had supported it previously. I was rather going on the assumption that anyone from the province of British Columbia who had the advantage of knowing how this provision, together with the provision for absentee voting, has worked out there over the years would stand up to support the measure proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). As he very well knows, there are a good many of the actions that have been taken by the present provincial government of British Columbia with which I do not agree or which I do not support. But certainly the one specific action which he mentioned in his speech in respect of a change that was made in the voting system is one for which I think they can well be commended. He may recall that that system was put into effect by some of his friends in the provincial field. It is fairly well recognized in British Columbia that it was put in there for a rather specific purpose and that it achieved that purpose but not with the results that his friends had anticipated.

I think that most of the arguments which were advanced by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott) really were in support of this measure rather than against it. Hence while I agree with some of his arguments I am a bit puzzled by his conclusion. Nevertheless I think perhaps he has a better appreciation of some of the advantages and has a little bit more difficulty in arguing against this bill than has the Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard) who has indicated his opposition to it. It seems to me that the Secretary of State has based his argument largely upon what he supposes might possibly happen if this bill were to be put through this house and that he is prepared to ignore completely the suggestions that are made by people who come from provinces where this system has been in effect over a period of years that goes back as far as the voting memories of many of us at least. They are systems which were introduced by either Liberal or Conservative administrations in former days and which have established themselves over the course of years as being of some aid to the electors in enabling them to vote on election day. The Secretary of State indicates that there might be some necessity for him to get further information on the results in these provinces. Inasmuch as he is the minister who speaks in the house on these matters, I certainly hope that he will take the trouble to make some study of the way in which the election acts in the western provinces—and, shall I say, in particular in the province of British Columbia—work out.

As I think I may have indicated on former occasions in this house, I believe there are some ways in which our federal elections act is much superior to the provincial elections act that we have in British Columbia. In particular I think that the manner of registration of voters which is provided for in our federal elections act is certainly much better than the system we have in British Columbia. But I also think it is important that members from other sections of the country should have some appreciation—if they are prepared to accept, as I am sure they would say they are, the idea that all possible voters should be able to vote—of the problems that exist through geography and distance in the western parts of the country, and perhaps more particularly in British Columbia than in any other part of Canada because of the terrain being divided by mountains or by waters, thus making intercommunication within the boundaries of electoral districts more difficult than in most other parts of the country.

Certainly from my own experience I know that in the area that I represent in this house this question of people being disqualified in elections is one of great concern. Only last fall when we had a provincial election in British Columbia it was a matter of great concern because a large number of people found that they had not had a proper opportunity of getting on the voters' list. While that particular objection does not arise so much in respect of a federal election, nevertheless the fact remains that a large number of people who have been enumerated and put on the federal election list find themselves unable to vote when voting day comes. That is one of the reasons why I am particularly glad to say a few words in support of the measure introduced by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

One of the things on which the Secretary of State seemed to place a good deal of emphasis in his argument was that this measure was going to create a large number of extra advance polls. I would not suggest that, if this bill became law, further advance polls would not be necessary to carry out its provisions. But I think it should be pointed out that the purpose of the bill as announced by my colleague is to increase the number of people who are going to be able to vote and that implicit in the bill and in its principle is not any suggestion that that would necessarily require any multiplication of the number of advance polls. In one section of the bill specific mention is made of that subject matter where it is indicated that it will remain within the discretion of the chief electoral officer as to whether one or more advance polls are set up in an electoral district. Provision is made for the setting up of advance poll districts which in some cases—dependent upon the geographic circumstances of the district—might very well mean that only one advance poll would be necessary in a constituency.

I think no one would argue that, once you set up the facilities for an advance poll and appoint the necessary officers to carry on the advance poll, it would not be possible for them in most cases to handle many more voters than normally are able to vote under the present restricted provision.

I agree with the suggestion that was advanced by my colleague that this is the kind of bill that should go before a committee of the house for study of its details. I am frank to say that if this bill were before a committee and if I had an opportunity of discussing it under those circumstances, I would want to make one or two suggestions for changes in the details of it. I say that because, as I mentioned earlier, in our province lines of communication do not necessarily follow the lines of the electoral districts. I think perhaps Comox-Alberni district is as good an example of that fact as exists anywhere on the coast. In many cases if—as often happens—a large number of people in my district have to leave the place where they are working shortly before an election, they do not go to some other place within the electoral district but rather, if they are loggers or if they are fishermen, they find themselves going into a place like Vancouver. If I were having an opportunity to argue on the details of this bill in committee, I should like to suggest that provision be made, where circumstances warranted it, that electors could vote at an advance poll in another electoral district than the one in which they had been originally enumerated. I feel that perhaps would be a simple way of carrying out a provision for which I have argued, namely the provision for absentee voting in our federal elections act. If the opportunity to vote at an advance poll were made universal, as this bill suggests, then those voting at an advance poll could vote and in the time that elapses before the regular polling day their votes could be transmitted to the electoral district in which they reside for counting.

Perhaps this problem is not one which greatly affects the more densely settled areas of the country, but it certainly is a source of discontent in many places along the coast because of the particular circumstances that surround the work that the men are doing on the coast. Because of a sudden forest closure as a result of a fire season, they may find themselves forced to move from the logging camps where they are living. This move may occur between enumeration day and polling day, and since they would be out of the electoral district they would find themselves precluded from any opportunity to vote.

I think that the same provision could be made in respect of the fishermen. If the change I am suggesting were incorporated in this bill, I am sure it would be of advantage to the commercial fishermen. While it is true that commercial fishermen are amongst the categories of people who are eligible to vote at advance polls, so far as I am able to observe that provision has actually been of little use to a large number of fishermen in British Columbia. They find it difficult to reach any of the advance polls within the electoral district in which they may be registered because they are so widely scattered along the coast that in most cases it would require a very large number of advance polls in order to accommodate them adequately. It has never been considered a feasible thing to provide that number.

As I listened to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard) make some reference to the responsibilities of the electors to use their franchise in relation to the holiday situation, I felt his thinking was a long way from the realities of the industrial society in which we live today. As was pointed out by one of the other speakers, the time has long since passed when the majority of the workers of this country have an individual choice as to the time when they take their holidays. This decision is made for them, and in most cases long in advance.

Mr. Pinard: I do not believe I suggested that this particular person should cancel his holidays. I simply said that it might be possible for him to arrange to be present on polling day.

Mr. Barnett: I quite agree that the minister did not suggest the individual should cancel his holidays, but he placed considerable emphasis upon the seriousness with which an individual elector should regard his responsibility to vote. I would say that implicit in his argument was the suggestion that, if one were to take his duties as a citizen seriously, he would be prepared to cancel his holidays in order to be at his polling place on election day. That was the only conclusion I could come to as I listened to the minister. I quite agree that, theoretically, that may be a desirable state of affairs in this country for the electors to take the issues before them that seriously, but I would submit that it is hardly fair to suggest that the thousands and thousands of industrial workers, who have only one opportunity annually to enjoy a holiday with their families, should have to sacrifice that holiday just because the government of the day has seen fit to set an election date that coincides with the time arranged between the employers and the union as to the time when holidays will be taken. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that is the practical situation.

I quite agree that at the time the Canada Elections Act was originally adopted we were living in a largely rural economy and, under those circumstances, the minister's argument as to the ability of the elector to decide whether or not he would be away would be valid. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the day has long since passed when that situation prevailed. I think there has been a recognition of that fact because, in a minor way, we have set up advance polls.

Mr. Pinard: I suggested that possibly they could arrange to come back to exercise their franchise and then afterwards return for their holidays. It is not necessary to cancel their holidays.

Mr. Ellis: If he is a thousand miles away, what then?

Mr. Pinard: If he is a thousand miles away, that is another problem.

Mr. Barnett: If the minister were working in a logging camp on Vancouver island and had to pay over $200 to get his family back and forth on their annual holiday, he might take a different view of the matter.

Mr. Pinard: Of course, if the worker were in Japan it would be more difficult for him to come back and exercise his franchise.

Mr. Knowles: The minister would not like me to use that word "absurd" again?

Mr. Pinard: I think it would be absurd then.

Mr. Barnett: The minister referred to Japan, but I do not know of many workers who go to Japan or even get as far as Honolulu.

Mr. Ellis: Don't you want to encourage the tourist industry in Canada?

Mr. Barnett: I am suggesting that this proposal would ensure that every elector would have an opportunity of voting. I feel that the suggestion there should be advance polls at certain times might, in many cases, enable the industrial workers on annual holiday to arrange their holiday in such a manner that they would, within reason, be at a place where they could vote on election day. I believe that is a right we should be prepared to give to them.

I do not think I need to say much more, Mr. Speaker, except that I cannot agree with the argument of the minister, any more than could the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw) as to his emphasis on the particular significance of a certain date to the exclusion of the recognition of the importance of impressing upon people the need to exercise their franchise and the desirability of seeking as wide an opportunity as possible for them to do so. I hope that the minister after due consideration and after having made some study of the experience with this method in western Canada, as has been suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), will, if he happens to be fortunate enough to be a member of this house after the next election, be prepared to take a different attitude than apparently he is prepared to take today. I do not know whether or not the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Fraser) voted for or against this proposition last year. I appreciate his suggestion that there may be some practical difficulties in implementing it this year. Nevertheless I feel that if this house had the will, the necessary changes could be made in plenty of time so that there would be no confusion when next election day comes around. So far as I am concerned, I would be prepared to see the government revise its plans as to the election date and give an extension of a couple of weeks in order to achieve the purpose set forth in this bill. I would be interested to know whether the hon. member would have supported it last year or would support it this year, or whether he is just trying to find an excuse not to vote for it this year.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I object to the 21 days instead of 14.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): In rising to support the bill I wish to compliment the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who has seen fit again to introduce this bill at this time. There is no denying the fact that Canadians as a whole frequently feel that they are disfranchised and there is no denying also, despite what the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott) had to say, there are those who feel otherwise, even if he has changed his mind. I do not speak for myself alone, sir; I also speak for one of my adversaries.

In this instance, Mr. Speaker, I refer to an article carried by the Surrey Leader, which is a local newspaper in my riding. The paper is dated January 24, 1957. It seems that the Liberal association of New Westminster had a convention in that riding and they saw fit to nominate a certain William "Bill" Mott, whom, I am sure, most of the members in this house will recognize. I would ask the minister to pay particular heed to this, because Mr. Mott has a plea here. I think he has a case. In fact, I should not like the same thing to occur again so that the gentleman might have reason to believe that he is not here because too many people were disfranchised owing to their not having the opportunity to vote.

I refer specifically to a couple of matters in this article, Mr. Speaker. I do realize, of course, that one cannot always believe what he sees in the newspapers because I find that the Surrey Leader, which is rather pro-Liberal, I must say, said that there were 200 at the convention and a smaller paper, the Whalley Herald, said there were nearly 60 at the Liberal meeting.

An hon. Member: Sixty would be more like it.

Mr. Hahn: Let us forget about the discrepancy in numbers for the moment. This is what Mr. Mott apparently had to say at the meeting:

> In his address to the party Mr. Mott mentioned that he was only defeated by 33 votes—

You see, if he had 34 more votes it would have made a big difference in the last election. The article goes on:

> —in the last election, and this was probably due to the fact there were so many people away on holidays.

According to the bill, as I understand it, these 33 voters were disfranchised. Undoubtedly there were many hundreds who were in that position. I personally know of 10 in my own little community who were disfranchised. I am satisfied, sir, that if this legislation were passed we could set up the machinery to make it possible for everybody to vote, and we would then have the true representatives of the people sitting in this house.

I am sure, sir, you will appreciate my feelings at this moment when I realize that I am probably not sitting here by right.

Mr. Pinard: Are you thinking about your own convention?

Mr. Hahn: I am not thinking of my own convention; I have had my convention. The newspaper said there were 500 at that one. It was a Social Credit convention, but that is neither here nor there. The article goes on to say:

> The last election, he felt, had been called at a very inopportune time.

"This year", he continued, "I hope people will set aside their holidays until after the elections take place".

I do not know whether he was hoping that the Social Crediters, the Conservatives, the C.C.F.'s, or just the Liberals, would set aside their holidays, but I am sure the minister must realize that this thing is very important in the eyes of not just those who are running for office, as this gentleman is, but also of the people themselves who have been disfranchised.

I am sure the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) did not raise a ludicrous point when he suggested that many of these people are too many miles from home to come back to vote, as the minister said they might do if they did not wish to be disfranchised. The fact remains that in a metropolitan area, which is so close to the finest fishing and hunting grounds in Canada, probably,—I should say it is definitely—the people cannot be expected to return in the middle of their holidays to exercise their franchise.

We realize the value of the franchise. Many countries have enacted laws making it compulsory for the individual to vote, and here we are just simply setting it aside by voting for it one year, as the hon. member for Vancouver South did, and deciding to vote against it the next year. I have no doubt that if he were to discuss this question with Mr. Mott he would be sure to change his mind and vote for it because I am quite certain that the members of this house, certainly the Liberal electorate, feel that it would be to their advantage, according to this man's statement, to have the advance poll as suggested and have it made much more extensive as is suggested in this bill.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, when the committee on privileges and elections sat two years ago I was the member of that committee who moved a motion in an attempt to get the committee to recommend the change in the elections act which is envisaged by this bill. For that reason alone I would like to make a few observations. First of all, I think that if we started on common ground we might come to an agreement. It seems that everybody who has taken part in this debate so far has emphasized the extreme importance and significance of voting on election day. The day of voting has been referred to as a privilege to the elector. In a way, it is a privilege, but it is even more than that, Mr. Speaker, because I regard it as a right. We find ourselves in a rather peculiar position here when we who are the representatives of the electors are the ones who have to decide under our constitution who the electors shall be. In other words, we are the body that can say by legislation who may vote and who may not. For that reason I think we have to approach this question extremely carefully, because an elector would have cause for a justifiable grievance and resentment if he felt that his elected representatives were in some way denying him a right which is his.

The minister, in replying to the sponsor's address, spoke of several things but of three things in particular. One, he emphasized the significance of voting day; two, he mentioned the question of costs; and, three, he dealt with the need for further study of statistics and details.

On the question of the significance of voting day, I am sure the minister would not insist upon that as being his main argument.

Mr. Pinard: I do.

Mr. Zaplitny: Other countries in other parts of the world have adopted a system of voting which extends over several days and sometimes over a week. Regardless of what we may think of their policies or of the results of their elections, it must be admitted that many of those countries which have had long experience with democracy have felt it a convenience for the voter to extend the number of days beyond the one day, and apparently no ill effects have been experienced because it has been carried on for quite a number of years. To say that because a certain date is taken it somehow or other acquires great importance and significance is I think placing far too much importance upon that selection.

As to the cost, the minister has said that if there were a large increase or prospective increase in the number of voters as a result of this amendment it might cost somewhere in the neighbourhood of $500,000.

Mr. Pinard: I do not think that is what I said; I think I said that if there were to be enough advance polls established to cover what is involved under the bill, according to information I have received from the chief electoral officer, it would entail an additional expense of about $500,000.

Mr. Zaplitny: I think that is what I said; if I did not say that, that is what I meant. In the opinion of the chief electoral officer the provision of the necessary machinery to accommodate what is provided by this amendment would cost up to $500,000. That is not a small amount of money but in relation to other expenditures I do not think it could be considered to be a large amount of money if it does the kind of job we intend it to do. I was not present when the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) spoke, but I have read Hansard where he addressed a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) in which he alleged or inferred that some official of the Liberal party in Canada had made the boast that the party had something like $8 million salted away for the next election. Of course that was neither denied nor confirmed so we have no authentic statistics. However, I venture to say that if they do not have $8 million now, they will have it by the time the election rolls around because all they have to do is to give out a few more concessions for a few more pipe line companies and the money will be there.

I think too much money is spent in this country by political parties trying to persuade the voters to vote this way or that way. If more money were spent in order to provide, as this bill does, the greatest possible facilities for voters to take advantage of polling days or advanced polling days, even if it cost a million and a half instead of half a million dollars, if it were instrumental in making it possible for a greater number of people to express their choice, it would be money much better spent than the several millions of dollars which will be spent by the Liberals or Conservatives or both in the next election.

The minister used as one of his arguments the need for further study, and I noticed that the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Fraser) agreed with that argument and said that in his opinion this was not the right time at which to consider this proposed legislation. I think the situation is the exact opposite. I cannot think of a more suitable time to deal with a bill such as this in the committee on elections and privileges. If we are serious in our belief that people take a greater interest in voting as election day approaches, then certainly the next few months should bring about the high-water mark of interest in voting. If there are interested organizations or individuals who have views to express before such a committee, just before the election would be the proper time for them to express those views.

As a matter of fact some organizations have expressed their views already. I have before me copies of the resolutions passed as recently as November of last year by the Manitoba chambers of commerce at their annual convention held in Winnipeg on November 1 and 2. The very first resolution in this booklet which they have circulated refers to voting. It refers to other things besides advance polls, but it does say this:

Further that the federal government provides for the advance polls for a reasonable period to accommodate all who certify that they will be unavoidably absent on election day.

That is right in line with the bill we have before us. When a body such as the Manitoba chambers of commerce, which I am sure is not out of line with chambers of commerce in other provinces, with its experience and having had the opportunity to see the advantages of advance poll privileges in Manitoba, expresses a view like that I think it should be given some weight.

I submit that this would be a most suitable time for the house to accept second reading of this bill, which would then go to the committee on privileges and elections. It could then be made known across the country that such a bill was under consideration and chambers of commerce and other organizations which might be interested could have their representatives appear before the committee to advance their arguments and opinions. At the same time, and this was referred to by the minister, the chief electoral officers or their representatives from the four provinces where such systems are in use could be asked to appear before the committee as a courtesy in order to give the committee the benefit of their experience.

The house would lose nothing if this were done. The bill would have to come back from the committee for third reading and the house would then have its final say. But to turn down the bill at this time without giving the committee an opportunity to consider it, without giving organizations across the country the opportunity to place their arguments and views on this important matter before the committee just before election, would I think leave a very poor impression upon the electors. It might appear as though members of this house for one reason or another were quite satisfied to deprive a large number of people in election after election of their right, a right which is theirs under our constitution, to exercise their franchise.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of this bill is of great importance to the people of my constituency. Of all the complaints one hears about the manner in which our elections are conducted the principal complaint is about discrimination. I am quite sure that other hon. members have had the same experience I have had of people saying: Why should I be discriminated against? I am not a railroader, I am not a commercial traveller, but in order to earn my living it is necessary for me to leave the city and travel perhaps 100 or 150 miles in order to perform the job which I am called upon to do and at a given time it may be necessary for me to be away and thus miss the opportunity of voting.

I realize it is difficult to draw a line as to what classifications would be entitled to vote at an advance poll, but in a city like Regina there are many construction workers and other people who do contract work outside the city, such as wiring farm homes and so on. During the course of their jobs they find it necessary to be absent from the city on polling day. These people are very anxious to vote as they are fully cognizant of their responsibilities as citizens. It seems rather unfair that they should not be accorded the right to cast their votes the same as other employees who are provided for under the existing legislation.

While I agree that it is difficult to know where to draw a line, I think that is the best reason why we should accept this bill. The only way in which we are going to be able to treat all voters fairly is by making some realistic provision for voting at an advance poll. There has been some comment about possible difficulties. The minister suggested that people who are on holidays should return to vote and then, I presume, go back to resume their vacation. I will grant that when the election act was first placed on the statute books most people did not have automobiles and factory workers had no opportunity to travel very far afield. Consequently it might have been possible that there was a greater percentage of voters in their home localities at any given time. However, I think today, particularly in sparsely settled areas such as Saskatchewan, workers, when they get their holidays, are going to travel considerable distances to visit relatives or one or other of the many beauty spots throughout this country.

I have always believed we should encourage Canadians to travel. I am very pleased to note the great number of people from the prairies who visit British Columbia each year, and the great number from British Columbia who visit the prairie provinces. And I think it is a good thing that the prairie people should visit Ontario and the maritimes. That is possible when so many people are getting three weeks' holidays. In my province, at least, where all workers are provided with two weeks' paid holidays, they should be encouraged to visit other parts of Canada.

I think it is most unfair to say to such people, "Your holidays commence one week before election day, and if you want to vote you will have to curtail the extent of your travel in order to return to your home to do so." I think that is not the sort of thing we should expect under the electoral law of Canada, and I rather deplore any suggestion that these people are not aware of their responsibilities as citizens simply because they take their holidays at a given time. I think it is asking a great deal to expect someone to give up two weeks' holidays on account of an election, because that is what it amounts to. In my own province you cannot expect a person who travels, let us say, from Regina to Prince Albert national park to drive the considerable distance back to Regina, or Moose Jaw or some area in the southern part of the province, in order to cast a vote.

It seems to me we should be primarily concerned with getting the maximum number of people to vote in this country. I think we would all agree that the ideal situation would be that everyone should vote, and certainly we should place no obstacles in the path of any Canadian citizen who wishes to exercise his franchise. While there may be difficulties advanced and objections made to the present proposals, I think all these objections, if they went before the committee, could be ironed out and satisfactorily dealt with. I think the main question now, is simply this. Do we want to make it possible for a greater number of Canadian citizens to exercise their franchises? If we believe that is a desirable thing, then I think the most effective way of indicating our sincerity is to vote for the bill now before the house.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I feel obliged to say a few words on this question now before us. I think it is a very important question, and that these are proposals which merit the full support of every member of the House of Commons. I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the Secretary of State. All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that I can only come to one conclusion. He has not the faintest idea of the subject whatsoever, and had not the faintest idea of what he was talking about.

An hon. Member: You are so clever.

Mr. Winch: As a matter of fact it was almost amusing, the way he built up those straw men and then gallantly proceeded to knock them down. We have had, in British Columbia, both the absentee and the advance poll for as long as I can remember, and that state of affairs exists because there has been an understanding by all parties and by all governments, past and present, that this is necessary if the people are to be given every opportunity to exercise their democratic right of casting their ballots on election day. Not only do we have these facilities in our provincial elections, but we also have them incorporated in the act that governs the city of Vancouver.

The minister spent a great deal of time building up a picture of the fear that was in his mind that if we had an advance poll as part of our election machinery the people would forget the real meaning of polling day, and that so many would cast their votes at the advance poll that the actual polling day would not mean anything at all. If there were any semblance of truth in this suggestion it would have shown itself in the province of British Columbia during the application of legislation which, I think, goes back either to 1920 or 1925. But the situation visualized by the minister has not developed.

I know. I ran as a provincial candidate in British Columbia in some seven elections, and I therefore recall very well what happened on polling day and how many ballots were cast at the advance and the absentee polls, and I can assure my hon. friends that in the seven elections which I contested provincially over a period of 20 years—and I represented one of the biggest constituencies in the province of British Columbia as far as population was concerned—there were never more than 500 votes cast in the advance or absentee ballots. That was not too large a number in comparison with the thousands who voted on polling day, but it was of great importance to the four or five hundred people who were able to vote because of the fact that there was provision to this effect.

The minister emphasized time after time that there had to be a sense of responsibility on the part of the elector himself, and nobody will disagree with that; but I think we should also emphasize the responsibility which the government has of ensuring that as many people as possible who will not be in their home constituencies on election day should have the opportunity of exercising their democratic right to vote.

This applies in particular to the province of British Columbia because, as the minister must know, the major industries of British Columbia are logging, mining, fishing and construction. As you realize, Mr. Speaker, in connection with all these enterprises in British Columbia there are always thousands on the move from logging camp to logging camp, from sawmill to sawmill. The people concerned cannot govern themselves so they are in their own ridings at a date set at the will of the Prime Minister. Our fishermen, sir, know that election day is set by the Prime Minister, but the days on which they can fish are established by the Department of Fisheries, and on the days they go out fishing they are away, as hon. members know, before sunrise, and they do not come back before the sun has set. There are occasions when they go many miles out to sea; sometimes they are away for days at a time. Why should these responsible citizens be denied the right to vote because their occupation does not allow them to be in their own constituencies on polling day?

Mr. Macdonnell: Don't you know that fishermen are specially mentioned?

Mr. Winch: I am sorry. We will go back to the others, then, who are employed in construction, in the mining industry, in logging camps and other concerns in which a great many thousands of our citizens are engaged. This is not something new; it is something which has been proven in the four western provinces, something which has been proven for over 20 years, from my own memory, in the province of British Columbia. We say, Mr. Speaker, that it is the responsibility of the government to give the opportunity of voting to every possible elector and I sincerely hope hon. members will support the proposal which is now before us and see to it, though this measure may only affect a few hundred, or a few thousand, that all those who wish to vote and who are not able to cast their ballots on election day should have an opportunity of doing so beforehand.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy listening to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) and his vigorous style. I always know what he means. I gather that he did not think very highly of the speech of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard).

Mr. Pinard: I share that view of his speech.

Mr. Macdonnell: I should like to say that I thought more highly of it. I was interested in it. It made me realize that I had not thought as much about the question as I might have done, and I confess that some of the arguments he made struck me as quite sound. I should like to say, commenting on the speech we have just heard, that I did not think the member made his argument too convincing when, after expounding on the tremendous need for the saving of all those Canadians who might be prevented from voting if they did not get this extension, he said that the total number who had voted, if I understood him correctly, was 500. That did not seem to me to establish a tremendous need.

Mr. Winch: In the one constituency.

Mr. Macdonnell: That is different.

Mr. Winch: That was in my own provincial constituency.

Mr. Macdonnell: I also wish to say that I thought he made an entirely gratuitous supposition when he said that all these 500 people would not have been able to vote otherwise. I thought that was going pretty far and certainly I would not wish to accept that argument.

Second, I should like to say that I think there may be an argument for extending the present list. I do not know that that argument has been made. It seems to me that no one has attempted to do other than go whole hog. I mean those who wish the present bill to pass. I think the house is prbably familiar with the list, commercial travellers, fishermen, persons employed upon railways, vessels, airships, etc., members of the reserve forces, the R.C.M.P., et cetera. There are two et ceteras there and I am not exactly sure how much they cover. At any rate, there has been an attempt to deal with cases which cried out for special treatment, and I am not saying there should not be more done.

On the other hand, I was inclined to agree with the Secretary of State that anything that derogates in a big way, as this is intended to do, from election day is undesirable. Often when we read the figures of those who have voted and still more the percentage of those who have not voted we find it hard to believe that our ancestors struggled so hard in order to get the suffrage, and I did feel there was force in what the Secretary of State said, that anything which takes away a kind of dramatic concentration on election day does derogate from the interest in an election. I think, although it is something that can never be proved, that if one were able to assess these matters one might find that as against the numbers given in the case mentioned—I admit that 500 is a substantial figure—who voted in advance there were a considerable number who might otherwise have voted on election day but who had their attention dissipated and just did not take the trouble.

We know that a great many people do not take the trouble. Sometimes the number is alarming. I suggest it is at least arguable that if we do take away, if we do distract and spread over we may give everyone the feeling that they do not need to vote on election day because there are plenty of other days on which to vote and they do not need to bother about it. I suggest it is a fair argument that there will be a distinct lessening of the vote for that reason.

I do not find much merit in the argument that a large number of people are going to be prevented from voting. The question of holidays has been brought up and I will admit that if we are going to have every election in August that argument would have a good deal of weight, but sensible governments do not usually do that. We hope this government will not do it again. Care is taken to put the voting day on a Monday, and I do not find myself moved anywhere near tears by the feeling that a large number of people who wanted to vote desperately could not do so.

An hon. Member: You are a hard hearted man.

Mr. Macdonnell: I really am not. I try to be but I am not. As I say, I was greatly moved by that argument. Again, if it were possible, which it is not—and this is the type of argument which it is always useful to make because nobody can prove you are wrong—to find out how many of these people would not have been there I suggest that the figure of 500 might become very much smaller.

I was also interested in the discourse on travel given us by the hon. member for Regina City and the very clever way he connected advance polls with the desirability of Saskatchewan citizens becoming world travellers. I thought that was very interesting and ingenious indeed. It almost looked as if he was trying to talk his own bill out when he got on an argument of that kind. That seemed to me to suggest that there was a somewhat flimsy foundation for the heart-breaking appeal made by the hon. member for Winnipeg—

Mr. Knowles: North Centre.

Mr. Macdonnell: Winnipeg North Centre. I do not know why it is so difficult to remember the hon. member's constituency, because we do hear it quite often, but there is something about those three words that makes them hard to remember. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made a very sustained appeal. One always has to treat with respect arguments which he makes but one does not always have to be convinced, and when I was asked to believe that if we did not do this a lot of people were going to lose their two weeks holidays I felt we were getting very far away from reality.

Unfortunately I was not a member of the committee. I am sure I could make a much better speech if I had only been on the committee. But I do gather that when the question was put to the chief electoral officer, Mr. Castonguay, although, of course, he could not show himself partisan in any way, it became clear that he felt there were difficulties of administration which would have to be faced. Of course, if they have to be faced they must be faced but I should like to be quite sure that it is necessary to face them. In that connection I propose to quote from the proceedings of the standing committee. I do not often quote the hon. member for Macleod but I hope he will not mind my quoting him on this occasion because I think he raised a serious point. Evidently Mr. Castonguay also felt that it was a serious point. I read from page 308 of the proceedings of the committee of 1955 on privileges and elections.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I am all in favour of getting everyone out who has a vote, and I think that is true of all of us. I would like to support this if it were not for some doubt in my mind.

My doubt is whether a thing of this kind would not be taken undue advantage of. Is there any way you could protect a person's vote? For instance, we do know that a good many votes are stolen. In other words, a person goes in to vote at noon or in the afternoon, only to find that somebody has voted in his place, has stolen his name, has impersonated him. That is done and there is nothing that you can do about it.

A person comes in to vote and finds that his name is gone. No one knows where he came from. Now, how could voters be protected under this? I visualize, for instance, a city where there is a bit of skulduggery done, and we would say that at a couple of hundred polls three or four or half a dozen in each poll have voted previously on a declaration such as might be described in this resolution, and then we find that those declarations were spurious. A person comes along on election day only to find that he cannot vote because someone else has already voted and made this declaration. He says: "I did not make it." What can be done about that? That is the difficulty which I see here. I would like to support it, but I do not want anything like that to happen.

Then the witness, the chief electoral officer, said:

The Witness: Mr. Chairman, as members of the committee know, the advance poll takes place on the Thursday, Friday, and Saturday immediately preceding the ordinary polling day. At present, in view of the limited nature of the provisions of section 95 of the act, it is possible for the returning officer to send a duplicate of the certificate which he issues to the person who has applied for it, to the poll where that person would normally vote, and therefore prevent double voting.

Because of the limited nature of the section there would not be more than 30 or 40 voters, generally speaking, who, in practice, would vote at an advance poll. Therefore, it is only a question on the Saturday night before Monday the ordinary polling day of having 30 or 40 certificates delivered to the various deputy returning officers concerned.

I submit that if this privilege was extended to everyone, let us say that 5 per cent of the electorate used these facilities, out of 40,000 electors it would mean that 2,000 certificates would have to be delivered from Saturday night to the following Monday to prevent double voting.

I know of no way to prevent what Mr. Hansell has mentioned. I think that the only way you can prevent double voting is to notify the deputy returning officer in the ordinary poll that someone has voted at an advance poll. And by advancing the poll to the week previous, the eleventh, tenth, and ninth day before the ordinary polling day, we would have an interval of eight days between the last day of voting at the advance poll and ordinary polling day in order to enable the returning officer to strike off the names on his list of the electors who have voted at the advance poll.

I think perhaps I had better read on. Mr. Pouliot interposed "Hear, hear" and then the witness continued:

The Witness: That is the only way it could be done. In the cities I would say that the ballot boxes would not normally have been delivered to the deputy returning officers before the eighth day before polling day, therefore the returning officer could possibly strike off the list any names of electors who voted at an advance poll. However, he might also strike off the name of an elector who had been impersonated. I do not know of any way to prevent it except by persons at the poll who represent the candidates, challenging these electors, because they would probably know the electors. I know of no way if the privilege is extended to prevent an elector from attempting to vote twice except by putting a larger period between the advance poll and the ordinary polling day to permit the returning officer to take the necessary steps to notify the deputy returning officers concerned . . . The problem is more difficult in some rural areas because the ballot boxes ordinarily are sent a week before polling day by registered mail, and the deputy returning officers in some cases would receive them three weeks before polling day. Therefore some means would have to be devised in rural polling places to notify the deputy returning officer that an elector has voted at an advance poll, and that should he present himself to vote at the ordinary poll, he should be challenged or not be permitted to vote.

There is more to the same effect but I shall not weary the house by reading it. I want to make the point that there are administrative difficulties that I think should not be overlooked; that we should consider whether the additional expense is worth while and whether the difficulty in connection with the custody of the boxes is worth while. It seems to me that the chances of irregularities occurring are vastly increased. After all, every deputy returning officer has not in his house a safety deposit box in which he deposits these things. In general, it seems to me that it will cause real difficulty of administration, and that it will be a terrible headache to the chief electoral officer. How far we should go is something that I think could be better stated by people who are more familiar than I am with the actual mechanics of elections.

I would just add that to me the argument for throwing the gates wide open as against continuing with those who are presently named here and whose right to the advance poll I think we all concede is not one that convinces me. Certainly I see no reason why we should go further with the matter at the present time.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the motion for second reading of this bill. There is perhaps no riding in the whole of Canada where a larger percentage of voters are disfranchised than in my own riding of Burin-Burgeo. In the two elections that have passed, only about 50 per cent of those eligible have been able to vote. Of the other half, about 20 per cent have been somewhere on the high seas on voting day, either in the deep-sea trade, in the coastal trade or else fishing on the grand banks. Another 30 per cent have been out of the riding altogether, employed in other parts of Canada. I am not sure whether or not they were able to vote in the places where they were working.

This bill is therefore of considerable interest to my constituents. But I should like to say right at the beginning that I heartily agree with what the hon. member for Peterborough said earlier today, namely that this bill should not have been introduced at this particular time because I think it is going to confuse the issue.

As I have listened to the arguments put forward by the opposition side in favour of this bill I can see a great deal of confusion already. In the first place, we are confusing people's right to vote with the convenience of voting. Nobody is being deprived of the right to vote if there is no advance poll. Neither is a person given an additional right to vote by the creation of an advance poll. What the advance poll does is to give an extra convenience to the voters in that locality where it is established.

In my riding of Burin-Burgeo I have about 45,000 people, of whom about 20,000 are electors. Those 20,000 are distributed over 1,000 miles of coastline in about 250 different settlements. In most of those settlements there is a polling booth. Some of the smaller settlements are too small to have a voting booth, and the people must row by boat three or four miles to the nearest poll in order to vote. If the weather is bad and they cannot row that distance, then of course they do not vote. In some of the larger centres there may be five or six separate polling stations. Hence the total number of polling booths in my riding would be somewhere about 200 or 220. I have mentioned these figures for one purpose, Mr. Speaker, namely to point out that in my own riding there would be 200-plus separate polling stations, yet in that whole area there would be not more than four or five advanced polls.

We all want to make it possible for the greatest number of people to vote on polling day. We want the voters to realize that it is their duty to vote. But if they cannot vote on voting day, nobody in this parliament is depriving them of the right to vote. They are prevented from voting because of some domestic factor or some factor such as work, business, pleasure or vacation. They have to choose between the two, whether the right to vote is of sufficient importance to forgo the other or vice versa.

My objection to this bill is based on the fact that I do not see how it can be applied on a practicable basis to my riding, which is similar to all the ridings in my province, and similar as well to ridings in other parts of Canada, particularly British Columbia. I submit that if this house is going to provide extra convenience for one set of voters in one locality then, by the same token, we must provide the same conveniences for other voters in other localities wherever they may live. I believe it was the hon. member for Regina City who spoke of treating every voter fairly. If we are going to treat every voter fairly, the only way that can be done is to set up advance polls in every community. If we do that we will double or triple the cost of an election. In addition to that, we will be destroying the very meaning of polling day itself. In other words, the result of this bill would be to destroy the main significance of the election act.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I find myself unable to support this bill. My argument is this. Why should a person be granted an extra convenience just because he happens to live in a certain place, because he lives in a large centre or because he works in an industrial centre? Surely every voter has equal rights under the law. He has equal rights because this parliament has given him the same conveniences that we grant to all others. Unless this bill envisages setting up advance polls at every polling station in Canada, then it discriminates against the places where advance polls are not set up.

That is the very thing this bill claims to do, to eliminate discrimination, but all it will do will be to increase the discrimination. The only way discrimination can be avoided is to set up advance polls in every polling station in Canada. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that is impracticable, and for that reason I cannot support the bill.

Mr. Maurice Boisvert (Nicolet-Yamaska): I should like to say just a few words with respect to this bill. Even if the hon. member for Vancouver East used strong arguments, as usual, he failed to convince me that he was right. Personally, I do not see any advantage in doubling the number of polling divisions in our country. In the last election we had nearly 41,000 polling booths, and the proportion of those who voted at the advance polls was quite small.

This bill is intended to extend the privilege of voting at an advance poll to every citizen who believes he will be unable to vote on polling day. Let us ask, first, who is going to determine whether or not each individual is right or wrong in the belief that he cannot vote on polling day. This is quite a complication. Who is going to decide that Mr. So and So is right in believing six or seven days before the polling date, that he cannot vote on election day? In my opinion that is quite a weak spot in the bill.

The second weak spot is that in my estimation this bill will create quite a few legal problems. After the last election we did not receive many petitions. In the rural districts we have no problem about voting on polling day, but the problem is greater in the cities, and that is where we now get the trouble on election day. If people are entitled to decide for themselves that they are going to vote at one of the advance polls, then on polling day who is going to decide whether or not the vote was properly given at the advance poll? It will require closer checking in order to avoid duplication of votes. This would open the door to many petitions after the election.

I would think that voting is a duty, and when the date is set by parliament I believe it is a duty that is dear to the heart of every Canadian. I would conclude by saying that the bill, instead of reinforcing the election act, will have just the opposite effect and will destroy an act which has been giving good results. Nearly 70 per cent of the people cast their ballots at the last election, and if we compare this percentage with the percentage of votes cast in many other democratic countries we will see that it is a very good result. I do not see why we should change a law which has been giving such good results.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I intend to be very brief, but I did want an opportunity to express my support for the bill. I believe that in a democracy we should aim to provide an opportunity for as large a percentage of the population as possible to exercise their franchise. I am not capable of speaking with respect to urban conditions but I do know something about rural conditions, and I know something about the numbers of people in my own constituency who have been denied the franchise on election day because of the deficiency of the present election act.

In my constituency it is customary for loggers to come down the lakes some 20 or 25 miles on week ends and then return to their employment. If it should so happen that election day is on Monday—in fact, by law that happens all the time—they are not permitted the opportunity to exercise their franchise when they are at their homes over the week ends, and so on; they have returned to their employment. In my constituency I have possibly up to 100 loggers who at the last election were denied the opportunity to cast their votes because it was simply almost impossible for them to return to the polling station to cast their votes on election day.

Let me give another illustration. I happen to know of the situation of some miners who are working in isolated places. I have miners who are working on the Duncan river. The nearest poll is 25 miles away. They are in the habit of coming to town on Saturday and Sunday to do their shopping, to visit their wives and things of that sort, returning on Sunday evening. The election is normally held on a Monday. Under these circumstances these men are usually denied the opportunity to exercise their franchise, because in this instance they would have to travel some 25 or 30 miles by launch.

Then I have a number of men who are on the passenger vessels and tugs on the various lakes and rivers in my constituency. It just so happens that in the case of one passenger vessel I have in mind it leaves at six in the morning and does not get to a suitable port for voting until after the polls have closed. I could give a number of illustrations with respect to tugs towing logs that are out on the lakes for days at a time; because of the terms of the elections act a good number of these people have been denied the opportunity to exercise their franchise.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, because of my personal experience, and my knowledge of the fact that the present election act denies to a good number of loggers, a number of miners and a number of those working on lakes and rivers in my constituency—the men, I might tell you, who are producing the wealth of this country—the opportunity to exercise their franchise, I have no hesitation in supporting the bill and the efforts of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to get the election act amended so that a greater percentage of good Canadian citizens can express their opinions on election day.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that those who have spoken in opposition to this bill live in sheltered areas of the country, and are not familiar with the problems which confront a great many other citizens. In view of the fact that a number of our provinces have made provisions along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, it is very difficult for people of all political parties living in those provinces to understand why the federal government is not prepared to take a look at the problems which confront people on the frontiers of the country.

The hon. member for Kootenay West describes conditions which are found in many parts of Canada. These are not isolated conditions. It so happens that in my constituency we have no provision for advance polling for railway workers, and we have several trains which must operate on election day as they do on other days. The conductors, the brakemen, the engineers and the firemen operating those trains are denied the right to exercise their franchise if the trains are to move. The trains must leave before the polls open, and when those men reach their destination they are outside their constituencies and are not entitled to register their votes.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has performed a valuable public service again by bringing forward this bill, which really should be supported by everyone who is concerned about the importance of giving every person a chance to exercise his or her franchise on election day. I want to be on record as supporting this progressive move that has been brought forward.

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, this has been a very interesting debate up to this point. If it were to continue somewhat longer perhaps I might be persuaded one way or the other. I doubt whether there is much to be said by the supporters of the government; for it seems to me the Secretary of State has made it difficult, if not impossible, for any of them to be persuaded by the—

Mr. Ellis: He cracked the whip.

Mr. Michener: —eloquence and by the reasoning of those who have supported this bill.

The argument has been largely one of detail and example. We have heard a good deal about the difficulties of persons in various occupations exercising the franchise. We have heard about the lumbermen and their habits, their times of absence from their homes and the times when they are present at their homes, when it would be convenient for them to vote and when it would not be convenient for them to vote. We have had a great many other specific examples of people who, by reason of their occupations, find it more convenient to vote at one time than at another. The case of the traveller, the person on holidays, perhaps is the most interesting one that has been advanced, and I am not sure whether the amendment to the act is in aid of more travel or whether the reverse is the case.

I see you are getting a bit uneasy, Mr. Speaker. Will you call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Michener: Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock I was recalling some instances and examples which had been given in the course of the debate of different groups of people whose opportunity to vote might be increased by the amendment. Quite a variety of examples were given. I daresay that in some instances they were well founded and that the effect of the bill would be to enlarge the opportunity of some people to vote. Perhaps the amendment might work in the opposite direction, because it is hard to see just how these things will work out when you are looking at them in the abstract.

I want to speak for a minute about the principle of the bill, which as I see it is the desirability of making it possible for all those entitled to vote to do so. That objective might be achieved in different ways. You might have a method of voting by proxy when the voter himself is unable to appear, or you might extend the number of voting days. Members of this house will not remember it, but I believe in the early days of confederation voting took place by open ballot. Under those circumstances it would have been possible for people to vote without attending the poll because their ballots were open. Voting could have been done by sending in a letter.

There is no question that in our view of government the right to vote is basic. Some people call it a privilege, and in some countries it is regarded as a duty. In those cases those eligible to vote are under some compulsion to cast their ballots whether they want to or not. We have not taken that view in Canada, but undoubtedly this is a basic right and anything within reason which will assist those entitled to exercise it is desirable.

As I understand the proposed amendment, the problem is approached from the point of view of the number of voting days to be made available and the spacing of those days. That is exactly the same principle as the present election act, but with a different arrangement of the days on which one may vote. It is possible to suggest a great many combinations of voting days. Regular voting might take place on more than one day, on a series of days, or there might be two periods for voting as under the present act. There are various arrangements of those two periods by placing them at greater or lesser intervals apart.

I think it is desirable that as far as possible all people who wish to exercise their franchise should do so at as nearly the same time as can be arranged conveniently, so that all will be casting their ballots on the same issues with the same considerations before them. It is not often that election issues change very much from day to day, but one can recall instances where the results of elections have been changed by reason of something that has happened in the last day or two of the campaign. As a general approach it seems to me desirable that as far as possible everyone should vote at almost the same time. Therefore I would not think it wise to have an advance poll some distance ahead of the regular poll.

The other question involved is who should be entitled to take advantage of these advance polls. This is the broadest suggestion of its kind that has been submitted, because it goes almost as far as saying that anyone who considers it would be convenient to vote at an advance poll rather than waiting for the ordinary voting day could persuade himself to that effect and make his affidavit reasonably near the fact by saying that he had reason to believe he would not be able to vote later, and govern himself accordingly.

I think it is admitted that the present category of those who are entitled to vote at the advance poll is fairly narrow. I have known of people whose business took them away regularly and who did not fall within the limited categories named, though they were on a par with those who were entitled to use the advance poll. It appears to me that the categories as now enumerated might very well be enlarged in order to make it unnecessary for anyone whose ordinary course of business took him away from his polling division on voting day to be denied the opportunity of casting his ballot at an advance poll.

When one tries to go beyond that and suggest that being on holidays is a good reason for not attending to vote, it seems to me that a very wide net is being spread to catch a very few voters. My experience is that people who are away on holidays do not like to be interrupted. As a matter of fact, in our exercise of the franchise in this country at all levels of government the proportion of those who see fit to exercise their voting right is lamentably small. In elections in the city in which my constituency is located as few as 25 per cent of the qualified voters have turned up on occasion to cast their ballots. That perhaps is extreme. I think on the average some 50 per cent see fit to go to the poll and vote.

Of course these are non-party elections. With the help of the political parties a good many voters are stimulated to go to the poll and cast their votes. That creates more interest, with the result that in provincial and dominion elections, in my experience, the percentage of the qualified electorate voting ranges from 54 or 55 per cent to as much as 90 per cent in some polling subdivisions. Now it is a question whether the system can be improved. I have mentioned the case of people on holidays. They are not anxious to disturb their vacation, as a general rule, and though some of them will go long distances to vote others would not take advantage of the advance poll even if it were set up for them.

So, looking at the bill as it is presented, and in the light of the solutions proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, it seems to me that in principle one cannot disagree with anything which enlarges the opportunity to vote, provided the system suggested is fair and reasonable in all the circumstances and does not unduly extend the election period. Under the terms of the bill as now put forward we would have to face a longer period between nomination and voting than exists at present and, it seems to me, a longer election period; but on the whole I think my view of the matter is that we could very well enlarge the category of those who vote at advance polls without, perhaps, making some of the other changes suggested in this bill.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is encouraging to see the interest there is in these proposals, and I agree with those hon. members who have said that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has done a service in bringing the matter forward and focusing the attention of the house on certain problems that undoubtedly exist in connection with the election act and the opportunities afforded Canadian people to vote.

I think on balance I agree with my colleague from St. Paul's who has just resumed his seat, when he said there are some features of the bill which would be of such possible disadvantage that, on the whole, the measure cannot be unequivocally supported. Certainly I think much is to be said in favour of widening the opportunities to vote at advance polls. I believe the categories of those now allowed to vote under this procedure are much too restricted. On the other hand I am not in favour, without hearing further conclusive argument, of allowing unrestricted opportunity to vote at advance polls for the period of time the bill suggests. I would prefer to see, perhaps, a compromise between a wider classification of those who might vote at advance polls and a shorter time in which they might do so, together with an experiment, at least, in an approach toward the absentee vote.

Undoubtedly there are many people who for personal reasons or for reasons of their employment have to be away from their constituencies on polling day, and I really do not see any compelling argument against some system of absentee voting for these people if they are able to prove their identity in whatever constituency they may happen to find themselves on polling day. In my opinion they should be allowed to vote there, and have their vote counted in their home constituency.

I think this is a safer system, for this reason. There is a complete opportunity to check the ballots cast in an absentee vote. The name goes back to the home borough, and if it is on the list there and no one else has voted in that name, that vote may be counted there. On the other hand, if one adopts this virtually unrestricted advance poll, as this bill suggests, it would, to my mind, open too much opportunity for tampering with the voting machinery.

I may, perhaps, be accused of having a nasty, suspicious mind; but I am aware of cases, particularly in completely urban constituencies, where there was a great deal of what has been called, and can only be described as, skulduggery in connection with voting on polling day. It is difficult enough to check this sort of thing, and stop it. Individual candidates have their scrutineers, and they act to the best of their ability to see that there is no impersonation, but there are letters on file with the chief electoral officer—letters which at one time were brought to the attention of the committee on privileges and elections—which show how difficult it is to resist a determined attempt, well financed and well organized, to impersonate electors, and to have a number of people who are not actually entitled to vote at all cast their ballots in the names of people who are on the list.

There are also examples of what can only be called "goon squads" entering polling stations. When the scrutineers representing the candidates, feeling that impersonation is going on, try to challenge a voter, they have virtually been terrorized into silence. If this can be done on the one day to which voting is confined, how much easier it would be to do it if there were an advance poll open for a week or ten days, with less opportunity of checking whether or not a person who comes in claiming he is someone whose name is on the list is actually that person.

I do not think it would be safe to give the increased opportunity for impersonation and organized skulduggery at the polls which I think this proposal would make possible, and I believe that was one of the features the chief electoral officer had in mind in the passage quoted by the hon. member for Greenwood, when he said it would be very difficult indeed, if not impossible, to provide adequate machinery to supervise advance polls of this length of time and give the assurance that voting was conducted properly.

So, because of that danger; because I believe the period of time my hon. friend suggests is too long, and because I think the same results could be achieved by a widening of the classification of those who are entitled to vote at advance polls, I must say with some reluctance that I find myself not in accord with the bill as it has been presented to the house.

Mr. Frank G. Power (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, it is with some diffidence that, as a rather junior member of the house, I rise to speak in the debate at this time, but this is a subject which has been of considerable interest to me for quite a long time. I must congratulate the proposer of the motion for the intention he has in submitting the bill to the house. I think it is laudable in every way. I believe he is sincere in wanting the greatest number of voters possible to cast their ballots at every election. However, like the hon. member for St. Paul's and the hon. member for Kamloops, who have preceded me, I feel he is going too far in wanting to have anyone who feels that he cannot be present permitted to file an affidavit and vote on the ninth or tenth day prior to the date set for the election.

In my opinion this would result not in one election day but in three election days. At times today voters are rather difficult to stir, and were they given this added convenience I am afraid they would flock to the advance polls, with the result that instead of having one election day we would have three. Speaking only for myself, may I say that the nervous tension of such an ordeal would be terrific. I cannot, of course, speak for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but I presume he has contemplated this and is prepared to face it. Personally I think it is torture in the most medieval sense of the word.

Then there is another factor. In looking over the bill I have examined the clause in which is set forth the manner in which at the end of the first day of the advance poll and at the end of the second day the ballots will be dealt with, and I must confess that the mechanics of it completely escape me. In the ordinary course of events, when a ballot box is opened the deputy returning officer, the poll clerk and the representatives of each candidate have a right to examine each ballot. Yet it is provided in the bill that the ballots shall remain secret. Frankly, I should like the proposer of the bill to explain in more detail how secrecy of the vote can be maintained at these advance polls.

Another matter of considerable import to most of us is the convenience of our workers and the expenses involved in an election campaign. Each one of us, I am sure, depends not only on a party platform but also on a large group of party workers, personal friends and other voluntary workers. I cannot see how we can expect our friends and workers to take three days off, which is what in effect would be required if they were to represent the candidate adequately and take part in all these electoral procedures. I think it would be asking too much of them to ask them to do so.

However, I do think, and I speak with some experience in the matter, that the qualifications for voting at advance polls should be considerably widened. September 26, 1955, the date of the by-election at which I was chosen, happened to be a holy day of the Jewish people. As a result over 250 Jewish men and women in my constituency were deprived of the vote. I feel that not only should there be occupational exceptions and that those exceptions should be extended considerably, but also that religious exceptions should be included in our electoral law.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. gentleman speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I at the outset give the assurance once again, particularly to such members as the hon. member for St. Paul's, the hon. member for Kamloops and I think too the hon. member for Quebec South, that if this bill is given second reading I will ask that it be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. It would be my understanding, and I think this would be in keeping with the rules and practices of the house, that that committee would have power to make amendments to the details and the mechanics set out in the bill.

All we are voting on when we vote on second reading is the principle of the bill, which calls for the extension of the privilege of voting at advance polls to any qualified voter who believes he will be away from his home polling division on election day. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there are good arguments for shortening or lengthening, if you will, the time between voting day and the days of the advance polls. Certainly there are good arguments for reconsidering the question of how many days in advance of election day nomination day should be.

What one has to do in arriving at decisions of that kind is to balance the desire to make the advance polls as readily available as possible with the desire to keep the advance polls as close to election day as possible. It is a matter of simplifying the machinery and at the same time meeting the purpose contained in the principle of the bill, namely that the right to vote should be extended to all who find they must be away on election day. These are details the committee could consider.

I confess I am a little puzzled by the remarks of some of my friends who feel that the right to vote at advance polls should be extended—I am thinking of members who said that it is too restricted at the present time—but who question whether it should go all the way, whether it should be made available to everybody, as my bill proposes. After all, Mr. Speaker, that is what democracy is, the belief that certain rights pertain to every citizen in the country.

There is no secret about it. This bill is not designed to get a few more in with the result that in the pursuit of that design it just happens that it gets everybody in. It starts out with that purpose. It starts out with the belief that just as everybody is entitled to vote at a federal general election, so everybody should have the same right in terms of the advance polls. In other words, in my view it is just a further implementation of the democratic idea that all citizens are equal and should have equal rights in a matter of this kind.

A good deal of the argument in connection with this bill, Mr. Speaker, seems to have turned on a hypothesis. I am not going to spend any more time on it, because it seems to me that the record will speak for itself. Those on the other side, led by the Secretary of State, who have taken this line have argued—and my friend the hon. member for Quebec South was the last one to ring the changes on that argument—that if we make available these additional polling days by way of an advance poll, people will flock to the polls on those days and this will detract from the importance of the election day itself.

I say again, Mr. Speaker, as calmly as I can, that this is a guess on their part which they make from no experience and without any foundation whatsoever. We on the other side of the argument, many of whom come from the four western provinces where we have universal voting at advance polls, rely on our experience when we say that this universal right to vote at advance polls removes the grievance but does not result in a flocking to the advance polls by voters.

My colleague the hon. member for Vancouver East pointed out that in the large provincial constituency which he used to represent in the British Columbia legislature the number did not get over 500. I am satisfied that in the constituencies in and around Winnipeg the number is not even that high. I suggest that our experience in the four western provinces of what has happened, namely that people have used this right when they needed to do so but have not abused it, is of more validity than is the guessing that has been put forth on this point by those on the other side from the Secretary of State to the hon. member for Quebec South.

May I say that I appreciated the remarks made by my friend the hon. member for St. Paul's, who saw a good deal of merit in the principle of this bill. But I must say to him quite frankly that I was surprised that he said what he did about people going away on holidays. If I understood him correctly —although I did not take down his words— he said it seemed a bit strange that we would go so far as to include those who are away on holidays in order to get in a few more deserving cases. Mr. Speaker, I say this again. Let there be no secret about it; so far as I am concerned, and my colleagues with me, those on holidays are deserving cases. They are Canadian citizens exercising one of the rights of modern life in this country. Surely the fact that they are away on holidays does not put them in a second class in so far as the right to vote is concerned. That is the purpose of this bill, namely to make it possible for any who have to be away on election day, for whatever purpose, to vote at an advance poll.

I am a little bit surprised at some of my friends to the right doubting the desirability of extending this privilege, because they certainly had complaints to make in August, 1953, because the election was held at a time when many people were away on holidays. To my friend the hon. member for Greenwood, who indicated this afternoon that it was a bit hard to move him to tears, I say that he may find himself at least gritting his teeth come June 17 of this year or whenever the election is held, if in the constituency of Greenwood there are people who are unable to vote because they find that they have to be away on election day. It will be very awkward for him to have to tell them that there was a proposal before the House of Commons to change the law and to make it possible for them to vote, but that he opposed that privilege and helped to maintain the denial of their right to vote.

Because of some references made by some of the supporters of this bill to urban people going away on holidays, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo seemed to take it that the aim of the legislation is simply to provide these extra advance polls for urban constituencies. He felt that this was a discrimination against his constituency strung along the coast of Newfoundland. Without referring to that section of the bill, something which is against the rules on second reading—and I say that also for the benefit of one hon. member who spoke a moment ago—may I point out that the bill does not make any distinction between one kind of riding and another. It simply says that the chief electoral officer may order the holding of advance polls in any or all of the constituencies in this country.

I must apologize to my friend the hon. member for Vancouver South for not having interrupted him earlier in his speech this afternoon. As soon as he started to speak and I detected that there was a note of opposition to my bill I was tempted to interrupt him and remind him that last year he voted for the bill. My apology is that I did not interrupt him at that time but allowed him to go on and make his entire speech against the bill. At the end, as those who were here will recall, I drew his attention to the fact that though he spoke against the bill this year, he voted for it last year. I think he was right the first time.

Perhaps I should remind two other hon. members on the government side of the house that they voted for the bill last year, in order that they will not make the mistake of going the wrong way this year. Those two were the hon. member for Mackenzie River and the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that we have had an interesting discussion on this matter. Election matters, of course, are always of interest to members of parliament. Whatever may happen to the bill on this occasion, I hope the result of this consideration will be that one of these times soon, if not on this occasion, we will take this further step along the democratic road and make the right to vote at advance polls available to any voters who find that they will have to be away on election day. I agree with my friend the hon. member for Kamloops that attention might be given to the principle of absentee voting, which has been tried so successfully in British Columbia and in Saskatchewan. That proposal being a little more radical than the one that is in this bill, I say to him that it was my fear that I would have more trouble in this house in trying to present it than with this one. But at any rate here is hoping that one of these times soon we shall recognize that this grievance which people have that they are not able to vote on election day because they are away from their home constituency is one which it would be proper for parliament to try to meet.

After all, as I said earlier, the franchise is not something that is the property of the government or of parliament. It is something that belongs to the people of Canada. We should make it as fair and democratic as we possibly can for all the people of this nation.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

Mr. Raoul Poulin (Beauce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 6, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

(Translation):

He said: Mr. Speaker, as Bill No. 6 whose second reading I am moving today, is, as it were, a true copy of Bill 149 which I introduced last year and about which I made quite elaborate remarks at the time, I assume that I need not dwell at length on that same subject today.

Besides, I wish to be brief so as to give others who would like to speak on the bill a chance to do so, and still allow the house enough time, if it so wishes, to vote on that important matter.

The sole purpose of this bill is to provide that every cheque, draft, traveller's cheque, bill of exchange, postal note or money order, of any department and of any crown corporation, shall be printed in both the official languages of Canada.

There is nothing very strange, and still less impossible, in that provision, since it is naturally inspired by the principle recognized by the house in 1936, when the Bank of Canada Act was enacted.

I do hope that this time, unlike what happened last year, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) will not attempt to suggest the possibility that a measure of this character cannot be introduced by a private member, since its implementation would involve an additional expense of public funds. If anyone feels he must at all costs oppose this measure, I trust more serious arguments than that one will be resorted to.

There is no doubt that the English speaking element in this house and in the country as a whole will welcome such a measure, for it would complete the one concerning bilingual money and stamps, and would, in a way, sanction a recognition of the bilingual status of Canada.

I have no doubt that this same English-speaking group will graciously consider what happens in the province of Quebec where, ever since confederation, government authorities have observed not only the letter of the law, but have gone far beyond its spirit. Indeed, all official printing in that province is made out in both languages, at least at government level.

And yet, the percentage of the English minority in Quebec is less than half the percentage of the French minority throughout this country.

Not later than January 23 last, I read in Le Droit, of Ottawa, a news item of the Canadian press exemplifying the general statement I just made. I quote:

> Municipal notices must be written in both languages.
> Quebec (CP)—The private bills committee of the legislature yesterday turned down a request by a Quebec municipality asking for authorization to use only the French language for its public notices.
> That request had been made by the municipal council of Plessisville. Plessisville is a municipality of 5,700, located 100 miles north-east of Montreal.
> Premier Duplessis said the Cities and Municipalities Act says that all municipal notices must be made out in both French and English.
> A spokesman for the municipal council of Plessisville said, on the other hand, that there is not a single English-speaking citizen in Plessisville.

I do not think anything need be added to that report of the Canadian Press, except that, before asking others to make sacrifices in the interest of good understanding we, in Quebec, start by setting an example of graciousness, sometimes, even to the point of exaggeration, and of co-operation.

I have no intention of quoting to the house all the expressions of approval I received last year following my introduction of this bill to the house. This would be tiresome. May I simply say that I have received some from every imaginable quarter. There were some from individuals belonging to both our great ethnic groups, from patriotic, educational or religious groups, from city or rural parish priests, young people's associations, women's clubs, school principals, municipal councils, school boards, business concerns, citizens' leagues, insurance companies, boards of trades and what have you.

Consequently I am confident that this proposal will be accepted by the house, if not unanimously at least by a substantial majority.

Mr. J. H. Proudfoot (Pontiac-Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, dear French and English speaking colleagues, I am pleased to support the bill introduced by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin).

(Text):

As I have already said, I rise at this time to give my full support to the bill introduced by the hon. member for Beauce. Might I point out at this time that Canada is the home of French Canadians, and I believe they should be made to feel at home from the shores of the Atlantic to the shores of the Pacific. Together we of French Canadian origin and those of English speaking origin can build Canada into a great nation.

Might I point out that the only reason we have a confederation instead of a unitary state is because of the French Canadians. We asked them to come into confederation as full partners with English speaking Canadians, yet at the same time we wanted to preserve their rights and their own way of life. We divided authority between the federal government and the provinces primarily so the French speaking people would not be overwhelmed by the English speaking majority.

Might I point out that in the province where I live and where I was born the English speaking minority are perfectly free to live their own way of life and teach their own mother tongue. Their schools have been well provided for since confederation by each provincial government which happened to be in power, regardless of its political make-up. I should like to point out also that in Quebec nine out of every ten people are of the Roman Catholic faith, with eight out of every ten speaking the French language. Yet the minority have complete autonomy and equality.

There may be some hon. members of the house, and I am thinking particularly of those who come from distant parts of Canada, who question the need for the legislation proposed by the hon. member in Bill No. 6. Indeed, it would not be strange if some of those whose lives have been spent in British Columbia, for example, where the French language is rarely heard, were inclined to make light of the proposal in Bill No. 6.

To those hon. members, if any there be, I should like to point out some rather surprising figures, or at least I think they will be surprising to them, and I refer to the tabulations resulting from the dominion census of 1951. In that year the total population was just over 14 million people, and of that total 2,741,812 used the French language as their only means of communication with one another. I do not quote that figure in any disparaging way, any more than I would disparage the more than nine million Canadians who according to that census spoke only English. I merely call it to the attention of the house to illustrate my point that a very considerable number of the people in this country speak French exclusively.

They have every right to do so, because the right of Canadians to the use of the French language is inviolate. The British North America Act contains guarantees in this respect with which I am sure all hon. members are familiar. I submit that those who framed our written constitution did not mean or intend that the use of the French language should be limited to the federal parliament, the federal courts, the Quebec legislative assembly and the courts of Quebec. In 1867, when a French speaking minority was entering somewhat fearfully into a new kind of political partnership with the English speaking majority, it was thought necessary, and I believe rightly so, to guarantee the areas in which the use of the French language would be of the greatest value to the minority. This, you might say, was the irreducible minimum.

From that starting point I think one must assume that several factors govern the determination of whether English or French shall be used in the official business of government or the day to day business of living, and by far the most important factor is the ability of those communicating with one another to understand the same language.

I come now to the 2.75 million Canadians whose only language is French. The question here is not on the high plane of constitutional rights, it is on the very practical level of communication. The only way to address them and be understood is in the French language. Whenever the federal government has to communicate with them, in respect to income tax for example, it does so in French. That is only practical common sense.

(Translation):

Mr. Knight: Will the hon. member permit me to ask a question? What is he reading?

(Text):

Mr. Proudfoot: I have not time to answer questions put by the hon. gentleman. As other hon. members who have spoken previously in support of this bill have pointed out, our coinage and our paper currency are bilingual. This is a recognition of the fact that it is both a convenience and an advantage to a large number of French speaking Canadians to be able to understand that the Bank of Canada will pay on demand one dollar, or whatever the sum may be. Their understanding of this, by virtue of the French inscription on the bank notes, lends added strength to our currency.

Government departments and the many agencies of government pay out a great deal of money to French speaking as well as English speaking citizens. When doing this they do not wrap up a sheaf of Bank of Canada notes and send them off by parcel post. In lieu of doing that they issue cheques. But is it not just as important for the recipient of such a cheque to be able to understand what is printed on it as it is for him to be able to understand that the Bank of Canada will pay a certain sum on demand?

I submit that it is. Cheques and other negotiable instruments are merely extensions of the currency system. The reasoning which lay behind the decisions of both Liberal and Conservative governments of a generation ago to issue currency bearing French as well as English inscriptions is just as valid when applied to negotiable instruments.

Perhaps, in spite of my argument, some hon. members may think that the use of bilingual cheques should be limited to those parts of Canada where most French speaking citizens reside. But, Mr. Speaker, I would call their attention to the fact—and again I go to the 1951 census for my information—that very nearly one million citizens of French origin reside outside the province of Quebec. It has been said by some of my hon. friends opposite, Mr. Speaker, that there is some likelihood of a general election being held before long. I know nothing of that. But I do suggest to them that if this indeed be the case, then a million people represent an awful lot of votes, votes they may need. If these members can see their way clear to support this bill, I am sure those citizens of French tongue who reside in their ridings will appreciate the fact.

So far, Mr. Speaker, I have based my argument on the very practical consideration of communicating with our fellow citizens of French language who do not understand English. But there is another consideration to which we should give great weight in approving or rejecting Bill No. 6. It is that the cement of common citizenship in this great country is slowly hardening, binding together both races for the better pursuit of our common destiny. The old division between English and French is being bridged—slowly, perhaps, and with difficulty. Old antagonisms and old suspicions are hard to root out. But rooted out they must be if we are to survive as a nation, if we are to play our part in preserving our civilization.

I implore hon. members, Mr. Speaker, to look about them in the world today and consider whether Canada can afford to be disunited; to consider whether they can afford to reject any proposal, however insignificant it may seem against a global backdrop, which will foster Canadian unity. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation proposed by the hon. member for Beauce can be likened to a timber in the bridge we Canadian people—all of us—are building over the gulf of misunderstanding and distrust which for far too long has divided and weakened our country.

Mr. Speaker, I support the proposal of the hon. member for Beauce to make further practical and valuable use of the French language in this country.

(Translation):

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I would like to say that I do not object to the bill being carried, as the hon. member said.

(Text):

Mr. Proudfoot: I do not think I can answer the question of the hon. member who spoke for the opposition, as his French is so bad I cannot understand him.

Mr. Knight: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that his French is considerably worse than mine.

(Translation):

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely congratulate the mover of this bill and I also wish to congratulate immediately and quite sincerely the hon. member for Pontiac-Timiskaming (Mr. Proudfoot) for the generous contribution he just made with respect to that proposal, which to my mind should carry the approval of all hon. members of the house.

Here is what we can read in the explanatory notes accompanying the resolution moved by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin):

> The purpose of this bill is to provide that every cheque, draft, traveller's cheque, bill of exchange, postal note, money order, postal remittance and any other similar remittance of any department as defined in paragraph (f) of section 2 of the Financial Administration Act or of any crown corporation enumerated in schedules B, C and D of the same act shall be printed in both the English and the French languages.

Mr. Speaker, it is as a Canadian, as an average Canadian citizen, no more, no less, that I feel it my duty to bring my support to the bill at present before the house. I remember that last year when the hon. member for Beauce introduced Bill No. 149 of the third session of the 22nd parliament, several members who are now sitting in this house brought forward impressive arguments in support of that proposal.

This year in very similar terms the same bill is introduced as Bill No. 6. The purpose of the bill seems extremely simple. It merely requires that all negotiable instruments of the government be printed in the two official languages of this country.

I have often heard prominent Canadian citizens from every civic or religious field, boast of the duality of culture in this country and quote this fact as an example to be followed by other countries. I do not see why members of the Canadian parliament would not get together to enact a legislation which will give a more concrete importance to our double culture.

The immediate effect of this bill is to make the Canadian government issue in both official languages any negotiable instrument. Its purpose is therefore to give greater recognition to the principle of bilingualism in this country.

I am not one of those who believe that adoption of this bill would constitute a favour to French speaking Canadians; I think it would rather be the recognition of a right given by the Canadian constitution of 1867 and more particularly by section 133 of the British North America Act.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of the members of this house are broadminded enough not to consider that this legislation asks for anything more than the recognition of a rightly understood principle of bilingualism in Canada.

French speaking Canadians have never sought to be anything else than Canadians, as attached as anyone else to their country, but as proud of their origins and traditions as other Canadians of different culture and origin. Living in a country which they have pioneered, having always heartily supported every measure intended to make our country an independent and strong nation, my fellow citizens want to be at home everywhere in Canada, and a measure such as this would more effectively recognize true Canadianism, where there is no boundary between our two great cultures. I am glad to emphasize that, in the past, marked progress has been made in that direction mainly through the British North America Act of 1867, when the fathers of confederation, in their desire to lay the foundations of a great country, recognized the ethnical characteristics of the two great people of our country.

Besides, in 1927 the Canadian parliament enacted legislation providing for the issue of bilingual postage stamps and money orders.

In 1936, the Canadian parliament provided for bilingual money. In this respect, I would like to remind hon. members of the numerous appeals that were made in this house by one of my predecessors in the riding I have the honour to represent, the hon. Justice Oscar Boulanger, who battled a long time in this house for this legislation.

In 1946, the Canadian Citizenship Act was enacted, and, to my mind, it amounted to another piece of legislation such as to reassert bilingualism in this country.

In 1949, parliament voted the act abolishing appeals to the privy council in London in civil matters and providing that the Supreme Court of Canada be the court of last resort in this country.

In 1952, the Canadian parliament adopted an act providing for the appointment of a governor general of Canadian origin.

All these measures, Mr. Speaker, point out further the true character of our dual culture in Canada. I am sure that in adopting this bill parliament will take a firm stand likely to show all Canadians that it realizes the will of the great majority of our fellow citizens to live together in harmony, whatever their racial origin. Thus, feeling at home anywhere in Canada, they will be able to see in our statutes the assertion of their mutual qualities and of a true Canadianism.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish once again to pay tribute to the hon. member for Pontiac-Timiskaming for supporting this bill and I do recommend its adoption.

[Mr. Laflamme.]

Mr. Georges Villeneuve (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as the representative of a constituency whose population is 98 per cent French speaking but 100 per cent respectful of the rights and prerogatives of the English speaking minority, I believe it is not only my right but also my duty to intervene in this debate on Bill No. 6 moved by my friend the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin).

That bill tends to amend the financial administration act (chapter 116 of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1952) by the insertion of section 33A which would make it mandatory to issue all bills of exchange and particularly all cheques of the various federal departments and boards in the two official languages of this country, English and French.

I feel that this bill is an important step towards national unity which is increasingly dearer to Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific and which we all agree to consider as the cornerstone of the future of our dear country. National unity cannot exist without mutual understanding and I believe that such understanding cannot find better expression than the very means of expressing our respective thoughts, our two languages, which the British North America Act made official in Canada.

I have received representations about that bill from many citizens in my constituency and I therefore faithfully express the wish of men and women of Roberval county when I support it, as I have always considered it my duty to speak on behalf of their rights in this house every time I had the opportunity to do so. Thus I always have the feeling not only of working in the interest of my fellow-citizens, but also in the interest of our country as a whole which has, as one of its main characteristics, the distinction of being bilingual and biethnical, a partner in the enrichment we have gained by the contact of the two great civilizations which have made their mark in the past and will continue to find Canada a ground favourable to their fulfilment if we give them a chance to progress freely; I mean the French and Anglo-Saxon civilizations. This favourable ground, I see it not only in a platonic mutual respect, but more particularly in the official expression of bilingualism in Canadian life.

The Liberal party to which I am proud to belong has not failed in its chosen mission which is to guide the development of this country towards a healthy canadianism. I have always felt at home in this party since I have been able to observe a very great breadth of mind among my Liberal colleagues, of whatever racial origin. This broadmindedness today finds an opportunity for very practical expression. That is my reason for supporting the measure introduced by my hon. friend the member for Beauce. I would be ill-advised, in any event, to refuse this support since I remember having already requested, in this house, the printing in both official languages of negotiable instruments, notably of cheques issued by the government.

The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) who, we know, is making praiseworthy efforts to learn and to speak French is in my view, the very man to support the cause promoted by this bill. Bilingual bank notes and bilingual postage stamps adopted more than twenty years ago have been, in this country, vehicles for efficient Canadianism. They have most certainly contributed to the promotion of that national unity so dear to the heart of every Canadian worthy of the name. Negotiable instruments and notably bilingual cheques, issued throughout this country, would be ambassadors of good understanding and true Canadianism. This example would be all the more efficient in that it would originate in more exalted quarters, that is to say since it would come from parliament, from the very centre of Canadian thought which owes it to itself to appear in its true colours as is required by our motto "A mari usque ad mare".

During the fall of 1955 I had the honour to accompany the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marler) in a tour of my constituency. Last year I had the honour to accompany the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill). Do I have to tell the house how happy were my constituents to hear these high officials, following His Excellency the Governor General who had come to my constituency in 1954, address them in this beautiful French language which only those devoid of culture are unable to appreciate? I noticed that after they had gone, my constituents had felt within themselves a new pride in being Canadians and in representing one of the elements which go to make the greatness of our country as well as its originality from a world viewpoint.

I would feel sorry if the tradition of bilingual cheques were continued only in the province of Quebec. The development of a well thought out Canadianism is inconsistent with this furtherance of the detestable idea of a "Quebec reserve". This is all the more true since there are more than one million Canadians of French origin, speaking French, in the nine other provinces of this country. The proposed measure, because of its official character, would help each Canadian, wherever he may be in this country of ours, to feel perfectly at home.

Language being the most perfect expression of culture, it is also in the name of the Canadian culture that I support this bill. In that connection, I may be allowed, I am sure, to quote a few words from the Most Reverend Father Georges Henri Lesvesque, O.P., a son of Roberval who is known everywhere in Canada and of whom we are proud and rightly so. He said, in a speech delivered in Toronto in February 1955: "It is in the mind and the heart of Canadians that a spirit of brotherhood is born. It is their cultures which bring Canadians together, which will teach them to know each other and thus to better understand and help each other." And he went on: "A society like ours which extends its protection to the full growth of so different racial elements and whose members believe that mutual respect for their distinctive features is the first requisite for their common welfare, is an excellent example of civilization." Any real patriot cannot but wish that these two magnificent cultures will truly turn, to an ever increasing degree, to the glory and the enrichment of the whole of Canada."

It is to that magnificent endeavour that I wish to contribute by supporting the bill now before the house.

(Text):

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, this bill certainly means a great deal to all citizens of Canada. In some parts of Canada one view is expressed and in other parts there are other views with respect to whether or not we should adopt the printing of negotiable instruments in both the English and French languages.

I do not feel quite as strongly about the matter as other hon. members apparently do.

If a person wishes to explain why we should do this, I think he should have the subject sufficiently at heart so he would not be obliged to read his entire address to the House of Commons. If a person is serious about anything in the House of Commons, after he has been here a certain number of years I feel that he should not rise in his place and read his speech, but should let us hear what he has to say speaking from his heart.

An hon. Member: Tell that to your party.

Mr. Fernand Girard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I think that sometimes it is better to read than to say nothing at all.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted, before making a few remarks, to congratulate the previous speakers. At the same time, may I kindly point out that there is but 25 minutes left to deal with this bill. Therefore, if we went on with as much eloquence and as much generosity as we have done so far, the bill could very well be choked by that warm embrace because if we talk until ten o'clock it will mean a first class funeral for that proposal.

No argument need be advanced in favour of this bill. On the contrary, it should be carried without the slightest delay. It is based on principles which are fundamental in Canada. I feel, like many other Canadians, that statements of principle would tend to be lowered to the level of electoral considerations if some legislation did not occasionally confirm the feelings so eloquently expressed about national unity. It is sometimes said that we must rely on public opinion since it is the safest guide and that the task of enforcing such measures must be left to public opinion and not to parliament. However, I do not believe that this dangerous argument can be applied in any way to this bill. A matter which goes right down to the soul of a nation, such as official bilingualism, leaves no ground for discussion. When the tradition, the history and the constitution of our country are at stake, we have no alternative but to respect them without discussion.

This bill is based on these sacred rights; to reject it would not be simply to repudiate what we are but it would be a crime of lese-majesty.

Mr. Adrien Meunier (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few observations to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Girard), who, at the beginning of his remarks told us that there was only 25 minutes left to discuss the bill, and that we should not speak about it until ten o'clock, because that would mean a first class funeral.

I wish to tell him that we all have a right to express our views about the bill which, if it is not carried today, will stay on the order paper, just like all other bills, and as the house will sit again in the coming weeks, members will have other opportunities to study it.

There is no need to rush matters. We are here to express our opinions, and I suggest that it is not by rushing things that we will be able to discuss them freely. I have listened to the arguments expressed by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin) in support of that measure, and I must congratulate him on the serious motives he brought in support of this proposal.

[Mr. Girard.]

Since we have in this country bilingual postage stamps and money why should it not be the same for cheques and negotiable instruments issued by the government? What is asked for in this bill is nothing more than simple logic. If certain instruments within the jurisdiction of the federal government are bilingual, why should it not be the same in all cases.

Bilingualism has a purpose and it is a well known fact that it has constantly progressed in Canada and that its use is helping the cause of national unity.

We are trying to teach the younger generation the double culture which gives its vitality to our country, by teaching the French language to the young English speaking Canadians, and the English language to the young French speaking Canadians. Why do we see those young students from French universities fraternize with their fellow students of the English universities? Why do we see the students from English provinces spend their holidays in the province of Quebec in order to learn French, and those from Quebec go to the English provinces in order to improve their knowledge of the English language? All this is done in order to develop bilingualism and cement understanding and goodwill between both racial groups of our country. If we have such movements, it is because the Canadian people understand the characteristics of bilingualism and want it to carry its full effect.

When we see crown corporations give evidence of bilingualism as do the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority by issuing bilingual cheques, we cannot help congratulating their officials for their attitude and telling them that they show a great understanding of their responsibilities toward the Canadian people.

Under those circumstances, it is easy to see that the Canadian people want bilingualism to develop and increase in this country; therefore I support wholeheartedly the measure introduced by the hon. member for Beauce.

The hon. member has shown us that bilingual postage stamps and money had been prejudicial to no one, and that the issuing of bilingual cheques wil not affect the rights or privileges of any Canadian, but that, on the contrary, it will help the cause of national unity.

Mr. Arthur Masse (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join the previous speakers in extending congratulations and thanks to the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin) for being so tenacious in presenting this bill which, I am sure, has as much significance for his constituents as it has for my own constituents.

Since I have been sitting in this house I have often noted that we can all have the same object in view but hold different opinions as to the best manner in which to attain it.

The purpose of this bill is to cement Canadian unity in providing that all Canadian citizens, when they get a cheque from Her Majesty, will get it printed in both languages. I see no more objection to that than in the case of a money order printed in both the official languages of the country.

We of the province of Quebec have only to go back to the past to realize that we deem it somewhat important to have cheques and money orders or any document whatsoever from the federal treasury printed in both languages. French and English are the two official languages in this country.

I find some interesting statistics in pamphlet no. 84 from the information division of the External Affairs Department, based on a text of Charles Bilodeau of Laval University, Quebec city.

As a matter of fact, to refer to my own little home county in lower Quebec, French has been spoken there from 1608 to 1759. For this reason, it will easily be understood that atavism or devotion to our tradition demands expression in the beloved language of those who founded that part of the country. After 1760, there was an increase in population either by natural growth or by immigration.

After the 1951 census, the percentage of people of French origin in Canada was stated as follows in the different provinces:

Newfoundland	2.7
Prince Edward Island	15.7
Nova Scotia	11.4
New Brunswick	38
Quebec	81.9
Ontario	10.4
Manitoba	8.5
Saskatchewan	6
Alberta	—
British Columbia	3.5
Yukon and Northwest Territories	15.6

The above table therefore indicates a proportion of about 30 per cent of French Canadians in comparison with Canada's total population. I want to point out that practically four fifths of these people live in the province of Quebec.

If you refer to the census of 1951 (vol. I, table 53), you find that French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians present the following pattern: English, 67 per cent; French, 19.5 per cent; English and French, 12.3 per cent; neither French nor English, 1.2 per cent.

There is no denying the fact that the French Canadian population makes up about 30 per cent of the total population of this country. So it is only fair to expect that the official documents originating with the federal treasury should be issued in the two official languages of this country.

If you consider what took place after the treaty of Paris, on the surrender of New France to England, you find that there is nothing explicit on the language of the people of this country; still the use of French persisted. In 1774, the Quebec Act restored the French Civil Code and authorized the use of the French language before the courts.

In 1791, Canada was made up of Lower Canada and Upper Canada. In Lower Canada, that is in Quebec, the elected members of the legislature decided to use both languages in their debates as well as for the publication of the statutes and of related documents.

In 1840, the Act of Union stated that the English language would be the only official language of parliament but that, on the other hand, the statutes would be translated into French. However, in spite of that rule, a francophile member delivered a speech in French in the house and the use of the French language became more frequent such as is the case today.

In 1867, the Canadian confederation was set up. The constitution of the new nation was then incorporated into the British North America Act whose section 133 reads as follows:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the houses of the parliament of Canada and of the houses of the legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this Act, and in or from all or any of the courts of Quebec.
> The acts of the parliament of Canada and of the legislature of Quebec shall be printed and published in both those languages.

The statutes of the House of Commons are printed in both languages. Besides, the official record of debates is published in both the official languages. Why then not print all cheques and instruments from the treasury department in both official languages?

If we look at what is going on in our schools, for instance in the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, we see, as is apparent from a reading of the document to which I referred a moment ago, that there are 1,175 French-speaking classes in New Brunswick, 205 in Nova Scotia and 75 in Prince Edward Island.

To my mind, the printing of all official documents in the two languages would in no way reduce the necessity or the usefulness for each and everyone of us to understand both languages.

Over the last few years we have been in a position to observe remarkable progress towards bilingualism in this country. In fact in some of our institutions French and English are generally placed on the same footing. Most French Canadian parents wish their children to have a practical knowledge of the language of the majority. Associations are promoting bilingualism by means of visits to the various provinces which make up the Canadian confederation.

Mr. Speaker for all the reasons which I have just given, I am happy to associate myself with the hon. member for Beauce and to congratulate him on having presented this bill.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us proposes to amend chapter 116 of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1952 so that in the future all negotiable instruments enumerated in section 33 shall be printed in the two official languages its effect to extend to all departments and crown corporations as defined in section 76 (1) (c). I congratulate the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin) for his initiative in introducing this bill. In so doing, he not only reaches at the purest source of liberalism but he undoubtedly answers the desire of the great majority of Canadian citizens.

It is mere common sense that negotiable instruments issued by the Canadian government be bilingual. If everywhere today people take pleasure in pointing out the dual culture of Canada, it seems to me that it is only logical that the government be the first to recognize everywhere and forever the reality of bilingualism by issuing bilingual cheques as soon as possible.

In declaring myself in favour of this legislation, I am far from feeling as if I were seeking a privilege, for even though bilingualism at the national level is not expressly recognized in the act of confederation the point here is whether a right should be recognized. As a matter of fact, the constitution must not be read in a restrictive way but rather in its broadest meaning in order to promote throughout Canada a spirit of understanding and good feeling between the two great races which make up our nation. It is unfortunate that we feel obliged to raise these questions from time to time and I believe that we will always deserve credit for doing so very carefully. We must do it, nevertheless, for the great difficulty is not misunderstanding but rather the lack of a clear and accurate text.

I must say here that the Liberal party has been doing from time immemorial more than its share to straighten out this defect in our constitution.

Mr. Speaker, it was in 1936, under a Liberal government, that a bilingual character was given to our money. Since then, various federal organizations like the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and the C.B.C. have already issued bilingual cheques. We also now have a bilingual stamp. All we have to do now is to make official what custom has already consecrated in various departments. I am therefore in favour of a legislation which, I believe, today meets with no opposition from any part of our people. And I may well make this comment, Mr. Speaker, because I am representing a riding where perhaps a little more than a third of the population is English-speaking. I know that such legislation is popular with us, for both races are doing their best to get along together. Moreover, it is by making concessions that we shall succeed in bettering this mutual understanding.

I recognize that the implementation of this piece of legislation may run into some difficulties at the administrative level. But I rely on the understanding of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) to eliminate those difficulties, to get around them, so that, right from this year, the negotiable instruments issued by the government may be bilingual.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to dwell on this matter at greater length. I notice it is 10 o'clock and so I move the adjournment of the debate.

(Text):

On motion of Mr. Deschatelets the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall take the supplementary estimates and then second reading of the bill to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act; then the resolution in the name of the Minister of Justice, and the resolution in my name with respect to municipal grants.

Mr. Hansell: Not the council?

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

INDIAN AFFAIRS—DISTRIBUTION OF TRUST MONEYS

Question No. 53—Mr. Holowach:

1. In what manner are distributions of mineral, timber, oil royalties, interest earnings or other moneys held in trust for treaty Indians, presently being made?
2. Is this policy being practised in respect of all reserves in Canada?
3. What was the total amount of money accruing from the above sources in the province of Alberta for the years 1951 to 1956 inclusive?
4. What was the amount of distributions to each of the Indian reserves in Alberta for the years 1951 to 1956 inclusive?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. Trust funds are distributed in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Act—largely under sections 15 and 64 to 66, and in the case of surrenders in accordance with the provisions of such surrender.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 1, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

THE PRIME MINISTER—CONGRATULATIONS ON BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Speaker: There occurs today one of those happy parliamentary occasions when we wish to pause briefly to do honour to one of our own. I refer of course to the birthday of the right hon. the Prime Minister. It appears that all hon. members wish to join me in extending to him and to Madame St. Laurent our most heartfelt congratulations together with our best wishes for continued health and happiness and, of course, many happy returns of the day.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is indeed an historic occasion, being the second time since confederation that a prime minister while in office has attained the age of 75 years, the other being of course the founder of this country, Sir John A. Macdonald. This is one occasion that permits parliament to reveal its glory which consists in the fact that the sentiments that separate us on different sides of the house are not as great as the sentiments that join us together. On behalf of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, and I am sure on behalf of all members of the house, I extend warmest congratulations and felicitations to the Prime Minister, coupled with the hope that he may enjoy many more years of good health and much happiness.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the leader of this group (Mr. Coldwell) and all my colleagues I should like to join with Your Honour and the other members of the house in heartiest felicitations to the Prime Minister on his birthday. We are glad to see him looking so well and wish him many happy returns. I am sure he will understand if I add that we feel that surely the time has come for him to enjoy a very happy retirement.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I speak for all my colleagues when I say we are delighted to see the Prime Minister enjoying such good health and living in such vigorous fashion on this his 75th birthday. I had thought during the past few months that he must have found the fountain of youth and it was in my mind to ask him privately some time just what it was and where I could find it but I was afraid he might suggest to me that I join the Liberal party and then I would find it. Seriously, I do want to join with others in extending to the Prime Minister our heartfelt felicitations, our good wishes and to express the hope that he will enjoy many more years of vigour, good health and usefulness in whatever calling he may follow.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you and, through you, all the members of this house for the great satisfaction your words and the way in which they have been received give one when he passes another milestone after a considerable number that have been passed in previous years. To the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and to those who speak for other groups in the house I wish to express my complete agreement with their stated opinions this morning that though there are many things upon which we disagree and upon which we express our disagreement in this forum, there is no doubt that much stronger and more impressive than the divergences which arise in our opinions and in our expressions is the sentiment that we are all Canadians and all doing our best here to serve our fellow Canadians. That, I am sure, is the solid basis of the personal friendships which exist between the members of this house and of the sentiments which are expressed on every occasion when it is the turn of any one of us to be passing one of the milestones in his life. I am really happy to be of the group that thus in friendship, each to the best of his ability, strives together to serve our fellow Canadians.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wishes me years of happy retirement. I feel that I shall be happier as long as I do not have to reach the point where retirement would be the wisest decision to make. It was felt in the garden of Eden that the condemnation to earn one's bread by the sweat of one's brow was a real condemnation. That was long ago. I think the greatest satisfaction we get out of life now is that of doing useful work to the best of our ability.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. I must say prior to putting my question that in view of the general and very sincere rejoicing at the Prime Minister's celebration of his 75th birthday I regret that my parliamentary and non-conformist conscience prompts me to ask what might be considered in some quarters a somewhat indelicate question. Does the Prime Minister know who is paying the expenses of the ladies and gentlemen of the fourth estate who will be attending an important event in Quebec tomorrow?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I do not know what arrangements, if any, have been made for members of the fourth estate who may be contemplating attending what the hon. gentleman refers to as an important event in Quebec tomorrow. I, myself, have been invited to attend a dinner and I have accepted. I intend to pay my own expenses. I have not inquired, I have given no thought to inquiring and I do not now feel it would be proper for me to inquire, as to what arrangements have been made by or with or for other guests who may have been invited and who may have accepted to attend.

Mr. Herridge: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? Could he enlighten the house in this respect?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have been invited to say a few words at the gathering. I was informed at the same time that I would have to buy my ticket like everyone else, which I have done. I would assume that everyone who attends will be in the same position.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR PERFORMANCE OF MUSICAL RIDE IN UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement in respect of an announcement being made in Great Britain.

Last summer a number of the most prominent agricultural societies in the United Kingdom requested through the Department of External Affairs that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police musical ride be made available for presentation at selected agricultural fairs and other events there during the summer of 1957. The government has agreed to this and accordingly the ride will be going to the United Kingdom this coming spring.

This well-known and distinctly Canadian attraction consists of 32 mounted men under command of an officer. There are also included a senior N.C.O. riding master, a band conductor, and two to four spare riders. On December 3, 1956, a series of musical ride engagements in Canada and the United States was completed. These engagements were widely acclaimed as outstanding and those presented in the United States brought, I am sure, a great measure of credit to this country. The troop going to the United Kingdom will be composed of substantially the same personnel.

At a recent meeting of the royal agricultural society of England delegates expressed their gratitude and warm appreciation to the Canadian government for its generosity in making the Royal Canadian Mounted Police musical ride available in the United Kingdom this summer.

Although no definite itinerary has been arranged as yet, it is understood that the committee in the United Kingdom which is co-ordinating arrangements has received applications from 10 of the largest and best known agricultural societies for the appearance of the ride at their annual exhibitions. As an indication of the interest and enthusiasm back of the invitation, one of the royal agricultural shows has in mind slanting its whole program towards Canada provided our ride can be featured.

The troop will receive its final training at the Rockcliffe barracks during the early spring and travel by ship to a United Kingdom port towards the end of April.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the statement made by the minister with reference to the musical ride being sent overseas, which I think is well merited and will be an excellent and attractive advertisement, I would like to ask the minister if he would give consideration to the possibility that there might be extra demands for them in the old country and probably in Europe for another year. While it would be too late this year to make much change I would like to ask him at this time to give consideration to improving the type of horses that are used in the musical ride. Many of the horses are growing old and because they are going overseas they are not a good advertisement for this country, which I think should be represented by a better class of horses than our military men have had a chance to use.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Is this an advertisement?

Mr. Rowe: I do not say this jocularly, Mr. Speaker. I believe this is a situation to which some consideration might be given. I believe the horses are limited as to price. I would ask the minister if he would give consideration to improving the calibre of horses.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to be as good a judge of horses as my hon. friend, but the information I have received from people who I would say are as good judges as my hon. friend is that for the purposes of the musical ride we have a most desirable type of horse. I know that this has been a matter of great concern to the commissioner of the mounted police for many years past and on various occasions when the matter has arisen he has discussed the question with me.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE AUTHORIZED CAPITAL OF BOARD

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act to increase the authorized capital of the board from $3 million to $4 million.

Motion agreed to.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—CONTRACTS FOR DELIVERY OF GAS EAST OF MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house whether any contracts have yet been signed between Trans-Canada Pipe Lines and any municipalities east of the Manitoba border for the delivery of gas, and if so with which ones?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that Trans-Canada does not deal with individual municipalities. The company deals with whoever owns the franchise in the area that it wishes to serve. I believe it is Union Gas that holds the franchise for Hamilton, which I presume interests my hon. friend. In the same way, Consumers' Gas holds the franchise for the Toronto area.

Mrs. Fairclough: I used the word "municipalities" but I meant the company or municipality as the case may be which had the franchise. Could the minister enlighten the house as to whether any contracts have yet been signed for the delivery of gas?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): All I can say is that sufficient contracts have been signed in Canada to justify the financing of a line that will cost, when built, $375 million. So, I think we can take it for granted that contracts for great quantities of gas have been signed.

Mrs. Fairclough: In Ontario?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): In Ontario.

IMMIGRATION

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES—PROVISION OF COMFORT ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, pursuant to a telegram which I am advised was forwarded to the minister by the chairman of the Abbotsford and district citizenship council relative to Hungarian refugees housed in temporary quarters in that area. Would the minister advise the house whether or not any comfort allowance is obtainable from the federal government to assist in providing these people with funds for incidental expenses?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I would not like to make any answer offhand, sir. I was at a meeting all morning. I have not seen the telegram. I prefer to be quite precise in making an answer.

OLD ORDER AMISH SETTLERS—REFERENCE TO MINISTERS' STATEMENT ON JANUARY 18

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. This question arises out of an answer he gave to a question I asked on January 18.

Would the minister indicate to the house whether or not the individual to whom he referred in his answer on that date failed to satisfy the immigration requirements because of characteristics common to the whole group to which he belongs? In other words, was this application a test case as far as Amish immigrants are concerned?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I am afraid, sir, I did not hear the date to which the hon. member referred and I do not recall the answer I gave. I think it would be better for me to look it up. I might say, however, there is no such thing as a rejection because of the characteristics of a whole group. The hon. gentleman can read the regulations; they are in very plain language.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Would the minister say if it is possible that immigrants would be turned down because of an objection on their part to bearing arms or taking certain forms of oaths in connection with their applications for immigration?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir. Those in either case would not be considered reasons for rejection. There is always an immigration into Canada, and there has been for many years, of Mennonites and Quakers who I understand have conscientious scruples about taking oaths and who are allowed by the laws of this country to affirm.

SCOTLAND—REPORTED RESTRICTION ON NUMBER OF APPLICANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. What are the reasons that only about 10 per cent of the applicants in Scotland for admission to Canada are to be admitted, according to recent newspaper reports?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the statement in the newspaper article is quite untrue.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. He has stated that the report about the restriction on Scottish immigration is untrue. Will he please make sure it is untrue?

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot make sure that it is true or untrue. I do know and I think everyone else knows that there has been an encouraging increase in the number of people in the United Kingdom who seem to want to come to this country. Various hon. members may have different interpretations of the reason for that, but I am inclined to think that it is because we have had great prosperity under a very good government. I am also quite satisfied, although I have been chary about making this prediction, that there is going to be a very substantial increase this year over last year in the number of immigrants from the United Kingdom, and last year was the best year since the war.

PATENT ACT

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. Has the minister yet received the report of the royal commission on patents, copyrights, trademarks and industrial designs? If not, can the minister say when the report may be received and when it will be made public?

Hon. Roch Pinard (Secretary of State): I wish to thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of his question before I came to the chamber. The answer to the first part of the question is no. As to the second part of the question, I have been informed this morning that the commission expects to submit its report to me on copyrights and industrial designs at the beginning of April, and it is not expected that the report on patents and trademarks will be ready before autumn.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister say when the report will be made public? Will it be soon after he receives it?

Mr. Pinard: I would think that also depends on the exact date when it will be submitted to me in April. Whether the report can be made public during the session I think is a matter for speculation by both my hon. friend and me.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE FAIR

MONTREAL AND BRUSSELS—PARTICIPATION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce now inform the house whether the government plans to participate in the international trade fair to be held in Montreal, Quebec, in May of this year?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot. Ordinarily the Department of Trade and Commerce does not participate in any fair within Canada. That has been the policy for many years. We did for a time sponsor the international trade fair. That has been abandoned and my officers have been examining the situation of the trade fair in Montreal, but I am not optimistic about federal participation.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have a supplementary question. Is the $2,225,000 expenditure on the Brussels international trade fair proceeding satisfactorily?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Canada building in Brussels was the first to be placed under contract. I understand that the work on the building is proceeding very well and I am quite certain that Canada will be on time when the fair opens.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have another supplementary question. Is the minister satisfied with the European manager and chef they have procured to run the Canadian restaurant at the Brussels trade fair?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the committee in charge did their best to interest a Canadian caterer in taking on the job. They were not successful. I am told that the caterer who has been secured operates a first class Belgian restaurant in Brussels. He visited us here and went over the arrangements and those responsible are happy with the plans he has in mind for operating the restaurant.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

SUGAR—REPORT OF RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Are press reports correct that the minister is today making public the report of the restrictive trade practices commission of its investigation into the sugar situation? If so, can he say whether the report calls for any action?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): I did not get the last part of my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Knowles: Can he say whether the report calls for any action?

Mr. Garson: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that the report is being tabled. Having regard to the fact that it deals with a field in this general subject matter in which there is scarcely any jurisprudence or experience, and since it indicates merely that there has been a first step toward a merger, we think, as is said in the announcement, the company should be given the opportunity to consider its position before we decide to take any further steps ourselves. All of this is in the press release.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister a supplementary question. When he was in Manitoba last week did he take note of the representations made publicly by a manufacturer in Winnipeg and also by the Liberal women's association urging that something should be done to investigate the rising prices of sugar?

Mr. Garson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I had correspondence with Mr. Ronald who is the manufacturer in question—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Bond.

Mr. Garson: Yes, I should have said Mr. Bond. Ronald was the name of his partner. As a matter of fact, if I remember correctly I signed the last letter to him just last evening in this chamber. I have also had correspondence with the Liberal women. I will not detain the house with my explanation but they were dealing more with sugar prices than with the question that is the subject matter of this report.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister care to table copies of that correspondence?

Mr. Garson: I have no objection.

HOUSING

N.H.A. LOANS—EFFECT OF INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister noticed the many announcements since the recent increase in the interest rate on N.H.A. loans to the effect that the one-half per cent increase in the interest rate will be ineffective and will not provide more money for housing in Canada? Has the minister any comment to make on those announcements and has he received any assurances that his measure is going to be effective? If he has not, is the government contemplating any additional action in order to assure a continuous supply of new housing in Canada?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen very many announcements saying that the steps taken will not be effective. On the contrary, I have received indications that they will be effective. Therefore the last part of the hon. member's question becomes hypothetical.

Mr. Regier: May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister care to elaborate his statement that he has received assurances that the method to be employed will be effective? Is it the banks of Canada, the investment houses of Canada or the mortgage companies that have assured the minister there is now more interest in investment money in housing, or who has given this assurance?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I have assured the house that would be the case and I am quite prepared to stand behind the assurance.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the conflicting views and reports as to the effect of the increase in the interest rate on N.H.A. loans, would the minister consider making a reference to the banking and commerce committee which would enable that committee to hear the views of experts from the Bank of Canada and the banking institutions of the country.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I do not know what kind of conflict there may be in these matters. I accept what the Minister of Public Works has to say about the results of the credit restrictions on housing.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): May I ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the increase in the interest rate for housing is only part of the government's general fiscal and monetary policy, about which there has been great controversy in the country, would he consider referring the whole question of the government's policy in this regard to the banking and commerce committee in order that hon. members may be able to discuss these matters with the experts?

Mr. Harris: It has been customary when the Bank of Canada's annual report is presented to parliament to refer it to the banking and commerce committee, which on most occasions has had the governor of the bank before it. I presume the same practice will be followed this year.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING—PURCHASE PRICE OF VETERANS' DWELLINGS IN VICTORIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has he received complaints from a group of veterans in Victoria that the purchase price of their C.M.H.C. housing which they now occupy is out of line with current prices and, if so, will he please investigate?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have received letters which are the usual type that we receive whenever we place any of these houses in a sales position. I have replied saying that in the light of all the circumstances and in accordance with our policy I believe these prices to be reasonable. There is no compulsion upon anyone to buy a house.

HIGHWAYS

STATEMENT ON REPORTED PAYMENT FOR CONTRACT IN NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question asked on January 29 by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in which he referred to an amount of $12,500 paid by one contractor to another to obtain a contract on a subcontract basis in Ontario. The hon. member asked:

Can the minister say whether any portion of that highway was part of the trans-Canada highway system?

The answer is "no". He then asked:

If not, does he know whether this practice has been followed in relation to work on any portion of the trans-Canada highway?

No such practice has ever been brought to my attention.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is yet in a position to answer my question of Wednesday regarding such other legislation as the government may be laying before parliament this session?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no, I am not yet in a position to give the hon. gentleman a full list of the measures which will be brought before parliament. I have asked that the departments be communicated with in that regard. That is being done and I am having a report prepared.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

FAUTEUX COMMISSION REPORT—STATEMENT ON CHANGES IN REGULATIONS OR LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) asked the following question:

Can the minister advise the house whether it is his intention to recommend changes in regulations or legislation that come completely within federal jurisdiction and responsibility relative to recommendations made in the Fauteux report and the report of the joint committee on capital and corporal punishment and lotteries? If not, why not?

My answer to the first question is "yes". The second question is answered by the answer to the first question.

STATEMENT ON PERJURY BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE—RESPONSIBILITY FOR ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Yesterday the same hon. member asked me the following question:

> Will the Minister of Justice inform the house whether or not the courts of Ontario have jurisdiction over the other place and the House of Commons and the evidence or operations given before or carried out by a committee of the other place? Will the minister in answering that also inform the house whether if a bill is passed in the other place and the House of Commons dealing with divorce that would not negate any charge by a private member of perjury, with the act having been passed. Third, as a further supplementary question, would the Minister of Justice also tell the house why a private member should have to do the minister's job for him?

The answer to those questions will be found spelled out at great length along with other material in the report of a debate which was attended by the hon. member for Vancouver East which took place in this chamber on July 8 last and which is to be found on pages 5878, 5879, 5880 and 5881 of Hansard. If the hon. member does not remember what took place, if he will read Hansard he will get his answer.

Mr. Winch: I read it but it was not conclusive.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Loans, investments and advances—

545. Loan to the United Nations Organization to help finance the clearing of the Suez canal, $1,000,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, since this matter was last discussed the whole question of the Middle East and the solution of the difficulties between Egypt and Israel has been before the United Nations. Naturally Canadians, as would be the case with people in other freedom-loving countries, are most anxious to ascertain the present position of the negotiations being carried on at the United Nations and also the probability of the two resolutions now before the United Nations assembly receiving the support of the necessary two-thirds majority. I would appreciate it very much if the minister would bring the house and the country up to date with regard to this question.

Would he also say whether or not in either or both of these resolutions there will be any mandatory requirement imposed upon Egypt to assure that the Suez canal will be open to the traffic of all nations, including Israel? After all, if we in Canada are to be asked to make a loan for a project there should be some assurance that in the event the project is proceeded with it will not be only a temporary clearing of the canal to be followed immediately by acts of sabotage on the part of Nasser and those associated with him.

On the basis of the information which only the government can have, would the minister say what the probabilities are whether or not Canada's representatives at the United Nations are now convinced that Nasser's future course will be a reversal of his previous course with regard to the canal? Certainly if the loan is made and the work proceeded with and it merely provides another opportunity for Nasser to destroy the usefulness of the canal and thereby make his contribution to preventing the free world from using the canal, a loan such as this will be worthless.

There is something more too in connection with the loan. What is the basis upon which the government contends that repayment will be made? Nothing very clear has been said in that regard yet. I know of no provision under the United Nations for the borrowing of money and I am wondering how provision will be made or what the plan is to assure repayment.

Finally, I repeat the question to which we received no answer the other day. What is Canada's attitude going to be now that she has taken a greater interest in the Middle East situation and in particular the Suez canal situation than the defence minister revealed in August last when he said Canada had no interest in the Suez dispute? What is Canada's attitude going to be with respect to securing repayment by compensation being demanded from Nasser?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I must repeat the point of order I raised on Wednesday that this item is confined solely to a loan for the purpose of clearing the canal and should not give rise to a debate about other matters, particularly other matters which are under discussion at the United Nations at the present time. I am quite prepared to answer direct questions affecting the loan and the attitude that Canada is prepared to take and is taking with respect to the canal itself, but I submit with great respect that other general questions are out of order.

The first question directly affecting the loan is the method of repayment. I have made it quite clear on at least two occasions in the course of the debate—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not very clear.

Mr. Harris: Permit me to complete the sentence. I have made it quite clear that it is an advance by this country for the purpose of expediting the clearing of the canal. It is a loan in the sense that we expect to receive it back in either one of two forms, either by repayment should some form of financing other than the present one be undertaken by the secretary general of the United Nations or if an assessment is ultimately made by the United Nations on the nations, including Canada, for the cost or a part of the cost of the clearing of the canal this payment will be credited to any such assessment as may be levied on Canada. If it happens that Canada's assessment is less than $1 million we will then have a repayment made to us out of any funds that the secretary general of the United Nations may be able to raise for the purpose of completing the clearing of the canal.

I do not suggest the probability of having this sum repaid to us within a matter of days or weeks. I think the probability is that the second alternative will be the one that will be acted upon, namely, that when the cost of the job is assessed among the members we will receive a credit and a refund should our assessment not total $1 million.

It is true, as the Leader of the Opposition said, that the United Nations does not have the necessary means of borrowing money and, as a matter of fact, that is why an appeal was made to Canada, among other countries, to provide money in this, may I put it, informal manner in order that the various salvage companies might have funds from time to time to pay wages and costs.

The second question directly related to the financing is the question of what the position will be with respect to Nasser and his attitude towards the canal when the canal is finally cleared. I think that everyone knows perfectly well that we cannot project in our own minds what the Egyptian government may do two or three months from now. This is a calculated risk that I think we are bound to take and I believe that hon. members opposite are prepared to take it.

It may well be that the present Egyptian government will continue to be as unco-operative with regard to some things as they have appeared to be up to the present time. But it is not the custom to refuse to take action if you cannot really see the end of your action. It is true that you must be careful about it and take all the precautions you can, but the problem is not whether we should lend the money now in the certain knowledge that in three months' time Nasser and his government will take a certain attitude towards the canal. The problem we have to face is, should the canal be cleared at the present time, what means should be adopted to do that, and then let us try to work out the means whereby the canal will be, as I have already said, free to the use of all nations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is he showing any signs of co-operation now?

Mr. Harris: So far as our knowledge goes, his attitude is reflected in the statements he has made and perhaps semi-officially in the statements made by the press of his country. One can interpret those attitudes in whatever way he thinks they should be interpreted.

Mr. Green: Can the minister tell us briefly what they are?

Mr. Harris: The only recent statement about which we have information is the one which I think would be put well down the list of official statements which was read the other day by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. The press in Egypt has, of course, been conducting a campaign which would not lend itself to co-operation and compromise at this time anyway. But that is not to say that this will be the continuing attitude of the Egyptian government. Indeed, if the canal were cleared by the United Nations and if at that time the Egyptian government were informed by the United Nations to this effect: "We have undertaken this task; we have expended the sums of money with or without a final settlement of how the money is to be collected and we expect the canal to remain open now to the shipping of any nations free of any discrimination", we would hope, of course, that at that time the collective pressure of the United Nations would be sufficient to ensure that Nasser would not attempt to interfere with shipping in the canal.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

Mr. Green: Has he any ground for believing that Russia would join in the pressure on Nasser?

Mr. Harris: I think that would be too broad a statement to which to make a direct answer. However, I think it would be correct to say that there have been occasions, both in the United Nations and in public negotiations with other countries, when it has been indicated that Russia—with all the difficulties that we have recognized in our diplomatic relations with that country—nevertheless is as conscious as is any one of the possibilities which might ensue if a peaceful settlement were not arrived at of any particular problem. The solution may not be satisfactory. It may only be a compromise of a good many interests and it may be a subject of irritation. I would hope that we would not find that world peace would be permanently jeopardized by a question such as whether or not the ships of all countries should have free access to the canal when it is cleared in two or three months time.

Mr. Cardiff: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

Mr. Cardiff: Is it not true that England and France offered to clear the canal free of any assistance from other nations?

Mr. Harris: What they offered was to be of assistance in clearing the canal and that offer has been accepted to the extent that some British and French groups are working on it. My understanding is that at least one of them—if not both—is doing it without charge.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): May I ask this question? Did not the British parliament the other day vote a sum of money for the clearance of the canal in the amount of some $39 million?

Mr. Harris: I have not been informed that was the case. I would be surprised if it were because that would represent almost the total cost of clearing the canal.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): That report was in the press.

Mr. Harris: I should be glad to see the report. Our last information is that the $10 million that was referred to at the beginning of this debate is still needed for the purpose upon which we base the request to parliament.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): May I ask another question before you proceed?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Has this government already paid any of that money over to the United Nations?

Mr. Harris: No, Mr. Chairman. We have paid no money at all to the United Nations in connection with this matter. I think my hon. friend is probably confusing this with the money we paid in connection with Hungarian refugees; I refer to the $1 million we paid in November for that purpose.

If I have not answered these questions directly, I should be glad to be prompted. I think hon. members will realize the impossibility of giving any assurance except that the government will use its best endeavours and the best possible diplomatic approach that we can make through the United Nations and through other sources, in order that in the time that will elapse between now and the completing of the clearance of the canal we shall have, if not direct assurance, at any rate acquiescence in the use of the canal unrestrictedly by other nations and subject of course to the conditions of the treaty and the rights of those who claim rights in the canal. This will be a matter of great debate, no doubt, at the United Nations during the next two or three months.

I do not think there is any difference of opinion at the moment in this house about what our attitude ought to be in the course of those negotiations. As I said the other day, I think that everyone believes that you are more likely to get peaceful solutions if your country is in good shape. The economy of Europe has been suffering because of the blockage of the canal. When people are spending money in higher taxes, higher costs for gasoline and the like, when they are put on quotas and rations and the like, it is far better to get them off those things at the earliest possible time not only for their own sake but for the sake of a state of mind in which one could make more suitable settlement of the difficulties that gave rise to the restrictions on them.

It has been a surprising thing perhaps to most hon. members that, since this trouble began, the price of sterling has strengthened. I would not suggest that it should not do so. However, a great many people looked forward to certain financial difficulties in Europe this winter, which difficulties are taking place but which are being met by the peoples there in a spirit which has maintained confidence in the currencies of those countries. I would not ascribe a reason for that. I merely report it. But even so, let us consider how much better those currencies would be and how much better the feeling of the people would be if their costs were cut and if they were put back in the position which they occupied before the difficulty with regard to the canal. While a political settlement of the difficulty is, of course, a most desirable end, I suggest that an economic solution to the problem is urgently needed; and I know that fact is appreciated by hon. members who, in the main, I think will agree with this vote.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the minister is being extraordinarily optimistic when he speaks as though all that is required to bring about an economic solution is for this money to be put up and then for the canal to be cleared. I am afraid that is just the beginning of the problem. The minister himself today has in effect admitted that there is absolutely no assurance that, the minute the canal is cleared, this dictator

Nasser will not take the position that British, French and Israeli ships cannot use it. Of course the minister cannot go any further than the actual facts of the case warrant. But I understand from him that that is the position, namely that the free world has absolutely no assurance that Nasser will allow the shipping of those three nations or for that matter the shipping of any other nations to use the canal once the money has been spent.

Mr. Harris: That is correct.

Mr. Green: I think that shows just how terribly serious this question is and the need for the Canadian government and the governments of the other freedom-loving countries to take a determined stand that this sort of nonsense is not going to be permitted any longer. May I ask the minister, for example, whether this question of free navigation of the canal is even under consideration in the debate now taking place in the United Nations? When the Prime Minister spoke on Wednesday he intimated to us that the whole position from Canada's point of view was covered by the speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on January 29 in New York. We have now had an opportunity to read that speech. In it I find not one word about the Suez canal or about the question of navigation. May I ask the minister whether or not that is the fact, that all the discussions now taking place do not involve at all the question of the clearing of the canal or the free navigation of it?

Then, one other question I would ask him. Is there any move under way to use the United Nations emergency force as a police force in the Suez canal area as distinct from the Sinai desert, the Gaza strip and the gulf of Aqaba, to ensure that there is free navigation of the canal? Apparently, from all we can see, there is not any such intention. No nation seems to have mentioned it at the United Nations in the course of this debate, and yet I do not know of any other way in which the free navigation of the canal will be assured. I should like to know the opinion of the Canadian government as to whether or not this force should be given the task of policing the Suez canal itself until agreement has been reached under which there will be free navigation of the canal by the ships of all countries.

Mr. Harris: I shall try to answer both questions, Mr. Chairman. The first had to do with navigation, and whether it was under debate, and the second had the same purpose. I think my hon. friend misunderstood the Prime Minister the other day. You may remember that at the time I raised the same point of order that I have now mentioned again. The Leader of the Opposition had asked about the Gaza strip and other related matters in connection with the dispute between Israel and her neighbours, and it was that to which the Prime Minister was referring when he said that the attitude of the Canadian government could be gleaned from the speech which was made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Prime Minister had in mind that it was that part of the question which had been addressed to him that would be covered by that speech. There was no intention to suggest that in the speech there was a discussion of the particular matter we are now discussing, namely, the canal itself, although I think my hon. friend will agree with me, having read the speech, that there were direct references to the gulf of Aqaba and other matters that stem a little bit from the canal clearing.

Mr. Green: But nothing about the canal.

Mr. Harris: No, I agree. The Prime Minister did not intend his answer should be taken in that light. He intended his answer to refer to those questions having to do with Israel and the Gaza strip which had been asked of him, and not to the canal itself. It was for that reason, as a matter of fact, that at that time I raised, as I raised again this morning and raise now, the point of order that we ought to confine our discussion to the canal rather than the Gaza strip and other matters that have arisen out of this but are not subjects we are discussing at the moment.

The second question has to do with the use of the United Nations emergency force in connection with the canal itself, and whether or not that is under discussion at the present time. I think my hon. friend should bear in mind the priority at the moment at the United Nations. At the moment, they are discussing the question of Israel, the Gaza strip and matters connected with whether or not Israel should withdraw and what should take the place of the Israeli forces should that withdrawal occur. The other question, the question of the canal and what happens to it after it has been cleared, will be discussed on the motion which will try to allocate the cost of clearing amongst the various members of the United Nations or in whatever manner may be decided.

At the moment, however, this subject is not under consideration because, as I say, the United Nations feels this other matter should have priority of consideration. As I said a moment ago, I am sure it will be raised during this session and at that time there will be no point of order raised if discussion goes on about the canal and not about the Gaza strip.

Mr. Green: This is a discussion about the canal. The Canadian taxpayer is being asked to put up a million dollars to help clear that canal. Now, what is the stand of the Canadian government with regard to the use of the United Nations emergency force in the canal area in order to ensure that there will be free navigation for the ships of all nations? This must have been considered by the Canadian government. If it has not, it should have been because I believe that on November 2 there was a resolution adopted in the general assembly of the United Nations which authorized action to reopen the canal and this is the important part of that resolution to which I wish to draw attention and to secure full protection of navigation. The Minister of National Health and Welfare will correct me if I am wrong in that statement. The resolution of the assembly itself deals not only with the clearing of the canal but also with the free navigation of that canal.

Does the Canadian government believe, or does it not, that the United Nations emergency force should be used in the canal area itself until agreement has been reached which will ensure that all ships can use that canal?

Mr. Harris: I thought I dealt directly with the question on Wednesday, so I shall quote myself by reading two or three sentences found on page 807 of Hansard for January 30, 1957:

> I do want to give the assurance that coupled with the vote of $1 million which I hope the committee will approve we will reiterate the position we have always taken on this matter, that is that the Suez canal shall be free to everyone without discrimination in its use. What form the operative part would take is still a matter of great concern and indeed may not be foreseen at the present time, but the United Nations resolution saying that this waterway shall be open to all users is not only endorsed by Canada but will be endorsed by Canada and insisted upon in so far as we have the ability to do so.

I cannot give a more definite statement than that. We shall do all we can to see, once the canal is open, that that position is maintained. We shall use all the good offices we have at the United Nations—and I think my hon. friend agrees that they are quite extensive because of the high regard for the representative of the Canadian people there—to see that these negotiations and discussions result in the canal being open. Now, whether or not we would say that we would do this or that to achieve that result would depend, of course, on the progress in negotiation. We cannot say at this moment that unless certain conditions are met we shall not go along with this; we are going to do our best to convince all members of the United Nations that this position should be the ultimate outcome. I, for one, am inclined to think most members here would feel that what can be done will be done by our representatives there and if they are not able to bring it about probably no one would be able to do so.

Mr. Green: That is all very well, but the minister has not answered my question so I am going to repeat it. Does the Canadian government believe that the United Nations emergency force should be used in the canal area to ensure the free navigation of the canal? The minister said that the government is in favour of free navigation of the canal. Everyone in Canada agrees with that, but I am not so sure that Egypt does or that Russia does or that a great many other nations agree with it. It is obvious, it seems to me, that we must know something further than that. Here is this United Nations expeditionary force in the Sinai desert. This house was led to believe last fall, I do not know whether or not it was intentional, that Canadian troops were going to take part in the United Nations emergency force in order to bring about free navigation of the canal as well as an armistice between Israel and Egypt. That certainly was the implication contained in the statements of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think that is what should be done. I think the United Nations emergency force should carry out that job. Nasser has told us in the last few days that the minute the Israelis withdraw then the United Nations emergency force has to get out of Egypt and that, of course, includes getting out of the Suez canal area. There are two very distinct stands.

I should like to know whether the Canadian government is standing firm on the plan that the United Nations emergency force shall be used in the Suez canal area to ensure that there is free navigation?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Canadian government will stand firm on any pronouncement made by the Prime Minister and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would not, however, draw the direct conclusion from what has been said by my hon. friend, that we have made a decision already that the United Nations emergency force ought to be used for the purpose that he has mentioned. In fact, I will go further and say I do not think we have made such a decision, although I quite agree that during the course of the past three months a good many things have been said and done which have affected the whole problem which gave rise to the difficulties we are now considering.

The real purpose of the United Nations force, of course, was to restore a situation in which peace and stability could be achieved by negotiation. Now, to say at this moment that in three months' time we shall insist on the emergency force staying in the canal area for the purpose of ensuring free navigation in the canal is expecting too much of any government. We would hope that we could achieve the results of free navigation by negotiation. I do not think you enter negotiations with your hands tied too much, and I do not think it would be desirable if we said at this time that only on that basis would we participate in the clearing of the canal. On the other hand, I think we are only—to use the Prime Minister's words the other day—dealing in semantics.

Mr. Green: Has Nasser given the slightest indication that there will be free navigation?

Mr. Harris: No; I said that already this morning. He has not, so far as I am aware; but admitting that, I do not think we should sit down and allow things to remain as they are. We have to take some positive action to clean up difficulties which occurred in Egypt and in Israel.

Mr. Low: I have two questions in my mind that I wish to put to the minister. First, I must agree with him when he says that our first objective ought to be to get the canal cleared. I think that is understandable. The restoration of navigation in the canal is so important to the well-being and the economies of western Europe and they in turn have to be built up in strength if we are ever going to be able to provide the effective opposition to the communist imperialists that we must present, and I do not think there is anything we can do but to back the minister in his request for this $1 million to get the canal cleared. At the same time, I think we would like to feel that, as we join with the other nations in contributing money to see that the canal is cleared, we are buying one more right to demand that that canal be truly internationalized; that traffic through it be guaranteed to every nation. Furthermore, I think we also ought to make it abundantly clear through the firm attitude that we express that we are going to see to it eventually that Mr. Nasser pays for the malicious job he did in blocking up that canal.

I never found any more effective way of dealing with a boy who was just a little bit malicious than to make him pay the bill. I do not mean punish him by beating the dickens out of him. That is not my thought. But I saw a lad one time who maliciously broke the windshield of an automobile. His father could very easily have paid the bill; in fact, he did pay it but he said to the boy, "You are going to have the full cost of this deducted from your allowance over the months until it is fully paid for." That lad never wanted to break another windshield. I think it is exactly the same with Nasser because he is nothing but an overgrown boy and he is silly to boot. My own judgment is that he did this thing maliciously and we ought to make it abundantly clear that he and his country should repay the full cost in due course.

It does seem to me that if we go into this thing with a soft attitude and follow the diffidence that Hammarskjold has used in working with Nasser we will never get anywhere. I would like to believe that when we vote this $1 million and hand it over to the United Nations we ought to say to Mr. Hammarskjold, "You stiffen up on this business now and see to it that ample provision is made, whether through the use of the United Nations emergency force or in some other way, so that the canal zone will be occupied and administered by the United Nations until a perfectly sound agreement has been reached that will continue over the years and guarantee to all nations the right of unimpeded traffic through the canal." That is the first thing.

Then, I think we should also say to Mr. Hammarskjold, "Get it over to Mr. Nasser and his people that they are going to pay this shot and they will have to pay for any further malicious acts of this kind as well." If you stiffen up and do that, Mr. Minister, and see that our representative talks straight turkey to these people we will not hesitate to back you with this $1 million.

Mr. Harris: Just to answer—not the last question because I am sure the remarks of my hon. friend will be drawn to the attention of Mr. Hammarskjold—the former question: Before it was agreed to recommend to parliament that this advance should be made we did say to Mr. Hammarskjold what my hon. friend has said—

Mr. Low: Thanks.

Mr. Harris: —namely, that we are going to insist, and we will not put this request to parliament unless it is understood—and in doing so our position is quite clear—that this canal must be free.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question but first I would say I do not think there is one of us in this house who would like to see the dictator of Egypt placed in the position of Hitler and Mussolini. Somebody says that the United Nations has given him all the rope possible and he will soon hang himself. We would like to see that day now, but that is not the question. The point I wish to make is that the United Nations is doing the job of clearing the canal; the work is going on now and it is our duty to pay for it. That is what this $1 million is for.

Mr. Zaplitny: Has the question of the status of the canal ever been referred to, or judgment passed by, the international court of justice?

Mr. Harris: No.

Mr. Zaplitny: If not, does the minister not think that this may be an appropriate time, while the canal is being cleared and while there are all these doubts in people's minds as to what the status of the canal shall be, to refer the question to the international court for a ruling in order that the United Nations could then have a clear guidepost for future action? Obviously, if we are to act as we talk, then the United Nations will have to take some sort of concerted action, or leave it to someone else to take action privately, which is the very thing we are trying to prevent. If the United Nations is going to be called upon or expected to take concerted action for the purpose of making this canal available for all shipping without discrimination, I think it would be of value if it had a clear-cut ruling on what the status is under international law. I should like to hear the minister's opinion on that point.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, there is no power in the United Nations assembly to compel the reference of a question to the world court. Under those conditions it is unlikely that with the temper of the persons concerned it would go to the world court although it could go by the consent of the nations concerned. Under those conditions I can only say I am quite sure this stratagem to bring about at least a legal opinion about the rights of the countries concerned has no doubt been considered by a great many of the people directly or indirectly involved. As I say, Mr. Chairman, while we here might all agree that that would be a desirable end, at the moment it is not a possible end without the consent of the countries concerned.

Mr. Zaplitny: I would like to get the answer clear in my mind, Mr. Chairman. The minister says, "without the consent of the countries concerned". In this instance does he refer to Egypt or does he refer to the countries which use the canal?

Mr. Harris: I refer to all countries. You cannot refer a question concerning a country to the world court by compulsion.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I believe it was on Tuesday that the minister said that in making this loan Canada was acting as a temporary banker for the United Nations. In view of that would the Secretary of State for External Affairs be attempting to replace some of the supermen of Europe to whom the Prime Minister referred in a speech a few weeks ago?

Mr. Harris: I think, Mr. Chairman, the question was intended as a serious one and the answer ought to be that we are doing our best to bring out of the chaos in the Middle East not only just a cessation of the hostilities which we have already achieved, but a settlement of a great many of the problems which have grown up over a number of years but particularly since 1948. There is lots of evidence to indicate that any action taken requires the good will and the co-operation, either willing or under pressure, of almost every group concerned and that in bringing about that solution we are actuated by only one motive and that is to restore the situation so that trade can be resumed, peace can be more permanently established and, as I always think as Minister of Finance, so that money can be used for the development of trade and the improvement of the standard of living instead of some of the things for which it is now being used.

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the work of clearing the canal has been progressing for at least three weeks or more. Could the Minister of Finance say how those operations have been financed to date? Quite obviously the money must have been paid out to those companies which are doing the salvaging work and wages paid to their personnel.

Mr. Harris: As I said a moment ago, in some cases the salvage companies were doing it on their own or at the cost of the governments concerned. If the salvage companies themselves have not been financing their own operations in the expectation of receiving payment from the United Nations, I can only assume that they are doing the work with some kind of government assistance from their own governments although I have no knowledge that this is so. At any rate through the United Nations there has been no money paid up to the present time.

Mr. White (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, I think the minister made it very clear that at the present time there is no agreement or assurance of any kind with Egypt that they will keep the canal open after it is cleared. I take it from what the minister said that as soon as the canal is cleared it will then be solely under the jurisdiction of the Egyptian government subject to any agreement that may be made through the United Nations. I should like to ask the minister if there has been any discussion so far about this canal and as to any claim that is going to be made for the loss of the revenue from the date the canal was closed until it has been cleared and reopened.

I understand that the average daily revenue at the date the canal was blocked was between $500,000 and $1 million. If that is correct, there is going to be in all probability a large claim made by Egypt against somebody and I would like to know if Canada is then going to be placed in the same position we are in now where we have to pay a part of the cost of clearing the canal and in addition make a contribution toward any claim made by Egypt for loss of revenue during the time when the canal was closed.

The minister said he hoped that, when the canal was cleared, through pressure brought to bear by the United Nations some agreement could be made. Surely the minister remembers how much pressure the United Nations exerted and how hopeless and helpless they were in doing anything about Hungary because Hungary was backed up by Russia. Does he not feel that the United Nations is going to be placed in exactly the same position as far as Egypt is concerned if Egypt refuses to allow the passage of ships of all nations through the canal?

Further, why should not Egypt pay the entire cost of clearing the Suez canal? I do not know the number of ships sunk, but I believe practically all the ships, vessels and barges were sunk by Egypt. If Nasser should fly into a rage again, what is to prevent him from doing exactly the same thing? As far as I am concerned there is nothing that the United Nations can do legally to prevent Nasser operating that canal or blocking the canal again. Once again we are going to place our hopes in the United Nations. I think the minister and the government must realize at this date, which is far too late, that the mistake was in the pressure put on Britain and France by the United Nations, in which Canada played no small part, to withdraw from Port Said. If Britain had been allowed to proceed there the canal would have been protected, would not have been blocked and the United Nations would be in a much better position today than they are.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, I believe the minister indicated that our contribution or loan would be deducted from the assessment we pay to the United Nations fund. Is that to be taken directly from the service the United Nations offers or from the general fund to which we contribute for the operations of the United Nations itself?

[Mr. White (Hastings-Frontenac).]

Mr. Harris: It is to be an additional assessment to the annual one of, I think, 3.7 or 3.8 per cent.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the minister, Mr. Chairman, if he does not consider it reasonable that before we should be asked to vote $1 million to be paid by the people of Canada there should be an attempt which need not take long, and not only an attempt but should it not be decided, that Nasser should give a clear indication of his intention with regard to the future use of this canal? Otherwise does the minister not agree that we are being asked to vote $1 million without any knowledge of whether it is going to be put to useful purposes or thrown away? What is the use of clearing the canal if we find in fact it is not going to be open to ships of all countries who so vitally need it? Why is not an attempt made to obtain a clear and unequivocal statement from Nasser with regard to his intentions concerning the future use of the canal?

Mr. Harris: For the reason I gave a short while ago, Mr. Chairman, that all the advantage at the moment seems to be on the side of clearing the canal pending negotiations for the ultimate use of it rather than doing nothing. I made it quite clear that in the absence of a direct statement by Nasser it is our opinion, and I believe it is the opinion of my hon. friend, that it is better to take three or four months while this work is going on to negotiate this question than to ignore it and have a tremendous cost added on to the various nations that are suffering because of the closing of the canal, and hope that that in itself would be a sufficient reason why in the long run a satisfactory solution might be made. But in any event I must say that it would seem to me that we could not look forward to doing nothing about the canal even if the Egyptian government does at the moment appear to be saying, "We are not going to say now what we will do in three months' time." In effect, that is the situation.

Mr. Fulton: May I just follow that up, because I do not gather from the minister's previous statement that instructions have been issued to the secretary general to obtain a clear statement from Nasser of his intentions. I should not think that that would take three or four months; it should be possible to do that in a matter of days. I do suggest therefore that three or four days should be considered as a reasonable time to devote to obtaining this answer before we and indeed other countries are expected to vote money.

That is not to ignore the problem and the fact that the canal is closed; that is merely to say that we are going to act expeditiously and tell Mr. Nasser that we are prepared to vote this money, along with the other nations concerned, but before we do so we are entitled to have a clear statement of his intention.

Mr. Harris: I asume that in his negotiations with the Egyptian government, which the secretary general undertook four or five weeks ago, and no doubt in the continuing negotiations which are going on probably every day this question has arisen. However, I do suggest to my hon. friend, who is rather an expert in negotiating on occasion, that one thing you must avoid is having someone at a time when his position may appear to him to be strong or when his feelings are running strong take a position from which he cannot recede at a later time. I should say that that is the first step in diplomacy. If we were to demand an answer from Nasser, an answer involving certain courses of action to be taken, it would seem to me that we might not get very far in achieving a final result.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Can the minister tell us if he knows of any more profitable use to which Mr. Nasser could put the canal than to let ships through? Would he perhaps find it more profitable to grow water lilies in it or to conduct general hydrophonics?

Mr. Macdonnell: While it is true of course that the "Eisenhower doctrine" is quite apart from the United Nations, nevertheless I should like to ask the minister whether under the pressure which he has pointed out as having to be relied on in dealing with this strange man Nasser he considers that there might not be pressure exerted, either directly or indirectly, through the Eisenhower doctrine to the end that this man will show some common sense?

There are two aspects to the Eisenhower doctrine, one economic and the other military. I repeat what I said at the outset. While the minister may say it is irrelevant, looking at it in the broad, personally it does not seem to me to be irrelevant and I should like to know what the minister thinks.

Mr. Harris: I am quite sure that the United States government are as anxious as we are to come to the time in the spring when this work will have been completed and some continuing arrangement made, if not on a permanent at least on a temporary basis, which would permit the free use of the canal pending the outcome of whatever negotiations and discussions are then going on to achieve a permanent political settlement. I think the United States government was the first to say that it would contribute to this fund we are talking about now because despite the advantages there may be to the Texas oil producers they feel that in the long run and the immediate run there are advantages to the world as a whole in clearing the canal so that oil and many other commodities as well may pass through for western Europe.

I would not want to comment on the recent Eisenhower declaration about Middle East policy because, as I say, that gets into the larger sphere and is included in the larger attitude of restoring and maintaining peace in the Middle East. I would be quite satisfied that the United States administration and the Canadian administration were as one as to the desirability of a final settlement that the canal would be free to the use of all people without restrictions.

Mr. Macdonnell: Can the minister answer this question on which I am not as well informed as I should be. Is there an indication that the economic aspect of the Eisenhower plan will in the immediate future take as one of its forms a readiness to help in the economic situation? I have been glad to observe recently that some of the oil-producing countries have begun to squawk because they are losing their means of livelihood. I have been wondering for months why the oil-producing countries, some of which live almost entirely on oil, have said so little about the fact that their business was being so greatly hampered and their losses were so great.

I realize that you are dealing with an extraordinary creature in the person of Nasser. I realize that you have to consider the pros and cons and weigh the considerations which might be conclusive to those of us who like to think we are full of common sense but which may not be so compelling in his case. If it is reasonable to believe that Egypt at the present moment is beginning to learn the economic facts of life and that one thing she will have to rely on is assistance from the United States, then it would seem to me reasonable to believe that the Eisenhower doctrine might operate very powerfully.

Mr. Harris: I think it would be unwise to make anything but general comments about political and economic doctrines which are under debate in the United States congress. I join with my hon. friend in the hope that that doctrine and its application, either in the political or economic stage, will be such that it will act, immediately or as soon as possible, with greater pressure to solve the problem now before us. Anything that can help to do that would return dividends, not only in money but in peace for a great many years.

Mr. Blackmore: I know the minister is speaking extemporaneously and is probably not able to choose his words, but I was not very well pleased with his use of the words "levy" and "assessment". It seems to me that it would be wise for the minister to use "assignment" or "allotment". I do not want the idea to get into Hansard that we take the attitude that any group on earth can levy on us or assess us.

Mr. Harris: I hasten to agree 100 per cent.

Mr. Hahn: Supplementary to the question I asked a few minutes ago: If I interpret the minister's remarks properly they would indicate that we will be allotted—I am using the word suggested by the hon. member for Lethbridge—a certain sum to be charged the different countries. I am wondering whether all the members of the United Nations have agreed to the plan that they should be allotted a certain figure at this time.

Mr. Harris: No, Mr. Chairman, the resolution has not been debated yet and the attitudes have not been made known.

Mr. Green: Has Egypt been asked to pay anything towards the cost of opening the canal? I have not been able to find any reference in the press that such a request has been made. Perhaps the Minister of Finance can give us that information.

Mr. Harris: No, no one has been asked to pay anything. The only ones who have been asked have been those countries who have been asked to make these temporary advances. The whole question of paying for the costs has yet to be discussed at the United Nations.

Mr. Green: Does the minister mean to say that neither Mr. Hammarskjold nor anybody else has even suggested to Egypt that she should pay one cent for clearing the canal although all the damage was done by Egypt? Is that the ridiculous situation in which we are put?

Mr. Harris: My hon. friend is very apt at reducing a situation to simple words which do not quite tell the story. It is true that Nasser has not been asked to pay but it is equally true that no one else has been asked to pay, so I agree with his statement put in that form.

Mr. Green: The Canadian taxpayer has been asked to pay $1 million. That is what he is being asked this morning. I should like to know why it is that the Canadian taxpayer is paying $1 million and 10 or 15 times as many American taxpayers are being asked to pay only $5 million. Why is it that Canada has to pay a so much larger proportion than the United States?

[Mr. Harris.]

Mr. Harris: I went over that on Tuesday and I went over it on Wednesday.

Mr. Green: No, you did not.

Mr. Harris: Oh yes. The answer is perfectly simple. First of all, there were a few countries which had dollar assets and for a modest sum of this kind—I use that expression in connection with the total budget—

Mr. Hodgson: What's a million?

Mr. Harris: —and not in connection with the amount involved—they had the exchange available. After consideration of the problem the secretary general decided that he should ask certain countries if they could help immediately by way of advancing a fund of $10 million. At that time the United States offered $5 million which, as I recall it, is more percentagewise than their annual contribution towards the cost of the United Nations. Therefore, taking that yardstick, they offered more than they would otherwise have had to contribute.

When it came to our case we were quite conscious, as I said on Tuesday and Wednesday, that a contribution of one dollar in ten to an interim advance was a greater percentage than we would normally be expected to contribute to any United Nations fund. Our contribution is somewhere below 5 per cent. But because of the fact that we have the dollars, because of the fact that we are a country whose motives are not suspect in any sense of the word in this controversy and because we were in the position that parliament was meeting shortly after it was decided that this would be the best method of interim financing, it was thought that we would have the money available reasonably soon if parliament saw fit to vote it. For that reason we decided after careful consideration on the amount of $1 million knowing nonetheless that it represented a greater portion of the total and a greater proportion with respect to the United States contribution but expecting that the loan will be repaid or, alternatively, that if we are asked later on to make a contribution towards this cost and do so we will be able to recoup the $1 million or a large part of it.

Mr. Green: It looks suspiciously like another case of "what's a million".

Mr. Harris: I did not say that.

Mr. Green: Perhaps the Minister of Finance can tell us what arrangements, if any, have been made about the payment of tolls for the use of the canal once it is cleared. Are those tolls to be paid to Nasser, to the canal company, to the United Nations or to someone else? What is to be done?

Mr. Harris: Well—

Mr. Green: I am not through with my question. Are any negotiations under way at all with regard to the question of the payment of tolls? Is any of the money from tolls to be used to repay the cost of clearing the canal?

Mr. Harris: There are no negotiations publicly at the moment. There are a good many discussions going on at the United Nations as to the outcome of the use of the canal. One method suggested for repaying this money is to increase the tolls and make a charge of some kind on the tolls which would be collected and remitted to the United Nations in repayment of this sum of money. But, as I have indicated this morning, there has been no decision made because the whole question of financing has not yet been discussed by the United Nations.

Mr. Green: What about my question as to the authority to which the tolls are to be paid? Has that been decided?

Mr. Harris: That has not been decided. It will be decided along with the other questions when the United Nations comes to the resolution as to what will be done when the canal is cleared and made available for shipping.

Mr. Hahn: It seems to me that the minister has certainly given us every assurance that our representatives at the United Nations will try to establish that we do get the money repaid. It also seems to me that the greatest beneficiary from the use of the canal is the United Kingdom. Having felt as we have in the past about this whole conflict, I would say that under the circumstances it is very desirable that we see to it that the $1 million is voted very shortly.

Mr. Macdonnell: I want to know if I understood the minister correctly a few minutes ago when I thought he said that in paying over the money we would indicate that it was being done on the condition that the canal must be free for all. Did I understand the minister correctly?

Mr. Harris: No. I answered that in a different form the other day when replying to the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I said we could not impose sanctions on the use of the $1 million. Once we give it to the secretary general it will be for the purpose of clearing the canal. We are going to do that but I said at the same time that we would accompany the cheque with a restatement of our support for the resolution of the United Nations calling upon the powers concerned to make the canal free and that we would continue to insist in negotiations at the United Nations that that be the ultimate outcome of the negotiations.

Mr. Quelch: Can the minister say whether or not Russia has stated that she will not pay any part of the cost of clearing the canal? I did see where she had stated that in her opinion Britain and France should pay the whole cost. I believe she has also stated she will not pay any part.

Mr. Harris: That was a statement attributed to one of the representatives of Russia at the United Nations but in connection with a debate which has not yet arisen there, and one is hopeful that there may be a change, although I am not going to suggest that there will be.

Mr. Green: What consideration has been given to the suggestion that it is possible to construct another canal not on Egyptian territory? I am not in a position to know whether or not such a course is feasible but we have seen reports to that effect. If no one is going to put this man Nasser in his place it might be a good idea for investigations to be made as to the possibility of an alternative canal. It does seem to me that action along that line is much more likely to get reasonable action out of Nasser than for the freedom-loving nations like Canada to go on hoping that Nasser is going to be fair.

That is all we are doing today. I realize that the minister cannot take any other stand. He cannot say anything else because it is perfectly obvious that that is what Canada is doing as well as the United States, namely just hoping that Nasser is going to do what they want him to do. Would it not strengthen our hand a great deal if at least real steps were taken to find out whether or not it is possible to construct an alternative canal? Certainly if that can be done, Mr. Nasser and his Suez canal will be high and dry and we probably would not have much more trouble from him. Just what is the picture with regard to that possibility?

Mr. Harris: The original canal, of course, was a private venture backed by certain governments for the purpose of profit, and I am satisfied that in the intervening years it has become quite profitable. This would only mean that there would be a possibility of competition from others who would feel that they might make a profit too. It seems to me that this is a case where these matters would probably be present in the mind of Colonel Nasser. But in any event I think that every possible alternative to future trouble over the canal ought to be explored. If any one were in a position seriously to advocate a canal in another position or an alternative method of transportation such as the Israelis are attempting and are carrying out with some success, I am told, that would be one more economic reason why, in the course of these negotiations, we might come out with a reasonably good settlement.

Mr. Hodgson: After listening to this debate for two full days now or nearly that much, the muddied water so far as I am personally concerned is becoming clearer every minute, and I am becoming more in favour of passing this vote and granting this money to the United Nations. I want to make myself clear on this position. At the time that Great Britain and France went into this canal zone, there is no doubt at all in my mind that the United States let them down for political expediency and that at that particular time our Canadian representative played no small part in letting them down. They sold Mr. Eden down the river. There is no doubt about that. For that mistake which we made, if for no other reason, we should pay the piper. This is one way of paying him. We should pay this amount whether we get the money back or whether we do not. I have not much faith in ever getting it back. These loans or investments or whatever you call them made in this sort of way are generally give-away programs. But if we made a mistake—and there is no doubt that our officials did so at that time—let us pay the piper.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Item agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The committee also asks leave to sit again. When shall it have leave to next sit again? Later this day or next sitting?

Mr. Harris: Later this day.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957, the sum of $23,270,000 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Harris thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 25, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1957.

[Mr. Harris.]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave shall this bill be read the second time now?

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Since this is a money bill, should there not be two cabinet ministers in the house, one to make the motion and the other to second it?

Mr. Harris: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say no.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I asked for your ruling, not that of the minister. This is a money bill. Surely it cannot be either moved or seconded by a member who is not a member of the cabinet.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not believe what is suggested by the hon. member is necessary. As long as the minister is here to sponsor his bill, I believe it may be seconded by any hon. member who is in his place.

Mr. Green: There are two parliamentary assistants here. Perhaps they would do for one minister.

Mr. Harris moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave shall this bill be read the second time now?

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Harris moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall this bill be read the third time now?

Mr. Knowles: Only by leave.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND EXPIRY DATE

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 9, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

He said: The purpose of Bill No. 9 is to extend for another five years certain vital sections of the Canadian Wheat Board Act which expire at the end of this crop year, that is on July 31 next. These sections have the effect of maintaining the wheat board as the sole marketing agency for western wheat, oats and barley.

The Canadian wheat board is in its 14th year of operation as the sole agency for the marketing of wheat produced in western Canada. During that time it has encountered nearly every conceivable combination of production and international trading conditions. There have been rusted, wet and frozen crops; there have been large and small crops; there have been periods of shortage when special measures were necessary to allocate supplies; more recently there have been unprecedentedly large crops at a time of intense international competition.

The board has met and dealt with these problems and today has more widespread support amongst producers and producers' organizations than ever before. This widespread support is, I think the house will agree, a tribute to the soundness of the present wheat board system of marketing and to the devoted and skilful work of the members of the board, in particular of course the work of George McIvor, who has been a member of the board almost since its inception and who has been its chief commissioner since 1937.

The producers of western Canada understand thoroughly what the board is and how it operates today. That is why they give it such wholehearted support. I regret to say that there is less understanding in certain other quarters, and if the house will bear with me I should like to give a brief review of the origins and purposes of the present system of marketing.

The present system of wheat board marketing is an outgrowth of the pooling system which got under way in the early 1920's. All members from the prairies are familiar with the establishment of the Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta wheat pools. The basic idea was that members of the pools should deliver their grain to the pool and receive an initial price at the time of delivery, and the balance of the sales price, less expenses, when all grain had been sold. A central selling agency was established to co-ordinate the selling activities of the three provincial pools. The pools operated on this basis throughout the 1920's with considerable success and without any intervention or help from governments. Unfortunately, however, they became victims of the great depression. Although the initial prices for deliveries from the huge 1928 wheat crop, and deliveries from the 1929 crop, had been fixed at what seemed reasonably conservative levels, the market collapse of the early 1930's prevented them from realizing enough from sales to cover these initial advances, plus expenses. The provincial governments first came to the rescue by guaranteeing the advances made by the chartered banks. So great was the debacle, however, that in the fall of 1930 the federal government had to provide additional guarantees to the banks.

At the same time, the government of Canada appointed John I. McFarland as manager of the pools' central selling agency. Mr. McFarland was instructed to stabilize the market, and this he did by buying both cash grain and futures on the open market for government account. Between November 30, 1930 and December 2, 1935, the central selling agency, which became divorced from the wheat pools and became instead the stabilization agency for the Canadian government, increased its holdings of wheat from 37 million bushels to 205 million bushels. Meanwhile the provincial pools operated on a small scale. This was the situation when the Canadian wheat board came into existence in 1935. It took over the wheat accumulated during the stabilization operations of the previous five years, and it stood ready to take wheat from producers at an initial price, and to return the proceeds of sale, less expenses, to the producers.

Hon. members will note that the Canadian wheat board at this stage was not the sole marketing agency for wheat. It stood ready to take delivery from producers, at a stated initial price, but producers could, if they wished, sell on the open market. In other words, it was at this time a board operating a voluntary pool. And so it continued to be until September 1943. While on the voluntary basis, the activities of the board fluctuated widely and rapidly. When the open market was above the initial prices, producers delivered relatively small quantities to the board. When the open market was below the initial price, producers delivered practically all their wheat to the board. From the point of view of a successful marketing operation by the board, this was a most unsatisfactory position. In a sense it was a sort of "heads I win, tails you lose" proposition. And as events were to prove, the producers themselves preferred a different system.

During the period of the voluntary pool the wheat board suffered one major loss arising out of the marketing of the 1938 crop, amounting to over $60 million. There were one or two other minor losses, but with these exceptions the boards not only sold at high enough prices to cover its initial advances and expenses, but also to make a further payment to producers who had delivered wheat to the board. In September 1943 the wheat board became the sole marketing agency for wheat produced in the prairie region. Acting under authority of the War Measures Act, the government discontinued trading in wheat futures at Winnipeg. Special arrangements were made for the sale of wheat under mutual aid, and to meet the requirements of subsidized domestic purchasers. And the initial price was raised from 90 cents to $1.25.

This was the turning point in the recent history of wheat board operations. In September 1943 the present system, which enjoys such widespread support, came into effect. At the end of the war, of course, it was necessary for parliament, by the enactment of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, to put the system on a peacetime basis rather than on the basis of the War Measures Act, but otherwise the essentials were preserved. It is worthy of note that, since the board became the sole marketing agency, it has always been fully solvent and has always been able to make payments to its producers in addition to the initial payment. So popular did the present system prove to be that strong representations were made to extend it to oats and barley, which was done, effective as from August 1, 1949. Because of the constitutional position applying to grains like oats and barley, which are very largely consumed within the province of their production, the government insisted upon provincial legislation in each of the three prairie provinces to support the wheat board as the sole marketing agency.

That is the history. Now let me describe the system as it operates today. In effect, the wheat board operates a pool for the benefit of all producers, with the advantage of government support in its financing. The government, on recommendation of the board, fixes initial prices for deliveries during the crop year at what appear to be reasonable levels, taking into account prospects of sale. The board pays the producer initial advances on grain delivered to the pool by borrowing money from the banks, under government guarantee. The board sells the wheat and, after paying all expenses, returns the proceeds of sale to the producer in the form of further payments.

The board is a producers' board and even the salaries of board members are paid by the producers. The money involved is wholly money belonging to the producers, even though the board's bank borrowings are guaranteed by the government.

The board is strictly a marketing organization. It has no other functions whatever. Its aim is to market as much grain as possible, at as high prices as possible, to keep its expense to a minimum, and to provide as high a degree of equity in delivery opportunities amongst producers as can be achieved within the limits of its overriding duty of selling grain.

In my opinion, the board has done a magnificent job in carrying out these functions and in attaining these objectives. And the secret of its success lies in the fact that it has not allowed its energies to be diverted in other directions.

That is the main reason why, on every and all occasions, the board, strongly supported by the government, has resisted efforts to put the board into the money-lending business by making advances to producers against grain stored on farms. That is not the business of the wheat board and should not be its business. To put the wheat board into the business of making farm advances is the surest way I know of playing into the hands of those who would like to wreck the board as an effective marketing agency for the producer.

Hon. members may wonder why I have tried to explain in detail the nature of the wheat board and the manner in which it functions. Those hon. members who represent prairie constituencies and many other hon. members require no such detailed explanation. Strangely enough, many people living in other parts of Canada who write and talk about the marketing of wheat obviously do not understand the detail of present methods of marketing Canadian wheat. It is to them that my explanation is directed.

A case in point is the Gordon commission which, after an extensive investigation, has produced a preliminary report that is obviously based on incorrect understanding of present marketing methods. In paragraph 5 of the section on wheat the following section appears:

> Under the present system the Canadian wheat board announces shortly before the harvest each year the initial or minimum prices which will be paid for the crop which is about to be harvested. These minimum prices, which vary depending upon the grade, apply to the full amount of the crop . . .

That statement, of course, is a complete misconception. The government authorizes the board to fix an initial price for such wheat as may be delivered to the board within the next crop year, and guarantees the banks against loss through payment of the initial price, but the government does not guarantee payment to the farmer of any price for wheat which is not actually delivered to the board within the crop year.

It will be obvious to the hon. members from the prairies that the board cannot possibly form an accurate estimate of the amount of grain which can be delivered to the board in any future crop year. Conditions in the export market change from month to month to an extent that can greatly change export prospects for better or for worse.

No reasonable man would ask the board to undertake the quite impossible task of fixing delivery quotas for individual producers on the basis of past records of acreage and yield. As a matter of fact, there are no available records which would be of any help to the board for such a purpose. Furthermore, it is the farmers' money that the Gordon commission would pay out on the basis of such an export forecast and on delivery quotas for individual producers fixed as recommended by the Gordon commission. Before taking any steps toward implementing the recommendations of the Gordon commission, the government would require almost unanimous support from the producers' marketing organizations. I feel sure that that support will not be forthcoming.

If any hon. member wishes to be recorded in support of the recommendations of the Gordon commission I hope that he will rise in his place and state his position clearly and unequivocally.

The underlying theme of the Gordon report on wheat is "restriction". The report returns time and again to the theme that the producer must be confronted with a limitation under which he will make whatever adjustments he can. This conception is directly opposed to the present government policy, which is to establish fair initial prices, provide the largest possible delivery opportunity for producers and to assist by paying carrying charges on abnormal surplus stocks of wheat until markets can be found.

The Gordon commission recommendations appear to be based upon the assumption that there is likely to be a continuing surplus problem. I do not share that view and I think it would be a great mistake to base our policies on such an assumption.

I have said many times, and I say it again, that the only reason that any substantial surplus of wheat remained on farms at the end of the last crop year, and is likely to remain on farms at the end of the current crop year, is the remarkable series of bumper crops. Had crops been average, or even moderately above average, in recent years not a bushel of grain would be on farms today other than grain that the farmer himself preferred to hold. But crops have not been just above average but of unprecedented proportions in recent years.

In fact, farmers have marketed very large quantities of grain every year. Our exports on the whole have been at satisfactory levels. Last crop year, for example, they were well above all except a very few preceding years and domestic consumption is now, of course, more substantial than it has even been. This crop year our exports are considerably higher to date than they were in the same period during the last crop year.

The outlook is not gloomy. The wheat board has a difficult task but it has demonstrated that it knows how to handle its task. It will at all times receive the full support of the government.

I have no hesitation in recommending an extension of the present system of wheat board marketing for a period of five years.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the review by the Minister of Trade and Commerce of wheat board transactions today was, in my opinion, quite incomplete. Apparently, however, the purpose of the speech the minister made was to scuttle the recommendations of the Gordon commission in their entirety, a commission set up by the government, a commission that spent a fabulous amount of money reviewing the economic future of Canada, a commission that, in so far as the wheat policy recommendations are concerned, has received from the Minister of Trade and Commerce one of the most scathing denunciations that paternity ever gave to progeny.

Sir, as to many of the recommendations there will be strong disagreement, but to refer to the recommendations of the commission in support of cash advances in such critical terms as were used by the minister this afternoon is to pay no heed to the demands of western farmers today on behalf of cash advances. The events of the last few months have added emphasis to the demand of last year that there should be incorporated in this act a permanent provision for cash advances in order to assure western farmers of a reasonable opportunity to meet their initial costs and expenditures. The minister says that anyone who would advocate that policy would be a participant in contributing to the destruction of the board. Well, Mr. Speaker, if that be so then the western farm organizations and the pools themselves must be in that category. Certainly farmers in general who support the wheat board marketing system are almost universally in support of incorporating a provision for cash advances in the act which I believe is necessary having regard to the uncertainty of marketing and storage difficulties.

When that course was advocated last year the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) said that he had communicated with the members of the wheat board and they had given him to understand that if a system of cash advances was brought into effect they would resign. I asked for the production of the correspondence to that effect and also a summary of the conversations which allegedly had taken place. The answer given in reply to that request was that there were no records and there was no correspondence. I say again that commencing this afternoon, there should be incorporated a system of cash advances in order to make this legislation more effective. In so far as the general purpose of the bill is concerned, in order to provide for the extension of the life of the wheat board for five years, we in the official opposition intend to give it our support. We have been in favour of the wheat board operating all through the years in order to secure and assure for the farmer the largest possible return, but unfortunately my hon. friends in this government did not always hold the same high opinion of the wheat board that they avow today.

The hon. gentleman reviewed some of the wheat board's transactions and having done that I may be pardoned for also filling in, in what he called a review of the origins and purposes of the wheat board, certain things to which he did not make reference. I think it is appropriate to review the history of this board since 1935. It was in 1935 that the late R. B. Bennett, the then prime minister, introduced the Wheat Board Act in the House of Commons. It was his desire and purpose that it should be a compulsory board much in keeping with the present situation in so far as the compulsory features are concerned. However, the Liberal opposition of that day opposed him and on July 1, 1935 after a series of discussions between members of the government and the opposition it was finally agreed that the only way in which the legislation could find itself on the statute books would be by having the voluntary feature incorporated and not the compulsory feature.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask my hon. friend a question. What was the Conservative majority in this House of Commons at that time?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, the minister now asks what was the Conservative majority in the House of Commons at that time. Let me say this. On July 1 that year it had been indicated that within three or four days dissolution was to take place. Dissolution was requested over and over again by Mr. Mackenzie King. Members of the Liberal party, and in particular the late J. L. Ralston representing that party, promised to continue to fight on and on regardless of the time that was consumed in order to prevent that board being made a compulsory board. This occurred before my right hon. friend invented the system of applying closure even before discussion took place. That was the reason we had a voluntary board.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend has not answered my question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not interrupt my right hon. friend when he was speaking and presenting a one-sided discussion and I would ask him now to contain himself in silence.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): He does not know the answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The board was set up on a voluntary basis and the floor price was to be 87½ cents. In the fall of 1935 the Liberal party took over and that floor price of 87½ cents stood for the crop year 1935-36. In the crop year 1936-37 the Liberal government decided to scuttle the wheat board. They left the price at 87½ cents but provision was made that the board could not take wheat as long as the open market price was above 90 cents. There were two short crops both in Canada and in the outside world so that the price for two years remained above this figure and the board handled no wheat. In the crop year 1938-39 we had in Canada as much surplus wheat as the whole importing world was estimated to take. The government was prevailed upon by western farmers to take action and they did. The government fixed the board price at 80 cents but the then prime minister and the then minister of trade and commerce, Mr. Euler, stated that in spite of the floor price Canadian wheat would be offered at all times at the going price. This was the first example of colossal dumping of wheat in the wheat trading world. The result was that in a few days the open market dropped to 80 cents and the loss was $38 million, to use the figure which was used a few moments ago by the minister himself. In 1939, the government having come to the conclusion that it had had enough of price fixing, amended the Wheat Board Act so as to provide for a 70 cent initial payment.

Soon after the war a price ceiling was brought into being. The open market being continually higher than the government price, surpluses were mounting and when the allies entered Europe the situation eased and the government made increases in the price until it reached 90 cents, still below the open market. My right hon. friend who today claims to be the avowed friend of the wheat board did not bring it into effective operation until September 1943 when in point of fact its purpose was to keep down prices and to maintain a ceiling on the price that the farmer could secure for his wheat. Following the war the government made an agreement with the United Kingdom which was one of the worst commercial agreements ever made in the free world. My hon. friend says that the wheat board should be allowed to operate in order to secure the highest possible return for the farmer, and with that I agree; but an agreement was entered into with Britain forcing the wheat board to sell and fill the amount of that contract whose terms brought to the western farmer between 50 and 80 cents less than would have been available through the wheat board had it been allowed to sell the farmers' wheat at the best price. At no time did we take any objection to assisting Great Britain. We said it was perfectly proper that Great Britain should be assisted because of the economic sacrifices she was making and because of her economic condition. But we said that that assistance should be at the expense of all the people of Canada and should not be saddled on the western farmer. However, the agreement was entered into and as a result the western farmer found that his wheat was being sold with an ultimate loss to him of several hundred millions of dollars.

Over and over again my hon. friend said that there was no loss because there was no world price. You will remember that in 1951, after having avowed over and over again that there was no loss, legislation was introduced in this house to provide for the payment of $65 million to the western farmer for a loss which the government had always contended was not in fact a loss.

I could be no more in agreement with the right hon. gentleman when he says that the wheat board should have as its purpose the securing of the best possible price for the western farmer, but in connection with the British wheat agreements the wheat board did not operate for the benefit of the western farmer. It operated under the dictation and domination of this government to the detriment of the western farmer.

If political consideration did not dictate what was done in 1949, it is difficult to understand just why a certain action was taken. In order to make an advance or interim payment just before the election of that year the wheat board found it necessary to borrow a large sum of money upon which the farmers subsequently had to pay interest in order to provide for an advance to the farmers just before the election in an effort to delude the farmer into believing there was money to his credit in the wheat board books when the fact was that at that time there was no money available for such purpose.

What about the election of 1953? For about 14 months the farmers had found it impossible to market their wheat because storage facilities were filled up. What happened just before the election in 1953? Suddenly without any warning facilities were opened up, storage facilities became vacant and farmers all over western Canada found that no matter what wheat they had to market they could market it. That continued for several weeks but it ended four days after the election when it was found that no more wheat could be taken. I do hope that the wheat board is not to be used again with an election pending as an instrument of the government to carry out its policies in that regard.

We have a tremendous surplus on hand at the present time. As of January 9 the surplus was 357,636,000 bushels, only seven million bushels down from the year before. The minister has stated that we have had very large marketings during the last year. Canada has lost to the United States her position as the major exporter of wheat. While there has been an increase in foreign marketings of Canadian wheat there has been a materially greater increase on the part of the United States. The result is that today the United States is in the position where all over the world it is engaging in the practice of fire selling and underselling its wheat and other agricultural products by means which constitute an invasion and infraction of the general agreement on tariffs and trade. It is interesting to note that the minister said nothing in that regard.

It is a very serious problem. The United States government is acting in a way which is detrimental to the unity of the free world and to the preservation of the Canadian agricultural machine. No one objects to fair competition, but it is not fair competition. It is an invasion of the undertaking of the United States when that country goes all over the world and virtually gives wheat and other agricultural products away, either by giving interminable lengths of time for repayment when selling on credit or by selling for currencies which cannot be used except within the countries to which they belong and only in connection with economic assistance being given by the United States.

This is not a new problem. On November 5, 1955, the Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke to the Saskatchewan wheat pool in Regina as follows:

> Let me outline, how, in fact, the United States does attempt to dispose of its wheat on world markets. First, it pays a straight subsidy on all exports, in order to bridge the difference between prices in the United States and world prices. This subsidy varies from time to time, depending upon prices at home and prices abroad. Secondly, the United States sells wheat for payment in the currency of the buyer. The proceeds of sale are usually left in the buying country, either to be used by the purchasing government for some purpose approved by the United States government, or in some cases to be converted into dollars several years hence. At the present time, for example, a deal is being worked out with Brazil for a 40-year credit payable in Brazilian currency. I do not think it is unfair to say that in most cases the United States will receive in payment only a small fraction of the selling price. In other words, this is a form of foreign aid, rather than a method of sale.

Thirdly, the United States attempts to trade its wheat against strategic materials. I do not think it is unfair to say, from the evidence available, that the emphasis is more on disposing of wheat than on securing supplies of strategic materials. Fourthly, the United States offers wheat without payment to countries which are in dire need, because of some calamity. In principle, of course, there can be no objection to such gifts, provided that they are not used to destroy commercial markets, which would otherwise have been available.

Then the minister continued:

As I said, I do not think that the United States intends to harm Canada by any of its policies.

Those are sweet words from one usually given to strong expression.

Yet there can be no doubt that, whatever the intention, the methods used by the United States to dispose of its wheat surpluses have been harmful, not only to Canada, but to the wheat situation in general.

And again:

When the members of the United States cabinet were in Ottawa in September—

That was September 1955.

—to meet members of the Canadian cabinet, I put the Canadian point of view before our American friends more strongly than ever before.

Well they did not listen even then. What did he say, what were the strong words that were used? The government of this country has been blaming the United States for the loss of markets, and the wheat board has been doing the same. Mr. McIvor, chairman of the wheat board, said on July 4, 1956, that United States policy was the main reason for loss of wheat markets by Canada. He said markets were lost for reasons beyond our control. He then went on to say that they were lost because the United States was engaging in a system that was not justifiable.

Well, Mr. Speaker, they did not find out how serious it was until October, 1956. They always contended that the Americans were acting in an injudicious way but that what they were doing might be justified. It was only in October, 1956, that they found out. We have these wheat merchants and trade commissioners all over the world and yet they did not find out until then or a few weeks before that the United States was engaged in a most improper practice whereby in the disposal of farm produce the nation that received the benefit of these give-away terms or reduced prices undertook to buy future requirements from the United States. In other words, these gifts, these fire sales, in effect carried with them a gobbling up of wheat markets in the future which no one can justify under the terms of the agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. Victor Mackie, writing in the Winnipeg Free Press, had this to say on October 8, 1956:

Only this summer Canadian officials began to become aware of the important part this provision in the American surplus disposal program was playing in United States disposal of its produce. One report published in a Toronto financial paper in a Washington dispatch states that it was not until the Canadian-U.S. meeting of officials in Winnipeg August 28 that the Canadian government discovered the "tied" sales, which had been standard U.S. operating procedure in its disposal program.

It had continued for several years. The article goes on to say that Canada's government has moved in the diplomatic field to put a stop to the tied deals for the future and has sent a formal note of protest.

Where were they, Mr. Speaker, during the two years? Why did they not find this out? We were losing important markets. The United States was concealing nothing. It gave away wheat and other agricultural products either at lower prices or almost as a gift but always tied to the undertaking on the part of the receiving country that that country would continue to purchase further wheat or other agricultural products. I could quote from various editorials in other western newspapers. The Winnipeg Free Press, the Regina Leader-Post, the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix and other newspapers that support the government found it difficult to understand why the government was blind for two long years as to what was going on while we were losing our markets.

To say we have increased our exports of wheat does not meet the question at all. We have increased our exports and so have other countries. The United States has increased its exports the greatest of all and has taken over our place and forced us into a secondary position in this regard. We tried to find out what the government had done. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) said that he had spoken in strong terms to them. What was said? Whatever was said has not brought about any change. Why can parliament not find out? On the 24th of January, as found at page 589 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce what had been done, what was the nature of the protest, and in reply he said:

The two governments have appointed a continuing committee of senior civil servants of both governments to deal with these matters. The committee meets from time to time. I think the last meeting was some two or three weeks ago. Protests are filed through that committee, and sometimes remedial action is taken.

There has been no remedial action in connection with wheat that can be seen by any eyes anywhere in the world. He goes to say:

Protests, I may say, are sometimes filed in both directions. In any event we find that committee has been useful as a means of conveying our protests, and has had some effect in discouraging certain policies to which we in Canada take strong objection. There is nothing to table. We do not file our protests in writing; we file them through the committee.

Then I asked the minister whether he would tell us what had been done and what was the nature of the protest, and this was his answer:

Mr. Speaker, to discuss in parliament the subject matters that are dealt with by the committee would be to destroy the usefulness of the committee.

I would have destroyed the effectiveness of the alleged objections being raised. That, Mr. Speaker, is what it would have done. Parliament? Why tell parliament anything? They are talking the thing over in such strong words that parliament dare not hear them.The minister goes on to say:

I do not know that it is particularly in the public interest to discuss the kind of transactions we object to. Certain transactions we do object to; but to single them out and discuss them on the floor of the house would, as I say, seriously prejudice the future of the continuing committee.

In other words, parliament which set up the wheat board, parliament which is interrested in the trade of this country, parliament which desires to know what is being done in order to prevent the loss of markets by improper procedures on the part of the United States, is to be denied information. Finally, Mr. Speaker, after I had raised that point and said how unfair it was the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said:

If the hon. gentleman reads what was being talked about before he rose and reads his own remarks, he will find how inappropriate they are to what has been the subject of discussion.

My remarks were these:

. . . does the Prime Minister not believe that parliament has a right to hear?

Is there anything inappropriate in that?

Is everything to be hidden under the new policy or the continuation of the old one that is being followed . . . by the government of concealing all information that it does not want parliament or the people to have?

Sir, we have lost these markets for the future. We have lost them because the United States has adopted a policy of tying in future deliveries and promises of future deliveries with the present-day give-away and fire sale policy. Surely parliament is entitled to ascertain how strong these protests are or whether in this regard Canada's economic future in agriculture is to be sacrificed to the desire of the government to conceal the pusillanimity of its protests. Are they afraid to speak out? The United States is not. We are joined together. We supply the United States with a major portion of its needs to forge the shield of freedom. We are a have country and they are becoming a have-not country.

Surely a protest should be made to the government of the United States that could be heard, not one of these listless, silent protests that are conveyed through a group of civil servants, senior though they may be, whose protests dare not come to the light of day through parliament which created the wheat board. The Canadian people are denied information on a matter upon which they are entitled to information.

We say, sir, that in the last several years the Department of Trade and Commerce has not exercised that degree of diligence in the securing of markets that it should have. We are treated regularly to optimistic statements, and while Canada's parliament receives optimistic statements the United States of America gobbles up future wheat markets and denies us in Canada any opportunity in the future to deal competitively with the United States of America.

I come now to one other matter, the general position of the farmer, particularly with regard to agricultural prices, and the difficulty the farmer finds himself in today by reason of the fact that he is caught in a squeeze between falling farm prices and rising costs. This was dealt with during the last few days by the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool. I refer to an editorial in the Western Producer, summarizing the situation, on January 17. Mr. Wesson was dealing with the export of Canadian wheat and flour, and he said this:

The improvement in exports was reflected during part of the year in good delivery opportunities at country elevators throughout the west.

Then I leave out a few lines, not that they are not material, and continue:

These additional marketings last year have given farmers a higher cash income for 1956 than they enjoyed in 1955.

That is a higher cash income. In fact they are receiving year by year a lower net income. Then he goes on to say this:

But even on the basis of these good sales many farmers did not break even on the year's operations.

He is speaking in particular of the wheat farmer.

> The continued high cost of things needed to operate a farm and to maintain the farm family was putting the farmer in an impossible position. The price he received for his grain and other agricultural products was too low to keep the average farmer out of debt.

Then he went on to point out this:

> The improvement in income in 1956 will not bridge the gap between costs and prices as shown in 1955 figures. The result is that many farmers are dipping into reserves to keep going while other farmers are accumulating debts which will be extremely difficult to pay at present prices.

Then he said the future is bright for wheat, and ended in this way:

> The disparity between costs and prices will in all probability continue to have a serious effect on farm people throughout the coming year . . . The continued high cost of things needed to operate a farm and to maintain the farm family is putting the farmer in an impossible position.

That is something we have been bringing to the attention of the house over and over again in recent years. That was one of the reasons we have advocated—and I again advocate it—in view of the loss of our wheat markets through the actions to which I have referred, that in the interests of maintaining and extending a continued increase in our wheat marketing we should convene in Canada at the earliest possible date a British commonwealth trade conference in order to ascertain in consultation, as I expect can be achieved, whether or not we shall be able to secure a larger share of the wheat marketing within the commonwealth.

What about India? Under this scheme she has entered into an agreement with the United States to take $400 million worth of wheat and other farm products, a practical give-away. Surely if a commonwealth conference were convened such things would not be taking place. In any event, the condition would be alleviated and a larger share of the wheat market would be made available. Why not call the conference? What harm can there be in doing so? If anyone argues with me that nothing can be achieved, then I ask why it is that we send trade commissioners all over the world. Let us convene such a conference and endeavour to secure for the future some of the markets for our wheat which are being lost.

We said the same thing in 1928 and 1929, namely that the markets for wheat were being lost. If you read the speech from the throne in 1929 and 1930 you will find that the Governor General uttered words to the effect that all was well, that we had on hand and unsold more wheat than ever before. We lost our markets then as we are losing them today. We are not only losing our markets for today, but by improper practices that are countenanced by this government through its failure adequately to object, we are losing our markets for the future.

This brings to mind a further suggestion that I place before the government in connection with agriculture in general, and wheat and other farm products in particular. Now that the Supreme Court of Canada has given its judgment on the jurisdiction of the dominion parliament and the provincial legislatures in connection with agricultural boards and the like, I suggest that there should be convened a conference of dominion and provincial representatives on agriculture and also representatives of the various agricultural bodies in this country, to the end that in a community of discussion we may be able to determine a course of marketing for wheat and other farm products, and also assure that agriculture shall not continue in its present position of being caught in a squeeze between rising costs and falling farm prices.

These are but one or two suggestions. There are others I could have made, but at the moment I will rest at this point and merely say this in summary. We support the legislation continuing the wheat board. It is natural that we should do so, for we gave it birth and we have given it support throughout the years. In the second place, I suggest that the wheat board should operate as an independent body for the producers, and in no way to carry out government policy under the direction of the government to the detriment of the farmer. In the third place I suggest that in order to meet the serious challenge to our agricultural markets, and in particular our wheat markets of which I am speaking at the moment, parliament has the right to know what this government is doing. Is it whispering to the United States?

An hon. Member: It is playing golf.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is nothing on the record. Last year a question was asked as to the particulars of the protests and as to the replies given to the protests, and the minister said the protests were worded in such terms that they did not require a reply. Let us make protests that require a reply. Let us make known to the government of the United States exactly how Canadians feel about this highly improper and improvident course of action that is being followed.

Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister met with the President of the United States in balmy Georgia—

An hon. Member: He went to play golf.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and had that ride on the cart, did he tell the President of the United States what a ride the Canadian wheat farmer was receiving at the hands of the government of the United States? I tried to get that information previously, but I have not succeeded in doing so. Possibly when the minister replies he will tell us what strong words he used or what words, if any, he used, and also the degree to which the warning words have fallen on ears that have not only heard but have acted.

Again I suggest the convening of a British commonwealth trade conference in order to ascertain whether or not these markets within the commonwealth can be retrieved. When you look at the situation in Europe today you find that Britain for the first time in all her history has commenced to look to the continent of Europe for a free-trade area. In that area there will be mutual trade with six other countries. Britain is only held back by her desire not to do any harm to the agricultural products which she purchases today from various parts of the commonwealth.

What is the government doing in that regard? What will be the result if this free trade area is opened? What loss will be suffered by Canadians, and in particular by the wheat farmers? What is Canada doing in regard to this innovation in international trade on the continent of Europe to assure that her markets for wheat will not be lost there, and what is she doing in order to assure the continuance and maintenance of the British market?

Then, sir, one final suggestion is the convening now in Ottawa of representatives of the dominion and provincial departments of agriculture and of farm bodies generally. Realizing the distribution of powers between dominion and provincial governments and the limitations on the exercise of federal and provincial jurisdictions, we should act in order to do something on behalf not only of the wheat farmers but of farmers generally in all parts of Canada.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): We in this group, Mr. Speaker, will vote for second reading of the bill. We do so because we believe in an orderly system for the marketing of wheat and other grains. I listened very carefully to the remarks made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce this afternoon. When he says that the western producers almost unanimously support the wheat board, he is correct. When he says that the producers of western Canada believe the present personnel of the Canadian wheat board have done a very good job, considering all the circumstances, he is correct.

But I was disappointed that the minister did not demonstrate his own belief and the belief of the government in the good job the Canadian wheat board has been doing under these circumstances by proposing to parliament that the Canadian Wheat Board Act be made permanent legislation. Apparently the government is converted to the principle of the wheat board on a temporary basis. The minister says we are asking parliament now to consider giving the wheat board a further life of five years. We have heard a lot of talk this afternoon about a great many of the problems that face producers in the marketing of grain, but I have heard few suggestions as to what should be done to help farmers; what should be done now to put more money into the pockets of the farmers; what should be done now to see that within the next few months farmers are able to sell more grain.

We believe in the wheat board system of marketing grain. We in this group believe in it because we believe it will be more and more demonstrated that it is necessary for a government to involve itself to an even greater extent in the marketing of such commodities produced in this country. We believe in it because we believe there is an important field in this country to be occupied by public ownership and by public planning. The wheat board is part and parcel of the principles and beliefs of the members of this group. So we say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that if he himself were in fact completely sold on the principle of orderly marketing under the Canadian wheat board, he would not be proposing to parliament at this time a bill to extend the life of the Canadian wheat board another five years, but he would be presenting to parliament a bill to make the wheat board a permanent part of the economy of this country. In addition, he would be proposing that the wheat board handle oats and barley outside the Winnipeg grain exchange, and would prepare an amendment to the present act so the wheat board would be empowered as the sole marketing agency for rye and flax.

The minister has divided himself and his beliefs into two compartments. Part of the minister's belief is in the Canadian wheat board, that is true; the other part of his belief is a belief in the Winnipeg grain exchange, keeping their doors open and allowing the future market to operate to the detriment of the producers.

Producers well know just how the futures market has operated in recent months to their detriment. A year ago last fall when the farmers were selling flax they were getting just over $2 a bushel. When they decided in the spring to buy some seed to sow flax they found the price was up to $4 or $4.25. When they marketed their flax through the Winnipeg grain exchange, through the speculative market, the price was low. In the spring when they went into the market to buy flax, they found the price was high. I suggest that right now the government, if it wants the approval of he Canadian wheat and grain producers, should introduce an amendment giving the exclusive marketing of oats, flax, barley and rye to the wheat board. Then they would close the grain exchange and, in effect, put a padlock on gambling and throw away the key.

The minister is not interested in supporting a system of orderly marketing to that extent. We believe, too, there should be a system of cash advances. We supported that idea last year and we support it now. I suggest that at this moment, in this crop year, farmers are very much in need of such a system of cash advances.

Then the minister took this opportunity to condemn the report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. This commission was a child of the government, but the minister has condemned its report by a very sweeping statement to the effect that certain sections of the report are completely impracticable. I do not agree with one section at all, but perhaps for different reasons from the minister. We in this group would not be satisfied with the proposal of the royal commission that the wheat board make a guess as to the amount of wheat it would be able to accept, and then provide for an initial price based on that quantity. If marketing conditions were not good and the amount of grain the wheat board could export was not large, then the farmers' income would be very low. A further item that is not mentioned is what would happen if the wheat board were able to take more grain than they judged they would be able to accept. Would they take it at a guaranteed price or at a lower price? I think the whole section of the royal commission report dealing with agriculture generally is very inadequate and, to make a general statement, the implementation of that report would not meet the needs of the farmers in this country.

We would like to see the principles of the Canadian wheat board extended. We would like to see the government take action to improve the sales and exports of Canadian grain. A year ago the minister made a very optimistic statement to this house as to the future of wheat exports. Today he did not make any optimistic forecasts. He did not say we would be marketing, in this crop year, a much larger quantity than we did last year, or exporting a much larger quantity. All he said was that the outlook was not gloomy and went on to say that the wheat board has a difficult task.

The other day, in making a speech outside of this house, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, as reported in the Globe and Mail on January 24, had this to say on this point:

> I would mislead you, however, if I did not add that, in order to produce satisfactory results, the wheat board and all others concerned, will have to work harder than ever to sell our grain in overseas countries. Competition shows no signs whatever of abating, and the high current level of ocean freights constitutes a new and formidable problem.

We all know that the Minister of Trade and Commerce looks on everything in a very optimistic way, but in this instance he has changed. He is not painting an optimistic picture. I can only conclude that the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself feels that the near future for the marketing of wheat is very uncertain indeed. I saw a report by the Alberta wheat pool, published in the Alberta Wheat Pool Budget of January 11, which states that the reports received on future sales of wheat are discouraging. The Alberta Wheat Pool Budget goes on to say it does not appear certain at this time whether or not Canada will export during the present crop year even as much wheat as we exported last year.

Last year our exports of wheat increased considerably over the year before. In studying why we were able to sell 309 million bushels of wheat in the face of very severe competition from the United States I found there were three main reasons. The first was that there was a poor European crop. They had a very bad winter in Europe a year ago, so that sales to Europe from Canada were increased. The Argentine experienced a very poor crop, and for that reason competition from the Argentine was lessened. Probably the main reason was that last year there were very substantial quantities of wheat purchased from Canada by certain Soviet bloc countries. These exports to countries in the Soviet bloc amounted to a total of some 45 million bushels.

The picture now seems to be changing. The Argentine crop, which has just been taken off, is estimated to be something of the order of 253 million bushels as compared with 193 million bushels last year. Australia has been successful in increasing her exports from 90.6 million bushels a year ago to 130 million bushels in the most recent crop year. In this situation we see that the wheat board is experiencing some difficulty in selling and exporting Canadian wheat, even though in the current crop year the record, compared with the same period last year, has been better.

Last year, in the period from August to November, our exports were some 28 million bushels fewer than they have been in the same period this year. In that same period this year we exported 106 million bushels. The United States exported 150 million bushels, or 44 million bushels more than Canada was able to export. The Canadian Wheat Review for December, 1956, shows that for the first time since 1951, in the period from August to November, United States sales of wheat, or exports of wheat, exceeded those of Canada.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Don't use the word "sales".

Mr. Argue: "Exports" is the correct word. The United States exports of wheat exceeded those of Canada. I say these are very disturbing figures, and I believe that unless new policies are adopted, to which I shall refer later, we are in danger of losing to an even greater extent our export markets.

Where does the farmer fit into this picture? What is happening to him? It is true, as the minister says, that during the last few years he has been delivering to the elevators normal crops or something in excess of normal crops, because in that period exports have been normal or above normal. What about the price? What is the farmer being paid? None of us would like to go back—at least we have never thought we would like to go back—to the 1930's and experience the very low prices for agricultural commodities that were obtained during that period; but I notice that during the latter half of the 1930's, the period on which the cost of production index is based by the minister's own department, prices for Canadian wheat were not too bad during some of those years. From 1935 through the next five crop years the average price of No. 1 northern wheat at Fort William was $1.02 a bushel. That is to say, in the five-year period from 1935 to 1939 the average price of No. 1 northern wheat at Fort William was $1.02 a bushel.

Costs in those days were relatively low. The price index, based on 1935-1939 equals 100, is today 254, so the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat now in relation to the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat during the late 1930's is just 72 cents. In other words the price of wheat today in terms of purchasing power is 30 cents a bushel less than it was in the late 1930's.

This is the price-cost squeeze. It is because of the bad price-cost relationship that thousands of farmers on the prairies are now folding up and leaving their farms. Thousands of half and three-quarter section farmers and young farmers who started farming during the war now find they cannot make ends meet; that their income is not sufficient to cover their costs. They are leaving their farms and going to the cities.

In the period immediately following the war the prices were reasonably satisfactory and costs were much lower. For example, in 1945 the net price of No. 1 northern wheat to the farmer basis Fort William, was $1.83 a bushel. In 1957, although no one knows, probably a reasonable estimate of the net price based on current prices would be $1.65 a bushel. The purchasing power of a bushel of wheat today in relation to 1945 has dropped from $1.83 to 99 cents. It costs almost twice as much to produce a bushel of wheat today as compared with 1945, yet the actual price to the producer has dropped by 18 cents.

It is no wonder, then, that under those circumstances the head of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, Mr. J. H. Wesson, a man who is respected in the grain business, a man whose opinions are considered very carefully by the farm movement, points out that this is the most important problem facing western grain producers of this time. The Western Producer, the official organ of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, in an editorial on January 17 referring to Mr. Wesson's statement and this situation, has this to say in part:

> In point of fact the squeeze is becoming daily more pronounced as the differential between what the farmer sells and the goods he has to buy continues with every passing month to widen. Mr. Wesson, who is not noted for exaggerated or irresponsible statements in such matters, says flatly: "The continued high cost of things needed to operate a farm and to maintain the farm family is putting the farmer in an impossible position."

Because of that situation the C.C.F. believe the government should take some very definite steps. We suggest that the storage payment principle adopted last year should be extended, and that there should be paid from the national treasury funds to cover the cost of storage of all the wheat in the elevator system and on the farms. If that were done I estimate that it would increase the price of wheat to the farmer by 10 cents a bushel.

I realize that under the rules I am not allowed to make any particular reference to a previous debate, but we demonstrated in this house a few days ago our stand so far as prices for agricultural products are concerned. We laid down the principle of parity prices. We believe that the price for wheat should be increased. This increase should be brought about first of all by increasing storage payments and second by providing a parity price for wheat consumed in Canada.

We further suggest that steps should be taken to provide a parity price for wheat exported to the world's markets. This we define as a price level that would give to the grain producers of western Canada an income on 100 per cent parity with people doing comparable work in other occupations.

We believe that a system of cash advances should be adopted immediately. I agree with the request of the Saskatchewan wheat pool to the government that cash advances should be made through the elevator system. This is the policy we have been advocating for years. The Saskatchewan wheat pool pointed out it could be done by the adoption of a special financial policy on the part of the federal government to make moneys available through the elevator system. The minister does not want the wheat board involved in the making of cash advances. We have never suggested that the wheat board itself should make them; we would be perfectly happy to have the elevator agents make cash advances acting under special legislation adopted by the government.

There is a further proposal we suggest in order to provide equity among the producers themselves. We witnessed the conclusion of the last crop year with quotas sadly lacking in uniformity. Quotas were up to eight bushels at some points and down to four or five bushels at other points. If we are going to have a stable system of marketing grain surely the question of stability and orderly marketing should be extended to the quotas so they can be equitable at the end of each crop year. If it is impossible and impractical for the wheat board to make every single quota at every single marketing point precisely the same as of July 31, then we suggest that a system of adequate cash advances could remove any inequity that may stem from the quotas that exist at the end of the crop year. In other words, advances should be available to the producers which will allow farmers to obtain the same relative income as other producers, whether or not box cars happen to have been spotted at their marketing points.

The policy of this government in relation to the marketing of grain, as in many other respects, is one which has very backward aspects. This government goes under the name Liberal, but I suggest that as far as the farmers are concerned it is a reactionary government with many reactionary and backward policies. If one examines the support prices that prevail in the world one will find that there are just two or three countries that have floor prices as low as or lower than in Canada.

[Mr. Argue.]

Almost every other country in the world has long since decided that the people who farm and produce food are entitled to an equitable living on a par with people engaged in other occupations. The United States is now paying a support price of $2 a bushel, Japan $2.59 a bushel, France $2.64 a bushel, Turkey $2.91 a bushel, Norway $3.43 a bushel, Switzerland $4.03 and so on. Countries across the world have decided that adequate support prices should be implemented but this government, believing as it does in the free market system to the extent it can get away with it, continues to return to the farmer only the number of dollar bills it can obtain on the world markets.

The United States government is very directly engaged in the marketing of the grain of that country. The Republican government elected in 1952 said it was determined to get out of the wheat business, and its policy was to withdraw any government control of agricultural commodities. Today the Republican administration of the United States is more deeply involved in the marketing of agricultural commodities than any previous Democratic government had been. The United States are grabbing the wheat markets of the world.

Much has been said in criticism of the policies of the United States government in this regard. I have some information concerning the large quantities of wheat the United States government has been able to dispose of under its various policies. I doubt if many hon. members realize the large degree to which the United States has corralled the present wheat markets of the world. The information I have obtained indicates that under title I of public law 480 the United States since 1954 has contracted for the sale of 2,073 million bushels of wheat. Under section 402 of public law 665 concerning the acceptance of defence material the United States has sold $393 million worth of wheat. Under title 2 of public law 480, which is the gift section involving the provision of food in the event of famine, approximately 40 million bushels of wheat have been exported. All in all under these policies the United States as I understand it has contracted and agreed to the sale of some 2,200 million or 2,300 million bushels of wheat.

I suggest that even if the government sent the entire cabinet to Washington to protest the actions of the United States under these policies nothing could be accomplished because the damage has already been done. Even if the United States were asked to break its contractual obligations with importing countries the answer of that country is bound to be in the negative. There is no hope for us this way. We can merely protest, saying we do not like it. I suggest we can shout as loud as possible and make as much noise as we like, but it will probably not result in the sale of an additional bushel of wheat.

The United States has corralled some of Canada's best markets. The United States has entered the Brazilian market, and has a three-year contract for the sale of $200 million worth of wheat to India. The Indian market is in large part already lost to Canada. Last year we were able to develop an additional market in iron curtain countries. Last year during the first nine months we sold to Poland, Russia and Czechoslovakia a total of $60.4 million of products, mainly wheat. During the same period we imported from those countries a mere $6.1 million worth of goods. I am now wondering if the difference between the export and import figures explains why these countries have not so far this year purchased any wheat from Canada. Certainly it will be impossible for Canada to continue selling to these countries ten times as much as we are prepared to import from them.

It is for this reason that hon. members of this group say the time has come for this government to adopt new policies governing the sale of wheat and other commodities. We suggest once again as we have so often suggested in the past that the government should be prepared to accept local currency from any country that might want to buy our wheat. We should agree not to turn the local currency into dollars but to block it in that country and be prepared to use it in the future for the purchase of goods produced in that country, or for investment in the countries which have purchased our wheat.

We think that is a sensible policy. We think that is a policy which will increase our sales. We think that is a policy which will return us something for the wheat which we have to sell. We suggest further that it is not good enough to sell wheat to countries which may wish to buy it from us on a contractual basis. We suggest that we should be prepared to say to Russia, Czechoslovakia and Poland, "If you are prepared to buy our wheat we will agree to purchase substantial quantities of the goods you produce so you can keep on being a good market for our products." I am afraid that if we continue to say to the nations of the world, "We will sell only if you pay hard money" we will continue to experience great difficulty in the selling of our wheat. The danger is that the United States may grab more and more of the markets we have enjoyed.

To sum up, I suggest that there are at least six practical things the government could do now, things that are not just talk, not just window dressing, but acts by the government which would benefit the agricultural producers in Canada.

First, I suggest that the government should extend the operations of the wheat board to cover the marketing of oats, barley, flax and rye in their entirety, and thus bring about the final closing of the Winnipeg grain exchange.

Second, I suggest that the government should extend the principle of paying storage on grain, such storage to be paid on all wheat held in the elevator system and to farmers who store wheat on their farms.

Third, I suggest that a system of advance payments should be adopted so as to give to each producer in western Canada the same income per acre as his neighbour, irrespective of what quotas may exist at the end of the crop year.

Fourth, the government should adopt a system of parity prices that would guarantee the people engaged in the agricultural industry 100 per cent parity of income as compared with people engaged in comparable occupations.

Fifth, I suggest that in order to improve exports of Canadian grain we should be prepared to accept local currencies of countries willing to buy our grain.

Sixth, I suggest that Canada should stand prepared to make bilateral trade contracts in order to guarantee good customers for Canadian wheat that Canada in turn will be a good customer for their commodities.

I submit that if this type of program were adopted it would greatly increase Canadian sales of wheat; it would restore Canada's position in the international markets of the world, and it would bring to our wheat producers a quality of income as compared with people in other industries.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, we in the Social Credit group will support the second reading of Bill No. 9, to extend the operations of the wheat board as the sole marketing agency for wheat for another five years. There is no doubt that the majority of farmers do support the wheat board as the sole marketing agency for their grain, and they are asking that flax and rye should be brought under the act. I suggest that the main reason for that is that rye and flax are under quota now. A wide variation in prices has developed, and the farmers want to have the same stability in the marketing of those grains that they have in the marketing of wheat, oats and barley under the wheat board.

I think we are fortunate in the type of men we have had at the head of the wheat board, and I have in mind particularly Mr. McIvor. I think it speaks very well that in spite of the difficult times the grain growers have been going through the wheat board is still endorsed by them as the sole marketing agency for their grain. I think the reason for that is that the farmers realize their difficulties are not due to the fact that their grain is marketed through the wheat board, but rather to the failure of the government to cope with the difficult problem of surpluses.

Hon. members on all sides of the house have stressed the fact that agriculture is a depressed industry. It has been stated on many occasions that the net income in 1955 was down 45 per cent from 1951. I am well aware of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture does not consider that a fair comparison because the 1951 income was at the peak; but it is also interesting to note, as has been pointed out by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, that today farm prices are 6 per cent lower than they were in 1949, while farm costs are 20 per cent higher. That indicates the type of cost-price squeeze the farmers are in. No one can suggest that farm prices in 1949 were anywhere near their peak; they were at a quite reasonable level.

In my opinion the depressed condition of agriculture is due largely, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said, to the number of large crops harvested in the west. It is due in part also to the fact that we have lost certain markets to the United States, which has resulted in surpluses which in turn have had a depressing effect upon prices. I think the important question that must be dealt with is just how much production do we want. Does the government want a high level of production maintained? From the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that would certainly appear to be the case, and I think he is right.

It will be remembered that last year he said he hoped we would have a bumper crop in 1956. Well, we did have a bumper crop, which helped to increase the problem of the government in marketing.

Mr. Blackmore: And the problem of the farmers.

Mr. Quelch: I believe it was during this session that the Minister of Agriculture referred to the drought in the United States and suggested that we might be faced with one in Canada in the near future, and for that reason it was most important that we have a substantial reserve of grain on hand in the event of a crop failure. So I would agree with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture that it is desirable to maintain at all times a substantial reserve of grain in this country.

Another reason why we should maintain a substantial reserve is the fact that there is still a lot of hunger in the world. Hon. members will remember that last year the North American representative of FAO, speaking before the Senate, pointed out that 50 per cent of the population of the world were still undernourished and that millions were on the verge of starvation. Then he pointed out that these people realize today that this situation is not necessary. Those people who are on the verge of starvation know there are large surpluses of food in many countries. They are no longer prepared to see their loved ones starve while that food in some cases is rotting away. No doubt that situation is largely responsible for the wave of unrest sweeping the east today.

Just how large is this surplus? We hear comments about the surplus or the reserve we have that would make you think it was absolutely gigantic. I should like to quote from the Alberta budget of November 9 where under the heading "How big is the surplus?" it states:

> The Canadian Bank of Commerce recently termed the wheat carryover as "astronomical".
> There is no doubt that under our pattern of trade and distribution the situation is serious but the volume is inclined to impress us beyond its real proportions. We see the figures 1½ billion bushel world carryover as almost the equivalent to the entire normal export figure for a one and a half year period. We overlook the fact that the world population is also astronomical. There are over two and a half billion people and in terms of food reserves we have only 36 pounds of wheat per person. In the United States, where flour consumption is moderate, 190 pounds of wheat a year per person is consumed. For much of the world population wheat is unobtainable but the annual consumption is in the neighbourhood of 6 billion bushels. A one and a half billion bushel surplus is the equivalent to a three month supply for this wheat-eating section.
> Awkward as wheat carryovers may be to world trade, a 90-day reserve supply of such an important food commodity does not seem unreasonable. Few livestock men would care to operate on a narrower margin of basic feed reserves. The human race should be able to design an economy that would permit it to carry some assurance against emergency food depletion without causing a marketing breakdown and penalizing the producer.

I think most of us would agree with the reasonableness of that statement, but unfortunately there are many eastern newspapers that do not seem to appreciate the situation and talk of this reserve as being a tremendous calamity. If it is in the national interest that the farmers produce enough to provide a fairly substantial reserve, then I maintain it should be a national responsibility to provide storage for that reserve, to pay the carrying charges on it, to make advances against grain that has to be held on the farm as a consequence of our storage being full of that reserve, and to maintain a support price under wheat on account of the fact that the reserve is having a tendency to depress prices.

Last session we passed a bill under which the government agreed to pay the carrying costs on wheat carried over in excess of 178 million bushels. The Minister of Trade and Commerce pointed out that the annual cost could not exceed a certain figure, due to the fact that our total storage space was being employed and there could not very well be an increase in storage costs to the government. But unfortunately it appears that the government is taking action to prevent those charges increasing, by curtailing storage in Canada. Of course the minister knows I have in mind the fact that last year and the year before, when many farmers and businessmen in western Canada realized they would not be able to deliver very much wheat, they took the initiative in building additional storage at country points. That was known as off-site storage, and in that way they were able to build that storage, rent it to the elevators and then deliver their wheat there.

Unfortunately the government decided last year to refuse to licence any more off-site storage and that, of course, has helped to complicate the situation in the west. There is undoubtedly an urgent need for increased terminal storage. Every farm organization has asked that terminal storage be increased. When the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was before the committee on agriculture last year their officials emphasized the need for additional terminal storage. They pointed out that it was needed in order to relieve congestion, and that it would ease the problem of deliveries of grain both incoming and outgoing.

If it is agreed that reserves are desirable, and if it is not the intention of the government to expand our storage so that additional deliveries can be made, with the result that the farmers have to hold large amounts of wheat on their farms, some system of cash advances is absolutely essential. It has been urged by every farm organization. It has been urged by the interprovincial farm union, it has been urged by the western conference, and it has been urged by the different pool organizations. It is well to remember that a similar system is in operation in the United States, has been in operation for a number of years, and has proved quite successful.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce pointed out that actually there was no difference between that system and off-site storage, because the farmers could deliver their grain to the off-site storage and get interim payments from the grain companies. The trouble is that the government now refuses to licence any more off-site storage, so we have not anything similar to what exists in the United States. That has been disallowed by the government, perhaps on the recommendation of the board of grain commissioners, but anyway the members of the government are the ones who have to take the responsibility for that action.

No doubt the minister will say that while they are not making advances against grain stored on the farms they did pass legislation to make it possible for farmers to get loans from the chartered banks. For a number of reasons that legislation cannot be considered satisfactory. In the first place, in many cases the amount is altogether inadequate. Second, there is an interest charge which many feel should not have to be paid when the money is advanced against grain that has to be held on the farm because our terminals are full of the reserve of wheat which is needed. Third, and I think this is probably the main criticism—it is the main one I would make—there is the fact that the farmers are not able to get a second loan from the chartered banks unless they repay their first loan.

It stands to reason that if a farmer cannot deliver wheat he is not able to repay the loan he got last year. There are many farmers who got loans last year who were able to deliver only a small quantity of wheat, who were not able to repay their loans and who need loans now but cannot get them for that very reason. Although the minister gave us some assurance last year that preference would be given this year to those farmers who were not able to make deliveries equal to the top quota deliveries last year, unfortunately that is not working out. I made a survey of a number of points in my constituency where at July 31 last year the delivery quota was set at 5 bushels. I find that a large number of points that were on a 5-bushel quota in July of last year are still at the bottom this year. They only have a 1-bushel quota, whereas other points have a 3-bushel quota and in some cases 4 bushels.

We have been told that the C.P.R. is to blame for that situation, but so far as my constituency is concerned it is practically all C.N.R. Even on the C.N.R. we have points only 18 miles apart, and at the one point they are on the initial delivery unit of 300 bushels while at the other point they have a 3-bushel quota. There does not seem to be any sense or reason in that situation.

It is all very well to say that the reason is that at the point where they have the low quota they have not the right kind of grain, but I have found that is not a fact. I made a very close survey of that question, and I found that at a number of local points where the quota was low they had exactly the same grade that was being shipped from the high delivery points. I took this up with the wheat board by letter and they did take action to rectify the situation at some of the points. But even now, though they have got a few cars in there to raise the quota of the low points perhaps by a full one bushel or two, they are still well below other points.

I think that is a situation the government will have to take some action to rectify. It is bound to strain the loyalty of people to the wheat board when a situation like that continues. They blame the wheat board for the situation sometimes, but I really do not think the fault lies there at all. The minister has said some rather harsh things about the Gordon commission. I frankly admit that I did not like the report of the Gordon commission so far as agriculture is concerned. I think there are some good points in it and there are some poor ones, but at least at one point the Gordon commission does recognize the fact that the farmers should have some assurance that they will be able to get a minimum income. In other words, they say that when it is agreed that a certain quota should be in force, the wheat board should pay the farmers for the undelivered grain if the board is not in a position to accept delivery of that quota. If that policy had been in force last July it would have gone a long way to do away with the complaint that was being made at that time. I think the government should give serious consideration to a policy of that kind; that is to say, if by July 31 it is not possible to equalize quotas, then advances should be made to the farmers on the grain that has not been delivered in line with the top quotas.

On the question of support prices, we in the Social Credit group for a number of years have been advocating the adoption of the two-price system. We have been advocating it ever since 1950. When we first advocated such a system we pointed out that it is in line with the general practice of secondary industries. Secondary industries set a price for the products sold in Canada at a level that will give them a fair return on their investment. Then on the goods they ship abroad they seek to get the best price they can.

There are times when those goods which are shipped abroad are sold at a price lower than that for which the goods are sold in Canada. I remember that some years ago I checked on the sales of farm machinery by a Canadian manufacturer, and I found that in England they were selling their machines at prices considerably lower than those at which they were selling the same machines in Canada. In other words, they were operating under a two-price system.

It seems only reasonable that a similar system should be adopted by agriculture. Apart from wheat, about 94 per cent of all farm products is sold in Canada, but we allow that small 6 per cent that is exported abroad to set the price for the other 94 per cent. It appears to me that there is little sense or reason in allowing a situation of that kind to exist. Therefore those people who advocate the adoption of the two-price system are merely advocating that the farm products sold in the domestic market should be sold at parity, or in other words at a price that bears a fair relationship to the prices of other commodities; and that that portion exported abroad should be sold, preferably under international agreement, for the best price that can be obtained, with a support under it to insure the exporter against a price collapse.

It is interesting to note that today every major farm organization is advocating the adoption of a two-price system. At the western agricultural conference held in Winnipeg from January 21 to January 25 this resolution was adopted:

> A two-price system establishing prices on all farm products at a fair relationship level for the domestic market and floor prices at non-incentive levels.

It will go the Canadian Federation of Agriculture from that conference. Then the Alberta wheat pool, according to the Wheat Pool Budget, issue of December 14, 1956, stated this:

> Two Price System
> Alberta wheat pool delegates have passed a resolution calling for a two-price system of selling wheat. They urged that wheat used for domestic consumption in Canada be sold at the ceiling level of the international wheat agreement, namely, $2 a bushel, and that exports be made at world prices which are somewhat below this level.

The Saskatchewan wheat pool advocate a domestic price for wheat used in Canada for human consumption in line with other Canadian prices—that is $2 a bushel—and then deficiency payments from the treasury of Canada to bring the agricultural producers a fair share of the national income when the prices of farm produce do not achieve that end. The exports would be supported. The interprovincial farm union council, in a brief which they put before the federal-provincial agricultural conference, December 3-6, 1956, had this to say:

Parity Prices

We believe that immediate consideration should be given to a program of parity prices on the domestic market and adequate support prices under exports.

In other words they are advocating that the domestic market should pay a parity price and that the world market price with adequate supports be accepted for that portion that has to be exported abroad.

I know the Minister of Trade and Commerce has taken quite strong exception to that suggestion. When the interprovincial farm union council appeared before the committee on agriculture and colonization on June 17, 1952, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, commenting on the proposal to apply the two-price system to wheat, had this to say as reported on page 538 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee:

I can make it plain that as a matter of government policy the Canadian government will not tax the consumers of this country to bonus the wheat producers of western Canada.

Let me point out that the domestic price at parity is no more a tax than is the price charged by secondary industries. They charge a price that gives them fair return on their investment.

Mr. Blackmore: More than fair.

Mr. Quelch: Under parity prices the farmer would receive a price that bore a fair relationship to the prices of secondary industries, so that by no stretch of the imagination could you call that a tax.

Let me point out that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is on somewhat dangerous ground when he suggests that a policy of that kind would be a tax on the consumers of this country. The government did not hesitate to tax the wheat growers some years ago for the benefit of the Canadian consumers. Let us remember that during the operation of the British wheat agreement the western grain growers were compelled to sell their wheat or to have their wheat sold to the millers for the Canadian consumer at a price considerably below the world market price, a price which was at the same level as under the British wheat agreement. That action of subsidizing the Canadian consumer at that time cost the farmers of western Canada $136 million.

Some people say they do not think the farmers are justified in expecting the people of Canada to agree to support prices of agricultural products. There are a number of reasons why the farmers are entitled to that support price. One can go back to 1943, the time at which the ceilings were placed on products, and recall that the then prime minister stated as follows:

If, to help win the war, the farmers are asked to accept a ceiling on prices, we believe they are entitled to a floor under prices to ensure them against an agricultural depression after the war. As an essential part of its post-war policy, the government intends to ask parliament at the next session to place a floor under the prices of main farm commodities.

Would anybody suggest that wheat is not one of the main farm products in this country? Yet strangely enough there is no support price under wheat today because wheat is not covered by the agricultural Prices Support Act.

One might ask whether or not the price of wheat today is a fair one. In the first place, what would parity be? If the price of wheat today were maintained at parity level, according to the bureau of statistics—and I obtained these figures last week—it would be $2.37 a bushel. That is to say, if the formula that is used under the Agricultural Prices Support Act were used to cover wheat, the price would be $2.37 a bushel.

Let us recall that under the Agricultural Prices Support Act we use the base period 1943, 1944 and 1945, and then say the price of farm products today should bear the same relationship to the prices of other commodities as they existed in the 1943, 1944 and 1945 period. If that were put into execution in regard to wheat prices, wheat today would be $2.37 a bushel. Instead of that, the price of No. 1 wheat to the farmer is, I suppose, around $1.53 by the time you pay the freight to Fort William, or $1.70 at Fort William. So when you compare the price farmers are getting for their wheat with parity prices we find there is a very substantial difference, and that the farmers are losing quite heavily in regard to the promise that was made by the prime minister back in 1943.

Whilst the price of No. 1 wheat is about $1.70, let hon. members not forget that many farmers today, in order to try to get some income are selling their wheat for as low as 60 or 65 cents a bushel in western Canada, that is No. 5 or No. 6 wheat. If a farmer is up against it and cannot sell his wheat to the elevators, then he looks around for a market for his feed wheat. He can sell his feed wheat if he takes 60 or 65 cents a bushel for it, but that is a heavy loss the farmer should not have to take. It is a loss he would not have to take if the government would introduce a policy of advances against grain stored on the farm.

Practically every other country is supporting the price of wheat. It is not surprising that Professor Hope, when he was asked in the banking and commerce committee if he knew of any other country doing less for farmers than Canada, answered no. I would say that low prices are the main cause of the farmers' plight today. Apparently the Minister of Finance is opposed to support prices. I suppose the Minister of Finance has quite a bit to say regarding policies the execution of which cost money. In the Western Producer of December 13, 1956, there is a quotation taken from the Financial Post. I shall read it.

> Finance Minister Walter Harris deserves a good deal of credit for speaking plainly on an important subject in Toronto last week. He came out clearly and strongly against a policy of government farm price supports. "We are close enough to the American experience", said Mr. Harris, "to realize that certain policies offer no solution to our problems."

It is quite a popular pastime with certain ministers of this government to criticize the policies of the United States under which surplus products have been marketed. I would say that the program in the United States, instead of being a failure, has been a gigantic success when you realize the purpose behind it. Let us go back to the end of the war and the Hot Springs conference of FAO, when apparently we all had high ideals. Let us recall the declaration that was made at that time by the member nations, and let me quote section No. 3:

> There has never been enough food for the health of all people. This is justified neither by ignorance nor by the harshness of nature. Production of food must be greatly expanded; we now have knowledge of the means by which this can be done. It requires imagination and firm will on the part of each government and people to make use of that knowledge.

That was back in 1943, I think. I believe we will all agree that the United States addressed themselves to that problem. They took energetic action to build up their production, and they were successful in building it up. They built it up at a faster rate than the FAO or other United Nations organizations were able to distribute it.

The FAO did a lot of very valuable work in trying to establish an organization which would have the responsibility for distributing surplus food to needy nations. First of all we had the suggestion for a world food board. Then we had the suggestion for an international commodity clearing house, and I think that was the best suggestion put forward by the FAO organization.

The Canadian government, along with others, turned down the proposal. I would say that probably one of the main reasons they turned it down was that it embodied the idea of the acceptance of foreign currency in payment for surpluses. In any event, the FAO were not successful in getting other nations to accept their proposals, and consequently each nation was left with the responsibility of disposing of its surpluses. The United States, in carrying out the request of the FAO to build up their production, had built up tremendous surpluses, and these surpluses were left on their doorstep.

On the other side of the picture you had half the population of the world hungry or on the verge of starvation. The United States, and I think it is to their credit, found ways and means of getting that surplus food to the people who needed it. What did we do? Instead of complimenting them upon getting this food to the people who needed it we did nothing but criticize them. Why did we criticize them? We did so from purely selfish reasons, because that action interfered with our own markets. I would suggest that instead of criticizing the United States for what they have been doing we should be prepared to do likewise, and get our surplus food to the nations that need it.

I should like to refer the Minister of Trade and Commerce to a statement made by Right Hon. A. B. Low, minister of state for the British board of trade, regarding sterling. We have had quite a few discussions on the question of the acceptance of sterling. The minister always emphasizes the fact that if we accepted sterling we would not be able to do anything with it. Let me quote from the Western Producer of October 11, 1956:

> Pound sterling accepted by Canadian exporters for sales to Britain, can be used for purchases of goods anywhere in the sterling area, Right Hon. A. B. Low, minister of state in the British board of trade, told the Western Producer in an interview at Edmonton last week.

That is all I am going to say on that point now, but that points out that sterling would not be quite such a useless commodity as the Minister of Trade and Commerce tried to make out last year, when he said you could not even buy a necktie with it. Certainly the United States is making its surplus production available to the nations that need it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I did not notice on what date that statement was made by Mr. Low.

Mr. Quelch: October 11, 1956.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I suggest that may be the reason he is not in the present government.

Mr. Quelch: The minister can suggest that, but that does not mean the suggestion has any validity. The minister makes some queer suggestions once in a while.

Mr. Studer: Not half as queer as yours.

Mr. Quelch: After the speech the hon. member made the other day, he should keep quiet.

Mr. Studer: You will be hearing another one.

Mr. Quelch: The hon. member had better read the speech the hon. member for Red Deer made, and then send it out to his constituents along with the one he made.

Mr. Studer: He confirmed everything I said.

An hon. Member: You said nothing.

Mr. Quelch: If the government consider that the reserves we have built up are too high and that reserves should be reduced; if they do not think it would be wise to build the reserve any higher, then I think they might well give consideration to the recommendation that is now being made by most of the farm organizations. That is that an inducement should be given to farmers to take land out of wheat production and plant it to soil-building crops.

We see what they are doing in the United States in that regard in the soil bank. We had somewhat similar legislation in Canada during the war, namely the Wheat Acreage Reduction Act, which encouraged farmers to put land into grasses and clover. If at the present time we feel that we are raising too much wheat and that in a short time there will be an increased demand, well, it might be a good thing to conserve the fertility of that soil by putting some of the land into grasses and clovers, so when the time comes that we need additional supplies of wheat that land will be in a good fertile state. It can then be broken up and once again put into wheat. I would suggest to the minister that consideration might be given to this idea.

I see my time is up. When we get into committee I shall have a number of questions to ask.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the hon. member for Assiniboia has made an excellent speech. I understood the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre had planned to speak, but apparently the subject has been covered so thoroughly that he has decided to wait until some other occasion.

Mr. Thatcher: I am waiting for you.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that since there has been no opposition to the principle of marketing through the wheat board, the Minister of Trade and Commerce should give careful consideration to the suggestion made by my colleague that we should set up permanent legislation. I should like to remind the Minister of Trade and Commerce that some two years ago, as a matter of fact on March 10, 1955, we had a certain Defence Production Act before parliament. The Prime Minister said at that time, as reported at page 1905 of Hansard:

> It is felt that the time has come when the life of the department should be extended by placing it on the same basis as other government departments, leaving it to parliament to decide if and when it will be proper to bring it to a termination.

During the same debate the minister who was piloting this bill said, as reported at page 1967 of Hansard.

> There is no need for me to repeat the remarks of the Prime Minister on the need for a more permanent basis for the department in order to attract and retain the type of person needed to carry out the very responsible procurement functions of the future. I would, however, like to say something of the way in which the procurement functions have been carried out.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if it was sound business to bring in legislation two years ago with a view to attracting and retaining the best possible personnel, surely we have reached the stage when we should make it clear that we are accepting the wheat board method of marketing not only the grains marketed at the present time but all cereals that enter into the export trade. They should all be handled by the wheat board.

I would like to endorse what has been said by the hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member for Acadia regarding the outstanding personnel of the wheat board. I agree with their views. I would like to add the name of Mr. C. B. Davidson, the secretary. Mr. Davidson and I were in university together some years ago. He was regarded as one of the outstanding students at the university, and his outstanding work since then has attracted a good deal of favourable comment. I am sure that men like Mr. McIvor and Mr. Davidson would not have any trouble in finding other employment if it was decided that we should do away with the wheat board, but I think the work these men have done would warrant this parliament passing legislation now indicating that the Canadian Wheat Board Act will be permanent legislation; that it will not be subject to review every five years, and these people will not be held in suspense.

I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would not suggest that we go back to the type of marketing we had in Canada when we had the last Conservative government in office here. I hold in my hand a clipping from the Manitoba Co-operator giving the fluctuations in prices of wheat over a number of years. I find that when the Conservatives were in power we had a fluctuation in the price of wheat between 50 cents and $1 in 1930; 51 cents and 73 cents in 1931; 39 cents and 94 cents in 1932; 54 cents and 87 cents in 1933; 75 cents and 94 cents in 1934; and 73 cents and $1.03 in 1935. I have left off the fractions. I am sure it would be very unpopular for them to suggest that that is the type of marketing our wheat people would like to have, so they would have a high price one day and a low price the next day.

Mr. Charlton: We had a better average price during that period than we had from 1935 to 1940.

Mr. Nicholson: The point I am making is that the farmers do not want to be in the position where the speculators are able to make fortunes out of the fluctuations in prices.

Mr. Charlton: The Leader of the Opposition never suggested that.

Mr. Nicholson: If you will calculate the prices I think you will find that from 1935 to 1940 they were higher; but if the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand is opposed to the wheat board legislation—

Mr. Tustin: You heard the Leader of the Opposition say this afternoon we were absolutely in favour of it.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the member for Brant-Haldimand never suggested, nor did the Leader of the Opposition suggest this afternoon, that we were opposed in any way to the wheat board. Let that be clear.

Mr. Nicholson: I am glad the record is straight.

Mr. Charlton: You are just trying to clutter it up.

Mr. Nicholson: There is not going to be any attempt to turn back the clock and have the farmers in the position where they would be at the mercy of the speculators on the grain exchange, who managed to have a very low price when the farmers sold their grain and then a fairly high price later on in the year so the speculators could make their fortunes.

This table goes away back to 1918. I am not going to give all the years, but it is interesting to see that before the war we had a high of $1.16 and a low of 78 cents in 1913. The next year we had a high of $1.64 and a low of 94 cents. The following year we had a high of $1.61 and a low of 88 cents, and then a high of $3 and a low of $1.54, in 1916. Therefore, after the experience we had before the war, during world war I and world war II and since world war II, I think the producers in all parts of Canada are expecting the government to provide not only for the orderly marketing of wheat, oats and barley, but to see to it that flax and rye are handled by the wheat board, and even before this legislation is passed to bring in the necessary amendments to set up permanent legislation.

Other members who have spoken have referred to the position in which the wheat farmers find themselves, when their product is being sold in the world markets in the face of unfair competition, from our point of view. We are quite prepared to sell our commodity on the basis of quality any place in the world if we are able to buy those items which enter into the cost of production in a fair market; but it is quite impossible for us to buy in the highest priced market in the world and sell in competition with other countries which are directly and indirectly subsidizing their wheat producers.

The Department of Agriculture publishes a pamphlet called "Agriculture Abroad" every two or three months. The one for December discussed agriculture in a great many countries. I shall refer to a few of them. The price in the Argentine is not too high, but there is a subsidy of 36 cents a bushel there. Wheat is sold to millers at 72.9 cents a bushel, but the farmers are getting $1.09. Costs are much lower in the Argentine, but there is a subsidy there of 36 cents a bushel. There is an interesting section dealing with Egypt. It is pointed out that the plan is for Egypt not to have to import wheat. Canada exported wheat and wheat flour to Egypt in 1952 and 1953, but apparently this market is going to cease to be available.

The hon. member for Assiniboia referred to the situation in France. France is paying a price much higher than our farmers receive. France is determined to be in the export business. France exported some 60 million bushels on which they paid a subsidy of $1.60 a bushel. It is difficult for Canadian wheat to be sold in markets where subsidies of that kind are paid. The price in France is $2.93. If the French farmers can get $2.93 and sell their wheat in other countries under a subsidy, this offers very stiff competition.

It appears that agricultural problems in West Germany have received careful consideration. Plans have been worked out and legislation introduced with a view to greatly increasing West Germany's production, particularly of cereals.

While the position of the Mexican farmer resembles the position of the Canadian farmer and those in a few other countries of the world, Mexico is recognizing that her farmers are receiving a pretty rough deal. Approximately 30 million people in Mexico make a living by farming; they comprise almost 60 per cent of the total population, and receive about 30 per cent of the national income.

That is running pretty true to form as far as Canada is concerned. The Mexican farmer receives about half as much as he should receive. It is extremely interesting that our government is concerned about making available information about the difficulties confronting farmers in countries like Mexico and outlines some of the plans that are being made. I am sure there is no easy solution anywhere for the crisis confronting agriculture, but some of these countries are facing the difficulty and attempting to reach a solution.

There is an interesting portion dealing with the United Kingdom containing no mention of wheat, so I will come to the United States. As the hon. member for Assiniboia pointed out, the United States is presenting real competition to us. The soil bank program in the United States is a scheme devised to put some money into the pockets of the farmers. The program for 1956-57 calls for the payment of $197,-651,000 in connection with this one program alone.

There is also an interesting section concerning the United States barter program. From July to September of last year the value of the negotiated barter contracts stood at over $64 million compared with $43 million the previous year. Under title I of public law 480 an agreement amounting to $98 million has been signed with Yugoslavia, and one of the main commodities involved is wheat. It is expected that 61.1 million bushels of United States wheat will be going to Yugoslavia on a local currency sale basis. The export of United States agricultural commodities totalled over $130 million during the July-September period, wheat being one of the major commodities. In the United States they are devoting a great deal of time to considering the critical position of the farmers in that country with a view to giving them a better break.

There is also a publication on the marketing and transportation situation, which points out that the farmers' share of the consumer dollar which stood at 40 per cent during the 1935 to 1939 period picked up to about 52 per cent in 1946, and has declined year by year until it is now down to 39 per cent. That posed a real problem.

While the farm bill was being discussed in the United States Senate, a senator from Arkansas went back to the days of the ancient Romans and asked what was the cause of the decline and fall of Rome. In his answer he pointed out the decay of Rome quite certainly began when the hardy farm citizens whose valour had made Rome great ceased to be able to maintain themselves and their families by farming their small holdings. He said that in hardly more than a generation over great areas of Italy the family-size farms were swept away, making way for vast consolidated, slave-operated absentee-capitalist holdings that were the equivalent in those days of what we now call industrialized farms.

The senator went on to say that the people who are not prosperous in the United States are the folk on the family-size farms. They are so unprosperous, in fact, that the United States is virtually beginning to be divided into two nations. A single statistic tells the story. Per capita farm income has now declined to the level of $860 a year, whereas the per capita income of Americans off the farm now stands at the level of $1,922. Farm folk are much less than half as well off as other folk in the United States.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when the authorities in the very rich country to the south recognize that they have a farm problem; when they bring in legislation to provide money for a soil bank program and carry on barter sales and negotiate for the acceptance of soft currencies, the Minister of Trade and Commerce who is piloting this measure through the house should not be too complacent. He should not be satisfied because this is the best marketing agency that has been devised in Canada or anywhere in the world. The legislation must be tested and weighed against the question as to whether it is doing everything that reasonably can be expected.

I notice that it is five o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I would like to continue my remarks at a later period.

PRIVATE BILLS

TRANS MOUNTAIN OIL PIPE LINE COMPANY

Mr. F. T. Fairey (Victoria, B.C.) moved the second reading of Bill No. 15, respecting Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that these bills have just come in. I tried to obtain them earlier in the afternoon but they were not available. Under those circumstances I suggest that an attempt should not be made now to proceed with the debate. There may or may not be something controversial in the bills, but at least we are entitled to examine them and find out what they are all about. That has been quite impossible with regard to the three bills that are on the list today.

Mr. Fairey: Under the circumstances I am prepared to allow the bill to stand.

Private Bills

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Bill No. 15 stands.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. John M. James (for Mr. McIlraith) moved the second reading of Bill No. 16, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company and certain wholly-owned subsidiaries.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I do not know whether this is exactly the same type of bill as was presented at the last session, but if it is perhaps there is no reason why it should not be gone on with although the sponsor is not here.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): My remarks apply also to this bill. We have not had a chance to consider it, and I think it is only fair that it should be allowed to stand.

Mr. James: This bill is almost exactly the same as the one presented last year and I think the hon. member would be familiar with it. There is nothing complicated about it. It is strictly to amalgamate several wholly-owned Canadian Pacific subsidiaries for purposes of economy and better administration.

Mr. Green: It is not exactly the same, because it involves a different set of subsidiary companies. I presume they are located in different parts of the country, and it may be that some hon. member will desire to say something about one or more of these particular subsidiary companies. I suggest that it is a bad practice to have bills go through without anyone having a chance to look at them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I hope the house will appreciate my position as I understand it; that is, that as occupant of the Speaker's chair I have no right to order bills to be stood when they appear in the regular way on the order paper. Of course the sponsor of a bill has the right to request that it be allowed to stand, and such request is usually acceded to by the house. I do not know whether it is my duty to outline the procedure, but alternately if the sponsor of a bill proceeds it is open to any hon. member to move the adjournment of the debate at any stage after the bill has been introduced. Perhaps I could ask the hon. member for Durham, whom I am advised is representing the sponsor of this bill, whether it is his desire to proceed or to have the bill stand.

Mr. James: If the hon. member does not wish to proceed it is perfectly all right with me to have it stand.

[Mr. Fairey.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Bill No. 16 stands. I take it that all divorce bills on the order paper are to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The business set down under private and public bills having been completed, the house will resume consideration of the business interrupted at five o'clock.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND EXPIRY DATE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) for the second reading of Bill No. 9, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, some reference was made this afternoon to the preliminary report of the Gordon commission. I do not think anyone agrees with everything in the report, but it is significant that it was considered necessary to devote a separate section to wheat. I think it is disturbing that the best authorities seem to accept the fact that Canada's part in supplying wheat for bread for the hungry peoples of the world is not going to increase. I think most people throughout the world had hoped that in the brave new world which followed the second world war we would attack in an imaginative way the problem of hunger, and that our great wheat fields would be cultivated and food would be sent to those other countries.

The forecast is that our combined export and domestic demand will be between 400 million and 500 million bushels per annum, compared with 385 million bushels in the 20's; 330 million bushels in the 30's; 393 million bushels in the 40's; and an average of 525 million bushels during the seven years 1950-56. It is true that the target of between 400 million and 475 million bushels is a good deal more than our total when the Canadian and world populations were much smaller, but I think it is disturbing that apparently there is going to be no attempt to reach the average established in 1950-56 of 525 million bushels per year.

The federal authorities should make a decision well in advance of seeding as to the quantity of grain which would be expected, and it should decide something about the price. I would remind the house that the minister who is piloting this bill through the house is also charged with defence production. Some time ago he told us that the CF-105 was going to cost $120 million. Apparently he was wrong, because we are now told it will cost over $200 million before the first CF-105 comes off the assembly line. We are told that in connection with guided missiles we had spent some $24 million when it was concluded that this was too big a project for Canada, that it would be left to the United States to spend money on the development of guided missiles. We have recently completed the construction of the mid-Canada radar line at a cost of another $200 million.

It seems to me that if this minister is prepared to spend $200 million for a plane and $200 million for a radar line, he could ask his colleagues to use their imagination in order that Canada may not go out of the production and exporting of this important commodity, which in my view could be used more effectively in winning friends for the free countries. I think the proposal that the farmer should have some indication as to what the requirements are going to be and how much the economy will stand is a good one.

It is disturbing to be told that our farm population, which stood at 25 per cent of the total at the end of the war, is now reduced to 15 per cent and will be further reduced to about half that in the next 25 years. I submit that the minister in his capacity of minister in charge of the wheat board should give the board the green light to make arrangements with Canadian farmers so they may continue to produce sufficient food to meet our own requirements and to permit us to make some impression on the problem of hunger which has confronted over one billion people throughout the world all their lives, and which is likely to continue during the life of most of us here.

I think the question of bringing goods into Canada from the countries which are buying our wheat must also be considered in connection with the extension of the life of the wheat board. I believe most members will recognize what an impossible task the members of the board are going to have if they are going to be required to dispose of wheat in countries that are prepared to accept our wheat on condition that we purchase some of their goods. Last year the minister was able to end the year in quite a favourable position partly because of the very substantial sales made to Russia and some of the other iron curtain countries. The last time I discussed the question of wheat in the house I referred to our sales to Poland, and pointed out that Poland is apparently planning on buying upward of 20 million bushels of wheat per year over the next 10 years. Apparently Poland is well satisfied with the quality of our wheat and is prepared to give us a fair share of their imports.

It would appear that last year Poland bought around $20 million worth of wheat, over $1 million worth of rye and about $250,000 worth of barley, total purchases in Canada amounting to $25 million. But what about our purchases from Poland? They are running around $2 million. The proposal made last year by Poland was that if we could buy around $5 million worth of goods from Poland they would be prepared to use scarce dollars to buy around $10 million worth of goods a year from Canada.

But surely that is not a concern entirely for the people of Poland. Surely the Minister of Trade and Commerce has some responsibility to give some encouragement and direction to these customers of ours who are not going to be able to continue to purchase agricultural products if more interest is not taken in their products.

The same thing goes for Great Britain. Great Britain has been one of our very best customers, but there has been no serious attempt to see that the wheat board or any other organization is charged with some responsibility for seeing that more British goods find a market in Canada. Therefore it would seem to me that the minister must accept the responsibility for setting up an import board which will have similar responsibilities to those of the wheat board. I am not suggesting that the government should accept a policy which would be foreign to them, but I think if the government set up an import board which could place the problem in its proper perspective before the Canadian people it would be fairly easy to decrease our purchases of goods in markets where we have an unfavourable balance, and increase our purchases of goods in countries where we bought so little.

I submit that the minister must give consideration immediately to the setting up of an import board to deal with the problem of getting goods into Canada from our good customers in the past and from our new customers. Last year, as I said, we sold about $20 million worth of wheat to Poland. I cannot see any reason why in a sale of this sort it is necessary for our customers to go to the brokers or agents on the grain exchange. I understand that there would be a commission of one-half of 1 per cent. It would appear to me that would be something like $100,000 on one sale alone.

Since the wheat board seems to be able to set up very efficient machinery to buy wheat in 1-bushel lots, 5-bushel lots or 10-bushel lots from any farmer regardless of the amount he has to sell, I see no reason under the sun why the same organization cannot sell this product directly to those customers who would prefer to buy directly from the wheat board. I suggest that the splitting of this $100,000 commission on one transaction alone so the buyer might have half and the seller might have half would meet with very general approval on the part of the farmers, who need every last cent they can get. I submit that taking $100,000 of their hard-earned money to complete a sale through brokers or agents is not in the best interest of producers or consumers.

Having listened to speakers from all parties who are anxious that the method of marketing through the wheat board should continue, I submit that the minister should give consideration to following the same procedure he followed two years ago in connection with the Defence Production Act, and introduce legislation to provide that the wheat board act will be made permanent.

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of the bill now before us is to extend for another five years the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. In Saskatchewan the socialists say the Liberal party has no selling policy for marketing wheat. I want to emphasize that this act is the very cornerstone of Liberal marketing policy. In a nutshell, the bill provides that the wheat board shall continue to be the main marketing agency for wheat, barley and oats. I believe I am correct in saying that 99 per cent of prairie farmers, regardless of their politics, support the bill in principle.

It is quite true that world conditions have strained the facilities of the board in the last five years. It is also quite true that our bins, granaries and elevators in western Canada are jammed to capacity at this moment with about a billion bushels of unsold wheat. But this situation was not caused by a breakdown in the selling machinery. Rather I think the wheat surplus has been caused by three other factors. First, as the minister pointed out this afternoon, we have had an unprecedented series of bumper crops. Second, there is the fact that many former importing countries, helped by United States aid and machinery, have in recent years become exporting countries. Third, there is the terrific competition of American give-away programs.

Despite all these difficulties the Canadian wheat board has steadily, patiently and without panic continued to sell wheat in the world markets at the best possible price for the producer. Personally I think the wheat board has done an excellent job in the past five years. Our export movement of wheat has never fallen below the long-term average. The last crop year was one of the most satisfactory export years we have ever had in our history. A vigorous selling campaign was carried on by the wheat board and the government in the iron curtain countries as well as in our traditional markets, and so successful was that drive that last year we exported 309 million bushels of wheat, an increase of 57 million bushels over a year ago.

What is even more encouraging to the western farmer at this moment is the fact that up to January 15 of the current year our exports have been 108.5 million bushels compared with only 71.1 million bushels a year ago, an increase of about 42 per cent. It was said this afternoon that we have lost some of our markets to the United States. Most of those markets were lost primarily, if they were lost, because the Americans gave wheat away.

I sincerely believe that during the past several years the wheat board has done a good job, not only because it sold a great deal of wheat but also because it prevented the price of wheat from dropping very substantially.

A few weeks ago Mr. J. H. Wesson, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, was speaking in Regina. From the Leader-Post I quote what he said on that occasion:

> "Other problems which we have considered at this meeting . . . are small in comparison to the danger which we have passed through that wheat prices might have fallen by 50 to 75 cents during the past year."

Then the report continues:

> He urged delegates to tell the membership that the wheat board and the international wheat agreement had averted this catastrophe.

Those are the main reasons the Liberal members from Saskatchewan are 100 per cent behind the Canadian wheat board in their effort to get a better price for the producer. However, I find it most difficult to understand the attitude of the socialist members from Saskatchewan toward the Canadian wheat board. On the one hand they solemnly profess vigorously to support the wheat board in all its objectives, yet on the other hand here in parliament and out on the hustings the socialists criticize just about everything the wheat board does.

Mr. Nicholson: What, for example?

Mr. Thatcher: They say that selling policies are ineffective, that the allocation of quotas at delivery points are unfair.

Mr. Nicholson: What about cash advances?

Mr. Thatcher: The board members said they did not want advances. The socialists say we should have them. They say the wheat board are subservient to the government.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Thatcher: Certainly.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Does the hon. member agree that the quotas that apply on box cars at individual loading points have been fair to the prairie province producers?

Mr. Thatcher: I say that the quotas at delivery points have not been all the farmers might wish. But I also say the Canadian wheat board, when all circumstances are considered, has done the best possible job it could.

Mr. Speaker, I would be the last one in the world to say that the prairie farmer has not laboured under great difficulty in these past few years. Of course it is disheartening and discouraging to grow one bumper crop after another and find it possible to sell only a portion of it. But I also say that the lot of the farmer is not made easier in Saskatchewan by the socialist members who since 1945 have acted in this house as professional cry-babies.

Mr. Nicholson: You are including yourself.

Mr. Thatcher: They have wept copious tears. They have cried blue ruin. They have preached gloom. They have prophesied disaster, and time and again they have forecast a complete collapse of world wheat markets. All through Saskatchewan they have tried to stir up trouble by exaggerations and statements which frequently border on untruths. For example, here is one statement which the hon. member for Assiniboia made when speaking at the convention of the hon. member for Mackenzie, and I quote dispatches from the Regina Leader-Post which I presume the hon. member for Assiniboia himself sent in:

> Mr. Argue emphasized that at the present time the farmers . . . are in as serious a condition as they were in the thirties.

Mr. Speaker, in the thirties wheat was selling at as low as 20 cents a bushel; eggs were selling for as little as 5 cents a dozen; the price of cattle was as low as $10 a head. People in those days had to depend on eastern Canada for charity, for their clothing and even for food. Yet the hon. member for Assiniboia says that conditions are as bad today as they were in the 1930's.

Mr. Nicholson: Today their share of the national income is less.

Mr. Thatcher: The people out in Saskatchewan have too much sense to believe that statement.

An hon. Member: Have you compared the farmers' income?

Mr. Thatcher: According to the dominion bureau of statistics, in 1931 cash income for Saskatchewan farm products was $74 million; in 1932 it was $80 million; in 1933 it was $80 million; in 1934 it was $96.5 million. Last year the cash income for Saskatchewan farm products was $592.7 million.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): That is a typical Liberal trick.

Mr. Thatcher: Yet the hon. member for Assiniboia says the farmers are as badly off as they were in the thirties.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Give the net farm income.

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Speaker, there is no one so blind as he who refuses to see. I am not going to try to tell this house that the prairie farmer is satisfied with everything the Canadian wheat board does. He is not. However, I am going to say this. The Saskatchewan farmer is a rugged individualist who is fiercely independent in his way of life. He is proud of his province; he is proud of his country, and he is proud of his own accomplishments in farming since 1945. He wants every dollar that is fairly and justly coming to him. Above all he does not want to be pushed around by the more populous provinces. But despite the wailings and snivellings of the C.C.F. here in this house he wants no charity or hand-outs from any one. In talking about wheat selling policies, I say that many of these socialists have taken an attitude that has harmed the producer instead of helping him.

Mr. Nicholson: Nonsense.

Mr. Thatcher: By their talk in parliament, by their complete lack of financial responsibility, by their lack of any constructive suggestions, the socialists have injured the prestige and welfare of the province of Saskatchewan. Mr. Speaker, they have cried "Wolf" so often that when one of them gets to his feet hon. members from other parts of Canada are immediately suspicious and automatically hostile.

It may be that some westerners think that I am exaggerating when I make that statement. Here is a quotation from Hansard showing what happened in debate on March 13, 1956. As reported at page 2100 the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Bennett), who was then speaking, had this to say:

> I should like to say this to the C.C.F. group. I came down here prepared and anxious to help the western farmer. After hearing all the repetitious debates that took place here, I was reluctant to vote for those bills. I think the western farmer has not had the kind of representation here that he deserves.

From the 12 years I have spent in this parliament, Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely convinced that the western farmer will get more by a spirit of reasonableness and co-operation on the part of members representing him than he will by the constant stream of abuse and vituperation that comes from the socialist group.

Mr. Nicholson: Why did you not give the farmers of Moose Jaw-Lake Centre a chance to express their opinion?

Mr. Thatcher: The Canadian wheat board is responsible for selling the nation's wheat. The socialists from Saskatchewan usually lack the courage to come out directly and attack the wheat board. Instead, they go after the government, saying that in actual fact it is responsible for its policy. I pose this question to the house today. Could the socialist members from Saskatchewan do any better than the government or the wheat board are doing in selling this billion bushels of wheat? I submit that they could not, if we are to judge from their experiences in other fields. Surely there is no better way in which to judge an individual or a political group than by their accomplishments. I do not pay so much attention to talk and words as I do to the past record. What are the accomplishments of the socialists in the field of selling? Out in Saskatchewan, Mr. Speaker, back in 1945 the provincial C.C.F. government embarked on a number of crown corporations.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Sit down and take it.

Mr. Nicholson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that—

Mr. Sinclair: The brick plant.

Mr. Nicholson: —last year, the hon. member discussed crown corporations in the pipeline debate and the Liberals refused me an opportunity to reply. I submit that the hon. member should not be allowed to discuss Saskatchewan crown corporations at this time unless ample opportunity is given to put forward the other side of the question.

Mr. Thatcher: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not blame the hon. member for Mackenzie for not wanting that record put on Hansard, but may I submit—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Thatcher.]

Mr. Thatcher: —here are our socialist friends coming into this parliament and saying that the wheat board does not know anything about selling a billion bushel wheat surplus. I want to put on Hansard two or three illustrations of the socialist selling record in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nicholson: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker,—

An hon. Member: We do not want to hear it.

Mr. Nicholson: —I want to hear from the Speaker as to whether or not a discussion of crown corporations in Saskatchewan is in order on this bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The debate we have had this afternoon, from start to finish, has ranged far afield. Shortly before five o'clock I was in considerable difficulty as to whether or not I should not then have intervened because of references—I do not remember them exactly—to aeroplane production, the cost of the D.E.W. line and so forth. In an honest effort to rule always in favour of whoever had the floor, I considered that references to other things—this happened to be a reference to a series of matters which had come under the control of the minister who was responsible for this bill—were getting us far afield from the wheat board, but I think perhaps the references were fair. If the hon. member who has the floor now proposes to make certain references to show that those who oppose the bill have, by a similar line of action, indicated their ability or inability to take wise action, I do not think I should stop that either. But I have no intention of permitting the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre to go farther than to make the same type of reference or listing of what he considers comparable matters as has been done in previous speeches made in this debate.

I believe the house will agree with me that it has been the desire of the house this afternoon that matters directly and indirectly affecting the wheat board should be discussed under this bill. One could, of course, have made a very narrow ruling that nothing could be discussed except shall or shall not the wheat board be extended and if so, shall it be for a period of five years. I do not believe it was the sense of the house that this should be the ruling, but I shall continue to endeavour to keep members within what I think is the general ambit of the subject under debate, having gone as it has gone so far. I do not think comparable references should be ruled out all of a sudden, when they have been permitted in the last two or three speeches.

Mr. Thatcher: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to endeavour to explain to the house how unsuccessful the socialists have been in selling other products out in the province of Saskatchewan, so we can then judge their ability to sell a billion bushels of wheat in the most competitive market in the world.

An hon. Member: You did that in the pipeline debate last year.

Mr. Thatcher: I shall only give a few examples for purposes of comparison. In 1945 they set up a leather tannery. We certainly had lots of hides out in Saskatchewan, and the crown company was able to turn out a large amount of leather. Unfortunately they did not have salesmen who could sell this leather effectively in the country's markets, so the company folded. They started a shoe factory in the city of Regina and manufactured thousands and thousands of pairs of shoes. Unfortunately again, apparently they did not have salesmen who could sell those shoes in competition with other companies. This company was also forced to close its doors.

Out in my own city of Moose Jaw they set up a woollen mill. The woollen mill operated fairly actively for a while and turned out a great many woollen goods. They did not have the salesmen who could sell these goods competitively and were forced to close. I could go on for quite some time in listing these illustrations—

Mr. Nicholson: What did you say about the closing of the woollen mill at that time?

Mr. Thatcher: —but I suppose that someone could take exception. I do want to say this in summing up, Mr. Speaker, that in the province of Saskatchewan, out of all the crown corporations that were set up, and which had to compete with private interprise, there was not one that had good enough salesmen, to be able to compete effectively without losing substantial sums of the taxpayers' money, or close their doors entirely.

Mr. Nicholson: That is not true, and you know it.

Mr. Thatcher: The great majority of the crown corporations have some kind of monopoly or some kind of special privilege. But even where they have arbitrarily taken special privileges, their salesmen have not been able to compete efficiently. I mention the field of gas. A complete monopoly is what those salesmen have, yet the price they charge for gas in Saskatchewan is more than double the price of gas under private enterprise in our sister province of Alberta.

Most socialists have had very little to do with the business world; most of them are not very well acquainted with commerce. There have been one or two notable exceptions. For example, several years ago our premier and provincial treasurer went into the drive-in theatre business. The theatre went pretty well for a while, but then suddenly it folded. Today it stands empty and desolate, a monument to the failure of the premier and his chief lieutenant to sell the people of Regina on the merits of their particular enterprise.

Mr. Studer: They cannot even entertain the people.

Mr. Thatcher: I say that the record of socialist salesmanship in Saskatchewan is a record of ineptitude, inefficiency and bungling. Yet these socialists today have the audacity to say something like this in parliament: It is true that we could not sell blankets or textiles out in Saskatchewan; it is a fact that we could not sell hides or shoes; it is true that in the middle of the greatest construction boom Canada has ever had we are having some considerable difficulty in selling our bricks; it is a fact we could not sell timber, gas, fish, or furs without a monopoly, and it is also true—

Mr. Nicholson: Nonsense.

Mr. Thatcher: —we need certain special privileges to sell our insurance. As a matter of fact, it is true that out in Saskatchewan we could not sell anything efficiently. But let no one be worried. By national planning and socialist theories, we could sell a billion bushels of wheat overnight.

An hon. Member: You are going to have trouble selling yourself.

Mr. Thatcher: Socialist planning means that the provincial government usually takes some teacher or preacher or someone who knows nothing about business, and puts him in charge of an enterprise. These socialists today are telling us in effect that men like McNamara, McIvor, Riddel, C. D. Howe and James G. Gardiner do not know anything about selling wheat. But, they say, let us be the salesmen and we would get rid of a billion bushels of wheat. I would say that the practical farmer in Saskatchewan has far too much sense to listen to such nonsense.

Mr. Nicholson: Why don't you tell that to the farmers in Moose Jaw-Lake Centre?

Mr. Thatcher: During the past few months I have had many farmers come into my office to tell me about their problems in connection with wheat.

Mr. Nicholson: From Moose Jaw-Lake Centre?

Mr. Thatcher: Yes. I told you once before that experience is a great teacher, and it is an extremely foolish man who will not learn from experience. I, fortunately, learned a little, but my hon. friend did not.

Most of these farmers, when they come into my office, talk about wheat. I ask them, if they were the Prime Minister, what they could do about the surpluses, or what solution they might suggest. They are usually frank enough to admit that they have no over-all solution to offer. The reason they have not is rather obvious. Today, regardless of what any member in this house says, there is not an easy solution or a pat answer or a magic formula.

What are some of the proposals which have been put forward over the past four or five years by our socialists? Most of them, I suggest, are little more than economic nonsense. We heard some of them this afternoon. The first suggestion, made year after year, is that Canada should give away the wheat surplus. The hon. member for Assiniboia has been particularly vociferous in putting forward that suggestion. I suggest to you that if the government had followed that proposal from the time it was first made, a number of years ago, the taxpayers today would be several billion dollars poorer. I am constantly amazed at the willingness of my former socialist colleagues to give away money which belongs to someone else, or give away assets which belong to others. They are never so generous with their own possessions.

Mr. Knowles: We gave you away.

Mr. Thatcher: Frankly, I feel that Canada should not hesitate to make gifts of wheat to the starving countries of the world. We are doing that under the Colombo plan; but to suggest sincerely that we should take several billions of dollars, put it into wheat and give that wheat away, I do not think is practical. Surely federal representatives in this house should be just as responsible in spending the taxpayers' money as they are in spending their own. I do not think there is one socialist in the house who would dream of spending his own money in that reckless manner, including the hon. member for Assiniboia. I suggest that if the hon. member for Assiniboia does feel that the Christian and humanitarian thing for Canada to do is to give away our wheat, he should set the example and give his own crop away. It is easy, Mr. Speaker, to be generous with someone else's money.

The second suggestion which has been made frequently by the socialists is that the government and the wheat board should take sterling in return for wheat. Well, that suggestion may sound plausible, but actually it is not much more practical than their first scheme. Out in Saskatoon, about a year and three months ago, the British trade commissioner was invited to speak to a farm union meeting. One of the delegates rose and asked this question:

> If Canada would take sterling would we sell any more wheat to Great Britain?

According to the report of the meeting appearing in the Regina Leader-Post of December 2, 1955, Mr. Bowen made this flat reply:

> Britain would not purchase a bushel more if sterling were accepted in payment by Canada.

I think the trade commissioner's statement indicates the value of that socialist suggestion.

Well, now, socialists say in parliament and they say around the country that we should accept local currency in payment for wheat. What this really means, of course, is that we should sell our wheat at a discount, because if the local currency is as good as dollars then there is no difficulty in selling for dollars. If the local currency is not as good as dollars then, in fact, the wheat is being sold at a discount. Personally I doubt whether the western farmer would welcome a lower price for wheat than he is getting at the present time, yet that would inevitably happen unless the federal treasury were prepared to make up the difference by subsidy.

Another favourite proposition put forth by socialist members is that we should barter our wheat. I notice that whenever they talk in this manner they talk in generalities; they are never specific. I have nothing against barter when somebody comes forward with a sensible proposition, but so far no socialist has done that.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): The hon. member knows no more about wheat than he knows about Mae West.

Mr. Thatcher: The socialists are never specific as to what countries want to barter with us, nor about the goods we can get in return for our wheat. If they were specific about barter the western farmers would realize that it would have the same effect on the wheat surplus as a pail of water taken from the Saskatchewan river would have in lowering its level.

The fourth suggestion put forward by socialists from time to time—I cite the speech of the hon. member for Assiniboia on May 17, 1955—is that the government should provide a school lunch program to take care of further agricultural surpluses. Well, I am not going into the merits or demerits of that plan, except to say that a school lunch program would have the same effect on our wheat surplus as a workman would have trying to dig the St. Lawrence seaway with a teaspoon.

The fifth suggestion that has come again from the hon. member for Assiniboia is that there should be a march on Ottawa. Well, I say that a march on Ottawa at this time would be the work of a few professional socialist agitators organized for the sole purpose of trying to make political capital out of the farmers' difficulties. I believe that members in this house of all political parties, even the socialist group, want the farmer to be treated fairly and justly. I do not think they have to be pressured into giving him fair treatment by a march like the socialists have suggested. I say that C.C.F. members from their leader down to their remotest backbencher have so far offered no real solution for our wheat surplus problem.

I listened to the socialist members speak this afternoon. I hoped they would tell us how they would sell more wheat than is already being sold. Not one sensible, concrete suggestion was put forward.

I conclude by quoting a Canadian Press dispatch from Winnipeg, and again it is Mr. Wesson speaking:

> The Canadian wheat board averted a possible international economic crisis and saved the situation for the farmer, John Wesson, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, told the western agricultural conference here.

I think these words of Mr. Wesson justify Liberal marketing policy in western Canada, and most effectively answer the criticisms which have come from the socialists today.

I support with enthusiasm the legislation which is now before us, Mr. Speaker, and I want to tell my hon. friends from Saskatchewan on the opposition benches that there are some members in this house who are not keen about the wheat board because they are a little bit afraid it may be a socialist measure. The criticism and unceasing opposition of socialists to the wheat board may result in a situation like this, one of these days. Eastern members are going to say, "All right, fellows, if the wheat board is so bad let us scrap it". That is the situation which these members may provoke. I suggest, whether deliberately or otherwise, they are time and again indirectly sabotaging the Canadian wheat board by irresponsible talk. Today the Liberal government is doing the best possible job under difficult circumstances.

Mr. Nicholson: Will the hon. member permit a question before he resumes his seat? Will he suggest some ways of moving more wheat to give the wheat farmers a fairer share of the national income?

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was very clear in what I said. I believe there is no magic formula. There is no easy answer to this problem; but I do say that the wheat board and the Liberal party are doing their best under difficult world circumstances. They are trying to get the best possible price for the western producer.

Mr. Knight: I would like to ask the hon. member a question. I do not think he was quite fair in his allusion to the shoe factory and the woollen factory. He is a businessman. Does he consider that private enterprise in the same sort of thing, shoes or woollens, could have succeeded in Saskatchewan? Second, does he not know that these tiny little industries, which have been magnified in the east where, when you talk about a shoe factory, you talk about something big—

Mr. Habel: Who tried it? The C.C.F.

Mr. Knight: My question is this. Does he not know that these little factories were simply built at the time of a terrible depression so we would have shoes and wool for our people, if they were necessary? Is it fair for him to say that these things failed in Saskatchewan because of socialist policies? Could these industries ever have succeeded under private enterprise in the province of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Thatcher: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was a time when I believed that socialist enterprises were necessary and desirable for my province, but after 10 years' experience I saw the way they operated and most of them went broke. There is quite a difference when a socialist company goes bankrupt and when a private enterprise company goes bankrupt. When a socialist company closes it is the taxpayers' money that has been lost, and millions have been lost in that manner in Saskatchewan. When a private enterprise company closes, the only people who lose are the shareholders.

Mr. Knight: I wish the hon. member would answer my question. Does he consider that private enterprise on a woollen mill or shoe factory, having regard to business and supply under the circumstances, could have operated successfully in the city of Moose Jaw?

Mr. Hosking: Should we trust that kind of government to sell wheat?

Mr. Thatcher: If a private company had closed, the only people who would have lost would have been the shareholders. I do not see any relevancy to that question.

Canadian Wheat Board Act

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the previous speaker a question. I take it from his remarks that he questions the advisability of an organized march on Ottawa. I would like to know if he would advise the permanent lobby which the farmers' union of Alberta have established down here at the present time.

Mr. Thatcher: I would say that I think every hon. member in this house regardless of his politics is sympathetic to the difficulties of the farmers, and I do not believe a march on Ottawa at this time is needed or desirable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): A supplementary question, if I may.

Mr. Hosking: We are not in committee.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Why are not the farmers of western Canada right in sending down to Ottawa members of their own organizations to present to all members of parliament the position they are in in western Canada?

Mr. Thatcher: I did not object to that. I objected to a march on Ottawa.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. After this bill has been given second reading the house will resolve itself into committee of the whole, at which time hon. members can ask each other questions. The hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, in view of the hour I wonder if I could call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It appears that we do not have unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The opposition has capsized in this regard.

Mr. Knowles: You mean the opposition on the government side.

Mr. Speaker: I said the opposition in this regard.

On motion of Mr. Hahn the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Knowles: Could the minister tell us the business for Tuesday?

Mr. Fulton: Wait till Monday.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, if it would appear likely that this bill would not be debated at any great length we might go ahead with it first; otherwise we will take the Canada Council and then the wheat board bill.

Mr. Knowles: How does the minister expect to find out?

Mr. Pickersgill: Through the usual channels.

Mr. Harris: I express these things in public, sir, in the hope that in private I can obtain some assurances, but I do this out of a life-long feeling of optimism which is hardly ever matched by the circumstances.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

OLD AGE PENSION COSTS

Question No. 37—Mr. Boivin:

1. What is the actual cost of old age pension paid entirely by the federal government without means test, for pensioners over 70?
2. What would be the cost of such pension if the age limit was reduced from 70 to 65 years of age?
3. What is the amount of the contribution actually paid by the federal government to old age pensioners between the ages of 65 and 70?
4. What would be the amount of the said contribution if such pension were paid to pensioners of 60 to 65 years of age?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Estimated cost for complete year 1956-57 —$379,375,000.

2. Estimated cost for complete year 1957-58 —$608,000,000, less $21,100,000 which represents the estimated federal share for 1957-58 of payments under the Old Age Assistance Act.

3. Estimated cost of the federal share of old age assistance for complete year 1956-57 —$20,500,000.

Questions

4. The cost to the federal government of paying old age assistance to persons 60 to 64 years of age would depend on a number of factors which could vary considerably from those which apply to persons 65 to 69 years of age. A great deal would depend on the requirements of eligibility to be applied, particularly the means test. Presumably a larger proportion of persons 60 to 64 would be employable. The extent to which persons in this age group who were in need of assistance would be assisted by unemployment insurance and unemployment assistance would have an important bearing on the number applying for old age assistance. With so many unpredictable factors it would be difficult to estimate with any degree of accuracy the cost to the federal government of paying old age assistance to persons 60 to 64 years of age.

BUTTER AND CHEESE EXPORTS

Question No. 71—Mr. Cardiff:

1. How much (a) butter; (b) cheese, was exported from Canada in 1956?
2. To what countries?
3. What was the price to each country?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

1, 2 and 3. Canadian exports of butter and cheese, by countries, during the calendar year 1956, were as follows:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 4, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HEALTH INSURANCE

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN FEDERAL AND ONTARIO GOVERNMENTS

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on January 29 last the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to table the correspondence between the federal government and the government of the province of Ontario regarding hospital insurance. I wish to let the house know that copies of this correspondence, in English and in French, will be deposited with the Clerk of the house at three o'clock this afternoon, this to coincide with the time when the correspondence will be made public by the premier of Ontario in the legislature of that province.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ADDITIONAL INSURANCE FACILITIES AND RESERVES

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 46, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Mr. Green: Could we have an explanation?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act in two ways: First, to authorize the corporation to provide insurance for certain transactions for which there has been a considerable demand of late and, second, to allow the corporation to set up reserves for possible losses in calculating taxable income.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PROPOSED REQUIREMENT OF DEVICE TO RENDER HARMLESS POISONOUS GASES EMITTED BY ENGINES

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Haldimand) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of taking steps to further protect the health of the nation by making the necessary amendments under the Criminal Code, to provide penalties against owners or operators of all diesel-powered vehicles or railway engines for failure to equip said vehicles with some suitable device to render harmless, poisonous gases emitted from the exhaust of such vehicles or engines.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I move this resolution because I feel that diesel and gasoline fumes are a definite menace to the health of the nation, especially so in districts of concentrated population. This is the third time I have had this resolution on the order paper. Its wording is changed somewhat from that of last year because of the fact that the government felt—and as I admitted myself at the start of the debate—that the matter would come more rightly under provincial jurisdiction. However, afterwards I was told that it is definitely under the jurisdiction of this federal authority. It is my sincere hope that through the discussion of this resolution we may bring about a general awareness of the dangers we encounter in the air we breathe.

Canadians have fought hard for the pure food laws that guarantee that our food is not contaminated. We have organized and paid for expensive water systems that assure us of a plentiful supply of pure water. There have been heated debates on the question of whether our drinking water should be fluoridated to prevent tooth decay. But until quite recently practically nothing has been done about the air we breathe. It was brought out forcibly by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott) last year in this debate how important to the human body is the air we breathe. While a person can do without food—and I am quoting his words—for three weeks and can do without water for approximately three days, he can do without air for only approximately three minutes. In some parts of England the cause, effect and cure of smoke pollution is now a high school subject and radio and television programs have aroused the public with regard to smoke prevention. This is a lead which should be followed elsewhere because not until everyone is his own smoke inspector will city air be fit to breathe. Although this resolution deals specifically with diesel fumes, I should like to discuss for a few minutes the possible effects of high concentration of exhaust fumes from gasoline-burning engines.

It is a well known fact that the mileage per gallon of gasoline decreases considerably in stop and go city traffic. At cruising speed about 250 parts per million of the total exhaust is unburned vapour. When a motor is idling it is two or three times that figure; but when you lift your foot off the accelerator and decelerate your motor, it goes up as high as 5,000 parts per million. That is the reason for its being in such high concentration in heavy city traffic. It is generally conceded that about 7 per cent of gasoline is unburned, and this figure could be increased to about 8 per cent or 9 per cent through further evaporation from the carburetor and fuel tank.

This problem is one which we must face in the near future as the number of motor vehicles increases in Canada, and the number is increasing very rapidly. Then, far more important, is the fact that deadly gases are emitted with the exhaust fumes. One of these gases is known as carbon monoxide, and with which the average motorist is only vaguely familiar. We may attribute this lack of familiarity to the fact that they cannot smell it, taste it, feel it or hear it. Yet, within a very few minutes, it is capable of reducing the mental functions of a driver to a point where the co-ordination of muscles and the ability to react properly in the operation of the vehicle is below even the minimum requirements for safety. Carbon monoxide in a concentration of .02 to .03 will cause headaches; from .04 to .07, unconsciousness; and from .08 to .1, death.

Unlike some poisons it does not allow the human to build immunity to it over a period of time. Repeated exposures, particularly to attacks of acute poisoning, result in increasing susceptibility to the gas and cause cumulative tissue damage. It might be well to pursue the theory that carbon monoxide is the cause of a great many accidents on our highways because it causes inefficiency in the driver. At some time or other all of us have experienced a condition of sleepiness while driving our car. We have also perceived odours from our own car and from cars in front of us. We have experienced headaches, dizziness and sometimes carsickness. Whenever any of these symptoms occur while you are driving, consider carbon monoxide.

I have an article here put out by the motor vehicle research and written by Arthur J. White, who is the director of that research board, on carbon monoxide. The article is headed, "I'm just a steering wheel," and I think it is appropriate to quote it at this time.

> I'm just a wheel. A steering wheel. And you're my captain. Behind me you're the lord and master of a miracle. You can make me take the kids to school. You can turn me down the sunny road toward town. With me you can guide your goods to the market place . . . you can rush the sick to be healed . . . you can go in minutes to places hours away. You can do magic.
> Yet, in the blink of an eye, in the tick of your watch, I can turn deadly killer. I can snuff out the life of a kid still full of life—maybe your kid. I can twist a smile into tears. I can wreck and cripple and destroy. I can deal out death like the plague. And I'm no respecter of persons. A child, a grandmother, even you, my friend . . . it's all the same to me.
> I'm sensitive. I respond instantly to the hands you give me. Give me calm hands, steady hands, careful hands . . . and I'm your friend. But give me unsteady hands, fuzzy-minded hands, reckless hands . . . then I'm your enemy, a menace to the life, the happiness, the future of every person, every youngster riding, walking, playing.
> I was made for pleasure and usefulness. Keep me that way. I'm in your hands. I'm just a steering wheel and you're my captain. Behind me you're the lord and master of a miracle . . . or a tragedy. It's up to you.

Bear in mind that death from carbon monoxide is not restricted to tightly closed garages when the motor is running, but collapse can occur when cars are parked with their motors running or, in some cases, even while they are travelling along the highway. There have been many cases. Only this morning there appeared in the Globe and Mail a report of the death of two people in a motor car just north of Toronto. It is not an isolated case at all. Many of them come up every week. It is safe to assume that carbon monoxide has contributed a great deal to many accidents heretofore classed as unexplained. To substantiate this, the California highway patrol checked 1,007 automobiles while on the open highway and found that 30 cars contained concentrations of this gas in excess of the maximum safe limit. The conclusion of the survey showed that 3 per cent of the cars tested were found to have carbon monoxide in such quantities as would give a driver a headache or cause sleepiness, weakness, impaired judgment and decrease the driving ability over a period of several hours, and that no automobile, regardless of the age or anything else, is free from the possibility of carbon monoxide entering the driver or passenger compartment.

It behooves every motorist to have his car tested for complete exhaust system tightness, and to observe the rules of safety at all times to rule out as much as possible the dangers of this lethal gas that is an apparent part of our present day motoring.

In the same magazine article that I quoted a short time ago, Mr. Speaker, are contained some of the things that one should particularly take cognizance of if he is the owner of a motor vehicle. I quote:

> One excellent rule to follow in reference to the exhaust system of an automobile to prevent the possibility of its failure is to renew the muffler and tail pipe, with complete inspection of the balance, at 35,000 miles or every two years of operation. The cost involved in this procedure is not excessive in any respect and will, without question, minimize the possibility of failure.

We must bear in mind that our automobile produces one and one-third gallons of water for every gallon of gasoline it consumes. This water has a direct effect upon the entire exhaust system, the same as water has effect upon iron or steel.

However, we have another agent coupled with this water, in the form of corrosive gases that accelerate the rotting and eroding of the entire exhaust system.

We must also bear in mind that the salts and calcium chlorides used on the road attack from the exterior the entire exhaust system that is exposed during normal driving.

All of us at some time or other may have inspected our fire wall in our engine compartment during the installation of some accessory. We have noted that the manufacturers have placed rubber grommets and rubber barriers between the driver's compartment and the engine compartment for two reasons. One, to reduce the possibility of any control wires and tubes causing excessive vibration and annoying sounds. Two, these have been placed there also to prevent any fumes from the engine compartment entering the driver's compartment.

It is not good safety pactice to drill any holes through this fire wall without making sufficient provisions for the prevention of entrance of exhaust gases or fumes of the engine.

Floor boards should be carefully inspected for breaks, erosion and the loss of knock-outs (placed in the floors of some cars in anticipation of the installation of a special accessory). Inspection should not be confined alone to the actual floor boards but under the seats should be inspected also for these conditions.

Inspection of weather stripping in the trunk compartment should also be taken into consideration and replaced if failure has occurred. The floor of the trunk should be inspected also for erosion, cracks, et cetera.

The foregoing may appear on the surface to be a great deal of trouble for the average motorist to go to in reference to his automobile. However, a simple question asked by the motorist of himself would give him the answer. "Whose health is involved and whose life is in danger?"

If that condition exists on the open highway, what is the situation in areas of highly concentrated traffic? Tests have been taken in those areas and on a busy street concentrations of .09 per cent have been found during a period of high temperature and humidity. Do not forget, Mr. Speaker, that just a few moments ago I quoted .09 per cent as the percentage which would cause death and a concentration of this percentage has been found in city streets during high traffic periods. No wonder the busy housewife often comes home from a shopping trip downtown with a splitting headache.

Unlike the gasoline engine the diesel operates normally with excess air. The fuel is injected into the cylinder and is ignited by virtue of the temperature and pressure in the cylinder rather than by a spark. The fuel used is heavier than gasoline and has a higher boiling range. Because of the excess air used very little of the fuel is normally exhausted unburned, unlike the gasoline motor. Under certain conditions of operation, however, both smoke and aldehydes are evolved. The latter are quite noticeable in high concentrations because of their pungent odour and eye-irritating characteristics. I am sure I do not need to describe this to any hon. member who has walked down the street in any large city where diesel busses are used because he will be quite aware of this fact if he has been at any time in the situation I referred to. It is concluded that the contribution of the various pollutants except hydrocarbons per barrel of fuel burned is two to ten times greater from diesel fuel than from gasoline. The odour and irritating effects of the exhaust gas of diesel engines are caused mainly by aldehydes that occur in varying amounts depending on several other factors such as the fuel, the air ratio at which the engine is operating, the design of the engine, the engine temperature and the condition of the fuel injection equipment or mechanism. If the exhaust gas contains a high concentration of aldehydes it is definitely irritating to the eyes and nasal passages. In fact, the irritating effect may be more noticeable than the odour if one is exposed to a high concentration of the exhaust gas. The most dangerous gas in diesel fumes both with regard to injury to health and the amount produced is the oxides of nitrogen which when inhaled form nitric and nitrous acids in the respiratory organs. Let us compare oxides of nitrogen with carbon monoxide, as far as toxicity is concerned. An atmosphere containing .5 to 1.0 per cent of carbon monoxide is likely to be fatal to human beings in less than 30 minutes of exposure, whereas as little as .07 per cent of oxides of nitrogen may cause fatality in the same length of time. In the case of carbon monoxide it is from .5 to 1 per cent and in the case of oxides of nitrogen it is .07 per cent. This is an indication of the danger to health from the exhaust gas of diesel motors in comparison with the exhaust from gasoline motors.

I have here some of the conclusions taken from a publication called "The Atmospheric Pollution Problem in Canada" written by Dr. Morris Katz of the defence research chemical laboratories, Ottawa. Under "health aspects" on page 6 it states this:

The acute effects of unrestricted air pollution on public health have been demonstrated unpleasantly but conclusively in three air pollution disasters—namely, the Meuse valley in Belgium 1930, Donora, Pa. 1948, and Poza Rica in Mexico 1950.

The chronic effects of air pollution are not so clearly defined. Nevertheless the frequent occurrence of eye irritation during smogs in the Los Angeles area and statistics on the increase in the death rate from respiratory disease during fogs in industrial communities in England represent evidence which cannot be ignored. In Canada, Barrett and Kay have considered the loss of sunshine and decrease in ultravoilet irradiation as contributing factors in the occurrence of deficiency diseases such as rickets. However, some authorities claim that the chronic effects of air pollution have never been demonstrated conclusively.

The Donora report has stressed the significance of a synergistic effect in air pollution whereby the combined influence of a number of toxic contaminants occurring simultaneously may be far greater than the additive effect of individual contaminants. The health panel at the U.S. technical conference of May, 1950, concluded that pollution of the atmosphere is associated with a frequent and apparently increasing occurrence of acute and chronic diseases, involving especially the respiratory tract and the skin.

For several years now diesel engines have been used underground in mining operations of various kinds. It would not have been possible had they not devised an economical method of rendering these diesel fumes practically harmless to miners working underground in contact with these fumes. The equipment used is known to the trade as a scrubber. Briefly, it is an arrangement whereby the exhaust fumes are passed through an aqueous solution of sodium sulphite with a percentage of hydroquinone added. The cost of chemicals for operating this device is in the neighbourhood of 10 cents per working hour. The cost of the equipment is not unreasonable and I understand is presently available. With regard to this equipment, I have here a booklet entitled "Recent Developments in Atmospheric Pollution" by Dr. Katz again. This is report No. 148 which was published in May, 1954, and I quote:

Recent devices for protection and control in the Los Angeles area include a charcoal filtration unit for home air conditioning and a proposed filter and catalyst to remove aldehydes, carbon monoxide, oxides of nitrogen and other objectionable effluents from the exhaust gases of automobiles, busses and trucks.

Air pollution will be of increasing importance in planning of cities and industrial communities. Meteorological and topographical factors will be taken into account in community planning in relation to location of industrial and residential areas. Industry will be decentralized and, in certain areas, residences will not be allowed too close to certain types of heavy industrial operations. Industry will be protected against the unreasonable encroachment of residential developments and vice versa. Certain types of industry will be permitted to use only certain land areas based on the ability to control objectionable contamination. Zoning of areas will include more extended use of land for public parks, gardens and wooded areas to prevent overcrowding of sources of emission.

Most hon. members have followed behind a diesel truck or bus on the highway, but I will wager that they either passed it as soon as possible or slowed down to let it get far enough ahead so the fumes did not bother them. Most diesel trucks are now equipped with high exhaust pipes but I am doubtful just how much good such high exhaust pipes on these trucks are because unfortunately at high speeds the fumes come down over the back of the truck to car level and enter through the air vents in the front of most new cars. Most motorists realize that the air vents should be closed especially when following a diesel truck or any other truck on the highway or in areas of dense traffic, but how many people bother to do so until the odour becomes noticeable. That may be all right in the case of diesel fumes but remember that you cannot smell carbon monoxide.

It is not only motorists who are subjected to these fumes. Pedestrians on city streets where diesel buses are used get a substantial amount of such fumes every time a bus passes them. These fumes are quite noticeable also to passengers in buses, especially at stops when the doors are opened. Most passengers on diesel power trains have noticed the fumes when the air conditioning is turned on in their sleeping quarters. Almost everyone has noticed the irritating qualities of diesel fumes, but what do they do about it? They complain and grumble but accept it as part of present day living. This situation will be so accepted until public opinion is aroused to the point where governments are forced into action.

I could quote from many articles on this subject. I should like to refer first to the speech I made last year on January 30, as found at page 660 of Hansard, where some can be found, and I have others here to which I should like to refer. In the Ottawa Journal of June 9, 1956 a very interesting article appeared, one that was most heartening to me because it was headed, "New 'Fumes' Regulations Aimed at Diesel Trains." I will not read the whole article but at one point it has this to say:

Mr. Martin states: "At the request of the board of transport commissioners, a complete revision has been undertaken of the regulations and orders dealing with the control of atmospheric pollution from railroad operations of companies subject to the legislative authority of parliament."

Specifically, the department of health and welfare has drafted a revised order No. 18 for the board of transport. The draft has been sent to the railways to see what they think of it.

The principal amendments to order 18, circa 1908, will be the incorporation of restrictive regulations for the emission of diesel fumes. It is suggested too that the new regulations will apply to all of Canada, rather than Ontario only.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, that article was very heartening to me because it appeared shortly after the resolution had been before the house last year. On checking through the annual report of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the year ended March 31, 1956, I am discouraged by the amount of space given to this subject. There is not quite a page and no particular mention is made of diesel fumes. As a matter of fact, very little is said except with reference to industrial dusts. I agree that the department has done a considerable amount of work in the Windsor-Detroit area for which Dr. Katz deserves a good deal of credit. I should like to refer to an article that appeared in the Ottawa Journal of January 19, 1955, headed, "Windsor Air Pollution Study May Help Fight Smoke, Smog." The article deals with an interview with Dr. Katz at the Seigniory Club, Quebec and reads in part as follows:

> The results of an intensive study of air pollution in the Detroit-Windsor area may be the means of improving and broadening the health programs of any city, Dr. Morris B. Katz of Ottawa said Tuesday.
> Under his direction, a five year investigation, first related to the smoke nuisance from great lakes vessels passing through the Detroit river, has been carried out.

Then further on:

> We are studying all toxic materials, whether from smoke pouring from the plants of industry or from exhausts of automobiles.

As I say, I commend the government for the work that is being done but I must say I do not think they are doing enough and are not doing it fast enough to cope with the problem that exists in Canada today in the large industrial areas. Here is another article that appeared in the Ottawa Journal of April 11, 1956. It is headed, "Polluted Air Boosts Lung Cancer", and is written by the United Press science editor, Delos Smith. It reads:

> The newest scientific contribution to the controversy over what is responsible for the remarkable rise in lung cancers makes an impressive case against the polluted atmospheres of industrialized cities, and lets cigarette smoking off the hook.

Further on there are these words:

> In New Zealand the white population came from one place, the British Isles, and so its members are similar in background and racial stock. The native born population is descended from Britishers who went there no earlier, for the most part, than a hundred years ago, which neatly eliminates another variable.
> David F. Eastcott, assistant director of the national health institute of New Zealand, began his study with the total of cancer deaths among white New Zealanders from 1949 through 1953. He divided these between whites who were native born and whites who had been immigrants.
> Now he had two sets of figures. He divided each set according to the site of the fatal cancer—stomach, lung, prostate grand, breast and so on. Then he was ready to compare the two sets. For no site except one was there a statistically significant difference in cancer incidence between native born New Zealanders and the immigrant New Zealander.
> The one exception was lung cancer. For all immigrants, the chances of dying of lung cancer were 30 per cent higher than for the native born. For immigrants who went to New Zealand when 30 years old or older, the chances were 75 per cent higher.
> "Moreover", added Eastcott in his report to the technical journal, the Lancet, "it is the same for women as for men and is consistent at all ages over 35 and for all the principal parts of the country."

Further on it reads:

> Eastcott was emphatic—for a statistician. "The conclusion follows that immigrants from Great Britain to New Zealand are affected by their former environment and that this effect is related to the length of exposure in that environment", he said. His findings were "in keeping with what is known of the mode of action of the carcinogens, cancer causing chemicals, isolated from the atmospheres of industrial cities."

There are many other articles from which I could quote but I do not want to take too much time. However, there is an editorial that appeared in the Globe and Mail of March 19, 1956. It refers to the committee on air pollution of the Ontario legislature and reads in part as follows:

> The committee on air pollution of the Ontario legislature reports that smoke and smog in their various forms cost the people of this province about $120 million a year—which is as much as they are currently spending on highways. The difference is that in the one case they have greater convenience to show for it. In the other, all they have to show is a series of inconveniences running all the way from dry cleaning bills to—probably—lung cancer.

I have articles and editorials from the Brantford Expositor, the Peterborough Examiner and many others which I could quote but I think that is unnecessary. There can be no doubt now that diesel fumes are a contributory factor in causing lung cancer. I would venture to suggest that there may be some connection between the increased incidence of heart conditions and the increase of carbon monoxide in the air. Many people are concerned about this problem as evidenced by the number of articles and editorials appearing in the press. The situation will become more serious with the terrific increase in the number of motor vehicles. I want to express my appreciation at this time to some of those who have assisted, encouraged me, and supplied material.

They include Gypsum Lime and Alabastine, Canada, Limited, at Caledonia; Mr. Hulme of the Brantford Expositor; Dr. Morris Katz, chairman of the Canadian section of the technical advisory board on air pollution; and Dr. O. H. Warwick, executive director of the National Cancer Institute of Canada.

I am sure that all hon. members in this house will realize the danger of this condition and I trust they will support this resolution.

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances I would have waited until later on in the debate to participate but, for personal reasons, I must leave the house shortly. In view of the obvious relation between this motion and the Department of National Health and Welfare I thought that at this time I should say a few words as indeed I did last year. A careful perusal of the resolution in the form in which it is now presented by the hon. gentleman I think will indicate that my colleague the Minister of Justice will have an interest in the matter as the resolution has been amended this year to provide that there should be necessary amendments under the Criminal Code to provide penalties against owners or operators of all diesel powered vehicles or railway engines for failure to equip such vehicles with some suitable device to render harmless, poison gases emitted from the exhaust of such vehicles or engines. The Minister of Justice will deal with this aspect of the problem but I should like to deal with those aspects which are of special concern to the Department of National Health and Welfare.

As I said last year, the resolution presented by the hon. gentleman serves to underline the increased attention which is now being given by health authorities to problems in the field of environmental health. As the hon. gentleman himself well knows, for many years now the Department of National Health and Welfare as well as provincial and local authorities have carried out measures to safeguard human health by ensuring the safety and purity of drinking water, foods, drugs and insecticides. As a matter of fact, the Food and Drugs Act is possibly the oldest continuing statute that comes under federal control and it deals with many aspects of the problems which have been included in the fields covered by the resolution presented by the hon. gentleman. As he himself has noted, more recently problems relating to the air we breathe have come under the surveillance of governments, both national and provincial and in some cases municipal; and in the case of the United States and Canada the matter has received some measure of international attention.

Air pollution, of course, has been an inevitable accompaniment of industrialization and the growth of our large cities. My hon. friend made reference to the work of Dr. Warwick, formerly director of the Canadian cancer institute. I do not know that I would be justified in drawing the conclusions that he has drawn but I can say that under the national health program funds have been put at the disposal of the national cancer institute and, through it, to the various medical centres in Canada to undertake research in respect of the matters from which he has drawn such strong deductions.

As he himself has pointed out, in the Detroit-Windsor area the Department of National Health and Welfare in co-operation with the Ontario department of health, the department of health of the city of Detroit and the board of health of the city of Windsor carried out one of the most extensive investigations into the relation between air pollution and human health ever undertaken anywhere. This was a study that lasted over a period of years. It represented pioneering efforts and the results of the study, which are now being carefully assessed, we trust will yield information of value to health departments everywhere. It may be that, as a result of the information which we acquire from this study that is now being undertaken in both countries, it will be possible for us to make certain assessments about the environment in which we live, particularly in industrial centres.

The subject matter of the resolution introduced by my hon. friend, however, relates to one aspect of the over-all problem of air pollution—what I have been saying has been in reference to general aspects of the whole problem of pollution—and this problem, I may assure my hon. friend, as he well knows, is the matter of considerable study and attention by the officers of the occupational health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, who, in conjunction with experts in several universities in Canada, have been giving careful and devoted attention to this matter. There is no doubt that the operation of diesel engines in certain situations, especially in mining operations, in tunnels and in more or less confined spaces, represents a danger to health. The control of this hazard in such cases is usually achieved by the installation, as I indicated last year, of adequate ventilation facilities. In stationary type engines the exhaust gases must be removed by piping into appropriate exhaust gas ventilators or ducts for disposal of such fumes. It is possible that the operation of such vehicles or engines in the open atmosphere may constitute a hazard to public health in the areas of dense traffic and population. My hon. friend will be interested in knowing, if he is not already aware of the fact—and I am sure he is—that at Harvard University, considerable studies are being carried out in this general field.

This phase of the problem, in addition to what is being done at Harvard, is now, as I indicated last year, under intensive investigation in the Los Angeles area, and also by the automotive industry in both Canada and the United States. Last year I said it was under investigation only in the United States but since the matter was discussed here steps have been taken and the industry is now engaged in studies of this problem.

The waste products of internal combustion engines include unburnt fuel or hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide, aldehydes and oxides of nitrogen, as well as carbon, soot, tarry material and other products, including water vapour. I do not know whether my hon. friend mentioned water vapour but my technical officers advise me that that is the fact.

I am further advised that the theory has been put forward in the Los Angeles area that smog is formed to a major degree by the interaction of such hydrocarbon waste products with oxides of nitrogen in the presence of oxygen and sunlight. Such chemical interactions of pollutants may be related to eye irritations and other health effects that have been observed, and some crop damage sustained in the Los Angeles area.

My hon. friend, in this connection, spoke of cancer and I hesitate to speak too firmly on that aspect because conclusions will be drawn from what I say. However, researches that are being carried on carefully take into account the possibility, as was done in the case of other suggested provocations having to do with the alleged cause of lung cancer. It is known that in the immediate vicinity of diesel engine exhaust the concentration of aldehydes and oxides of nitrogen may be sufficient to produce considerable eye, nose and throat irritation; that is a known fact. The other is conjecture, and as my hon. friend nods, he will indicate that a conjecture is possibly more freely open to him than it is to me because of the technical advice which, as Minister of National Health and Welfare, I must act upon. But I do suggest it is important for us to realize that we can give false directions by drawing conclusions that may possibly be understandable but which, in the absence of control, it is best, certainly from my point of view, to leave to the research scientists.

Various control methods to meet the problem which my hon. friend properly mentions have been suggested, and suggested for the reduction of the toxicity of the various gases from internal combustion engines. These include systems for treating exhaust gases, such as catalytic exhaust converters, which we discussed last year, after-burners, absorbers, condensers and filters. Likewise, other proposals concern systems which modify engine operating conditions such as manifold vacuum control, deceleration fuel cut off, ignition timing control and recycling of exhaust gases and fuel injection.

I feel it is only right to point out that objectionable visible smoke and fumes may be reduced greatly by improved maintenance practices and here the municipality and industry itself have an opportunity to make a contribution to this important problem, a problem that is becoming increasingly important with the number of large cities that are being created in this country and with the increase in population of the cities now in being. In this connection my hon. friend will be interested, as I know the house will be, that there is under way an investigation by the automotive industry itself covering such proposals as a change in the design of cylinder combustion chambers, carburetors, and intake manifolds. The research centres of at least two of the large automobile companies are making very serious efforts to deal with this particular problem in their own factories, and are pooling their research, their evidence and their conclusions, with the people in my own department and with others who are likewise engaged in these problems in Canada.

It has been shown in both field and laboratory tests by the Los Angeles air pollution control district that approximately 7 per cent of all fuels used by automobiles are discharged unburnt into the atmosphere. Of course, this does constitute the greatest single source of hydrocarbon loss in that community, and I presume as well in other areas. The fact is that, notwithstanding the urgency, notwithstanding the importance of the problem, I am adviced by my officers that no success has yet been achieved in securing the development of a control device suitable for controlling the emission of exhaust gases from automobiles.

Mr. Charlton: That is from gasoline engines?

Mr. Martin: Yes. Now, in the case of diesel engines a limited amount of control has been achieved with the installation of exhaust gas absorbers which contain alkaline and other types of solution for the removal of aldehydes and oxides of nitrogen. Several companies in both this country and the United States, and I believe in the United Kingdom, are experimenting with what are called catalytic systems for more complete combustion of exhaust gases and also with various types of after-burners. But the fact is that this work is still in the experimental or developmental stage, and much more study and research will have to be continued before adequate means are available for the control of emissions from trucks, tractors, buses and other types of vehicles on highways and railways.

Apart from the abatement of smog and visible exhaust fumes by proper maintenance practices, the development of effective controls for exhaust gas and waste products is contingent upon the success of studies now in progress. The air pollution study to which I directed the attention of the house a moment ago, I think, does serve as a pattern of what can be done, at least statistically to indicate the extent of this factor as a problem or as a causation in ill health. It may be that once the studies on the air pollution project have been completed, we will be in a better position to form certain deductions. But that remains to be seen. I have tried to hasten the conclusion of this study, but our scientists require that their work be done carefully. I have no doubt that when it is done it will prove to be a tremendous advantage, not only in a particular area but throughout the world.

I am not dealing with any of the legal aspects of this problem. These will be dealt with by the Minister of Justice. I would point out to my hon. friend, and I do this not because we are seeking to escape responsibility in a matter of this sort, because no one would want to take refuge behind the division of constitutional powers: if this is the way to do it and we have the power, well that is one thing. I assume that during the course of this discussion there will be some suggestion that this is the case. The Minister of Justice will have to deal with that aspect of the problem in the light of the division of powers provided under the British North America Act. Then, we will have to give consideration as to what is thought to be the most effective way of dealing with this problem, but I would not want to suggest that we are the only ones in Canada who are concerned in this problem.

On the research side I suppose, in terms of government and because of the special facilities we have in the Department of National Health and Welfare, we are perhaps well set up to give this proper attention. On the administrative side, however, it would be wrong for me to suggest that the only interested agency is the Department of National Health and Welfare. This problem is receiving careful consideration by the department of highways in Ontario, the government of Ontario and the Ontario legislature. My hon. friend will recall that the Ontario legislature set up a committee to deal with this very problem. I have had the opportunity of discussing this matter recently with that committee which I understand is about to make specific recommendations on this very matter to the Ontario legislature in current session. It may be that the information they will produce will prove to have a further clarifying and supporting value.

I should point out that since this resolution was discussed last year certain further steps were taken in addition to those that had already been enumerated by me when I spoke on the motion which my hon. friend had put forward. Since that time our department has acquired from the international joint commission additional assistance in the form of the services of an expert in the field of air pollution to further intensify our study and efforts in this particular field. In addition to that, officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare have been given the opportunity of rendering, I think, rather important advisory assistance to the board of transport commissioners in the revision of existing regulations governing atmospheric pollution from railway steam and diesel locomotives under various operating conditions.

As I said a moment ago, since we discussed this matter last the Ontario legislature has acted by setting up a committee of its members to investigate this whole problem; but all of these developments, positive as they are in character and encouraging as they are on that account, nevertheless do not alter the basic fact that we have not yet found an effective way of dealing with gases emitted by diesel engines and other vehicles. In spite of that fact, as my hon. friend knows, the department has for long been interested in this problem; our interest is centred in the work of the occupational health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare which was set up in 1946 specifically for this and related purposes. Therefore I can assure my hon. friend and the house that in so far as our department can we shall continue to keep fully abreast of all the developments in a field which we must assume, generally speaking, in the absence of full proof, could have and probably does have, a very great effect on the levels of public health. As long as there are these possibilities it must remain the continuing concern of departments of health, national and provincial, of organizations like the world health organization, to look upon this as one of the subjects which must engage their most vigorous attention.

Mr. Charlton: Will the minister permit one question? He says there is no way now of dealing with the diesels. How can he make that statement when it has been proven beyond any doubt that these diesel motors which are used under ground—it is true there is ventilation—with scrubbers have proved to be very satisfactory in taking from the fumes the harmful ingredients? That has been successful. Why cannot these same scrubbers be used above ground as well as under ground?

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend is assuming the validity of the premise which he has established. There can be, of course, only one answer to that. If the premise is right then of course it must follow, but I make two points. First of all, it has not been accepted as a scientific fact. Second, if it were so, there is the question of the power of the federal government at the present time to deal with matters of that sort. I have purposely kept away from the latter so that the Minister of Justice could deal with the constitutional and legal aspects.

Mr. Charlton: The United States department of mines say it is accepted.

Mr. Martin: We had the same thing last year.

Mr. G. W. McLeod (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise to give my support to this resolution. It has taken in possibly a greater area and assumed a wider scope than I thought it would when I read it on the order paper.

Of course, this entire matter of air pollution is also very timely, and is occupying the brains of our best research men and women in different parts of the world. However, when I read this resolution I was thinking more of the mechanical side of it and mechanical attachments on motors in operation to protect the operators and the riders or occupants of cars, or those in the immediate vicinity of the motor at the time of operation.

The hon. member for Brant-Haldimand has covered so much territory and given so much information on this subject that I find it rather difficult to have very much to say. However, carbon monoxide in so far as motor cars and carriers are concerned is certainly recognized and described as the stealthy killer. It not just car operators who are concerned. Tractor operators on farms are subject to a certain amount of danger in the continuous breathing of air that has become polluted by slight traces, and in some cases heavier traces, of this deadly gas.

In the open air, of course—and this is where ventilation comes into the picture, of which we have heard so much in the last few minutes—the danger is not so great; but continuous emission of small amounts of this gas does have a harmful effect on tractor operators and others operating vehicles in the open air. The sad part of this, in so far as car operation is concerned, is that it is not just the operator who suffers. Every occupant of the car is faced with the same danger and the same injury as the driver himself or herself. This brings up, of course, the mechanical attachment which makes dangers from carbon monoxide of very little importance in the operation of cars. As a garage man and operator of some years' standing I have been greatly concerned about the carelessness of car operators and car owners when it comes to the matter of having mufflers on their cars in tip-top shape. We know that a muffler is not 100 per cent effective, and we know that plugging every hole in the fire wall and in the floor boards and making car bodies practically air tight are not effective, but at the same time, Mr. Speaker, it would go a long way in preventing the casualties that we continuously read of in the papers of this country.

I too, read the article in the Globe and Mail to which the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand referred, and it is certainly a tragedy.

It is a common occurrence and the part that particularly struck me was the last line or two of the article wherein it stated that the owner and operator of the motor vehicle took his car to a garage on Saturday. The garage was busy and the job had to be put off and arrangements made to have it done at a later date. The job referred to was the installation or repair of a muffler. Here we have a case where a man knew it was dangerous to drive his car and yet he said, as so many others say, "Oh well, I have driven it this way for a certain length of time and surely a few more days won't hurt", and so we read what happened on Saturday. He took the car out on the road and he and his lady friend paid the supreme penalty by asphyxiation due to his carelessness in not having the muffler repaired when he knew it was faulty. It is these things I am thinking of when I rise to say the few words I intend to contribute to this debate with regard to the need for the Minister of Justice to amend the Criminal Code in some manner whereby it will be considered an offense if any person operates a car which he knows is not completely equipped with the attachments that modern engineering has proven to be if not wholly at least in some measure effective. And so I would strongly add my plea to that of the hon. member who has just spoken. I realize that the Department of National Health and Welfare, together with other welfare and health organizations throughout the world, is taking a great interest in the study of the great problem of air pollution, but as I said I am going to confine my remarks to the smaller field of the operation of motor vehicles by individual owners and drivers.

In connection with garage work one can go a little further. It is not an uncommon thing to see a mechanic working on a car with the motor running at full blast in a garage which provides little space for the workshop, the doors and windows closed and the deadly fumes escaping into the air. I must confess that on more than one occasion I have been guilty of this and my mechanics have also been guilty and I have personally suffered the headaches and discomforts which follow such exposure. Many of us will have had a similar experience and despite this we continue to take chances of that kind. In our garage as in most garages we have provided what is looked upon as a safety measure. We have long hoses to conduct the fumes from the exhaust of cars to the outside. We realize this will alleviate the possibility of danger to a large degree but that is something that should be made compulsory under the criminal law of Canada. That is one of the things I would think of in asking for amendments to the Criminal Code.

In the same vein those following in the wake of diesel cars on the highways are forced to breathe the fumes that are given off from these motors. This subject was carefully and widely covered by the previous speakers but I would like to point out that in cases of this kind we are forced to inhale the fumes from these diesel motors. As we all know, these fumes contain the residue of chemicals, particularly tar, to use its common name. Tar is not burnable and at the present time a controversy is raging as to the effect it has on stimulating the growth of cancer. It is rather generally admitted that tar is an irritant that will cause cancer. I am satisfied that today mechanical gadgets are available which in large measure can remove the harmful chemicals from exhaust fumes, and although they may not render their inhalation absolutely safe, in large part they remove the danger from exposure to noxious fumes.

We are well aware of the struggles the municipalities are having in order to make the air we breathe purer and we are aware of the smog menace in our coast cities. These dangers are being studied by authorities throughout the world. This forces upon us the realization that greater sums of money must be spent on research work in order to bring the matter of air pollution under control. I strongly endorse the recommendation that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) bring in amendments with teeth whereby under the Criminal Code it will be compulsory for every operator of motor vehicle, whether it be diesel or the common gas combustion type, to apply to his vehicle all the features developed by mechanical engineering today and approved as being at least partially effective in obviating the danger of asphyxiation. I would also like to see an amendment made to the Criminal Code under which it would be necessary for garages to employ the regular type of ventilation hose wherever a car is operated in a closed space. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. W. G. Blair (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in support of the resolution presented by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Charlton). I congratulate him on bringing this resolution before the house for a second time, and while it is true that our population in Canada is 16 million and we have many large open spaces, yet we are developing industrial areas where air pollution is constituting a problem. In congratulating the hon. member I wish to say that I consider he is doing some pioneer work in bringing this resolution before the house. Increased traffic and the development of industry are producing a condition where air pollution is becoming a menace and possibly jeopardizes health.

Mention has been made of an amendment to the Criminal Code, and in considering this matter one must remember that smog and smoke produced by industrial firms has usually been dealt with by municipalities under nuisance by-laws, but with the growth of population this is becoming increasingly important and more difficult to control. The traffic on the streets and highways in areas where the population has grown is steadily increasing, and some measure of control will ultimately have to be taken in order to deal with the matter. If the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand has done one thing, I believe he will be responsible for stimulating more research into the menace of noxious gases and smog and some research may be conducted into means whereby the problem can be dealt with effectively. I am not sure just how far medical research has been carried in the relation of cancer to air pollution.

One sure thing is that these conditions do not make for better health in the country. If there is a cause for the increase in lung cancer, research might very well be carried on into the conditions described by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand. We are aware that cancer is caused by irritation and there is irritation present under these conditions.

I feel there is a field for research as described by the hon. gentleman. This matter should receive the careful consideration of the house and research should be carried on as suggested in an effort to find means whereby these obnoxious gases and smokes may be cleared out of the air. It is true that there are only 16 million people in this country with its vast area and these conditions do not exist all over the country. However, there are concentrations of these obnoxious gases and smokes in certain areas, particularly industrial areas, which are causing trouble. There is no danger in other parts of the country because the concentration is not heavy enough to affect public health.

I am glad the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. McLeod) brought up the question of mufflers. Hardly a day passes, particularly during the winter season, but some person is killed by carbon monoxide poisoning due to a faulty exhaust pipe on the car. I think something should be done in connection with the sale of used cars to the public. Such cars should be checked thoroughly in order that this menace may be eliminated. Something should be done about it.

There should be a greater awareness on the part of the public of the danger of carbon monoxide poisoning. As I said, research will have to be carried out to find possible means of preventing these conditions, especially in the industrial areas of Canada. Research will have to be carried out to devise something that may be attached to engines in order that this may be stopped. If the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand has done nothing else today he has made us aware of the existing menace and the need for research into conditions that exist at the present time.

Mr. A. M. Campbell (The Battlefords): Mr. Speaker, while I am aware of the many dangers which have been pointed out by the hon. member who introduced this resolution I had hoped that during the course of his speech he would have indicated some method that might be adopted to remove the menace created by these gases. I should like to support the resolution but I do not see how I can, considering the way it is worded. I am ready to support the whole idea of doing something to protect the public against these gases. The resolution reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of taking steps to further protect the health of the nation by making the necessary amendments under the Criminal Code, to provide penalties against owners or operators of all diesel powered vehicles or railway engines for failure to equip said vehicles with some suitable device to render harmless, poisonous gases emitted from the exhaust of such vehicles or engines.

The reference to some suitable device is what sticks me. If the hon. member had indicated that there was in existence a device which had the backing of scientific people as being suitable, then probably I could have supported the resolution; but for us in this House of Commons to ask the government to amend the Criminal Code so that people may be fined who are operating these vehicles unless they equip them with a suitable device is not only putting the cart before the horse, it is putting it so far ahead that we are really getting ahead of ourselves.

The whole problem needs research. Our research people should study the matter. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) has said, this problem is being studied not only in this country but in other countries throughout the world. When our research people and scientists come up with a device which will do away with the menace created by these gases, then I submit will be the time to think about finding ways and means of making its use compulsory on all vehicles.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, this resolution points out the importance of private members' resolutions, the importance of having a day set aside for the discussion of matters which sometimes do not fall within the scope of the federal legislature. While direct action cannot be taken in connection with many resolutions, they do have the effect of bringing matters before the public which perhaps do not seem to be of great importance but which do receive wide publicity when discussed in a legislature such as this and sometimes eventuate in some authority or other taking the initiative and doing something about it.

There is no doubt that air pollution is becoming a serious matter. In southern Ontario where industrialization has caused a great concentration of people with a tremendous use of machinery and motor vehicles the air is being seriously polluted. In Vancouver this year there was almost a three-week period during which the smog was so dense that almost 100 per cent of the air flights had to be cancelled or delayed for many hours.

I understand that the scientists have determined that while the waste effluents from internal combustion engines were not the entire cause of this smog, that there were other contributing factors such as a stratum of warm air, nevertheless the gases and smokes from diesel and automobile engines as well as furnaces did play a very great part in creating the condition. A thorough study must be made, and the sooner this is done the better it will be for the health of our people generally.

Of course this is one of the prices we must pay for progress. In the days of the horse and buggy the air was always more pure, but then again statistics show that the life expectancy in those days was much lower than it is today.

With the improvements in industrialization and general health care and with better food, life expectancy has been greatly increased. As time goes on we are undoubtedly going to face the possibility of air pollution from the effluent of atom-powered motors, engines, hydroelectric installations and so on, but even with such times approaching undoubtedly life expectancy will also increase with the general improvement in health standards, et cetera. The national health program will, of course, be fully effective by that time and will go a long way toward improving the health of the people of Canada. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) has referred to mufflers on automobiles.

Mr. Hansell: Okanagan-Revelstoke.

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. McLeod). It appeared to me he was under the impression that mufflers had some effect in purifying the exhaust from automobiles. Perhaps I am mistaken in my understanding of what he said. If so, a reading of his remarks in Hansard will indicate whether that is correct. At any rate, the purpose of a muffler on an automobile is simply to dissipate the irritating noises. The exhaust pipe is the important factor, and without mufflers I think that passengers in automobiles would be less likely to be disturbed by gases coming into the interiors of their cars. A muffler has no effect whatever in purifying the gases. Certainly mufflers, if any, on diesel engines are completely ineffective.

The fact that the exhaust pipe on a diesel-powered truck is in some cases pointed towards the sky and rises above the body of the truck in no way dissipates the gases. The vacuum immediately behind a large truck is so strong that it sucks the gases back on the roadway. One does not care to have the experience too often of following behind a large diesel truck. Normally the drivers of trucks are courteous and make every effort to let a passenger car pass. Generally speaking, however, they travel at the full limit allowed by the various provincial laws and therefore one often has to travel for many miles behind one of these large trucks.

This fact points up something I have felt to be somewhat improper about our whole transportation system. Large trucks travel for many hundreds, even thousands, of miles alongside rail lines and in most cases the railways can operate much more cheaply. A diesel locomotive with two units will cross the prairies hauling 100 or 125 40 or 50 ton cars. Each diesel truck has one motor, one or two men on the truck and carries not more than 20 to 40 tons of freight. It requires a great deal more motive power to carry the same amount of freight hauled by diesels on the steel rails where once the train is in motion very little extra power is required.

We are discussing suggested legislation to provide for the purification of exhaust gases, but there are other poisons we overlook which are absorbed by millions of Canadians every day, every hour and every minute. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) has introduced a resolution many times with regard to cigarette smoking. We just laugh off the warning that cigarettes or tobacco are injurious to our health. Some individuals smoke a package or two packages of cigarettes a day and in all probability do themselves much more serious harm than through breathing the fumes from a car, a diesel locomotive or a truck.

I think we have to keep these things in perspective, and the federal government particularly should not rush into amending the Criminal Code and putting in it provisions which we would find it impossible to administer and enforce. When the hon. member for The Battlefords (Mr. Campbell) was speaking I wondered whether he had in mind that in operating a diesel tractor on the wind-swept prairies it would be necessary to put something on the tractor to purify the air because, with the wind blowing, the air there is probably as pure as it can ever be and an installation such as suggested in the resolution would be completely unnecessary.

The resolution certainly has its merits and I would be disposed to support it if I felt that its implementation would mean that we would be able to administer the legislation.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand is to be congratulated on having brought to the attention of the house a problem which while not too serious yet in most parts of Canada is becoming more and more serious in some, a problem with respect to which we here owe it to ourselves and to the nation to take steps beforehand so that by the time it reaches really serious proportions we will have worked out some solution to it. We are in the fortunate position, however, that there are many places on this and other continents where the problem is encountered to a very much more oppressive degree than in any part of Canada.

The hon. member who introduced the resolution I think was right when he said that our first task is to ask ourselves what the nature of the problem is. The problem is really a question as to the degree of concentration of diesel and other automotive exhaust fumes which, if encountered in sufficient degree of concentration, will cause trouble.

In reference to this problem one point that I want to establish is this. One of the main purposes in consolidating the Canadian Criminal Code was to reach a condition under which Canadians would know they were not guilty of any crime at all unless it could be found within the confines of the code and that we should keep to a minimum the number of crimes defined in our Criminal Code.

I am one who profoundly believes that it is quite improper to cure a problem that is capable of any other kind of solution by passing a law and saying that from such and such a date a certain act shall be a crime. I think such procedure is improper because it is first of all wrong in principle, and because in most cases that method is an extremely clumsy way of curing the problem; and I cannot think of any case in which it would be more clumsy than it would be in the present case which we are debating. If the problem is a question of the degree of concentration of diesel or other automotive exhausts, then I suggest that there are varying degrees of concentration across Canada, and that in very few places in Canada will the degree of concentration be sufficiently intense to cause trouble. I suggest that it would give rise to a rather absurd situation if we should make it a crime under the Criminal Code, as has been suggested, for a man to drive a diesel truck across the prairies with the prairie winds blowing and where the degree of concentration of his exhaust is manifestly, on the face of it, quite incapable of causing any harm to anyone. If we were to consider the enormous variation of circumstances under which an offence of that character could be committed from British Columbia through to Newfoundland I think we would find that in perhaps 99 per cent of the environments in which the problem of harmful exhaust gas could arise at all, the degree of concentration of the exhaust that would be involved would harm no one and therefore should not cause the owner of the vehicle to be declared a criminal.

In this, as in all matters, we must first consider the nature of the problem, second the nature of the solution and then, if that solution involves the passage of a law, the level of government at which the solution should be applied. When we are attempting to protect the people of Canada from a concentration of automotive exhaust fumes, surely we should confine our legislation to those areas in which the degree of concentration is likely to be of some danger to the public. That being the case, Mr. Speaker, I submit that it would be quite absurd to say that it was a crime throughout the whole of Canada, in the terms of the resolution, for the owners or operators of all diesel powered vehicles or railway engines to fail to equip said vehicles with some suitable device to render harmless, poisonous gases emitted from the exhaust of such vehicles or engines. For it would be the absence of the device which would be the gravamen of the offence and the fact of the matter could be that, even without the device, the vehicle's exhaust gas would hurt nobody.

It therefore seems to me that the steps which have already been taken by the authorities in Canada constitute the intelligent approach to this problem.

As my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare has indicated, his department has for some years past been conducting experiments to determine whether public health is adversely affected by fumes from diesel engines, whether on railroads or highways; and that so far there is no conclusive evidence to show that public health is being adversely affected. I submit that there is therefore no foundation for amending the criminal law so as to make failure to have a device upon an automotive engine a crime.

If there are places—as I believe there are, as in greater Montreal, greater Toronto, Winnipeg perhaps, Vancouver and other centres of population and perhaps on the Queen Elizabeth highway, although that may not be the case—where, in the interests of public health it is necessary that automotive vehicles should be so equipped, it seems to me that there are already existing provisions in the provincial statutes that enable this problem to be taken care of. For example, the public vehicles act of Ontario, which is Revised Statutes of Ontario, chapter 322, provides in section 24 that the lieutenant governor in council may make regulations:

> (k) prescribing the condition in which public vehicles shall be kept and prescribing the equipment to be carried by public vehicles and the condition and location in which the equipment shall be kept.

The lieutenant governor in council has merely to pass an order in council under this section, an existing section of the Ontario act, to say—if it is considered wise to do so—for example that all diesel automotive engines operating within Toronto or in whatever cities they wish to add or upon certain highways, shall be equipped with a suitable device.

Then we come to the point which the hon. member for The Battlefords (Mr. Campbell) has raised, namely that in our preliminary research upon this thing we must get to the stage that we can affirm that we have something more than "a suitable device". For the problem to which the scientific men are addressing their attention at the present time is that of finding out what is a suitable device. My information is that they have not yet found out what a suitable device is.

It therefore seems to me that it would be wrong for even the lieutenant governor in council in Ontario to make it an offence for an automotive vehicle not to have a device attached to that automotive vehicle until it is established by fairly conclusive scientific evidence that some person knows what would be a suitable device to attach. We should not pass any laws until the proper scientific foundation has been laid for those laws; and that when they are passed, they should take the form of provincial laws tailored to meet the needs of the particular community in which this type of problem is encountered. Otherwise, if we do not do that, if instead we pass an amendment to the Criminal Code we might find ourselves in the absurd position where some automotive operator on the western prairie, with not even any habitations within three or four miles, could be held up and condemned as a criminal for the crime of not having his vehicle properly equipped when it would be perfectly apparent to everybody that the exhaust of his vehicle or that of 20 such vehicles in that particular area could not cause the least harm to anybody.

Now, as I have said the public vehicles act of Ontario makes that provision. Then there is another statute in Ontario, the public commercial vehicles act of Ontario, chapter 304 of the revised statutes of that province, which authorizes the lieutenant governor in council to make regulations. Subsection (k) reads:

> Prescribing equipment to be carried by a public commercial vehicle and the condition and location in which the equipment shall be kept.

A "public commercial vehicle" is defined to mean a commercial motor vehicle or trailer operated on a highway by, for or on behalf of any person for the transportation for compensation of goods.

In addition to that the Ontario legislature, in line with the argument which I have been trying to present for the last few moments, has accepted its further responsibility in this regard by setting up a committee which, for the past two years, has been engaged in the study of this problem of air pollution including the effect of diesel engine fumes upon public health. This committee still has that subject matter under consideration. It has not yet reported to the Ontario legislature. It therefore seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that apart from all other considerations it would be singularly discourteous on the part of parliament to speak in relation to a subject matter which is peculiarly the responsibility of the Ontario legislature, by dealing with it in the Criminal Code, an inappropriate statute, while the whole matter is under consideration of the proper legislative body at the proper level of government.

Now, that being so, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I cannot support my hon. friend's motion. I do not think it would be appropriate, until the concentration of population was much greater than it is in most parts of Canada at the present time, to have any amendment to the Criminal Code to make it a crime not to have an attachment of this sort upon automotive vehicles. On the other hand, I am in entire agreement with the mover of the resolution that there are areas in Canada in which it is not only appropriate but essential that automotive vehicles should be so equipped as soon as it is possible for the scientists to tell us that there is, in existence, equipment which is practical, which will operate upon a moving vehicle and which will neutralize the poisons which are put into the atmosphere by both diesel and automotive engines. The reason why I have some doubts upon the score as to whether there is conclusive knowledge upon this subject is that there are in the world places like London, England, for example, and Los Angeles where, from time to time, they have visitations of smog which I am told is due to a high degree of pollution of the atmosphere by automotive and diesel exhausts and industrial effluents.

I should have thought that in places like London and Los Angeles, where the problem is very severe and where their revenues are very substantial, they would not have been deterred by any problem of governmental responsibility from a massive effort to find a solution to this problem; and their solution would be of value to us in respect of our much lesser problem in Canada. My suggestion would be that we should see what the committee of the Ontario legislature brings forward after it completes the consideration it has been giving to this matter.

We also should consider that, so far as diesel locomotives are concerned, paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 290 of the Railway Act authorizes the board of transport commissioners to make orders and regulations generally providing for the protection of property, and the protection, safety and accommodation of the public, and of the employees of the company in the running and operation of trains, and the speed thereof or the use of engines by the company on or in connection with the railway. My information is that the board of transport commissioners for some years has been considering and conducting experiments to determine whether orders of the character of those suggested by my hon. friend's resolution are necessary. So far, the board has not seen fit to make any regulations under this paragraph.

Now, these bodies whose immediate responsibility it is to deal with questions of this type are as yet not willing to make recommendations to their parent bodies. Hence I do not think it would be proper for us to pass a law making a crime non compliance in Canada with that which they are not as yet prepared to recommend. For that reason, I must oppose this resolution.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, as to the question of whether or not scientific investigation has yet established that there is a menace from these exhaust fumes, or whether there is a device capable of dealing with them, I am not qualified to speak and do not intend to discuss that subject at any length. However, with regard to the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), he suggested it would be untimely to adopt this resolution because it would mean passing laws in the absence of certain knowledge on this subject, and also in the light of the fact that at least one provincial legislature has a committee studying the whole subject. It would, of course, be discourteous, as the minister put it, and probably unwise, if in fact the state of the scientific knowledge is as he describes it, to pass a law at this time without further ado.

But as the minister knows, and indeed as he has properly said, in considering amendments to the Criminal Code it is necessary and desirable to obtain the opinions of the enforcement authorities who are the provincial attorneys general. For that reason, in practically every case, certainly since I have been here and quite properly since the minister has been Minister of Justice, when any amendment to the code has been contemplated there have been just those types of consultations with the provincial authorities.

The hon. member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Charlton) is not suggesting that such a practice should be departed from. All he is asking is a proper expression of opinion from this house on the desirability of taking that type of action to implement the opinion of the house by certain proper steps, one of which would be, in the light of a careful assessment of the scientific information on the part both of this government and of the provincial authorities, to hold a consultation with the provincial authorities on the type of device and the terms of the statute or the amendment to the code that may be passed. I do not think that part of it should be any fatal obstacle to the resolution being adopted by this house, but it was with some other features of the minister's remarks that I wanted to deal particularly, because I submit with respect that on reflection he would himself agree that the difficulties he has raised are not really such obstacles to the adoption of the resolution as he suggested they should be.

If I may deal with them in the reverse order in which he raised them, one of the latter points he made and one to which he appeared to attach a great deal of importance was that it would not be desirable in fact to deal with this by federal statute, but that it would be desirable rather to leave it to provincial legislatures to deal with in the light of the existence or otherwise of areas of congestion.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, what I said was that it would not be desirable to deal with it under the Criminal Code, which of course is a federal statute.

Mr. Fulton: That was one of the minister's objections which I shall come to; but he did say, I think, not in so many words but certainly by implication in his remarks, that this is a problem which in its acuteness or existence would in fact vary from place to place, and that it should therefore be dealt with by provincial legislatures as and when they felt the need to deal with it arose and as and when they felt they had the answer—

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Fulton: —at their disposal. However, I do not think that is quite such a compelling argument as the minister suggested, for this reason. I have already said that a consultation with the provinces should certainly take place before any such amendments to the code should be enacted. But it seems inevitable that action to deal with this problem is going to affect the equipment of motor vehicles, including passenger cars, and I suggest it is undesirable that mandatory equipment on vehicles should be dealt with in different ways in different areas; that in one area it should be a compulsory requirement that a certain type of equipment be upon a vehicle and in others it should not. A motor vehicle now travels from area to area, and a car driver is going to run into numerous difficulties when he suddenly finds he is in an area where an exhaust protection device is necessary, whereas in the area from which he started no such device was necessary.

I suggest, therefore, that it is desirable where it can be done, as in this case it can be, without infringing upon provincial jurisdiction and autonomy that laws regarding the safety equipment on cars should, so far as possible, be uniform across the country.

Mr. Garson: Will my hon. friend permit a question at this point?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Garson: To take a concrete example, is he arguing that because it may be necessary to have trucks equipped with this device in Ontario, which trucks travel from Ontario, we shall say, through to Alberta and in doing so go through Manitoba, that therefore it is necessary that all the truck owners in Manitoba should have to equip their trucks in that way even though they do not travel out of Manitoba?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Speaker; I am going to deal with that when I come to this question of making exceptions. I suggest it would be very undesirable that otherwise innocent motorists from Manitoba, where such devices are not necessary, should suddenly find themselves in Ontario and all unknowingly commit some offence against an Ontario statute which requires such devices. It would be desirable, if this can be done, to have the law applicable to the whole country for the reason and on the basis of the principle I have suggested.

Then the minister dealt earlier in his remarks with the problem he has just raised, namely the difficulty of making a law of general application which will in fact be sensible because conditions vary so widely from place to place; and that, to quote the example used, it would be folly under the Criminal Code to require a farm tractor operating on the wind-blown prairies to carry such a device. Well, surely, the minister has had experience with making exceptions and incorporating them in a statute. I should think the simplest possible way to deal with that problem would be to say that this law shall not apply to tractors while operated exclusively on the farm or the property of the owner. These problems do not form insuperable obstacles. The statute is not going to be drafted in a moment; I would expect it is going to be drafted after consultation with provincial authorities, and after taking all these considerations into account.

I come back again to the point I made at the beginning, namely that this is a resolution asking the house to express an opinion as to the desirability of taking action along certain lines so as to deal with a problem that all speakers have agreed is of mounting importance. Where a general solution adopted after such consultation is found not to be applicable in certain instances, or within certain specific limits, then those instances or those limits can be excepted by a very simple paragraph or subclause in the amending statute.

I just come back to the minister's first point. He said he felt that in general it was undesirable to pass a law and say that after such and such a date a certain act will be a crime. He was there dealing with the question of whether this should be dealt with under the Criminal Code; but the first general principle he laid down which he stated he would follow in considering the desirability or otherwise of this resolution—

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend but I really did not say that. What I said was that I was opposed to passing an amendment to the Criminal Code saying that after such and such a date a certain act would be a crime, which act in many, if not in most, of the areas of Canada was obviously not a crime in any sense of the word, not a crime in the sense of being mala in se, not a crime in the sense that it should be prohibited or mala prohibita.

Mr. Fulton: There, of course, we get back to the argument as to whether or not this is a danger to public safety.

Mr. Garson: And whether is is a danger to public safety depends upon the concentration of the contamination.

Mr. Fulton: That is arguable, and that is going back to the question of scientific data that may or may not be available to establish its effects; but all speakers have agreed that the problem is one of mounting importance, and that in certain areas not confined to one province it has reached proportions that require action.

As I understood it, referring to the recent consolidation of the code, the minister did say that an attempt had been made to bring within the scope of one statute and to define all these acts the commission of which would be crimes. Where a problem such as this arose in connection with acts which are now going on, with respect to circumstances applicable today which were applicable yesterday and which will be repeated tomorrow, it did not seem to him to be a sound thing to pass an amendment to the code saying that after this date those acts will be crimes. I think is is unsound to be too ready to amend the Criminal Code to deal with particular situations—

Mr. Garson: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: —but I do not think it is unsound to amend the Criminal Code to deal with general situations—

Mr. Garson: Even if they are innocent?

Mr. Fulton: —and I do not think we could ever adopt it as a general principle that you should not pass an amendment to the code saying that an act will be a crime from tomorrow on simply on the ground that it was not a crime yesterday. That is not a valid objection because, of course, that would be to say in effect there should be no progress; that we refuse to recognize inventions which change the circumstances under which we live and therefore make it possible for people to act in a manner different from the manner in which they acted yesterday. In fact many amendments to the code were made necessary by the invention of the automobile, and other amendments to the code have been made necessary in large measure by the increasing speed at which automobiles can now be driven.

It is perfectly sound to argue that further amendments to the code may be necessary because of the danger to public safety represented by an increasing number of automobiles on the highways and streets of Canada. I am quite sure there will be many other developments in the future which will make necessary amendments to the code, or new departures from it. That is not to say they should be undertaken lightly, and I am not criticizing the minister for wanting to be fully convinced that the action under the Criminal Code is sound and desirable and a satisfactory solution. I would suggest, however, that we must never approach the problem from the point of view that an amendment to the Criminal Code per se is undesirable.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, because I believe the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand has brought forward here a problem which does require attention and some action, and because it seems to me that it would be most desirable in cases of this kind that the action taken should be uniform across the country—because danger to health or safety is as vital in one part of the country as in another—and because I believe it is a proper resolution to suggest that the government should consider the possibility of taking this action by amendment of the Criminal Code, which means of course that it will be in consultation with the provinces and after proper consideration of the scientific data available, I hope the house will agree that the resolution should be supported.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members of the house realize we are dealing with a very important question. I think too there will be a general feeling that the importance of this question is such that it would be desirable if the house could make some decision this afternoon that would bring a little closer some way of dealing with this problem of poisonous fumes emitted by diesel engines.

My colleague the hon. member for The Battlefords has already pointed out certain difficulties that present themselves to us as far as this resolution in its present form is concerned, and the Minister of Justice has underlined some of those difficulties. In view of the stand taken by the Minister of Justice one would assume that if a vote is called on this resolution its chances of passing in its present form are not the best.

As I say, the subject is of such importance that I think the house generally would like to see something better than just a discussion and then the rejection of the resolution. Therefore in a few moments I intend to suggest an amendment to the resolution which I would like to offer in the hope that the alteration proposed by my amendment might make the resolution acceptable to all members of the house. If that is the case then at least some kind of favourable, positive decision can be made by the House of Commons today.

The problem, as we see it and as has already been stated by the hon. member for The Battlefords, is that it does seem somewhat difficult to write it into the Criminal Code that it is an offence not to equip vehicles with a device which is not yet definitely known to be available. There may be some devices that some people feel are available and do the job, but these devices are not referred to in the resolution. I would suggest that because of the very vagueness of that part of the resolution it is a little premature to make the failure to have some unnamed suitable device an offence under the Criminal Code.

We feel, Mr. Speaker, that greater attention should be paid to this problem. I agree with my friend the hon. member for Kamloops that it would be well for the federal government to discuss this matter with the provincial authorities. I think it might be discussed between the Minister of Justice and the provincial attorneys general. I think it might also be discussed between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the provincial ministers of health across Canada. We think also there should be intensified research into this whole problem, and it is along that line that I think the house could unite this afternoon.

It is obvious that we cannot obtain unity in the house on the proposal made by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand, containing as it does a specific reference to the Criminal Code; but I do feel that we might be able to achieve unity on the proposition that research in this field should be intensified. Toward that end, Mr. Speaker, I therefore move, seconded by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

That the resolution be amended by deleting therefrom all the words from the words "making the necessary amendments" to and including the words "for failure to equip said vehicles" and by substituting therefor the following words: "intensifying research to find ways and means of equipping diesel-powered vehicles or railway engines".

Now, Mr. Speaker, having moved the amendment in this form perhaps I might indicate just how the resolution would read if my amendment were accepted. It would read as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of taking steps to further protect the health of the nation by intensifying research to find ways and means of equipping diesel-powered vehicles or railway engines with some suitable device to render harmless, poisonous gases emitted from the exhaust of such vehicles or engines.

I regret that I have not a number of copies of the resolution, because we have prepared it while the debate has been proceeding, but I have one for Your Honour and I sent one across the way, and I would be glad to supply one to my friend the sponsor of the original resolution.

The hon. member for Kamloops has commented on the fact that my amendment restricts the subject to diesel-powered vehicles or railway engines. I felt I should do that since that is the wording of the original resolution.

I offer this amendment in the best of faith and in the hope that hon. members on all sides of the house will agree with the proposition I have tried to lay down. I think it would be unfortunate for the house merely to take a negative position with regard to this important issue. It is obvious that the house cannot be expected to give a majority vote to the proposition offered by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand in the form in which he moved it, but we might agree unanimously on the proposition that consideration should be given to the advisability of intensifying research in this field. It is in that spirit that I move the amendment which I have placed in Your Honour's hands.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend was good enough before he moved this amendment—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Before I put the amendment I would ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to follow me rather closely, because I think it is my duty to see that according to my views the wording is appropriate. His amendment commences with these words:

That the resolution be amended by deleting therefrom all the words from the words "making the necessary amendments".

Does the hon. member mean:

All the words from and including the words "making the necessary amendments".

Mr. Knowles: I do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): With the hon. member's permission I will include the words "and including" because I think the resolution will then read much better.

Mr. Knowles: That will be quite satisfactory.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): It is moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

That the resolution be amended by deleting therefrom all the words from and including the words "making the necessary amendments" to and including the words "for failure to equip said vehicles" and by substituting therefor the following words: "intensifying research to find ways and means of equipping diesel powered vehicles or railway engines".

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was good enough before moving his amendment to send a copy across to me with the suggestion that perhaps the government could accept the amendment. As indicated in his remarks, he hoped by his action to secure a unanimous decision of the house in relation to the resolution as amended in the way he is now suggesting. I thought I had made it clear in my remarks, as had the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his, that the department of health, the transport board and the legislature of the province of Ontario have not, through any evidence that has been presented to us, been remiss in the research which they have carried on or in the attention they have given to this matter.

One effect of my hon. friend's resolution would be the implication that these bodies in some way or other have not been carrying on research which was sufficiently intensified up to the present time. I am not by any means an expert in the field of research into this subject but I would think that sort of imputation was undeserved. As I pointed out in my previous remarks, this problem of pollution is found to an infinitely greater degree in many other parts of the world than anywhere in Canada. It is found to a very critical degree in many cities outside of Canada.

It was not so long ago that we read in the newspapers that the whole city of Los Angeles and its environs had been tied up completely, with a discontinuance of business and everything else, by a smog which made any kind of human activity impossible and rendered ill hundreds of its citizens. I do not like to accept the imputation that any Canadian researchers are at fault and that it is possible for them to intensify their research and produce some solution to this problem, when many large cities in the world as well as other countries have had the best researchers they could command deal with this same subject matter yet have not come up with any adequate solution, any more than we have.

So far as my hon. friends of the Conservative party are concerned in relation to this amendment, it seems to me it would be rather embarrassing for them to support it. For if the amendment be correct in its language then there is no foundation whatsoever for the introduction of the resolution; for in such case we are being asked to amend the Criminal Code upon the basis of an inadequate amount of research and an inadequate consideration of the whole matter.

For that reason I suggest respectfully that it might be better to continue this debate a little bit longer to see if we can get a little more wisdom shed upon it by others who are perhaps more capable of shedding it than I. I do not accept the suggestion that the consideration which has been given to this matter by a committee of the Ontario legislature, by the transport board and by the federal department of health has been inadequate, that it can be intensified, that it can be increased. I do not think that is supported by any evidence that has been brought forward by any hon. member.

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister think a scientist who has not solved a particular problem would feel it was a criticism of the work he had done up to a given point to say that he should work still harder to try to find a solution?

Mr. Garson: I certainly do. I think if he was asked to intensify his work the only possible interpretation that could be put upon that would be that he was not working very intensely at the present time. I do not think that is true; I do not think that is warranted. If my hon. friend is seeking unanimity by his amendment I think there is other language he could use.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister suggest some other language?

Mr. Garson: Yes, I will. If you will give me a moment I will be glad to.

Mr. Green: Is the minister going to work out another amendment?

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend can feel quite free to go ahead with his remarks, as it will not bother me at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I hesitate to interrupt again, but perhaps I should point out that if the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra speaks now it would not be competent for me to recognize the Minister of Justice the second time in the same debate.

Mr. Garson: I suggest to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre that he substitute the word "continuing" for "intensifying".

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should not say this, but it seems to me there is not a great deal of difference in the meaning of the two words. Indeed, a scientist who would be offended by one would be offended by the other, but I doubt if either word is offensive. If changing the word "intensifying" to "continuing" will make the amendment acceptable to the Minister of Justice, I shall be happy to make the change.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is it the unanimous understanding of the house that by consent the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East be reworded by striking out the word "intensifying" and substituting therefor the word "continuing"?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): In that case it has been moved as an amendment by Mr. Knowles, seconded by Mr. Winch:

That the resolution be amended by deleting therefrom all the words from and including the words "making the necessary amendments" to and including the words "for failure to equip said vehicles" and by substituting therefor the following words: "continuing research to find ways and means of equipping diesel powered vehicles or railway engines".

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister a question. Is he accepting the amendment with that change?

Mr. Garson: I am accepting the amendment for debate, certainly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I think that is your function, not the minister's. I understood that the minister was prepared to accept the amendment if I made that change.

Mr. Garson: I am accepting it in the sense that after it has been discussed I for my part am quite prepared to support it.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, if the minister is prepared to support that amendment I presume his followers will be prepared to support him, and there is not a great deal—

Mr. Stick: You are presuming a bit too much.

Mr. Green: The hon. member says I am presuming a bit too much, but judging by the experience of the last four years I think I am not presuming a great deal.

Mr. Garson: On a point of order, this is a private member's resolution, of course, and I do not think it is proper for me to undertake to commit all my colleagues with respect to a private member's resolution.

Mr. Fulton: If you were going to oppose it you would certainly hope they would all support you.

Mr. Garson: Oh, yes, but I really have no right to bind anybody other than myself. So far as I am concerned I will vote for it with that amendment.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, to get down to the question before the house, we all agree that this is a matter which merits very careful consideration by the authorities, federal, provincial and municipal, and also by the industries concerned. I suggest that with the amendment that has been moved attention is now focused on research, and in that field the dominion has accepted an increasing responsibility over the years.

The particular question of research into the menace caused by these fumes can be very well undertaken by the national research council. Nothing has been said about the council thus far, the emphasis having been placed on the Department of National Health and Welfare. I have no doubt that department has also been giving consideration to the question, but to what extent research of this kind has been undertaken by the national research council I cannot remember.

I was on the special committee last session which dealt with the work of the council. We were all very favourably impressed by what we heard, and I believe the passing of the resolution in its amended form will provide considerable incentive to the national research council to undertake work that will lead to the solution of the problem. Under these conditions members on this side of the house do not wish to be technical. All we are anxious to do is focus attention on the question itself, and I think the debate as it has been carried on this afternoon will have that effect.

Mr. Garson: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Garson.]

Mr. Green: We will be very glad to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words before we come to a final decision. I am sure we are all anxious to hear the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand, who for two years in succession has brought this matter of great importance to the whole country before the house. I remember that after a rather prolonged discussion last year we came to some kind of amicable decision at the end whereby the hon. member withdrew his resolution rather than press it to a vote. This time, by a sort of three-way peace-making job, we seem to be reaching some kind of basis for agreement.

As far as I am concerned, I think the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra is quite wrong in his assumption that members on this side of the house always follow automatically whatever cabinet ministers say in the case of private members' resolutions. I certainly do not think the record of the last three or four years will bear that out. We have always been encouraged to do our own thinking on these matters, and I can cite notable examples such as the women's equal pay bill, the check-off bill and the paid vacation bill, when we used our own independent judgment.

Mr. Knowles: On the question of advance polls the hon. member voted one way last year and the other way this year.

Mr. Philpott: Surely my hon. friend should be the last man in the house to raise that argument. In the first year I was one of the 11 who voted for his measure whereas 254 members did not vote to support him. As far as switching votes is concerned, after giving the matter mature consideration for one year I decided that the hon. member was not justified in seeking to have the bill passed and I voted the other way, but he forgets that the whole Social Credit group voted against him last year while they voted for him this year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I think I should draw to the attention of the house that speeches at the moment should be directed to whether or not we will vote for the resolution submitted by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand and the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Philpott: That is quite correct. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hope the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will conduct himself accordingly.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Philpott: With respect to the question of pure air and polluted air, I was glad to hear the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand remind the house again today that it is not only a matter of pollution from diesel engines but pollution from all sorts of agencies. I noticed that once again today he brought up the question of lung cancer and cigarette smoking. All over the world scientific authorities are giving more and more attention to the question of health and polluted air. On January 5 of this year there was an authoritative article about the relation of smoking to lung cancer in the British medical journal, which indicated that a person who smokes 40 cigarettes a day has a 70 times greater chance of getting lung cancer than a non-smoker. I do not know whether we would all agree with the solution recommended in the article, because the conclusion arrived at seems to be that the way to cut down the incidence of lung cancer is for everybody to quit smoking cigarettes and go back to chewing tobacco.

Be that as it may, in my opinion more and more interest is being shown in the question of air pollution, and the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand is certainly to be congratulated for bringing it before the house. Those of us who live close to the big cities of Canada see very striking illustrations of the deadliness of some of these gas fumes along the main highways, because it is obvious that adjacent to our great highways even the evergreen trees die wherever traffic is heavily congested and such fumes are present in heavy density.

I think the subject of air pollution is one subject to which every intelligent person in the country should give close attention. Even in Vancouver, where we hardly ever have a fog, it was only a matter of a month or two ago that we had that really deadly thing, a smog. I know that for whole days afterwards the papers devoted columns and columns to explaining how we happened to get that upside-down air.

On the precise suggestion that we have before us, may I say this, I confess that I have sat here all afternoon and listened to this discussion, and I hoped that we would not be obliged to have a vote on the original motion moved by my hon. friend because it seemed to me that the general sense of this house is favourable to the purpose which he is trying to achieve. However, a good many of us have serious doubts about the exact method he is using to advance his idea. It seems to me that the compromise suggestion which has now been made and which has been at least tentatively accepted by the Minister of Justice—I do not know whether it has yet been accepted by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand, but no doubt we shall hear about that—is a much more sensible proposal indeed.

I for one would judge that there could be no great objection if there should be in the Criminal Code some kind of clause making pollution of the air a crime. In fact, although perhaps I am wrong in this, it seems to me that even as the code now stands there are clauses that could be held to make pollution of the air a crime. It seems to me there could be in the code a general provision making pollution of the air a crime but that there could be a provision, under either the provincial authority or the municipal authority, for applying that provision in the appropriate places.

I think this whole question is one of profound importance to the people. If we are really interested in methods of improving health; if we are now going ahead with these plans for hospital and health insurance and other measures to improve the health of our Canadian people; and if we are all willing year after year to spend more and more money on trying to restore to health those of our people who are in ill health, I certainly think it is only common sense that we should do everything within our power to take steps to preserve the health of the people. Certainly clean, pure air is one of the prime necessities for the good health of the people. I therefore hope we arrive at an agreed solution on this proposed amendment. I hope the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand can see his way clear to accept the amendment, and that we can get a unanimous decision on this matter.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Vancouver South I have been listening with some interest to this debate as it has progressed this afternoon, and I thought I might like to say a few words of my own before it concluded, as closely related to the subject matter under discussion, I think, as that of lung cancer, about which the hon. member for Vancouver South was speaking. Actually what has prompted me to rise in my place in this connection is the use of certain words by the Minister of Justice when he was speaking earlier this afternoon. During the course of his speech he made reference to greater Toronto, greater Montreal and greater Vancouver.

When we are discussing this question of the pollution of air which has prompted the hon. member, in introducing this resolution, to suggest the need to pass a law to make it a crime, I think it might be profitable to think for a few minutes about the root cause of this air pollution. I suggest perhaps it might be just as well if someone were to suggest that when we speak of greater Toronto, greater Montreal and greater Vancouver, we are using that word in a rather incorrect sense. If we were to think a little more about using some of the thousands of unoccupied acres we have across this country for people to live in, instead of having them all huddled together in these metropolitan jungles, we might be coming a great deal closer to a logical solution to this problem than we are by suggesting an amendment to the Criminal Code.

I realize that I have some freedom to speak on this subject—perhaps more than my friend the hon. member for Vancouver South would have—because I happen to come from an area where we can still get a sniff of pure sea breezes once in a while. Though I must say that even on Vancouver island I am at times worried about the increasing congestion in some of the areas of that part of Canada which I think even the hon. member for Vancouver South would agree approaches as close to paradise as does any part of this country.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, I think the fact that a resolution of this kind has been brought forward this afternoon serves to drive home the idea that what is needed in this country is much greater attention to social planning than we have had heretofore. As well as giving immediate attention to the problem of research, as is suggested by the amendment moved by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, we should also be giving greater attention to the problems that are creating the pollution which is referred to in the resolution. That might in the long run be a much more important and sensible point of view from which this parliament could approach this problem.

In his speech the Minister of Justice set forth very well the fact that the incidence of this problem on the prairies in his own province of Manitoba, where someone may be operating a diesel truck along a country highway, is not very great; and that it is only when we allow ourselves to be overcome by this idea that in the size of our cities there is in some way a degree of greatness; when we are swept away with the approach of self-aggrandisement which the administration of some of our cities seem to take to this question, that we multiply the kind of problems that arise with respect to air pollution and a good many of the other social problems that beset us.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this resolution. The resolution as amended does not appear to leave much room for debate. The original resolution stated:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of taking steps to further protect the health of the nation by making the necessary amendments under the Criminal Code, to provide penalties against owners or operators of all diesel powered vehicles or railway engines for failure to equip said vehicles with some suitable device to render harmless, poisonous gases emitted from the exhaust of such vehicles or engines.

That was a definite resolution, Mr. Speaker, but when we leave out all the words after "amendments", between the word "amendments" and "for failure" and place in their stead the words "intensifying research to equip said vehicles with some suitable device", etc., then the only thing we have to debate there is whether we want the research department to continue with this kind of project.

I am sure the national research council are concerned with this tremendous problem and have been working on it. I am sure they do not need a resolution of this house to keep them at work. We are all in sympathy with the problem with which the original resolution intended to deal. We all commend the hon. member of Brant-Haldimand for focussing the attention of this house upon the problem.

We all know that pure air is as essential to good health as pure water. It is logical to assume that we should take whatever measures are possible or necessary to ensure that our air will remain pure, just as we are trying to ensure the purity of our water. We have become increasingly conscious, I think, of the dangerous results to health from an excessive concentration of hydrocarbons in the atmosphere and the possibility that they might, in some way, be related to the increase in the incidence of lung cancer.

The thing that struck me about this resolution is that the hon. member has confined it mainly to diesel-powered vehicles and railway engines. Well, diesel-powered trucks or cars are not the only means of putting an excessive concentration of hydrocarbons into the atmosphere. The internal combustion of hydrocarbons in the combustion chamber of an engine is just a matter of burning these hydrocarbons under pressure with a specified amount of oxygen.

The same thing happens when we burn gasoline, and the same thing happens in our furnaces. The only difference is that in the furnace the combustion does not take place under artificially increased pressure.

In my opinion the confining of the resolution to diesel motors does not seem a very adequate way of dealing with the problem. When we pass a resolution of this house to make it an offence for the owners of diesel-powered trucks or diesel-powered cars or railway engines not to equip their motors with a device to render the exhaust harmless, that certainly must presuppose that such a device exists. If no such device is in existence, then there is not much sense in passing a resolution requiring people to use it.

We know that in certain places in the world, for example in London, England, and in Los Angeles, U.S.A., as was mentioned earlier, this problem is present to a much greater degree than in any part of Canada. Surely the people must be working in this direction of trying to find some sort of device to render the exhaust gases harmless. Especially would one expect to find such devices in rich areas like that of our neighbour to the south or some of the European cities where this problem is much more intense than it is here. If these people had discovered such a device, surely we would have heard something about it. Until we are certain that such a device is actually in existence, is being manufactured, and is available, then it does not seem right for us to pass a resolution which would penalize people for not doing something which it is impossible for them to do.

The other question that occurred to me in connection with this resolution is, if such a device were available why should it be made mandatory only for diesel vehicles? Why should it not also be made mandatory for other motor vehicles, for lighting plants and for the ordinary home furnace? These things burn diesel oil and put the same poisonous gases into the atmosphere that we get from the diesel trucks. If such a device were available, even then, before we pass this resolution, I think we should be very careful not to impose a heavy expenditure upon people in localities where it is not necessary. In the province from which I come we do not have this particular problem at all. In fact when I first read the resolution my reaction was that I wish we did require a measure of this sort in the area of the Atlantic provinces. However, we do not.

Even if such a device were available, I doubt whether it would be right for us to impose that extra expense on the owners and operators of vehicles in localities in which the devices were not necessary. Diesel engines are not used only to propel motor cars and trucks. In my province they are used also to propel fishing vessels. We are encouraging the fishermen to change over to diesel-propelled boats instead of using gasoline motors because of the saving in the cost of operation. Furthermore, in most of the smaller settlements where you do not have hydroelectric power the only means of getting current is from dynamos which are driven by diesel motors.

One of our handicaps in Newfoundland in industrializing our fishery is the lack of cheap hydroelectric power. We have to get our electric power from diesel-operated motors. The cost of operation of the fishing boats, the cost of operation of the lighting plants and the fish processing plants might be greatly increased if they were compelled to conform to a law such as is envisaged by this resolution.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this does not appear to me to be an adequate way of dealing with the problem. We know the problem does exist, and it would not be right for us to pretend that it does not. In some places it is a problem of immediate concern which requires some sort of action, or the best action we can take, to overcome it; but the particular type of action suggested in this resolution is not, so far as we know, within the realms of possibility.

The only suggestion I can make is that those places which have so much industrialization that the air is getting polluted should shift some of their industries down to the eastern provinces, where we have plenty of fresh air, and where it will be a long time before it gets to a state of pollution.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would not wish to have an amendment such as this written into the records if perchance it should not be entirely in order. He is a member who does keep the records and books straight on every occasion, and I hope he will not feel that I am opposed to the resolution or to this amendment when I suggest some doubt as to whether or not the amendment comes entirely within the rules of the house.

My understanding of an amendment is that it must not have the effect of negativing the motion. Citation 341 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition, reads as follows:

> An amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived is out of order.

The motion calls on the government to take definite steps which would culminate in legislation being passed requiring certain individuals to do certain things, namely to instal preventive devices on the exhausts of diesels in order to take out injurious exhaust gases and other things. The amendment simply asks that the status quo be maintained and that we continue to do as we are doing. The original motion would have the effect of disturbing the status quo to some extent.

However, I do not think it is of very great importance, Mr. Speaker; and if you choose to rule that it is entirely in order there is a matter I overlooked in my earlier remarks that I should like to bring to the attention of the house. However, I would first like to have your ruling as to whether you think the amendment is entirely in order.

Mr. Knowles: If what the hon. member for Kootenay East has raised is a point of order on the basis of citation 341 of Beauchesne's third edition, may I ask that consideration be given to citation 338, which is on the same page. It reads in part as follows:

> The object of an amendment may be to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon, or to present to the house an alternative proposition either wholly or partially opposed to the original question.

I submit that is what the amendment does, Mr. Speaker. It presents to the house an alternative proposition which is partially opposed to the original question. I would add further that a straight negative vote against the original motion would not produce the result that the amendment produces, namely that of affirming that there should be a continuation of the research into the finding of ways and means to equip diesel-powered vehicles with a suitable device. I submit that Your Honour will find the amendment in order.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. gentleman rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fulton: He has already done so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am glad the hon. member for Kootenay East did not press his point too strenuously because, while I realize there is some validity in what he has said, I am of the opinion that the amendment would be in order.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member must be pleased. Now he can make his speech.

Mr. Byrne: You will realize, Mr. Speaker, that I just wanted to make sure that I would be in order in speaking a second time. I do not at this moment question your ruling, but I do still stand by my suggestion that an amendment should not have a negative effect.

The matter I had intended to speak about on the original motion is the fact that here in Ottawa, where I have been living the greater part of the time for the past eight years—and there seems to be every indication that I shall be here for some time yet—they have decided on a progressive program to eliminate street cars from their thoroughfares. I understand the intention is to instal diesel buses. Apparently the resolution moved last year by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand did not have a very great effect upon the administrators of civic affairs in this city.

I have had occasion to ride three types of transportation in Ottawa. Undoubtedly the best, the most comfortable and the least noisy —though I cannot say the most efficient, but certainly the speediest of the three types—is the trolley bus.

They operate on several runs in the city, and appear quite efficient. Hydroelectricity is moderately cheap in the area, and the vast St. Lawrence development will provide further amounts of this power. I feel sure the board of control or the Ottawa Transportation Commission have some reasonable arguments as to why they should change over to diesel buses, but one determining factor should be the question of noise and air pollution.

I would suggest that the Ottawa Transportation Commission read thoroughly the arguments presented by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand and see if they cannot alter their opinion regarding the change-over they have in mind. It is not only the pollution of air outside the buses that is objectionable, but inside the buses themselves there is almost invariably a strong odour of diesel fumes. On the other hand, trolley buses are completely free of fumes and are noiseless and extremely comfortable. If the authorities are taking cognizance of the dangers inherent in diesel exhaust surely this city is the very place that should give an example.

We have trolley buses in extensive use on the west coast. As a matter of fact, in most cities the buses are entirely electrical. There are buses which come in from rural areas that tend to pollute the air, but electric trolley buses have proven highly satisfactory. One of the early objections to the use of trolley buses was that they were too noiseless and crept up on people, catching them unaware, and that therefore they were dangerous. That is not a sound argument against the use of trolley buses. There are means of warning pedestrians and automobile traffic of the approach of a bus other than exhaust noises. I recommend to the city of Ottawa that they give careful consideration to the debate which has taken place here this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Charlton: Just before you put the question, Mr. Speaker, may I say a few words. There seems to be considerable misunderstanding in the house today. I am sorry anyone would suggest that I would place a resolution on the order paper without having in mind something in the way of a cure for this situation. I believe it was the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo who suggested we were being asked to pass something and did not know what we were doing. He said it is impossible to pass a resolution here concerning a problem and not offer some solution to the situation.

On January 30 of last year I dealt with the solution at some length. I would ask the hon. member to refer to the debate that took place on that occasion, as reported at page 664 of Hansard. At that time I described a device that has been used underground for a considerable length of time and is accepted by the United States department of mines and by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys here. If this device can be employed underground to render harmless the diesel fumes, then I suggest it would be practical for use on the highways of this country.

I am very grateful to the Minister of National Health and Welfare for his remarks this afternoon. I was pleased to learn of the nature and extent of the research into air pollution being carried out in the Windsor-Detroit area. I did not realize the full extent of that research program.

The minister also said that the resolution dealt with only one aspect of the air pollution problem. I grant that, and the very reason I referred specifically to diesels is that to my knowledge there is no device available that will remove harmful carbon monoxide from gasoline engine exhausts. There is, however, the device I have described which renders diesel exhausts harmless; therefore I specifically referred to diesel exhausts in the resolution, knowing there was a device available for installation on diesel engines.

The minister also suggested there was no proven solution to this problem. I believe that on reflection the minister will realize that in a good deal of the material that is available there is evidence proving the successful use of this device underground, and perhaps he could agree with me that this device would be just as useful on our highways.

The hon. member for The Battlefords said he would support the resolution if a suitable device was suggested. I do not know if he was in the house when I made my speech last year or when I opened my remarks today, but on both occasions I described the device that is available.

I am glad to learn that the Minister of Justice has seen fit to accept the amendment. Certainly one would be less than fair if he did not accept the amendment, because it simply means that we continue the research that has been taking place regarding the device for diesel-powered vehicles or railway engines. In order to meet the convenience of the house I will accept the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Charlton: In doing so I fully realize that the amendment emasculates the resolution; nevertheless if the house is willing to accept the amendment I will go along, because I feel the resolution has served a useful purpose in that it has brought the danger of the situation to the attention of the public, and I am thankful that this debate has taken place.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

MOTION TO AMEND STANDING ORDERS TO SET UP STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, consideration should be given to the advisability of amending standing order 65 (1) by inserting therein, immediately after subparagraph (l) the following new subparagraph: "(m) on veterans affairs to consist of 50 members, 15 of whom shall constitute a quorum".

He said: Mr. Speaker, if I begin my remarks now I am going to be able to speak for only seven minutes; do you mind calling it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Bryce: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to set up a permanent committee on veterans affairs every year or every session when the other committees of the house are set up. To the man on the street this resolution may look rather complicated, but some of my lawyer friends have checked it and they tell me it is correct. I realize how lawyers can disagree on legal points, but I think this resolution is quite all right.

The Department of Veterans Affairs is one of the largest departments of the government, and it is only reasonable that it should have a committee associated with it. There are committees of the house which are not particularly important, but the veterans affairs committee would be important. Perhaps it might not be needed to sit every year, but it would always be there when needed. Veterans organizations and veterans generally would feel more secure if they knew they had the right to go to their member of parliament and have their case reviewed or dealt with by a committee of the house.

Some may say, what is wrong with things as they are? That may be all right for the present, but what of the future? In the short time I have been here we have had three ministers of veterans affairs. First there was the late Hon. Ian Mackenzie; then there was the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg), followed by the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe). All those gentlemen were professional soldiers, and they knew the problems of the veterans from experience. But how long are we going to have men of this type holding the portfolio of veterans affairs minister? I personally hope it will be for a long time, but as the years go by the situation will change and most likely we will have a non-veteran minister or ministers.

A minister who has never seen active service can never be expected to understand the problems of the veteran the same as one who has had that experience. As time passes the administration can get farther away from the purposes of the acts which have been passed. After a number of years the people administering such legislation may forget the purposes and the reasons for the legislation and why it was passed. Our veterans, including those of world war I and world war II, constitute a significant proportion of the total Canadian population. Their problems are considerable and require constant attention. These problems could be dealt with much more effectively if the veterans had an opportunity to bring them before a standing committee through their members of parliament.

Furthermore, such a committee would facilitate the presentation of veterans problems by the Canadian Legion and other recognized veterans organizations in Canada. Often in the past there have been times when there has been no committee on veterans affairs, with the result that important problems affecting veterans and their families did not receive the proper airing to which they were entitled. The Department of Veterans Affairs acts in an administrative capacity in dealing with veterans problems. Competent as the department may be in this role, the fact is that our veterans require additional attention which is beyond the scope of the administrators in the department.

Then there are the important matters of pensions and allowances which can be met only by appropriate changes in the veterans legislation. A standing committee could give frequent study to the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act as new developments arose to justify changes in the legislation. As it is now, the veterans affairs committee is set up only on the initiative of the government to deal with special matters. The members of parliament therefore are handicapped by not having up to date information pertaining to veterans and their problems. If a permanent committee was established and if it sat every parliamentary session, parliament would be in a much better position to determine when changes in veterans legislation were required.

I feel sure that a veterans affairs committee dealing with these matters from year to year would be able to see that the legislation passed for the benefit of the veterans was maintained and used for the benefit of the veterans. Only by having a permanent veterans affairs committee of the house which can keep the administration and the legislation close to the needs of the veteran are we going to get the kind of administration the veterans should have.

I move this resolution in the hope that the government will give it consideration in the near future. I could say a lot more about this resolution, but I know other hon. members will want to express their views on such an important matter as the setting up of a veterans affairs committee of the house. As the time allotted to this debate is limited I shall refrain from going into detail.

I hope the minister will be able to convince the government of the need of a standing committee on veterans affairs. I am trying to set a good example, and have made my remarks brief so the minister will have an opportunity in the short time during which this matter will be under discussion to get the views of hon. members, not only on the government side but on all sides of the house.

Mr. G. S. White (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak very briefly on this motion and to indicate the support of hon. members of this party. The resolution of the hon. member for Selkirk to set up a permanent committee on veterans affairs is not something new. While it may not have been the subject of discussion before on private members' day, it is a matter that has often been raised by individual members both in the house and on many occasions before the special committee on veterans affairs.

Each year members receive briefs from the large veterans organizations, and in addition they constantly receive communications from veterans organizations in their ridings. Many receive copies of resolutions passed by Legion branches in their ridings, all advocating that there should be a standing committee on veterans affairs.

It has been the custom for a number of years for the Canadian Legion to present a brief to the government each November, and each time a brief is presented it contains many important recommendations covering a very wide range of topics. They deal with important matters and issues affecting thousands of Canadian veterans both male and female, and their dependents. Therefore it would seem to me that no more suitable course could be followed than for the annual Legion brief to be referred to a standing committee on veterans affairs each year.

The brief submitted by the Legion last November, which no doubt has been read by many hon. members, covered a very wide range of topics. To itemize them briefly, it dealt with national defence, pensions, conditions not recorded on enlistment, revised rates for dependent parents, increase in pension to certain dependent parents, retroactive awards, debts due to the crown, supplementation to Canadian rates, war veterans allowance, veterans of world war I, widows of allied ex-servicemen, supplementation for orphans pensioned under the Canadian Pension Act, and the equity in a home, among other matters. In my opinion the Legion made very fair and reasonable recommendations with respect to these matters.

I am not suggesting that their brief will not receive every consideration from the minister and the officials of his department but, after all, there are in the house between 75 and 100 members who have seen service in different branches of our armed forces, and they are able to bring to such a committee a great amount of valuable experience. As far as I know I have never heard the present Minister of Veterans Affairs or any other minister of veterans affairs advance any reason or suggest any ground for objecting to a standing committee on veterans affairs. As we all know, at the present time there are quite a number of standing committees of the house, and if you review the records you will find that some of them have not had a single meeting in whole sessions.

As has been suggested by the hon. member for Selkirk, if we had such a committee its members could study the Legion briefs and bring to the attention of the committee the various matters involving veterans that come to their attention in their ridings. Today there are a large number of statutes having to do with the welfare of veterans and their dependents. This simply means that all the legislation affecting veterans should be constantly under review with the hope of improving it, amending the various acts so as to bring their benefits more in line with present day conditions and also removing from the present legislation anything that may work a hardship or injustice.

The Department of Veterans Affairs is a large spending department because of the substantial expenditure in pensions and war veterans allowances and, as was so well put forward by the previous speaker, it would appear most reasonable to me that there should be a standing committee for the department. I do not think the minister should take this suggestion as indicating in any way that there is anything wrong with the administration of the department. I think he should take the view that members of all parties in the house want to help the minister and provide the very best possible legislation for Canadian veterans.

Before this short debate is over I sincerely hope the minister will indicate that he will accept the resolution and is willing to recommend to the government the setting up of a standing committee on veterans affairs.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, we in this group are very happy that the hon. member for Selkirk has seen fit to introduce this resolution at this time. I sincererly hope the minister, as suggested a moment ago by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, will be willing to accept the resolution in the spirit in which it is put forward, for I am quite sure from my past experience as a member of the special committee on veterans affairs that the resolution should be and probably will be supported by members on all sides of the house.

I hope to follow the example of the two hon. gentlemen who have preceded me so far as time is concerned, and I shall enunciate briefly some of the reasons why I feel it is desirable to set up such a committee. I consider that the Department of Veterans Affairs is just as important as any other department, and under these circumstances it would seem to me that we should have a standing committee in the same way that we have standing committees on miscellaneous private bills, marine and fisheries and other matters.

It is true that the special committee on veterans affairs is not set up each year, but it is also a fact that some of the standing committees do not sit during each session of parliament. There are frequent occasions when special cases arise which can be dealt with in the committee. Those who have been members of the special committee on veterans affairs will recognize that from time to time we do have cases involving special problems to bring to the attention of the minister and the representatives of his department. Actually such cases are dealt with best in a committee where we can speak directly to some of the members of his staff who are more familiar with these matters.

I was somewhat surprised, however, to hear the hon. gentleman who introduced this resolution suggest that one must be a veteran in order to understand veterans problems. I disagree with that suggestion. I will say this, however. It may be desirable to have members who are veterans on this committee that he suggests setting up. I trust I am not misinterpreting his suggestion, but I feel that if a standing committee is set up, certainly the best way to get some of the other members of this house who are not veterans to understand veterans problems is to have some of them on the committee. In that way they will get more familiar with the problems faced by veterans.

I am sure the house will agree with me when I say that those members of the special committees on veterans affairs who have not been veterans are certainly not those who held up legislation in so far as assistance to veterans is concerned. I believe this is also true of the members of this house. There are many non-veterans in the house, and they are certainly not opposed to veterans legislation merely because they are not veterans; nor are they opposed to it because they are not too familiar with the problems faced by veterans.

I also feel that the veterans as such must feel they are being placed in a secondary position by the members of this parliament who do not see fit to give them, with regard to a committee on veterans affairs, the same standing as, let us say, the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, most of which are divorce bills. I do not think we should subject people who have served this country as well as have the veterans to being placed in the awkward position of having it suggested or even implied to them that they are not of as much importance as divorce cases, and that therefore we will not have a standing committee on veterans affairs for them. The same thing applies to the standing committee on marine and fisheries. I realize that these committees are necessary, but I definitely would agree with the hon. member who introduced this resolution that it is most essential and desirable that we should have a standing committee on veterans affairs. We in this group will support his resolution.

[Mr. Hahn.]

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, before the minister speaks I want to submit a few ideas that might possibly alter what he is going to say. However, I want to make it clear at the outset that I am giving my complete moral support to the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Selkirk. After thinking the matter over carefully, and having myself been privileged to serve on two of the veterans committees in the present parliament, while I realize a good many of the arguments there are on the other side, especially the argument that there are too many committees already and that at certain times of the year we all have more committees than we can attend, nevertheless it seems to me that on balance the advantage is definitely on the side of having a permanent standing committee of this house on veterans affairs, if for no other reason than that it would tend to remove any suggestion of discrimination there might be in the minds of some of the veterans of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that in my opinion Canada has now and has had for a good many years the best all-round veterans legislation of any country which I have been privileged to study. I think our veterans legislation is better than that of any other country I know of. I think it is better than even that of our great, good and rich neighbour to the south, namely the republic of the United States of America. One reason it is good, I believe, is that we have always had in this house a large number of people who were intimately acquainted with veterans problems and who kept in touch with them. We have had a sensitive public opinion throughout the whole of Canada. We have had an alert press; and of course we have had vigilant veterans organizations who themselves are on the job. The whole thing has combined, I think, to give this country the best veterans legislation of any country in the western world.

I can remember what was said in one of the very few but very fine speeches made by the late hon. member for Halton, the late Miss Sybil Bennett. In a brief speech one day—one of her rare speeches in the house—I can remember she said what a thrill it had given her to see how all the parties in this house treated veterans legislation on a completely impartial basis.

I am not going to say that my own experience in veterans affairs committees has been quite that fortunate. I say that in the veterans committee there have been times when some people played politics; and for all I know, if we had this veterans committee as a standing committee, if it sat in election years perhaps people would have more of the same tendency to play politics that they had at other times. But on balance I do not believe that is a valid objection. I have watched them in action and noted members like the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), whom I have always seen in the veterans committee being absolutely fair and impartial, not grinding any political axe, even when he has to be fair to the government.

I believe those precedents would be carried out if we had the veterans committee set up as a permanent institution to sit if necessary from year to year. I am not convinced that even if we had a veterans committee set up as a permanent institution, it would necessarily have to sit every single year. But even if it had to sit to deal with only a few minor matters, I believe it would be useful as a discussion agency in order to bring out the points that need bringing out.

I would not want anyone to run away with the idea that because I am in favour of this resolution suggested by the hon. member for Selkirk, I am even implying that there is any lethargy or indifference on the part of the government, and certainly not on the part of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. To the best of my memory I do not recall within the last 25 or 30 years our having a bad or indifferent minister of veterans affairs, but in all honesty I believe we have never had a better Minister of Veterans Affairs than we have right at this moment.

An hon. Member: That is a political speech.

Mr. Philpott: I would recall that just a year ago we had the review of the disability pensions for the lower income group. So, Mr. Speaker, while there may be some reasons on the other side to which I certainly will listen with attention and respect, for what it is worth I want to give my moral support to the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Selkirk.

I think Canada has great reason to be proud of her long standing record in veterans legislation. If we do nothing more than go through the pages of the Parliamentary Guide and read the brief biographies of the distinguished people who sit in this chamber and who occupy other great, responsible positions in the life of Canada; if we examine the record to see how many of those fine public servants have been the sons of people who lost their lives in the first world war or lost their capacity to earn as a result of service in the first world war but who nevertheless were able to get the proper training to enable them to become what they have become, I believe we all have reason to be proud of the legislation which is on our statute books.

I believe also it would be in keeping with the spirit of this house and the spirit of the present government, if we were not content to just have it good but were constantly on the alert to make it better if it could be made better. In my opinion the resolution as proposed by the hon. member for Selkirk would make it better.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): First I should like to compliment my learned and gallant friend, the hon. member for Selkirk, for introducing this resolution. It gives us an opportunity to have a discussion of a very important matter. I want to thank the hon. member for Vancouver South for the very great compliment he paid me a few minutes ago. I agree with him that our veterans legislation will compare favourably with any other veterans legislation in the world. There is a reason for that, and I will go into it more fully later.

I am sure the minister welcomes this resolution. Reading the press recently one finds that the main slogan of the government at the present time, and for certain reasons, is national unity. I am sure, following that idea through, the minister would be glad to unite the members of this house on a non-partisan basis into a committee to assist him and his department in the handling of the difficulties that face his department and the veterans organizations in the future. I am sure the minister will welcome this committee, because it affords an opportunity to share responsibilities in a matter that is beyond the realm of politics. I believe most of the veterans in Canada, and most of the members of this house who are veterans, do all they can to keep veterans problems outside the realm of politics.

Perhaps the reason our legislation can compare favourably with that of any other country in the world is that very early in the last war the government set up a veterans affairs committee for the purpose of opening up the old acts as they applied to veterans of the first war, and relating them to the new forces. This was a committee to develop a program of pension adjustments, veterans allowances and so on, with respect to the new forces. The committee could initiate ideas and recommend a rehabilitation program. The committee sat continuously and was not, as it has been in the last several years, merely a committee to examine legislation.

During the past several years the committee that has been set up has been limited to the examination of certain legislation the government was introducing. The committee was powerless to make amendments, but could make recommendations that were tabled in the house. The committee which related the old acts to the new forces and expanded them had a rather free hand. I know, because I sat on that committee all during the war. It was a process of continual study, amendment or expansion of the acts and the development of a whole rehabilitation program that had to do with demobilization, education, the Veterans' Land Act and all the rest of them. It is for that reason our legislation was hammered into the shape it was when the war finally finished.

I believe if I were the minister of veterans affairs I would be quite pleased to get a committee of that kind to share responsibility with me. The pension commission and others who administer different acts under the minister's department should welcome this committee. They have many administrative difficulties that are not understood either by members of the house or the public. If we had a continuing committee people would be able to come to us and point out their difficulties. Most of the members of this house have opinions which would be of great benefit in considering legislation that is being demanded. So far as I am concerned I have always taken the position this is a non-partisan problem, and if there are demands made which I think are unrealistic or cannot be supported by the facts—and I think this applies to most members of the committee—I have had no hesitation in saying so. I am sure that with all the books the minister has in front of him he has come prepared to give us the legal arguments and the reasons why this committee should be welcomed with open arms. I am quite sure he is going to do that.

If one takes a look at the brief that was presented to the cabinet in December, 1956, by the Legion, one finds it indicates the need for a continuing study of veterans problems. There is no doubt that the Legion officials did a lot of research in the preparation of that brief, but at the present time most of the members of this house are not in a position to say whether or not those demands are reasonable or economic. There are many demands for changes in the Pension Act, such as the dependents' pensions. Apparently someone did some work on the percentage difference between wages that were paid at the time these acts were set up and the increases that have taken place in wages since, to indicate that the rates paid today, based on the formula that was adopted at the time the acts were set up, are completely out of line. The War Veterans Allowance Act, the matter of permissible earnings—those things have all been gone into again, and there are many demands in the brief.

I believe there are two departments of government that absolutely need a continuing committee, one of which is veterans affairs. Veterans affairs is going to be a continuing problem as long as anyone in this house lives. There is no finality to it. If the country is going to prosper and we are going to have twice as much money to spend in 1980 as we have today, as the Gordon commission suggests, then veterans legislation has to keep pace with that. It is not going to remain static.

As I say, there is no finality to this problem. There should be a continuous study made by members of this house, in co-operation with the members of the commission, if the members of the house are going to be informed sufficiently to vote according to the social and economic values of the problems facing them.

Unless we have the opportunity of studying the matter there is not much chance of a person in this house passing an intelligent vote on the problem.

About the only way that I see it can be done is through a veterans affairs committee. In that committee there would be available to the members experts from all branches of the department. The department is in housing today, and in land settlement. It is handling great social and economic problems. A terrific job is being done by the Department of Veterans Affairs. I think the minister needs help. I believe the people in all branches of the commission who have the responsibility of making decisions on veterans affairs have a right to inform members of this house as to the difficulties of administration, and to get the understanding co-operation at least of the members of the house.

An odd time in that committee you will find a member or two who wants to make capital out of its deliberations. That is a very small percentage of the committee. Many subjects are discussed, and no matter what kind of group you get together you find one or two who just do not play the game according to the rules, but it is a very small percentage. My experience on the committee has shown me that it is as non-partisan as a committee of this house could possibly be. So far as I am concerned it has always been the desire of the committee to help the veterans, but to be reasonable and understanding with respect to demands made on the public treasury.

I believe the permissive earnings and the war veterans allowances are burning questions. These questions need a lot of study. I believe the government has been unrealistic so far as that particular legislation is concerned. Then there is the matter of expanding the War Veterans Allowance

Act to include England as a theatre of war for world war I veterans. They are running out. There is still a large number who should be receiving the war veterans allowance. There is discrimination as between the younger and the older veterans. These are matters that should be, and I believe could be, ironed out by a committee.

As I said a moment ago, and I want to reiterate it, with the development of this country forecast for the future, with the advance in income and the increase in the standard of living, if the veterans—and there is a large number of them today—are to go forward and enjoy a share of that prosperity there has to be a continued study and revision of the acts having to do with veterans, in order to keep the veteran in the same relative position as he is today with respect to incomes and standards. The only way to do that is by constant study and revision and the application of increased rates to acts that have to do with the welfare and the future of veterans.

I have been deliberately brief in my remarks, because I want to give the minister a chance to advance to his own colleagues all the arguments he has at his disposal as to why the government should give him some assistance by passing some of the responsibilities of his department on to the members of the house. In that way we may lighten his burden a little. It would enable the staffs who administer the different acts to get the opinions of members and others about their difficulties, so we may have some understanding of what they are up against.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as you know suggestions have been made in this house for several years and by members on all sides that a standing committee on veterans affairs should be set up. That request has been made not only in the house, it has also been made by the different veterans organizations across Canada. For example, at the dominion convention of the Canadian Legion, which was held in Vancouver last June, this resolution was adopted:

> Whereas the government has not seen fit to appoint a committee on veterans affairs during the present session of parliament;
> Whereas problems are continually arising concerning the Pension Act, War Veterans Allowance Act, et cetera;
> Be it resolved that this convention make representations for the appointment of a permanent standing committee on veterans affairs to which all such problems would be referred.

I believe the time has now come when this action could be taken, and I hope the Minister of Veterans Affairs will be in a position this evening to announce that the government has changed its stand on this particular question, and that from now on we can have such a committee. You see, Mr. Speaker, the request is not made in a frivolous way; it is made because the only way the veterans problems can be dealt with fully and adequately is by having a committee of this house which meets every year.

The practice in the past has been to set up a special committee only when there was significant veterans legislation coming before the house. For example, last session there was no such committee, although there were two or three minor bills having to do with veterans affairs. This year there is no hint that there will be any legislation having to do with veterans at all and, of course, there is no hint of a committee. But whether or not there is legislation—and I regret very much if there is to be none at this present session—such a committee could do valuable work.

I do not intend to go over the arguments which have been put forward already this evening in a very capable way by different hon. members, but there are these facts to remember. The veterans are affected by a variety of statutes of this parliament. For example, there are the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Veterans' Land Act. In addition to these and other statutes there are regulations passed under the act setting up the department, which are of great importance. For example, there are the treatment regulations under which all the veterans who go into hospital have to come in order to get their hospitalization.

Then there are a tremendous number of Canadians involved. I suppose the veterans of the two world wars and their dependents would number well over a million. The number may be much larger than that. These veterans and their dependents are affected in a very personal way. It is not as though there was something more or less indirect in it. Their whole lives are affected directly by this legislation and by these regulations.

The veterans of Canada have been very fortunate to be represented for many years by organizations which are thoroughly responsible and statesmanlike. Take for example the Canadian Legion and the National Council of Veterans Associations in Canada, which is composed of the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, the Canadian Corps Association, the Canadian Paraplegic Association, the Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded, War Amputations of Canada and the War Pensioners of Canada. All these organizations, as everyone in this house will admit, have dealt with the problems facing the veteran down through the years in a statesmanlike way, and they are doing so today. They feel, however, just as hon. members of the house feel who are asking for this committee, that the problems are changing continuously. There is always a need to meet some new situation which is arising. It is mainly for that reason we urge tonight that there should be set up now a standing committee on veterans affairs.

We have the example, Mr. Speaker, of the standing committee on external affairs. It took some years to get agreement for the setting up of that committee, but it has functioned in a successful way from the start. The estimates of the Department of External Affairs are referred to that committee every year. The minister appears and gives evidence, as does the deputy minister and various other officials of the department; in fact I think any official of whom the committee members request an appearance. Furthermore, legislation is referred to that committee. Your Honour will remember that two years ago the international river improvements bill was referred to the external affairs committee and dealt with there in a very efficient manner.

I see no reason why the same thing could not be done in establishing a standing committee on veterans affairs. Each year the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs could be referred to that committee, and legislation could also be referred. Not only could officials be heard, but we could also have representatives from these veterans organizations who have always been invited to appear before the special committees. There is no reason why they could not appear just as well before a standing committee each year. If this course were followed the result would be to keep the veterans legislation up to date and, as some hon. members have mentioned, it would assist in rectifying any mistakes.

Further, I think it would help to keep the administration of these acts human. I am not contending tonight that the officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs are not human in their dealings with the veterans, but it would help to keep that spirit prevailing throughout the whole department in the branches from coast to coast if we had a committee meeting every year dealing with the different problems.

Finally, I suggest that by setting up a committee we would give parliament its proper place in connection with veterans affairs. Parliament has not been drawn into the picture as fully as it should have been, because there has only been a committee established infrequently. If there is to be no legislation concerning veterans this year it will mean there can be no improvement in the benefits for the veterans of Canada and their dependents until 1958. If unfortunately that is to be the case, then I hope this parliament in its dying days can at least make sure that from now on there will be a standing committee on veterans affairs.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to give my wholehearted support to the resolution moved by the hon. member for Selkirk, which in effect asks for the establishment of a standing committee of this house on veterans affairs. I am always interested when I follow the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra in these debates, because he and I got cold feet together in the same trenches about 41 years ago. Little idea had we at that time that we would be pleading in this house in support of a resolution of this nature.

I support this resolution for three reasons in particular. The first is that as a result of my 12 years' experience in this house and my experience over that period in the special committee on veterans affairs when it was sitting, I am convinced of the need for this standing committee to which the recurring problems of veterans and their dependents can be referred. Anyone who served on that committee throughout that period realizes that the amendments made to legislation since 1945 resulted largely from the representations made by the Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations, and the consideration given to those representations by that committee.

My second reason for supporting this resolution is that the Canadian Legion, the National Council of Veterans Associations and the organizations of which it is composed have a very close knowledge of the needs of veterans and their dependents in this country. At repeated national, provincial and local conventions of these organizations resolutions have been passed urging the establishment of a standing committee on veterans affairs. That opinion was expressed again at the last national convention of the Canadian Legion, when a resolution was adopted in almost similar terms to those adopted in previous years, asking the government to establish a standing committee on veterans affairs.

My third reason for supporting the resolution is one advanced by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. That is because the veterans and their dependents represent a very large segment of the Canadian population. I would say, as the hon. member did, that well over one million people are involved in this question, and we have a particular responsibility to those people. Veterans and their dependents in Canada are entitled to particular consideration by hon. members of this house and the government.

The present veterans legislation is excellent, I know. As I have said before, our legislation in Canada is possibly the best total veterans legislation in the western democratic world. I realized that very much when I was in Great Britain last summer and had the opportunity to discuss this matter with some of the former high command of the British army, who were very complimentary about our legislation in Canada and critical of the legislation in existence in Great Britain. Certainly we should do this. We are in a land rich in natural resources and with a relatively small population. To do what we have done for veterans and their dependents throughout the years has been much easier for us in Canada than it would be for a country like Great Britain during that time.

We have no criticism of the officials of the department. I have had a great deal of experience with the officials of the various branches of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I have always found them courteous and willing to do all they could for the veterans within the terms of the law and the regulations. We do believe, however, that because veterans problems are naturally in a fluid state due to changing conditions and circumstances, there should be an opportunity to review these questions before a standing committee of this house at least yearly.

To prove that contention I will indicate the number of resolutions that were passed on various aspects of veterans legislation at the last dominion convention of the Canadian Legion.

Mind you, these resolutions come from the branches of the Canadian Legion, from the branches of the national council of veterans across Canada. They flow from the local branches to the provincial commands to the national conventions, and they are the result of people in the various communities, other veterans, appreciating the difficulties of the veterans and their dependents and the deficiencies in the present legislation, and the need for amendments to correct the situation.

What do we find? At the last dominion convention of the Canadian Legion there were 22 resolutions submitted seeking amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act, some of somewhat major importance and some of somewhat minor importance. They were submitted because of the belief that the legislation required amending in order to adequately serve veterans and their dependents.

There were 20 resolutions submitted with respect to amendments to the Canadian Pension Act and dealing with various aspects of that important piece of legislation, which is indeed an excellent act. Those were sought because of changing conditions and circumstances, and the fact that from year to year it is found that certain aspects of the legislation do not work correctly and do not give the veterans the justice they deserve. Consequently, at the last dominion convention of the Canadian Legion there were 20 resolutions submitted calling for amendments to the Canadian Pension Act.

Then there were 21 resolutions dealing with the treatment of veterans and the treatment regulations, a most important aspect of veterans affairs legislation. The conditions, circumstances and problems in connection with treatment are constantly changing, and because of that we had these 21 resolutions presented to the convention.

Then we had five resolutions dealing with problems of the imperial veterans, something which needs serious consideration. Hon. members of this house representing all parties have advanced pleas on behalf of certain imperial veterans, and because of that we had a recent amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act which brought under the legislation those imperial veterans who had resided in Canada for 20 years.

There were five resolutions presented at the convention dealing with rehabilitation problems. As the date of the second world war recedes the number of resolutions of this character are lessening, but regardless of that fact there were five resolutions dealing with rehabilitation problems affecting the veteran.

Then there were two resolutions dealing with amendments to the Veterans' Land Act. Why? While this legislation is effective and is serving a great purpose, experience and changing circumstances prove the need for some amendments.

Then there were five resolutions adopted with respect to the armed forces and civil defence. Those resolutions were put forward by local branches because the members understood the problems of men presently in the armed forces. There were eight resolutions dealing with the Canadian civil service, seeking to correct certain things which need correcting. There were over 30 resolutions dealing with miscellaneous problems which were of particular interest to veterans and their dependents, such as the Last Post fund, headstones for veterans, Remembrance day and so on.

When such a large number of resolutions were presented to the last dominion convention of the Canadian Legion recommending amendments to veterans legislation, it would surely indicate the necessity for a standing committee of this house to review the legislation, to hear representations by veterans organizations, and to make recommendations to this house. If we can have a standing committee of this house to deal exclusively with the problem of providing ourselves with provender in the restaurant, which I think is a somewhat minor matter compared with the problems of veterans and their dependents, surely we are justified in asking for a standing committee on veterans affairs at this time.

We have a number of standing committees which meet only rarely. I have been a member of the standing committee on mines, forests and waters since 1945, and it has never met during that whole period. That committee is supposed to deal with important problems, and I have suggested repeatedly that it should meet. The committee on mines, forests and waters deals with natural resources, in which I am very interested; but here we have human problems affecting large numbers of Canadians and which occur from day to day, from week to week, from month to month and from year to year.

We on this side of the house, and on the other side as well, who are urging the establishment of this standing committee on veterans affairs do so because we believe the problems of the veterans and their dependents deserve the consideration of this house through the establishment of a standing committee on veterans affairs. As one or two speakers have mentioned previously, the Department of Veterans Affairs is a very important department. Its estimates this year are somewhat over $250 million, which indicates the importance of the problems that exist across this country.

In conclusion I urge the minister to give consideration to supporting this resolution, the purpose of which is to try to get this government to accept its full responsibility by the establishment of this committee to meet the problems of veterans and their dependents which arise from year to year.

Mr. F. T. Fairey (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak only briefly on this matter. My first words shall be of congratulation to the hon. member for Selkirk upon introducing this resolution. I have not had the advantage, as have many of the previous speakers, of having sat on the special committee on veterans affairs, but over the years I have been closely connected with the educational features of some of the programs initiated by the Department of Veterans Affairs and I think I know something of the problems that exist.

I do not intend to repeat the eulogies that have been fairly general about the administration of the department and the excellence of the legislation. As I listened to the arguments advanced by my colleagues I tried to discover what particular difference there was between a standing committee and a special committee on veterans affairs, which latter committee is called from time to time as its services are required. On the whole I think a case has been made for a standing committee. The concluding sentence or two of the previous speaker indicated that there are a great many veterans and dependents who are affected by the regulations of the Department of Veterans Affairs, and because there are so many of them and because their problems are so numerous a standing committee of this house was required.

Frequently we as members receive various resolutions from the branches of the Legion.

Not so long ago when I made a speech in the house in favour of increases in disability pensions as against increases in war veterans allowances I recall that, to use a slang expression, I got my tail in the gate, because I suggested at that time that if so many of the recipients of war veterans allowance were in fact affected by war service they should be getting disability pensions, and I still think that is correct. It is because there are problems of that kind which could be discussed more fully and adequately in a standing committee that I support the motion advanced tonight.

It has been stated that it would be an education for non-veterans to be on such a committee. I quite agree; but I suggest that in all fairness veterans are perhaps more competent persons to be selected for that committee. I said I was going to speak briefly, and I believe I have done so. I simply say that on balance I think a standing committee is what we should have. I point out to hon. members that it is not certain that a standing committee would necessarily be called to meet at every session of parliament, but it would give an opportunity to the minister when legislation is introduced to refer such legislation to a committee already in existence; therefore I support the resolution.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, as time is somewhat limited I am going to be very brief in my remarks. I support fully the setting up of a standing committee on veterans affairs. I believe if such a committee were allowed to investigate any branch of the Department of Veterans Affairs year by year, and to hear briefs from veterans organizations, the committee could and probably would remain a truly non-partisan committee. I have been a member of veterans affairs committees for the past 20 years, and in my opinion the veterans affairs committees of recent years have not been nearly as non-partisan as they used to be.

During the war, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South stated, we had a committee that sat year by year, and it was given the responsibility of formulating a veterans charter around a number of draft bills. That committee was truly a non-partisan committee. Our one objective was to get the best charter we could for the veterans. I do not remember at any time any one party trying in any way to seek political advantage over another. But, unfortunately, after the war the government's policy with regard to a veterans affairs committee changed. No longer were we given a veterans affairs committee with wide open terms of reference. We were limited to very narrow terms of reference. Consequently, as soon as the committee met its members started to fight and wrangle in order to try to get the terms of reference extended, and so before the committee had sat for more than a few days it had become extremely partisan.

In my opinion the best way to prevent that happening would be to set up a standing committee on veterans affairs with wide open terms of reference, so it could deal with any branch of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Then once again I think we would have a truly non-partisan veterans affairs committee.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the hour is getting late, but even at the risk of repeating statements already made I think it is desirable that, within the time limit, as many members as possible express their views on this most important resolution and let the minister know that on both sides of the house there are members with experience on the special committees of the past who believe that now is the time that a standing committee on veterans affairs should be established. It is for that reason, to add my voice to the arguments already put forward, that I rise to announce that I support the resolution.

I have only one possibly new point to submit. I believe, now that all our veterans are getting older and are finding conditions more difficult, that the setting up of a standing committee would raise the morale of many of these older veterans, because they would feel that they had a group of members of parliament who were making a special study of their problems and would be available so that they could present their particular points of view to the committee. I am not suggesting that every individual veteran with a problem would appear before the committee, but the veterans have their organizations, and through the representatives of those organizations they would be able to appear before the committee.

I am not going to take any more time, because I hope other members will speak. I hope the minister will explain his position, and that his reaction will be favourable.

Mr. J. H. Dickey (Halifax): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Why not let the minister speak?

Mr. Dickey: I have listened to the discussion of the resolution with great interest, as I have listened to similar discussions of similar resolutions in past sessions. Not having had the opportunity of participating in any of the previous debates, I am accepting the suggestion and perhaps invitation of the hon. member who has just taken his seat, and am rising to state my sincere views on this question. Having listened carefully to the arguments that have been presented, I must say that frankly I cannot agree that any proof has been presented that a standing committee on veterans affairs would make any substantial or constructive contribution to the handling of veterans problems by parliament.

The hon. member for Kootenay West mentioned a number of reasons why he thought a standing committee would be a good idea. I tried to follow his reasoning, and a good example of it was that if parliament had a standing committee to operate the restaurant in order to provide, as he stated, comestibles for ourselves, we should have a standing committee on veterans affairs because it was a very much more important matter. I think that is a good example of the kind of argumentation that has been put forward in support of the resolution.

Of course the facts are that the reason for having a committee on the restaurant has nothing to do with its relative importance to any other problem in the country, whether local or national. As all hon. members know, the reason we have a committee on the restaurant is that there is nobody else to run the restaurant of parliament but parliament itself.

I think it is stretching logic and credulity to a great extent to make the kind of argument the hon. member made, namely that the fact that we had a committee on the restaurant in some way or other indicated that we felt that the provision of food for ourselves was more important than the matter of veterans affairs. The importance of veterans affairs has been recognized by all members of this parliament and by all parties in this house. I think service on the special committees on veterans affairs has been one of the real privileges enjoyed by a number of the members of this house. I know their privilege of serving on those special committees has been jealously guarded by the members concerned, and that many other members in this house would have felt it an equal privilege and would have wished the opportunity of giving similar service.

The membership of these committees has always been made up of members who are in fact veterans with military service either in world war I or world war II. In this debate it has been suggested that this exclusive membership is perhaps not necessary. I think the fact that the special committee has been made up wholly of veterans has been of advantage to the veterans in this country, because the members of that committee, themselves being veterans, have brought to their work in the committee specialized knowledge of the nature and real extent of the individual problems of veterans which we can hope to solve by providing the appropriate kind of legislation to deal with those problems.

An hon. Member: Is that not a good argument for the standing committee?

Mr. Dickey: The argument I am making will be obvious, I think, even to my hon. friend, when I have completed it.

Mr. Churchill: When are you going to complete it?

Mr. Bell: It is already obvious.

Mr. Churchill: What about the resolution passed by the Legion?

Mr. Dickey: I think my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is the last member of this house who should point the finger of scorn at anybody for boring this house.

Mr. Churchill: Sit down and give me a chance.

Mr. Dickey: The fact is that the membership of the special committees has been exclusively veterans—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Dickey: In my experience it has been.

Mr. Bell: That shows how much experience you have had.

[Mr. Dickey.]

Mr. Casselman: If the hon. gentleman had been listening, he would have heard an hon. member say it was not.

Mr. Dickey: My experience with the membership of these committees is that all the members have been veterans. I think that is proper and justifiable in the case of special committees. As all hon. members know, the membership of special committees is a matter which is given particular attention by the whips, and great care is taken to see that the membership of special committees is the best that can be secured.

I do not think it would be justifiable to apply a similar principle to any standing committee of this house. I think the membership of standing committees should be open to any member who wishes to serve on them and whose membership on such committees is convenient to the particular group in the house to which he belongs. I think in all probability a standing committee would lose much of the quality that the special committees have enjoyed.

All members with great unanimity and, I think, with equal justice have spoken of the veterans charter which was to a large extent the result of the work of the special veterans committee, the excellence of the veterans legislation we enjoy in this country, and the program we have for veterans welfare. To hon. members who have been supporting the idea of a special committee I should simply like to point out that this excellent position, this situation which they have all cited with some satisfaction and pride, has been achieved without the necessity of a standing committee which they now appear to try to suggest is essential for a continuation of this program. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the very proposal they have put forward and some of the grounds on which they try to justify it disprove their argument rather than establish it.

What would be the utility of a standing committee in this parliament? It has been suggested that it would give an opportunity for representatives of the Canadian Legion and other veterans groups to make representations and submissions. May I point out that these groups have for many years been making annual submissions and representations to the cabinet. All members of this house receive copies of these representations. There is certainly no validity in the suggestion that the contents of these submissions would be any more readily accessible to members by reason of a standing committee, rather than their getting copies of these submissions which are annually made to the cabinet and the excellent information that the Legion and other veterans organizations make available to every member of this house.

Several hon. members have spoken of the excellent administration of the department and the manner in which veterans problems have been dealt with by the various branches of the department and the Canadian pension commission. Certainly it has been my experience, Mr. Speaker, that any information I or any other member of the house desires is readily available by asking the necessary question in the house or by correspondence with the department. No additional information would be available to any hon. member through the sittings of the standing committee. I have also found that when members proffer advice to the department, that advice is carefully taken into consideration and, if found appropriate, is acted upon.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra suggested that a standing committee was the proper place for matters of veterans affairs to be discussed. I do not doubt that, if there were a standing committee, it would be an excellent place for the discussion of matters relating to veterans. But, Mr. Speaker, it is my view that the best place and the proper place for members to express their views in connection with veterans affairs is in this house, and not simply in a committee of this house.

Parliament itself provides all the opportunities that any hon. member opposite could reasonably ask for expressing his views. The hon. member also said that he thought a standing committee would ensure the continuity of the humanitarian approach by officials of the department. I, for one, see no sign of any tendency for that humanitarian approach, to which he paid tribute, to weaken in any respect.

I do not know whether my experience as a member of this house has been much different from that of any other member, but as I listened to hon. members opposite I was thinking that it seemed to me what they really had in mind was a standing committee to provide a forum where individual problems with respect to the administration of veterans legislation would be dealt with. I submit, Mr. Speaker, if that is what they have in mind, that is not the proper function of either a standing committee or a special committee of this house.

Mr. Green: Nobody suggested that.

Mr. Dickey: If the hon. member will read what I said he will find I did not say he did suggest that.

Mr. Hodgson: Are you suggesting that?

Mr. Dickey: No, but I am saying that the argument the hon. members have been making is open to that interpretation. Certainly I know that in my experience as a member here I find I spend a great deal of time considering individual veterans problems. I find that the minister and the officials of his department, and all those who deal with the problems of pensions in the pension commission, are always most co-operative, very ready to consider individual problems, and to deal with them in the fairest and most generous way they possibly can. I, for one, feel that the establishment of a standing committee would not provide any constructive addition to the facilities that are given every member of this house to deal with veterans problems, either as individual cases or as matters of general policy and general legislation.

I find, Mr. Speaker, that I am not in a position to agree with hon. members who have said they have come to the conclusion that this is a resolution that deserves support.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): The senior member for Halifax, who has just taken his seat, Mr. Speaker, has been humming and hawing and saying nothing for the last 20 minutes in an effort to talk this matter out. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, we would have no more of that sort of thing. The arguments in favour of the standing committee have been put forward year after year and have never been refuted by any member of the government, including the senior member for Halifax.

Certainly, I am not going to put myself in a position of holding this matter up by talking it out. I shall not, therefore, repeat the many arguments, I think irrefutable arguments, which have been put forward in favour of a standing committee of this kind. I would simply ask all other members to take the same course of action and let this question come to a vote.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): I am going to take the advice of the hon. member who just took his seat and take a very few minutes to say something in support of this resolution. I might make a similar comment to the one he made concerning the speech of the hon. member for Halifax. In fact, the only time I was in the province from which the hon. member from Halifax comes, I saw a most remarkable sign in the station. It said, "Bore will arrive at 3.52".

There has been no argument yet advanced against the establishment of a standing committee on veterans affairs, except the implied argument that it would be an embarrassment to the minister and the government. I suggest to you, sir, that we who come here as spokesmen for the veterans of Canada as well as the general public should not be worrying our heads about embarrassing the minister or any of his colleagues by the establishment of such a committee. I cannot imagine how any member of this house is going to go back and face an audience of veterans and tell them he voted against this measure or helped to have it talked out.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Unlike the senior member for Halifax, I shall support the resolution. The veterans are our first citizens, and as such should have our first consideration at all times. I am sorry to say this has not always been the case in this house. I am not a veteran, so I would not expect to be a member of that committee. However, I have had a lot of work to do for the veterans. When I came here in 1940, about 75 per cent of the work we had to do in this house was for returned men, because they were coming back from the war and had to be rehabilitated. It was for that reason that I had a lot of work to do for the veterans.

I cannot understand why the Minister of Veterans Affairs objects to this standing committee. It would help him and it would help the house arrive at correct solutions for many of these problems. I do not wish to take up too much of the time of the house, because I should like to see a vote on the resolution. I had some things I wanted to say, but in order to permit a vote to be taken on the resolution I would reserve my remarks for a later time.

Mr. A. H. Hollingworth (York Centre): First of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Selkirk, who sponsored this resolution. I think the debate in the house tonight has been very constructive, but I am only going to take a few minutes because I know there are other members who want to speak. I should like to compliment most sincerely the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I think this minister, who goes about his work unobtrusively, is nevertheless one of the most effective ministers we have in the cabinet. I think this whole house should applaud the minister for the excellent work he has done.

The point I should like to raise is that the establishment of a standing committee does not necessarily mean it will be sitting at every session. For example, I believe the hon. member for Kootenay West pointed out that the committee on mines, forests and waters has not met in 17 years. I, Mr. Speaker, am a member of the radio and television committee, and certainly I think all hon. members will admit that committee has been very active. Yet it is a special committee which is set up during a legislative period, and is not a standing committee. A special committee can always be convened and legislation can always be referred to it, or it can hear anything that comes up pertaining to a special subject. I believe that has been overlooked by some of the hon. members opposite.

I am happy to see that all members of the house have paid tribute to the magnificent program for veterans which we have in this country. I think the hon. member for Kootenay West referred to it as excellent and possibly the best total legislation for veterans in the western world. I am fully in agreement—and this is a non-partisan point—and I think everybody in this house is proud of what this government and this house have done for veterans in this country.

Certainly it would seem that, particularly in the matter of education, the veterans have been treated extremely well. Last year I referred to the fact that between 1942 and 1955 some $220 million was expended to assist veterans, which amounts to an average of about $16,900,000 every year over that period. This is only one particular facet of assistance to veterans. One needs only to mention the war gratuities and, of course, the last thing this parliament dealt with was the war veterans allowances.

I think my job as a member of this house, Mr. Speaker, is to do everything I possibly can for veterans and for the veterans in my riding; because certainly, as the hon. member who just took his seat said, the veterans deserve absolutely the best. They offered their lives to preserve our way of life. If I thought this resolution introduced by the hon. member would add to that I would think it could be supported. But, Mr. Speaker, as I say, certainly a special committee can be convened at any time. I think all members will agree that the veterans legislation of Canada is the best in the world. As I say, it is non-partisan. We all know that; we all agree. I would think the minister and the department are to be complimented most highly, in that the procedure we have now is the best possible way of handling the affairs of veterans.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be very brief. I did not want to speak on this because the previous speakers for my party have given their views very well on behalf of the veterans, and have said that their problems should be attended to without any delay.

The last speaker spoke as if nothing could be improved. The veteran finds himself in the position that prices are rising and he is not thought of at all. All we want today is to have a committee to which we can appeal at all times on behalf of the veterans of this country. We do not want a special committee; we want a permanent committee that will be there all the time. We must realize that the cost of living is rising for the veteran. Those who are on pension are not receiving adequate pensions, and we should have a committee to deal with it immediately. A permanent committee should be set up to deal with the problems of every pensionable person in Canada, the aged, the crippled and the blind. They are waiting for election day. The government in power may do something two days before the election, but in the meantime the veterans can starve to death. That is their attitude. We want a permanent committee for those who cannot defend themselves.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be very brief. I know the minister needs only five minutes to rise in his place and say that he and the government intend to endorse this resolution. Therefore I do not think he needs every minute. However, I hope the sample of whitewash and red herring that came out of Halifax does not represent the attitude of the government toward this resolution, because if it does I am sure it will be most bitterly resented by the veterans of Canada.

When the senior hon. member for Halifax states that parliament presents any reasonable opportunity for discussion I believe I can readily deny that. This session of parliament is not meant to provide the veterans of Canada, or their spokesmen in this house, with such a reasonable opportunity. With all the problems of Canada the veterans and other problems which are urgent and pressing are relegated to the background, and we shall not be able to discuss them before the plug is pulled and we shall be asked to face an election. A standing committee of this house, as is proposed by this resolution, would be able to deal with all the usually reasonable representations of the Canadian Legion. They would not have to deal only with the proposals of the government in regard to veterans problems.

I think while the committees in the past have done excellent work they have always been handicapped in that it was the government that decided what field they might take into consideration. The over-all attitude of the people of the country and of hon. members to the very reasonable demands the Canadian Legion has made for many years now is one of sincere sympathy, and I feel that a standing committee could render great service and more closely examine the many complex problems the veterans face.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this resolution of the—

Mr. Knowles: And in support of it.

Mr. Lapointe: —hon. member for Selkirk I wish first to thank him for the very kindly words with which he approached this subject. I was somewhat reminded, Mr. Speaker, of my days at college when one was taught what was intended to be the principles of rhetoric. They advised you to start making your plea with very kindly words and references to the one to whom you addressed yourself. This was called oratory precaution. It was meant to soften him up and get him to accept more easily the logic of the arguments which you would put forward afterward. I must say that the hon. member for Selkirk made a very fine attempt at this procedure, but unfortunately I cannot say that I found in his argument the substance which would justify the resolution he has put forward as it now reads on the order paper.

This, Mr. Speaker, does not mean by any manner or means that the usefulness of a parliamentary committee on veterans affairs is the least bit denied. These committees have existed ever since parliament met after the years of the first world war, and it is without doubt true that the legislation pertaining to veterans which is now on the statute books of Canada is the result of the deliberations, discussions and serious study of the various committees on veterans affairs since those days.

Furthermore, this legislation, to which hon. members on both sides of the house referred as an example of good, generous legislation for returned men, undoubtedly must at times undergo changes as circumstances change. The policy of the government has always been that if and when it was evident that circumstances had changed that should bring about amendments to veterans legislation, this legislation was referred to a special committee on veterans affairs. This has been the practice of this parliament right along.

Now, as to the value of the committee, I think everybody on both sides of the house is in agreement, and I would be the last one ever to suggest that this practice should be done away with. Therefore in my mind the question to decide, following the introduction of this resolution, is whether the interests of the veterans and their welfare would be better served in this parliament if the parliamentary committee which is called upon to study the legislation brought forward in this house were a standing committee rather than a special select committee, as has been the practice heretofore.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest that in the speeches made tonight no one has brought forward any substantial argument to prove that a standing parliamentary committee would have served the purpose better than the special committees have, and that is simply because such is the parliamentary procedure in this house—

Mr. Churchill: Are you going to set up a special committee this year?

Mr. Lapointe: I am attempting to continue my remarks. I know my hon. friend who interrupts keeps the house long enough when he rises to his feet, and I wish he would allow me to complete my comments.

What is the procedure of the house under the standing orders as we have them? Standing order 65 is the one that deals with standing parliamentary committees. It sets out that at the commencement of every session the house shall form what we call a striking committee to determine the membership of the various standing committees. Then it proceeds to enumerate what are those standing committees, of which there are 12 in this house, the balance being joint committees with the other place. That is all, Mr. Speaker, that exists under this standing order.

I certainly wish to be corrected if my interpretation of the parliamentary procedure is wrong but these committees are nothing more than agencies of this house. They have no authority to do anything whatsoever, to initiate any legislation or to pass on anything, unless it has been referred by this house; and the authority they possess is given by this house. It was given this year on January 24. This is the practice which has always been followed in this house and is part of our established practice.

After the report of the striking committee enumerating the membership of the standing committees is brought forward—it is usually the practice to have the government whip do this—the leader of the government, the Prime Minister, moves:

> That the standing committees of this house shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the house; and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

These are the words which give authority to parliamentary committees, and a motion in this language can be found at page 589 of Hansard for January 24, 1957.

Mr. Churchill: You are better on the rules this year than last year.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

An hon. Member: Shut up.

Mr. Lapointe: I am sorry, but I did not hear my hon. friend.

Mr. Marler: It was not very important.

An hon. Member: Listen and you will learn.

Mr. Lapointe: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, a standing committee in itself has no power which a select committee does not have. Unless this house refers a matter to a standing committee the fact that it is established under a paragraph of standing order 65 does not give it any authority, nor does it give the members of this house any guarantee whatsoever that the committee will meet. It particularly does not give any veteran in this country a guarantee that any representation he wishes to make to this house will be heard, because a committee cannot meet unless the house refers a matter to it.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question? Why would it not be possible to have a committee like the standing committee on external affairs?

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Speaker, the standing committee on external affairs meets because this house refers something to it. Is it not the fact that standing order 65 states that there will be a standing committee on external affairs which gives it authority. It is because standing order 65 having stated there will be a standing committee on external affairs, this house then decides to refer certain matters to it. Unless the house did make this reference and decide upon it, the external affairs committee would not sit. It would have nothing with which to deal, and could not legally discuss anything.

Mr. Green: Why could not the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs be referred to a standing committee on veterans affairs, in just the same way as the estimates of the Department of External Affairs are referred to the standing committee on external affairs?

Mr. Lapointe: They can be referred to a special committee on veterans affairs just as they could be referred to a standing committee.

Mr. Green: But they never have been.

Mr. Lapointe: The point I am trying to make, and it does appear that I am endeavouring to do so in vain as regards certain hon. members opposite, is that up until now no one has brought forward any argument to show that by amending standing order 65 in order to have a standing committee on veterans affairs added to the present list of 12 standing committees, such a committee would be of more value than a special committee.

I would like to remind my hon. friend that all the rules and standing orders of this house were studied and thoroughly looked into by a special committee on rules and standing orders which was presided over by Mr. Speaker. On this committee members from all sides of the house and from every party were represented, and my hon. friend himself sat on that committee.

Mr. Green: Oh, no, he did not.

Mr. Lapointe: I am sorry, but I was under the impression that my hon. friend had sat on that committee at one time.

Mr. Churchill: You threw away all the rules last year, anyway.

Mr. Lapointe: I can say, however, that many hon. members on the other side of the house and some of those who have been arguing in favour of the establishment of this standing committee on veterans affairs were members of that special committee set up by the house to study, inquire into and consider the rules and standing orders of the house, and make recommendations as to what amendments should be made. I believe the report of that committee was brought down at the beginning of the 1955 session, and the present standing orders under which we operate in this house are the result of the deliberations of that committee whose report was unanimous. This committee on rules and standing orders studied every rule including what was then standing order 63 and which is now standing order 65; the numbers were changed at that time.

Mr. Churchill: What about the rule concerning ten o'clock closing?

Mr. Lapointe: At no time did the committee make a recommendation to the effect that standing order 65 should be amended to provide for the establishment of a standing committee on veterans affairs. The matter was thoroughly examined by representatives from all sides of the house, some of whom sat on the veterans affairs committee. The report was unanimous, but no mention was made of establishing a standing committee on veterans affairs.

Mr. Knowles: That is the point; the committee reported only on those things on which we were unanimous.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: Could we have the business for tomorrow?

An hon. Member: There is no one to give it.

Mr. Knowles: It was announced on Friday last. Is there any change?

Mr. Lapointe: I was not here last Friday but to my knowledge there is no change from the last announcement that was made. There is no change; the business will be the same as that announced on Friday night.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

NATIONAL DEFENCE—AIRCRAFT CHARTER PAYMENTS

Question No. 10—Mr. Fraser (Peterborough):

1. What was the total amount of money paid out by the Department of National Defence during (a) the year 1956; (b) the year 1955, for aircraft charter?
2. What was the total amount of money paid out by the Department of National Defence for charter of helicopters during (a) the year 1956; (b) the year 1955?
3. From what firms or individuals were these aircraft and helicopters chartered?
4. What amount was paid to each such firm or individual?
5. What were the aircraft and helicopters used for under each charter?

Answer by: Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence):

1. (a) $6,353,430.66 (1 April—30 Sept. 1956); (b) $4,609,287.10, £700 (sterling), (fiscal year 1955-56).

2. (a) $428,286.02 (1 April—30 Sept. 1956); (b) $147,544.07 (fiscal year 1955-56).

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS, HALIFAX, 1956

Question No. 44—Mr. Balcom:

1. How many immigrants entered Canada through the port of Halifax in 1956?
2. How many of these immigrants were Hungarians?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. 40,510.
2. 608 were Hungarian refugees.

TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING, N.S.—FEDERAL GRANTS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 5, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

UNITED NATIONS—REPORTED INCREASE IN CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO EMERGENCY FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the report which appeared in the paper yesterday to the effect that a Canadian armoured unit is to be sent to the United Nations emergency force is correct? If so, may we have a statement concerning the proposal?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question. We have had a request from the United Nations emergency force for a reconnaissance unit with scout cars and wireless vehicles and about 110 personnel and also for a number of other personnel, about 60 of the types already in Egypt. This request is under consideration and is being processed now. I will make a statement when it has been decided what action will be taken. As I have said the request is for a reconnaissance unit, not an armoured regiment.

Mr. Green: May I ask the Prime Minister or one of the other ministers whether any other nations are sending additional troops to this force; whether any of the nations that already have troops there are withdrawing them, and also in what locality these troops are supposed to serve?

Mr. Campney: I do not know of any troops that are being withdrawn. I noticed in the press, I think it was yesterday, that the Brazilian government is sending 400 or 500 further troops. A few days ago I gave a statement to the house indicating where the Canadians are located. So far as I know, there has been no change since.

Mr. Green: Are these troops going to the same place as the other Canadian troops?

Mr. Campney: They will go first, if they go, to the base. The decision as to where they will be deployed from there will rest with General Burns.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I ask a supplementary question. Has the government cleared with Colonel Nasser to see whether or not these troops will be acceptable?

Mr. Campney: No, we have had no communication with Colonel Nasser.

CAMP IPPERWASH — INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF GUARDS REGIMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence if he has received any telegrams protesting the removal of the fourth battalion of the Canadian Guards from Camp Ipperwash. If so, will the minister tell the house what is being done about it. If the Guards are removed from Camp Ipperwash will other troops be moved in?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, before the 4th Guards battalion was moved to Camp Ipperwash it was used as a militia camp, as a cadet camp and in various other ways. Once the Guards are removed it will again be used for such purposes. There is no present intention of moving any other regular unit into the camp but the matter is being given consideration to see if this might be possible.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Is it a fact that the Guards are being removed from Camp Ipperwash?

Mr. Campney: The battalion at Camp Ipperwash is not being moved. It is one of the two regular battalions being run down.

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER REDUCTION IN INFANTRY BATTALIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask the Minister of National Defence whether it is the intention of the government to make any further reduction in the number of infantry battalions in the Canadian army which are on active service?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): If and when any further reductions are made they will be announced in the same way I announced the last one.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Churchill: Will the minister answer a supplementary question? Is the 13th infantry battalion part of any brigade, or has it been given an independent role?

Mr. Campney: It remains part of the 4th brigade.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—REPORTED STATEMENT BY SASKATCHEWAN TREASURER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Irvin Studer (Swift Current-Maple Creek): If I am now in order I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask if the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan, Mr. Fines, has communicated with the government of Canada to say that the Saskatchewan government is now prepared to consider paying 25 per cent of the cost of the South Saskatchewan dam in cash as the work progresses?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I notice a report in the press that the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan was reported to have made a statement in a press conference to the effect indicated by the hon. gentleman's question, but to my knowledge no such communication has ever been made by the government of Saskatchewan to the government of Canada.

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Since the press has indicated that the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan has stated that the provincial government is prepared to finance the $20 million without reference to the federal government, can the Prime Minister say now whether or not the federal government is prepared to proceed with the dam?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I do not think any hon. member would expect the federal government to act upon newspaper reports in a matter that would involve a contract between the government of a province and the government of Canada. I can say that no consideration has been given to that project on the strength of the newspaper report of this statement to the press by the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Is it not a fact that the statement made by the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan is entirely along the same lines as the proposal discussed between the government of Saskatchewan and the Minister of Agriculture some time ago? That was my understanding on Saturday when I heard of it from the provincial treasurer himself.

[Mr. Campney.]

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I cannot say, Mr. Speaker, that it is entirely along the lines that were discussed. Up to the present time my understanding has been that the attitude of the provincial treasurer was that they should not be called upon to pay anything until there were earnings out of the power plants and that payments would be made out of those earnings.

[Later:]

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question supplementary to those asked by the hon. members for Swift Current-Maple Creek and Moose Mountain. In view of statements appearing in the press concerning the South Saskatchewan river dam, is the Prime Minister aware of any conditions laid down by the federal government which have not been met by the provincial government in an effort to begin immediate construction on the South Saskatchewan dam?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, it has already been stated in the house several times that the federal government laid down no other conditions but taking the responsibility when it was convinced that such was the fact that the construction of the South Saskatchewan dam would add more to the revenue of the national economy than it would take out of the revenue of the national economy in interest charges and amortization charges.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has been making statements in the province of Saskatchewan to the effect that in some way the provincial government is holding up the construction of the South Saskatchewan dam?

An hon. Member: If they changed their provincial government it would be all right.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not accompanied the Minister of Agriculture in his visits to the province of Saskatchewan and would not be in a position to answer the hon. gentleman's question from his personal knowledge.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—REFERENCE TO REPORTED RECORD DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce care to comment to the house on the report by the dominion bureau of statistics, issued yesterday, showing that during 1956 this country had a record trade deficit with the United States amounting to $1,290 million and a record over-all deficit with all countries amounting to $848 million?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, my comment is that exports were up about 11 per cent and imports were up about the same amount. There is an over-all trade deficit which is due wholly to the present abnormal rate of capital investment and that imbalance will tend to correct itself as soon as the capital program drops back to something like normal proportions.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: In view of the over-all trade deficit which established a record for all time for last year, and in view of the record trade deficit with the United States, will the Prime Minister now give consideration to initiating a British commonwealth trade conference so that an attempt may be made to improve Canada's trade position?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There has been no consideration given to initiating a commonwealth trade conference, and there is no present intention of doing so.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST THAT DATE BE SET FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having regard to the two resolutions which were passed on Saturday and Sunday by the United Nations, will he consider having two days set aside as soon as possible for the discussion particularly of external affairs?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I myself would like better but I shall have to discuss the matter with the Prime Minister and the leader of the house to make sure that time is available, having regard to the other business before us.

[Later:]

Mr. G. W. McLeod (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of press news items such as "Israeli refuses to withdraw troops as requested by U.N."; "India refuses to allow plebiscite to determine the future status of Kashmir as ordered by U.N."; "France refuses to yield power in Algiers to U.N.", would the Secretary of State for External Affairs advise the house if this government will advocate steps to strengthen the hand of the U.N. in world affairs or is its policy to support the reconstitution of the U.N. as an advisory council acting in world disputes only with the approval of all parties concerned?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if we have that debate on external affairs to which the Leader of the Opposition referred, this would be one of the matters I should like to deal with.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

STATEMENT ON PLAN TO COVER FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister be willing to tell the house of any progress he may have made in evolving a plan to apply unemployment insurance to fishermen?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Gloucester told me that he intended to ask a question on this subject, and I think I should also say that the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart), the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Cannon) and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Dickey) also spoke to me.

An hon. Member: Put them all in.

Mr. Gregg: I hope I have.

Mr. Hees: And the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska.

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Gregg: In accordance with the forecast I made when the act was amended last session, an unemployment insurance plan for fishermen has been worked out and approved by the government.

The commission is now taking the necessary steps through its regional and appropriate local offices to have the plan commence on April 1 next for the collection of contributions into the fund, and to commence on January 1 next for a consideration of applications for benefit.

Under this plan commercial fishermen will be covered regardless of whether they are wage earners, or work on shares as co-adventurers, or carry on their fishing operations alone. For those who are paid wages, the employer and the employee will, of course, make the contributions in the regular way.

Fishermen who do not work for wages have no employer in the ordinary sense. It will be necessary in their case for the person who first buys or acquires a fisherman's catch to be treated as the employer for the purpose of making the contributions and keeping the records.

In general, the rates of contributions and benefits will be the same as those applying to all other insured workers.

The period when benefit may be paid will be restricted to the time of year when most fishermen are unemployed. The plan, therefore, provides for the payment of benefit only between the beginning of January and the middle of April, for such number of weeks as the claimant may be entitled to, with a minimum of 10. Provision is made for integrating fishing contributions with contributions from other insured employment.

Contributions into the fund will commence as from April 1 next, but I wish to make it clear that these contributions will not count for any benefit until the beginning of January 1, 1958.

What I have given, Mr. Speaker, is just a general outline of the plan. I would be glad to give further details when my estimates are before the house.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour supplementary to the statement he made earlier on unemployment insurance benefits for fishermen. My question is this. Will contributions to the fund made while fishing prior to the effective date of fishermen's benefits count toward qualification for regular benefits if their addition to contributions made in other employment would qualify the applicant?

Mr. Gregg: Mr. Speaker, I think I should like to take notice of that question. Questions in that category I would prefer to leave until this matter is discussed in detail when my estimates for the unemployment insurance commission come before the house.

Mr. Barnett: May I ask a supplementary question. Would the minister tell the house, in view of his answer, when copies of the regulations will be available to members of the house?

Mr. Gregg: The regulations are now under preparation. As my hon. friend realizes, the first phase has to do with regulations covering contributions into the fund. These will be completed and will be made known to the offices affected before the opening date of April 1. The other regulations which have to do with the benefits will not be completed until after that date, so there will be a series of regulations and as they are completed they will be made available.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STATEMENT ON WORKING DAYS LOST THROUGH ILLNESS AND INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question asked on January 24 last, as recorded at page 594 of Hansard. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) asked for the total number of man working days lost through illness as a supplement to the information that 1,261,400 man working days were lost through industrial disputes in 1956.

I said at the time that only an estimate could be given, and this is it. The best means of providing such an estimate appears to be through the monthly labour force survey. From this survey, information is obtained as to the number of persons with jobs who did not work during the survey week because of illness, and also the number of persons with jobs who worked less than 35 hours during the week because of illness. In the year 1956 the average number of persons who did not work at all during the survey week because of illness was 57,250 per week; the average who worked less than 35 hours because of illness was 26,750. Assuming that persons in the first category lost five days per week and persons in the second category lost two days per week, it has been estimated that in the year 1956 just under 17 million man days were lost owing to illness. The corresponding figure for 1955 would be just over 16 million.

In addition to this labour force survey the dominion bureau of statistics have cross-checked through other surveys which seem to indicate that the figures I have given may be slightly low.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REQUEST FOR FIVE-DAY 40-HOUR WEEK FOR CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister's department co-operating with the Department of National Defence to assure civilian employees in the national defence establishments the five-day 40-hour week as enjoyed by the employees of the Department of Veterans Affairs?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the appropriate branch of my department co-operates at all times with the Department of National Defence and other departments to see to it that those civilian employees receive proper wages and to give information on hours of work. If my hon. friend has any special cases in mind I should be happy if he brought them to my attention.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I was thinking particularly of 27 C.O.D. at London and the national defence establishment at Hagersville.

Mr. Gregg: If my hon. friend will send me the details I shall be glad to see that they are studied.

AIRPORTS

MALTON AND TORONTO ISLAND—PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Toronto city council yesterday endorsed an agreement to transfer the title to Malton airport to the government as soon as work begins on improvement of the Toronto island airport, could the minister advise the house, first, when such work will commence and, second, when work will commence at Malton on the new terminal facilities?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would have to examine the estimates for the coming year to know what is provided for of the work to which the hon. gentleman just referred and to ascertain, too, at what time it is proposed to make a start on a new terminal building at Toronto. I shall try to answer the hon. gentleman tomorrow.

[Later:]

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport a question supplementary to the questions asked by the member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) with respect to Malton airport. When the minister is making his investigation would he also ascertain that the transfer of the property from the city of Toronto to the Department of Transport will not deprive the township of Toronto of municipal taxes that have been collected on that land so far?

IMMIGRATION

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES, ONTARIO—APPORTIONMENT OF SETTLEMENT COSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration if he will make a statement regarding negotiations between this government and the government of Ontario as to the apportionment of the cost of caring for Hungarian refugees coming to Canada and going to Ontario?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) intends to make a statement on this matter at the earliest opportunity.

POTATOES

CANADA-UNITED STATES—REPORTED INCREASE IN TARIFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister elaborate on a statement carried in today's Globe and Mail, datelined Washington, February 4, to the effect that the potato tariff may be raised?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I said in the house last week that we had entered into negotiations with the United States with respect to the tariff on potatoes, which is of course a tariff that applies in some respects on both sides of the border, but I would not want to give any indication of what the outcome might be. This is a negotiation which has not actually started, in the sense that the parties are not together. The report must have been based upon a notice given by the United States government to the persons interested in the tariff to see the government of the United States first with respect to their interests. After this process has been carried on for I think three or four weeks a decision is taken with the United States government apprized of the thoughts of their producers on the subject.

PUBLIC WORKS

BORDEN, P.E.I.-CAPE JOURIMAIN, N.B.—INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED CAUSEWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. N. A. Matheson (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister say what his department is doing to determine the feasibility of the proposed causeway between Borden, Prince Edward Island, and cape Jourimain, New Brunswick?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I take that question as notice?

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

SUGAR—REPORT OF RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the merger between the British Columbia Sugar Refining Company Limited and the Manitoba Sugar Company Limited, which the report of the restrictive trade practices commission recommended should not take place, has already come into effect, what action does the government propose to take to break up this combine in the sugar industry in western Canada?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): I am sure that my hon. friend is aware that all these combines cases involve as a rule very intricate facts and the conclusions arising out of these facts are complex. This report which has been received quite recently is being studied by the department and in due course I will be making a statement concerning it. Until this study is completed I have nothing to say in the matter.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question. When he is making that study will the minister ascertain whether or not the price increases made recently by the Manitoba Sugar Company were made on the initiative of that company itself or were they made at the dictation of the combine in western Canada which is headed by this British Columbia company?

Mr. Garson: It is the practice in all of these cases to go over all the relevant material which is available and if this particular supposition which my hon. friend voices is the fact we will certainly endeavour to confirm it.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Am I correct in saying that this transaction just referred to is much similar to a transaction in the brewing industry about which similar warnings or cautions were sounded by the department? If so, what is the situation in that respect? Is the government taking any action, because I understand that that merger is now complete.

Mr. Garson: Any similarity between these two I should think would be rather superficial. In the case of the sugar merger the completed merger is alleged by the report to give the resulting corporation control of a large area of the trade. It was found in the beer report, as I am sure my hon. friend who asked the question is aware, that that result did not obtain after the transactions reported in the report had been completed. In that respect the two are quite different.

[Mr. Winters.]

BEER—ACTION TO BE TAKEN ON ALLEGED COMBINE IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the recommendation of the restrictive trade practices commission that the government should take steps to prevent Canadian Breweries Limited from acquiring control over Western Canada Brewers Limited, and in view of the action of Canadian Breweries Limited in extending its control over Western Canada Brewers, what action is the minister taking to carry out the recommendation of the restrictive trade practices commission in order to prevent the formation of a brewery monopoly in western Canada?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): I wish to thank my hon. friend for having given me notice of his question. The report of the restrictive trade practices commission expressed the opinion that the merger program of Canadian Breweries Limited had been monopolistic in nature and not in the public interest. It also came to the conclusion, however, that Canadian Breweries Limited had not acquired complete or substantial control over the industry in any part of Canada.

Since then, that is since the delivery of the report, the court of appeal in British Columbia has handed down a decision in a Vancouver gasoline case which, if correct, would appear to cast some doubt on whether there is a good case for prosecution in the beer case. The Department of Justice immediately applied to the Supreme Court of Canada for leave to appeal against the British Columbia decision, but the application was refused in October last. A similar point, however, is before the Supreme Court of Canada in the fine paper case. The point is, however, generally speaking, whether substantial elimination of competition constitutes injury to the public under the anti-combines legislation. This is one of the points upon which our decision as to what to do in the beer case turns, and we would prefer not to come to a conclusion in the beer case upon the other point until the fine papers case shall have been decided.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—SITUATION ON HOBBEMA RESERVE, ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Carl O. Nickle (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. On January 31 I asked the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a question which he answered by stating that he was seeking advice on this subject. Sufficient time having elapsed for his advisers to have given him certain information, would the Prime Minister care to answer the question in the absence of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

The question is this. By what authority, and on whose instructions, was a petition from the Indian Association of Alberta, addressed to the Queen, transferred from the office of the Governor General to that of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and will the Prime Minister now state whether or not his government will send this petition to Her Majesty, to whom it is addressed?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I have not gone into that question at all, Mr. Speaker. I have received no advice from the legal advisers of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and I am informed that their report has not yet been completed.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister whether it is not a fact that one of the vestigial rights which Indians enjoy by reason of the fact that they entered into a treaty with the British crown is the right to direct petitions to the Queen, and that it cannot in any way be interfered with, regardless of the relationship which Her Majesty's government in Canada bears to her.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): If the hon. gentleman has examined those treaties and ascertained that that is the situation, he is further advanced than I am. I have not examined them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have you looked into it?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, I have not looked into that question.

Mr. Nickle: Since the Prime Minister has not himself looked into the Indian Act of 1951 and the present case in Alberta, may I ask him, in view of that, who is going to decide this particular question?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I hope, Mr. Speaker, the question of fact as to whether certain people who have been residing on this reserve are entitled to remain there will be decided by the courts.

Mr. Nickle: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Prime Minister is apparently not prepared to speak for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on this question or on questions related to it, can he indicate when the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will be returning to the house so these questions may be directed to him?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I understand that the appeal to put this case before the appropriate district judge has been entered and that it will be dealt with by the appropriate court. As to what day or what hour the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will be back, I am unable at this moment to say. I will inquire and will supply the information to my hon. friend as soon as I get it.

HOBBEMA INDIAN RESERVE, ALBERTA—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ray Thomas (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low), to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the callous treatment of 118 human beings through the expulsion of 23 families of the Samson Indian band from the Hobbema Indian reserve in Wetaskiwin riding.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to allow his motion to stand for the time being, as I perceive that there are hon. gentlemen who have questions to ask of the ministry at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: All questions have now been asked. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Thomas) has placed before me a motion in which he asked leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26. Now, the definite matter of urgent public importance is defined in the following matter:

> . . . the callous treatment of 118 human beings through the expulsion of 23 families of the Samson Indian band from the Hobbema Indian reserve in the Wetaskiwin riding.

I am not very familiar with the subject matter referred to by the hon. gentleman in his motion except through what I have heard in this house at question time. It was indicated by answers to questions that there were matters with respect to this problem that were at the moment being considered by our courts. I do not know whether we are talking about the same thing, but I distinctly recall having heard the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration indicate that some of these matters were now before the courts. If that is so, it would not be debatable at this time.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, I understood the Prime Minister to say a few minutes ago that he understood it was before the courts. My understanding is that there has not been an appeal launched up to the present time.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): May I interrupt to say that is incorrect. At least we received the notice of the appeal on Friday, I think it was.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): This department is always before the courts because of the wrongful action of the minister. A too strict application of this rule would make it virtually impossible to discuss anything coming under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. I hope you will consider that point.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. gentleman says, "I hope you will consider that point". Would he be good enough to make his point again, because I have not heard it.

Mr. Fulton: My point was that, as Your Honour has remarked, on this and on other occasions when matters concerning this department were raised at the question period, the answer of the minister was that this matter is before the courts. It seems to be a fact that owing to the method of administration followed by the minister his department is frequently before the courts. My suggestion was that a too strict interpretation of the application of the rule that you referred to would virtually preclude any discussion of that department. I hope, therefore, that Your Honour might see that there is room for a distinction here and also that the question to come before the courts need not be discussed, but the position of the Indians themselves might without doing any violence to the rule.

Mr. Speaker: It would be very difficult to administer some of these rules if it happens, as the hon. gentleman says, that the department is often before the courts. In that case the rule would have to be by-passed with respect to that department but enforced when another department is concerned with a motion of this kind. But, having had on two separate occasions since the beginning of this session to reject some of these motions because at the time the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne was currently going on, and having made the statement that whenever some of these debates on a motion to go into supply and the debate on the budget are currently going on the practice of Speakers has always been not to accept these motions, I was quite satisfied that whenever a matter appeared to be definite and of sufficient importance I would be inclined to accept them because otherwise I felt that standing order 26 would soon become almost devoid of any sense whatever.

[Mr. Thomas.]

But, on the other hand, there are other rules which must be considered. At the moment I am looking at citation 173 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition, which reads:

> The Speaker is bound to apply to motions made under standing order 31 the established rules of debate, and to enforce the principle that subjects excluded by those rules cannot be brought forward thereon, such as a matter under adjudication by a court of law, or matters already discussed during the current session, whether upon a substantive motion, upon an amendment, or upon an order of the day.

Now, it appears from the information given to the house by the Minister of Finance, which seemed to be acceptable to the hon. member for Wetaskiwin, that the matter referred to in his motion is now, as citation 173 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms says, "under adjudication by a court of law", and in such circumstances I cannot accept the motion. Orders of the day.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, just so that I shall be correctly reported, I think I said we had received the notice on Friday. I meant yesterday. The notice was received on Monday.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works before the orders of the day are called.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that is not possible at this time because I took up the motion moved by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin after I had understood that all questions had been asked. We have now reached the orders of the day.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MAIL COURIERS—REQUESTS FOR UPWARD REVISION OF CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Can the minister indicate to the house if the committee on the personnel of the Post Office Department has examined the many requests made by the mail couriers for an upward revision of their contract?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there has been no committee, as such, doing the survey which my hon. friend has inquired about, but I did give instructions to the officers of the transportation branch of the department during the course of last fall—I think it was the end of November or the beginning of December —to make a survey of rural mail contracts now existing between the Post Office Department and rural mail couriers with a view to making recommendations as to increases in the amounts of those contracts where deemed necessary, and if the hon. member will look at the estimates which were tabled in this house a few weeks ago he will see that the item concerning transportation of mail mentions that it will include an amount to permit increasing such contracts.

I might add that when my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris), tables the final supplementary estimates for this year a similar item will be included so that those contracts which have already been processed can be dealt with immediately.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

QUEBEC CITY—INQUIRY AS TO TENDERS FOR NEW POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Wilfrid Dufresne (Quebec West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Have any tenders been called in connection with the construction of the new post office in Quebec city? If so, when is construction expected to begin? If the minister does not know, I can ask the parliamentary assistant.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the developments there. We are still engaged in negotiations for property and final determination has not yet been made.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to know quite a bit. Maybe he knows a little bit more than does the Minister of Transport. Can he give me any information about the exchange of lots between the Canadian National Railways and the authorities of the city of Quebec?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, a number of meetings have been held between the officials of the Department of Public Works, the city of Quebec and the Canadian National Railways—

Mr. Dufresne: I do not think so. He was not there. He does not know.

Mr. Winters: —to arrive at a basis for exchanging property. The situation is that the Department of Public Works acquired a property in Quebec which was quite suitable for our purpose, which was the erection of a new post office building. When we were just about ready to proceed, the city asked us to desist on that particular site and to consider another site so that they could develop the site we had in the best interests of the traffic of the city.

Mr. Dufresne: That was a year ago.

Mr. Winters: We told the city we would agree if they would exchange with us another suitable site for the one we now own. That involved negotiations between the Canadian National Railways, the city and ourselves. There are also private property owners involved. The negotiations have become protracted. I can assure my hon. friend that we are following them closely and that I myself was in communication with the mayor within the last few days. I am also aware that the Prime Minister as well has again had conversations with the mayor within the past few days.

Mr. Dufresne: When was that? On Saturday last?

[Later:]

(Translation):

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell us what progress has been made in the negotiations that were started more than a year ago by Quebec city authorities and the Canadian National Railways for an exchange of lots as a building site for a new post office building in that city?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any negotiations between the authorities of the Canadian National Railways and the city of Quebec, but I shall look into the matter and reply later to the hon. member.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING—ERECTION OF NEW ONTARIO REGIONAL OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the government's tight money policy, which is designed to restrict home construction, would the minister advise the house what the purpose is in building a new Ontario regional office for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at this time, when they already occupy adequate accommodation?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): The hon. member has made two assertions, both of which are incorrect.

Mr. Pallett: Would the Minister of Public Works advise the house what is the purpose at this time in building a new central Ontario office for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, that is a fair question, and the answer is to provide adequate accommodation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Peel. Does his answer indicate that his department has made an exhaustive survey of all accommodation and that the only way they could provide adequate accommodation was to erect a new building themselves?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, a survey was made. This survey was made some time ago. Those plans were prepared in 1955, and the building was commenced in June, 1956.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): May I ask a further supplementary question? In view of the fact that the government's policy dealing with inflation has changed, has the minister given any thought to changing those plans?

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): If the minister has not given any thought to it, does he expect private business to continue to give thought to it?

Mr. Dufresne: Answer next week.

POSTAL SERVICE

INGERSOLL—LETTER CARRIER DELIVERY SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General which I hope he will take as notice. Has the Post Office Department as yet completed its survey of the town of Ingersoll with a view to instituting letter carrier delivery in that town? If so, how soon may letter carrier delivery be expected to commence in Ingersoll?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think I would have to inquire with regard to that matter. I know the survey was taking place. I believe I communicated with the hon. member and informed him to that effect. As yet, however, I have not had the results of it.

BROADCASTING

PEACE RIVER AREA—PROTESTS OF AMATEUR RADIO STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. R. Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport of which I sent him notice. Would the minister make a report to the house in respect of the strong protests submitted by amateur radio stations in the Peace river area regarding the suggested change in amateur radio station call letters?

[Mr. Winters.]

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand that a telegram was sent to one of the officials of my department complaining about a change which was proposed to be made in the Peace river district. I do not think that the term "protest" should be used because I do not think there is any cause for protest. The situation is that the district has announced that on new applications for shortwave radio stations the call letters VE-7, ATA to ATZ are to be made available but will be obligatory only for new applicants. Those who already have licences and call letters will have the opportunity of changing but no obligation to do so. I would tell the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that if there are in the Peace river district operators who are now using call letters such as PC, SC, or CCF they will now have the opportunity of changing.

Mr. Leboe: Will we get "L" in place of it?

Mr. Marler: Yes, Mr. Speaker, "L" will be a very popular letter this year.

HEALTH INSURANCE

CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCE OF ONTARIO—INQUIRY AS TO POSITION OF OTHER PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of National Health and Welfare based upon the correspondence between the Prime Minister and the premier of Ontario, which the Prime Minister tabled yesterday. Are arrangements being made for an immediate conference between the two governments to try to reach agreement on matters of detail so that action might soon be taken regarding hospital insurance?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Prime Minister suggests that I might deal with this question. The answer is yes. While I am on my feet, I should like to add a word. I hope the hon. gentleman will share my pleasure in knowing that the government of Newfoundland has accepted the federal government's proposal.

Mr. Knowles: May I, in expressing my pleasure at the announcement the minister has made, ask him whether he has anything further to say regarding consultations with the government of the province of Manitoba? Are there any discussions between Manitoba and this government with reference to something closer to the federal government's plan than the disaster plan proposed in Manitoba last week?

Mr. Martin: While I suppose it is understandable that my hon. friend should be curious about his own province, I hope he will be pleased also to know that this morning I had a telephone conversation with the minister of health for Manitoba.

Mr. Knowles: What did he tell you?

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): I should like to satisfy my curiosity also by asking the minister a question. Press reports indicate that Nova Scotia is willing to accept a national health plan when it is available. Has any official decision been given to the minister's department indicating the wishes of Nova Scotia in the matter?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I indicated, I think, a few days ago that the premier of Nova Scotia had been in Ottawa and that this question, amongst others, was the subject of discussion. I did see a press statement some days later attributing to him the observation that when the federal hospital insurance proposal became available he would give it his consideration. Well, of course, the federal proposal has been available now for many months.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister say whether, after a majority of the provinces indicate their willingness to go ahead with the hospitalization plan, at that point the federal government will be prepared to participate in plans that are already in effect in some of the provinces?

Mr. Martin: This question has been discussed in this house so often that my hon. friend knows that when the government makes a proposal, which it has made after careful consideration, it does not seek any excuse for not carrying out the implications of that proposal. No one knows that better than the hon. gentleman who asks the question.

Mr. Argue: I take it from the minister's very involved answer that means the federal government would be prepared to participate with the governments of Saskatchewan and British Columbia immediately in their hospital plans.

Mr. Martin: Last January the Prime Minister of Canada made a statement in this house in which he outlined the proposals of the federal government. I do not think I need add that the Prime Minister, the head of this government, is not the kind of man who, under any circumstances, would shirk from the proposals which he has made.

Mr. Argue: A good thing he made them, then.

Mr. Martin: What my hon. friend is seeking to do is to give the impression that the federal government is not sincerely disposed in the proposal which it made to the provinces. I have indicated today the progress we are making in this matter. I would call to my hon. friend's attention also what the Prime Minister said when speaking to the people of Canada last night about this proposal.

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): If the first assertion is true, that the government has sought no excuse for avoiding health insurance, why is it that health insurance has not been introduced since 1919 when it first appeared in the Liberal platform? May we have an answer to that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Martin: One of the obvious answers is that in the government of one of the larger provinces there was not the disposition to accede to a proposal, and we are happy that now progress on the part of one of those larger provinces has been made possible.

Mr. Rowe: Is ahead of you.

Mr. Hees: You are hoping. Thank God somebody is progressive in this country.

CANADA COUNCIL

PROVISION FOR ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE ARTS, HUMANITIES AND SOCIAL SCIENCES

The house resumed, from Friday, January 18, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East)—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a Canada Council for the encouragement of the arts, humanities and social sciences and further to provide inter alia that

(a) the Minister of Finance may, out of the consolidated revenue fund, pay to the council the sum of fifty million dollars to constitute an endowment fund for the purposes of the act, and

(b) the council shall establish a fund to be called the university capital grants fund, to which shall be credited the sum of fifty million dollars, to be paid to the council by the Minister of Finance out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, there are three or four questions I should like to ask the Prime Minister concerning this resolution, and the first is this. In 1953 when we had some discussion about the functions of the Canada Council the Prime Minister said, as reported at page 4431 of Hansard for April 27 of that year:

There are other matters, too. At one time consideration was given to a Canadian order or medal.

I think the Canada Council, if there should come to be one, should have the initiative of recommendations in that regard . . .

It would be interesting if the Prime Minister would tell the committee today whether it is the intention of the government to make provision for the Canada medal and whether one of the functions of this council would be to make the awards. Also would he tell us what type of scholarships the government has in mind? The Massey commission as I read their report recommended that there should be post-graduate scholarships, fellowships, exchange scholarships presumably for graduates from other countries and, finally, undergraduate scholarships. In at least two of those recommendations mention was made of scholarships in the humanities, the social sciences and law. Is it the intention that there shall be these four different types of scholarships or even more and are they to be restricted to the humanities, the social sciences and the law?

The third question is this. What if any provision is made for advancing the training of engineers and scientists under the work of this council? And finally, would the Prime Minister explain why there is to be a fund set up of $50 million rather than an annual grant? He did deal with that briefly when he spoke on January 18 and I am referring to page 396 of Hansard for that date, but I think it would be helpful if we were told in more detail just why the system of setting aside a large sum of money is being followed. I ask that particularly because, as the Prime Minister knows the Massey commission did not make a recommendation of that kind but on the contrary recommended an annual grant. At page 382 of the report of the Massey commission we find these words:

We do not find it possible to propose specific sums; we should, however, imagine that the council would find it possible to perform its varied duties effectively with an annual budget which would constitute a very slight charge upon all members of the Canadian population. We venture to believe that our fellow-citizens would find this investment modest in relation to the returns which, we are confident, they could reasonably expect.

If that recommendation had been followed the result would be to keep parliament and through parliament the Canadian people much more directly in touch with the work of the council. This system of making an annual grant has been adopted in other cases. I think that is what is done in the case of the national research council. I believe they make provision for their scholarships out of their annual vote so there can be a discussion in parliament each session as that money is voted on the question of the scholarships that are being awarded by the national research council.

There seems to be a good deal of questioning as to the wisdom of simply setting aside the sum of $50 million. Once that is done then it passes right beyond the reach of parliament. I submit that Mr. Massey and his fellow commissioners had in mind throughout the report having an annual payment. Perhaps the Prime Minister would be good enough to explain why the other system is being adopted.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, I welcome—

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could have an answer to my questions.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Well, Mr. Chairman, I know that the hon. member is not the only one who intends to speak and I can imagine there will be other questions. I have no objection to answering right away those questions which he has raised but I thought perhaps they could all be dealt with at the same time. However, if the hon. member prefers that I answer his questions right away and if others who wish to speak have no objection to my taking the floor at this time I will do so.

Mr. Green: I do suggest, Mr. Chairman, it would simplify the handling of the resolution if we could have these answers.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, there will be no provision in the bill that will be introduced if and when this resolution is adopted that has anything to do with the Canada medal.

The second question was, will there be any determination in the bill of the kind of scholarships that will be provided. There are no provisions or limitations in the bill in that regard except that there will have to be scholarships for the furthering of the objectives of the Canada Council which are to promote the development of the humanities and social sciences and there will be no scholarships for the development or promotion of engineering and scientific research. That is already being done and if it requires to be increased it should continue to be done through the national research council.

Mr. Green: Of course, the national research council does not train engineers.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, the national research council does not train engineers and we should not set up the Canada Council as a university to train engineers or to train any others. It is to give assistance to the institutions that do that work or through scholarships to those who would be benefiting from that work. It is not intended that the Canada Council should establish a school to train any person for advanced studies.

The fourth question was, why is there a fund of $50 million being appropriated at this time whilst that had not been a recommendation made by the Massey commission. That is probably something that went beyond what the Massey commission recommended at that time. It was for the purpose of creating this body in such a way that it would not be subject to frequent pressures in the allocation of the funds which would be placed at its disposal.

I might say that one of the considerations which I had in mind—it was not the governing consideration—was the fact that there had been at the time we were preparing this recommendation for parliament two very unusually large estates from which the collections of succession duties had been made in amounts that could not be considered to be recurring amounts. In connection with one estate the statement had been made more than once by the deceased during his lifetime that he was not making provision during his lifetime or apt to make any under his will for benefactions to public institutions because the succession duties were so high, the proportion of his estate which would be taken in succession duties, if it were thought fit, could be employed on the recommendation of the government by parliament for like purposes.

In the case of the other estate it is not to my knowledge that the deceased had made a similar declaration, but it is to my knowledge that he had made modest contributions to institutions of the character of those envisaged by this legislation. But they were amounts that were quite abnormal and that came into the revenues or incomes of the year when these matters were being considered. That was one of the factors which influenced my judgment in making the recommendation to my colleagues that the Canada Council be provided with this endowment which I hope rather confidently will be substantially increased by endowments from well-to-do Canadians, either as gifts or as a result of testamentary dispositions.

Mr. Green: Would they not be tax exempt?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): They would be tax exempt, yes. That was the rationalizing of the first of the two deceased I have mentioned who left abnormally large estates.

Mr. Green: To what estates is the Prime Minister referring?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): It is well known that they are the Killam and the Sir James Dunn estates. They were abnormally large estates. Mr. Killam had stated that if there was a bequest for one of these benefactions it would not incur succession duties, but that if there was not the whole estate would incur succession duties and the government might appropriate such portion as it saw fit to the furtherance of the objectives of these foundations or endowments or institutions which had received consideration from wealthy citizens who felt that they were thus making some return to the Canadian society for the benefits they had reaped from the functioning of Canadian institutions.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Does the Prime Minister not think that this is setting a dangerous precedent? Are we to be led to believe that if anyone puts a provision in his will that he expects the proceeds of succession duties to go to a certain place the government, having acted in this way, would be under an obligation to do it again?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The government would be under no obligation; the government was under no obligation to do it. It did provide a sort of windfall which came I think at a most opportune time. I suppose there will be other windfalls because in spite of the rates of taxation there are growing fortunes in the hands of Canadian individuals, as the hon. gentleman well knows, although that is not based on his or my experience.

There are also other occasions of that kind, but the reason was that I did not feel that the list of those who might be getting scholarships should be a matter for discussion in any kind of political arena and the choice of the kind of scholarships that would be first provided would I hope be wisely made by those who would be selected to become members of this council. Personally I would feel that it was post-graduate work which was most urgent at the present time. The greatest need at the present time in the humanities and social sciences is to prepare a larger number of qualified professors to teach these sciences in our universities. The other measure providing for annual aid of $16 million to the universities might be of some assistance in making university professorships more attractive to the people who would give the best kind of service in professorships in universities.

I would hope that originally a large part of the revenue which would be produced by this endowment would be devoted to the purposes of providing a considerably larger number of qualified professors for the universities because there is going to be a considerably larger number of young men and women looking for the kind of higher education which the universities can provide. Still it was felt that that might not always be the case, that there might be some consideration given to whether or not in certain cases there should be undergraduate scholarships. It must be remembered that while an endowment of $50 million may look to be quite substantial the revenue from it will not provide a large number of undergraduate scholarships in proportion to the number of undergraduates who will be frequenting our universities.

While the smaller number of scholarships for post-graduate work or even for fellowship scholarships or exchange scholarships with other universities might not loom very large, it might be percentagewise considerable when compared with the total number of qualified professors there are in Canadian universities for the teaching of these sciences. I am disclosing some of the provisions which will be in the bill. I hope it will not be very long before the bill is available to hon. members and I see no point in not doing so when members are personally interested in receiving that information.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the Prime Minister a question on that point? May we take it from the statement he has made that it is the intention to appropriate the $50 million endowment fund, indeed, both of the $50 million endowment funds, aggregating $100 million, in the course of the present fiscal year, that is to say, that this sum would be in the accounts for the fiscal year ending March 31 next?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I would not like to make any commitment in that regard, because that will not be possible unless the council is set up and is operating before the expiry of the fiscal year. The fiscal year expires on March 31. It will not be possible to turn this money over until the bill has been passed and until the council has been appointed and is in a position to receive it, and to accept it under the terms of the act.

Mr. Fleming: I suppose that is a matter of the terms of the bill. But what is the government's purpose? Is it the hope and intention of the government that the bill will have been passed and the council appointed by the 31st of March, and that the $100 million will therefore be appropriated on account to the financial operation for the present fiscal year?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I must confess I have not discussed with the Minister of Finance, when, and from what source, the $100 million would come, but I hope that the bill will be passed and that it will be possible for us to secure the acceptance of the required number of members of the council in order that the council may exist as a corporate body before March 31. As I say, I have not discussed with the Minister of Finance where or how the amount would be provided, but I did have in the back of my mind this notion that two unusual windfalls in the form of succession duties occurred toward the end of the last fiscal year and in this year—I do not know whether any of the succession duties were paid before the beginning of this year or not, but I know that a large portion of those succession duties was paid in the course of the present fiscal year.

Mr. Fleming: Would the Prime Minister indicate the amount, so that we might have some conception of the relationship between the amount of these duties and the amount to be incorporated in the bill?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): My understanding is that it is less than $100 million for the two.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have just one question arising regarding these estates—these two large estates, duties from which constituted the windfall; everyone knows what they were without our having to identify them. Has the amount of succession duty been determined in these two cases, and has the amount of that succession duty been shown in the surplus for the last year, or is it still to be determined.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I know that there has been over $50 million paid in; that is reflected in the so-called surpluses which are shown in the monthly statements issued by the Department of Finance. Those statements include all the receipts from taxation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that one of the estates, or both?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I do not have the information with respect to one of them, but I understand that with respect to one something over $50 million has been received in the receipts for the current year.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks at this time, though I am not going to become involved in the type of discussion which has been going on; I think that can be left until the bill is before the house and the committee, and we know precisely what we are discussing so far as details are concerned.

I want to welcome the announcement by the government that it is now prepared to proceed with the creation of the Canada Council. I believe that such a council is long overdue, and I feel that the results of its work will fully justify the effort involved in setting it up, because we have a number of examples of similar bodies which have brought about considerable benefits at other levels of government.

In Great Britain, of course, a similar body was set up several years ago. It is not my intention to refer, except in passing, to the Arts Council of Great Britain, but I do want to suggest that we in Saskatchewan have been fortunate in enjoying the work of the Saskatchewan Arts Board since 1947, and I feel that the type of work carried on by that board could well set an example to a federal body. I do not wish to go into any details with regard to the many activities carried on by the Saskatchewan Arts Board, but I may say that the board has concerned itself with providing opportunities for Saskatchewan talent to be enjoyed by Saskatchewan people. With that end in mind, concert tours were arranged in order to enable Saskatchewan musicians who had distinguished themselves in other parts of Canada, and, indeed, beyond Canada, to return to their native province and allow their fellow citizens in that province to enjoy their music.

Tours were also arranged for drama groups. A number of years ago the University Players were sponsored by that organization, and these players took good drama into many areas of the province which in normal circumstances would never have had the chance of seeing "live" stage productions. The board has also done considerable work in the field of the visual arts, in crafts and in literature. As one example of the work they carried on, I may say that they conducted a "writers' workshop" a number of years ago under the direction of the famous Canadian author W. O. Mitchell. This was, of course, designed to provide some opportunity for young people who desired to make a career in this field to obtain some of the knowledge required in order to pursue that endeavour.

I think the Saskatchewan Arts Board has more than proven itself as a valuable contribution to the welfare of the province, and I would like to point this out: the people who oppose the idea of the Canada Council are very much inclined to talk about "forcing culture down people's throats" or to make such statements as: "You cannot buy culture." No one is going to disagree with regard to that. It is not a question of trying to "buy culture"; it is a question of providing a climate which will encourage the development of the artist, and this is essentially what the Saskatchewan Arts Board has sought to do during the years of its existence.

I believe this is something which we have to recognize at the present time in this modern industrial age when we are thinking in terms of automation and in terms of making proper use of leisure time; and I believe that as part of our education we should develop the capacity to use this leisure time to the best possible advantage. Certainly, any move which will encourage the development of the artist in Canada is going to enable Canadians to take advantage of such opportunities to enjoy a richer and a fuller life.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the government has indicated some awareness of the need but I am not satisfied that it is fully cognizant of all that is involved in this question. It is all very well to talk about encouraging the arts. It is all very well to talk about the type of program about which the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) spoke when he introduced this resolution. But it seems to me that we must be prepared to get down to practical cases. We must do something for these people whose services are indispensable in such a program.

I am just going to refer to one specific example of what I mean. I received something in the mail a few weeks ago. I am sure all hon. members received it. I refer to bulletins from the Civil Service Commission of Canada. These two bulletins happened to be in the same envelope. That is the only reason I am using these two for purposes of comparison. I note that one of these bulletins is headed "Civil Service of Canada Requires Librarians". What are the salaries offered? They are $3,180 to $3,780. They are the salaries offered to graduate librarians. Here is what they require of these people who enter the government service:

Duties (Librarian 1)

Under supervision, to perform professional librarian duties such as reference work, cataloguing and classifying material, compilation of bibliographies, supervision of preparation of material for binding, obtaining data for requisitioning of new material, preparation of reports and correspondence; to train and supervise non-professional library employees; and to perform other related duties as required.

That is quite a tall order, Mr. Chairman. I am sure that we want to get the best people into that field of work. Then the bulletin goes on to describe the qualifications:

Qualifications

A Bachelor's degree in Library Science in a course of recognized standing;

Personal suitability; satisfactory physical condition.

The latter is common in most of these requirements. Then the bulletin goes on to say this:

Note: A certificate or diploma in library science is not considered as the equivalent of degree standing in Library Science.

He must take a degree course which is a post-graduate course after the Bachelor's degree in arts. Then the note continues:

For some positions a knowledge of French and/or one or more foreign languages may be required.

Canada Council

I think you will agree, Mr. Chairman, that the requirements for this job are quite high. Yet for this position the government is offering to pay the miserable pittance of $3,180 to $3,780. They want graduate librarians, persons who have gone through university and obtained their Bachelor's degree, who have gone through a school of library science and all they are offering such people is $3,180.

The other bulletin to which I referred a moment ago is here in my hand. I have no particular reason for picking this one out other than the fact that the two came together but I think it makes a startling contrast. This one is headed "Civil Service of Canada requires Real Estate Assessor". For one classification they offer $3,900 to $4,500 and for another classification, namely technical officer 3, they offer $4,710 to $5,310. What are the requirements for this particular job? They are stated here as follows:

A good general education acquired as a result of general training and experience; . . .

There is no talk of university degrees. There are no great requirements in so far as academic standing is concerned. Yet the salaries are vastly higher than are those offered to people whom we require to have a degree in library science.

If the government is going to indicate its sincerity in its desire to improve conditions in this field, the field with which we are concerned in this resolution, it seems to me that the government must take some cognizance of the need for bringing into line with present realities the salaries of the people who are needed to carry on this program. It seems to me that you cannot expect to undertake the program as envisaged in this resolution if you are not prepared to do the right thing by the type of people you want to attract into the government service. In this field of the Canada Council and the whole related field I cannot think of any more important personnel than the librarians because certainly the library is the focal point of any program which might be envisaged under this plan. In all sincerity I suggest to the government that if they are willing to face up to the need for doing something in this field, it is time they did something about these miserably low salaries.

I realize that we perhaps get applicants for these jobs. In spite of the fact that the salaries are so low, I think these people apply because they are intensely interested in this work. But in order to be fair I think we should not take advantage of them and ask these people to subsidize any program by taking wages which are materially lower than those which they could receive if they entered into other fields of endeavour with the same amount of university training. I think it is a fair request to make that if we are really prepared to go ahead with such a program we must recognize the role which the library plays. Here is one instance in which I think the government could indicate its awareness of the problem before us.

There are other aspects of this matter with which I should like to deal in a general way but I do not want to take up too much of the time of the committee this afternoon. However, I want to make one reference to the question of assistance to the universities. I realize that in the estimates the other day there was an item dealing with an increase in the per capita grant from 50 cents to one dollar. I realize that in this resolution there is some reference to the establishment of the university capital grant fund. But I think there must be some recognition of the need for an over-all program to assist our universities, not a piece-meal sort of arrangement where there is a little bit of assistance granted in this particular field and further assistance granted in some other field. I think there must be a general recognition of the role played by the university in our modern society. I do not think that the government have indicated that they are fully aware of the extent of the problem. I would also say this. You cannot isolate the university from the other fields of education. No matter how much assistance might be granted to the universities, if there is not some recognition of the need for assistance to the elementary and the secondary schools, then of course that program is not going to bring about the maximum results.

I think that the Canadian Labour Congress, in the brief presented to the cabinet the other day, referred to that question quite accurately when, under the heading of "Education", they stated as follows:

The situation in education in Canada at all levels from kindergarten to university has reached the proportions of a national emergency. The problems are acute. If the needs of a growing population requiring more and more education and training in an expanding economy are to be met adequately, the government of Canada will have to share the responsibility with the provinces for marshalling the necessary resources.

Then the congress sums the matter up by suggesting a practical method of going about meeting this problem. They do it in this way:

We ask the government of Canada to convene a dominion-provincial conference on education to consider the problem and possible ways in which federal assistance can be provided.

We have been discussing the universities as though they are a problem apart. I think the number of youngsters who go through our elementary schools, the quality of the education they receive and the number of graduates from our secondary schools, of course, will determine the effectiveness of any university program in the years which lie ahead. The problem is an immense one.

I think we must consider the proposal which is now before the house in terms of the problem which it professes to meet in part at least. As far as the universities are concerned, we now know that the annual operating costs are about $105 million in terms of increased population. We know that over the next ten years there is going to be required over $300 million in new construction and for operating costs an amount of $1,800 million. That, of course, is based on the assumption that the university population as a ratio to the general population has not increased. But—and this is very important—if we are going to keep pace in the modern world we must increase the number of young people who go on to university.

In order to do that it would require a still further expansion in the plant facilities throughout this country. The university population now stands at about 70,000, and it has been estimated that by 1966, on the present ratio of students to the rest of the population, the university population would amount to about 130,000. If we are going to keep pace with the rest of the world we have to increase that number to something in the neighbourhood of 300,000 students. This will require further construction costing around $850 million and, of course, further extensive operating costs.

When one considers the problem facing our universities, one comes to the conclusion we have to dismiss from our minds any suggestion that by granting the type of assistance outlined in this resolution or even including the increase in the per capita grant from 50 cents to $1 per capita, as outlined in the supplementary estimates the other day, we are going to meet the problem. The government has to face up to the whole problem and that problem has to be met by a comprehensive program aimed at granting assistance to education at all levels. If we do not do that, if we simply go about attacking the problem in a piecemeal fashion, we are going to find ourselves falling farther behind in the output of university graduates. In so far as the resolution does provide for the setting up of the Canada Council which will bring about many of the benefits we desire, and because there is at least an increased measure of assistance to education at the university level, the resolution certainly deserves the support of all members of the house.

Mr. McLeod: I have a few general remarks I wish to make on this resolution. It is some time since it was first introduced to the house, and I have been giving the subject considerable thought since that time. I must say that it is one of those things that the more a person thinks about it the less he thinks of it. I have read with a great deal of interest the introductory speeches, you might call them, by the leaders of the various groups. Of course, the Leader of the Opposition has taken the usual stand that the opposition is there to out liberal the Liberals. We have seen the socialists take a stand at which we are not surprised.

In dealing with this matter there are many avenues from which we could approach it. We hear quite a lot about culture. I must admit that it is something about which I know very little. If I were asked to give a definition of culture, I am sure that I would be at a loss. However, I profess to be an average Canadian with an average education. I like to read some good books and occasionally I do not mind reading one of those paperbacked novels. I enjoy a work of art. I must say that so far as modern art is concerned—I think they call it abstract or something of that nature—I do not understand it. I must admit, therefore, I am not very well steeped in culture.

However, there is one avenue from which we can approach the subject, but I am not going to devote much time to it. There were a couple of phrases which the Prime Minister used in his speech the other day and, to use a slang expression, they made me sit up and take notice. One of those phrases was "spiritual development". I would hesitate to think that we in this country are going to set up an organization that will usurp the functions of the various churches and spiritual organizations that we have. Another phrase that he used was "intellectual world brotherhood". Brotherhood, Mr. Chairman, suggests to me unity and harmony. Putting those phrases together, it would appear that we are going to try to develop harmony with the various other cultures in different parts of the world. We might say that some of these other cultures are not intellectual. Then, we say, who is to say, and what is the definition that will be given?

Are we in harmony, for instance, with the culture in Russia? If we are going to have a world brotherhood, can we eliminate part of the world or are we going to be in harmony with cultures throughout the world and in all their different phases? We can also think of the experiments in state culture. In the not too distant past we had one experiment which was spelled with a "K", in a country that prided itself on culture. Yet, when the culture came under the control of the state we know that millions of dollars and hundreds of thousands of lives were sacrificed to try to eradicate the effect of that culture from the face of the globe. However, I am not going to labour that because I have a lot of faith in the people of Canada. I believe they will not be led too far afield in their ideologies or too far from their love and respect for personal freedom.

Then, reference was made to the humanities. I tried to ascertain what the Prime Minister meant the other day by his definition of the humanities, but I am afraid I am not much wiser. However, I should like to think of it more as humanitarian. The social sciences I should like to think of as engendering policies that would promote social welfare, family unity, family associations and all those things that go to build up a better way of life for the people of our country.

We heard something about a proper climate from the speaker who just took his seat. He made a worth-while contribution in telling us that we have to have the proper climate before a thing can flourish and grow. He mentioned the Saskatchewan Arts Board, I believe it was, the chief function of which was arranging tours for the works of the artists of that province. In other words, the Saskatchewan Arts Board was making it possible for the artists of Saskatchewan to earn a livelihood. The other day the hon. member for Mackenzie was quite concerned about the number of Canadian artists who were forced to leave this land of ours and go to the south or to Europe because they were unable to earn a living in this country. I would say; if those people are unable to earn a living in this country, then why promote more artists? Why spend money in educating more artists when you have not got a climate in this country at the present time to support those artists? I am sure that we could spend our money to much better advantage than putting through our education mills a number of people in excess of those who can earn a living in this country today.

I say that the holding of a diploma from an arts school or being a qualified dancer will not make your living any less costly or keep you from suffering the pangs of hunger. You must have the dollars and cents to buy the wherewithal on which to live and you must get it from the climate or from the field which is created in the country. In other words, the people of this country, the common Joes who go to the concerts and who listen to these people, have to contribute the livelihood that these people require and to which they are entitled. I do not deny that fact. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would say that the first duty of this government is to create in Canada a field in which artists can grow, flourish and prosper. In order to do that I think it will require three steps. We must have assistance given to our whole educational program, starting right at the very bottom. I am surprised that many of the speakers in the debate thus far have coupled with this resolution assistance to universities on a general basis. Yet I know they must know by reading the resolution, that the assistance is certainly going to be very narrow. They speak of university extension, of university bursaries, fellowships, and so on, but they do not couple with that the fact that the bursaries and the assistance the government is going to give will create more artists which the climate of this country cannot support. They also fail to take into consideration the fact that the $50 million to be given to universities is to go for extensions not for dental colleges, or colleges that will turn out trained professional men who are badly needed in medicine and in other professions. It will not turn out engineers. It will build additions and provide equipment that will promote the furtherance of the education of those taking courses in the fine arts. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I say that the first of the three steps that we must consider is assistance to basic education. Our people must have a general education. I maintain that is the first requisite in order to give our citizens a little better appreciation of the finer things of life. This will require financial and advisory assistance and it will take all the resources this country can provide. It could start with the little red school house and follow up through all the levels of education, not excluding the universities.

I do not want any person to misunderstand me. I am not opposed to university education. We are sadly lacking in it at the present time and we are lacking in facilities. When I speak of education in that sense I am more concerned with general education than with the narrow limits prescribed by this resolution.

I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar refer in his speech the other day to auditoriums that are so widely built in England. Anyway, I would agree with him that the finest addition to a public school building is an auditorium. I say to the committee it is rather strange that we have to go to the west to cite these examples, but the two western provinces are perhaps leading the way in providing auditoriums for our public schools. It is a good thing and I would very much favour seeing an auditorium in every one of our schools, in the community centres at least.

I now come to step No. 2. I would say that the next important thing, or possibly just as important as a good general educational program, is a health program. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that in order to have the field and climate in which our artists can prosper and make a living we must have a group of healthy and happy Canadians who can enjoy the work of those artists when it is made available. We look around us and we see the need for research in arthritis, for example, and the need for research in the field of cancer and the fields of heart trouble. I am not belittling what this government is doing at the present time but I think we all agree that they are not doing enough. If we stop and look sanely at this I think most of us would say that until we have reached the stage where we can say to ourselves, we are taking advantage of all the research facilities that we have or that are necessary in this country, we should not be spending the people's money in the promotion of the fine arts.

In my third step I should like to come to something else. In order to give to those artists the security and the opportunities they require, we as individuals must attend concerts. These concerts cost money. You cannot go to hear a great violinist or go to see the Winnipeg ballet, for instance, for 60 cents or 75 cents. Therefore, my third requisite is that we must have economic and financial policies in this country which will assure to our people a way of life which will provide them with sufficient money to patronize the work of those artists, to attend the concerts of those great artists and to give them the encouragement and financial support which is necessary to enable them to stay in this country.

I would stress these things, Mr. Chairman: Assistance and a program of education from the schoolhouse to the university and beyond; a health program that will satisfy all the needs of research in this country; and, lastly, economic policies which will guarantee to each one of us a way of life and an income which will enable us to spend a part of that income to assist financially those artists in earning their own living.

I maintain, as our leader said the other day, that in considering the over-all picture in this country priorities must play a very important part. The things I have mentioned, Mr. Chairman, are priorities which I maintain should be given first consideration. If we reach a stage where we are satisfied that we have provided our people with these three basic needs, then, and then only, should we proceed to spend $50 million to promote artists who at the present time, by admission of the various speakers, have been forced to leave our shores for the financial support they find in other parts of the world.

I just want to say a word or two on clause (b) of the resolution. Under this clause, Mr. Chairman, $50 million will be made available for assistance to the universities. Looking at it from that point of view, a rather noble one, nothing is more needed by the universities of this country. There is not a university in Canada which is able to provide the facilities it would like to provide and which the people are demanding, not for fine arts but to further the basic education which is required by Canadians to lead them to a better way of life and higher standards of health, to prepare them to go into industrial, research and developmental fields and those areas of endeavour which will provide those things to which the people of Canada are entitled and which our great resources and the ability of our people to exploit them entitle us to enjoy. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am not against voting $50 million for our universities, but when the $50 million is to be narrowed to capital expenditures for the promotion of the fine arts then I say, in the words of our leader, that we must consider the matter of priorities.

I would say that dental colleges, engineering schools and various other schools and faculties which each hon. member of this house could mention are more entitled to consideration from this government at the present time. And yet, when we ask for these things, we are frequently told, "Oh no, we do not have the money for that; we would infringe on the rights of the provinces."

While I welcome the grant of $50 million to universities I must say I cannot see the need of putting it in the hands of a council. Why cannot it go to the national conference of Canadian universities; are they not able to spend this amount of money? Must we set up another board? I think it is ridiculous, Mr. Chairman, and if it were not such a serious matter in the minds of the people of Canada I think we should laugh the establishment of a council out of existence.

I am not going to belabour you further with my comments, Mr. Chairman, but I have simply attempted to express the idea that in order for culture to flourish, grow and achieve proper fruition we must provide the proper climate in which it can develop.

Canada Council

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, as one who has been urging the formation of the Canada Council for some time, and asking the Prime Minister over a period of two or three years when we might expect its appearance, I am naturally very glad to see the Canada Council become a reality. I am happy, as I am sure all of us are, to see that part of the first $50 million will be used to provide scholarships to make it possible for additional students to become trained in the arts, humanities and social sciences. It seems to me, however, that four categories of people who are urgently needed in this country at this time are not going to receive any help through the Canada Council. I am wondering from where assistance is going to come to train the many additional scientists, engineers, doctors and dentists which this country is in need of now, and will be in need of in the years ahead, in order that our development will not be hampered.

One has only to read any scientific, engineering, medical or dental periodical to learn how short the country is of people in these categories of employment today. I believe that additional technicians and scientists can be trained only if additional training facilities are made available through capital grants, and only if it is made possible for more students to take these courses through scholarships. I want to ask the Prime Minister what plans the government has for making it possible for a greatly increased number of students to take courses in the various sciences, engineering, medicine and dentistry. I would also like to know if the second $50 million mentioned for the use of the proposed council will be available for use by the universities to build additional facilities for the training of scientists, engineers, doctors and dentists, or if that sum will be restricted to the building of additional facilities for training only those interested in studying the arts, humanities and social sciences. I wonder if the Prime Minister would be kind enough to answer those questions now.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, this resolution is not intended to provide for the establishment of increased facilities for a greatly increased number of students in engineering, medicine, dentistry and sciences. Under the bill that would be introduced if and when this resolution is adopted the $50 million would be for capital assistance to projects that the council would determine to be in furtherance of the general objectives of the council. That would probably be construed as relating to other than specifically engineering, medical, dental or scientific faculties. It would probably be construed as limiting the participation within this $50 million to projects for the furtherance of the study and promotion of the humanities, the social sciences and the arts generally. That was the general instruction given to the draftsmen of the bill and I think hon. members will feel that the general instruction has been implemented, although of course in quite general language, in the bill itself.

Mr. Hees: Well, Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister has made quite clear the purpose of this bill and how the money will be used. I think we all agree that it is desirable to give this assistance and I do not think any of us are claiming that the proposed assistance is by any means too great to further studies in the arts, humanities and social sciences, and also to help symphony orchestras, ballet companies, art galleries and other cultural activities. I believe we would all agree that this is a good objective, but in view of the demonstrated shortage in this country today of scientists, engineers, doctors and dentists, does the Prime Minister not believe it is desirable that the government should also indicate its willingness to assist in a similar way the training of additional scientists, engineers, doctors and dentists?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Of course the making of grants for any of the development work required in the universities eases the situation for all departments. I am sure the hon. member will agree that even if one were to think principally of engineering, medicine, dentistry and scientific research, in expanding in that direction the university would also have to expand its general courses in the humanities and social sciences in order to maintain a proper balance in the curriculum and that assistance given in that special field would ease the situation generally.

I recognize the objective of the hon. gentleman's question. The national research council has not been doing exactly what is to be provided for under this bill, but it is pursuing a similar objective in the scientific field by ways that were, at the time the council was set up, felt to be appropriate. I think it will be necessary to continue and expand the encouragement given in the scientific field, including the four branches the hon. gentleman has mentioned, in order to provide adequately for the material progress which is taking place in this country.

The hon. gentleman will have noticed that the appropriations for the national research council have been steadily increasing and that they have contributed to capital investment of some universities because there were special things required to carry out the kind of research work which the national council wished them to do for the general benefit of the Canadian economy. That will have to be continued, but that is a field where appeals to private enterprise and private industry have been much more effective than appeals for the development of the facilities for the humanities and social sciences in our universities.

I know of cases, and I am sure the hon. member does also, where pledges for the establishment of what was required in the form of buildings and equipment for engineering have been obtained readily from those who recognize that the companies for which they are responsible will not be able to prosper and develop if there is not that kind of executive ability available for them in succeeding generations. The general tenor of the Massey commission report was that that side of university work has found it much easier to develop than the side devoted strictly to the humanities and social sciences and favouring the development of the arts.

I am sure that everyone agrees the other is very important, but where there is included, for instance, in the general term "social sciences", reference to the law, that is not the law in the form in which it is taught to make a practising barrister, that is the scientific aspect of the law as the rule for proper human behaviour at large, in relations between individuals, in relations between groups of individuals and even in relations between nations or groups of nations.

The same with respect to sociology—it is not for the purpose of giving advice to one little group; it is the general theory of the best way to organize co-operative effort between human beings to produce the best results and have them widely distributed.

There is another aspect, psychology, which is assuming a recognized importance in many fields of human endeavour, particularly in the treatment of some forms of mental disturbance and of habits that are detrimental to the individual and embarrassing to society at large. I think a nation making the material progress that our nation is making at the present time owes it to itself and to the world community to be doing its part in the development of these general sciences that know no national border and that will become available to humanity at large.

Of course everything cannot be done at once. In another zone that is one of the worrisome things at the present time. Perhaps there are too many things in the way of capital investment and capital increment being attempted to be done at once, but here is something which the hon. gentleman who has just spoken will recognize as being of real value. Perhaps in his view the timing is not of the best, nor is the order of priority, but I know from the attitude the hon. gentleman has manifested in the house over the years that he does not think it is too soon to bring in this resolution for the establishment of a Canada Council.

(Translation):

Mr. Leduc (Verdun): Mr. Chairman, since the beginning of the present session several members have dealt with our educational problems from various angles and occasionally in unusual ways. In doing so, they chose to repeat in their own way the cries of alarm being raised by educationists, students and even ordinary mortals in expressions of views which are sometimes modest, sometimes unusual but always significant.

Mr. Chairman, anyone closely or even remotely interested in the things of the mind sadly but undespairingly recognizes the existence of a crisis in higher learning in this country.

All right-thinking people, and particularly the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), know that our cultural progress must be on a par with the advances we have made in the economic field.

Thus it is recognized that there is a crisis on the one hand and that, on the other hand, it is urgent to stimulate the two main cultures of Canada, the sources of its influence, its wealth and its continued well-being.

All who deal with the subject strive to outdo one another. Public opinion is aroused, pressures are exerted, influences and interventions are being felt from all sides, ink flows, tongues loosen, deeds multiply, a state of emergency is declared, there is a rush towards public powers, and, as a last resort, an appeal to the Sovereign, because private enterprise cannot do any more.

Fortunately the government of this country has long realized the seriousness of the problem. With cautious reserve and wisdom, it made known its cultural policy. While recognizing to the provinces the exclusive right to legislate in the working out of the school curriculums, in the establishment of the administrative system and school attendance, and in the provision of appropriate sanctions for the application of their legislation in the areas under their jurisdiction, the federal government, for its part, has persistently asserted its absolute right to levy indirect taxes for all purposes, and direct taxes designed to supplement the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

The consolidated revenue fund is surely not created and maintained for the purpose of hoarding public funds. On the contrary, the duty of the state is to contribute to general welfare and to provide for the material, intellectual and moral needs of the nation.

So, Mr. Chairman, it was in that spirit and in the fulfilment of its primary duty that, among other substantial and traditional contributions, the federal government established the National Museum and intends to create additional ones at this very session; that it established the National Research Council through which it has helped and continues to help individuals and private institutions anxious to make scientific discoveries; that each year the departments of Agriculture, of Labour, of Fisheries and of Transports distribute grants, subsidies and scholarships for cultural purposes; that the department of National Health and Social Welfare helps to produce and improve laboratory equipment, to pay tuition fees in connection with training courses in public health or for research purposes in that same field; that grants to voluntary groups as well as scholarships for studies in Europe have been paid and that the subsidies granted to the conference of universities have been increased from $8 to $16 million.

It is still for the sake of culture and for the common good that our government submits today to the consideration of the house its resolution for the establishment in Canada of a Council of arts, humanities and social sciences provided with an endowment fund and with the money necessary for the expansion of our universities until 1967.

All this, Mr. Chairman, is a practical answer to the expressions of alarm to which I referred at the beginning of my remarks on the crisis in higher education in Canada. All this, Mr. Chairman, proves that our country, which has become an international power, does not wish to be solely an economic power but entertains the legitimate ambition, one formally recommended by the papacy, to become a spiritual power among the free nations. It is proud to do this for the good of the world and for the sake of universal peace.

In its declaration published on the 20th of November 1956 on good citizenship and Christianity, the Canadian hierarchy, dealing with the civil power and common good, stated:

> Leaders responsible for political society must therefore not attempt to ensure the particular good of everyone, but to establish external and social conditions which will allow everyone to attain, through his own efforts, that degree of human perfection to which he may legitimately aspire.

Mr. Chairman, in the name of an enlightened patriotism, it is time, indeed it is urgent that a change of attitude take place in some quarters which give signs of what I would call a baneful emotionalism, detrimental to the physical, moral and intellectual development of our student population. If it is true that the federal government has no right to control (and I do say control) education, we must recognize that, under the Canadian constitution of 1867, the federal government has the duty, and even the obligation, to take an interest in education and adequately to promote a higher level of education, of teaching, of instruction and of culture in the various provinces which make up our Canadian nation.

No one can question in good faith the power of the federal parliament to allot, as it sees fit, the general public funds. In fact, our constitutional jurists made the necessary distinction between the power to legislate and the power to spend money.

It is in the light of that essential and basic distinction that the classical colleges for young men and young women of the province of Quebec made the following submission in their brief to the Royal commission on constitutional problems:

> If the various governments provided by the Canadian constitution—federal and provincial governments—are both autonomous, they are also co-ordinated in the achievement of a single objective, in that they are complementary to each other and that only the co-ordination of their activities can result in the general welfare of the Canadian people.

Mr. Chairman, how is that co-ordination of activities to be achieved when, for unavowed and unavowable purposes, provincial authorities are too often prone to complain that their autonomy is being encroached upon? After all, what is autonomy if not, as stated in the dictionary, "the freedom left to the provinces by the central power to administer their internal affairs according to their own laws"?

Now then, is there in Quebec provincial legislation prohibiting the central power from spending part of its public moneys to the benefit of universities and other institutions of cultural or scientific learning? No, Mr. Chairman, there is no such legislation. Besides, according to the constitution, it could not remain on the statute books.

On the contrary, the school code of the province of Quebec, which contains the public education act, provides in section 236 that:

> 236. It shall be the duty of the school boards in each municipality:
> 2. to acquire and hold for the corporation all movable and immovable property, moneys or income, and to apply the same for the purposes for which they are intended.

And further on, section 461 of this act provides:

> 461. In every municipality, all sums of money which have not been specially appropriated by provision of the donors, vendors, or others, shall form a common fund for all the schools . . .

It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that provincial autonomy allows administrators to accept not only those moneys provided by all sources but makes it a duty for them to acquire, to possess and to use them to the ends provided.

Mr. Knowles: Five o'clock.

(Text):

Mr. Leduc (Verdun): One minute more, please.

(Translation):

Now, the parliament of Canada by its grants to universities, by the setting up of the Canada Council, by its tangible assistance to arts, humanities and social sciences, not only does not infringe upon elementary education at the primary, complementary or secondary levels, but remains well within the limits of its constitutional jurisdiction which is to have nothing to do with the establishment of curriculums nor with the administration of schools. It concerns itself only with the sphere of higher culture which is of national importance.

I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that if the cultural progress with which the government is concerned infringed in any way on provincial autonomy, I would be among those who would oppose the legislation under consideration at this time.

But that is not my view. Following the expressions of alarm to which I referred a while ago, I am aware—as are our leaders who deserve to be congratulated on their courage, broad-mindedness and sympathetic understanding of our crucial problems—that action is necessary in the field of culture and that, given co-operation, success cannot fail to crown our efforts.

Thank you Mr. Chairman.

PRIVATE BILLS

LIFE UNDERWRITERS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

Mr. Donald D. Carrick (Trinity) moved the second reading of Bill No. 14, respecting the Life Underwriters Association of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Carrick: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to amend the act incorporating the Life Underwriters Association of Canada which was passed in 1924. The bill relates to only one matter, namely the removal of the dollar maximum value on the property that the association is entitled to hold. In the act of incorporation a maximum value of $100,000 was set.

The bill arises out of the purchase by the association in 1955 of a piece of property in Toronto at 224-226 Richmond street west. The property was purchased for $85,000. Since that time there has been a considerable rise in real estate values in many areas in Toronto, particularly in this area; and there are indications that if certain large companies obtain permission to construct on University avenue, which is only one block away, there will be a still further rise.

The bill is not prejudicial or objectionable to the province of Ontario because this association, as is required of all dominion corporations, has obtained a licence in mortmain to hold the land in question. The licence obtained in this case is a specific licence so that no matter what the value of the property may be at the present time, the holding of the property is not invalidated by its exceeding the value on which the fee was based. It only means that if the value of the property goes up, the association will be obliged to pay an additional fee.

Hon. members may note that the bill is retroactive in effect. The reason for this is that it is considered desirable to cover any possibility that the value of the property at the present time exceeds the $100,000 maximum set. No one knows precisely what the value of the property is because there has been no valuation made at the present time but it was thought that it could do no harm to put in the provision which in effect made the amendment retroactive.

Hon. members will also note that in the proposed bill there is no maximum value set on the property that the association may hold. That matter was considered and I think principally for three reasons it was decided to submit to this house the provision which does not fix the maximum value. One reason was that it would provide a little bit of difficulty to know what proper maximum should be set. The association does not wish to be obliged to come back to this house and to make another application, with the expense and time involved. In addition, it was considered that there were sufficient safeguards in the act of incorporation itself to make it unnecessary to fix a maximum. The corporation is limited to holding land required for the actual use and occupation of the association or necessary or requisite for the carrying out of its objectives. It was thought that would effectively prevent the corporation from acquiring land for speculative purposes.

I should perhaps have mentioned the fact that the property in question was acquired for the use of the association itself as an office building. In recent years there have been a number of acts passed by this house in which there was no maximum limitation set on the value of the land to be held. I mention the Canadian Nurses' Association act of 1947, the Canadian Veterinary Medical Association act of 1948. The latest act which I have been able to find was the North American Baptists incorporation act of 1954. I believe there are other examples that might be cited. If hon. members feel that the bill is not objectionable in principle, it will be referred to the appropriate committee. At that time hon. members will have the opportunity of obtaining any additional information they may desire from Mrs. Helen Tedman who is the solicitor for the association and Mr. Leslie W. Dunstall, the executive vice president and from any others the committee may desire to hear.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the situation here as outlined by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Carrick) seems to be clear. You have a simple situation where property bought for a certain purpose a good many years ago and still proposed to be used for that purpose—a purpose of which I think we all approve—has probably appreciated in value to the point where it may infringe a provision in the original act which provided that property should not be held to a value in excess of $100,000. I do not think it is necessary to labour the matter further. I think the situation has been made clear by the hon. member for Trinity. He has pointed out to us that the bill will go to a committee in any event. It looks to me like the proper place for it to go.

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I believe this property in question is in the riding which I have the honour to represent. I am glad to hear that the association's investment in an office building in that constituency is worth more today than it was when they bought it. I see no objection to the purpose of the bill and certainly there is no objection to the purposes of the corporation itself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

TRANS MOUNTAIN OIL PIPE LINE COMPANY

Mr. F. T. Fairey (Victoria, B.C.) moved the second reading of Bill No. 15, respecting Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Fairey: Mr. Speaker, this is an act respecting the capital structure of the Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company which was incorporated in 1951. At that time the act provided for the issue of 5 million shares without nominal or par value which would constitute the capital stock of the company. As everybody knows, this company has been extremely successful, so much so that whereas the stock was originally issued at $10, it is now quoted on the stock exchange at something over $100. It is felt by the directors that it is most desirable to try to effect a wider distribution of the stock of the company throughout the country. It is therefore proposed to change the number of shares from 5 million shares to 25 million shares or in other words to provide for a stock split of five to one.

This bill is a simple one. If there are any questions hon. members desire to ask, I shall be glad to try to answer them. However, I am sure that this bill will be examined by the appropriate committee.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has said, this company was incorporated a few years ago. I presume that this bill amending their charter will go to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. At the moment we should like to reserve our judgment on the merits of the bill until we have heard from the officers of the company something of the story of what has been done in the intervening years. We should also like to have the opportunity to question them on this proposal to divide each share into five. For the time being we are satisfied to allow the bill to have second reading in order that it may go to the committee.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I noted very carefully, Mr. Speaker, the words of the sponsor of this bill when he described the amendment as a very simple one. I noticed also that the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), I assume speaking on behalf of his group in the house, said that they were prepared to endorse the bill at this stage in order that it could be referred to a committee for further study. When we endorse a bill on second reading, I have always understood that to mean we are endorsing the principle of the bill, and the group with which I am associated, the C.C.F. group in this house, does not believe this is a very simple amendment in any way, shape or form and we are not, in any way, shape or form, prepared at this time to endorse the principle of the bill.

In order to have everything on the record, I should like to read the amendment into the record. It says:

Each of the five million shares without nominal or par value constituting the capital stock of Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company, whether such share is issued or unissued, is hereby subdivided into five shares without nominal or par value, so that henceforth the capital stock of Trans Mountain

Oil Pipe Line Company shall consist of twenty-five million shares without nominal or par value.

I am particularly interested in the explanatory note. I feel that for the purpose of presenting our argument we should pay rather close attention to the explanatory note that is offered. It says:

The purpose of this bill is to subdivide each of the shares without nominal or par value into five shares without nominal or par value. The reason for the proposed subdivision is that the company wishes to achieve a wide distribution of its stock among investors in Canada. At January 8, 1957, the shares of the company had a market value of approximately $115 each. This relatively high market price discourages investment by small investors.

I hope to be able to show that the explanatory note is not valid. We cannot agree that the expressed reason is the real reason for seeking permission to subdivide the shares. We are a little surprised, Mr. Speaker, when we note that this pipe line begins in Edmonton and ends in Burnaby, that the government's supporter, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Goode), is not the sponsor of this amendment. The company evidently saw fit to go over to the island for a sponsor. I certainly hope that before this debate is concluded the other member for Burnaby is going to rise in his place and express his opinion on this amendment.

I notice that when the company was first incorporated in 1951 the then member for Vancouver South, Mr. Laing, was the sponsor of the bill. The amendment took very little time in the other place, this time as well as last. This time I believe a matter of three or four minutes is all that was needed in the other place. However, the last time we had the hour for private and public bills in this house we came very close to being asked to endorse the principle of this very important amendment without even having an opportunity of seeing it. Had it not been for the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra's objections, that might have happened. This might be understandable if the government regards the amendment as a very simple one, but we think it is one of major importance.

The arguments this group advanced in 1951, I think, bear some attention at this time. I might say that 1951 was not the first time these arguments were advanced. An amendment moved as far back as 1949 by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) called upon this government to build public pipe lines in Canada rather than aid in the development of private pipe lines. On March 6, 1951, the C.C.F. member for Melfort, Mr. Wright, had this to say, as recorded on page 971 of Hansard for March 6, 1951:

It would seem to me, judging by the number of groups who are coming forward and asking for charters to distribute the oil, that those people think there is a lot of money to be made in the distribution of oil in Canada. They are quite right, because experience in the United States has shown over the last number of years that the ownership of pipe lines in that country has been one of the most lucrative parts of the oil business. Tremendous profits have been made from investments in oil lines in that country.

My reason for referring to what the hon. member had to say at that time is the last sentence, that tremendous profits have been made from investments in oil lines in that country. Since Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company began operations it also has made tremendous profits, and we in this group feel that it is the tremendous earnings of the company that are the real cause of the request to parliament for permission to split these five million shares to become 25 million shares. At that time Mr. Wright moved an amendment calling for public ownership of this pipe line. The C.C.F. group and the independent member for Comox-Alberni were the only ones who rose in their places to vote for public ownership of this pipe line. All the other parties in the house voted against it.

Now, what are the events that have taken place since that time? They have really borne out the prediction of the C.C.F. in 1951 that the profits would be very handsome indeed. The events since that have shown that in its initial stages the company did lose money. In 1953 they lost $246,366; in 1954 they lost $1,038,100. However, in 1955 they made a profit of $3,086,172. If one made a careful analysis of the depreciation allowances, which in the first year were $600,000 and in the second year were $3,200,000, one is bound to wonder whether the company ever really lost any money at all.

The great earnings of the company are responsible for the rise in the value of the shares on the market. It has been a real bonanza for one company at least which, in the initial stages, bought a million dollars' worth of shares. They bought 100,000 shares at $10 each and, Mr. Speaker, before one barrel of oil flowed through this pipe line that company sold these shares for $4 million, four times the price that had been paid for the shares, and that was before the company had taken delivery of any oil whatever.

The shares today, as has been mentioned, are quoted in the neighbourhood of $115. That is a very handsome rise in a matter of a few years. If shares can go up 11 times and you multiply your capital 11 times in a few years, you might have very good reasons for approaching parliament and asking for an amendment such as is now being asked for.

I intend to offer an amendment to the bill later on. However, before I do that I should like to review a little what our expectations were from this company back in 1951. We were assured it was a Canadian company and that Canadian capital would be used. I have not the time to put on the record the exact words of those assurances, but I hope later speakers will do so. Because of the insistence of this house the company was also forced to build a pipe line over Canadian soil from Edmonton to Burnaby in British Columbia. The company eventually did get going and it has been increasing its through-put each year. It has, or could have, a capacity of up to 300,000 barrels a day.

I was present at the opening of this pipe line, Mr. Speaker, and I saw the first oil come out at the British Columbia end of it. I did some rapid calculations in my mind at the time, and I realized that if this pipe line worked at capacity of 300,000 barrels a day and if the tariff rate were 2 cents a gallon—and if for the moment we set aside the cost of operation for a year—the whole of the initial capitalization could be recovered in one single year. That is a fantastic amount of possible earnings.

I know it was said over a year ago that the tariff was not that high, that it was roughly only 1 cent a gallon or 45 cents a barrel. Since I am speaking on this matter, I may say I notice that the board of transport commissioners is taking no interest whatsoever in the tariff rates of this company. The company has not applied to be called, nor has it been declared, a common carrier by the board of transport commissioners. However, my latest information is that the rate is 45 cents a barrel to British Columbia and 47 cents a barrel to United States refineries.

Our parliament, and I think most Canadians, thought in 1951 that this would be a line carrying crude oil through the heart of British Columbia. The Yellowhead pass was mentioned. It was thought that it would play a very major role in the development of the economy of our west coast province. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the building of this pipe line has had very little influence indeed on the development of British Columbia in the first several years of its operation, because it was not very long after this parliament authorized the formation of this company that it applied for and received permission to build a branch line from South Sumas, I believe, into the United States market. They built a 24-inch branch line off a 30-inch main line, and now we have the natural gas pipe-line episode all over again. The major purpose of the company is to take Canadian natural resources and transport those natural resources out of our country in order to develop another country, from which we must then buy back the finished products at greatly enhanced prices and at terrific cost to our ever-growing trade deficit with that country.

Five million shares were authorized. Those which went on the market were placed there at $10 each. That would have given the company, had they placed all the shares on the market and been able to sell them, which I think they would have succeeded in doing, $50 million. But oh, no; the company did not see fit to finance in that way. I understand, and I am subject to correction, that the cost was $91 million. Ninety per cent of the capital was obtained—that is of $91 million—by way of loans from insurance companies both in Canada and in the United States. The major lender in the United States was the Prudential Life Insurance Company. Ninety per cent of $91 million was loan capital. The balance, 10 per cent, was share capital.

The house was informed at that time that this loan capital which would be needed—and it was put at a much lower figure—would carry warrants for stock purchase with it. I am again subject to correction, but my information is that the loan capital carried no such thing as a stock warrant with it. Instead, the insurance companies were able to obtain a guarantee known as deficiency payments whereby the original shareholders guaranteed the operations to a limited extent. That was the guarantee the insurance companies received before they would advance the capital, but no stock warrants were issued. In fact, the company did not seem very anxious at all to sell those 5 million shares because they sold—these are 1956 figures and I have no reason to think any shares have been sold since—only 1,500,028. Fewer than one-third of the shares authorized have been sold.

The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Fairey) says the object of the company in asking for the stock split is to obtain greater public participation in the affairs of this company. If that were so I should like to pose this question. Why, out of over 1,500,000 shares sold, were only 450,000 offered to the general public? Fewer than one-third of the shares authorized were placed on the market, and of that one-third fewer than one-third was offered to the general public at large. It does not appear to me that the company has heretofore shown any keen desire to have the general public of Canada participate in its financial capital structure.

Oh, the company was gracious indeed to the workers employed. They offered an option on a total of 4,900 shares. The option expires in October, 1965. The employees have the option to purchase at $38.62½ a share. I do not know what percentage that is; it looks like one-tenth of one per cent of the shares authorized. That is expected to maintain the loyalty of the workers.

I have placed on the record what has already been done by one of the companies which sponsored this pipe line. It has cleared out with a profit of $3 million. What happens if we agree to the stock split? We have no assurance or guarantee whatsoever that any additional shares will be offered to the general public; none whatsoever. However, a stock split, if past experience and observations teach us anything, should teach us that it usually enhances and sometimes enhances greatly the selling price of the shares or of the stock.

It does one other thing; it enables the company to declare dividends, and after the split shares have gone up in price these dividends appear as being much more modest than they actually are or should appear to be.

This pipe line should be declared a common carrier because its rates affect the general public. It is interprovincial in scope, and I understand the rates have been reduced. I am informed that it costs approximately 5 or 6 cents a gallon to ship by rail, whereas it costs only 1 cent a gallon to ship through this pipe line. This should really mean that the price of gasoline to the consumer on the lower mainland should have gone down by at least several cents a gallon. I can assure you that no such decline in the retail price of gasoline or in the price of fuel oil to the householder has yet taken place.

In 1951 we expected that this would be beneficial to the consumers, but it has not proven beneficial, at least in regard to the retail price. We expected and were assured that it would create a large amount of employment in the province, that our refineries would expand and additional refineries would be built, giving employment to many hundreds of Canadians. What has happened? I will grant that there has been a very slight expansion in refining capacity in the lower mainland. I believe practically all the refineries are in my own riding, in northern Burnaby and Ioco; the employment figures there are up since 1951 and I know that production has been increased. I believe one shipload of oil has been loaded at Westbridge, but the bulk of the oil goes south of the border where one of the major shareholders has erected a plant costing $14 or $15 million at Ferndale, Washington, which gives employment to over 1,000 United States citizens. Those workers should be Canadians refining that oil in Canada, at least to the extent of supplying Canadian domestic needs. We in this group have no objection to the export of crude oil from Canada, provided that we do not have to buy back the refined gasoline made from that crude oil which was ours in the first place.

The branch line south of the border was a flouting of the expressed will of the parliament of Canada, which fought very hard for many days in order to obtain the agreement of the government, and the bill was amended to the extent that the line had to be built on Canadian soil for the general good and welfare of the economy of Canada. The company found ways and means of flouting the expressed will of the representatives of the people of Canada in this House of Commons. I can understand at least one reason for their doing so when I examine the tariff picture as it applies to the exportation of crude oil as against refined gasoline. I know the Minister of Trade and Commerce believes it is a fine thing for us to be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the United States industrial machine and this is how the people of the United States make sure we remain hewers of wood and drawers of water.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Regier: With respect to a gallon of crude oil they charge an import tariff of one-eighth of 1 cent per United States gallon; however, when we attempt to export refined gasoline to them the tariff is increased to 1¼ cents per United States gallon.

Mr. Byrne: What is the difference in price?

Mr. Regier: The refining of more of this oil in Canada would help us offset to some degree the growing trade deficit we have with the United States. If instead of allowing this further exploitation and further profit-making by foreigners on one of our natural resources the people of Canada as a whole, through the government, owned the line we could plan the operations of the pipe line so as to develop industrial life in Canada. It could be planned to provide needed employment in Canada, which in turn would create additional purchasing power in our country. It would also help to level out our improper trade balance. The fantastic earnings that we have every reason to expect from this company would belong to the people of Canada, either through reduced prices for the finished product or in earnings from the transport of the fuel. Mr. Speaker, this oil belongs to the people of Canada.

We in this group are not opposed to having those who look for oil and who run the risks involved in bringing it to the surface receive a fair share of profit both for the risks they take and for the investment of their capital. We have never seriously objected to that, nor have we objected to those who are engaged in refining or retailing oil and its products receiving a fair and decent living, which would include a fair rate of return for their investment and risk. However, we have here a responsibility to the people of Canada when we are dealing with the exploitation of a natural resource that basically belongs to the people of Canada. This oil is their heritage. We also have a responsibility to the national economic development of this country. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron):

That Bill No. 15 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the advisability of bringing the ownership and operation of the Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company under a public agency owned and controlled by the government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I do not wish to make a definite ruling at this moment, but in fairness to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam I should point out that this bill is merely an amending bill which deals with the subdivision of shares. It is not like the bill incorporating the company in 1951. At that time the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moved a motion declaratory of a principle different from that which emanated from the bill.

Mr. Knowles: I may have had something to do with that motion, Mr. Speaker, but I believe it was the then hon. member for Melfort, Mr. Wright, who moved it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre seconded the motion moved by Mr. Wright, the then hon. member for Melfort, whose amendment, as it appears in the Journals of 1951 at page 142, read as follows:

That this bill be not now read a second time but that further consideration thereof be deferred until this house has had an opportunity to record its opinion that consideration should be given to the construction and operation of pipe lines by a crown corporation, or by a public agency owned and controlled by the government of Canada.

That referred to a bill entitled "An Act to Incorporate Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company." This is merely an amending bill which deals exclusively with a subdivision of the shares.

Although by virtue of citation 657 it is competent for an hon. member to move an amendment to the second reading of a private bill, it would appear that the other rules relating to relevancy and principle and not going beyond the scope of a bill have to be considered.

[Mr. Regier.]

As I say, I shall allow the amendment to stand until the bill is called again. I hope in the meantime the hon. member will be able to think of some good reasons why his amendment should be considered to be in order. At the moment I do not think it is.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to delay the house on this bill because we have been given the assurance that it will be referred to a committee, where hon. members will be able to obtain detailed information. It has always been the custom on an occasion like this that even though a bill may be given second reading and the principle agreed to, when it comes before a committee it is possible to get definite information.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has given quite a long talk on this bill and has quoted figures which no doubt he assumes are correct. However, I think it would be wrong for hon. members of this house to take everything the hon. member has said as being the actual fact. The only place we can get this information is from the company when we are in committee. I am sure everyone in this house will be as interested as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam in seeing that a fair deal is given.

It seems amazing to me that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam should be so concerned about a company making a profit. He did point out in the latter part of his remarks that the C.C.F. group were not against a company attempting to bring oil or gas to the surface and they would permit them a fair profit, but he did not say anything about a company which might have a heavy loss in attempting to do that. Would the hon. member and his party be agreeable to compensating a company for the loss it might take in its efforts to bring oil and gas to the surface?

I do not think they would. They would say, "That is a capitalist venture and it must assume that responsibility." It does seem to be a socialist principle that when a product is brought to the surface and there is an assured profit, according to the hon. member—I assume he was speaking for his party—there should be an immediate nationalization of the whole thing. He is saying that they will jump on this because it is a going concern.

It is odd that the socialist government in Saskatchewan does not follow that practice. In the development of oil and gas reserves in that province the premier has given the companies written assurances that there will be no nationalization. If the premier of Saskatchewan, who indicated on occasions in this house that he was an avowed socialist, has not found it practical to nationalize the oil industry in that province, why should the federal group here be so anxious to nationalize everything once it is a going concern?

There are none of us in this house, and certainly I am not one, who would permit for one moment the exploitation of the public in the development of our natural resources. The fact is that the only resource in the province of Saskatchewan that has made any success is the oil, and that has not been done under socialist practices. In fact they have abandoned all their socialist practices. As I said a moment ago, there would have been no development of these resources if the premier of the province had not given assurances that there would be no socialization or nationalization of those products. It is evident that the socialist program has not been found satisfactory in the province of Saskatchewan. That industry is going to make some progress in spite of their nationalization policies.

The hon. member would lead us to believe that they are the ones who are concerned solely with their responsibilities to the people of Canada. I do not think that can be said in all fairness. Members of other parties in this house are just as concerned as they are with the development of our natural resources. As a matter of fact the one province which has lagged is the one which is under a socialist regime. Any progress that has been made has been due to the assurances of a non-nationalization policy.

The hon. member referred to the tariff regulations. If the tariff on the export of oil is as small as he indicates, why should the company be blamed? If that is so, and we can only assume it is so from the figures quoted, why should the company be penalized? That is a government responsibility, and if that is the case the government should assume its responsibility.

I am informed that this company are exporting manufactured products to the United States. My information is that their refined gasoline is being shipped to the United States to the capacity of their refining facilities. If that is the case that is certainly bringing business to Canada, something that I agree should be done to the greatest possible extent. We should develop our natural resources in this country right through to the finished product wherever possible, and then export those finished products rather than our raw material. However, there is a limit to the extent to which you can go in that regard.

With all the innuendos the hon. member has made he has not produced any facts—

Mr. Ellis: What facts have you?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The difference between the hon. member and myself is that I am going to reserve my judgment until I know the facts. I am not going to go around blarneying when I do not know the facts. That is why I say—I hope I have been somewhat successful in convincing the C.C.F. members in this regard—we should reserve our judgment until this bill goes to committee, where we will be able to get the facts. The bill would then come back to the house, and hon. members would be in position to say what they wished to say and form their own judgments on facts rather than on suspicion and innuendo.

They do not even know what the profit has been. They are only assuming that if so much has been taken for depreciation, if so much has been taken for this or that, if the profits were such and such, then tremendous profits were made. Surely you cannot judge a business on such flimsy evidence as that. I think they would do well if they would give a little more consideration to the development of our resources rather than jumping to hasty conclusions and then having to reverse their stand later on.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has continuously indicated that I have not placed certain facts on the record. I did place a considerable number of facts on record, including the annual recorded earnings of this company and I believe by the rules of this house, the hon. member is bound to accept that until he can produce any evidence in committee to the contrary.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have been in this house too long—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): —to take for granted, or to take as fact, anything which is said by some members of this house, and my experience has been that in a case like this the proper source from which to get the facts is not from a member who stands up here and says, "If this is so, and that is so, and something else is so, we can come to a conclusion." Rather, the proper place to get these facts is in the committee, where the persons concerned know the actual position. We can then base our judgment on that.

In the light of these circumstances we are going to reserve our judgment on this bill until we get the facts in committee, and then we will be able to make a very good estimate of the situation.

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in 1951 I stood in my place in this house and gave my impression of what the people of Burnaby would think of the Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company. Perhaps it was not done very well, but it was loud at the time.

What seems strange to me now is the fact that not one hon. gentleman from the C.C.F. group or from the Social Credit ranks rose in his place to support me. At that time I argued that the Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company had told this house, through the appropriate committee, that it would not sell gasoline or oil through a pipe line to the United States. I brought facts into the house which proved beyond any reasonable doubt that the pipe-line company had told a committee of this house that they would not ship oil to the United States through a pipe line. At that time I said the company had asked the board of transport commissioners to allow them to operate a 24-inch pipe line from South Sumas, British Columbia, to the border to provide oil to a refinery in Ferndale, Washington.

These facts were put on record in this house in the course of a 40-minute speech. In that speech I did the best I could, but not one hon. member, except the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) who spoke, I believe, for two minutes, supported me in that argument. Now, all of a sudden, because the company is a success in western Canada, these gentlemen rise in their might and say what should have been done years ago.

Mr. Nicholson: I was not here then.

Mr. Goode: You should not be here now. On top of that, the hon. gentleman from Burnaby-Coquitlam expecting he could take political advantage from my absence, mentioned in his speech that I was not sitting in my place—

Mr. Regier: No, I did not. Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege may I say that I did not indicate in any manner that the hon. member was absent from the house. He himself has placed that on the record.

Mr. Goode: Then, Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. I was informed by an hon. member that he had said that.

Mr. Regier: You are misinformed.

Mr. Goode: I have apologized, and I hope the hon. gentleman will accept the apology.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Goode: I was informed that that was what the hon. gentleman had said. But, Mr. Speaker, after this speech was made in the house, and after these years have passed during which oil has gone from the oil fields of Alberta to Washington to provide employment for United States citizens—employment that should have gone to British Columbia—all of a sudden these gentlemen in the opposition take the view that everything regarding Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company is wrong.

Mr. Speaker, they should have risen at that time and supported me in the argument I put forward. It was a good argument; it was placed on record here, and the facts were straight. Now, all of a sudden, we are going to decide, it seems, in a debate of this kind that the C.C.F. are right and that the gentlemen on this side are wrong. In my view there is only one way in which to find out the facts of this case. I do not know whether I am going along with this bill or not, but there is one place to find out the facts, and that is in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I reserve my judgment on this bill until I have sat on that committee.

Mr. Carl O. Nickle (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to what has been said, particularly to the words of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. May I say that I admire his efforts, because very rarely have I heard so well presented such a combination of a little fact, a fair amount of fiction and a good deal of drivel.

My party, Mr. Speaker, has already expressed its views with regard to this pipe line—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Other hon. Members: It is not six o'clock.

Mr. Nickle: I would like to devote such time as the house will permit to commenting specifically on some of the points which were raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. As to the immense profits from the pipe line which he refers to—and I am not a shareholder in this company—I would say this. It did operate at a loss for two years, and it made a profit in the third. The company made a loss on the first years of operation because it could not move enough oil to a large enough number of customers. In the third year it made a profit because, in the interim, a number of the shareholders discovered more oil fields in Alberta from which to provide a product which could be marketed, and two other shareholders decided to go into the refining business in the Pacific northwestern states. Other shareholders decided to embark on a modernization and refinery expansion program that, in five years, has more than doubled the refining capacity of British Columbia. This is a program which has made your own province—and I address the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam—self-sufficient in petroleum, and has more than doubled the employment and revenue attributable to this industry. The same is true south of the border, yes, but it was mentioned that this pipe line—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was going by another clock, because there are two clocks which are not in accordance with the one in the centre of the chamber. The Clerk's watch is always right, so the time is now six o'clock. Shall the house revert to the business it was conducting before five o'clock?

CANADA COUNCIL

PROVISION FOR ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE ARTS, HUMANITIES AND SOCIAL SCIENCES

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East)—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a Canada Council for the encouragement of the arts, humanities and social sciences and further to provide inter alia that

(a) the Minister of Finance may, out of the consolidated revenue fund, pay to the council the sum of fifty million dollars to constitute an endowment fund for the purposes of the act, and

(b) the council shall establish a fund to be called the university capital grants fund, to which shall be credited the sum of fifty million dollars, to be paid to the council by the Minister of Finance out of the consolidated revenue fund.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon the Prime Minister explained the thinking behind the setting up of this fund. There was one point that I wish he would clarify to some degree. He said there would be this $50 million put into what is known as the endowment fund for the council, and another $50 million put into the university capital grants fund, both funds to be administered by the council. Then he went on to say that he hoped private individuals would contribute during their lifetime or leave money to these funds. He did not make it clear whether he had in mind that this would apply to the two funds on the same basis, or whether it was only for the endowment fund for the use of the council as distinguished from the university capital grants fund. I wish he would clear up that point and one other.

As I pointed out this afternoon, there has been some criticism because there is not an annual grant. In order to get around that problem, would it not be possible to have some sum put into the estimates each year, even though it were a comparatively small sum, and shown as a grant to the council? That would enable parliament to keep in touch with what the council is doing, and to make suggestions. I think it also would be more nearly in line with proper parliamentary government than is the present plan, which is exclusively one of setting aside a sum, a procedure which takes parliament right out of the picture unless the council should come back for further capital funds. I should like to have the Prime Minister's reaction to a suggestion of that kind.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, with respect to the first question may I say this. The bill will provide that the council may receive donations or legacies; and if it accepts them, it will be bound to comply with the terms set out by the donor or testator as to the use that should be made of those funds. What place the donations or legacies will occupy will depend upon their terms. Of course, if it were a donation or a legacy to do something foreign to the objectives of the council I assume the council would decline to take the responsibility of administering the amount involved. However, it will be bound to comply with the terms fixed by the donor or testator in respect of the amount comprised in the donation or legacy.

Mr. Green: Suppose a testator merely leaves $500,000 or $1 million to the council. Would that money be divided equally between those two funds?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No. I assume the council would treat anything it received in general terms as something to be added to its endowment fund.

Mr. Green: And not to the university capital grants fund?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): And not to the capital grants fund for assistance during the period of 10 years in the provision of capital improvements to the university plant, if I may use that kind of a word in connection with a university campus and the establishment.

The bill will also provide that these accounts are to be audited by the Auditor General, and he is required to submit a report of his audit to the council and to give a copy to the minister designated by the governor in council as the minister who will report to parliament on the activities of the council. It will, of course, be within the power of parliament to make any supplementary additions that may afterwards be found to be in the public interest to the funds placed at the disposal of the council; and it will always be possible—as is done, for example, in connection with the reports of the railways or other transportation companies—to ask to have the reports referred to one of the standing committees of the house or to a special committee set up for that purpose.

Mr. Green: It is extremely unlikely, though, is it not?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): It may seem to be unlikely, but I would not want to predict that the situation in Canada will not develop so rapidly that there will be a feeling among the public that something additional should be done. When dealing with the university grants, that will be an annual item in the estimates, or at least I hope it will be an annual item in the estimates. I am sure there will be references to this audit of accounts of the Canada Council which is to be tabled within 15 days of its reception or, if it is received when parliament is not in session, within 15 days after the opening of the session.

I think a proper balance has to be maintained between the very proper concern parliament will have about the activities of this Canada Council and the degree of freedom in administration that I think is desirable in order to get people to serve. There will be no pecuniary remuneration for the services rendered other than to the chairman, the vice chairman, the director and the assistant director. The others will receive merely their travelling expenses in attending the meetings. It will be a service that I think the Canadians who will be invited by the government to form part of the council will feel is of real value to their fellow citizens, and of such a character that it will be a tribute to them to be invited to perform it. I think the activities of the council will be activities of value and concern to the Canadian population generally, and that those who will be invited to perform this service will feel that way about it.

I want to renew the assurance that the selection of those who will serve will be made without any consideration being given to party political affiliations. I want to assure the house that I will do my best to see that we get the kind of council that will have real prestige with the Canadian public, and will provide a very convenient channel for those who feel they will want to make some substantial contribution to the furtherance of the objectives for which the council is created. I would hope to see this endowment grow, and perhaps in the first years I would hope some would feel that, instead of adding to the permanent endowment, they should add to the income of the endowment for expenditure in the current year or years.

I am sure we all feel there could be used to the real and lasting advantage of the Canadian nation more than the income the $50 million endowment will provide. There are a great many public spirited citizens of Canada who, I think, share the views to which I am giving imperfect expression, and who feel that there is the need for attention being given to that phase of Canadian development. We know that at the present time the prestige of Canada throughout the world stands at a high level because no one has any misgivings about our ambitions or about the possibility of our wishing to exercise undue influence over others.

I think the development that will be brought about by stimulating this phase of Canadian activities will not fail to add to the prestige of Canada. I am not speaking of the prestige of Canada because of any pride or anything of that kind, but I think the prestige of Canada is something that is useful in the political atmosphere of the whole world, because it so happens that in no part of the world are there misgivings about the ambitions of Canada as a nation.

Mr. Green: The feature of the plan which worries me is the fact that parliament is to have no control over these activities for a period of some years. The Prime Minister has just said that when the grants to universities are under consideration he hopes there will be a discussion of the work of the Canada Council, but I point out to him that the ordinary yearly grants to universities have nothing to do with the Canada Council. They are made direct to the national conference of universities, and I feel we would find we would be out of order in discussing the activities of the Canada Council under that vote.

Once more I suggest to the Prime Minister that the problem could be met by having a vote, even though it is a small vote, brought in each year in the estimates. This would make it possible to have a discussion of this matter. The Prime Minister seems to be afraid that the appointees to this council will not wish to accept appointments if parliament is to review every year what they do. I believe their reaction will be just the opposite. They will like to have their work made known in parliament and made known across the country as the result of discussion here.

After all, there is no reason why they should be above having their work discussed in parliament. The Prime Minister will, I feel, admit that in the case of all boards or bodies of this kind, their work is reviewed in parliament each year in a very sympathetic and understanding way. I feel confident that men of the calibre who will serve on this council will be only too glad to have their work reviewed here every year and to get suggestions from the members of the house. I hope the government will give consideration to some plan of that kind, which will make it possible to have a discussion every year on the floor of this house concerning the activities of this council.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have listened to the explanation of the Prime Minister concerning the reason the present system of endowment is being set up rather than provision for an annual budget being presented to parliament. Frankly, I am not impressed with the reasons given by the Prime Minister. They seem to lack cogency and force, and they are certainly not based on the experience Britain has had in connection with a similar body.

As the Prime Minister mentioned the other day, Britain set up an arts council. It was established in 1946 by royal charter, and consists of not more than 16 honorary members appointed by the chancellor of the exchequer in consultation with the minister of education and the secretary of state for Scotland. Its main duties are to increase the accessibility of fine arts to the public; to improve the standards in the fine arts, and to advise and co-operate with government departments and other organizations in any way connected directly or indirectly with these projects. There is an amount annually voted to the British council by parliament. It amounts, at the present time, to some $2.5 million a year, and is determined afresh every year. The council presents to the chancellor itemized accounts of the subsidies believed necessary to maintain the organizations and carry into effect the responsibilities of the council.

When the Massey commission made its report, above everything else it demanded, in effect, that parliament should not be circumvented by setting up an organization which would have no direct responsibility to parliament. At page 377, without quoting again this part in its entirety, the report says:

> We should also consider it a misfortune if this Canada council became in any sense a department of government, but we realize that since this body will be spending public money it must be in an effective manner responsible to the government and hence to parliament.

Then a little later on, at page 382, it says this:

> . . . we do not doubt that there would be public support of parliamentary action in making adequate funds available to it. We do not find it possible to propose specific sums; we should, however, imagine that the council would find it possible to perform its varied duties effectively with an annual budget . . .

I cannot appreciate the explanation given by the Prime Minister. It looks very much as if the government finds itself more or less embarrassed by the size of the surplus it has this year, and is taking this means of disposing of it to the extent of $50 million.

In so far as this council is concerned, I can see no reason why parliament should be denied, as it will be denied, control year by year over the expenditure, and any say whatsoever over the conduct of the council in the discharge of its responsibilities. Certainly our experience in recent years in the setting up of crown corporations and the like has been that more and more of those crown corporations become independent of parliament and make but a perfunctory report either through the instrumentality of the examination by the Auditor General or in the form of an annual report.

The result is that parliament more and more ceases to have the power and authority to examine the expenditures of money advanced by the people of Canada. Certainly the trend that has been so apparent in recent years toward circumventing parliamentary control by the setting up of governmental bodies ostensibly responsible to the government and to parliament, but in effect not responsible to parliament, must have been in the minds of the Massey commission. After extensive consideration that commission recommended that this council should be required by annual grants to owe a responsibility to parliament.

I can see nothing in the arguments advanced by the Prime Minister that in any way detracts from, or lessens the need, of parliament having an overriding control by examination and consideration of the estimates year by year. I certainly am in favour of the setting up of this council. It is needed. The work it will do is necessary for Canada and its prestige; but there is no need, however beneficial the organization may be and will be, to set aside parliamentary control. This is but another example of the accelerating rate at which parliament more and more becomes less and less important as organizations are set up that become little governments unto themselves.

I ask the Prime Minister to give reconsideration to this. The Massey commission considered it at length. Five years have gone by without action. Now when action is taken one of the major recommendations of that commission is being ignored. Why should the government in its wisdom that parliamentary control, indirect as well as direct, will be restored by the simple expedient of requiring the council each year to place before the house and the country a statement of its stewardship and its requirements for the ensuing year. Certainly the fortuitous circumstance of the death of very wealthy men is no answer. Parliament of its own volition should not cancel out its duty of making careful examination of moneys voted by parliament to assure that they are satisfactorily expended and are subject to the examination of the people's representatives.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): On reflection I do not think the hon. gentleman will consider that his first remark, that this was probably done because the government felt that it was going to be embarrassed with a surplus—

Mr. Diefenbaker: You waited for five years.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): —and had to tuck it away somewhere, was fair. I do not think it is worthy of the discussion on this Canada Council.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why did you wait five years?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): We waited five years because we did not think the time was appropriate to find the kind of a body that would respond to the desires of the public, and five years ago there was not the general realization that there is today of the utility and permanent value to the Canadian nation of the work that will be done by this council.

Good things are not always recognized as good things by everybody at the same time. It takes some time for public opinion to bring itself to realize that and to support them. I would imagine that there would now be almost universal support for the council. We have heard some criticism in this house; but there will be the same percentage of support for this council among the Canadian public, whether that part of the public calls itself Liberal, Progressive Conservative or C.C.F. It may not be so with the other group, if we are to judge by the opinions we have heard expressed here; but this is something to be regarded not as a political question in the ordinary sense. It is going to be regarded as something that parliament generally, in its appreciation of the circumstances of the day, looks upon as a wise step to take at this period of our development.

Why should there be this endowment instead of the requirement of having an annual vote recommended? The hon. gentleman must remember that no vote can be considered by parliament unless it is first recommended to parliament by the government. Personally I did not feel that the members of this council should be in the position where the government of the day—whether it be this government or a government formed by my hon. friend, if that ever happens, or formed by some other group in the house—would be able to say, "Well, now, this is the situation. You get nothing unless our views are met".

We will give careful consideration to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra; and if it becomes necessary, in order that there may be a discussion every year of the activities of the council, to do as the hon. gentleman has said, have a small vote that will make it a proper subject for discussion. I think it will be a good thing for the council and a good thing for Canada that the interest of the public be maintained in the activities of the council by having a discussion in this forum. I would be surprised, though, if even in discussing the university grants hon. gentlemen did not find, with their usual ingenuity, that it was possible to make what was taking place in the whole university world in Canada a part of the discussion.

Mr. Green: Some of this money is not being spent in universities.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Well, that may be; but if it is found that in order that there may be a proper discussion of the report tabled by the Auditor General on the activities of the council there should be some item in the estimates that would effect that result, it would not need to be a large item. It would not need to be something that in any way could be looked upon as affecting the independence of this body with respect to the income of the endowment.

That income could not be cut off at any time. They will always have the income of the endowment, and they can plan with the certainty of having that income.

Consideration will be given to the hon. gentleman's view, because I think as he does that it will help the council to maintain public interest in its activities by having its affairs discussed in this forum, and ways and means will be found of realizing that. At the same time, however, I would not want them to be put in the position where they would feel that every year there had to be the blessing of the government of the day in the fact that they received anything at all with which to operate for the coming year.

I think it will be found that parliament will take continued interest in the operations. Hon. gentlemen will find in the bill that the accounts are to be audited by the Auditor General, and he has to make his report to the minister, whose duty it is to produce it to parliament, at the same time he makes his report to the council itself. Under that practice I think we will have a situation which will make for the full independence of the members of the Canada Council. I believe it will be found that they will be only too happy to have their activities discussed in this forum, and they will be equally happy to have something upon which those who might be more generously inclined toward them than the government could centre their recommendations for increases. We wanted to set up something wherein there would be an area in which they could operate, but where there was no assurance that if there were deficits that went beyond that area, parliament would pick up the slips. Had that suggestion been made to the Massey commission I am quite sure it would have received favourable commendation from the commission. If they had had the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra they might have added something of that kind which would make it necessary to have special consideration given to their activities each year, but I do not think there should be any objection to their having something that is not dependent upon the attitude toward them in any special year of the government that happens to be in office.

Mr. Knowles: What about secretarial expenses and that sort of thing; might not some vote for that purpose be necessary?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The bill provides, of course, that their administrative expenses are taken out of their own funds, but there could be something of that kind. There are a dozen ways in which some special vote could be provided if it is found that it is required in order to make it proper that there be a discussion of their activities as disclosed by their own report and by the report of the Auditor General.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, according to the discussion which has taken place in the committee the resolution before us appears to be generally acceptable, but that does not mean to say it should pass without full examination which will perhaps bring out other facets of the subject under discussion.

The resolution of the Prime Minister to establish a Canada Council for the encouragement of the arts, humanities and social sciences appears to embrace a considerable amount of territory. I am not convinced that the people of Canada as a whole are too well informed about what it all means. I think perhaps the people as a whole understand the phraseology used respecting the arts. I believe it would be correct to say that nearly everyone understands that the arts include such things as literature, painting, music, the opera, the ballet and other cultural activities. When it comes to the terminology "social sciences," I am not sure that the general public readily understands what is meant by that term. If one has had anything to do with education, with public school life, high school life or university life, one would perhaps readily recognize what is meant by the social sciences.

I have one or two comments to make with respect to the social sciences that are taught under what is known as the system of progressive education. I hold in my hand a book which was given to me entitled "Education or Indoctrination" by Mary L. Allen. The story was written as the result of considerable discussion that took place in the city of Pasadena, California, concerning their local educational activities; and the book itself, of course, lays the foundation for the story. It appears that the people of the city of Pasadena became so incensed at the inroads socialist thought was making into their educational system that they made an issue of it, the result of which was that many educationists had to resign their posts. I may say something about that a little later.

In reading this book through I came to a very pertinent paragraph in respect to what are termed the social sciences, generally speaking. The paragraph appears at page 24 and reads:

> In 1940 Dr. Ralph Robey made an examination of 600 social science textbooks in high schools. He declared, "A substantial portion of the social science textbooks now used in high schools tend to criticize our form of government and hold in derision or contempt the system of private enterprise. . . . There is a notable tendency in the books to play down what has been accomplished in this country and to stress the defects of our democracy.

In that paragraph lies a great story. I agree with that definition, for I personally have read some of the social science textbooks which my children have brought home from high school and public school, though in the public schools the subject is much more simplified. It is a subtle sort of thing; it is something that is difficult to combat. Nevertheless in principle that paragraph gives the explanation of what I would call the damage that can be done by a type of socialist thinking that is beginning to permeate our educational institutions.

So much for the arts and so much for the social sciences. How about the humanities?

I doubt very much whether there is one person in a thousand in Canada who can define what that means. In fact when the Prime Minister was introducing his resolution the other day and referred to the humanities the leader of this group asked him just what he meant by the humanities. The Prime Minister replied, and I quote from page 398 of Hansard of January 18, as follows:

> What I refer to is the study and, I hope as a result of the study, the acquired knowledge of the treasures that have been provided by the experience, studies and philosophies of past generations. When I say "past generations" I mean the generations that have succeeded each other for many thousands of years in the world. I mean that general knowledge of proper human behaviour that results from the accumulated experience of mankind since history has commenced to be written and not those special things that prepare for the exercise of a special avocation or profession. I mean the general broadening and training of the human mind so that the human individual whose mind it is may have as great benefit as one can derive from the accumulation of lore and knowledge over the centuries.

That is quite a definition, but I doubt if one in a thousand could decipher it. In fact, in giving that definition the Prime Minister had to repeat three times the words "I mean". I am going to suggest what he meant, and I am not putting words into the Prime Minister's mouth. I can puzzle my way through the definition and perhaps understand it. The Prime Minister is a very able gentleman; no one will doubt that. I will tell you what I think it means. It means rewriting history.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Hansell: I will tell you before I get through why I say that is what it means. What is the historical background of this proposal for a Canada Council? I ask that question and I am going to attempt to answer it myself. It goes back to the bringing into existence of the United Nations at San Francisco in 1954,—I mean, 1945.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member has not even read history.

An hon. Member: Rewriting history.

Mr. Hansell: I can wait just as long as I am being interrupted. I do not care how long it takes me, I am going to say what I have to say. When the charter of the United Nations was adopted certain specialized agencies were set up. These agencies have played their parts throughout the years and have done some considerable and good work. One of the specialized agencies was UNESCO. What has it been doing? What has it attempted to do? I turn now to the report of the Massey commission, and I read at page 246 what is said to be the objective of UNESCO. It is most admirable. I quote from the report as follows:

> UNESCO has as its objective a peaceful world, to be made a reality by peaceful means.

I must say that is commendable, and I think all will agree. But let us look a little further down on the same page of this report, where it refers to UNESCO again and says:

> The enthusiasm of its promoters, convinced that "wars begin in the minds of men", took the minds of men as UNESCO's area of activity.

I want hon. members to notice that. In the first place UNESCO had as promoters men who laid down as a fact, which I claim is not necessarily a fact, that wars begin in the minds of men. The report says that on the basis of that bit of philosophy UNESCO took the minds of men as its area of activity. That is most important. When the Prime Minister introduced this resolution we listened carefully to what he had to say, but it is rather significant that in his speech he made no mention whatever of UNESCO. It was not until the hon. member for Saskatoon attempted to elicit from the Prime Minister the relationship between UNESCO and the Canada Council that the Prime Minister broke his silence on that particular point. Let me read what the leader of the Social Credit group said in his reply, and I quote from page 409 of Hansard of January 18, as follows:

> May I suggest that the original purpose for which UNESCO was set up was, perhaps, praiseworthy, and its objectives were praiseworthy, but I am going to say to you that men and women of dishonesty of purpose got hold of it, and they have made use of it as an instrument of subversion and brainwashing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if there is any evidence to prove a statement of that kind. I think there is. I think there is plenty of evidence that UNESCO is the instrument used by intellectual socialists in their planning to indoctrinate the minds of men in order that they may expedite what they visualize as a new world socialistic order. I am as convinced of that as I am of anything I can be convinced of, and that is why our good neighbours to the south have had considerable trouble in their educational system respecting this very matter.

I have an article here which I cut out of the Christian Science Monitor some while back, in which the writer gives the story of an upheaval which took place in the state of Texas because the UNESCO program was beginning to infiltrate the school curricula of that state. And, I may say, the writer of that article was complimented later in a letter written to the Christian Science Monitor by a judge who had examined the whole story very closely. This is something that happened in the city of Dallas. What does this article say? I will quote only a little of it:

> Meanwhile, the Dallas school board, taking cognizance of the increasing attacks on textbooks, has urged that specific books be identified. The board has assured Dallas parents that if they consider any textbook subversive, the board will make a thorough investigation. . . .
> In Houston, the dispute over school curriculums played a big part in the school board election last November 4. An anti-UNESCO group, the Houston committee for sound American education, put up four candidates. Its platform was committed to "save the schools from socialism".
> The committee was made up of business and professional men, minute women, and others. It circulated literature charging that "there is a conspiracy spreading throughout . . . the United States which bodes evil to your child" and that "this conspiracy bears all the evidence of capturing the child's mind by indoctrinating him with ideals foreign to the American way of life."
>
> The windows of offices were placarded with a message which read: "Citizens of Houston, save your schools from the dangerous influence of UNESCO".

And note this, Mr. Chairman:

> Two of the committee's candidates were elected to the school board. One of them unseated a member who had served for 22 years.

I could read a good deal more from that article, Mr. Chairman. Not only were the citizens of the state of Texas incensed by the inroads that UNESCO influence was making into their educational system, but the cities of Pasadena and Los Angeles became so outraged that they got the state legislature of California to set up a special committee to investigate the sort of thing that was going on in their schools.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me read you one or two more things in connection with this. I may say that the committee of the California state legislature which was chosen to investigate this matter published several reports. The eleventh report of the California committee on education contains some 200 pages of rather revealing material.

The Chairman: Order. I am extremely sorry to interrupt the hon. member. I have been following him quite carefully. I understood him to say that he intended to trace the history of the Canada Council, but I am afraid that for the past several minutes he has been dealing almost entirely with UNESCO which, of course, is strictly irrelevant to this resolution, and I would be much obliged if the hon. gentleman would co-operate by dealing with the resolution which is before the committee at this time.

Mr. Fulton: He is down in California now.

Mr. Harkness: I thought he was talking about the pyramids.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I was attempting to trace the history of the Canada Council by taking it back to the United Nations.

The United Nations, you will recall, established several agencies, one of which was UNESCO. I then went forward and said that UNESCO had been attempting to establish certain commissions and agencies in various member nations; and this Canada Council is the body that is to be established in Canada to help to promote the UNESCO program as far as Canada is concerned.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hansell: You may shake your heads, but it is in the Massey report, and the answer the Prime Minister gave is exactly that.

Mr. Nesbitt: It's in the book.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Hansell: We are not going to conclude this debate, Mr. Chairman, I don't care what happens, without having all the cards put on the table. I am just attempting to put a few of them on, and put them on face up.

Mr. Argue: Another witch hunt.

Mr. Hansell: A witch hunt? The hon. member for Saskatoon said the other day that no one wants to be looking under every bed to see whether there is a communist there. No. That is all right. But it would appear to be perfectly all right to look under the bed if you can find a capitalist there. That is what my socialist friend back there was doing this afternoon when he was talking on another bill; he did not know much about the bill, but he saw something there. It is popular, you see, to look under the bed if you can find a capitalist there—

Mr. Pearson: They would own the bed. They would not be under it.

Mr. Hansell: —but it is a witch hunt if you look under the bed to find a communist. I am not impressed one bit with that kind of remark. As a matter of fact, I would rather look under the bed and find there is no communist there than refuse to look under the bed, close my eyes to what might be there, and then find there is a communist there.

Mr. Fulton: What would the hon. gentleman do if he found the usual thing under the bed?

Mr. Hansell: I will tell the hon. member for Kamloops what I would do if I found the usual thing there. I would simply pour it on him.

An hon. Member: For shame.

Mr. Fulton: That would not be much different from the usual line you produce.

Mr. Hansell: Now, Mr. Chairman, to get back to this question of UNESCO, I say to you that it is an evil thing.

I hold in my hand a copy of the American Mercury for February, 1954, in which there is an article by Mr. Harold Lord Varney. In it he goes into the history of UNESCO and also comments on some of its literature.

Mr. Ellis: Who is the author?

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Harold Lord Varney.

Mr. Ellis: Who is he?

Mr. Blackmore: Go and find out.

Mr. Hansell: He states:

> One particular target of UNESCO has been the youngest age group of children. As pointed out in the UNESCO teacher-training booklet, "In the Classroom with Children under 13 Years of Age": "These earlier years may be indispensable to the education of children for world citizenship . . . UNESCO points out that—

And he quotes again.

> —"the narrow family spirit of the parents may, in fact, not only compromise indirectly, and in some degree, unconsciously, the eventual integration of the child in the human community, but it may also cultivate attitudes running directly counter to the development of international understanding."

Mr. Chairman, on that point the committee set up by the state legislature of California, in handing down their eleventh report, cites another excerpt from a United Nations publication. This is the citation:

> "As long as the child breathes the poisoned air of nationalism, education in world-mindedness can produce only precarious results. As we have pointed out, it is frequently the family that infects the child with extreme nationalism. The school should therefore use the means described earlier to combat family attitudes that favour jingoism."

I suppose by jingoism they mean the patriotism that one has toward one's country. Mr. Chairman, the whole idea behind this is so to mould men's minds as to create a mass thinking as though it were the thinking of one man—

Mr. Harkness: Twenty-five dollars a month.

Mr. Hansell: —and by doing that sort of thing, do away with individual thinking. To my mind, to do away with individual thinking and to try to stereotype the minds of men is one of the most insidious types of brain-washing we can have.

Mr. Harkness: Twenty-five dollars a month.

Mr. Ellis: That is what the Social Crediters are trying all the time.

An hon. Member: You are doing fairly well yourself.

[Mr. Hansell.]

Mr. Hansell: It is the difference between having individual thinking which has produced some of the greatest men and ideas of the ages, and having the minds of men conform to one idea, the idea rather of a world government where individual thinking can never be permitted, where an individual may never be permitted to think his way through to any new idea whatsoever.

My time is fairly well gone, Mr. Chairman. I shall have something more to say at a later time. Here we are asked to approve the spending of $100 million of the taxpayers' money on a Canada Council. It is a double-barrelled resolution. One part of it sets up the council and gives it $50 million. The other part of it hands over $50 million for it to distribute to universities.

I am in full agreement with the speech made by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke this afternoon, in which he said we are in favour of the one but not of the other. We have always favoured aid to universities. The other day we voted nearly $8 million in a supplementary estimate for aid to universities. To a man this group voted for it. We are all in favour of that. But as far as I am personally concerned—I have not talked with my colleagues—I cannot vote for the setting up of this Canada Council and for handing over to it $100 million. I cannot do that when I have old age pensioners in my own constituency who are on the starvation list. I could not go back and face some of those people who have asked me to handle their applications if I now turned around and voted for the expenditure of $100 million for this Canada Council.

I will close, Mr. Chairman, by making this suggestion to the Prime Minister. I know, of course, that it will not be acceptable. I doubt greatly whether the people of Canada want $100 million of their money spent on this thing. We are to have an election this coming spring. All right. In all probability the bill will be passed before the election. I will challenge the Prime Minister to include in that election a plebiscite so that people may vote and say whether or not they want $100 million of their money spent on this Canada Council. It is all right to talk here, to interject and to waste time. If a plebiscite were included in the election we could go through this country, and we would surely slay somebody if we went through it with the evidence we have concerning what is going on in the world and what the big idea is behind this whole socialist trend.

I will challenge the Prime Minister to do that. This thing has never been submitted to the people. Tonight the Prime Minister said, "We want to get the reaction of the people" and "It seems to be very well received." You haven't talked with 15 million people and cannot say it has been well received just because there are a few people who might say so, and just because certain authorities might agree with it.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to be obliged to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I must inform him that his time expired about three minutes ago.

Mr. Hansell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for that consideration.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I should like to go back to the needs of the student. I take it that this Canada Council is to make it possible for more students to go through university. It is a great experience for a young man to have the opportunity of going through university, because it broadens and deepens him and he meets many of the brightest minds in the country.

I am not going to say much on this matter. However, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. College fees have doubled and redoubled. I used to be able to earn my college fees in six weeks in the summertime. What do we find today? We find that the increase in those fees is such that a medical student will have to pay in the neighbourhood of $1,000 yearly. My question of the Prime Minister is, will this Canada Council help out with the fees?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Well, Mr. Chairman, the bill will provide that the endowment will be permanent, and that the income only can be used for the objectives of the council. One of those objectives is scholarships, without there being any limitation put upon that word. I would not expect that, at the start, the council would find that, in the income from this endowment, it had sufficient money to provide undergraduate scholarships.

Mr. McIvor: Thank you; that is good news.

Mr. Fleming: A few minutes ago the Prime Minister stated that those serving on the council would serve in an honorary capacity. May I ask him if that applies to the chairman and vice chairman of the council?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I stated at the time that the chairman, vice chairman, director and assistant director would receive remuneration, but that the others would be serving in an honorary capacity.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask if the chairman and vice chairman will be serving full time or part time?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): At the start the director and assistant director will be serving in a full-time capacity, and the chairman and vice chairman in a part-time capacity only.

Mr. Fleming: I take it from that statement that in that respect there has been another departure from the recommendations of the Massey commission.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There has been a departure, yes.

Mr. Fleming: What is the reason that justifies the departure?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): It was felt that the council would be set up with a part-time chairman and part-time vice chairman, and that experience would demonstrate whether or not it was necessary for its proper functioning that the chairman and vice chairman be full-time administrators. It is not expected that at first there will be the amount of work to be done that would justify having four full-time officials.

Mr. Fleming: There is one other point in connection with the matter of the chairmanship and vice chairmanship. We remember that when the Prime Minister made his opening statement on January 18, at page 397 of Hansard, he said:

> It will be our endeavour to compose the council of such persons as will give that confidence to the Canadian public generally, and I can assure the house that there will be no considerations of partisan politics that will influence us in the choice of those who will make up the council.

I am quite sure those sentiments are shared by all members of the house, because there is nothing that could more completely or more swiftly subvert or pervert the whole purpose of such a council than to have appointments made to serve partisan purposes.

There was a question raised by the Leader of the Opposition that same day, when he referred to rumours that were current that a very honourable gentleman who had held a portfolio in the government was being mentioned as a likely incumbent of the chairmanship. The Prime Minister did not deal with the point in making some comment on the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition on that date. Could he make some comment on that subject now?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The comment I would make is that my idea of making appointments irrespective of political partisanship does not mean that anyone who has belonged to the party of the government should be excluded.

Mr. Fleming: Is that to be taken as confirmation of the rumours?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, but it is to be taken as a denial of the suggestion that this government cannot make non-political appointments unless it chooses persons who have been obviously members of other parties than its own.

Mr. Fleming: That is a different kind of note the Prime Minister has introduced now. No one was saying that such an appointment to be non-partisan, so far as the government is concerned, must be a selection from some other political party. One was just testing what the Prime Minister meant in stressing the importance of making selections on such a basis that not only will partisan considerations not enter into the appointments, but I trust that the appointments will be made on such a basis that there will be no suspicion of partisanship in the making of such selections.

I take it we are all agreed that nothing would be more harmful to the Canada Council than to have any such suspicions in relation to the selection of those who discharge the important functions of chairman and vice chairman. There is nothing personal in this as regards the hon. gentleman whose name was mentioned in the press. His name has not been put on the record here for that reason. I take it that he is regarded by practically all members of this house as a personal friend; but I think we are entitled to know, now that the point has been raised by the Leader of the Opposition in regard to what has been freely discussed in the press, whether there is any truth, to the knowledge of the Prime Minister, in these stories that were widely current in the press?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I am not going to undertake at this time to tell the members of the house what recommendations I propose to make to my colleagues as to appointments on the council. Unfortunately it is a fact that no matter how careful we may try to be there are some who still suspect the honesty of our intentions; that is unfortunate, but it is something that is inevitable. I can give the hon. gentleman the assurance that no one will be appointed because of his connections with the Liberal party or because of his connections with any other political party, but purely upon the best appraisal we can make as to his fitness or unfitness to occupy that kind of position.

Mr. Fleming: The Prime Minister mentioned earlier that the appointment will not be on a full-time basis, at least in the early stages. Has the government arrived at any estimate as to what proportion of his time the chairman will be required to give to his duties in the early stages? It seems to be the thought of the Prime Minister—at least so I gather from what he has said—that in the early stages the burdens that will be cast upon the chairman are not likely to be as onerous as they might be later.

I wonder if that is a sound view, and if there is not going to be a great deal of work to be done in the early stages in setting up this council and launching it on its tasks, so much so that the burdens in the early days may be even heavier than they will be later when the council is well launched on its way.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): It may well be that for the first few weeks there will be quite a lot of time required, while the council, with the assistance of the investment committee, will be determining what investments should be made of the endowment. I expect that those who will have the responsibility of making the investments, when there will not be the usual restrictions that are placed upon trust companies, will want to give the matter very careful consideration and will endeavour to spread the investments over a pretty wide field so that anything happening in one field will not have the result of a jolt against someone who is carrying all his eggs in one basket. This will probably be quite a serious job that might take quite a lot of time until the investments have been made.

As to the amount to be treated as university grants, that will be only in security funds or securities guaranteed by the government of Canada.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I and my colleagues in this group are pleased that at long last the government has decided to take some action to establish the Canada Council. I am a little bit surprised that the chairman has allowed the debate to range as widely as it has. We have had debates under this resolution on federal aid for all sorts of things in the field of education, many of which have had very little to do with the resolution which is now before the committee. This resolution certainly has very little indeed to do with the subject of federal aid for education, or even federal grants to universities in the field of education.

I was, therefore, very pleased to hear the answer the Prime Minister gave to the hon. member for Fort William. When the hon. member for Fort William rose in his place he seemed to indicate that the resolution had something to do with reducing the fees that ordinary university students would be paying. The resolution has nothing whatsoever to do with that, and I was very pleased to hear the Prime Minister so inform the hon. member for Fort William.

However, we welcome the resolution. For many years now the people of this new nation of ours, the people of Canada, have learned how to earn a living, and I think we have done remarkably well at that. At least, in relation to other peoples of the world, we certainly know how to earn a living. Now we have decided at long last to spend a little bit of money on learning how to live. We have the book which I am sure we all read which says that man does not live by bread alone.

All of us have met many immigrants in recent years, and those immigrants are the first to admit that the people in Canada certainly know how to earn a living. However, in relation to the peoples of western Europe, at least the peoples of the Mediterranean area, the Canadian people have yet to learn the art of living. We have one major conflict of two ideologies in the world today, the ideology of the communist world and the ideology of the capitalist world, both of which have their basis in materialism. To the philosopher there is very little difference basically between the two. The worship of the dollar is not much above the worship of a political machine.

The amount that is being recommended in the resolution is not as much as it seems. I know $100 million sounds like a lot of money in many parts of Canada and to many of the people of Canada. We must remember that half of it is to go for the erection of university buildings; the other half is to be put into a fund. When you look at the income the Canada Council will have from this $50 million a year you will see that it amounts to only slightly over 10 cents per capita per year. I do not think the average Canadian will resent overly much being taxed to the extent of having 10 cents of his income spent by the federal government on the encouragement of the arts, the humanities and the social sciences.

I regret that in the speeches I have heard so far from the government benches all indications are that the breadth of the effort upon which we are about to embark is to be rather limited. The Prime Minister himself, I think for some reasons maybe known only to himself, emphasized a week or so ago that in years gone by those who had patronized the arts were also those who, to use his words, "knew the value of gold coins".

I read a lot into that sentence of the Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister meant by it that the men in days gone by who had gold coins were the ones who had the leisure to interest themselves in the arts, I can agree with him. However, if the Prime Minister meant that there was any correlation at all between the ability to acquire money and the ability to appreciate the worth-while things in life, I must take exception; because even among the limited number of people whom I know are people who know something of the art of living, but they are not at all necessarily those who know something of the art of how to climb onto the backs of their fellow men and get a free ride.

The Prime Minister also referred to his desire not to establish a Canada arts council which would be superimposing itself upon some of the efforts which are being made in the field of the development of the arts in Canada. Once again I must give him the benefit of the doubt. If the Prime Minister meant by the word "superimposing" that he did not like the idea of superimposing something upon organizations which were already well established, and that he did not feel the new Canada Council should attempt to shove any form of culture down the throats of Canadian people, of course I must agree with him. However, if he meant that the whole of the energies of the Canada Council to be established were to be devoted only to assisting those major national organizations which now exist, then once again I have to take exception to that.

In its report at page 373 the Massey commission had this to say:

> We are faced, it seems to us, by a threefold problem: cultural activity within Canada, cultural relations abroad, Canada's relationship with UNESCO.

Well, Mr. Chairman, in the minutes left to me I mean to devote my thoughts to cultural activity within Canada. As far as cultural relations abroad and Canada's relationship with UNESCO are concerned, I must admit that I know very little indeed about this matter; and unlike some of the "socreds" in this house I am unwilling to look for communist-makers under every bedspread that we may have in Canada.

Mr. Blackmore: You are just blind like that.

Mr. Regier: With respect to cultural activity in Canada the royal commission went on to say:

> When national policy for development of the arts, letters and sciences in Canada is devised, first consideration should be given to the specific and peculiar needs of Canada, and only secondary consideration should be given to the application of policies and methods adopted by other countries for the solution of their specific and peculiar cultural problems.

I would like to say "amen" to that recommendation. I heartily agree that in the development of Canadian culture very serious attention should be paid to the peculiar problems we have in Canada, and we should not simply ape the efforts of western European nations.

Canada Council

I referred a moment ago to those of my colleagues in the house who belong to the Social Credit party. I can well remember as a young man listening to the ranting and raving of the late Premier William Aberhart—

Mr. Blackmore: No ranting, no raving.

Mr. Regier: —about the 50 big shots of Canada. I was extremely amazed the other day in listening to the remarks of the Social Credit leader in this debate. I thought the Prime Minister made a very sensible contribution when he offered for our consideration the thought that in centuries gone by there had been many men of wealth who had agreed to be patrons of the arts.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. You will recall, sir, that not long ago the chairman referred to the wide field over which this debate was ranging. He said that in his judgment we should not refer even to UNESCO. I wonder what this particular line of thinking has to do with the resolution we are considering. I have no objection, sir, to allowing this discussion to go as far afield as you like; but I would suggest that if you are going to allow the hon. member to address his remarks in a purely provincial political atmosphere, then you should not try to prevent others from extending the scope of the debate, too.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I was just about to refer to the contribution to this debate made by the leader of the Social Credit party on January 18 last, when he expressed regret that there were not more extremely wealthy people in this country. I shall quote the remarks of the hon. member as reported at page 407 of Hansard for that date:

> I am going to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that if we had in our country more people of material substance I am quite satisfied that they would be just as generous as the people in the United States have been, but one of the great reasons why we do not have as many wealthy people here, and I think we should begin looking into this, is that we have followed taxation policies that have taken the material substance away from people who would be patrons of the arts and sciences and have left them with little or nothing with which to endow. It is high time we began to take a careful look at what the real effects of our taxation policies have been.

Well, Mr. Chairman, here we have inside of 22 years a complete turnabout. In 1935 their leader ranted and raved about the 50 big shots and—

Mr. Blackmore: No ranting, no raving.

Mr. Regier: —today their leader complains that we have not enough multimillionaires in Canada to patronize the arts.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Of course that is entirely wrong.

[Mr. Regier.]

Mr. Regier: The hon. member for Bow River, who is interrupting, comes from Alberta and I think I can readily understand his thinking. I come from British Columbia, where we are used to the fact that multimillionaires have found their way into the Social Credit party.

An hon. Member: What about Alberta?

Mr. Regier: In Alberta they may not have any multimillionaires.

An hon. Member: What about the oil rights the Saskatchewan C.C.F.'ers have?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Let us not mention that.

An hon. Member: They have all kinds of oil rights.

Mr. Regier: Culture is something that cannot be bought. I was very pleased indeed to see that the Prime Minister used the word "encouragement" in the resolution. The purpose of the council is for the encouragement of the arts, humanities and social sciences. The main theme of my contribution is a plea that this effort be spread for the benefit of the masses of the people of Canada. I regret very much that most of the addresses I have heard in this debate so far from almost all sections of the house have created in me the impression that most hon. members seem to think this $100 million is going to be spent on the experts in the arts in Canada. I think the need existing among the masses of the people is much more urgent than the need existing among the experts.

In most parts of industrialized Canada we have the 40-hour week. When we read the report of the Gordon commission and the representations made by the labour unions of Canada we realize the day is not far distant when we will be talking about a 30-hour week, and that causes me some serious concern.

Mr. Byrne: Not me; I would love it.

Mr. Regier: I know the hon. member for Kootenay East, being a so-called union leader, pretends not to be afraid of this; however, I know that upon serious and sober reflection even he will consider as serious a matter which I think ought to be raised in this debate. If we are going to reduce the 40-hour work week to a 30-hour work week we have to be sure that the Canadian people can absorb all the effects created by a 30-hour work week.

Mr. Byrne: Keep socialism out of it and it will be all right.

Mr. Regier: We are today a nation of sitters and a nation of viewers. As far as the development of the individual is concerned, television can be a curse as well as a blessing. The people of Canada will sit and listen to the radio and will watch sports rather than participating in sports. The people of Canada will watch drama on television rather than participating in human life. I submit once again, Mr. Chairman, there is a responsibility which this parliament must face in this regard. It is for that reason I sincerely welcome this effort by the government to help the Canadian people to learn how to live.

I deeply regret that in my home city of New Westminster, British Columbia, on a single night more people will attend one hockey game than you will find the following Sunday at all the churches in the whole city combined, and at all the political meetings for a 10-year period combined.

I think it is high time we paid some serious attention to these problems. When we spend $100 million of the taxpayers' money for the encouragement of the arts, the humanities and the social sciences let us make sure that at least some of that money is spent for the benefit of the broad masses of the Canadian people. I submit that the people who get themselves elected to this parliament should have some understanding of the problems which I am attempting to outline at this time.

In my riding of Burnaby-Coquitlam there are many cultural activities being carried on. In Burnaby, Ioco, Port Moody and Coquitlam there are hundreds of small groups of people working together in order to raise the cultural level of our society. At the present time these people are receiving no national direction, guidance or encouragement. I hope when the bill which will follow this resolution passes it will provide for the giving to my people back home of a little of the encouragement, leadership and guidance for which they are looking.

I am thinking also of the broad picture of Canada. Canada is made up of people who speak two main languages, but dozens of other racial groups are making their contributions. If the Canada Council could broaden its concept of its responsibilities it could do much toward promoting the idea of national unity, and at the same time ensure that many of the contributions which these people have to make will not be lost.

I am thinking also of the field of adult education, and am hoping that it will not be relegated to a secondary position. In the area I represent I think I am safe in saying that there are practically as many people taking part in adult education at the present time as there are pupils in the elementary and high schools. Vancouver is fast gaining a world-wide reputation for its adult education program. Largely responsible for the progressive outlook of the people of the Scandinavian countries is the fact that in many of those countries the people never stop going to school, and are still learning even when they become grandfathers and grandmothers.

I should like to refer to the second section of the resolution, and note that when the Prime Minister spoke on January 18, as reported on page 397 of Hansard of that date, he said that the contribution would be not more than 50 per cent in any case. He was referring to the capital grants to universities. The other day, and again today, the Prime Minister made it perfectly clear that these capital grants have nothing whatsoever to do with the ordinary functions of our Canadian universities.

If the Canada Council should find it expedient to utilize a Canadian university in order to accomplish or further one of its aims or objectives and a building were needed, then the Canada Council would be able to say, "We will pay half the capital expenditure." I find that most regrettable, because there are many areas in Canada which are particularly in need of added sources of supply, if you like to put it that way, of economic well-being.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Will the hon. gentleman permit me? If I gave the impression that the capital fund could be used only for special projects which the council wanted to have carried out I misled the house, because the bill as drafted provides that the council can make grants of half the cost of any building or capital equipment required to promote the study and enjoyment of the arts, the humanities and the social sciences.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Prime Minister for clarifying his statement somewhat, but I still must point out that even in the statement the Prime Minister made just now he has made it clear that the 50 per cent will have nothing whatsoever to do with what are considered by most people of Canada to be the ordinary functions of a university.

If the Canada Council should desire that certain projects be undertaken at a certain university which involved certain capital expenditures, then the council might contribute 50 per cent of those expenditures. I hope I am being fair to the sentiments of the Prime Minister. I read carefully what he said the other day; but I have noticed, as I said when I began my remarks, that much of the debate has run far afield from the limitations set by the resolution and by what the Prime Minister said. However, that is beside the point.

The main point I wanted to make with the Prime Minister was that this idea of matching grants works a hardship on many of the provinces. It works a hardship on all the have-not provinces, which include four Atlantic provinces and perhaps the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. I submit that basically this principle of matching grants—and I submit that is what he did propose—perpetuates an evil which already exists in connection with our university grants, and we should not compound that evil by making it applicable in this particular field. If we want to develop the arts, humanities and social sciences I cannot think of a more suitable place than some of the universities in some of the have-not provinces.

I should like to pose this question to the Prime Minister. Why 50 per cent? Why not 100 per cent? If a need is recognized by the to be established Canada Council, why should not the council assume the whole cost? Why should not the council have the right to determine where in Canada would be the most suitable location? As the Prime Minister has put it, I can very well see the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia obtaining concessions by way of capital grants while the other provinces, because they have not the matching money, would be denied that benefit.

Mr. Dufresne: Not the province of Quebec.

Mr. Regier: The hon. member for Quebec West says "Not the province of Quebec". I speak subject to correction, but I have always assumed that Quebec was one of the three rich provinces. I know that the living conditions of the people are not as good as in some of the other provinces, but I always thought it was one of the big three in wealth.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to have to interrupt again, but I must advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Hahn: I rise on a question of privilege. In view of the statement the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has just made, that the people in his home city of New Westminster do not attend church—

Mr. Regier: I never said that.

Mr. Hahn:—I wish to draw to the attention of the house the fact that the hon. member is not a resident of the city of New Westminster, and therefore I suggest that this might be a reflection—

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a further question of privilege. I think you, Mr. Chairman, will know that I never said the people of New Westminster do not attend church. I did say that more people attend one hockey game than attend all the churches on one Sunday.

The Deputy Chairman: I would ask the hon. gentleman not to require the chair to decide whether or not it is a privilege to live in New Westminster.

Mr. Knowles: Go north, young man.

Mr. Macdonnell: I wish to ask a question of the Prime Minister. I suppose, in every organization, the man who heads it is of great importance, and I cannot imagine an organization where the top man would be of greater importance than in the case of the Canada Council. Is it possible for the Prime Minister to answer this question? In his thinking about the qualifications desirable for this position, does it seem to him that executive and administrative qualities are required, or is he looking for a man who would give the council intellectual and, shall I say, aesthetic leadership? I realize that one cannot divide men sharply into two classes, and I realize that the Prime Minister may get a man who, happily, combines both qualities; but certainly it is of importance, and it would be of great interest to me, to know whether the Prime Minister in approaching the search for this man has in mind rather the one type or the other.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): What I had in mind, Mr. Chairman, was this; a man who would have drive, energy and vision; a man who would make the project active and see to it that the whole council got the benefit of the wisdom that each of its members could contribute to its deliberations. And I would be pleased, too, if it were someone who could take his part of the responsibility in making investments with endowment dollars in a wise way during this period of rapid development of Canadian enterprise, and who could also visualize the effect upon the Canadian nation of a stimulus to these—I use the word which the hon. gentleman does not like any better than I do—so-called cultural activities; and he would be a means of bringing out the intellectual contribution that each and every member of the council could make to the conduct of its general affairs.

Mr. Macdonnell: The Prime Minister has used the words "drive, energy and wisdom" which, I am sure, we would all expect to find in regard to any good man. He has given me the impression that what he is really looking for is what may be called an executive type.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I was not thinking of someone who would be a specialist in any one of the fields of art, but of one who would have an appreciation of all the contributions that could be made in that field.

Mr. Michener: May I ask the Prime Minister a question. In my limited experience in the granting of public funds for charitable, artistic and other purposes, it has always seemed to me that the best use was made of those funds if it was a requirement that the persons or organizations to whom they were granted were required to put up a corresponding amount; in other words, that government funds were granted to match funds put up by private individuals and associations who were interested in the same purpose. This seems to give an assurance that the best use will be made not only of private funds but of the additional moneys put up by the government. I wonder if that principle is given any place in the disposition of funds by the Canada Council, apart from the capital grants to universities.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): It is, Mr. Chairman, in the case of the capital grants. With respect to the other field, it was felt that there should be a certain income assured every year, and that the members of the council would constitute the kind of body which would be able to suggest, to those having the means, how useful it might be if there were contributions provided by them. But it was felt it would be a good, proper stimulus to provide an initial endowment fund amounting to as much as $50 million and created at the expense of the whole Canadian public.

Mr. Michener: I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, whether the Prime Minister understood my point. If, say, a ballet company which is struggling to establish itself were to ask the Canada Council for a grant, it occurs to me that a sound basis of operations would be for the Canada Council to say, "Yes, if you believe sufficiently in this work of yours to provide part of the funds, we will then meet your needs as to the other part of the funds." I suggest this is a much better policy than being too free with public money where there are no private funds ready to support the purpose in hand, and I wonder if that principle has been given effect to in any way in the present proposals.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I think, Mr. Chairman, that contributions out of the income of the endowment will be only a fraction of what it will be necessary to have spent for the purpose for which these contributions from the endowment will be made. For instance, if there is a question of a post-graduate scholarship, the fact that it is a post-graduate scholarship probably means that more than the amount of the scholarship has already been spent in reaching that point of personal development.

Mr. Michener: There is no limitation on the council as to how the money should be applied?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, none; but the fact that they will be operating in public and that their operations will be reported upon annually by the Auditor General in a report that will be tabled in parliament will ensure that the council is very conscious that the Canadian public will feel that it is their money that is being administered by this council; and they will want, I think, to use it in a manner that will commend itself to the majority of the Canadian people.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lapointe: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we will continue with this debate, after which we will proceed with the debate on second reading of the bill to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. This business having been terminated, we shall take up the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources concerning the establishment of two national museums, to be followed by the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Finance with respect to amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act, to be followed by the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance concerning the Municipal Grants Act.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

BRIDGE AND CAUSEWAY CONSTRUCTION, HILLSBORO RIVER, P.E.I.—TENDERS

Question No. 88—Mr. Matheson:

1. Are tenders being called for the construction of a causeway and bridge across the Hillsboro river, Queens, Prince Edward Island?
2. If so, on what date and in what manner?
3. What type of bridge will be built, of what length and with what type of piers?
4. Will separate tenders be called for the causeway fill and for the bridge?
5. When is it expected steel will be available for this bridge?

Answer by: Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works):

1 and 2. Tenders will be called by the government of Prince Edward Island as this project will be constructed under the trans-Canada highway agreement. Specifications are now being prepared for the causeway portion for which tenders will be invited by April, 1957. The bridge design is expected to be ready in April, 1957, preparatory to tender call.

3. It is proposed to construct a continuous steel deck truss of five spans totalling 800 feet, resting on concrete piers and abutments. The approach to the bridge section from both ends will be causeway.

4. Yes.

5. Latter part of 1957 or in 1958.

TRANS MOUNTAIN OIL PIPE LINE CO. DIRECTORS

Question No. 97—Mr. Goode:

1. Who are the present directors of the Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company?
2. What are their official positions on the board of directors?

Jamieson, John Kenneth, 169 Old Yonge street, Toronto, Ontario.

Morrison, Donald Mackay, 400 East Broadway, Vancouver, B.C.

Wahn, Ian Grant, 243 Dawlish avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

2. Donald Mackay Morrison completed the return in the capacity of president and Jack Hymers McQuarrie of the city of Vancouver as secretary.

There is no information available as to the official positions held by the persons other than Mr. Morrison on the board of directors.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 6, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa,
February 4, 1957.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber on Wednesday, the 6th February, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to a certain bill.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Secretary to the Governor General (Administrative).

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

RAILWAY-HIGHWAY CROSSINGS

Question No. 68—Mr. Small:

1. How many railway-highway crossings were in Canada as of December 31, 1954, 1955 and 1956?
2. How many, giving the number in each province, for each of these years, are classified as: grade separation (underpass or overpass), gates, bells and automatic signals, watchmen, unprotected?
3. How much was paid out of the railway grade crossing fund, and how much was contributed by the municipalities, the railways, and the provinces, for grade separations (overpass and underpass), and railway diversions, designating each project, in each of the years 1954, 1955 and 1956?
4. How much was paid out of the railway grade crossing fund, and how much was contributed by the municipalities, the railways, and the provinces in each of the years 1954, 1955 and 1956, giving the number in each province, for gates, bells and automatic signals, watchmen?
5. How much was paid out of the railway grade crossing fund, and how much was contributed by the municipalities, by the railways, and by the provinces, in each of the years 1954, 1955 and 1956, giving the number of units in each province, for the maintenance of grade level crossing protection and grade separations?
6. How many grade level railway crossings were ordered closed by the board of transport commissioners in each of the years 1954, 1955 and 1956?
7. How many new grade level railway crossings were approved by the board of transport commissioners in each of the years 1954, 1955 and 1956?
8. How many grade level railway crossing accidents occurred in each of the years 1954, 1955 and 1956, and what was the number injured at (i) protected (ii) unprotected crossings, and what number were killed at (a) protected; (b) unprotected crossings, in each of the years 1954, 1955 and 1956?
9. How many project applications were approved in each of the years 1954, 1955 and 1956, giving date, location, and class of protection; how many of these projects have been started, giving date and location, and how many project applications have the board received, during each of these years and not passed on, up to December 31, 1956?
10. Has the federal organization been created or set up to co-ordinate law enforcement of advance warning, standardization of signals and equipment, at level crossings for the prevention of accidents?
11. Have any of the provinces set up any organization to co-operate with the federal government to enforce the laws pertaining to the prevention of accidents at railway crossings?

VETERANS' LAND ACT LOANS, PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Question No. 81—Mr. Quelch:

1. How many veterans in each of the three prairie provinces obtained loans under part I of the Veterans' Land Act?
2. How many of these veterans, by provinces, (a) have repaid their loans in full; (b) are in arrears for one year; (c) are in arrears for one year or more?
3. What was the total amount loaned to these veterans, and (a) what amount of principal has been repaid; (b) what is the total amount of arrears of interest; (c) what is the total amount of arrears of principal?
4. How many veterans have obtained loans under part III of the act?
5. What is the total amount of these loans?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—INQUIRY AS TO CANCELLATION OF EXPORT PERMIT FOR JET AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister tell the house whether or not the permit in connection with the export of 24 jets to Israel was cancelled? If so, was it at the request of the Israeli government? What were the circumstances in connection with refunds, if any, to be made by Canada in consequence of the fact that Israel is not now to accept delivery?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the export permit was suspended by the government of Canada for the reason that the situation in the area was too critical to warrant shipment of arms into that area to anyone.

The arrangement for the purchase of jet planes was made between Canadair and the government of Israel, and at the request of the government of Israel the contract was liquidated. I am not sure of the exact terms but, as I understand the situation, the Israelis paid the out of pocket expenses of Canadair on these particular planes up to the time the settlement was made. The planes themselves were turned back to the R.C.A.F. under a contract for exactly the same type of plane that was current at the time. The expense to the Israeli government was not great in proportion to the size of the order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask a supplementary question. On what date was the export permit suspended? Was it made at anyone's request? Why did the government find it necessary to adopt this attitude after having granted the export permit in order to provide for the supply of jets to permit the defence of Israel? Why did the government change its attitude and when?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, my memory is reasonably good but I cannot remember dates offhand.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Approximately?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I cannot say even approximately. The permit was suspended when Israel moved into Egypt on an aggressive expedition. The suspension of the export permit was action taken by the government of Canada. Perhaps I should say the suspension of the export permit was taken on the initiative of the government of Canada because one of the conditions on which the export permit was granted was that the planes would not be used except for defensive purposes and Israel at the time of the suspension was committing an act of aggression. The cancellation of the order for planes was made on the initiative of the government of Israel. As I say, the government of Canada was not a participant in that transaction; that is, it was not a participant in the sale of the planes to Israel.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Perhaps the minister would allow me one further question. Did the Canadian government advise the government of Israel at the time it suspended this export permit that what was being done was because of what the minister described as an act of aggression on the part of Israel? How long after the Israeli forces moved forward was that suspension of the export permit taken?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, Mr. Speaker, I would have to have notice of these questions. I could give my friend actual dates by consulting the records but I do not remember these dates offhand.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Possibly the minister could give further information tomorrow.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, I would be pleased to.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

GHANA—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government made arrangements to appoint a high commissioner to Ghana, the new member of the commonwealth, when that new country comes into existence within a few weeks?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, no arrangements have been made, although the government is, as the house knows, sending a representative to the inauguration of the state of Ghana. The matter of representation subsequently is now under consideration.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to ask the minister because I was unable to hear his answer, although it was not entirely his fault. Did I understand the minister to say the government did not intend to send a high commissioner to Ghana? The reason I ask that is this: Is Ghana not intended to be a full-fledged member of the commonwealth?

Mr. Pearson: Ghana is not a full-fledged member of the commonwealth until the state is set up. It has not yet been formally established. I said that, after that is done, the question of representation and the sending of a high commissioner to Ghana will be considered.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have another supplementary question. Since Ghana, when it comes into existence in a few weeks' time, will be a full-fledged member of the commonwealth, would it not be normal to send a high commissioner there just as others are doing?

Mr. Pearson: It might be desirable, Mr. Speaker, but there are cases where some parts of the commonwealth are not represented formally in other parts. I am not suggesting this would be one.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REFERENCE TO EFFECT OF UNITED STATES DISPOSAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the minister agree with the opinion expressed by Ezra Taft Benson, the United States secretary of agriculture, in a letter to the editor of the Vancouver Herald and reported by the Canadian Press in today's newspapers to the effect that the United States fire-sale wheat export policies have not hurt other wheat exporting countries including Canada, and has not affected sales abroad?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that this time I have read the Globe and Mail, which I think is the newspaper to which my hon. friend referred. Someone put a copy into my hands as I was coming downstairs to the house. I read the remarks of secretary Benson and I do not agree with them. I think that if Mr. Benson will consult his officers they will explain to him the views of the Canadian government in some detail because the views of the Canadian government have been explained to his officers through our continuing committee.

I noticed one other statement in the report. Although the government of the United States has reduced wheat acreage, the governments of other exporting countries have not reduced wheat acreage. If Mr. Benson will consult the acreage figures for Canada he will find that the acreage planted to wheat in this country has dropped from about 28 million acres at the end of the second world war to a little less than 20 million acres today.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of a statement he made a short while ago in the chamber to the effect that Canadian producers have reduced their wheat acreage. What factors does the minister suggest have prompted Canadian wheat growers to reduce their acreage?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I can only assume they found it more profitable to produce other grains, such as barley. The reduction of wheat acreage has been more or less fully offset by the increase in barley acreage. It is the producers' decision that brought about the reduction in wheat; it is not the decision of the government.

WHEAT—REPORTED SALES BY UNITED STATES TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister comment on the report of the Alberta wheat pool that the United States for the first time has recently sold substantial quantities of high grade wheat to Japan? What steps are being taken to recover this and other markets which have already been lost?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Well, Mr. Speaker, we have enjoyed a market for high grade wheat in Japan for several years. The reason United States wheat was sold in that market was that a 92 cent subsidy was applied to the wheat by the government agency concerned. The question is, do we in Canada want to follow the United States prices for export wheat down for the sake of holding that market? I might say that from the tender for wheat that resulted in the sale of a cargo of dark spring wheat we sold two carloads of No. 2 northern at a considerably higher price, so I do not think the situation is too serious.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

IMPLEMENTATION OF CERTAIN CANADIAN LEGION RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is it the intention of the government to bring in legislation to increase the war veterans allowance and to increase the permissible income ceiling to $2,000 a year for married veterans and $1,200 for single veterans and widows to conform with the request of the Canadian Legion?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the representations made by the Canadian Legion on this and other matters are still receiving government consideration.

[Later:]

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE—PERMISSIBLE INCOME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

An hon. Member: Ah, a serious one.

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister giving consideration to the fact that war veterans allowance recipients over 70 years of age will not get the benefit of any increase in the old age security pension to be made at this session unless the ceilings on permissible income under the War Veterans Allowance Act are raised? Is consideration being given to raising these ceilings at this session for that purpose?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the same consideration is being given to this particular point in the War Veterans Allowance Act as is being given to the points referred to by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough).

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED EQUIPPING OF CANADIAN FORCES WITH ATOMIC WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence if he will comment on the report appearing in the Vancouver Sun of February 1 which states that a senior government source has stated that the Canadian armed forces would be equipped with atomic weapons within approximately two years. This apparently is the first announcement of such a policy from an authoritative source.

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what constitutes a senior government source and I do not make a habit of commenting on speculative articles by newspaper correspondents. In view of these two considerations I think I should make no comment.

INCOME TAX

DEFERRED REDUCTIONS—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister confirm the accuracy of a press report of his interview yesterday with the Canadian Chamber of Commerce which proposed a scheme of "deferred income tax cuts"? In the report the chief of the delegation says that the minister complimented them for an excellent contribution to a difficult problem. If the minister confirms the report will he say whether this answer was meant seriously or whether it was just a dismissing pat on the back?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): The Minister of Finance believes in giving a pat on the back where it is deserved. I would recommend to my hon. friend and to every hon. gentleman in the house that if he has time he might read the brief of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce which was presented yesterday. It discusses the monetary and fiscal policies which they think appropriate at the moment. I think it is a well written document and it did include the recommendations my hon. friend mentioned, but I did not intend, in complimenting them, to be taken as selecting any one part of it as deserving of special commendation.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO DROPPING OF PRESSURE IN SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Could the minister say whether pressure in the Success natural gas field of Saskatchewan is dropping off, endangering the supply of gas to Moose Jaw, Swift Current, Regina and other Saskatchewan points? If so, would the minister state whether the federal government will urge Trans-Canada Pipe Lines to come to the aid of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation and rescue Saskatchewan citizens from what appears to be another costly C.C.F. blunder?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have no information about the pressure of gas in the field referred to. The question is the first indication I have had that there is any trouble about gas pressures there. I may say, in reply to the second question, that to my knowledge Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited has been trying to make a contract to supply gas to Saskatchewan municipalities with the Saskatchewan Power Corporation for some months but entirely without success. I think no urging on my part would be required to enable the power corporation to arrange a contract for a reliable supply of gas from Trans-Canada Pipe Lines.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REFERENCE TO PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON SOCIAL SECURITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. When, in the course of his television appearance on Monday evening on "The Nation's Business", the Prime Minister referred to the need to assist "those members of our national family who are too young, too handicapped, too old to look after themselves", was he giving the Canadian people the assurance that something will be done at this session regarding family allowances, allowances for disabled persons and the old age pension?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. I was referring to existing legislation.

Mr. Knowles: Do we take it from what the Prime Minister now says in that negative tone that he is closing the door to action on these matters?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, I am not closing the door, but as usual government policy will be announced in the house before it is announced over the radio.

Mr. Knowles: That will be a change of policy.

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I have a supplementary question. In view of the government's expected half a billion dollar surplus and its ability to hand over $100 million to the Canada Council, does the Prime Minister not believe the time has arrived for an immediate increase in the old age pensions, veterans pensions and blind persons pensions in order to bring them at least to the point where their purchasing power is the same as it was when those pensions were first passed by every hon. member of parliament?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I will do my electioneering when a general election is called, and on the proper platform.

FINANCE

REPORTED EFFECT OF CREDIT RESTRICTIONS ON CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): May I ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Has the minister seen the report in Maclean's Building Reports that the volume of construction in Canada during January was down by 42 per cent as compared with January, 1956? Does the minister think a decline of these proportions in any way satisfies the declared objectives of the Bank of Canada, and is the government giving consideration to what should be done in the face of such a decline in building construction?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Yes, I have seen the report, Mr. Speaker, and the consideration which is being given to the problem of controlling inflation, while not stopping the desired growth of the country, goes on every day. The accumulation of evidence such as this with regard to the effects of a policy of restraint is welcome. At the same time, the minister and the government recognize that one cannot carry a policy of restraint to a point where it operates in a manner which one would not like and the most difficult decision that can be made will be made as to when the policy of restraint can be eased in order that the present excellent good times in Canada may be continued.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CONTROL OF INTEREST RATES ON CONDITIONAL SALES CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government given consideration to the introduction of legislation at this session to control the exorbitant interest rates sometimes charged by certain business firms on instalment credit and conditional sales contracts?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I think the answer to that ought to be, Mr. Speaker, that if any such legislation is to be introduced notice will be given in the ordinary manner. Perhaps I could couple it with a question as to whether or not my hon. friend would recommend it?

Mr. Argue: Very definitely, yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister would consider this aspect when he is giving consideration to this question, of extending at least that measure of control to instalment credit as is now applied to small loan companies.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF EARLY PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the fact that it is generally predicted that the major portion of the electioneering will be done in the budget, will the Prime Minister give his assurance now that the budget will be brought in at an early date so there can be full and complete discussion; and that it will not be held back until the last hours before dissolution?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): It is usual for the Minister of Finance to announce the date on which he will make his budget speech in the house. I have not inquired from him when he intends to make that announcement, and I do not think it is proper to regard the budget as part of electioneering.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I will ask the Minister of Finance now: can we have an assurance that the budget will be brought down in ample time for us to have a full discussion?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I have not completed the work on the budget, and at the present time I cannot even hazard a guess as to when I shall deliver it.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the Minister of Finance two simple questions? First, is it his intention to bring down a budget at this session? Second, if he does will he undertake that the house will have, for consideration of that budget before dissolution, the eight days appointed for that purpose under the rules of the house?

Mr. Harris: Well, under ordinary circumstances I would expect to deliver a budget during this session of parliament, but as I said a moment ago the work is not yet complete; indeed it is hardly started. Under those circumstances, I could not say how long it would be before I would be in a position to notify the house that a budget would be delivered, and it would depend, of course, on how long the session lasts after that whether any engagement could be given that there might be time for debate. So, I think the question is not one that can be answered at the present time anyway, though it might be some time in the future.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask if it does not occur to the minister as being fundamentally unfair to bring in a budget on the very eve of dissolution, under such circumstances that there would be given to the house no adequate opportunity for discussion in the house of the budget proposals?

Mr. Harris: I rather thought questions were intended to elicit facts and not opinions.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): This is a question of fact, so I hope the Minister of Finance will approve it. Did I correctly understand the minister to use words which could bear the interpretation that he would not actually introduce a budget at all in this session?

Mr. Fleming: Do not evade that question.

Mr. Harris: I have been asked that question twice already, Mr. Speaker. The Hansard record will show that I had hoped to introduce a budget during this session.

Mr. Macdonnell: No, the minister has not answered my question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonnell: I want to repeat it. Did the minister use words that could be fairly construed as meaning that he might not introduce a budget during this session at all?

Mr. Harris: I am sure I did not, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Harris.]

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. From the questions directed to him in connection with the budget, would the minister get the impression the official opposition is very anxious to have an early election?

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I should also like to refer to some words which the Minister of Finance used which have been puzzling me a bit. I think he said that preparations on the budget were hardly yet under way. Am I correct in assuming that the minister's departmental officials are not busy in the preparation of the budget as yet?

Mr. Harris: I do not think I need go into the details as to how long and how much work is involved in preparing a budget. It has not been my practice to deliver a budget until I have received representations from a very large number of people and organizations in the country. Normally, these people expect to see me during November, December January and into February. This process has not been completed as yet, and that is what I had in mind when I said that the work had not begun. I was referring to myself, of course. The members of the staff are working throughout the year on the budget.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a question.

An hon. Member: Speaking of juvenile members.

Mr. McIvor: If the members of the opposition are sincere in their desire to have adequate time in which to discuss the budget, why not cut down our question hour?

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO OIL PRICES AND PROFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): May I address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government received a request from the automotive trades association of Manitoba for an inquiry into wholesale prices and profits of Canadian oil companies? If so, what action has been taken by the government?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received notice of the hon. gentleman's question just before I came into the house. No such request has been received in my office. I will make inquiries whether any such request has been received by any of my colleagues, but I know of none.

POSTAL SERVICE

EXTENSION OF MAIL ROUTES IN RURAL AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): I would like to address a question to the Postmaster General. Will the Postmaster General be good enough to tell the house if the Post Office Department intends to follow the same practice as was followed just before the last election, namely extending mail routes in rural areas where there are less than four families to the mile?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what was the practice to which my hon. friend refers, but there has been no change in the policy and the regulations of the Post Office Department regarding the extension of rural mail routes since I have been in charge.

INQUIRY AS TO RENEWAL OF TWICE DAILY MAIL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): I would like to address a question to the Postmaster General. Has any further consideration been given to renewing the twice a day mail service as was formerly the practice, in view of the fact that once a day mail is costing the taxpayer a lot of money?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the Postmaster General's statement a few moments ago that no consideration has recently been given to the resumption of twice a day mail delivery, will the Prime Minister explain his own statement to the Canadian Labour Congress delegation last week that the cabinet was considering the resumption of twice a day mail deliveries?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, I will not explain those words. I think they are quite clear. Consideration is being given to the costs that would be involved in restoring at this time twice a day delivery in the postal service. There will have to be a comparison between the estimate thus arrived at and the estimate the hon. member for Peterborough had in mind when he said that the fact there was only one mail delivery a day was costing the Canadian taxpayer a lot of money. Those are considerations that have to be taken into account and that will be taken into account.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): As a supplementary question, will the Postmaster General please inform himself of the progress of discussions within the cabinet regarding his own department?

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister concerning the cost to the taxpayer. It is costing him money to rent boxes at the post office.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Does the Prime Minister not know that different business firms across the country have to send messengers to the post office for their mail two or three times a day, whereas it was delivered to them in the past?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I would not be at all surprised. During the whole time I practised law in Quebec, and that was over a great many years, we had a messenger who went to the post office after the ordinary time of arrival of each mail.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TRANSPORT, RADIO DIVISION—REPORTED DELAY IN RECEIVING OVERTIME PAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to address a question to a minister who always takes prompt action when a complaint is brought to his attention. Does the Minister of Transport know that employees of his department with the radio division in British Columbia have in recent months had to wait up to six months before receiving their overtime pay?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his words of commendation, and I should like to say that I shall have to investigate the matter. I cannot believe that there would be cases where employees would have to wait six months for overtime pay unless there were some particular reason for it, but I shall make inquiries and ascertain what are the facts.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REQUEST FOR FIVE-DAY 40-HOUR WEEK FOR CLEANERS AND HELPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister given further consideration to extending the five-day 40-hour week to cleaners and helpers employed by the department, as laid down by government policy? If not, would he give consideration to that?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): I shall take the hon. gentleman's question as notice. I do not know just what stage the discussions have reached.

AIRPORTS

MALTON AND TORONTO ISLAND—STATEMENT ON PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I should like to answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for York West who inquired when work was to begin on improvements to the Toronto island airport and also when work was to begin on a new terminal building at Malton airport.

As soon as the agreement between the city of Toronto and my department for the transfer of the title of the lands at Malton and the development of the island airport has been signed and approved by the governor in council, my department will initiate action towards runway construction at the island airport. The first stage of this work involves the provision of a substantial quantity of fill which we expect to be available from dredging in that area by the Department of Public Works.

As regards the second question, my department has recently concluded a major extension of the present terminal building. The development plans in connection with a completely new terminal building are still under study and I am not yet in a position to make a statement as to when the project will be started.

Yesterday the hon. member for Peel also asked a question with regard to the taxes on Malton airport. I have been unable to obtain the information he asked for but if he will put his question on the order paper I will endeavour to secure the information that he desires.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Since new facilities at Malton airport seem to be as far away as ever, would the minister investigate the possibility of having the contractor add to the housekeeping staff there to improve conditions which are continuing to give the city a black eye?

Mr. Marler: I do not think that the assumptions on which the hon. gentleman's question proceeds have any foundation in fact. The terminal building at Malton has been substantially extended, as he knows, and certainly meets present conditions more than adequately. How long it will continue to do so is another question. I have told him already what our intentions are with regard to a new building. I do not think it is necessary to add anything further at this time. So far as the condition of the airport is concerned, on the few occasions recently that I have been there I have seen nothing which would justify the kind of implied complaint which the hon. gentleman has just made.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Would the minister investigate conditions there, and let us know if any improvement could be made?

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

QUEBEC CITY—EXCHANGE OF LOTS FOR SITE OF NEW POST OFFICE BUILDING

(Translation):

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to answer a question put to me yesterday by the hon. member for Quebec West. I may say that, after taking this up with the management of the Canadian National Railways, I can add nothing to the information already given by my colleague the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. J. Wilfrid Dufresne (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a further question of the hon. minister. As the minister responsible for the C.N.R., would he please attempt to get additional information in answer to my question of yesterday so that a definite solution may be arrived at without delay?

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, I must tell the hon. member that this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works and does not at all concern the Canadian National Railways, except in some incidental way. Any further questions of the hon. member in this regard should be directed to my colleague the Minister of Public Works.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED DELAY IN ISSUING OF CHEQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dickey: Look who is back.

Mr. Van Horne: Is the minister aware that thousands of unemployed people have been waiting up to six weeks or more for their first unemployment insurance cheques and that the delays are inflicting unnecessary hardship and suffering on thousands of needy families?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): I shall look into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Is the Minister of Labour aware of the fact that the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska has advertisements in the paper at home asking any person who has trouble with their unemployment insurance to bring it to his attention?

Mr. Gregg: I am aware of the fact, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—REFERENCE TO REPORTED RECORD DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the answer he gave yesterday to my question regarding last year's record trade deficit. The minister said, and I quote his words:

. . . exports were up about 11 per cent—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Hees:

—and imports were up about the same amount.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Hees: My question is, is the minister not aware that, while exports were up 11.8 per cent, imports were up 21 per cent or nearly double, and that while exports to the United States were up 10.2 per cent, imports from the United States were up 20 per cent or nearly double? Does this not give an example of the minister's lack of knowledge of the important things that are going on in this country?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. gentleman consider that his question is an example of that which is allowed on orders of the day?

Mr. Hees: I think it was a misleading answer I received from the Minister of Trade and Commerce yesterday.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would he advise me why he gave the answer he did give me yesterday in reply to my question regarding the trade deficit, as it appears to have been a deliberate attempt to mislead the house and is obviously wrong?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, is it in order for an hon. member of this house to put a question that implies there was a deliberate intention to mislead the house?

Mr. Hees: I said it appears to mislead.

Mr. Speaker: I heard the expression that was used by the hon. gentleman and he used the words "as it appears to have been a deliberate attempt on the part of the minister to mislead the house". Now there were days when such expressions were declared unparliamentary and I would say there was a much closer check taken on the language used in this house until the end of the session of 1955. I think all hon. members know that since then the house itself has gone in a different direction with respect to language and on both sides expressions have been used which are not of the same standard of dignity that used to prevail in the past.

I must say there were periods in our history since confederation where such has been the case. The case that is now prevailing is not an isolated one. It just so happens that last evening I was reading something which appears in Hansard of 1891. There were words of Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the language being used today compares with the language used on that particular occasion. I believe this is a matter which it is not for me to judge alone. If I were to say today that the expression used by the hon. member for Broadview is unparliamentary, then what about the many other expressions that I have heard used in this house about which no complaint has been made, whereas on other occasions when a complaint has been made it was considered by many hon. members to be unjustified. I would think that since there is talk of a dissolution of this parliament, we ought in the meantime to try to bear with one another, keeping the tradition at as high a level as possible until that time comes.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, bearing in mind what Your Honour said to the house, in order to ascertain if it is possible to get an answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hees). In view of an expression the minister has used in discussing serious matters in the house—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): —and to know his true views, could the minister inform the house if he has begun losing any sleep over his $1 billion trade deficit with the United States?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I pay the attention to the questions asked by the juvenile member who represents Broadview that I think those questions deserve, and I have nothing to add.

EGGS

INQUIRY AS TO OPERATION OF FLOOR PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to someone who is representing the Department of Agriculture in the house. I have held this question for two days now in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and also his parliamentary assistant. I think I have to put it before you now, sir. It refers to the question of eggs. I asked the question last week and nothing has been done about it. The minister did not say he would do anything about it at the time; he evaded the question.

Some of my constituents are delivering eggs to the graders at a price of 26 cents. I understand the eggs sold on the market on the same day at 40 cents; the floor price is 38 cents. Is there anything the government can do or should do about this situation? The question is still open and yet nothing has been done about it.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will look into it and get an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister say whether the government has sufficient concern about the serious condition facing the poultry industry in Canada with respect to eggs to take government action to assist the industry?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may be assured of the government's concern. I will take the question as notice and provide whatever answer is indicated at a later date.

PUBLIC WORKS

BORDEN, P.E.I.-CAPE JOURIMAIN, N.B.—
STATEMENT ON PROPOSED CAUSEWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question asked yesterday by the Liberal member for Queens (Mr. Matheson) about the work being done on the proposed causeway between Borden, Prince Edward Island, and Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick.

[Mr. Hamilton (York West).]

The situation is that the government of Prince Edward Island last year requested us to study the feasibility of a proposal to build a causeway from Prince Edward Island to New Brunswick, and we have done some work to that end.

This would be a project of major proportions. In estimating its cost an important factor will be the source of supply of suitable rock. The province specifically requested assistance in determining the possibility of obtaining suitable rock from the Cape Tormentine area.

On the basis of geological reports, test holes were drilled and samples sent to our testing laboratory in Ottawa. These cores have been undergoing tests but a full evaluation is not yet complete.

Concurrent with the laboratory testing, a field performance test has been established adjacent to the Canadian National Railways' dock at Cape Tormentine in which samples of the best stone obtained from the Tormentine drilling, as well as other local quarry material, are under observation. These tests were started last fall and will continue until the samples have been subjected to a full year's cycle of weather and sea conditions. The results of the field test will be a further check on the laboratory tests which are being reviewed at the present time.

In addition to the technical study, we are making a full financial and economic analysis. In this we have had the guidance of observations made in the preliminary report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. This study will include a forecast of the over-all economic benefits from a causeway as against the type of service now provided with the ferries. Arrangements are being made to have this financial and economic study carried out by the accounting and management consultant firm of Price, Waterhouse and Company with whom we have already had discussion.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS MINIMUM PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is any action being taken by the government to increase the ridiculously low pensions of several groups of retired Canadian National Railways employees?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): That question has already been answered this session. I do not propose to inform the hon. gentleman of an answer already given.

Mr. Van Horne: You are going to keep on doing nothing.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—PETITION OF ALBERTA INDIAN ASSOCIATION TO THE QUEEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Carl O. Nickle (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to deliver the Alberta Indian Association petition to the Queen to its proper destination while the responsible hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) is cavorting in Newfoundland, or is this petition to be interred in the tombs of Ottawa files and mark another retrogade step in Canadian democracy?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Canadian democracy has reached the stage when the provision in the Act of Settlement is no longer appropriate in respect of some kinds of petitions. I have not seen this petition. The usual practice, when a petition is sent to Government House, is for the staff to transfer it to the minister most directly concerned with the subject matter. It is done in that way because under the constitutional system the governor general now does not act without the advice of his ministers.

If the matter is one that can involve no doubt the minister may himself tender such advice as he feels certain would have the approval of all his colleagues because, in tendering the advice, he engages the solidarity of all of his colleagues, and when there is any doubt as to whether that would be objected to by any of his colleagues the matter is brought to their attention in a meeting of cabinet for a decision as to what advice should be given.

Now, I have not seen this petition. I am under the impression that it is a petition founded upon the assertion that is being made many times by representatives of the original inhabitants of this part of the North American continent, that they are not subject to Canadian laws but they are allies of Canada. Well, now, a petition that would be based upon that foundation would not be submitted to Her Majesty with any recommendation that it should be recognized because the position that is taken by the government is that all the inhabitants of Canada are subject to Canadian law.

Mr. Nickle: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister please give the house and the country assurance that he himself and all the members of his cabinet will give study to this particular petition which I am sure, if he reads it, will result in conclusions somewhat different from his remarks? May I ask this further question? Does the Prime Minister consider that when there is any danger of lack of solidarity within his cabinet any individual cabinet minister can set himself up as a censor of the Queen's mail?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, when a petition is sent to Government House for transmission to Buckingham Palace that is not the Queen's mail. Those petitions are not automatically sent to Buckingham Palace and it would, I think, be a very embarrassing practice to send futile petitions to Buckingham Palace merely because it was somebody else's fancy that such a petition should go to Her Majesty. There has to be some discretion exercised in the matter of transmitting those petitions. If that were not to be done, a petition could be addressed, as I know that some are addressed, directly by the petitioner to Buckingham Palace. Frequently such petitions come back to us here from the Queen's secretary to inquire whether that is a petition that is being transmitted on behalf of the petitioner by the Canadian government.

Mr. Nickle: In view of the Prime Minister's description, which implies the futile position of the petition, are we to understand that the petition has been in the government's hands for the last ten days and has not yet been examined by any member of the cabinet except the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

Mr. Hees: Is that right? Question.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I am not going to discuss that matter here at this time. My attention was called to this matter by the hon. gentleman the other day. I have been making inquiries about it and I know that when the petition was received there was an opinion sought from the Department of Justice and that opinion was given by the deputy minister of justice only yesterday.

Mr. Nickle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister give assurance that the cabinet will give consideration to this petition and from its consideration of this petition bring before this house at this current session an amendment to the Indian Act of 1951?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, Mr. Speaker, I will give no such undertaking to the hon. gentleman.

Canada Council

CANADA COUNCIL

PROVISION FOR ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE ARTS, HUMANITIES AND SOCIAL SCIENCES

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 5, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East)—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a Canada Council for the encouragement of the arts, humanities and social sciences and further to provide inter alia that

(a) the Minister of Finance may, out of the consolidated revenue fund, pay to the council the sum of fifty million dollars to constitute an endowment fund for the purposes of the act, and

(b) the council shall establish a fund to be called the university capital grants fund, to which shall be credited the sum of fifty million dollars, to be paid to the council by the Minister of Finance out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, before the resolution carries there are one or two questions I should like to ask the Prime Minister. As reported on page 977 of Hansard of February 5 the Prime Minister had this to say:

In connection with one estate the statement had been made more than once by the deceased during his lifetime that he was not making provision during his lifetime or apt to make any under his will for benefactions to public institutions because the succession duties were so high, the proportion of his estate which would be taken in succession duties, if it were thought fit, could be employed on the recommendation of the government by parliament for like purposes.

The Prime Minister then referred to another individual who apparently had indicated that he wished to make a contribution. Would the Prime Minister indicate to the house whether there was any paper or will or statement of any kind other than a verbal statement to that particular effect? The reason I ask that is that I am sure this same gentleman must at some time or other have contributed quite properly and to a great extent to possibly his church or other charitable organizations. Is the government prepared to recognize those gifts to such institutions in the same way?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, I was merely saying what I had in the back of my mind in view of the fact that there had been a substantial windfall in the shape of unusually large succession duty collections. I was not suggesting that there had been any testamentary disposition or any recommendation in writing or anything of that kind. There could not be because the amounts collected as succession duties go into the consolidated revenue fund and cannot be taken out of that fund without a vote of parliament.

Mr. Hahn: One other question in respect to the endowments we have today. Is it the intention to include all endowments to institutions of learning and for scholarships and so on being administered today under special funds in the Canada Council and have only one source of administration?

[Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East).]

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No consideration has yet been given to what might be done about other funds. For instance, there is no present intention of diminishing the grants to the national research council. There is no present intention of diminishing—on the contrary there is a declared intention of increasing—grants for vocational and technical training.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, there is one particular point I should like to deal with arising out of something the Prime Minister said yesterday which I think should be clarified. First of all may I say that as the committee is aware this group is in full support of this legislation. We hope it will not be long until the bill is passed and it will be possible for the government to implement it.

However, something happened yesterday which puzzled me. The Prime Minister knows that for a number of years I have tried to persuade the house, thus far in vain, to accept an amendment to the Income Tax Act with particular reference to the section of the act which prescribes secrecy so far as information obtained under the act is concerned. Every time I have introduced that amendment the Minister of National Revenue has endeavoured to make a strong case against it by asserting vehemently that secrecy regarding information obtained under the Income Tax Act must prevail. I find that the provision in the Income Tax Act which has been quoted to me by the Minister of National Revenue is also contained in the Dominion Succession Duty Act, section 55 of which reads as follows:

(1) No person employed in the service of Her Majesty shall communicate or allow to be communicated to any person not legally entitled thereto, any information obtained under the provisions of this act, or allow any such person to inspect or have access to any written statement furnished under the provisions of this act.

(2) Any persons violating any of the provisions of this section are liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars.

I raise the question whether the Prime Minister did not violate that section of the act yesterday when he told us in considerable detail about two estates which he named as the Killam estate and the Sir James Dunn estate. He indicated the windfalls that had been obtained from those two estates. The Prime Minister then related those windfalls to the $100 million involved in this resolution, and went on to say that something over $50 million had been paid in from one of those estates.

I do not object to our getting this information. As a matter of fact I have been trying to get the income tax legislation amended so we could get this type of information. But on other occasions when we have asked for information in the hands of cabinet ministers, obtained by them under the provisions of the income tax legislation, we have been told every time that because of the secrecy provisions we could not be given the information. How does the Prime Minister explain the fact that yesterday in face of section 55 (1) and (2) of the Dominion Succession Duty Act he gave out information about the succession duties paid by these two estates?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. gentleman will find that technically I violated the statute, but I did not think I was doing that. I was simply repeating information which had been published pretty generally in the newspapers since the deaths of these two wealthy Canadians. I was not giving precise figures and I had not obtained precise figures. I was giving approximate figures which were known to the public and I am sure to every hon. member of the house. It was general knowledge that there had been unusually large payments in respect to succession duties.

Perhaps I should not have given any figure at all, perhaps I should have been content with saying that there were unusually large payments in respect of succession duties. I hope it will not cause inconvenience to anyone and I do not think it will. As the Leader of the Opposition said, it was not necessary to put any names on the record as everyone knew who those two wealthy Canadians were who had died in the period referred to.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, in the preliminary discussion of this resolution I was impressed with the emphasis the Prime Minister placed upon the importance of a teacher training program. Most of our teacher training programs are carried out in the smaller colleges, particularly the liberal arts colleges who concern themselves mainly with the humanities. I am wondering whether there is to be some specific regulation or some specific mention in the bill which will assure these smaller liberal arts colleges the consideration that is required under this new legislation.

The tendency is toward centralization, in education as in many other fields, and in every case these private endowments go to the larger centres of learning. Sir, the very nature of the work of the Canada Council, concerned as it will be with the humanities and the liberal arts and sciences, would suggest that in a special way the smaller institutions devoted to this kind of activity will be taken care of.

I wonder if the Prime Minister would care to comment on how this may be managed by way of regulation or legislation.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There will be no provision for the Governor in Council to make regulations concerning the way in which members of the council should discharge their responsibilities. I think the matter which the hon. gentleman has in mind will be taken care of because of its real merits in the light of the objectives which it will be the duty of the Canada Council to pursue.

Mr. Dinsdale: I take it from the Prime Minister's comment that the Canada Council committee, then, will have complete responsibility for allocating both these funds; it will be a matter entirely within their jurisdiction.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Within the limits fixed by the statute. The capital grants fund can be allocated in a province only in proportion to the population of that province, though the allocation to the ten provinces need not be made in the same year or years. This is intended to be a provision for ten years, and it will be provided in the bill that the sum available will be divided in proportion to the population of the province; but there will be no requirement that each province should get its share at the same time. There will also be a requirement that the scheme which will receive part of the allocation of the grant attributed to a province shall be one that will appear to the Canada Council as worthy of encouragement; and it will be only a matching grant, that is to say, an amount equal to what will be provided by the institution itself from some other source.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, I wish to comment briefly on the resolution before the discussion on this phase of the measure is terminated, and I want in particular to say what has been in my mind concerning the discussion which has taken place thus far, and whether or not the reservation which I made on January 18 will be continued.

I said at that time, when I spoke on this resolution, that I would have to reserve my judgment with regard to the Canada Council until I had given it much further consideration. In my mind particularly, at that time, was the question of priority; I wanted to find out whether or not the government intended, this session, to make any improvement in old age pension benefits and in certain other social security benefits. I said I thought that this question was largely a matter of priorities. Whether I would support the setting up of the Canada Council now would depend on whether the government was, first of all, prepared to take care of these other matters which I believe to be of more importance to the people of Canada—to far more people than could ever receive benefits by reason of the Canada Council.

I have not changed my mind, because I have been able to obtain from the government no satisfaction in answer to the questions I have asked and to questions asked by other hon. members. There has been no indication whatsoever that the government intends to proceed this session to grant increased benefits to the needy people of this country, and because of that fact I still feel, Mr. Chairman, that we should not proceed with the setting up of this Canada Council until such time as those other important priorities have been attended to.

I still oppose going ahead with this scheme, and putting up $100 million of the taxpayers' money for the purposes envisaged in this resolution. I cannot feel we are doing the right thing by the people of Canada by denying them an increase in old age pension benefits, and war veterans allowance benefits in view of the fact that these benefits are now so far below the level which we had hoped would be maintained over the years. Today, as the Prime Minister knows and as his colleagues must know, the $40 a month received by an old age pensioner will buy no more than about $20 worth of goods and services; a pensioner is no better off today, with his $40, than he was with the $20 he was receiving before we made the increase.

I said in this house on January 18, and I repeat it, that before we go into this area of "frills"—and that is what this is—a frill —we ought to be taking care of some of the things which are more important to our people. But I have failed, thus far, to get any satisfaction from the government, and since I have had no reassurance on this subject I must say, now, that I am strongly opposed to the passing of this resolution and of the bill which will be brought in and dependent upon it.

I want also to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have to maintain my opposition with regard to the need for this proposal. There is no need to have a Canada Council for the purpose of distributing university grants or giving aid to universities. We have been able, in the past, to extend help to the universities of this country without a Canada Council, and we can continue to do it on an extended scale. There is no necessity for having a Canada Council in order to distribute scholarships. That has been done quite well, in the past, with the machinery we had; the whole difficulty lay in the amount of money which was being distributed in the form of scholarships and aid to students in improving their educational standards. I maintain that all we need do today is use the agencies which now exist, and see to it that the provincial rights are recognized and maintained. We can do that by making available any moneys that we feel we have for this purpose to university organizations themselves, to the departments of education in the various provinces and, possibly, to other existing agencies. While I am in entire sympathy with the idea of extending grants to the universities for capital and other purposes, and making available scholarships on a wider scale than in the past to worthy students, I cannot feel it is necessary to set up the Canada Council in order to do this.

So far as culture is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I must also maintain the position I took when I spoke earlier on this matter. You just cannot buy culture; you cannot substitute a "canned" culture for the real stuff that develops spontaneously out of the experience of the people, their hopes and the memories that come from their own hearts; and if any attempt is made to impose a culture of an artificial, "canned" type on the Canadian people I will resist it with all my strength. I say at the same time that it is wise for us to try to encourage the development of every phase of culture that we possibly can but I still maintain that you cannot overlook the fact that before you start on such a project you have got to take care of the actual needs of the people. I maintain that the greatest priority in Canada today is to take care of those people who are forced to live below the borderline of poverty. That is the reason I am taking the position I take today.

I am not saying that at some time in the future, if the government has looked after these other matters and if we have the money to spend, whether it be from windfalls or any other source, we would oppose the establishment of a Canada Council provided we knew fully what its purposes were and provided we knew that its objectives were sound and good. I am not saying that at all. But let the government first give us these other assurances and then we may agree with their desire to set up a council.

I should like to add a word in passing about one phase which I think was most unfortunate and about which I do not think the Prime Minister feels too happy having regard to the interpretation that the newspapers have put on it. I hold in my hand today's Montreal Gazette, and on the front page there is this heading: "P.M. Staggers Commons—Dunn, Killam Estates Finance Culture." I did not place that interpretation on what he said but I do think it was unfortunate it was mentioned and I am wondering how many Liberals are going to go throughout the country in the election campaign and say to the people: "Now, do not worry about the Canada Council and the $100 million it is going to cost because the money is not coming out of taxation. Actually what has happened is that two great big estates have supplied the $100 million and it will not come out of the taxpayers at all." That is utter foolishness and if any of that sort of thing is done, believe me it is going to be exposed with all of the energy that we can command. I am just as sure as I stand here that that will be done in the campaign by some campaigners. I am not saying it will be done by the Prime Minister. I am not accusing him at all.

But let me point out this important thing. I think it is a dangerous precedent at any time to say that you have received a windfall from the estates of certain men who have died and therefore you feel that you have enough money to be able to do something in which these people were interested. They said they were interested in making bequests to certain things such as the development of culure in Canada and because they said so you say that you are sort of influenced to go ahead now that you have their money.

There is no more justification for taking that position than there would be if I were to direct that a thousand dollars which I may pay in income tax this year should be earmarked for the development of an athletic council in Canada to encourage participation in athletics. There is no more justification in the one case than in the other. I do not feel I have any right whatsoever to direct the government how it shall spend the taxes it takes from me except through consideration of the general estimates in the house. I do have that right but with respect to directing that a part of what I contribute in the form of taxation shall be used for this or that purpose I say that should not have any relation whatsoever to anything the government has in its mind as a desirable thing to do.

I wanted to mention that because in the forthcoming election campaign I do not want to hear any Liberals going across the country and saying to the people: "Do not worry about this at all because you do not have to pay for it. The money is coming out of Killam and Sir James Dunn, who are dead." I am issuing a warning because I know what has happened in campaigns before. I have been through them and that sort of thing happens all too frequently.

I want to make it abundantly clear that we oppose the passing of the resolution. If there is some satisfactory explanation of what the government is going to do with regard to social security measures when the bill is before us, we may change our minds at that time.

Let me utter one other word of warning. I want to repeat what I said before. The government should be mighty careful about who constitute the personnel of the Canada Council and I shall not rest easy until I know who they are.

Mr. Hodgson: There will be some Grits.

Mr. Follwell: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. When the Canada Council is set up will it be on the same basis with respect to receiving gifts as our charitable organizations? If an amount is given as a gift to the Canada Council or is left by way of a bequest in a will, will that amount be treated in the same way as charitable gifts are treated at the present time?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The hon. gentleman will find when the bill is introduced that there is a clause making that provision.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, I shall only be a minute. It seemed to me that the hon. member for Peace River covered everything except naming the Council the Killam-Dunn succession duty arts council. I do not think we should censure the Prime Minister for informing us of the method to be used in setting up the council. He was very forthright in telling us how the money is to be obtained. I am a little surprised at the method to be used because I inquired of him yesterday whether this might create a precedent. He indicates that he does not think so but I am wondering what method will be used in the future to take care of the deficits which I am sure will arise from time to time. Are we going to finance the council by waiting for more windfalls, if you want to use that expression, and making additions to capital account or will it be the government's intention to vote the sums required from time to time to make up deficits in the interest account?

It seems to me that is a fairly important question because as the matter stands now and having in mind the amount of money involved there may be many millions of people who have some claim on the bounty here with respect to the funds that are being used. They may be people who can say very rightly that they are not going to obtain any particular direct benefit although it may be said that the country generally is farther ahead. I think that those people would expect that all that would be necessary would be a grant on an annual or some other type of basis to meet immediate needs. They can honestly say that the money in this case has come from the effort of many people possibly over several generations and why is it necessary that the whole endowment should be paid out of the funds of the 1957 fiscal year?

I therefore ask the Prime Minister if he has considered the possibility of financing the council on a year to year basis or some basis of that kind and whether he sees it as always being necessary to contribute capital amounts from which interest will be drawn to make up any deficit? If that should be the case, it seems to me that each year the taxpayer is contributing a lump sum which will be used over many years. As the hon. member for Peace River has said, there are people who will question the fact that, while they are on a fixed income at the moment such as old age pensions, veterans allowances and blind pensions, this amount should be set aside all in one year.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Last night I had the privilege of addressing a gathering in Ottawa in company with three of my colleagues from this house, one from each of the other parties. On that occasion the representative of the Social Credit party presented to the audience the principles upon which his party is founded. They were all extremely high minded aspirations towards civic virtue, and I felt impelled at the end of them to remark that about all I had been able to gather of the policies of Social Credit was that they were "agin sin". This afternoon, though, I find I have to amend that because I have read the speech delivered last night by the hon. member for Macleod and listened to the leader of that group this afternoon, and I discover they are "agin culture", and I suspect for the same reason, that both sin and culture have the habit of expanding human experience to a degree that would be alarming to those who find their best fishing in the muddy waters of ignorance.

I was very interested also this afternoon in the remarks of the leader of the Social Credit group who based their objection to the Canada Council on the ground that the government has not seen fit to raise old age pensions. I am at one with them in deploring the fact the government has not seen fit to reveal its plans, if it has any, in this regard. But I would be much more impressed with the sincerity of my Social Credit colleagues if I had heard them, on any occasion, voicing the objections that have come from this group to the manner in which oil companies and oil pipeline companies mulct the general public of this country of the tribute they draw from their operations. There has been not a word from these people. The oil pipeline companies can work little stock market rackets robbing the general public and reducing the possible revenues that might be devoted to the raising of old age pensions, but not a word comes from our Social Credit friends. I suspect, Mr. Chairman, that it is a genuine revulsion against thought and culture that really moves them in this instance, and they have been able to find what they think is going to be a very useful political peg upon which to hang that genuine revulsion against knowledge and culture.

I noted in reading over the report from the United Kingdom the actions that our friends in Britain have taken with regard to an activity similar to that projected for the Canada Council.

An hon. Member: In 1946?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Yes, and even earlier than that. Even during the war the people of Britain decided that the promotion of cultural activities in that country was a fundamental need to maintain and sustain the morale of the people. They were not afraid to go through with it. They, of course, do not suffer from having a Social Credit party in their parliament. Last year, the people of Great Britain, through the parliament of Great Britain, devoted £885,000 to operations of the same type as those projected for the Canada Council. I have attempted to do some rough arithmetic with regard to what our contribution annually will work out to in sterling, and I suggest it is somewhere in the neighbourhood of about £700,000. They have, in effect, devoted 25 per cent more to this project in Great Britain than we are proposing in Canada.

Mr. Hahn: Work it out on a per capita basis.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Oh yes, we will work it out on a per capita basis if you wish, although that will tell you nothing. What we can tell you is that hard pressed people such as the people of Britain, who have suffered in a way that no other people have suffered—

Mr. Hahn: Well, they are centuries old.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Yes, they are centuries old, but they have suffered bitter losses in two major wars and a major depression, yet they are prepared to go ahead with this project on a more generous scale than we are. The reason, Mr. Chairman, I suggest is that they have a better concept of the purpose of human life than is prevalent on the North American continent.

I have noted some of the comments in this house with regard to what is called culture. I have noticed, for instance, comments from our Social Credit friends that we should not expect the state to endow these things. I recall that the hon. member for Peace River, on January 18, cited as an example of the fine, sturdy, individual enterprise that leads to success in the arts, the career of Mr. Raymond Massey. He suggested that Mr. Massey, this outstanding Canadian actor, had reached that point without having to be subsidized. I wonder what the prairie wheat farmers, who subsidized Mr. Raymond Massey in his climb to the top of the theatrical ladder, would say to that? What nonsense! Mr. Massey was subsidized, and subsidized from the pockets of the Canadian people, in a manner in which apparently some members of this house wish to avoid in the future.

We hear some rather pathetic statements in this chamber, and they do not all come from the Social Credit party. There was some criticism the other day of a certain C.B.C. program. I was rather interested in that criticism, interested in that fine outburst of hairy-chestedness in opposing a certain program of ballet. I did not see it myself. Right at the start I shall say I think I would have found 90 minutes of "Swan Lake" on T.V. a little hard to take. In the first place, I doubt whether T.V. is a suitable medium for ballet. In the second place, I am not particularly fond of the "Swan Lake" ballet. What struck me as pathetic was that this gentleman was opposing it on the assumption that he did not like ballet. The pathetic part of it is that he did not know whether or not he liked ballet because all he had seen was this particular example of a particular style of classical ballet.

If he were in the house this afternoon, I would suggest to him that there are examples of ballet that I believe would appeal equally to his earthy temperament as they do to mine. For instance, if he had been looking at Offenbach's "Gaiete Parisienne", he would have regretted very much if, for the gracefully waving legs of the ladies in the can can, there had suddenly been substituted the squirmings and writhings of the wrestlers about whom he was so anxious. He might even have gained the considerable pleasure from viewing Agnes de Mille's "Rodeo", where the ballet dancers use a western motif and exhibit a skill and physical control that is far beyond the capacities of any of those overweight phonies who writhe and groan on the mats. As I say, I think it is pathetic that people reject a human experience from ignorance.

I believe the government is to be commended that they are taking one very slight step towards broadening the horizons of the Canadian people. I was rather struck with the suggestion of the leader of the Social Credit party that only a few people are going to benefit from the Canada Council. If I thought that for one minute, I would vote against it. The whole purpose of it is to create a climate of thought and knowledge in Canada that will enrich the lives of the people of Canada.

Surely that is the purpose of it, and surely that is a worthy purpose. My great regret is that we are devoting such a small sum of money in comparison with the sums we devote to other aspects of our society.

I want to conclude, Mr. Chairman, by suggesting that it is shameful hypocrisy to pretend that there is a valid reason for voting against this measure because the government has not as yet increased old age pensions, family allowances or any of the other social services which they ought to be increasing and which they would be well able to increase if they were following fiscal policies, which would be opposed by our friends of the Social Credit party, but fiscal policies nevertheless that would be designed to bring to the public treasury a very much larger share of the wealth produced by the people of this country.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, when the Prime Minister introduced the resolution on January 18 he had this to say, as reported at page 397 of Hansard:

> We shall also be asking parliament to provide from the consolidated revenue sum a further sum of $50 million to be known as "the university capital grants fund" to be distributed by the council as a contribution toward the financing of specific building projects of which it may approve in the furthering of its general objectives—

The general objectives, of course, Mr. Chairman, are the furthering of the arts, the social sciences and the humanities. I continue with the quotation:

> —to the extent of not more than 50 per cent in any one case, the contributions to be expended over a period of years—not necessarily in equal instalments of an equal fraction each year but by apportionment generally, to the institutions of the various provinces in proportion to their population.

A little farther down on the same page the Prime Minister said:

> The federal government does not feel that it should be the sole patron of the arts, the humanities and the social sciences or the only source of capital for the universities.

From listening to the Prime Minister speak I got the definite impression that those moneys were to be apportioned entirely for the furthering of studies in the arts, the humanities and the social sciences, but to make absolutely sure that was so I asked the Prime Minister a question the following Monday. At page 436 of Hansard I asked him the following question:

> Mr. Hees: I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to assist the universities in providing the greatly enlarged training facilities that will be needed to train the greatly increased numbers of scientists, engineers, doctors and dentists, of which this country is so critically short today, so that we may avoid a continuance of that shortage?

It was a perfectly honest, normal question, asking for information regarding the spending of this money. The Prime Minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, the government's intentions so far as they have been crystalized in decisions have already been announced to the house, and that procedure will be followed when other decisions are reached.

That is no answer at all. I continued:

> Mr. Hees: Was not the government's decision in this regard announced on Friday by the Prime Minister when he announced there would be no assistance given to the universities except to provide extra training facilities for the arts and humanities?
> Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): If my hon. friend is of the opinion that he was given on Friday the answer to the question put this morning, I cannot see why he repeats it.

I cannot see why he refused to answer my question. I was still after information, and I said:

> In reply to the Prime Minister's answer may I say this. It was my impression that he said that no extra facilities would be provided except for the humanities. I am trying to clear up the question as to the sciences and engineering.
> Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I hope my hon. friend will not lose too much sleep over his wrong impression.

In other words the impression that money would not be provided for the training of people in engineering, the sciences, medicine and dentistry was completely wrong, according to the Prime Minister on that day. Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, in answer to a similar question, the Prime Minister had this to say, as reported at page 984 of Hansard:

> Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, this resolution is not intended to provide for the establishment of increased facilities for a greatly increased number of students in engineering, medicine, dentistry and sciences.

In other words, a week ago Monday the Prime Minister in answer to a perfectly simple question asking for information, told me that I was completely wrong in assuming that no money would be made available for training in the sciences, engineering, dentistry and medicine. A week later, he told me exactly the reverse. The reason I bring this up, Mr. Chairman, is that this is one more example, as I see it, of what appears to be a deliberate attempt by a senior minister to mislead the house. One day he told me one thing, and the next day he told me I was foolish for having such an idea in my head.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: Thank heavens the seals at last came alive. Then a week later, when he was explaining the resolution, he said that what I had assumed, and what he said I was completely wrong about, was correct. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would be good enough to explain why he gave me a completely misleading answer one day, and a week later said completely the opposite?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I gave no misleading answer to the hon. gentleman here. On Friday, January 18, we were discussing this resolution. It is not the practice on the orders of the day and, in my opinion, should not be the practice, to refer to debates in process on a day when that debate is not taking place.

Mr. Hees: Does the Prime Minister not believe that a member has the right to rise in his place before the orders of the day are called and ask the Prime Minister, or any other minister, a question to clarify something which appeared to him reasonably clear, but on which he wanted to get specific information, on a most important point? Does the Prime Minister not think that a member has the right to rise and ask for clarification of an answer?

The Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member is forgetting the fact that we are dealing with one specific resolution at this time. We are not dealing with questions asked or answers given on the orders of the day. If the hon. member would direct his discussion, or his questions, to the exact resolution under discussion it would be within our rules.

We must remember that in committee we are governed by strict relevancy to the item under consideration, and I do ask the cooperation of the hon. member in directing his questions to this resolution which, after all though it is somewhat broad in scope, is directed to certain purposes to which we should direct our attention.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, my point is, did or did not the Prime Minister make two directly contradictory statements about the matter that is immediately under discussion in this committee? I claim he did.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): My answer is that I claim just as vigorously as the hon. gentleman claims the opposite that I did not make two different statements. When I was discussing this resolution I was discussing its effect. The hon. gentleman was putting his question in general terms as to whether or not there would be anything done in respect of something that was not included in this resolution; and something is being done, and it will continue to be done, for our scientific investigation and aid to scientific investigation, for years. The national research council has been making increasingly large contributions and will continue to do so; but the hon. gentleman is not going to have me give answers to questions put in broad terms which will enable him then to say that I have been deliberately misleading the house.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I was not referring in my question to what the research council is doing. I specifically said in my question, is there going to be any assistance given to the council with respect to specific studies, and the Prime Minister said I was completely wrong in assuming that it would not. Then a week later he said exactly that. These are two completely contradictory statements.

Mr. Dickey: Read it again.

Mr. Hansell: I have one question I should like to ask the Prime Minister, because it is one point in which I am particularly interested and particularly cautious about. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the intention of the Canada Council will be to publish literature and have the literature distributed to educational institutions such as public schools, high schools, universities or any other interested groups of an educational character?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I cannot say what might be done. I had not envisaged the Canada Council becoming a publishing house for desirable publications that might be distributed to schools. I would not be prepared to say that under the terms of the statute they would be precluded from doing something of that kind. The terms of the statute do not expressly provide that that may be done and I would be surprised if the council undertook to enter that field, though there might be some grants made to a university that had a university press, for example, to provide for the publication of something that would be looked upon as a matter of real value in promoting the study and enjoyment of the humanities, the social sciences or the arts. There was no attempt made to pinpoint everything that might be undertaken by the Canada Council in pursuit of the general objectives set out in the bill.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I think the Prime Minister intended to answer one question I asked him but was perhaps talked out of it. In connection with the possibility that deficits may arise in the future and more money be required, does the Prime Minister envisage adding to the fund as it is set out here or does he envisage only an annual grant?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, Mr. Chairman. It was my view that if the council were provided with an endowment that would produce a specific sum that would be known to the council, it would have no excuse for incurring deficits and then coming and asking parliament to take care of those deficits. That was one of the advantages some of my colleagues in discussions with me saw in the proposed recommendation to make this an endowment. Otherwise it was feared that the council might become perhaps more generous-minded than it would suit the government to provide for in annual recommendations of votes to the council. We felt they should take the responsibility of administering this fund and disposing of it, and disposing also of any other funds they may have placed under their control for those purposes.

I would be much disappointed if they incurred deficits and then came back to us and said, "We felt this was such a good thing that we had to do it, and you should bail us out of the commitments we have made in this regard." I would hope the council would carry on in such a way that it would not have parliament faced with the fait accompli of commitments or debts having been incurred without provision for taking care of them having been made in advance.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I can understand from that explanation why there is nothing in the Prime Minister's mind covering future situations of that kind. I might ask him, then, if he has given any more thought to what he said yesterday about a method of scrutiny to ensure that such a situation does not arise. I think he said there was some method which would assure that we would be apprised of these expenditures and informed how the council was progressing from time to time.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I am sure there are several ways by which hon. members of the house would find it possible to give full expression to their views about the proper administration of these funds. One method which would be strictly within the rules would be for any hon. member to put a notice of motion on the order paper that the reports of the council and the Auditor

General be referred to such and such a committee. Every time a motion is made to go into supply there would be, of course, an opportunity for discussing as a grievance—if an hon. member felt he had a grievance—the manner in which the council was discharging its responsibilities. There would be an opportunity for expressing commendation of the success being achieved by the council or in the alternative of expressing regret at their not having been able to make more progress in the promotion of these worthy objectives in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and the same would be possible in the budget debate. The Minister of Finance could be reproached for not having made a recommendation to parliament to increase the endowment or to increase the funds at the disposal of the council.

If in order to have the kind of discussion here that would maintain the interest of the public in the administration of the affairs of the Canada Council it proved necessary to have some kind of token item in the estimates, I am sure that could be arranged. I am sure there will be general agreement among all hon. members that it will be in the interests of the council and of the proper discharge of its responsibilities to have an opportunity for a discussion in the house as to what is being done and what should have been done and has not been done.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, I have a question I would like to ask the Prime Minister in this connection, but before I do so I would like to comment on his remarks. One of the methods he suggested as an opportunity for the house to follow the activities of the Canada Council was for someone to put on the order paper a motion that the matter be referred to a special committee of the house for discussion. I want to say that I hope this is done; and though it is perhaps unlikely that the Prime Minister will still be here at that time, I would hope if he is that we would have a little better luck in this regard than we have had with some of our other demands to have items referred to committees.

I might mention the defence estimates as an example. For about three or four years, ever since the estimates committee was set up, we have asked to have the estimates of the Department of National Defence referred to that committee for consideration, but without success. One needs only to go back over Hansard to find innumerable instances when those of us on this side of the house have pressed for matters to be referred to a committee and have been flatly refused by the same right hon. gentleman who now stands there and says, "Well, we can always refer this to a committee if you ask for it."

Having made that observation on the Prime Minister's remarks, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if he could give the committee some idea as to the type of procedure that is envisaged for the council in dealing with this endowment in order to obtain the necessary interest which I understand is to form the basis of the grants.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, the intention is to choose competent, experienced investment businessmen to form part of the investment committee, with as members ex-officio the chairman of the council and one other member appointed by the council. It is not intended to restrict them to trustee investments but to leave to them the responsibility of selecting the kind of investments they would feel were safe and were sufficiently remunerative. It might very well happen that there would also be investments which would increase in capital value because of the present rapid development taking place in Canadian enterprise.

Mr. Michener: Would the Prime Minister consider it appropriate if the council decided to invest their entire funds in Canadian government bonds?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): If the experienced investment men came to the conclusion that the best possible investment was in government of Canada bonds I would be quite surprised, because I know of many good investments which may not have the immediate liquidity of Canadian government bonds but which have provided not only a good income but a substantial enhancement in capital value. There was the feeling that an investment committee properly constituted might be able to make the kind of investments which would have the required degree of safety and would provide a reasonably good income, but which also would have prospects of growing up with the country.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, does not the Prime Minister see a certain inherent danger in such a procedure? You are taking $50 million of public funds and turning them over to a committee which no matter how good its judgment—let us assume for a moment that its judgment may be excellent—may very well find itself, as many other groups did in 1929 and subsequently, caught in circumstances completely beyond its control with the result that a large portion of its capital may be completely wiped out. At the same time, in the expectation that they will have an assured revenue over a period of years, they may have committed themselves to a continuing program of expenditure for scholarships and other things, a program which will have hundreds or perhaps thousands of young people depending on revenue from this committee.

If there is an unfortunate turn of events—we do not need to go back to 1929; we can come forward to 1939, when with the advent of war the bottom was kicked out of the stock market for a while; we can come ahead to the present time when even government bonds have shown some of the widest fluctuations in all history—unfortunate results may follow. Does the Prime Minister not feel that there is great danger in establishing what appears to be a continuing program of grants and donations for cultural activities based upon revenues from sources which are not assured?

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question which perhaps he could answer at the same time. I have been very interested indeed in the suggestion I gathered from the Prime Minister, that there is to be wide-open power of investment here. The Prime Minister referred to stocks growing up with the country and so on. I have been asking myself why this group should have this wide-open power as compared with, let us say, insurance companies.

If I followed the Prime Minister correctly, it is expected that they are to make investments very different from, let us say, what the government would make itself if it had money to invest. My question is, why should this wide-open power be given? It does introduce an element of adventure into the situation which perhaps is desirable, but otherwise it is hard for me to understand why this group which is not supposed to be essentially an investment group should be loaded with the responsibility of investing $100 million.

It has been suggested already that they might have to come back and say they had intended to grow up with the country but unfortunately one or two bad stocks had showed a considerable loss. If that happened I take it that we could not let the Canada Council down, and what would happen is that the council would have to come and confess its mistake and then ask the government to give it the money for what was needed. I suppose this is something which could more properly be dealt with when we have the bill before us and know its terms.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I am sure the members of the council will have in mind all the considerations which have been mentioned by hon. gentlemen. I have not the trepidation indicated by the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace and the hon. member for Greenwood about the results. They are not going to be restricted to making investments of the character to which insurance companies and other trust institutions are confined. The council will have the assistance of this investment group but it will not be obliged to make all the investments recommended by the investment committee.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask if they are to have wide-open powers?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): They are to have wide-open powers, but that will not prevent them from being as cautious as their nature and temperament would be apt to make them. It was felt that the boards of governors of the universities which have the same wide-open powers, except where they are confined by stipulations by donors, have not done a bad job throughout the years for the institutions which they were operating. I am confident that there can be investments made other than those listed in the restrictive lists available to trust companies under the act applying to them.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, is the Prime Minister in position to assure the committee that the operation of this fund will be a matter of public record and that the house will be supplied with information when the annual report is tabled as to the securities purchased and other operations carried on during the year?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There is a provision requiring them to make a report on their operations during the year.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): That is not quite what I had in mind, a report on their operations. Crown corporations make reports on their operations during the year and on many occasions it has proved exceedingly difficult to obtain even what we considered reasonable details going beyond the general picture of the operations. My specific question was this; whether the investment operations of the Canada Council —the investment of this $50 million fund, and the purchases and sales made—would be a matter of public record so members of this house may be informed of the facts in that connection.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The hon. gentleman will find in the bill a clause that we consider is sufficient. If he does not consider it sufficient, there will be an appropriate occasion for discussing it further. A report of all the proceedings of the council under this act will be required.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Knowles: Since some members are saying "on division", shall we have a standing vote?

Resolution agreed to: Yeas, 101; nays, 5.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 47, for the establishment of a Canada Council for the encouragement of the arts, humanities and social sciences.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND EXPIRY DATE

The house resumed, from Friday, February 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) for the second reading of Bill No. 9, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I thank the house for the kindness they showed me last Friday evening when they allowed me to call it six o'clock.

I rise in this debate at this time because of certain statements made by farm union organizations, and statements carried in the press such as the following: "A drop of 30 to 33 per cent in local poultry prices has occurred twice during the 1956 period as a result of eggs imported from the prairies or other areas into British Columbia". One might ask, what has that to do with the wheat board? The wheat board, Mr. Speaker, regulates the sale of feed grain outside the provinces and, as I understand it, the very fact that the wheat board has been set up by parliament and has regulatory power with regard to the selling of this grain does have a material effect on the cost of production of poultry, livestock, dairy and other farm products in British Columbia.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the main purpose behind this bill is to extend the life of the present wheat board act for another five years. I am quite satisfied, from present indications, that the hon. members of this house will support this particular bill.

We in British Columbia, particularly, realize the value of orderly marketing; we have other marketing boards in my province, and for a long time we have recognized the value not only of the wheat board but of other marketing agencies. However, I wonder whether the minister would be in a position later to advise the house as to the effect the wheat board, as now constituted, exerts upon activities which are dependent upon the grain that goes through the hands of the board. I am talking of grain which goes into areas such as Ontario or British Columbia.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that before one decides to continue an act of this kind—an act which has been in operation now for a good number of years, working efficiently for at least one part of the country—we should be in a position to know exactly how it is operating in so far as the rest of the country is concerned. We should know what it does in the way of injuring, on the one hand, or of increasing and enhancing, on the other hand, productivity in other areas of the country. The prairie region is not the only one that is affected by this bill or by the implications of the act as it has been operated.

As I understand it, the operations of the act apply more directly to the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Grain farmers in those areas—and the minister may correct me later if I am wrong—are permitted to sell grain to other farmers within their own particular region without participation by the wheat board, but when other producers in other provinces require grain it would normally come through the wheat board under the terms of the act. They are permitted to sell grain for feed freely as long as it does not leave the province. However, when the grain leaves the province it is apparently a completely different matter.

Now, I ask the Minister of Finance, who took the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture through the house recently, a question with respect to that. I was interested in discovering whether the wheat board act applied in the case of grain grown in the Dawson Creek area, which I believe comes under wheat board regulations, and is hauled by rail by way of Edmonton to Vancouver. The minister was not sure whether or not that wheat would be subject to the wheat board regulations. He indicated at that time that he felt it would not be, because the grain is actually grown in the same province and is taken from the Dawson Creek area to Vancouver. If such is the case I would be pleased to hear the minister either substantiate or refute that statement because the Minister of Finance said he was not absolutely sure.

Common sense tells me that it would be perfectly legitimate and right to do so. The purpose in asking the question was to discover whether such grain carried from the Dawson Creek area through the province of Alberta and then into British Columbia would be eligible for the freight rate subsidy. Personally I see very little difference between paying the subsidy on such feed grain carried by rail and letting a trucker carry it from Dawson Creek to Vancouver and paying him a subsidy for doing so, thus reducing the cost of feed grain to the people of the lower mainland of British Columbia. That is certainly one question that causes us a great deal of concern.

During the course of the present session of parliament the procedure followed on the prairies for some time, whereby farmers within one province will sell feed grain to feed lots, poultry producers, dairy producers or neighbouring farmers at $18 to $20 a ton, has been drawn to the attention of the government. We on the lower mainland of the province of British Columbia have to pay $70 to $75 a ton for the same grain, and in some instances it is not nearly as good in quality.

I am particularly interested, as are the people of the lower mainland of British Columbia, in the effect of this policy. Here we have the development of poultry and dairy production on the prairies because the feed lot operators find they can get grain at a much lower price than we can in the lower mainland of British Columbia. The result has been that many of our producers have gone out of business. What effect does the operation of this act have on the farmers in the lower reaches of British Columbia?

The minister may dispute what I say about our farmers going out of business, but let me put the matter this way. In the last five years there has been a 20 per cent increase in the population of British Columbia, and under normal circumstances when the population increases industry within the area pretty well keeps pace. We did have a poultry industry and we still have a portion of it left. We did have a dairy industry and we still have a fairly good dairy industry. As far as hogs are concerned, I do not think we have a hog industry any more. Nevertheless, with the increase in our population we should have increased consumption of feed grains in the province.

To be more specific, I received a report from the feeds administration of the Department of Agriculture dated December 31, 1956. On pages 11 to 16 of that report there is a very clear indication of the situation with respect to the consumption of primary products in the province. For instance, in 1941—I realize I am going quite far back to show the picture—we purchased 9,519 tons of wheat, and from then on there was a substantial increase until the year 1947. In that year we purchased 131,964 tons of feed wheat. But each year since then there has been a progressive decrease in the amount of wheat purchased for feed purposes, until in 1956 we purchased only 65,830 tons of feed wheat. In other words we purchased 131,964 tons in 1947, while we purchased only 65,830 tons in 1956.

The same thing is true of oats and barley. Taking the over-all totals, in 1941 we purchased 21,000 tons of grain and that figure rose to a total of better than 329,000 in 1947. Then it dropped to 162,381 tons in 1956, about half of what we purchased in 1947. I am sure it is very obvious that either one of two reasons is responsible for our using less feed grain in British Columbia. Either we are growing more in the lower mainland of British Columbia or in the Okanagan, or we have cut down on the production of dairy, poultry and other animals which consume this type of feed.

If the minister were to discuss this question with the Minister of Agriculture I am sure he would discover that what I have said is true, that since 1951 our population has increased by 20 per cent; yet over the past 10 years our purchases of grain to feed our poultry and livestock have fallen to less than half what they were. In my opinion we have a very difficult position, in that within the prairie provinces there is a marketing board which promotes the sale of feed grain to neighbouring farmers, poultry producers and others, with the result that these people have gone into poultry and livestock businesses in large measure.

I pose this question. What will be the effect on the economy of the country if the prairie grain producer finds himself in the position in which the Minister of Agriculture indicated he may possibly find himself in the very near future? You may ask me what statement I am referring to.

The statement was to the effect that all the prairie farmer needs is a year or two of bad or poor crops and he will not have any wheat to sell. As I see it, if the prairie farmer finds himself with a short crop he is going to have ready cash, cash which he would normally get by selling his wheat at these fire-sale prices of $18 to $20 a ton. If he has ready cash he is not going to sell that grain to his neighbouring farmer, the poultry producer or the feed lot in his area for $18 to $20 a ton; he is going to want $70 to $75 a ton.

In the meantime we in British Columbia have got rid of our record of performance chickens; we have got rid of our purebred stock, and since you cannot grow breeding stock overnight we are not going to have a poultry industry, a dairy or a cattle industry in British Columbia. If we do have an industry it will be such a small one it will be unable to look after the needs of the area. As I see it then, Mr. Speaker, we in British Columbia find ourselves in the unfortunate position of looking to the future with declining poultry, dairy and cattle industries because of the sale of these cheap grains between wheat farmers and livestock and poultry producers on the prairies. When that time arrives the wheat farmer who did require this cash, about which we hear so often in this house, is going to be in the position of being able to sell his wheat to the wheat board. Then the poultry producer on the prairies will be out of business, as will the cattle producer.

This can mean only one thing, Mr. Speaker. Before this act is extended for an indefinite stage—certainly it will pass this house, because we are all in support of it—the Minister of Trade and Commerce should set up a fact-finding board to discover what effect it is going to have on the economy of the country as a whole. As I see it today we have a form of interprovincial dumping. It is not dumping in the true sense of goods being dumped from one country into another, but rather from a neighbouring province such as Alberta into British Columbia or possibly from Manitoba into Ontario. I am satisfied that the minister should have an examination made of this whole matter in the near future.

Now, once costs to the prairie farmer producing cattle and livestock go up to the degree I spoke of earlier, then he is going out of the poultry and livestock business. When he has ready cash he will do as he always has; he will become a grain farmer again. When he is in that position he is going to have to charge exactly the same price to the British Columbia producer. Then these poultry or livestock products, whatever they may be, will be shipped from the prairie provinces across the mountains, and we in British Columbia will have to pay the additional cost of refrigeration, the higher freight for carrying this type of product, and the handling charges which are considerably more than the handling charges for grain.

I indicated earlier that I believe in orderly marketing. I believe in this wheat board act. However, the British Columbia producer, who believes also in orderly marketing, is asking this question. Why is it not possible for the British Columbia poultry or livestock producer to get from his prairie counterpart, from the grain producers on the prairies, grain at the same price the prairie wheat farmer charges his neighbour, especially when these grains are going to be fed to animals? The fact is that it would be quite simple to give the primary producer in British Columbia or in Ontario a book the same as the grain farmer on the prairies has. It would be very easy to establish what he was doing with that grain. The act could provide for heavy penalties for misuse of the grain. It would not have to be sold by one producer to another, but it would make it possible for primary producers to get wheat and would give agriculture as a whole a lift, not only on the prairies but also in my own region.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would request—and I am quite sincere in this—that the minister discuss this matter with the government. Then the government could take the initiative and immediately set up a fact-finding board to determine:

(a) The immediate effect on the poultry, dairy and livestock industries in British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces, depending upon feed grains from those areas subject to the continuation of the wheat board act;

(b) The long-term effect of continuation of this act in these same areas.

Further, I would request that the government take the initiative in immediately setting up this fact-finding board to determine the effect of a short-term or long-term continuation of the act in both heavy and light crop years on the prairies, and upon consumer prices in those provinces not directly affected by the wheat board legislation, that is provinces such as British Columbia or Ontario.

Finally, I would ask that the fact-finding board bring in a report to parliament at the earliest possible time with such recommendations as they might make with respect to modifications to the act as a result of their findings. I contend most seriously that the bread basket of Canada should be the boon and not the bane of the agriculture industries which are dependent upon it.

Mr. Rene N. Jutras (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a few minutes to discuss this bill which is now before the house, a bill which appears periodically to renew the compulsory powers of the Canadian wheat board. Before commencing my remarks I should like to say I am sorry the Leader of the Opposition is not in his seat. This is not a criticism, because I fully appreciate the tremendous task that lies ahead of him and I appreciate that he must have great demands on his time. However, this is the first opportunity I have had of addressing the house since he assumed the leadership of his party and became leader of the official opposition in this house.

I did want to say to him that I was very pleased when he took over the leadership of the party, and I wish him a long stay in opposition. As a matter of fact I intend to deal this afternoon mostly with the remarks he made in opening this discussion, and I shall make my contribution toward keeping him in opposition as long as I can.

In opening the discussion on this bill the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave a full review of the history and the early development of the Canadian wheat board. It is a good thing to have this information placed on the records of this house from time to time, because nobody can actually appreciate or fully understand the present set-up of the wheat board without knowing the early beginnings and the various stages of development through which it went.

After the Minister of Trade and Commerce was through the Leader of the Opposition thought he would add to what had been said, and he proceeded to put a new interpretation —an interpretation which I thought was fantastic—on what actually happened in 1935 when the Canadian Wheat Board Act was enacted. In other words, he attempted to put the blame for the failure of the Tories in 1935 on the Liberal opposition of the day. I am fully aware that the Liberals in 1935 were a very formidable opposition. As a matter of fact they chased the government out of office and practically ran them out of the country; certainly they chased them out of the west, and they have never recovered since. But to suggest that the late Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, in the last few days of the session, held, as the Leader of the Opposition said, some discussions with the opposition as to what type of legislation he would bring in just before the election is to my mind rather fantastic, because actually that is not exactly what happened.

The whole record of what took place in 1935 is available for anybody to see. The question that arises is why would the Conservative government actually enact any legislation at all in 1935 if they did not believe in it? The truth of the matter is that in 1935 the Tories had no sympathy with the compulsory board in the first place, and they tried, apparently as they are trying now, to put the blame for their failure on the opposition. The fact of the matter is that the legislation was referred to a select committee of the house, and it was the government itself that demanded its own bill in the committee before it was reported back. Therefore, actually the Liberal opposition never had a chance to vote against the bill in the first place.

The opposition in 1935 were too smart to pull any chestnuts out of the fire for their Tory opponents. They left in the bill a great many sections that would have made the Canadian wheat board a complete monopoly as far as the movement and transportation of grain was concerned. I believe the sections of the act were sections 9, 10, 11 and 16. These sections would have made a completely compulsory board, but when the Conservative government proclaimed the act they very carefully left out all those sections and they were never proclaimed by the government. Actually they could not have been very determined to have a compulsory board in those days.

This has been the official policy of the Conservative party from 1935 right up to the present day, as far as I know. The last time this matter was fully debated at a Conservative convention was in 1948. I think a great many people in this country remember what happened at the 1948 convention. That was when the Free Press referred to this particular phase of the convention as the "double-talk division". There was quite a row; the funny cat of the wheat board was let out of the bag and the famous resolution of the 1948 convention ended up in this way:

"We favour a return to the wheat board; that the wheat board of 1935 be revived in respect to those farmers who wish to sell their wheat to the wheat board"; but they add these words: "by any other means".

And then they had a long discussion as to whether it should be "any other means, alternative market or straight open market"; but that was the official Conservative policy up until the last convention. Of course I do not claim to know what took place there, but I have not seen or heard of any new resolution to take precedence over the last one.

In 1943 and 1949 the previous leader, Hon. George Drew, took the exact position that the Conservatives took in 1935. I have here just for the record a report of the speech of the then leader of the opposition in 1949, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen. He spoke at Melfort, Saskatchewan, on May 25, 1949, and I quote:

Outlining his party's agricultural policy at a Victoria day rally in this prairie town, Mr. Drew said the Progressive Conservatives believed the Candian wheat board, now the sole marketing agency for wheat, should revert to the 1935 status.

As I say, so far as I know, this has been pretty well the official policy of the Conservative party all the way down from 1935 to this day. I do not know whether any change was made at the last convention, but we shall probably hear about that during this debate or at a later date during the year.

The other day, while another member was speaking, the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Charlton) interjected what he thought to be the stand of his party on the Canadian wheat board. He interjected that if anybody wanted to know what their stand was all he had to do was to read the speech of the Leader of the Opposition at the opening of this discussion. I read the speech of the Leader of the Opposition on this question very carefully, and I must say in all frankness that if this is to be the declaration of faith in the wheat board it is not a very reassuring one.

The Leader of the Opposition proceeded to say again at page 893 of Hansard that he is for the Canadian wheat board. He said that during the operation of the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement—mind you, this is a five-year period—"the wheat board did not operate for the benefit of the western farmer". A little later on he went on to point out that the board was operating for political considerations in 1949, and that it was operating for political considerations in 1953. I would take it that by the same token the board must be operating under political dictation this year, because again this year it is making an interim payment, and there is likely to be an election this year as there was in the other years mentioned. Therefore, if it did not operate for the benefit of the producer from 1945 to 1949 and did not operate for the benefit of the farmer in 1949, 1953 and 1956, one would ask the obvious question. When did it operate to the advantage of the producer? That kind of support for the Canadian wheat board is hardly a declaration of faith in its operation.

I am afraid the official opposition have been doing this, not only now but in the past. I think at the last session the present Leader of the Opposition was one of those who advocated very strenuously that a committee of businessmen be appointed as salesmen to be sent throughout the world to find more markets for our grain.

In effect that is simply to say that they want to take the sale of grain out of the hands of the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nothing of the sort; it was to get markets, not to deal with grain.

Mr. Jutras: If the bulk of the responsibility for selling the grain is given to another body it is certainly not an indication in any man's language of faith in the ability of the board to sell grain. All in all there are too many people in this country and particularly in this house who constantly pay lip service to the organization and then proceed to criticize, damage and condemn its operations. Surely if the operations are not successful and are not working to the advantage of the farmer the organization cannot be a good one. There is no point in paying lip service to the organization unless you are ready to give it your support. I can understand certain criticisms being made, but when you criticize the very essence of the operations of the board then it is a much more serious matter. This business of accusing the board of playing politics simply because it happened to make an interim payment during an election year is just plain nonsense.

I might remind the Leader of the Opposition that there was a member of his party who tried that several years ago. He was the first one to bring criticism of that nature into this house. That hon. member never came back after he made his criticism, and he heard a great deal about it in his own constituency. I am quite sure the producer would justifiably resent any criticism of that type. The argument that the board is playing politics because it borrows money to make a payment to the farmer—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just before an election.

Mr. Jutras: —does not hold water. It reveals that those who make that charge do not understand the operations of the board. The Canadian wheat board could never make a payment of any kind if they did not borrow. We started this year with a surplus of close to 500 million bushels of wheat, and if we have a crop similar to last year's we will be faced with a surplus of approximately one billion bushels. Even with an average crop it takes approximately three or four years to dispose of a surplus of that kind, and if you have a series of crops which are greater than average, such as we have had during the last three or four years, then the surplus cannot be disposed of in a period of under six or seven years at best. At that rate the producer would have to wait a long time before he could receive any payment. Of course it is untenable to argue that because the farmer received an interim payment it is an effort on the part of the government to obtain votes.

In the first place there is not a single farmer in western Canada who does not realize that when an interim payment is made it is money from the sale of his own grain. It is ridiculous to suggest that you can influence the farmer by telling him that the wheat board is making a payment. The farmer knows very well that the money does not come from the government or the treasury. He is fully aware that the money comes from the wheat board, and the farmer makes a big distinction between the Canadian wheat board and the Canadian government. The farmer has more sense than to believe that the money comes from the government. It has been the practice over the years to endeavour to space payments periodically as conditions warrant them. Surely we are not going to argue that because an election is pending the wheat board should withhold any payment to the farmer. Anyone who suggests that the payment which has just been announced is for election purposes will be laughed out of the west.

Mention has been made of the United Kingdom wheat agreement. In dealing with this subject the Leader of the Opposition, as he has on many occasions in the past, attempted to leave the impression that this was entirely the responsibility of the government and that he and his party had not supported this agreement. He was very careful to time his remarks and to couch them in language to suit his convenience. He proceeded to decry the great losses under the United Kingdom agreement and concluded by saying, as I recall his words, "However, the contract was entered into".

The hon. member should have said that the contract was entered into in the first place and the Conservative party at that time supported the United Kingdom agreement. I remember it as if it were yesterday. For the benefit of those who were not here at the time I will place on the record the words of the leader of the official opposition of the day, Mr. John Bracken; and I quote from page 4811 of Hansard for August 14, 1946:

> I rise at this time to criticize the government's wheat policy. But before doing so, let me say this, with respect to the United Kingdom wheat agreement. Any agreement such as this which tends to level out the inequalities, and the wide fluctuations of prices in the past, is a step in the right direction. Even this agreement is better than no agreement at all . . .

He then goes on to give some of his reasons for supporting the agreement. No one in the official opposition should now criticize the agreement. Every word of criticism spoken by the Leader of the Opposition rings false, because the agreement was passed unanimously with no dissenting vote at the time of its adoption.

While I am dealing with the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition I might say I was rather amazed at the way he treated the question of the United States fire-sale policy, or rather the policy of selling grain at cut-rate prices. He intimated that the Canadian government was not aggressive enough in dealing with our friends to the south. I think we all appreciate that the policy of the United States creates a very real problem under which it is difficult for our agency the Canadian wheat board to sell grain in the world markets. No one wants to make it any worse than it is. I would like to quote the contention of the Leader of the Opposition when he spoke in this debate on February 1, 1957, as reported at page 895 of Hansard:

> We supply the United States with a major portion of its needs to forge the shield of freedom. We are a have country and they are becoming a have-not country.

With all due reference I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that while perhaps the United States is becoming a have-not country, it is a long way from having reached that stage, and if anyone went to Washington today with that opinion in mind he would receive quite a surprise because they are still an extremely powerful country. The attitude expressed by the present Leader of the Opposition reflects perfectly the attitude of one of his ablest predecessors, who attempted to express an attitude of that kind in the thirties with disastrous results about which we all know. To attempt at this time to revert to the attitude voiced in those days will accomplish no good results and may very well cause a great deal of harm. An attitude of co-operation is still best, and I am confident that eventually, once they have put their house in order, our friends to the south are going to appreciate our problems more and more and will co-operate with us fully. Then we will be able to meet the situation.

I would not want the impression to be left that because of the fire-sale policy of our friends to the south the Canadian wheat board has been losing markets over the years. There came to my hand just this afternoon the latest report of the Canadian wheat board for 1955-56. This contains a table giving Canada's percentage of the world wheat export market. Starting from the end of the war the United States have been the largest exporters of grain, except in 1952 and 1953. Actually we are in no worse position today than we were in the years since the end of the war. Of course we were once a great leader and exceeded the United States by a wide margin before the war, but as we all know the United States at that time were not making any efforts to grow wheat. It is only from the war on that wheat production has been increased.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Is it not true that Canada has lost a percentage of the world export wheat market?

Mr. Jutras: I have the percentages right here, indicating to what extent the United States were ahead of us.

	Per cent
1945	1.9
1946	22.9
1947	29.9
1948	28.1
1951	12.3

Then in 1952 we had 6.8 per cent more than the United States; in 1953 we had 7 per cent more. In 1954 they exceeded us by 2.3 per cent and in 1955 by 4.4 per cent.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Is that not a loss for 1954?

Mr. Jutras: When you talk about a loss you have to take a comparison. You are using a comparison. If you take from 1945 to 1952 it will be seen that the United States had a greater share of the world market than we had. Then we recovered, and today they have only 4.4 per cent more than we have. Considering the conditions under which they operate, give-away sales and so on, I think it can be said that the Canadian wheat board has had a most successful operation and that the future is not as dark as some would have us believe. The picture is still a good one.

I have the figures for grain movements from August 1 to December 31 of last year. The clearings at the lakehead were 367 million bushels as compared with 267 million bushels the previous year. Deliveries at elevator points from the beginning of the crop year until January of this year were 251 million bushels as compared with 167 million bushels for the previous year. Exports were 187 million bushels as compared with 132 million bushels. In the case of wheat there was a 35 per cent increase; in the case of barley a 60 per cent increase. Those are the figures from the first of the crop year, August 1, 1956, to January of this year. If that trend continues this should be an outstanding year. If things should enter into the picture to cloud it there is still every indication that 1956-57 will be better than the previous year.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Would the hon. member put on the record the prices which the United States farmers received in those years as compared with the prices received by Canadian farmers, so we may make a comparison?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Does my hon. friend want it for each farmer individually?

Mr. Jutras: The hon. member has as much time as I have to figure it out, so why does he not do it?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to have that with your figures so it will be available when people are reading your speech.

Mr. Jutras: Obviously the hon. member was not listening or he would have known that I was simply dealing with the proportion of sales, which is an entirely different matter. If the hon. member wants to make a different speech he can do so. I forget what year it was, but during the discussion of the British wheat agreement I did put on record Canadian prices as compared with United States prices, and that might suit my hon. friend. He can go to the library and get the speech I made some time in 1945 or 1946.

I want to say a few words about this quota business. Our socialist friends are always complaining about the inequity of the quotas in the various provinces. As the result of a speech made by the hon. member for Assiniboia last year I said I thought far too much emphasis was being placed on the quota figure, because it is not indicative of the true picture. There are many places, particularly in Manitoba, where the quota will go up to 8 or 12 bushels because the district has been cleaned out of grain after having reached a quota of 5 bushels. Whether they have a quota of 5, 8 or 12 bushels does not mean they have delivered that much grain. We all know there are many elevators which have quotas open but no box cars in which to deliver the quotas.

The wheat board seem to be very sensitive on that score, but I do not think they should be. I think an effort should be made to show the people that this quota figure does not tell the whole story. I know that on many occasions the wheat board has been reluctant to increase the quota at a given station simply because it would not look good. The moment they open a quota somewhere, right away representations are made that because there is an 8-bushel quota in one spot and another spot is still on a 1-bushel quota, the lower quota should be increased. I quite appreciate the difficulty.

I do not think it is fair that in a community where the people cannot deliver elsewhere and where there is space in the elevator, they should not have a higher quota. There are instances, and many, in Manitoba, where they have a highly diversified agriculture, with extensive storage facilities and small acreage, where they can almost take the entire local crop with the 1-bushel quota—not an entire crop, but enough room locally to take the one-bushel quota—without any box cars at all. I know some instances when there was plenty of space available to take another 2-bushel quota. I grant that these are individual cases, but again last fall there were several places where there was plenty of room in the elevator, but simply because the quota allowed was already high as compared with the quota elsewhere it was held down, the reason being that otherwise a lot of people would have criticized the board in respect of its operations.

As I pointed out last year, the quota does not give the figure which really matters. In Manitoba, according to the seeded acreage, we have a far smaller percentage of grain delivered than Saskatchewan, proportionally speaking, in spite of the fact that the quota appears to be very much higher in Manitoba than in Saskatchewan.

The hon. member for Assiniboia last year mentioned the Wheat Review. That is what I have here now, the Canadian Wheat Review for December, 1956. At that time Manitoba had 12 per cent of the deliveries, Saskatchewan 62 per cent and Alberta 24 per cent. The long-term average from 1945 to 1952 is 13 per cent for Manitoba, 57 per cent for Saskatchewan and 28 per cent for Alberta. Thus again this year Saskatchewan is getting a greater proportion than Alberta and Manitoba of the total deliveries, as they have been getting from 1945 to 1955. Hon. members may say maybe we were not getting our fair share during the base period. The fact remains that if one bases an average, the only basis which is satisfactory—

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member deny that large shipments through Churchill would be an important factor in that period?

Mr. Jutras: —if you base it on acreage, in Manitoba we have 15 per cent of the total acreage, while Saskatchewan has 52 per cent of the acreage and is getting 62 per cent of the deliveries. Alberta has 31 per cent of the acreage and is getting 24 per cent of the deliveries. I know you cannot cut it down to fine percentages, but what I am getting at is this. The hon. members from Saskatchewan are constantly criticizing and harping that they in that province are being treated unfairly. Actually all the figures disprove that contention, they are being misled as a result of following these quota figures only, figures which do not have the meaning that is given to them. The important thing is not how high a quota is but how much grain a farmer is allowed to deliver. That, after all, is what matters, and I say that on that basis there is no complaint to come from Saskatchewan members; they have had their share, and a full share.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Can the hon. member state an instance when a Saskatchewan member has complained that the Manitoba quotas are too high?

Mr. Jutras: Since you mention it, I certainly will. I have not an instance before me at this moment, but Hansard was cluttered up last session with examples. I will not say that the hon. member himself did not do it; certainly the hon. member for Assiniboia did, because that prompted me to get up and refer to this matter during last session. I certainly will look this up and give hon. members many instances of it. What they did was point to the quota in Manitoba in relation to the average quota in Saskatchewan, and they did it on more than one occasion.

I am taking exception to that, because it was misleading. It is not a proper basis for comparison. The proper basis is, as I have said, the amount of grain the farmer is allowed to deliver. That is the real consideration, and that is the one which the board should consider above everything else.

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Should we adjourn the debate, Mr. Speaker? I understand that hon. members must go to the other place at a quarter to six.

Mr. Speaker: The proceedings are automatically interrupted by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod whenever the knock is heard. In the meantime, if the hon. member wishes to continue the debate he may do so. If no hon. member wishes to speak we can, of course, sit and wait.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for Assiniboia pointed out that members of this party would vote for the second reading of this bill, which is to extend the life of the Canadian wheat board for another five years. Members of this party support the Canadian Wheat Board Act; as a matter of fact we would like to see the legislation made permanent, because we believe western farmers have so much to gain from the orderly marketing of their wheat. Indeed, we feel rather sorry that the government did not see fit to bring in legislation making this permanent in order to show the confidence they had in this type of marketing.

I would like, second, to point out that members of this group have indicated from time to time that we would like to see the Canadian wheat board handle other grain besides wheat, oats and barley, which are presently under its control. I feel, sir, that the Canadian wheat board has proved the kind of organization which western farmers have been demanding over the years. Those of us who have farmed in the west, and who represent farming constituencies, will remember the years prior to the operation of the Canadian wheat board when western farmers were at the mercy of the Winnipeg grain exchange. I can recall that each year, after the crop was seeded, reports would come out that there was a big crop in the making in western Canada. Away fell the prices that wheat would bring. As soon as the grain was ready to move to the elevators, wheat prices went down. That is why so much has been done over the years by organized farmers to try to find some method by which they can sell their grain without speculation on the Winnipeg grain exchange.

Throughout the years the C.C.F. has advocated this type of orderly marketing.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

Bill No. 25, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1957.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND EXPIRY DATE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) for the second reading of Bill No. 9, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

On motion of Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain) the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall continue with this debate and then take the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources; then the two resolutions in my name which were announced for today, namely the Canadian Farm Loan Act and the Municipal Grants Act.

It being three minutes past six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

IMPORTS OF TOMATO PRODUCTS

Question No. 91—Mr. Lennard:

1. How many pounds of tomato products were imported into Canada from Italy in the year 1956?

Questions

KNITTED UNDERWEAR IMPORTS

Question No. 98—Mr. Lennard:

1. What quantities of knitted underwear, by the dozens, were imported into Canada during the year 1956, (a) men's; (b) women's; (c) children's?
2. What was the total value?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

1 and 2. Information as requested is not available. Canadian imports of knitted underwear as specified, during the period January 1 to October 31, 1956 (latest figures available), were as follows:

Item	Lb.	Value
Underwear, cotton, knitted (item 3067)	242,284	$451,606
Underwear, knitted, silk (3245)	9	318
Underwear, knitted, wool (3323)	95,030	299,222
Underwear, knitted, synthetic textile fibre (3385) ...	51,151	154,068

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISPOSAL POLICY—PROTESTS BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with two articles in the current issue of the Financial Post. Is it correct, as reported in these articles, that the Prime Minister recently sent a letter of protest or objection to the President of the United States against the give-away program of the surplus agricultural products of the United States? If so, when was that letter of protest sent? Has the President replied to it?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I saw the two items in the Financial Post to which the hon. gentleman has referred and I was very much surprised to see them. I do not think I should either confirm or deny that there have been any such letters. There are occasions when it is necessary for those who have responsibility to have confidential conferences, and this method of publishing certain statements and then getting a confirmation or denial would make the system of confidential interviews or confidential correspondence lose practically its whole value. If there is a statement that there has been confidential correspondence and that it is not to be disclosed, there are people who are so suspicious as to think there must be something to hide in that kind of correspondence. I think it is highly desirable that those who are in responsible positions can have these confidential communications without there being this publicity that is not helpful to the ultimate results that are sought to be achieved.

I am sorry that I feel I should not comply with the hon. gentleman's request to either confirm or deny what is in this report. I have had confidential communications, either orally or in writing, on many occasions concerning many different subjects with the President of the United States. There is nothing that should be hidden in those confidential exchanges, but they were directed to achieving results which would be more difficult to achieve if there could not be these frank, confidential exchanges of views. I am quite sure if I attempted to publicize things that both the President and I consider as confidential it would destroy the basis upon which we have been having these confidential exchanges.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this goes further than that. On January 24, 1957, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when asked whether there had been any protest, used these words which appear at the bottom of page 589 of Hansard for that date:

> We do not file our protests in writing; we file them through the committee.

The question as to whether or not there was a protest made to the President of the United States is one in respect of which this house has the right to information. This is not a personal conversation, this is a protest on behalf of the people of Canada, if indeed such a protest was made; and for the Prime Minister to take the stand that when it is convenient not to give information to parliament the method of going about it is simply to make a protest—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in a whisper is not in keeping with the rights of parliament. I ask the Prime Minister once more for this information, because too often throughout this session the house has been denied information to which it is entitled.

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I made no official protest as Prime Minister of Canada to the President of the United States.

FACILITIES AND ORGANIZATIONS IN IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Are there any iron curtain countries whose ports are open to the traders from our nation or from any of the free nations to which traders could ply to negotiate purchases in those countries?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): So far as I know, every Russian port is open to ships of the world just as Canadian ports are open to ships of the world.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Low: I did not make the question clear. Is it not true that Canadian traders in the ports of the iron curtain countries have to deal through a government corporation in most of those countries? If not, are there any iron curtain countries where ports are free so far as negotiations and purchases are concerned?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No. I think all the communist countries trade through state trading organizations; at least Russia does. Sales and purchases are made through that organization.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINDSOR, ONTARIO—UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to address two questions, one to the Minister of Labour and one to the Minister of Finance. I regret that I have not had an opportunity of giving notice of these questions. My first question will be directed to the Minister of Labour.

Is the minister aware of the serious labour situation in the city of Windsor? If so, is there anything the minister can do to rectify the condition?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that in the city of Windsor there are more applicants for employment in the present mid-winter period than there were at this time last year. It is reported to me that this is mainly due to a number of lay-offs some of which are indicated as temporary in the automobile industry and in the construction industry. In the meantime the national employment office in Windsor, in co-operation with an active citizens' committee for winter employment, are doing their best to find employment for those so laid off.

FINANCE

EXCISE TAX ON AUTOMOBILES—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, may I now be permitted to direct a question to the Minister of Finance? Has the minister been advised that the automobile industry is reported to be making an extensive lay-off of employees and are giving as the reason the excise tax imposed by the federal government on the sale of automobiles and the fiscal policies now in effect? If so, would the minister be in a position at an early date to state whether any changes are contemplated in the tax or fiscal policies?

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I know it is common in Canada to assume that if certain taxes were reduced the cost of production would decline and there would therefore perhaps be greater employment. It is easy to suggest that excise taxes are the cause of unemployment. I would not want to say that was or was not the fact in the motor car industry, but if there are any effects of the fiscal policy being felt by the motor car industry in particular it should be borne in mind that taxation is very widespread in Canada, and in so far as it is possible to do so it is the desire of the government that taxation should be borne by the taxpayers in as proper a manner as can be devised.

With particular reference to the motor car industry I have already indicated, and the house on numerous occasions has discussed the question, what affects the sale of motor cars, or at any rate the delivery of motor cars, at this time from the manufacturer to the motor car dealer. I do have an announcement to make in that regard.

Automobile dealers are reluctant in this period before the budget to accept deliveries of cars from the manufacturers. At times when the tax on automobiles is reduced, dealers may have inventory on hand on which tax has been paid, and in order to avoid loss they naturally try to arrange to have on hand as few cars as possible.

To avoid or minimize disruption in the marketing processes in the industry I have decided to announce now my intention to recommend to the house later in the session a minor technical amendment to the Excise Tax Act which I think will solve the problem of the slow-down of car deliveries.

At present excise tax on an automobile is payable by the manufacturer when it is delivered to the dealer or, if imported, when the customs entry is passed. It is proposed to amend the law so that excise tax will not be payable until ownership of the car passes to the dealer. This change, which will be effective as from February 1, will enable the dealer to accept delivery of a car still owned by the manufacturer, but it will not be a tax-paid car until after title to the property has passed to the dealer. This seems to be a sensible arrangement in the case of large items such as automobiles, where the storage problem can be difficult. The ordinary rule calling for payment of tax on physical delivery will continue to apply to other items subject to excise tax.

I need scarcely add that this announcement of a proposal for a minor technical change in the law relating to the time of payment of tax can in no sense be regarded as any indication of whether, in the forthcoming budget, there will be any change in the rate of tax on automobiles either up or down.

Mr. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement which has been made by the Minister of Finance I wish to thank him very much, because it will certainly help to overcome a great deal of difficulty. I feel it was as a result of my pressing this matter.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, may I make a supplementary statement. As suggested by the remarks of the hon. member for Ontario to the Minister of Finance, I wish to state merely that I love him too.

REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORT OF STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's recent address in Toronto in which he was reported as having urged the Canadian people to spend less and save more, as an anti-inflationary measure, could the minister tell the house if it is the view of the government that the unprecedented capital expansion by private corporations is less of an inflationary factor than the expenditure on consumer goods by private citizens?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will allow me, this is precisely the type of question which, in my humble judgment, is a matter for debate. I know the hon. member is sincere when he puts it and he thinks he is within the rules but, in my humble view, if the hon. member looks at his question again he will see that he is not. He might ask, why do you single me out today, and he would be right. As a matter of fact I dislike doing so, but it is simply because I have just made a few remarks and I note that the question he is asking at the moment is precisely one which could be debated whenever the circumstances arise where financial policies and other matters related to them can be debated.

The answer of the minister to that question is perhaps just a matter of opinion, a matter of policy and comment, and it may very well provoke several supplementary questions. We are not asking for information respecting certain facts which according to our rules may be used later in the debate. Instead we are trying to find out opinions which would have to be voiced immediately during the question period. That is not the purpose of the question period.

Inquiries of the Ministry

As I say, I am quite prepared to allow all the latitude possible during the question period, and I believe I have done that. I would like to hear anyone in this house tell me that I have not given all possible latitude at question time since the beginning of this session. However, I would ask hon. members not to take too much advantage of the latitude I am prepared to give, and within reason to make our question time as interesting and informative as possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—REPORTED DEMAND BY EGYPT FOR IMPOSITION OF SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, is there any truth in the report coming out of the United Nations that Egypt will demand that the United Nations vote economic sanctions against Israel, or face indefinite delay in opening the Suez canal? If so, what will be Canada's action toward the loan of $1 million for the clearing of the Suez canal?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have no information to the effect that Egypt has taken the action suggested in my hon. friend's question. Therefore the second part of the question does not yet arise.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as to whether or not the government has taken any stand in regard to the questions that will be up in the United Nations within the next few days on the imposition of sanctions against Israel. Would he give the assurance that in so far as the application of sanctions is concerned, until Russia absolves her wrongdoing in connection with Hungary and lives up to the resolutions of the United Nations, Canada will give consideration before supporting sanctions as against Israel?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend said this question will be up at the United Nations assembly within the next few days. If he has information to that effect I must say it is not in my possession. There is no statement yet that this matter will be up in the form he has indicated; it may or it may not, depending on whether the government of Israel accepts the resolution of last Saturday regarding the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Sinai.

Until this matter is before the assembly—if indeed it comes before the assembly—I do not think it would be advisable for me to state the position of the government in regard to it. The attitude the government would have to take—and it would have to give the matter very serious consideration—would depend upon the form in which the question was put to the United Nations. Until we are clear on that point surely I could not be expected to state the opinion or the policy of the government in this matter.

DISSEMINATION OF RUSSIAN PROPAGANDA LITERATURE IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. McLeod (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he tell this house if he will recommend to the government that it take action similar to that announced by the government of Jordan yesterday, according to a press clipping sent to him with notice of this question, to halt the dissemination of Russian propaganda and literature in Canada?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In reply to my hon. friend I can only state my opinion that the policy of the government of Canada in an important matter of this kind should not be determined by newspaper accounts of what is supposed to have happened in the state of Jordan.

[Later:]

Mr. McLeod: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I can assure you I am merely asking for information and not trying to stir up any debate. Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs prepared to recommend that the Canadian government take action to halt the dissemination of Russian propaganda and literature in Canada?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there are laws in this country which govern the dissemination of information through the mails. When those laws are broken the appropriate action is taken.

ISRAEL—STATEMENT ON CANCELLATION OF EXPORT PERMIT FOR JET AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Leader of the Opposition asked me two questions concerning the timing of the suspension of the export permit covering the export of F-86 aircraft to Israel. Canadair, the permit holder, was advised by telephone on the afternoon of October 29 that this permit was being suspended. The action to suspend the export permit was taken within a few hours of the time it became known to the government that the Israeli army was moving in significant force into Egypt.

My hon. friend also asked whether the government of Israel was advised of the suspension of the permit. I believe my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs would know about that.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the minister table the order setting aside the grant of the export permit? He undertook to do that yesterday, and I would appreciate it if he would see to it that it is done.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, concerning the export of F-86 aircraft, my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce has mentioned one aspect of that question which was asked yesterday which he thought I might be able to answer. The Prime Minister made a public announcement on October 31 that the government had that morning suspended all arms shipments to the Middle East. In that statement he did not express judgment on the Israeli action in Egypt, but related the suspension to the government's earlier decision to keep the matter under continuing review in the light of the Middle East situation.

The public announcement of September 21, 1956, relating to the decision to grant the export permit contains a paragraph indicating the approval which reads as follows:

> This approval of Israel's request for 24 F-86's covers a period of six months, during which the planes would normally be made available and shipped. If at any time during this period political circumstances should change in a way which would warrant a cancellation or postponement of the outstanding part of this order, such action will be taken.

Such action was taken when the situation changed, and that suspension was brought to the attention of the government of Israel.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, why was not parliament told about the cancellation of the export permit? There was a general statement, but a debate took place in this house and nothing in particular was said about that matter. Why was that course followed? Possibly the minister could answer that.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it was public knowledge, of course—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, it was not.

Mr. Pearson: —and the action the government took occurred before that debate took place in this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED VARIATIONS IN BENEFIT PAYMENTS TO RAILWAYMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has it been brought to the attention of the Minister of Labour that unemployment insurance payments to some men laid off during the last railway strike varied greatly although these men have the same status and the same wage scale?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that has been brought to my attention. I am sure my hon. friend recognizes that, by the very nature of results related to the permissive earnings, there will be variation of benefit allowed for part of that group affected by the strike. If my hon. friend has some special complaints in mind I would be glad if he would send them to me.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, these are from Mr. R. H. Symons, social chairman, brotherhood of railway carmen of America, lodge 258. I will send this over to the minister.

REPORTED DELAY IN ISSUING OF CHEQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the minister's answer yesterday, which I could not understand because of the covering-up noises of the Liberals—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Van Horne: —to the effect that he did not know of the several weeks' delay occurring in the processing of thousands of unemployment insurance claims, will the minister tell us when he will get busy and do his job and remove the dagger held over the backs of the workingmen of Canada? The minister's do-nothing attitude is that of a saboteur of the rights of the workingmen of Canada, and I am not going to stand for it.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. gentleman should revise that language.

Mr. Van Horne: I have been revising enough things around here; I want some action.

Mr. Speaker: I am asking the hon. gentleman to revise the last part of his question.

Mr. Van Horne: How would you like to have it revised?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Probably by eliminating the words to the effect that the attitude of the minister is that of a saboteur of the workers of this country.

Mr. Van Horne: To the thousands of people who are suffering all over this country I can assure you that this quotation of mine and these words need no retraction.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must rise on a point of order. I heard the word "saboteur" used. I am sure no one but the hon. member would apply it to the Minister of Labour in any event, but I do suggest it is out of order, unparliamentary, and not to be placed on the record.

Mr. Speaker: I would not want to have a discussion started on the exact words that have been used. I suggest that the matter be left in abeyance until I have had a chance to look at the transcript.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—PETITION OF ALBERTA INDIAN ASSOCIATION TO THE QUEEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Carl O. Nickle (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the Minister of Justice been consulted about the Alberta Indian Association's petition to the Queen? If so, when, and by whom?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have been consulted by my colleagues in this regard, but it is not customary for me to disclose any facts I gave to them, or to identify those who have consulted me.

[Later:]

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. I can understand his reluctance to answer the first part of the question asked and say by whom he was consulted. Would he, however, answer the other part of the question and say when he was first consulted by his colleagues?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I apprehend that the Minister of Justice is under no responsibility to give any legal advice to the House of Commons. His responsibility is to give legal advice to the government and to his colleagues who seek it. In due course that advice may be the foundation of government policy. Government policy is brought down in the house, and the government takes full responsibility for it. But as I apprehend it, the Minister of Justice is under no responsibility to disclose any relations between himself and his colleagues in relation to that advice, as to when they consulted him, how they consulted him or any other such thing. For that reason I do not wish to answer my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. This does not concern his relations with the cabinet. Has the minister's advice been asked in connection with this Indian petition by any official at Government House? If so, when?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend's last question may I say this. I feel that not only is it proper to refuse to answer my hon. friend's question, but that it would be improper for me to do anything else. The relationship between the government and all the civil service in respect of any advice which is sought from the Minister of Justice is a relationship between solicitor and client, and I have no business disclosing any part of that relationship or any of the facts in connection with it in respect of the advice I give. When that advice is accepted by any official and it is passed on to his minister as the basis for government policy, the government, in the proper constitutional way, assumes full responsibility for that policy. Meanwhile, the information which my hon. friends seek is really not the proper concern of any member of this house, because it has to do with confidential relationships between solicitor and client.

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question to ask the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie.

[Later:]

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Since the minister has described the relationship of the Minister of Justice to his cabinet colleagues as that of legal counsel to client, does he not also consider that he is the legal counsel for the public of Canada; and in that latter capacity can he deny that an elected representative of the public of Canada in this house should have the right to ask him legitimate questions not concerning the nature of the advice he has given to his cabinet colleagues but rather simply as to whether or not he was consulted, and if so, when?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I hope if I betray any lack of appreciation for the fine points of this long question which my hon. friend has asked me he will interrupt me and put me on the right track.

Mr. Knowles: He will.

Mr. Garson: In relation to the second part of his question, which I think is the germ of the matter, my understanding is that the Minister of Justice is the legal adviser of the government. He is not the legal adviser of the House of Commons—

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Garson: —and he is not the legal adviser of the people of Canada. If he were it would be rather hard on the poor lawyers, who pay a lot of taxes to the government out of which the salary of the Minister of Justice is paid, if he were competing with them and giving legal advice for nothing.

If my hon. friend had done me the courtesy of giving me notice of his question perhaps I could have meditated upon it and helped him out by giving an answer to the problem which seems to be bothering him.

Mr. Nickle: How about an answer now?

Mr. Garson: Yes. I was just going to say I have had an opportunity during the interval of figuring out a way in which I perhaps can answer my hon. friend's question without breaking any of the solemn obligations under which I operate as Minister of Justice. I can say this to the hon. member, that in the matter to which he refers there has been no advice given by the Department of Justice or the minister of that department to anyone except another member of the government. There will not be any advice given by the Department of Justice or the Minister of Justice to anyone except other members of the government. I think that will probably clear up this dark suspicion which is in my hon. friend's mind and which he has not disclosed completely to the house.

PUBLIC WORKS

CANSO CAUSEWAY—INQUIRY AS TO IMPOSITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): May I address a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the house whether the tolls in connection with the Canso causeway are imposed by the federal or the provincial government and, if they are imposed by the provincial government, whether the federal government shares in the revenue?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): The answer to the hon. gentleman's question is that it is the provincial government which imposes the tolls on the causeway, and it is the provincial government which receives the tolls.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Thursday of last week, January 31, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in answering questions regarding Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, said, and I quote from page 826 of Hansard:

> We lifted no obligations and we set no new deadline.

The reference was to the December 31, 1956, deadline for the completion of the western section of the pipe line by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited. Later in that same paragraph the minister said:

> No new agreement was made and no agreement was lifted.

That was on Thursday, January 31. I have in my hand a copy of sessional paper No. 178 tabled by the minister the day before, which includes an agreement made among the government, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited and Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, dated January 30, 1957, containing therein an extension to November 1, 1957, for the completion of the western section of the line.

My question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that on Thursday, January 31, the minister made a statement to the house which, if the sessional paper tabled the day before is correct, was not correct when he made it.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, is my hon. friend referring to my agreement or to a ruling of the board of transport commissioners?

Mr. Knowles: I am referring to the agreement which the minister tabled on January 30, a three-way agreement among the minister on behalf of Her Majesty the Queen in the right of Canada, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited and Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. This agreement includes this clause:

> Subject to delays due to force majeure, Trans-Canada shall complete the construction of the western section not later than November 1, 1957.

My question of privilege is that this new agreement dated January 30 was placed on the table of the house on January 30, yet the minister stood up in the house the next day and said the December 31 deadline had not been lifted and that no new agreement had been entered into. I contend, therefore, that on January 31 the minister misled the house.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the time for the completion of proof of financing of the project was extended. I do not regard that as an agreement. It was simply a unilateral act on the part of the government.

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister not realize that he tabled an order in council—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knowles: —P.C. 1957-122, which refers to an annexed agreement, and that that three-party agreement does include a very definite undertaking on the part of the three parties to the agreement. It was not just a word of mouth proposition. It was a very definite, binding agreement. I hope it is more binding than some of the agreements that have been entered into by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited in the past.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There may be a technical violation. I have heard of technical knock-outs. Perhaps my hon. friend has one. Certainly there is nothing in that agreement affecting the guarantees of Trans-Canada with respect to the agreement with the government to build the western section of the pipe line. That was an extension of the time to prove the ability to finance the whole project.

Mr. Knowles: I realize this cannot be debated. The agreement speaks for itself. What I was referring to in this new agreement—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knowles: —was not the extension of the time in which to prove financial capacity. What I was touching upon was the new agreement—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knowles: —as to a new deadline for the completion of the western section. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a supplementary question—

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Keep the seals quiet.

Mr. Dickey: Supplementary to your speech?

Mr. Knowles: In view of the provision in the agreement of May 8, 1956, that the government would support Trans-Canada's further application before the board of transport commissioners if Trans-Canada was not in default under that agreement, how does the government justify its support of Trans-Canada's application when it was at the time in default by not having completed the western section by December 31, 1956?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the extensions referred to were extensions of the time to prove ability to finance. Whether Trans-Canada had carried out its agreement with the government with respect to the extent of the pipe line that was laid in place as contracted is a separate matter that could always be brought before the courts, and would have been brought before the courts had the government wished to take over that section of the line.

The proof of ability to finance is one matter and the extension of time to be given for completion of the western section is quite separate. My hon. friend may not know it, but he is badly mixed up between the agreement to build the western section of the line and the time limit set for proving ability to finance the line. In any case he can know that the line will be built and is being built and that it will be completed, we expect, by the autumn of next year. It seems to me that consideration overrides any petty little points of debate.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. From what the minister says are we to take it that if this government across the way signs an agreement with two points in it, one of them can be ignored, and so far as the government is concerned it does not care?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Is it just a petty point if the government finds that one point in an agreement is ignored?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, that is only about the 82nd point of order that my hon. friend has raised, and it has the same validity as his other points of order.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO EXPORTS TO COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As a result of the recent visit of wheat board officials to Russia and iron curtain countries, have any sales of wheat or other grains been made? Does the minister expect that as large a volume of grain will move to these countries this year as last?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it has always been the practice of the Minister of Trade and Commerce not to discuss sales of wheat in the house. He is willing to discuss exports after the exports have taken place, but he never discusses sales. With regard to movements to iron curtain countries, may I say that we have a trade agreement with Russia which provides that a minimum of 15 million bushels of wheat per annum will be taken by that country. Negotiations are in progress with other countries but, as I said, we do not discuss negotiations for sale and we do not discuss sales.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—CONTRACT WITH SASKATCHEWAN POWER CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Was the minister aware yesterday, when he replied to a question regarding the natural gas situation in Saskatchewan, that an agreement between Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited and the Saskatchewan Power Corporation is in effect completed with only a few minor details to settle before final signature?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I was not aware of that fact. My understanding is that my hon. friend is not saying the agreement is completed. He says that an agreement is in process of negotiation, and I am glad to hear it.

Mr. Ellis: At page 1014 of Hansard of yesterday the Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> I may say, in reply to the second question, that to my knowledge Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited has been trying to make a contract to supply gas to Saskatchewan municipalities with the Saskatchewan Power Corporation for some months but entirely without success.

In view of that statement made to the house yesterday, might I suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he apologize for misleading this house and casting an unwarranted slur on the reputation of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, have we not had sufficient of these charges of attempting to mislead the house? I do not like it, and I do not like to make such insinuations myself. The hon. gentleman suggests that in the answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce he was attempting to mislead the house.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): It would not be the first time.

Mr. Hees: He does it all the time.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I think these interjections should be withdrawn, Mr. Speaker. You said yesterday this was unparliamentary language and you hoped it would not be used, but that you hesitated to intervene. I would suggest to you there should be intervention and those continuous statements should not be allowed to go on the record. I have not been used to hearing these things in other sessions that were looked upon as being sessions approaching a general election.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I rise to answer the Prime Minister. If there have been petulant exhibitions and outbursts the Prime Minister and those associated with him should realize the reason is that each of the ministers of the government apparently is following the course of refusing to answer questions properly, or indeed of colouring the information given, tailored to meet their immediate needs.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I say yesterday a question was asked in this house intended deliberately to mislead this house. I refer to the question regarding the gas situation in the province of Saskatchewan. There was no basis for that question.

Mr. McIlraith: Oh, yes, there was.

Mr. Coldwell: We all know that an agreement has been under negotiation. We also know from the minister himself that this line is not to be completed for months. Can you expect a provincial government to enter into an agreement with a company which has not yet proved itself financially able to build the line through which the gas would be delivered to the Saskatchewan corporation.

I say the question asked in the house yesterday by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) was a deliberate attempt to mislead the house and the people of this country. I say to you that it ill becomes someone who was elected here by the people he vilifies to do this kind of thing in this House of Commons.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the gas pipe line has been completed to the city of Regina and is capable of delivering gas in the area of Regina and west of Regina at any time anybody wishes to take delivery. I was not aware that negotiations for supplies of gas had been under way. The last information I had was from the general manager of the—

Mr. Ellis: Get more reliable sources of information.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am speaking of my source of information. My source was the general manager of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation. In the course of a conversation he told me the province would never sign the type of contract which had been presented to it by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. That was the last I heard of the matter.

Mr. Ellis: When did you last have contact with him?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Three or four months ago.

Mr. Coldwell: Do you suggest the government must sign a contract presented to it by a private company?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No. One hon. member has said that the parties are attempting to negotiate and another has said the parties have completed the agreement. Let it rest there.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON ASKING OF QUESTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to hon. members, for the good of all of us and I suppose for the good of parliament, that we should refrain at question time from engaging in debate. I have on previous occasions outlined the rules with respect to the asking of questions, and also with respect to the answering of questions. The minute we go beyond the reasonable limits of those rules and engage in debating certain questions and answers, well, what happens is that the atmosphere gets heated up and we have all kinds of interjections going across the floor of the house, because at this moment members are not entitled to make lengthy speeches to express themselves. They try to concentrate in a few sentences what they would like to say perhaps in 40 minutes. Therefore you have these capsule, concentrated expressions which really do not add any advantage to the house or to the members who express them.

I would ask hon. members within reasonable limits to keep within the rules. They know what they are; I am sure they do. Whether they want to follow them as they are is a different proposition. As far as I am concerned, once the question is put—first I have to listen to it—I look to the person to whom the question is addressed and in 99 per cent of the cases he is on his feet to reply.

Inquiries of the Ministry

My position with respect to question time is this. As long as it is the wish of many hon. members in the house to ask questions in which they include a great deal of debatable material and if it is the wish of those who reply, probably because of the type of question they get, to include in their answers a lot of debatable material, it is not to be expected that the person who put the question originally is not going to ask a supplementary question to get back precisely at the type of debatable material which was in the answer. Therefore it is a vicious circle, and it is enough to make anyone dizzy, especially the Speaker.

HARBOURS

THREE RIVERS—REQUEST FOR REPAIR AND EXPANSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of the minister's department or of the St. Lawrence seaway authority to start this spring long delayed amelioration and expansion work in the Three Rivers harbour?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the estimates of the national harbours board are before this house—

Mr. Dufresne: There won't be any estimates.

Mr. Marler: —the hon. gentleman will have complete information with respect to this request.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO RESEARCH INTO NEW USES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. In view of recent press reports indicating a further substantial decline in the production of coal in certain sections of Canada, will the minister at an early date bring the house up to date on the progress which has been made in research respecting the utilization of coal for other than normal uses?

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Yes, at the first opportunity.

HOUSING

REPORTED REDUCTION IN LOANS—EFFECT OF INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Would the minister comment on a recent statement made in Vancouver by the president of the Royal Bank to the effect that housing loans have been reduced to a trickle?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I had not seen this report until my hon. friend sent it over to me a few moments ago. I think there is very little to add to what has been said already in the house. We recently took a step designed to put housing in a position to compete for a fair share of the mortgage money available in the market, and I have every reason to believe that step will meet with success.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that instructions have been issued to reduce the staff of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at Victoria, the reason given being that there is a reduction in the number of applications for loans?

Mr. Winters: Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is always looking for ways and means to effect economies, and this is one way.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. Would the minister have an immediate review made into the effect of the monetary and fiscal policy of increased interest rates and tight money policy of this government on the building industry of this country? If such a review is being carried on, as apparently is the custom of this government, when can we have the findings?

Mr. Winters: As the hon. member has stated, it is true that these matters are always under review. When steps are taken which reflect themselves in new policies, those are conveyed to the house in the usual manner.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Have any hon. members of the opposition parties requested the minister to stop the building of any projects in their respective ridings in order to make more building materials available for housing?

Mr. Winters: Quite the contrary. I am looking at a considerable number of hon. members opposite who have asked to have new construction projects undertaken in their constituencies.

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Did the minister note a report in the Globe and Mail of yesterday to the effect that while residential construction is dropping off there is an increase in industrial construction? What measures is the government taking to reverse this trend?

Mr. Winters: The answer to the first question is no, I have not seen the report. The answer to the second question, I think, is made clear by the steps we have taken to put housing in position to compete for a fair share of the mortgage money available.

I may tell my hon. friend that it is not part of government policy to compete with private enterprise. We think that to the greatest possible extent private enterprise should have an opportunity to do those things which add to the strength of the country's economy. However, having in mind the importance we in this party have always attached to housing we have taken steps from time to time to make the position of housing competitive.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, in the event the minister's optimistic predictions are not correct and there is a continued decline in home construction, will the government undertake to provide through legislation some method of maintaining home construction throughout the country?

Mr. Winters: We shall cross that bridge if we reach it.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the answers the Minister of Public Works has just given about competition for investment money, does the Prime Minister expect that those who need houses are going to be able to compete on anything like equal terms with big business for the available investment funds under the present arrangement?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the expression "big business" is rather vague. Business that used to be big when I had more frequent relations with business has now been so far surpassed by other enterprises that I would not like to attempt to give a definition of just what is big business. I would be surprised if 6 per cent for mortgage money with insurance that amounts to a government guarantee would not be competitive with the rates that big business is paying on the securities being issued at this time.

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, referring to the expression used by the Minister of Public Works with reference to crossing bridges, may I ask if the minister has seen the figures indicating the decline in house construction contracts for the month of January, 1957, as compared with January, 1956? Does he not consider that a drop from $95 million to $21 million indicates at least a lack of a connecting link if not a bridge?

IMMIGRATION

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES—REPORTED RELUCTANCE TO SETTLE IN SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration which he may take as notice. A recent press report indicates that J. O. Probe of Saskatchewan has stated that 100 of the proposed immigrants from Hungary are refusing to settle in the province of Saskatchewan. Is that due to the fact that they have a general antipathy for socialism, and therefore object to settling in a province with that type of government?

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to suggest with all respect to yourself that you should apply the rules as rigorously to government members as you applied them to me a short time ago.

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES—PROVISION OF COMFORT ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration I would like to ask the acting minister if he is now in a position to reply to my question of February 1, regarding the telegram forwarded to the minister by the chairman of the Abbotsford and district citizenship council relative to comfort allowances for Hungarian refugees housed in temporary quarters in that area.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I will try to reply to that question tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE FAIR

MONTREAL—PARTICIPATION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is now in position to state definitely whether the government will or will not participate in the international trade fair to be held in Montreal this year?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The only information I can give at this moment is that the government will not participate. If there is in future any change in the situation I shall be glad to announce it in the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HIGHWAYS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—POSSIBLE PAVING AND STATUS OF MAINTENANCE PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. R. Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister inform the house if the government has decided on a policy in respect to any arrangements with the province of British Columbia which will facilitate the paving of at least the portion of the Alaska highway between Dawson Creek and Charlie Lake?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, no arrangements have been made with the provincial government of British Columbia, nor are any discussions with the government of British Columbia being carried on with my department in that connection that I know of.

Mr. Leboe: A supplementary question. Are the men used on road maintenance work on the Alaska highway considered to be in training?

Mr. Campney: The engineering staff is in training, operating the highway and maintaining it, but most of the people working in that area are civilians engaged by the engineers to do the work required from time to time.

LIVESTOCK

REFERENCE TO INQUIRY INTO METHODS OF SLAUGHTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, may I address a completely innocent and proper question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture on July 13 of last year in this house that the officials of his department were examining methods of humane slaughter in other countries before the government would come to a decision as to its policy in this matter, can the minister inform me if the government is going to do anything about the question of humane slaughter before the general election?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will discuss this matter with the officials of the department and see what sort of answer should be given to that question.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND EXPIRY DATE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, February 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) for the second reading of Bill No. 9, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter before the house this afternoon is the operation of the Canadian wheat board and the extension of the Canadian Wheat Board Act for the next five years. I may say there has been great misapprehension on the part of the Canadian people and, I believe, on the part of some members of this house with respect to the operations of this board.

I would like to say, first of all, that we of the C.C.F. party have endorsed this method of orderly marketing Canadian wheat over the years, and we support the proposed extension of this act for another five years. We do feel, however, that it would add to the significance of the government's support of this method of operating, and of selling Canadian wheat, if the minister could see fit to bring in a bill which would make the act permanent. We feel that the support of the western farmers and farm organizations is such that they are now completely sold on this method of marketing through the Canadian wheat board, and would support any action taken to make this legislation permanent.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, there is misapprehension with regard to this method of marketing wheat, and with regard to the fact that all the operations of the Canadian wheat board are paid for by the farmers themselves. The farmer pays the marketing charges; he pays for country storage and terminal storage; he pays the cost of the wheat board's operations and also the interest charged by the banks for the money used. In addition the farmers pay, out of the proceeds of their sales, for the grading of that wheat, for drying charges, and for all administrative costs. Thus, Mr. Speaker, I wanted it clearly understood at the outset by all hon. members who do not understand the operations of the board that the farmer pays for the Canadian wheat board; he pays the cost of this method of selling his wheat.

I think, sir, it would be well if I were to make a brief review of the history of the Canadian wheat board, because some hon. members may have the impression—and sometimes the impression has been created in the country—that the mint has been used excessively to subsidize Canadian wheat producers. That is completely erroneous. In 1935, when the Canadian wheat board was set up, a farmer had the choice of selling his wheat through the wheat board or on the open market. Ever since the early years when the Winnipeg grain exchange gambled on the wheat crop, the farmers and their organizations had been trying to encourage the government to institute another form of marketing. The consequences of the old method of operation were that the western farmer often got a low price for his product. So from 1935 onward the farmers generally supported the Canadian wheat board and operated through that agency.

It was not until September of 1943, Mr. Speaker, that the wheat board became the sole marketing agency for western wheat, and it is somewhat significant to note that the price of wheat went up on the date the federal Liberal government decided, not by legislation but by order in council, to put all Canadian wheat marketing under the sole agency of the Canadian wheat board. As of that date wheat on the grain exchange had jumped the maximum of 14 cents, and they stepped in by order in council and put all Canadian wheat under the control of the wheat board.

That was the situation until 1948 when, of course, oats and barley were also brought within the sphere of the board's operations. We in this group support the organization and, as I have indicated, farmers throughout the country support the work the Canadian wheat board is doing. We have never at any time tried to indicate or promote measures which might in any way jeopardize this method of marketing. However, we do feel that the western farmer is caught in a cost-price squeeze.

Some days ago the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre tried to indicate that we in this group had been misrepresenting the situation of the western farmer. I do not think, myself, that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is in his seat at the present time, comes into this house and makes a statement about being out in Saskatchewan and driving with a farmer who owns a Cadillac, this should be taken as an indication that all western farmers are driving Cadillacs. Nor when we find the Minister of Agriculture saying that the only farmer in western Canada whom he found to be hard up was one who had to sell his airplane, should we take such stories too seriously. These are gross exaggerations of the present position of the western farmers and I daresay there are few if any farmers in western Canada such as those two gentlemen alluded to.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it would be more appropriate if instead of listening to such statements we were to listen to statements made by people who have the interests of the farmers at heart, and which perhaps deal with the situation of the western farmer more fairly.

I should like to refer to certain statements of Mr. Wesson, head of the Saskatchewan wheat pool. In the Western Producer of January 17 there is the following:

> In point of fact the squeeze is becoming daily more pronounced as the differential between what the farmer sells and the goods he has to buy continues with every passing month to widen. Mr. Wesson, who is not noted for exaggerated or irresponsible statements in such matters, says flatly: "The continued high cost of things needed to operate a farm and to maintain the farm family is putting the farmer in an impossible position."

In my opinion this is conclusive evidence that the very reputable head of the Saskatchewan wheat pool has put forward the situation facing the western farmer concisely and definitely. I should also like to say that those of us in this group have tried to indicate that the prices of wheat and the other things the farmer has to sell have been going down generally since the war years and the cost of the things he has to buy has been going up, placing him in a cost-price squeeze.

In that regard it is interesting to note that during the period from 1930 to 1939 the farmers received 6.1 per cent of the national income. During the period from 1946 to 1954 inclusive the farmers' share of the national income dropped until they were only getting 5.6 per cent, even less than the average in the depression years of the thirties. Therefore it is obvious that today the western Canada farmer is in a cost-price squeeze.

I believe that the government has used the Canadian wheat board as a means to stabilize price levels in Canada and perhaps in some measure to stop inflation. I do not mean to say that the western farmer does not agree with this method of marketing but I should like to point out that the farmer took a lower price for his wheat during the war years and also during the four year period of the British wheat agreement under which Canada sold to Britain in the first two years 160 million bushels of wheat and 140 million bushels in the second two years at a price of $1.55 a bushel when on the world market the farmer could have got a much higher price.

In other words, during the war years and since the farmers have held the price line against inflation. It is also true that in the war years the farmer not only subsidized Canadian consumers by taking $1.25 a bushel for the 60 million to 70 million bushels of wheat consumed in Canada in the form of bread and flour but also as a taxpayer paid his share of the subsidy of 78 cents a bushel paid to millers during that period. Rather than the farmer crying for hand-outs, as the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) said on Friday last, rather than it being a case of those of us in this group crying for hand-outs on behalf of the farmer, all that the farmer wants is economic justice.

It seems to me that something can be done about this problem. We have suggested that farmers should have parity prices. It seems ridiculous to me that consumers should have to take a trimming in buying a loaf of bread having in mind the price that the farmer is getting for his wheat. I noticed the other day that bread went up another cent a loaf in the city of Ottawa but the farmer is getting the same price for his wheat as he got ten years ago. As a matter of fact, there is only 3 cents' worth of bread flour in a 20 ounce loaf of bread for which the consumer today has to pay over 20 cents a loaf.

The farmer has not been getting a fair or equitable deal with respect to the prices of his wheat and the other commodities he sells. The Canadian wheat board is a good idea but that is no reason why we cannot make it a better organization. That is no reason why the government cannot undertake policies such as we have advocated which will receive the full support of the western farmer. I say that if the government refuses to do so and tries to fetter the Canadian wheat board so that it will not be a satisfactory marketing agency for western wheat there is no single thing which will do more to lessen the support of the western farmer for the wheat board.

We in this group have made certain recommendations and I will deal with them in a minute. First, I want to refer to exports of Canadian wheat. I think this is a serious matter. We have the finest wheat in the world but our sales have deteriorated and we have not got our share of the world market. In my opinion that is a serious matter for everybody in Canada, including consumers. Last evening the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) endeavoured to deal with Canada's percentage of wheat sales. As found at page 1037 of Hansard, he said:

> Actually we are in no worse position today than we were in the years since the end of the war.

That is not a very satisfactory thing to have to say in the house. I think we should be trying to undertake policies which would result in our being in a more favourable position. Taking the figures found in the report of the Canadian wheat board for the crop year 1955-56, I find that in the 1945-46 crop year Canada exported 373 million bushels of wheat, or 43 per cent of the world export trade. In 1953-54 we exported only 278 million bushels or only 32 per cent of the world export trade. Still dealing with those two years I find that in 1945-46 total world exports amounted to 868 million bushels whereas in 1953-54 they amounted to 869 million bushels, a variation of only one million in world exports of wheat. Yet our export trade has dropped from 43 per cent to 32 per cent. Surely that is something that should concern the government when, as I say, we have the finest wheat in the world to sell.

With a group of members of the house I went to Washington two years ago and found that the greatest part of the large stocks of wheat in store under the commodity credit corporation in that country consisted of inferior, low grade wheat. We were told that much of the wheat was not fit for milling and would only be milled if there was a real scarcity of better milling wheat.

Many people have talked loosely about the method of disposal of the United States wheat crop. I recall seeing a news report last winter when the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Sinclair) was in the constituency of Assiniboia. He was reported as having said that our suggestion that we should enter into the same kind of deals and contracts as the United States government was silly. I think the capitalist government of the United States is a pretty hard-headed type of capitalist government and I do not think they are following any methods in the disposal of their wheat which are not in the interests of the farmer and in the interests of the United States. Their policy for the disposal of wheat is not simply a give-away program. I should like to refer to public law 480 of the United States and, incidentally, there are three different methods for the disposal of wheat under that law.

For example, under Title I of Public Law 480, as recorded here in the Canadian wheat board report we find the following:

> . . . surplus agricultural commodities may be sold for the currency of the importing country and the funds so acquired are utilized for market development, purchase of strategic materials, military procurement, purchase of goods for other countries, grants for multilateral trade and economic development, loans for economic development within the recipient country and international educational exchange.

It seems to me that in that type of deal there is much merit. Then, of course, under the disposal plan, Title II, we find the following:

> Under this law surplus agricultural commodities may be donated to relieve famine and disaster to any nation friendly to the United States, or to friendly, needy populations without regard to the friendliness of their government.

Again it seems that these are worthy types of deals to enter into when any country has a surplus rather than have them spoil as they did in the thirties and I think they should receive the support of those who have the needs and the welfare of people at heart.

Mr. Thatcher: We are not letting the surpluses spoil. We are selling for cash.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): You are just not selling. That has been the situation in the past.

Mr. Thatcher: We are selling for cash.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I have indicated we have lost our percentage of world sales.

Mr. Thatcher: We have not lost our percentage of sales. You are including what the Americans gave away.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I am going to deal with that matter in a moment after I have dealt with this one.

Under Title III we find this:

> Under this law surplus agricultural commodities may be exchanged for strategic materials entailing less risk of loss through deterioration or substantially less storage charges; . . .

I think all these types of deals are to be commended. It concludes by saying under Title III as follows:

> During the crop year 1955-56 barter programs played an important part in United States grain exports.

When hon. members try to mislead the public by saying that the United States wheat disposal programs are all give-away programs, I think that such a statement cannot be substantiated.

An hon. Member: They are heavily subsidized.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Those of us in this group have advocated certain things which should be undertaken by this federal government. I am going to say this. I do not feel that it is fair for the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) to hide behind the skirts of the Canadian wheat board. We know that the Canadian wheat board follows out the policy of this government. What we are advocating is that there can be complementary programs which will assist the Canadian wheat board to sell and to dispose of more wheat. These are the things that we have tried to advocate. I have here a list of eight things which I would recommend:

(1) That the Canadian Wheat Board Act should become permanent legislation; (2) that flax and rye should be included under the Canadian wheat board; (3) fair distribution of box cars; (4) cash advances; (5) farm storage payments; (6) parity prices for wheat; (7) ever-normal granary principle undertaken; (8) barter deals, acceptance of local currency and assistance to hungry, undeveloped and underprivileged people. As I say these are policies designed to complement present policy and to help the Canadian wheat board, not to hurt it.

Mr. Thatcher: But none of them would sell any wheat.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre last Friday, Mr. Speaker, made what I consider to be a number of untenable statements. First, as reported at 914 of Hansard, he said, that the socialists from Saskatchewan usually lack the courage to come out and directly attack the wheat board. I think the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre should be an authority on courage or the lack of it. First I want to say that it is well known in this house that the hon. member, after he defected from the C.C.F. party, sat as an independent to our left here. I do not know whether that was because he did not have the political maturity that he is now claiming in order to decide which way he was going to go. But after sitting as an independent for some months, he put up a political kite in the constituency of Moose Jaw in the general provincial election. He backed the independent candidate there, Mr. Speaker, who was an extremely popular man; and when that man was not elected, of course his political maturity took him to another place. During this time, of course, reports have it that advances were made by the Social Credit party and that there was a berth there for him. Again he could not make up his mind and so we find this hon. member, who last Friday had this to say in the house, now finally rests in the Liberal party, at least temporarily. I say this, Mr. Speaker, simply because this hon. member saw fit not only to sell my province short, in the words he used last Friday, but also my constituency. I feel I must answer him and some of the untenable statements he made at that time.

The speeches made by the hon. member, of course, over the years would probably show that either he had no political maturity then or there may have been some other reason.

Mr. Thatcher: He may have smartened up a bit.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I just want to say this. I do not want to question the hon. member and his integrity at all but I should say that there are many people who perhaps would do so and that his vacillating political maturity perhaps—

Mr. Thatcher: I never vacillated. That is why I could not get along with the C.C.F.

Mr. Studer: He had some brains.

Mr. Blackmore: Why did you join them in the first place?

Mr. Thatcher: I wish I knew.

An hon. Member: It was the only way to get elected.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): The people will have to judge. It is interesting to remember that the hon. member was elected to this house in 1953 as a C.C.F. candidate. In seeking the nomination he made the following statement—I want to quote the hon. member because I want to be fair to him. I think he needs a great deal of fairness in this matter. He is quoted in the Moose Jaw Times-Herald of October 22, 1953 as follows—"When I joined the C.C.F. party originally,"—

Mr. Thatcher: Five years ago.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I took the chair just a few moments ago but since I took it I have been wondering whether we were discussing an hon. member of this house or second reading of the wheat board bill. I wonder whether the hon. member would confine himself to the bill?

Mr. Thatcher: Let him go on.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): With all respect to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I intend to do so. But I should call your attention to the debate which took place in this house on Friday last as reported at page 914 of Hansard. The hon. member then made reference to certain crown companies and he attributed to us certain statements which I say are completely untenable and which he made in an effort to make it appear that we had in some way attacked the Canadian wheat board. I want to try to indicate to this house that anything we said in respect to that matter—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I was not in the chair when the events to which the hon. member refers took place. As I say, I just took the chair a few moments ago and it was impossible for me to recognize that we were on a debate on second reading of this wheat board bill. I must ask the hon. member, under the circumstances, to confine himself now to a discussion of the principle of the bill.

Mr. Nicholson: On the point of order which you have raised, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. While the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre was speaking on Friday last I raised the question of whether the Saskatchewan crown corporations was a proper subject to be discussed in this debate. The occupant of the chair at that time gave permission to the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre to proceed and the understanding was that, in due course, members of this party should be permitted to go as far afield as the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre went on Friday. I suggest to Your Honour that you examine the words of the occupant of the chair on Friday and compare the remarks of the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) with the general line that has been followed by the hon. member for Moose Mountain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall most certainly examine the record for last Friday, but at the present moment I am bound by the rules of the house. As I say, I could recognize on my entry to the house no relevancy whatsoever in the remarks which the hon. member was making in connection with this bill. Therefore, I am forced to ask him at this time to confine his remarks to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, what the hon. member for Mackenzie said was correct. I would hope that you would find it possible to let the hon. member for Moose Mountain reply to my remarks on these crown corporations. I did make certain charges; I think they were correct. If there is an answer, I would like to hear it; but of course, that matter is in your hands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is impossible for me at the present time to agree to such an extension of the debate. That could be done only with unanimous consent, and unless there is unanimous consent, I must apply the rules of relevancy which would certainly militate against the type of debate such as the hon. member is now conducting.

I understood him to say that he was going to quote from certain remarks made by the hon. member last Friday. I do not think I could disallow that but, if I recall correctly, he commenced to quote from some newspaper article of some years ago. That, in my opinion, would not be relevant to this debate.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, with all due deference to your ruling, I should point out to you that on Friday last, when the Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite) was in the chair, this question was brought up by the hon. member for Mackenzie. He said that if the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre was to continue —and, of course, I think he was digressing from the debate—it would only be fair to permit us to answer him, and on that occasion the Acting Speaker permitted the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre to continue. He did so, and dealt with the crown corporations of the province of Saskatchewan. I maintain that he placed untenable statements on the record at that time and I should like to reply to them. The hon. member also tried to indicate to the house that the statements of us in this group could not be taken very seriously in respect of what we advocate in connection with the Canadian wheat board simply because he associated with our remarks in this house the fact that we had not been successful in the province of Saskatchewan in operating crown corporations. He therefore drew the conclusion that anything we advocated with respect to the Canadian wheat board would be improper.

What I was quoting from, Mr. Speaker, appeared in the October 23, 1952, issue of the Moose Jaw Times-Herald. This is what the hon. member is reported to have said:

When I joined the C.C.F. party—

Mr. Thatcher: I learned a lot since then.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should just like to quote this for the record:

When I joined the C.C.F. party originally I did so—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There seems to be a private altercation going on between two hon. members of the house when we should be discussing the wheat board bill. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat.

I have now before me the ruling of the Acting Speaker last Friday. It reads in part as follows:

I have no intention of permitting the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre to go farther than to make the same type of reference or listing of what he considers comparable matters as has been done in previous speeches made in this debate.

Now, I do not think that that quite agrees with the interpretation of the ruling put upon it by the hon. member for Mackenzie. As I say, I am in some difficulty because I was not present in the house when the debate took place last Friday, but it appears to me that the hon. member is going far beyond what we recognize as relevancy, and I must ask him to confine himself to the principle of the bill.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I am going to accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I wish to say that I feel there is quite an injustice being done when an hon. member can rise in his place on the other side of the house and in the main part of his speech make certain statements which are completely untenable. As I said at the beginning the hon. member tried to indicate that the brick plant, which is in my constituency, was not successful. I feel that by the statement he made not only did he sell my province short but my constituency. The fact of the matter is that the brick plant at Estevan, Mr. Speaker, is making a profit today. It is producing a product which is a quality product, and which is being sold all over Canada for industrial purposes.

Mr. Thatcher: I have in my hand the balance sheet which was put out by the Saskatchewan C.C.F. government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Thatcher: It shows a deficit of $176,000.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must insist that both hon. members are ranging far from the purposes of this debate, and I hope I do not have to rise to my feet once more to indicate that we are discussing a bill dealing with the wheat board, and we must confine ourselves to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Ellis: Protected again.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I enter this discussion? We are discussing a wheat bill which changes the date "1947" to "1952" in two places in the bill, and that is everything that is in the bill. It seems to me that the latitude which is being allowed here is absolutely nonsensical.

Mr. Ellis: Why did you not tell your colleagues that?

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister not mean "1957" to "1962"?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Probably.

Mr. Knowles: Ten years out again.

An hon. Member: That is a petty detail.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it makes it very difficult for me to try to answer the untenable statements which the hon. member made the other day.

Mr. Ellis: He is using hit-and-run methods; he is afraid of the answers.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I have the facts here, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member said that the Saskatchewan crown corporations had lost millions of dollars for the people of Saskatchewan. That is not borne out by the facts because on all the money invested in the crown corporations there has been a profit.

Mr. Byrne: Who got the money?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I just want to put some of the facts of the situation on the record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): During the year 1954 the annual payroll of those crown corporations was $13 million and the total business transacted by all crown corporations was $46 million. Exclusive of the power corporation and government telephones, a total of $10 million was invested in the remaining crown corporations. At the end of 1954, after deducting all the deficits of $1,754,000 from the total surplus of $6,759,000, these companies showed accumulated earnings of $5,005,000 by the end of 1954.

Mr. Byrne: Who got the money?

Mr. Ellis: You approved the bookkeeping.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am going to let the matter rest there but in conclusion I should like to say that the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre is now taking a different attitude from that which he took on June 7, 1949.

Mr. Thatcher: I have learned a lot in eight years.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): In the Moose Jaw Times-Herald of June 7, 1949, the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre is reported to have said:

Thatcher Lauds Crown Firms

C.C.F. candidate Thatcher reviewed the record of the 16 crown corporations, which he said were currently under fire from the government critics. The province's record was an indication of what would be achieved on a nation-wide scale by a federal C.C.F. government, he explained. He admitted that the tannery had been a mistake, and the brick plant, the woollen mill and the fish board, had also operated at a loss. He pointed out that the profits from the others had given the total over-all investment a return of nine per cent, which is a pretty good return, as any businessman must agree. In any case the projects had a primary purpose by supplying jobs which private enterprise had failed to do in the province, he declared.

Mr. Ellis: Put that in your pipe and smoke it.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I rise for the dual purpose of mentioning that the hon. member, although he submitted to my ruling, nevertheless went on to discuss crown corporations, a discussion which I think is entirely out of order under this bill.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I would like a chance to put it all on the record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: However, my primary purpose in rising is to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Thatcher: Would the hon. member permit a question?

An hon. Member: No, he has expired.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Smith) now has the floor.

Mr. J. A. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join with my colleague the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) and other members of this group in signifying our intention of supporting the second reading of this bill.

Mr. Byrne: O.K., that is all.

Mr. Low: He has to talk about something else now.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): We in the west are very appreciative of the value of the Canadian wheat board. Far too many of us in the west can well remember the days of the old Winnipeg grain exchange. The fact that every agricultural organization in western Canada has expressed general satisfaction with the Canadian wheat board and its operations is significant indeed and it speaks highly of the officials of the board. In that connection, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Blackmore: Listen to these words of wisdom.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): I wish to personally thank Mr. McIvor, the chief commissioner of the Canadian wheat board, and through him to extend my thanks to his associates, for the co-operation and assistance which has been extended to me at all times as a member. I have never had to wait unduly for answers to any of my requests.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Can't take it, eh?

Mr. Thatcher: I do not think you will send this speech home.

Mr. Byrne: No, it has been pretty well loused up.

Mr. Knowles: That is a good word to describe your activities.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I might point out that in 1943 the wheat board became the sole agency for the marketing of western wheat. This agency was established at that time under the War Measures Act. At the end of the war the Canadian Wheat Board Act was passed by this parliament establishing it in its own right. By 1949 popular demand was so strong that in that year the marketing of oats and barley was included within the scope of the Canadian wheat board. Popular demand is again growing and insisting that the marketing of flax and rye be handled solely through the wheat board.

At its convention last December the farmers' union of Alberta passed a resolution which urged the federal government to include the marketing of flax and rye under the wheat board. The farmers' union of Alberta is supported in this respect by practically all of the farm organizations in western Canada. I trust that government supporters will give favourable consideration to this request upon a future occasion.

The whole problem of grain marketing has been very much before the people of the west for several years. The inability of the farmers to deliver their grain to any elevator, not to mention the elevator of their own choice, has caused a lot of dissatisfaction among western farmers and farm organizations. We have a large surplus of wheat in Canada according to some standards but according to other standards the surplus is not so large. A 90-day reserve is not a huge surplus. However, owing to the poor management of the government this surplus has worked adversely against the farmers of the west; in fact it has adversely affected the whole economy of the west.

In this connection, I might point out, I recently received a letter from one of my constituents, a businessman in a small town, who had this to say:

> One hundred grain permits have been transferred from our town to C.N.R. points . . . People three and a half miles from here are hauling grain 19 miles. Last year these C.N.R. points had a quota of eight bushels compared with our five. The wheat board promised that in fairness, low delivery points of last crop year would be given high quotas this year, yet these towns on the C.N.R. are again ahead of us on quotas. Do you blame farmers for dealing where they can sell more grain? These 100 permits represent 40 per cent of our total permits which is also reflected in a 40 per cent loss of business to our small town.
> The crux of the matter seems to be a shortage of box cars. The grain agents here have 41 shipping orders which would increase our quota almost three bushels.
> Can something not be done about this . . . situation?

Here we have an illustration of blame being directed at the Canadian wheat board over something for which they are not responsible. The Canadian wheat board must operate within the confines of the marketing policies established by this government. It must depend upon the railways for help in moving grain from the local elevators to the terminals. We witnessed a lack of co-operation last spring on the part of one of the major railways and the consequent effect upon orderly marketing.

Toward the close of the last regular session the Minister of Trade and Commerce promised in this house that attempts would be made to equalize quotas in the west. I do not know just how successful those attempts have been in the west generally but I do know that in my own particular area this promise has not been fulfilled. At the end of July 1956 there were only seven points in my constituency on a 5-bushel quota. If the promise had been carried out those points would have secured cars to raise their deliveries. What do I find on February 1, 1957? Four or five points are still on a 2-bushel quota. In my area 24 points are on the 4-bushel quota, 28 on a 3-bushel quota and 17 per cent on a 2-bushel quota. Little or no attempt has been made to equalize grain deliveries in this area.

Last fall I took this matter up with the Canadian wheat board officials and in the concluding paragraph of their letter to me they state:

> Other than to continue to press the C.P.R. advising them of the situation at these low quota points, there is not much that we can do to further assist in this matter.

I agree with the statement made by the Canadian wheat board but I think something could have been done and should have been done at that time, if the government had taken the action it should have taken. During the course of this session we were told that the government has not seen fit to appoint a transport controller because of the actions of some naughty boys on this side of the house. I submit that this is a very weak excuse. The wheat board is being blamed unjustly simply because the government has not seen fit to appoint a transport controller who would bring orderly marketing in the west. I feel that the government has not acted in this regard because it realizes it is powerless to assist the wheat board in securing orderly marketing in the west as long as it continues to follow its present marketing policies.

I now wish to spend a few moments dealing with marketing and our markets. Last evening I listened to a speech by a member on the other side who assured us that we would continue to have our markets, but I am of the opinion we are losing our markets and will continue to lose them until our policies are changed. We often hear the grain marketing policies of the United States criticized in this house. Whether we like it or not we must admit we are losing our markets to the United States. Our government has refused to accept the currencies of other countries and has refused to enter into barter deals. We are told by leading government officials that huge reserves of grain in Canada are a good thing, but who pays for those huge reserves, who pays to keep them? Is it the people of Canada as a whole? No, the brunt of the burden is borne by the farmers themselves.

In recent years we have developed a large export market for grain with Japan and in this connection I should like to quote from the Wheat Pool Budget of November 16. The title of the article is "Who Cares about Grain Markets?" and it reads:

> Trade Minister Howe recently predicted that Japan will probably become our best customer.

Beyond question this market is only being held and developed because of our growing imports from Japan.

To the Canadian farmer and many others this increased trade and better market for wheat is sound business. To the Financial Times and the Canadian manufacturers, however, it is a different story. On November 2 the Times decried the trend toward a balanced trade with Japan and bewailed the harsh effects on Canadian manufacturers. It revived the old cry that they were not receiving sufficient protection against the products of low priced labour.

It is evident that interests in Canada are quite prepared to sacrifice agriculture in order to maintain their rigidly protected special preserve in the home market where they can make big profits. Canadian exporters, particularly the farmers, must buy the goods they require from protected Canadian manufacturers at much higher prices than are charged elsewhere. At the same time they are penalized in the marketing of their own goods abroad, not only by foreign tariffs, but also by the resistance of the Canadian manufacturer to a balanced trade. In short, some section of the Canadian people must pay a special levy to another, but themselves are not to be permitted to make a living. The Financial Times may be the mouthpiece for high finance but it has a very distorted idea of sound economy.

Unless we start buying from countries to which we sell our agricultural products we cannot hope to maintain our export sales to them. The farmers are forced to place their grain through the wheat board upon a highly competitive market. Early this year it was announced that the United States had agreed to make foreign aid available to Poland and she will likely give the same privilege to other satellite countries. Last year Canada sold Poland 14 million bushels of wheat. We are likely to lose this market if we maintain our orthodox system of marketing. Last year we sold wheat to Russia and satellite countries, much of which was financed on short-term loans. So far this year we have heard of no sales of grain to communist countries. What is happening to our markets there? What is happening to our markets in India and Pakistan? New markets must be found and established markets must be held if we are to get rid of our surplus.

Cash advances on farm-stored grain have been urged from time to time in this house. Last year the $1,500 bank loan bill was passed but it proved to be of little or no help to the farmer. Some way must soon be found either to permit farmers to market their grain, or if we wish to continue our level of production there must be a system of cash advances handled through some government agency other than the wheat board.

Speaking in this debate last Friday the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) discussed the two-price system for agricultural products. He pointed out that most agricultural organizations were requesting such a system. In its brief presented to the federal-provincial agricultural conference held in Ottawa December 3 to December 6, 1956, the interprovincial farm union council had this to say:

We believe that immediate consideration should be given to a program of parity prices on the domestic market and adequate support prices under exports. The Canadian farmer has not participated in Canada's economic boom, but presently finds himself subsidizing the Canadian consumer. If subsidized food is what we want, then the taxpayers of Canada as a whole should bear the cost. Agricultural producers have borne the cost for longer than they can afford.

And further down:

Action must be taken to increase prices to producers. A parity price on the domestic market related to production costs and Canadian living standards, we consider a reasonable request. We recognize that in order for our grain to compete on the export market, it must be sold at competitive prices. Present world market prices do not give the Canadian producer a sufficient return to meet his present costs of operation. Therefore, we recommend that deficiency payments or a support price structure be instituted to cover exports and return to producers their fair share of the national income.

That brief was in support of the plea which the hon. member for Acadia has made over the past several years for the introduction of a two-price system for all agricultural products grown in Canada.

Another matter which has caused great concern among the farmers of Alberta is the special quota of three bushels per seeded acre for barley. This quota was not in operation in our province but it was in effect in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. While we are prepared to admit that the officials of the Canadian wheat board must have sufficient stocks on hand to meet necessary export commitments at all times, we do feel that in this particular instance the barley producers of Alberta have been discriminated against. It is to be hoped that a demand for barley at the west coast terminals will soon arise so that the Alberta producers will be able to take advantage of this additional special quota.

Last year it was my privilege to attend the farmers union of Alberta convention in Edmonton. Farm problems were discussed at length by the delegates attending that convention and several resolutions with respect to grain policy were passed. The convention asked for such things as the inclusion of the marketing of flax and rye under the Canadian wheat board; it asked for the extension of bilateral agreements; that all grains used on the domestic market be sold at parity prices; that a uniform quota policy be adopted on an annual basis. The convention asked for cash advances and that such advances be the full initial payment. It asked that advances be paid on the basis of one-half of the deliverable grain and that all administration and interest charges be borne by the government of Canada. It asked that these advances be repayable on the basis of one-half the value of each delivery made by the farmer.

The convention also discussed the setting up of a food bank and also the distribution of box cars, that they be so allocated that farmers may deliver their grain to the elevators of their choice. Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) should give very serious consideration to the immediate appointment of a transport controller. I have here a short article which appeared last evening in the Ottawa Journal. It had been taken from the Winnipeg Free Press, and it deals with the position of the transport controller among other things. The heading is "Parliament a Scapegoat for His Own Failures?", and the article says:

In the House of Commons Mr. C. D. Howe said that the position of federal transport controller had become "completely untenable". The government had not named a successor to Mr. Roy Milner, who resigned as controller a few months ago, because it had been unable to find anyone to take the job.

This reluctance was due, according to Mr. Howe, to the treatment Mr. Milner received when he appeared before the parliamentary committee on agriculture last year.

Mr. Howe should not try to blame parliament for his troubles. The reason lies more with the government than with parliament.

The transport controller has never had any real authority to enforce his control over bulk shipments within Canada. He has had to try to achieve his purposes by making informal requests to the railways and to other trantsportation agencies.

Mr. Milner's success as controller is a tribute to his personal qualities and ability. If he was not at times as successful as some people felt he should have been, the fault lay in the lack of authority necessary to the proper carrying out of his duties.

Mr. Howe's way out of this difficulty apparently would be to have the controller act as a kind of secret agent for the government, exercising influence behind the scenes and not subject to questioning by parliament.

Such a concept is utterly unconstitutional. Either there is a job for a transport controller to do openly and properly, in which case his work can and must be subject to parliamentary scrutiny; or there is no place for him at all.

It is high time that a minister of the crown stopped trying to make parliament, the basic institution of our democracy, a scapegoat for his failings in administration.

I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, that it was not only the transport controller who was blamed; it was the Canadian wheat board, and the board was, during the course of last year, blamed for things for which it was certainly not responsible.

Yesterday morning, Mr. Speaker, I received several petitions from people living along a railway line in my area. The heading reads like this:

Whereas an unfair grain marketing situation exists on the C.P.R. Willingdon-Lloydminster line; whereas farmers in the province as a whole should have equal opportunity to market their grain regardless of their location; whereas the result of the above situation on the said railway line is that an alarming number of farmers are being forced to take out their grain delivery permits at points on adjacent C.N.R. lines, resulting in increased delivery costs to the farmers and unfair loss of revenue to places of business providing service to the above farmers, be it resolved that in view of the above situation we, the undersigned, petition the federal government to investigate and correct this grain marketing problem.

Mr. Speaker, I have already pointed out that these farmers are on a low quota basis. They were promised by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) last August that they would be given additional quotas. They have not been given them. The only recourse was for 650 of them to sign these petitions and send them to me so that I could forward them to the proper authority.

I am going to send these over to the Minister of Trade and Commerce right now, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask him to see whether something cannot be done immediately to give the farmers in this area the square deal they deserve. I might mention, Mr. Speaker, that these petitions come from such places as Derwent, Clandonald, Marwayne and Streamstown.

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to make any extended remarks this afternoon, nor is it my intention to review the history of the Canadian wheat board. That has been done very capably on two or three occasions by members who have already taken part in this debate.

When the Minister of Trade and Commerce introduced this bill recently in the house his opening remarks were to the effect that the system of marketing grain through the Canadian wheat board was sound, and we in this group could not agree more wholeheartedly with that statement. We shall support this bill on second reading. We are so confident that the wheat board is the best possible method of marketing the farmer's grain that we were rather disappointed to find, on examining the bill, that it did not make the life of the Canadian Wheat Board Act permanent. We were also rather disappointed to learn that it did not take into account the marketing of flax and rye. We hope that in the very near future we shall see the wheat board take unto itself the handling of all grains in this country.

However, because the Canadian wheat board must operate within the federal government's trade policies it has come in for a lot of criticism. In many quarters throughout this country it has become a sort of whipping boy for the inadequacies of the federal government's grain trading policies throughout the world, and I suggest this is very unfair. The other day the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) suggested that those of us who criticize the federal government's trading policies are making a deliberate attempt to destroy the wheat board. I say that any suggestion of that sort is entirely false. However, I do say this: that very unfair criticism is being directed at the wheat board by the critics who see in the trading policies of this government those inadequacies which are forcing them into a very serious economic position. And the people who are affected immediately charged those difficulties to the Canadian wheat board. I refer, as an example, to the inadequate allocation of boxcars throughout the country. Here is a case where the wheat board is coming in for a great deal of unfair criticism.

I have here a clipping from the Star-Phœnix of recent date to the effect that in the vicinity of Aberdeen five elevator agents and 56 farmers have been hauled into court because they had violated the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

On another occasion, in the vicinity of Davidson, Saskatchewan, 19 farmers and three elevator agents were haled into court because, as the result of economic distress brought about by the inadequacies of federal agricultural policies, they had actually been forced to violate the law. I think this is very unfortunate. As was pointed out by the judge who heard these cases, this is the first time this has happened, and it is a clear indication of the great economic distress the farmers are suffering at the present time because of the failure of the government to implement a realistic agricultural policy.

The minister also said in his address, and I agree wholeheartedly, that the principle underlying the Canadian wheat board has won wide support from producers throughout western Canada. That is true. You know, I am always a little amazed when a bill is brought into the house dealing with the Canadian wheat board to listen to the efforts of both the government and the official opposition in vying with one another to take the credit for establishing the Canadian wheat board. I suggest that the efforts and support of western farmers over the years were much more responsible for the placing of the Canadian Wheat Board Act on the statutes of Canada than any other single factor.

The minister also mentioned that the value of the Canadian wheat board was, unfortunately, not shared by the people in other quarters of Canada, and again I agree. The day following his announcement that an interim payment was going to be made I was a little disturbed to see a very responsible eastern Canada newspaper saying in effect that this was in part a subsidy paid by the government and the people of Canada to the farmers of the west. Such statements go far to discredit and confuse just what the Canadian wheat board is attempting to do and what it stands for. I had hoped that on the following day there would be a statement by some spokesman for the government to the effect that no subsidy was being paid in connection with the interim payment to western farmers.

The minister referred to the report of the Gordon commission, and again I am in complete agreement. In their observations they say that the initial payment is set for the whole crop that is produced in that one year. It seems a very strange thing to me that a commission with the job, as one aspect of their work, of making a considered report on what should be done with respect to the whole problem of agriculture should not have understood what really is the fundamental principle upon which the Canadian wheat board operates. The commissioners apparently have a complete misconception with respect to the setting of the initial payment. The initial payment does not cover the whole of the crop in any one given year.

That is the reason that we in the west have advocated and will continue to advocate advance payments. The farmer who has to hold over his wheat, who must keep his wheat on his farm because of quota restrictions or a multitude of other reasons, is being penalized. The best example I know of is that in the 1952-53 crop year the total payment received by farmers was $1.81.9 cents a bushel for No. 1 at Lakehead. In the 1953-54 crop year the price had dropped to $1.56.4 cents a bushel or a drop of over 25 cents a bushel. Those who live on the Canadian National branch line from Prince Albert to Hudson Bay Junction are in a very favourable position because of the haul to Churchill. Those who live on that branch line are able to deliver a great deal more grain than the unfortunate people who live on a C.P.R. branch line in the same vicinity. The result is that we are able to market a great deal more grain than those who live on a C.P.R. branch line. They keep their grain and they lose 25 cents a bushel because when the next year rolls around and they market their grain they are penalized to that extent.

I believe we are quite justified in suggesting to the government that we should have a system of cash advances to more or less equalize deliveries to farmers everywhere. As far as cash advances are concerned, I think the government has already established the principle of cash advances because in simple language this is what the government is doing at the present time. They are saying to the farmers: If you will take your grain out of your own granary or your own elevator where it is not costing anyone anything for storage and put it into somebody else's granary or elevator—one of the commercial grain handling companies where you have to pay storage we will pay you for that grain. It is nothing else but a cash advance. The initial payment is only a cash advance against final settlement at the end of the crop year. Therefore I suggest that the government has already recognized the principle of cash advances.

According to the minister, the Gordon commission in their review of the grain problem operated on the assumption that we were going to have a surplus problem. The minister says that is not true. I think I will have to take exception to that statement by the minister because the statistics certainly seem to bear out the fact that we are going to be confronted with surpluses for a good many years to come. It is quite true that in the last ten years the average exports have been 15 million bushels higher than in the long term period of 33 years which is generally used in this connection. But I should like to point out that the average production in the same ten years has been 61½ million bushels greater than in the long term 33-year period.

Taking the average of 15.7 bushels per acre, which is the long term average, it is going to take from four to five years to reduce the present surplus to 100 million bushels. But in the last ten years production yields of wheat in western Canada have jumped from 15.7 bushels to 21.3 bushels per acre. Therefore if we take the latter figure into consideration with respect to reducing surpluses, it is going to take seven years to reduce the present surplus to 100 million bushels.

The minister says that we have had bumper crops in the last few years. I agree entirely with that statement but I suggest he is a little optimistic when he thinks that possibly we will revert to production yields comparable to the 15.7 bushels per acre of the 33-year average. Because of technological advances I think we can look forward not only to a fairly sustained yield of 21.3 bushels per acre but to even higher yields than that. We have had bumper crops for the last few years but I should like to point out this fact. Back in 1954 we harvested in western Canada only 282 million bushels. It is necessary to go away back to the 1930's in order to find a year when we harvested as little. You therefore cannot say categorically that we have had bumper crops throughout the last few years.

What is the solution to this problem? I suggest that we have one of two choices to make. We either must increase our exports or must cut our wheat production. I am not against cutting our wheat production. I never have been against it. I always maintain that there is a market for other things besides wheat. When you consider that in western Canada we have literally millions of acres of land which is being sown to wheat but which should be sown to some other crop, if you are going to talk about an economic operation then I suggest it would be quite feasible to cut our wheat production. By that I do not mean to say that we should cut our production of agricultural products. We should diversify our agriculture. Hence we have advocated a system of parity prices in order to bring about diversification of western agriculture so that we would not have these tremendous surpluses of wheat that are growing year after year.

However, I can readily understand the government's reluctance to accept a program that would lend itself to diversification because they then would end with surpluses of other products; and they are not prepared to expand their trading policies in order to get rid of those surpluses any more than they are prepared to expand their trading policies to get rid of more wheat than they are getting rid of at the present time. But if we are to produce wheat without any plan, if we are going to keep on with an agricultural program in this country without any planning as to what we are going to produce, the only thing that is left open to us to do is to export more wheat. Present indications point to the fact that we are losing our market for Canadian wheat and that we stand to lose more markets for Canadian wheat. In the light of the present disposal program that has been initiated by the United States government we may well lose the few new markets that we have been able to gain behind the iron curtain. Since October, under public law 480 sales contracts to foreign countries by the Americans have amounted to something over $2 billion.

I am always a little bit amazed at the Conservative party when they criticize the United States disposal program as a give-away program. I should like to deal for a moment with the so-called give-away program with respect to the United States agricultural products agreement with India. The United States has sold India $400 million worth of agricultural products. Most of it has been wheat. That deal calls for repayment over a period of 25 years in Indian currency, at an interest rate of 3 per cent, no interest to be collected in the first three years of the agreement, the money to be left in India in order that they may develop their natural resources and their industrial capacity. I cannot see anything wrong with such a plan. Barter contracts between the United States and foreign countries in the last two years—I refer to barter deals alone—have amounted to some $600 million. Three-quarters of them were negotiated with the United Kingdom and countries of western Europe, with the exception of a small order to Japan and to Greece.

Canada has lost its position in the wheat markets of the world. Not only have we lost our position in so far as international wheat agreement sales are concerned but we have lost it under other agreements as well. Under the international wheat agreement we have met only 49 per cent of our commitments. The Americans have gone up to 68 per cent of all they contracted for. Exports to iron curtain countries from Canada have accounted for the major part of the wheat that we have marketed outside of the countries that normally trade with Canada. Last year 45 million bushels were exported to iron curtain countries. If the negotiations under way materialize between the Americans and the iron curtain countries, in all probability we are going to lose even that limited market.

When Canada is confronted with the United States disposal program, the best we can do is simply to say that we cannot afford such a program. Yet I should like to ask this question: What can we afford? I know that we can afford to spend from $200 million to $250 million in building a prototype of the CF-105. We can afford that, but apparently we are not able to afford to develop any trade program with any other country. If we are not able to dispose of our agricultural products individually as one country I would suggest to the government that we should explore the possibility of associating ourselves with the United States in an effort to dispose of them jointly with that country.

I should like to deal for a moment with one other aspect of this bill. It has to do with grain deliveries and the allocation of box cars. It seems that there is in the minds of the western farmers more confusion now as to the allocation of box cars than there ever was previously. Last year before the committee on agriculture of this house the transport controller told us exactly how box cars were being allocated. Yet when he appeared before the select committee of the Saskatchewan legislature he told that body that, as against shipping orders, the wheat board directed the railroads to allocate box cars. Certainly that was an entirely different story. So it developed from that statement that in the Carrot river area in my constituency there were 71 shipping orders outstanding, and they had been outstanding for several months. When in desperation the farmers of that area communicated by telegram with the wheat board as to what they should do in order to get box cars to that point where 71 shipping orders were outstanding, the wheat board replied that it was the problem of the railroad and they suggested that the farmers in that area should contact the officials of the railroads concerned. I am not sure, but I think most of those shipping orders are still outstanding. Then on a C.P.R. point in the same area they were not able to get box cars and they have not been able to get box cars for several months; the situation did not change until I and another farmer spoke to one of the junior grain commissioners and asked him if he would try to get a few box cars for that area. Within a matter of hours seven box cars were on the track at the point that was brought to his attention.

Certainly, I think the government will have to agree that this is a very loose way to allocate box cars when one has to make personal contact with one of the members of the board of grain commissioners.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say once again that we are supporting this bill. We will vote for second reading. But our criticism is levelled at government trading policies because, after all, the wheat board must operate within the framework of the government's trading policies.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention at this time to spend very long on this question. I have spoken on it before and other members of our party have stated our position most clearly. Therefore, I do not intend to repeat many of the points raised by the members of this group. However, I wish to say at the beginning, so that there will be no misunderstanding the position which we take on this matter, that we intend to support Bill No. 9, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act to extend the operations of the wheat board for another five years. I think the reason for that is evident. The reason most members in this house, and particularly those from western Canada, are in agreement with extending the operations of the wheat board for another five years is that we do not want to go back to the open-market methods of years ago. Those of us from the west can well remember the state of affairs which existed in those times. Nearly all the bills which the farmer had accumulated came due in the fall immediately after threshing and invariably the price on the open-market system was the lowest for the year. The farmers were compelled to sell their grain at that time to meet their obligations and therefore they took the lowest price possible.

It is true that when you look at the statistics you will see that the average price of grain over the year might have been fairly good, but certainly the cash income that the farmer received was at a very low level. We do not want to see those conditions return.

The wheat board has been in operation now for some 14 years. As far as the western farmers are concerned, it has been proven that they obtained a far better average price during those 14 years than they ever had before the board came into existence. They would not have received that price had the wheat board not been in existence in the last 14 years.

The wheat board—and I agree with this—has had a stabilizing effect on the marketing of wheat. We were glad to see oats and barley included in the operations of the board and we would like the government to go farther and extend the operations of the board to flax and rye. We would also like to see the government take a step to make the wheat board legislation permanent.

On February 1, when the minister spoke about the operations of the wheat board, he went to great lengths to explain that the wheat board had been a success. He pointed out—and I think properly so—that all of the farmers and all of the farm organizations were in support of the continuation of the wheat board. If that is so—and I think it is so—then the government should take immediate steps to put the wheat board under permanent legislation. What is the use of year after year, or every five years at the most, renewing the life of the board or bringing down an amendment to extend the life of the wheat board for a further period of time? If it has been proven that it is a success—and we all agree that it has been—then I think we should put the board under permanent legislation. If that were done it would eliminate most of the criticism that comes from those who support open-market operations in their continuous effort to try to undermine the wheat board and have it done away with so that the old practices may continue to the benefit of the favoured few and to the detriment of agriculture and all those connected with it.

There is another question that I should like to refer to for a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, namely, the question of surplus. Some hon. members may think that we western members take this problem too seriously, and they may at times become impatient with us because we repeat our arguments in favour of western agriculture. But this is a serious problem as far as agriculture is concerned. Mind you, agriculture is the primary industry of this country. If we have a depleted agriculture, then the economy of the whole of Canada will be seriously affected.

This surplus problem is causing us a great deal of trouble these days. We now have on hand, or did have on January 9, 357,636,000 bushels of wheat. The government itself has recognized that this is too big a problem for the farmers themselves to take care of. The minister has indicated that. Finally, after all these years, the government has come to the conclusion that it should not be the sole financial responsibility of the farmers to carry this tremendous amount of wheat from year to year. It is a national problem, and certainly as the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Smith) stated a few moments ago when he was speaking, it is in the national interest to have a storehouse from year to year of this very essential commodity so that should there arise a national disaster in the production of wheat our country would not have to suffer as a result. But it is beyond all reason to ask the Canadian farmers to carry this whole burden. The government did take a step in the right direction not long ago when it agreed to pay the storage charges on all wheat in excess of 178 million bushels. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, when the government took that step it acknowledged to the country, and particularly to the farmers, that the policies which it had been pursuing over the last years have certainly not been justified and the forcing of the farmers to pay the carrying charges on the surplus was something that should not have happened.

After having acknowledged their shortcomings in this respect by agreeing to pay storage on all wheat in excess of 178 million bushels, it does seem to me that the government has a responsibility to compensate the farmers of this country for the losses which they have incurred because of the government's failure to recognize the problem and make amends in that respect. Even yet the government refuses to acknowledge that the surplus problem is a continuing one.

When the minister spoke to the house the other day in regard to this matter he referred to the Gordon commission's reference to surpluses, he had this to say, as reported at page 891 of Hansard:

> The Gordon commission recommendations appear to be based upon the assumption that there is likely to be a continuing surplus problem. I do not share that view and I think it would be a great mistake to base our policies on such an assumption.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is in contradiction of the action taken by the government not long ago in agreeing to pay storage charges on that grain in excess of 178 million bushels. In that act the government acknowledged that we had a surplus problem and that it is likely to be a continuing one, and yet when the question is brought before them with a view to having them take care of the surplus problem they say, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, that they do not share the view and it would be a great mistake to base their policies on such an assumption.

The Alberta wheat pool had something to say on this question in the January 4 edition of the Wheat Pool Budget. In a broadcast made on January 1, Mr. A. T. Baker, general manager of the Alberta wheat pool spoke of the surplus problem on behalf of the wheat pool and expressed his view concerning whether or not it is likely to be a continuing problem. In this article he is quoted as saying:

> From the wheat producers' standpoint the future still does not appear rosy, nor is it entirely gloomy. We have surplus stocks which neither planned acreage reductions nor crop failures, short of unpredictable disaster, are likely to dissipate for several years. We will probably have to live with substantial reserves of food for some time, and learn to value them as the assets that they really are.

That is an opinion which was expressed after considerable consideration. Surely when the minister finds there are so many people who are versed in this problem taking the view that it is going to be a continuing one he should urge the government to introduce policies which would assist in solving the problem.

Even the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) is not alarmed at this situation because he expects that before many years have passed the drought now prevailing in the Southern United States will eventually come up to Canada, and we will have disastrous crop conditions again and then the problem will be solved. I trust that we shall never have drought conditions in this country and even if the time should come when drought conditions prevail they will not be as serious as in the past because they will be offset to some extent by improved methods of agriculture and proper irrigation. Irrigation should be extended as far as possible in Saskatchewan and Alberta so that if drought should occur we will not have the low yields we used to have when drought conditions existed. The minister is going a long way in saying that the possibility of future droughts will eliminate our surpluses.

We are not the only country that is bothered by a surplus problem. The United States is having to face up to a similar situation but the government of that country approaches it in an entirely different manner from that of this Liberal government. The government of the United States recognizes that surpluses particularly in wheat are going to continue and not only are they introducing policies at this time but they have already introduced policies to take care of the problem. It would seem to me that the federal government would be well advised to adopt at least some of the methods that have been adopted in the United States in order to deal with this ever-increasing problem.

I have in my hand a copy of the Western Producer for Thursday, January 3 in which is reviewed an article written in the United States news and world report under the heading, "One farm policy that is beginning to work". This, of course, refers to the surplus problem and the article examines what is called the two-price system that is in existence in the United States. Let me read in part the summary which the Western Producer makes of this report as it relates to the problem to which I have referred. The report says:

> In effect, a two-price system has been set up. There is the domestic price at which government supports farm products. Then there is the second price, set at the level needed to move the surpluses into consumption abroad. Immense sales abroad have followed the decision to use the two-price policy.
> Actually no two-price law, as such, has been passed. Officials do, however, have authority, under various laws, to sell abroad at discount prices. They can sell for dollars to the highest bidder, or they can make deals with friendly nations for foreign currency. Barter deals are part of the plan, and much of the surplus is just plain given away.
> The taxpayer—not the farmer—finances the whole works.

May I pause for a moment to say that the few price supports we have in Canada have not always been supported by all the people of Canada. We remember that during the war when the wheat board was forced to sell wheat to Britain under the British wheat agreement at less than world market prices because of federal government policies the farmers sustained a tremendous loss amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. At that time the government promised the farmers they would not have to bear the loss alone and that after the war a sufficient support price would be established to make up that loss. Of course every hon. member in this house knows that this was not done and the farmers have had to bear the entire loss themselves. This government went even further and caused the wheat board to sell wheat to the millers of this country at a rate lower than the market price. There again the farmers themselves and not the people of Canada had to subsidize—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, that is not true and my hon. friend knows it. That subsidy was paid by all the people of Canada.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I know that the price at which wheat was sold to Great Britain during the war was below the world market price and when the wheat was sold to the Canadian millers at about 78 cents the government made up the difference between that and the wheat board price.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): The Canadian price was $1.25.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The only compensation the farmers received was $65 million which the government said they would turn over to them as compensation for their loss but the farmers lost approximately $350 million all told.

Mr. Decore: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Yes, surely.

Mr. Decore: I believe the hon. member was in the house at the time the United Kingdom wheat agreement came before us for ratification. Did the hon. member vote in favour of that agreement or against it?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): He certainly never voted in favour of the farmers sustaining that loss.

Mr. Decore: That was not the question. The question was, did you vote in favour of the agreement?

Mr. Blackmore: Of course he voted in favour of it.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That was during the war, Mr. Speaker, and I supported that agreement in order to help Britain; but never on any occasion have I supported the farmers sustaining that loss. In fact, it was the Minister of Agriculture who stood up in the house at that time and assured us there would be a support price on agricultural products to offset any loss that might result. The hon. member who has just interrupted was one of those who sat here and listened to that statement. He knows very well that the $65 million which was later paid to the farmers never began to compensate them for the losses which they had endured. Does he agree that the $65 million completely compensated the farmers for the terrific losses they took in subsidizing low-cost living, not only for the Canadian consumer but for the British consumer as well?

Mr. Decore: That is not answering my question. Why did you vote for it?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I did answer the question.

Mr. Harrison: Is the hon. member aware that some spokesman for the present British government has claimed just the opposite to what he says, that is, that the British wheat agreement overpaid us by millions of dollars?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am not arguing their case at all as that is not my concern. I do say that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) stood up in the house and said that the farmers of this country should not have to take a loss as a result of that contract. Do you remember that? Where have those promises gone? Right now we find that the farmers of this country underwent a loss of $350 million and they were compensated only to the extent of $65 million.

I was pointing out that the people in the United States are recognizing that this surplus problem is a continuing one, but this government does not recognize it as such. It should. I think they admitted that when they agreed to pay storage on the excess of 178 million bushels. They knew it was going to be a continuing problem or otherwise they would never have agreed to pay that. I am not criticizing them for having paid it; I think they should have paid it as it was something long overdue. Up to that time the farmer had to pay the full shot. This article goes on and summarizes this as follows:

> For the first time in years surpluses are moving out faster than they are coming in and there is to be a year-to-year decrease in the stockpile.

That shows the results of the methods the United States are using. I do not agree with all the methods they are using, but from their point of view they are the right methods because they are getting rid of these surpluses. The farmers there are not standing the losses, they are being underwritten by the government and not by the farmers. Here is an important section I should like hon. members to listen to:

> We are learning to use these surpluses as a positive factor in our foreign policy. These donations to other countries for relief of famine, flood and other disasters, plus the sales for foreign currency, are making friends for us in many countries that we're trying to keep from slipping under Russian domination.

Let me stop there for just a minute and say that if we could prevent other countries, especially Asian countries, slipping under communist domination by a gift on Canada's part of a few million bushels of wheat I think it would be well worth the price. I am not suggesting that the farmers should make that donation, it should be made by the government of Canada and the farmers of Canada should be given a fair price for the wheat they have raised. The United States contend that they are making friends because of this. It is all right for the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) to stand up and say that they do not agree with the methods the United States are using, but those methods are producing results as far as the United States government and the United States people are concerned. I would rather have a few million dollars spent to give wheat away than see some of our boys sent over there to be shot in defence against communist aggression. It seems to me that that would be a much better plan. The article goes on:

> The mood of agriculture department officials and of Congress indicates that the government's surplus policy is to continue.

That finishes the summary as far as the United States policy on agriculture is concerned, but the Western Producer goes on to say:

> That ends our summary of the article. In spite of the fact that Canadian sales are keeping up remarkably well, there are grounds for a degree of alarm at the aggressive tactics being pursued by the U.S., more particularly by the implicit assumption that it is no flash in the pan but rather a settled, continuing policy. This is not set down here for the purpose of arousing criticism of the U.S. Experience has shown that this would be simply a waste of breath. Rather, Canada alone or in co-operation with other countries should be moving in with an equally aggressive, dynamic sales policy. If not, the time may come when we will be left holding the bag and the bag will be full to overflowing with wheat.

That is about what is happening in Canada. We may not agree with all the methods the United States are adopting, but the fact is that their farmers are prosperous. United States farmers are getting well over $2 a bushel for their wheat. No reasonable comparison can be made between the economic position of the farmer in the United States and that of the farmer in Canada.

For a minute or two I should like to say something about advance payments. This is another thing the federal government is not very fussy about. When the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) was speaking on Friday, January 11, he made some reference to the mention in the Gordon royal commission report of advance payments on farm-stored grain. At this point let me say that I certainly do not agree with all the recommendations and suggestions regarding agriculture contained in that report, but I do agree with the principle that there should be an advance payment on farm-stored grain. We in this group, particularly the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) who has spoken on this at great length, have repeatedly requested the government to make advance payments on approved farm-stored grain. However, the Prime Minister, who is the leader of the government, seems to take objection. As reported on page 120 of Hansard of January 11 the Prime Minister had this to say:

> I was rather surprised that there should be in that section pages that appeared to me not to reflect a proper conception of what parliament had intended the role of the wheat board to be.

That was referring specifically to the question of advance payments. I want to refer again to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce had to say on February 1 when he took the same view. I have quoted one section referring to the Gordon commission where the minister indicated that he did not consider this surplus to be a continuing problem, that he felt it would be wrong to base government policy on that assumption. Of course the minister is on record as being opposed to making cash advances on farm-stored grain. His great objection was that this certainly should not be done through the wheat board, and I agree with him in that respect. However, there are other agencies which are capable of handling this and on other occasions we have suggested that perhaps the elevators could do it.

I am not arguing about who should do it—that is the government's responsibility. But certainly it should be done. It is common knowledge in this house, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of western Canada are finding very great difficulty in getting the cash that is necessary for them to finance their farm operations. In fact, almost everyone has had to go into debt in order to get money to carry them over, and last fall, when these debts became due, people still had no money—in fact, in a great many cases, they had not paid the farm loans which they had received the year before. And how can you expect them to pay when they cannot sell their grain? It seems to be putting a farmer into an impossible position when he must of necessity accumulate debts in order to carry on his farming operations. Then fall comes; the farmer threshes his grain—and has no place to sell it. And still we need the surpluses, at a time when people all over the world are starving. Surely, this is not a time to consider reducing these surpluses. However, the government thinks nothing should be done in this respect.

Another unfair condition which existed last fall was that farmers were not able to sell very much wheat. This matter came up before the agriculture committee, and Mr. Milner, who was transport controller at that time, pointed out to us that he had had difficulty, particularly with the C.P.R., in getting cars allocated to points where he thought they should have been sent.

I had some of these points in my constituency, and last year they had only delivered up to about a five-bushel quota, and some not even that. When I wrote to Mr. Milner about it—I was referring at that time particularly to the Standard area in my riding—he said action would be taken, and I must give him credit for sending some box cars in there immediately. That brought the quota up in some points to five bushels. But he did say, too, that he would see that this particular area would have continued special attention. Of course, nothing further was done.

The problem that these people face is that they did not sell more than five bushels last year. Now they start again this year under a handicap. Sure, they had a 300-bushel initial delivery. Then the quota started, and some of them to this day have only got two and three-bushel quotas.

How is it possible for agriculture to carry on under these conditions? I think we have reached a point, Mr. Speaker, where the government should recognize the importance of making some provision for giving cash advances on farm-stored grain in order that our farmers may get some cash with which to carry on.

I shall not continue further, Mr. Speaker, because I am sure you would not allow me to do so, anyway—I see my time is nearly expired—and it is not my intention to prolong the proceedings on this occasion. It is certainly not my intention to hold up the present passage of this bill, because we want to see it go through. I hope, however, that the government will take into consideration some of the serious problems I have brought to their attention, because agriculture needs some assistance. Farmers are not asking for charity by any means; they are only asking that this government should take some action that would give them a cash return so that they can pay the many obligations that they are required to meet.

Mr. John Decore (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend the term of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, giving it an additional life of five years. As one who represents a grain-producing community I would like to say a word or two in connection with it.

Many speakers have risen and suggested that this should remain as permanent legislation. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that as long as the farmers in western Canada want the wheat board system of marketing, this act, when it comes up again in another five years for consideration, will be further renewed. This government has embarked on this policy of the wheat board system of marketing and I do not think there is any danger whatsoever that this act would not be extended.

Furthermore, the present procedure gives an opportunity to review and discuss the operations of this board, and to make suggestions, as we have been doing. As I say, I have no fears that the wheat board method of marketing will not be continued in the future—provided it has not been scuttled in the meantime through the adoption of certain suggestions whereby an extra load will be put on the shoulders of the board in addition to the heavy load which it is already carrying. I propose to say something about that shortly.

Another point which has been raised is the question of the inequality of delivery opportunities, and this is, of course, a very difficult problem. In dealing with it I can probably do no better than to pass on the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he spoke at the Saskatchewan wheat pool convention held at Regina on the 9th November last. This is what he had to say in connection with it:

> I know that you are concerned about what might be termed the inequalities of delivery opportunities. This is an extremely difficult problem and the wheat board is doing its best to cope with it. But it cannot perform miracles and it cannot afford to put equality of delivery opportunities ahead of selling wheat. The wheat board had to take advantage of every demand which came along. This demand, in many cases, was for specific kinds of grain and grades of grain, and not all delivery points in the west could supply these requirements in equal volume. Therefore, the wheat board had to be selective in its shipping policy in order to move to terminals the grades of grain required to meet demand. This caused some inequalities in delivery quotas, but I thought the wheat board was wise in shipping the grains and grades which could be moved promptly into the domestic or export market. Only by taking this action did we reach the volume of exports and the volume of sales which were attained in the past crop year.

Then the minister goes on to say:

> Let me give you one example. When the crop year 1955-56 began, the board had very substantial holdings of low grade wheat—No. 5, No. 6 and feed wheat—amounting to well over 100 million bushels. By the end of the crop year the board had sold all these stocks and had to look to the 1956 crop for additional supplies of these grades. The selling of this volume of low-grade wheat could not have been accomplished except by taking every step possible to move these particular grades into selling positions.

As I say, there are inequalities of delivery opportunities. It is a serious problem at certain points in western Canada but I think the complete answer is given in the statement made by the minister. I think history will record that during these trying years the wheat board had to stand the acid test with respect to its performance in the face of great obstacles. It faces great difficulties in the marketing of our grain, greater particularly in the last two years than at any time since the end of the last war.

What have been some of the problems that have confronted the wheat board? Briefly they have been these. First of all, we have had superabundant crops. During the last six years we have had five of the largest crops in the history of this country and the world was simply not in a position to absorb the record crop production in Canada with the result that some had to be carried over on farms and in elevators. That was one problem over which the government and the wheat board had no control.

The second problem was the heavy subsidization of wheat importing countries throughout the world. Some of these importing countries encouraged production at home by means of high internal prices. Again that is something over which the government and the wheat board had no control.

The third problem, and a very serious one, is the surplus disposal methods followed by the United States government. I was surprised to hear some opposition members, including the last member who has just taken his seat, suggest that we should also endeavour to follow some of the same methods of disposal of our surplus grain as the United States is following.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): On a question of privilege, I did not say that. I stressed very clearly that I was not advocating all the methods used by the United States. I made that very clear.

Mr. Decore: I said some of the methods.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): If the hon. member had heard what I said he would be deliberately misrepresenting.

Mr. Decore: I repeat that the hon. member suggested that we follow some of the disposal methods followed by the United States.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Some of them.

Mr. Decore: If the hon. member had listened to me he would have heard me say that.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The hon. member did not say that.

Mr. Decore: I am going to point out to him and to others who raise this same point that there is a great deal of difference between Canada and the United States in this respect. First of all, the population of the United States is over eleven times greater than that of Canada. Second, in the United States they consume right at home 4 bushels of every 5 bushels of wheat they produce. The reverse is true in Canada. For every 5 bushels we produce we can hardly consume one bushel, and we have to find a market for the other 4 bushels beyond the boundaries of Canada. Wheat is one of our very important export commodities and to suggest that we follow the same methods, that we compete with the United States by selling our wheat for a great deal less or follow its give-away program, is certainly one thing that will wreck the wheat board if it should adopt such a suggestion.

It would mean that either the farmer would get less for his wheat or the taxpayer would have to put up the difference. You can be sure of one thing, that if the taxpayer has to put up the difference between the price that we get on the world market and the price that we would get under such a policy—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Does the hon. member agree with support prices for agriculture? That is what has happened in the United States.

Mr. Decore: We have price supports and because of our price support program the Canadian farmer is today getting better prices for some of his agricultural products than is the case in the United States.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): There is no support price for wheat and the hon. member knows that.

Mr. Decore: We have a price support program in Canada and we are getting better prices for hogs today than the farmers of the United States.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Let us talk about wheat. That is what you were talking about and that is what I was talking about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I might point out to the house that it is not so long ago that I felt impelled to point out that the hon. member who has the floor should not be interrupted without his consent—

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): He does not know that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): —and I think I might make the same point again.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): He should not talk about me like that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Decore: Mr. Speaker, despite the very serious problems with which the wheat board is confronted, despite some of the crackpot suggestions we often hear as to what the wheat board should do, the wheat board refuses to be panicked, the wheat board refuses to resort to firesale methods of selling grain, the wheat board refuses to enter into give-away programs. The wheat board has sold a lot of grain. Last year we had one of the best years in Canadian history so far as sales of wheat are concerned. I think history will record that in that respect the wheat board has done a very excellent job. If it had not been for the wheat board we might be in the same position now as we were in 1932 when the price of wheat went down to the lowest level in Canadian history.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That was the Conservatives. They are through.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): There he is again.

Mr. Decore: We do know that there are powerful interests in this country such as the Winnipeg grain exchange, that would like to dispense with the wheat board system of marketing our grain, but I am not so much concerned about them because we know exactly what they are trying to do. I am more concerned about some of these do-gooders who support the wheat board so vigorously and at the same time make various suggestions which, if adopted by the government or the wheat board, would certainly tend to wreck the board.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): That is nonsense.

Mr. Decore: I say the wheat board has a heavy job. It has a big enough job in handling the problems facing it right now without being saddled with extra responsibility and additional burdens.

Mr. Nicholson: Not nearly as tough a job as the farmers.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Another one.

Mr. Decore: As to the remark made by the hon. member, when it comes to some of the C.C.F. members from Saskatchewan I am not sure who does better in singing the blues, Elvis Presley or my C.C.F. friends from Saskatchewan. Ever since I entered the house in 1949 I have heard nothing from that group but calamity howling, singing of the blues, the country is going to the dogs, depression is just around the corner. I have heard that in the house ever since 1949.

Mr. Dickey: It went on long before you came here too.

Mr. Decore: In fact, some of them also do a little rabble rousing on the hustings by suggesting a farmers' march on Ottawa. I understand that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue)—it is too bad he is not in his seat today—has been urging the farmers to march on Ottawa.

Mr. Studer: He is probably out doing it again.

Mr. Decore: I think that is one of the finest bits of rabble rousing that has taken place in this country. I have before me a Saskatchewan newspaper known as the Yorkton Enterprise. In an editorial they refer to a statement made by a provincial cabinet minister of the C.C.F. government, Mr. Fines.

Mr. Nicholson: What date is that?

Mr. Decore: The date is Thursday, January 31, 1957. This is what the editorial has to say:

> Reviewing 1956, Mr. Fines saw it a year of "unparalleled expansion" for Saskatchewan and mentioned three factors he thought responsible.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): That is the expansion you said we could not have under a C.C.F. government.

Mr. Decore: I am quoting Mr. Fines:

> "First, a near-record crop, together with better grain marketings, helped farmers recover from the 1954 crop failure and the reduced income level of 1955," he said.
>
> "Second, non-farm production continued its steady and in some cases spectacular development, and contributed almost one-half of total commodity output.

An hon. Member: The Winnipeg manifesto did that.

Mr. Decore: I do not know whether or not they still have the shoe factory there. The quotation continues:

> "Third, high levels of public and private investment, including very large inflows from outside the province, made much of this expansion possible."

As I say, listening to what Mr. Fines has to say and listening to my calamity-howling moon-gazing, rabble-rousing C.C.F. friends from Saskatchewan, I do not know whom to believe. Of course, we realize that the farmer has had his difficulties.

Mr. Studer: The C.C.F. made it difficult for him.

Mr. Decore: Agriculture has its difficulties. I think that this government recognizes—and it is well known—that agriculture has not fully participated in the increased welfare of our economy in this country.

Mr. Nicholson: Who is howling now?

Mr. Decore: What is the reason for that? I can think of no better answer to give than to quote Mr. Hannam when he spoke for the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at the federal-provincial agricultural conference here in Ottawa on December 3 last. This is what he said:

> The difficulties in which the farmer today finds himself are basically a result of the fact that not only in Canada but in the whole of the western world agriculture has been outstandingly successful in increasing productivity and achieving the expansion of production needed to meet post-war food shortages. This increased production represented one of our most urgent post-war needs. The expansion, however, finally outstripped effective market demand for food and agricultural products both at home and abroad. Coupled with this, the world has experienced a lagging behind of farm products in the otherwise notable post-war expansion of trade.

Mr. Nicholson: That sounds as though Hannam is howling.

Mr. Decore: The government has recognized the problems of agriculture. I do not need now to enumerate the benefits extended to the farmers. They include P.F.R.A., P.F.A.A.; price support for our dairy products; price support for our pork; price support for some of the other commodities; the $65 million that was paid under the United Kingdom wheat agreement and others. I was surprised to hear the hon. member who preceded me in speaking in this debate say that this government does not recognize the surpluses problem.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I was only quoting the minister.

Mr. Decore: Let me remind him that the government assumed the costs incurred by the wheat board in carrying stocks of wheat in excess of normal amount. This is computed on a 15-year average period. On anything over 175 million bushels the government is prepared to pay, with the result that for the 1954-55 pool the taxpayer of Canada has paid the western producer the sum of $31 million, or over 7¼ cents per bushel extra to each farmer in western Canada. Does that mean to say that the government does not recognize the surpluses problem? I think it is clear that, under that legislation, the principle of paying the carrying costs on stocks in excess of 175 million bushels is now part of the law of Canada. When carry-overs come back to normal, as some day I hope they will, this legislation will not be valid. But until such time that legislation is on our statute books. I therefore think it is misleading to tell this house that the government is not concerned with regard to these surpluses of wheat in this country.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I was only quoting the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Studer: If you did not have someone to quote, you could not make a speech.

An hon. Member: You cannot make one anyway.

Mr. Blackmore: Turn up your Hansard and you will see what the government had to say about it.

[Mr. Decore.]

Mr. Decore: In spite of the difficult problem that it has to face, I say that the wheat board did an excellent job. A while ago I mentioned the fact that last year we had one of the best selling years for our wheat in the history of this country. We increased our exports to old customers such as the United Kingdom. In the previous year exports to that country amounted to 102 million bushels; last year they amounted to 109 million bushels. To West Germany we increased our exports by 5 million bushels to a figure of 30 million bushels. Exports to Japan remained about the same, namely 29 million bushels. At the same time trade with regard to our wheat was good with countries such as Belgium, Norway, the Netherlands, Ireland and other western European countries. Then we developed or opened up new markets especially with countries behind the iron curtain and were able to sell 45 million bushels of wheat to those countries.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Decore: Mr. Speaker, just before six o'clock I endeavoured to point out that the wheat board system of marketing has many enemies in the country. I also endeavoured to point out that I was not concerned about those who want to get rid of the wheat board system of marketing. They work quite openly, and we know with whom we are dealing, but I am concerned about those do-gooders—and there are some in this house who have spoken in this debate—who profess to be the real friends of the wheat board but who would saddle the board with extra burdens which, if adopted, would certainly tend to wreck the system. I refer to such things as following some of the surplus disposal methods of the United States and the taking of local currency of other countries. If the currency of other countries is as good as Canada's, then of course, there is no problem; but if the currency is not as good as Canada's then, of course, we would have to sell our wheat at a discount, or at next to nothing, and that would mean that the farmer would either get less for his wheat or the taxpayers would have to put up the difference, and certainly that would be one way of wrecking the wheat board.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the wheat board and the government should refuse to accept some of these so-called fancy deals of accepting local currencies. The farmer would like to see the fairly high level of prices maintained. The farmer does not want the wheat board to resort to firesale methods, fancy deals or the board get panicky. The farmer would rather sell one bushel of wheat at a fair price and keep the other one at home for the time being than sell his wheat for something less. Therefore, I hope that we do follow the wheat board system of marketing our grain. The farmers in western Canada have fought for this for a number of years. They now have it and they would like to see it maintained. They would like to see the wheat board and the Department of Trade and Commerce continue, as they have in the past, a vigorous campaign of finding new markets for our wheat outside of Canada and, above all, the wheat board maintain the high price level that we have had for our wheat in the past.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, the main theme of this debate so far has been, as indicated, the wide acceptance in this house at least of the principle of orderly marketing of our grain. I say "grain" advisedly, Mr. Speaker, because so far we have been hearing a great deal about wheat, which may leave the impression amongst those who are not particularly familiar with the wheat board legislation that it refers to wheat only. I realize that wheat is the most important grain produced in western Canada, but it should not be forgotten that other grains such as oats and barley, rye and flax are also of great importance and in many parts of the prairie provinces are even more important as a grain than wheat itself.

I understand that the orderly marketing principle does in a way open a heartening debate for those of us who believe in orderly marketing of farm products as a principle and as part of our laws. I think it is all the more heartening to hear from members and from party representatives who in the past have not always been quite so friendly to that principle, because basically what has happened in the marketing of grain is that the farmers as well as the consumers have come to the conclusion that this is a commodity which can no longer be left in the hands of private enterprise and which cannot be left to the speculative purposes of those who want to exploit both the consumer and the producer.

The realization of that carries with it a great deal of significance because, as time goes on, it is my guess that that idea will gain ground amongst both the consumers and the producers of this country. In other words, every time that we can show, as I think the wheat board has shown, that it is possible to take an important commodity, and particularly food, out of the realm of speculation, out of the hands of those who would exploit the producer and the customer and put it into the hands of a board which is there to provide the producer with the best possible return, and to pass on that commodity to the consumer at the most reasonable price in order that the margin in between, or the cost of handling, shall be as inexpensive and as efficiently handled as possible, a great service will be performed.

It is very significant that both the producers and the consumers in Canada, as represented in this house, have come to the conclusion that the least expensive and most efficient manner in which to distribute this very important commodity of Canada, in some respects the most important commodity both in Canada and for export, is to take it out of the realm of private enterprise and put it in the hands of a board responsible to the representatives of both the producer and the consumer.

A great deal has been said about the wheat board itself. When the minister introduced the resolution he made one or two very significant statements to which I wish to refer. First of all, he set out in one paragraph a very important explanation. I am glad he did it because it has given rise to misconceptions in the past. There have been people—and probably there still are—in Canada who were under the impression that in some way the Canadian treasury subsidizes or carries the wheat board. On the other hand, there have been people who have been under the impression—it has included many producers as well—that they have a guaranteed price for their grain. Well, neither one is true. I wish to quote these lines of the minister's explanation which I think bear emphasis. He said, at page 890 of Hansard:

> The government authorizes the board to fix an initial price for such wheat as may be delivered to the board within the next crop year, and guarantees the banks against loss through payment of the initial price, but the government does not guarantee payment to the farmer of any price for wheat which is not actually delivered to the board within the crop year.

The reason I repeat these words is to indicate very clearly that the present policy of the government is not to guarantee a price for grain which the farmer produces; it is simply to guarantee the banks against loss of any moneys they advance to the Canadian wheat board for the purposes of the initial price and it is based only on that part of the grain which can actually be delivered. That, of course, depends on the quotas; it depends upon the storage space, availability of box cars, export markets and a great many other factors, so that in effect what the producers have here is only a partial protection so far as the price of the farmer's grain is concerned.

Then, farther on, the minister said, referring to the recommendations of the Gordon commission:

> The Gordon commission recommendations appear to be based upon the assumption that there is likely to be a continuing surplus problem. I do not share that view and I think it would be a great mistake to base our policies on such an assumption.

I agree thoroughly with the last half of the last sentence where the minister says;

> . . . it would be a great mistake to base our policies on such an assumption.

I am not so sure that the minister is quite so right when he says that he does not share the view that we may have a continuing surplus problem.

I will come to that later in my remarks because I believe that is one of the most important matters in connection with the board that we are going to have to face in the next few years; that is, how to devise means by which the Canadian wheat board can continue to provide a service to the producers to an extent which will assure the greatest possible market for their grain.

It has been said that the wheat board has been subject to criticism. I think it would be more correct to say that it has been government policy which has been subject to criticism because the wheat board works within the framework of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It has only certain powers and certain obligations. It cannot in itself evolve policies which are opposed to the policies held by the government. If the wheat board is going to be rid of a great deal of criticism which does not belong to it, it will be necessary for the government to find ways and means to deal with the surplus position to a greater extent than is envisaged by the minister.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) in his address yesterday gave a little of the historical background of the Canadian wheat board. I found it an extremely interesting review but I also found it to be quite incomplete and I would like to devote just a few minutes to that subject. First of all I think it should be made perfectly clear that the only political party in this house that has consistently and from the very beginning supported the principle of a Canadian wheat board as it is now constituted is the C.C.F. group together with some of the hon. members in the party to my left. I refer to only some of them because it has not been the case with every hon. member in that group.

When the hon. member for Provencher proceeded to describe in rather uncomplimentary terms the policies followed by the Conservative government at the time of Premier Bennett and the policies advanced by the present Progressive Conservative opposition through their leader, he left a great gap. What he did not state and what I think is important for us to know is that for a great many years, as a matter of fact up until 1943, the policy held by the Liberal party with respect to the wheat board and that held by the Conservative party were almost identical. There was practically no difference whatsoever in their approach. The following remarks were made by the hon. member for Provencher as reported at page 1035 of Hansard for February 6, 1957:

> The whole record of what took place in 1935 is available for anybody to see. The question that arises is why would the Conservative government actually enact any legislation at all in 1935 if they did not believe in it? The truth of the matter is that in 1935 the Tories had no sympathy with the compulsory board in the first place, and they tried, apparently as they are trying now, to put the blame for their failure on the opposition.

This seems to me to be a case of the pot calling the kettle black. What was the advice offered by the members of the Liberal party who formed the opposition in 1935? I have here a statement made by the present hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Weir) who was the then hon. member for Macdonald, as it appears on page 3633 of Hansard for June 13, 1935. This was the time when what was known as the grain board was being debated in the house. After having indicated that he would vote for the second reading of the bill in order to get it into committee, the following is the advice that was offered by the hon. member. He said:

> At the same time I would hesitate very much to endorse a proposition whereby, at this stage of the game, a permanent compulsory pool organization or board should be established and set in motion to conduct the wheat marketing affairs of the country for years to come. I dislike to see the government go into the grain marketing business.

This was the stand taken not only by the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa but also by other hon. members of the opposition of that day including the leader of the opposition, the late Mr. King, when he stated, as will be found on the same page of Hansard, these words:

> Especially do we reserve our right to regard this measure as one to deal with a present situation, an emergency situation, and not as necessarily establishing a permanent policy.

As one reads the debate that took place in 1935 one gets the strong impression throughout the record in Hansard that neither the government of the day nor the opposition of the day was at all prepared to accept the principle of orderly marketing of grain through a grain board, or through a wheat board as we refer to it today. Both the government and the official opposition of that day regarded this as a sort of hasty experiment at that time which was necessary to meet an emergency situation and then to be got rid of as quickly as possible after that.

Mr. Mang: We are extending it five years now.

Mr. Zaplitny: Yes, I will come to that in a moment. In his introductory remarks the minister pointed out that in September, 1943 a significant and important change was made in the whole set-up of the Canadian wheat board making it the exclusive marketing agency for all wheat in western Canada. He gave the reason for that change and at page 889 of Hansard for February 1, 1957 stated:

> When the open market was below the initial price, producers delivered practically all their wheat to the board. From the point of view of a successful marketing operation by the board, this was a most unsatisfactory position. In a sense it was a sort of "heads I win, tails you lose" proposition.

That is the reason the minister gave for that change. But let me go back to 1935 again and see what sort of advice on that very point was offered by the present hon. member for Portage-Neepawa, the then member for Macdonald. He said, as reported at page 3633 of Hansard:

> My feeling at the moment is that if we could establish a grain board which would be in a position to take offers when the market fell below a certain point, and when the market was above that figure for everyone interested in the handling of grain to be free to market in whatever way they saw fit, we would have the most satisfactory arrangement.

Here we have almost the same words used in reverse. Here the spokesman for western Canada of the Liberal opposition of the day said that the most satisfactory situation would be to have the kind of power which would exist only if the price on the open market fell below a certain figure.

Mr. Jutras: We never pretended otherwise.

Mr. Zaplitny: Do I understand then, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member indicates the policy of the government is still the same?

Mr. Jutras: You are talking about 1935.

Mr. Zaplitny: Well now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said they never pretended otherwise and I want to know if the policy of the government remains the same.

Mr. Jutras: Perhaps I may help the hon. member—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Jutras: Who said sit down?

Mr. Hansell: Someone back there.

Mr. Jutras: I never try to argue that the Liberals in 1935 were not in favour of the compulsory board. The point I was making is that the Tories now try to pretend they approved of the board in 1935 and they did not. That is my whole point.

Mr. Zaplitny: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the hon. member clear that up. However, I would like to ask the hon. member this question, and if he wishes he can make a reply. Does he at the present time hold the same view as was held by the Liberal party in 1935 with relation to the wheat board?

Mr. Jutras: You know the answer to that one too well to even ask about it.

Mr. Knowles: The answer is that the Liberals changed when they crossed the floor.

Mr. Jutras: The answer is in the bill that is before the house. What more do you want?

Mr. Zaplitny: What happened in September of 1943, Mr. Speaker, which caused this revolution in the thinking of the government of the day? Since 1936 when they came back into power they apparently have been prepared to carry on under the system which had been set out in the quotation I read from the speech made by the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa. However, a significant event took place in 1943 which was skipped, and wisely so, in the review made by the hon. member for Provencher. They had made no change up to that time, but in 1943 they did. A most significant thing took place in 1943 which was skipped, as I say, by the hon. member for Provencher. During the summer of 1943, I think it was in August, two by-elections were held in western Canada, one in Selkirk and the other in Humboldt, I believe both on the same day.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Do we have to have this, a discussion of by-elections in 1943? What has this to do with the bill?

Mr. Zaplitny: It has quite a bit to do with it. I have just referred to the minister's words when he pointed out that the situation was not satisfactory and that it was changed in 1943. This was one of the big issues at that time on the prairies. I remember it very well because I took part in one of those by-elections. The Liberal candidates in both ridings expressed their support of the policy which had been followed up to that time and were completely opposed to the present set-up of the Canadian wheat board. They were quite satisfied to leave it to the open market when it reached a certain price. The farmers expressed themselves very decisively in both ridings, so much so that both the Liberal candidates lost their deposits and the C.C.F. candidates were elected. Since that time the policy has changed.

I point out that, simply because hon. members on the government side of the house point out that the policy of the official opposition in connection with the wheat board is one of lukewarmness and unreliability. It is quite well to remember that their policy was quite the same until they were forced into a different position. I refer also to the remarks of the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre which are reported on page 917 of Hansard of February 1 as follows:

> I support with enthusiasm the legislation which is now before us, Mr. Speaker, and I want to tell my hon. friends from Saskatchewan on the opposition benches that there are some members in this house who are not keen about the wheat board because they are a little afraid it may be a socialist measure.

It was too bad that when he was speaking the hon. member did not see fit to identify those members who are not so keen about the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Thatcher: If you fellows keep on talking this way you are likely to vote this down.

Mr. Zaplitny: Hon. members of this house have a right to vote as they please and if they decide to vote this measure down that will defeat the government and we will have an election that much sooner and perhaps a new member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. Since the hon. member has seen fit to interrupt me I would point out that if he is talking in terms of hon. members who are not so keen about the Canadian wheat board because, as he says, it may be a socialist measure, he should identify himself as the first member in that category. There has never been a more reactionary member in this house than the present hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. When he says that he enthusiastically supports this bill I would warn the people in Assiniboia to remember the old saying, "Beware of Greeks bearing gifts." In this case they must beware of a Trojan horse carrying a carpet bag.

Certain recommendations have been made by various farm organizations as to how the present set-up of the wheat board could be improved. One was made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at its annual convention. One recommendation, as reported in the press, was as follows:

> The meeting endorsed the Canadian wheat board and the international wheat agreement. A resolution was passed recommending the wheat board be permanently established as the sole marketing agency for all grains produced in western Canada, including flax and rye, and that legislation covering the wheat board be reviewed at regular intervals.

That is in line with recommendations that have been made from time to time by members of this group, and again during this debate. We believe that if there is to be orderly marketing the wheat board must be the exclusive marketing agency for grain in western Canada and that it should be a permanent body. We would also include rye and flax in its operations. I find complete unanimity on this point among farm organizations. The Interprovincial Farm Union Council made a presentation to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) in December, 1956, which contained this paragraph:

> The membership of the Interprovincial Farm Union Council has, on a number of occasions, gone on record as supporting the orderly marketing of wheat, oats and barley, through the facilities of the Canadian wheat board. At the same time, our membership has gone on record equally as often requesting that flax and rye, too, be placed under wheat board jurisdiction. The basis for this request lies in the favourable experience farmers have had in marketing wheat, oats, and barley through board facilities during the past number of years.

Those are recommendations made by the two largest farm bodies in this country which are in perfect identity with the proposals made by members of the C.C.F. group. We ask the government to give them careful consideration and not just slough them aside. If they do not make a move to carry out those recommendations there will be some serious doubts raised in the minds of members of these organizations as to whether best support of the wheat board on the government side is as strong as they pretend it to be.

Some of the other recommendations we have made have to do with the sale of grain and parity prices. I would summarize our recommendations under six headings. First, as I have already said, we feel this should be a permanent statute. Second, it should include rye and flax along with other grains.

Third, we should be prepared to accept the principle of parity prices. If the government will not go so far as to accept that in connection with all grain handled, it should be accepted at least for grain marketed for domestic use. I am using figures produced the other day by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) and am assuming they are correct. He indicated that in the United States the parity price for wheat was $2.37. The average price paid for wheat in Canada for the 1954-55 pool, after all deductions for expenses had been made, came to $1.44 per bushel. If you subtract $1.44 from $2.37 you arrive at a differential of 93 cents per bushel.

If we applied that differential to the wheat used in Canada for domestic purposes, and certainly no one who is at all reasonable will deny that there is no reason why wheat or grain sold in Canada should be sold at a price which is not at parity with the prices of other products, and it is only justice that that be done, it amounts to approximately 70 million bushels of wheat which would come to about $65 million. That means that at the present time the farmers have a perfectly justifiable grievance when they say that the $65 million which could be realized, not by selling their grain at excessive prices but simply at parity prices for domestic use in Canada, should be added to the amount of money in the wheat board fund which could then be distributed in the form of dividends or interim or final payments to the producers. I think that the government or parliament generally should be prepared to go at least as far as to provide that the grain which is sold for domestic consumption would be sold at a price which is considered to be a parity price at the present time.

Then we ask that the government should accept the principle of establishing a national grain reserve. I say a national grain reserve to make it clear that I believe this should be the responsibility of the whole nation, both producers and consumers. If we accept the idea that there should be a reserve of grain we should also accept the principle that this reserve should be maintained and financed as the responsibility of the whole nation and not of the farmers alone. It is a fortunate thing that Canada is in the position of being a great producer of grain with a huge carry-over from year to year. It is a fortunate thing for the world, because one never knows when there may be a serious crop failure, or a shortage of food in any corner of the world which will bring people to the point of actual starvation. We are the breadbasket of the world, and if we are to carry out this obligation as a nation, we must not leave it on the shoulders of the producers themselves.

It is not fair to ask the producers of Canada to carry the burden of these huge reserves of grain from year to year. If we accept what I have suggested as a national policy, then we should set up a national food reserve of grain which would be stored and financed by the treasury; the farmers who produce the grain would be paid for the crop they produce and, that having been done, the government would take over. That, in effect, is what is being done in the United States—they are treating the surplus as a national food reserve and then using various means to market that grain both on the domestic market and in countries abroad.

This brings me to the fifth point. We propose that the government should seriously explore ways of obtaining new revenues and export markets. I know that the minister and some of the hon. members on the other side of the house have stated, even in their speeches during this debate, that these methods used by the United States to dispose of its grain were open to question. They have called it a "fire sale".

Mr. Thatcher: A "give-away".

Mr. Zaplitny: That is another description which the hon. member has supplied. I think it is a little shortsighted to approach a well-thought-out program which has proved to be effective and beneficial to the nation and to the producers in the United States, with such an attitude, and to laugh it off as a fire sale or as a give-away. As a matter of fact it is neither one thing nor the other.

Mr. Thatcher: It certainly is.

Mr. Zaplitny: If the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre would take the trouble to inform himself of what is actually being done in the United States with regard to the disposal of grain I am sure he would not use those terms. They have a number of ways, in the United States, of applying this plan which I have mentioned, but I will refer only to three of them. One of the ways is by selling grain for local currencies—various currencies.

Mr. Enfield: That is the Mutual Security Act.

Mr. Thatcher: It is giving it away.

Mr. Zaplitny: No, not at all. It is accepting local currencies for the purpose of being able to make a deal which would not otherwise be possible.

Mr. Weselak: What do you do with the local currency?

Mr. Zaplitny: Part of it is held to the credit of the exporting nation to be liquidated by goods to be obtained from the country to which the grain has been delivered.

The other method used to dispose of the grain is intended to promote the expansion and development of the countries concerned—

Mr. Thatcher: Britain won't buy it that way.

Mr. Zaplitny: It is a desirable way in which to carry on trade with these countries. One can call it a give-away or a fire sale, but I think it is a smart way to do business, and since it is the only way in which you can do business with these countries I think it is smart to take advantage of the opportunity.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Thatcher: You have not made one suggestion as to how we could sell more wheat.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Zaplitny: I have never objected to interruptions. I rather enjoy them, and sometimes I make them myself, but I would appreciate it if only one member at a time would interrupt so that I could identify who is speaking and reply to what they say.

The other method used is what they describe as disaster or famine relief. That could be called, in some sense, a give-away but the amount so disposed of represents only a very small part of the total grain dealt with under this project.

Another method by which they dispose of a great amount of their grain is in exchange for strategic materials, either from the country to which the grain is shipped or from some other country with which the country of the first part may have a credit. What does all this amount to? I want to point out to hon. members that this is no laughing matter. In the crop year of 1955-56 they have disposed of 156.3 million bushels for local currencies.

An hon. Member: Gave it away.

Mr. Thatcher: At substantial discounts.

Mr. Zaplitny: Using the second method I have described, they disposed of 67.4 million bushels in one phase and 112 million bushels under a slightly different plan. If you limit the figure for famine relief—it is not given, but it can be estimated—to 10 million bushels, you will find they have disposed of a total of 335 million bushels of grain through the commodity grain corporation.

Mr. Thatcher: We exported 309 million bushels for cash.

Mr. Zaplitny: Yes, but these 335 million bushels of grain was over and above what they sold for cash—it is over and above what the United States sold in the course of regular commercial transactions. The hon. member says we have sold about that much for cash, but they have sold by special deals as much as we have sold for cash through these various deals, plus what they have sold in the course of their various commercial transactions.

If my hon. friends do not think that this deserves at least an intelligent investigation —that it does not deserve at least the courtesy of study and consideration on behalf of the producers of Canada, and can simply be laughed off—that would indicate to me that they are not particularly anxious to improve our export situation. And let me say this—

Mr. Byrne: We are going to vote for this bill despite you.

[Mr. Thatcher.]

Mr. Zaplitny: We are going to be faced for years with these surpluses. The pressure is going to become greater and greater on this parliament, and consequently on the wheat board, to find ways and means of improving our export position and I think the least we can do is to give intelligent and serious consideration to these means which I have referred to, and apply that part of the plan which is applicable to Canada under Canadian conditions. If we do that, we shall have done something.

I see my time is rapidly running out. As my last point, I would say this. We have asked, and we ask again, that a system of cash advances for grain be instituted so that the farmers may be put into a position of carrying on their normal operations. We cannot expect them to do this unless we provide some system of cash advances so that farmers can at least get the money required to undertake their normal expenditure.

I thank the Chair for the courtesy it has shown me. I see my time is a little overdue, but I imagine some time has been added on account of interruptions.

Mr. Hahn: Before the hon. member takes his seat, I wonder whether he would answer a question. I dislike guilt by association without the naming of the people who might not support the wheat board. Would the hon. member please indicate whom in the Social Credit party he meant who might not support the wheat board?

Mr. Zaplitny: I do not think I said there were any members to my left who did not support the wheat board as such. What I did say was that not all members of the group regard the wheat board in exactly the same way, and that is indicated by their own speeches. Unfortunately I do not have time to go into the record now to show that but I think I have indicated quite truthfully that not all members of the party to my left regard the wheat board in exactly the same light.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I rather regret to see a tendency to inject unnecessary politics in a discussion of the wheat board.

An hon. Member: Far be it from you.

Mr. Blackmore: It is far too difficult a problem to arrive at a solution of to indulge in such lightmindedness as playing politics concerning the very important matter of the production, conservation and marketing of wheat. In commencing my remarks I should like to refer to the submission of the Manitoba federation of agriculture and co-operation to the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects in a 43 page brief that they submitted in the fall of 1955. In short, the general message of their submission was that a continuation of recent trends would spell disaster for agriculture.

It is well to bear in mind who it was who made the submission and to whom they were making it and then reflect that these people solemnly declare that unless the trends in agriculture now in progress in Canada are changed the whole set-up spells disaster for Canadian agriculture. That is not calamity howling. That is the serious, sober message of the Manitoba federation of agriculture and co-operation in the fall of 1955.

I do not propose to go into any considerable detail with respect to what these people had to say but I will quote one short passage from their 43 page brief. This one has to do with the loans which are necessary in order that our farmers may be able to carry on. It reads:

> We are forced to the conclusion that government backing for agriculture loans is essential, and for the maximum diversification and wider spreading of the risks, this must be a nationwide scheme sponsored by the federal government. We favour increased use of Canadian farm loan board facilities with interest rates at the lowest level possible.

I hasten to concede that the Liberal government has gone a considerable distance in the direction of meeting the demands of that statement but I am sure that every hon. member who has given the matter any sober thought is convinced that the federal government has not gone far enough yet. That is all I propose to say in introducing what I wish to talk about tonight.

I wish to say that the Social Credit case with regard to wheat has been put by the hon. members for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Smith) and Bow River (Mr. Johnston).

An hon. Member: And New Westminster.

Mr. Blackmore: I believe that in a general way they have put the whole case completely. They have not done so, of course, in every detail but I support wholeheartedly the cases put forward by these three members, and all Social Crediters will be prepared to do the same with respect to the wheat growers of the prairie provinces. We will grant that the British Columbia members have a problem which was very well indicated by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn) the other day. In my judgment that problem has to be met and dealt with. But the Social Credit program, as the three members whom I have mentioned have outlined, has to do particularly with the well-being of the wheat grower on the prairie farms.

In the first place, we approve of the wheat board. We will all vote for the wheat board. I am sure we all have voted for the wheat board and we have voted for the wheat board without all the frills which I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) tried very hard to imply that we wanted, to add to the responsibilities of the board with the danger of wrecking the wheat board. I think it was quite unworthy of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to make those remarks. He is old enough to know better. I will have something to say about that later.

As I said, we favour the wheat board as the means of marketing wheat, oats and barley and we desire that flax and rye shall be added to the commodities marketed through the wheat board.

We favour advances on farm-stored grain and here, of course, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Decore) and others who are looking for us to bring up something like this, including the Minister of Trade and Commerce, will begin to writhe. But let me specify that these advances on farm-stored grain are to be made directly from a federal agency outside the wheat board entirely. There is no reason why government money cannot be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada directly, without having the wheat board assume any responsibility with respect to either administration or to the provision of the means of paying. Certainly everyone with a tithe of the experience of the Minister of Trade and Commerce ought to know that. These advances on farm-stored grain would be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

An hon. Member: The old taxpayer.

Mr. Blackmore: Yes, of course, the whole taxpayer, just as the whole taxpayer pays for all they are doing in the United States. If, with the tremendous potential production of the United States, that country with its enormous population finds it wise to pay for the well-being of their farmers, I think we will find that Canada can afford to do the same kind of thing. Here we have France giving special considerations and even Turkey and many other countries economically far inferior to Canada in every possible way. Yet they are able to make payments out of their consolidated revenue funds of money paid by all the taxpayers, just as the taxpayers in the three prairie provinces are contributing generously to the provision of funds with which to pay for a great many other expenses incident to the carrying on of the life of Canada at the present time.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Including the seaway.

Mr. Blackmore: As my hon. friend has said, including the seaway, and many other projects. We are not complaining, and it is high time that the ordinary taxpayer of Canada stopped complaining about trying to help us out in our time of need. That is important to bear in mind. If we cannot face this problem as solid, sober Canadians, what is the use of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) talking about unity in Canada? What does unity in Canada mean if it does not mean united we stand and divided we fall with reference to every aspect of our economy and the carrying on of our national life?

The government already has an example of what can be done and the government and the Minister of Trade and Commerce know that it can be done. The government has already agreed to pay storage on all grain in excess of 178 million bushels. Where is the money going to come from? From the wheat board? No, it is going to come from the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. Why cannot the same source be used for the money with which to pay advances on farm-stored grain?

An hon. Member: Take it all, John.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): We only get what you fellows leave.

Mr. Blackmore: That is the second thing. Now for the third one, and this is an exceedingly important matter. It is that we make provision for adequate, approved storage facilities on the farms and that that provision shall also be made out of the consolidated revenue fund and not through the wheat board. We do not expect the wheat board to build the great terminal elevators the government build. We do not expect the wheat board to build the elevators all over the land including the pool elevators that are built. They are built by other agencies. Approved farm storage, which in my judgment ought to be on every farm in Canada where the farmer so desires it, ought to be built through a fund which will not be a responsibility of the wheat board but which will come either directly out of the Bank of Canada or out of the consolidated revenue of Canada, whichever one the government sees fit to use.

This matter of approved farm storage is exceedingly important for several reasons. I think nearly everyone who has given careful thought to the agricultural problems of Canada, as have most of the hon. members in this chamber in all parties, realizes that the time is coming before long when many of the storage facilities which we now have, like pool elevators and the various line elevators, will have to be renewed. They are wearing out. Already the interest on the capital invested in those facilities is so heavy that it raises the cost of storage to the farmer so high that it is almost crushing him. When those facilities come to be rebuilt, unless some most unforeseen thing occurs, they will be rebuilt at costs at least three times as great as were the costs when they were first built, and the interest on all that capital expenditure will be added to the burden which now rests on the farmer, in the matter of storage of his grain, as another additional crushing weight to squeeze out what little bit of economic life there still is in him.

We cannot afford to disregard these matters. If we can get approved farm storage built on the farm and so manage that the farmer himself comes to own those storage facilities, then we shall be on the way toward a situation in which we can overcome much of this onerous burden of interest which now is resting so heavily upon our farmers. I therefore repeat that we want approved farm storage on the farm wherever the farmer so desires.

We want parity prices on grains. Of course that involves subsidies. Let not the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) nor any of his cohorts rise and say that there is another proposal that will wreck the wheat board. It will do nothing of the sort. The money which will pay those subsidies to produce parity prices will come once more out of the consolidated revenue fund; yes, it will come out of the taxpayers just as those special subsidies which pay high prices for the grain produced in England—little England burdened and beset with all manner of trouble—come out of the taxpayers. The taxpayers are glad to pay those subsidies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blackmore: Yes, they are. Every taxpayer that is informed and not deluded by a lot of silly socialism is glad to pay. Every taxpayer realizes that every bushel of wheat that can be produced in Britain is one more step in guaranteeing that he will be able to eat in time of sore trial, and that is no small consideration. He has been through it twice. He has been through two times of sore trial when he was not more than about two weeks from starvation: in world war I and in world war II. Do not imagine that he wants to be in such danger again. I therefore do not hesitate to suggest that the general taxpayer in Canada should pay in order to subsidize so as to give the farmers a fair price.

The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) pointed out that when the manufacturers in Canada of machines that the farmers must have take it into their heads that they will advance the price of machines six per cent—as they did two years ago—they do not ask the government for permission to do so—or if they do so, it is all behind the scenes—but they advance that price, and what do they do? They take it out of the taxpayers of Canada just as easily as falling off a log and the general taxpayers of Canada pay.

An hon. Member: They pay money in higher wages.

Mr. Blackmore: They pay in all sorts of ways. When the price of steel was advanced in 1946, with the direct consent of the government and maybe of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, by $5 a ton, did the Canadian people as a whole have anything to say about it? Not a word. It was just done, and the cost of producing all over Canada was raised by an enormous amount just by that simple move that those people made, just as simply as a raindrop would fall from heaven. The Canadian taxpayers paid it directly and indirectly, and they are still paying it. Then the steel workers struck and remained on strike for 82 days in order to get their share of the $5 a ton. They finally got their increase in wages and the increase in wages finally went across all Canada and everybody in Canada paid it—every taxpayer—and is still paying it.

We must be realistic in approaching all these matters. Hence I say we want parity prices. We want the subsidies to be paid out of government revenue and not by the wheat board. Social Credit advocates a parity price of $2.37 per bushel for domestic market wheat and we want a fair price on the wheat that is sold abroad. I do not propose to go into any detail with regard to that matter at the present time.

We in my constituency and we Social Crediters as a whole approve the present international wheat agreement. We do not feel that the price was high enough but we believe in international wheat agreements. We approve of the one which has already been negotiated and under which we have been carrying on for some time now.

In my constituency, and generally throughout the prairie provinces, there is great dissatisfaction with the allocation of box cars at the present time. The blame for this situation is not to be laid at the door of the wheat board as many hon. members, including the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Decore), truthfully pointed out. Of course it is none of the Wheat Board's business. They are not charged with the responsibility of providing box cars. Just what are all the reasons behind the difficulties from which we have suffered for several years now in respect of box cars it would perhaps take almost a royal commission to determine because there is a great deal of disagreement concerning the matter. But nevertheless, whoever is responsible for seeing that those box cars get out there so that the farmer can sell to the elevator of his choice, he should be getting into action and producing results at the earliest possible time; and we are so demanding through this speech that I have now been giving, or at least my constituency is doing so.

We insist on the maintenance of the Crowsnest pass agreement undisturbed and unaltered. We hear so much talk about a proposed modification of that Crowsnest pass agreement that it makes us furious every time we think about it. We do not want a change even to be thought of.

That is all I propose to say at the present time in a general way in supplement of what has already been said by the three members whom I have mentioned as being spokesmen for the Social Credit position.

Before taking my seat I wish to say that there is a good deal of debating among farmers in my constituency who are affected. There are some of them who speak through the interprovincial farm union, and some of them who speak through the Alberta wheat pool. There are others who speak through the Canadian federation of agriculture, I suppose. Before I take my seat I propose to read the proposals that have been made by the Alberta wheat pool delegates during the past year. I am reading from the Alberta Wheat Pool Budget of January 18, 1957, at page 2:

> A number of policy resolutions were passed at the 34th annual meeting of the Alberta wheat pool delegates which indicate their stand on many matters pertaining to grain marketing. In most cases they were re-endorsements of previous policy. They were:
> 1. Support of the Canadian wheat board as the sole marketing agency for western Canada grain and expression of appreciation of the present operations.
>
> 2. Renewal of pressure to have flax and rye marketed by the Canadian wheat board made even more urgent since both grains are on quota.
>
> 3. Approval of the present international wheat agreement.
>
> 4. Commendation of the government's action in concluding wheat deals with iron curtain countries in line with requests from wheat pool delegates, last year, "that aggressive sales policies be adopted in all countries, including those behind the iron curtain," and recommendations that this market be further developed.
> 5. Approval of the government's undertaking to assume carrying charges on part of the surplus wheat stocks, this being partial fulfilment of last year's request from the delegate body.
>
> 6. The recommendation of a domestic price for wheat of $2 a bushel, the ceiling of the present international wheat agreement.
> 7. A reinstatement of their insistence that the Crowsnest pass agreement must not be disturbed or altered.
> 8. Instructions to the board of directors to continue, with every means possible, the campaign to have box cars allocated to elevators on the basis of the farmer's choice.

9. Urge that the government offer inducement to farmers to take land out of wheat acreage and plant it to a soil-building crop. They suggested that a representative committee of governments and farm organizations be set up to draw up a plan.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the end of my contribution to the discussion of wheat thus far in the year 1957.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is rising to take part in the debate?

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I did feel that I would like to say a few words in the debate. The house will realize that I do not profess to be any authority upon the matter of the wheat board; but as I listened to the genial member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) speak this afternoon I must confess that I found myself rather puzzled at the way in which the members of the Social Credit group, including the hon. member for Bow River, appear to be able to speak out of both sides of their mouths at the same time.

Having listened to a number of speakers on the subject of wheat marketing in this house, I recognized that there was some similarity in some of the things which the hon. member for Bow River was saying to some of the arguments which are advanced by the members of the C.C.F. group in this house with respect to wheat policy and the wheat board. I am quite sure that the hon. member for Bow River, and the other members of his party who have spoken in support of second reading of this bill, were quite sincere in putting forward the views that they have expressed.

Mr. Wylie: Thank you for the compliment.

Mr. Barnett: But the thing that puzzles me is the rather neat way in which they are able to keep their thinking in separate compartments in relation to different aspects of the life of the Canadian people.

Mr. Wylie: If you had one compartment you would be lucky.

Mr. Barnett: I recall that some little time ago I listened to a speech delivered in this house by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell). It seems to me that if the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Macleod were consistent the sentiments expressed on that occasion by the hon. member for Macleod would be the sort of things that one would expect to hear him and the hon. member for Bow River say in relation to the passage or otherwise of the bill that is now before us. I am referring to a speech which the hon. member for Macleod made in 1955, which will be found at page 314 of Hansard of that year. On that occasion he was making some comments on the policies of the Liberal party and of the C.C.F. party, and he was suggesting that the Liberal party in some ways was just a little smarter than the C.C.F. party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Barnett: I would not agree with that. He had this to say:

They are a little smarter than the C.C.F., because the C.C.F. wear heavy clog boots when they propose something, letting everybody know they are coming.

At that point Hansard records that the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) interjected, "honest, honest". Then the hon. member for Macleod went on to say:

But the Liberal party are smarter, because they put on their socialist carpet slippers and creep up on the public. Eventually socialist legislation is put on the statute books, and some time after the people suddenly awaken to the fact that they have been engulfed in a sort of socialistic welfare state, without their knowing it. The Liberals give us socialism by stealth; that is the difference between the parties.

An hon. Member: Read on.

Mr. Barnett: I am sure that the house might be interested in being reminded of some of the ensuing remarks and interjections that were made in the house on that occasion, but I think I have read enough of the speech of the hon. member for Macleod to illustrate the point I have in mind.

As I understand the idea behind the Canadian wheat board, it is to establish, under the responsibility of the government of Canada, an agency for the orderly marketing of Canadian grain. There may be some other aspects to it that I have not yet been able to comprehend, but essentially that is what I understand it to be. That is why I am surprised that people like the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Macleod on other occasions—we will just say simply the members of the Social Credit party—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You are not right in either instance. The remarks you have just read have nothing to do with the wheat board.

Mr. Barnett: That is why I am surprised that when they come to a discussion of having the government handle and look after the farmer's grain in the province of Alberta they are prepared to go along and support the ideas that are supported by people they call socialists in this house.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Heaven forbid!

Mr. Barnett: As far as any other aspect of our Canadian life is concerned, they are perfectly prepared to throw the rest of the Canadian people to the wolves of what they call free enterprise. I think it is about time they began to straighten out their thinking on some of these matters. It is all very well for them to come to this house and set themselves up as a little farm pressure group representing the interests of a certain group of farmers in one province of this country. They may think it is all right for them to do that on the one hand, but when it comes to supporting any other constructive proposal which involves action through the medium of the government of Canada, then they of course are quite loud in their declamations of their adherence to the principle of free enterprise.

Mr. Wylie: Are you talking about the wheat board?

An hon. Member: He would not know.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking in support of the bill that is before the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Which bill is it?

Mr. Barnett: I support the views being put forward by hon. members of the C.C.F. group who represent grain growing areas of Canada.

Mr. Wylie: They don't all do that. What about the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge)? He doesn't.

Mr. Barnett: One of the reasons I am in full support of the policies they have been advocating is that I know they are doing so not simply as a little pressure group from a certain segment of the country but because they believe this is the kind of legislation that will contribute to the welfare of the Canadian people and are prepared to support the application of similar principles in respect of other economic and geographic regions of the country.

Earlier this evening an article came to my attention which is to be found at page 19 of the Vancouver Province of Monday, February 4.

An hon. Member: In connection with the wheat board?

Mr. Barnett: It is entitled, "Why lumbermen grind their teeth". Among other things the article sets forth that British Columbia lumber exports in 1956 dropped by 371,034,908 board feet over 1955, from 1,016,824,698 to 645,789,790. Domestic shipments fell by 51,363,570 board feet in the same period from 395,234,257 to 343,870,687.

An hon. Member: He is talking sawdust now.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Is that first grade lumber or second?

Mr. Barnett: I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that the wording of the present bill should be changed to read "The Canadian wheat and lumber board".

Mr. Gillis: What would be wrong with that?

Mr. Barnett: However, I wonder what the attitude of my Social Credit friends would be if the situation should develop in the lumber export business of British Columbia where some sort of approach by the government of Canada, perhaps somewhat in the same direction as has been made in respect of the marketing of wheat, were required to ensure the continued and stable marketing of the lumber products of British Columbia.

Mr. Harrison: You have that in Saskatchewan and we don't want it.

An hon. Member: Do not forget to mention fish, too.

Mr. Barnett: I think the house should be entitled to some more balanced expression of the views of the Social Credit party as to why they are prepared to endorse this particular kind of legislation if they propose a similar move in a field other than the one under discussion.

Mr. Patterson: We would be satisfied to have even one balanced expression from the C.C.F. party.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Barnett: I think perhaps some hon. members of the Social Credit group who have what I believe is a genuine concern for the welfare of the farming population of Alberta should look a little deeper into their relationship with the political thinking of the people who go under the same political label in the neighbouring province of British Columbia. I am somewhat afraid that before too long they are going to find it increasingly difficult to reconcile the proposal they are now supporting with the general policies that are being advanced in many quarters within the same political group.

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that it must be obvious to the house that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), who has just finished speaking, does not know too much about wheat. I think it is obvious to all that he should have stuck strictly to—

An hon. Member: Nuts.

Mr. Shaw: —the field where he is probably better informed, namely that of fishing. Some of the extracts from Hansard which he endeavoured to tie in with this debate were probably just as unrelated to the facts before us as was his reference to lumber.

In spite of the fact that several hon. members of the C.C.F. party have striven to create the impression that we in this group are not in support of the Canadian wheat board as the sole marketing agency of wheat I wish to underline what should be known to all hon. members, namely that throughout this debate and throughout the years gone by we have supported the Canadian wheat board as the sole marketing agency for Canadian wheat, and no attempt on the part of socialist members can create an impression that is otherwise.

My purpose in rising, Mr. Speaker, is to make specific reference to only one matter, the position of transport controller. This is an aspect of the whole matter of the Canadian wheat board and wheat marketing that is of particular concern to us. I listened with interest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he referred to the position of the transport controller as being completely untenable. I have thought about that expression very frequently since the minister made the statement and I would ask if in the course of closing this debate he would elaborate upon the statement he made on February 1. Does he mean that the transport controller has found through his experience he cannot face the members of the Canadian House of Commons in the agriculture committee?

Mr. Harrison: He cannot meet their requirements.

Mr. Shaw: If I may use the term, I would say that describing the position of transport controller as untenable is completely unflattering. Is it a reflection upon the courage of qualified Canadians who, if asked, might accept the appointment? I ask the minister to let this house know if anyone has been approached and offered the appointment of transport controller since Mr. Milner's resignation became effective December 31. We know that the position of transport controller must be a difficult one.

An hon. Member: It is.

Mr. Shaw: He is caught between the wheat board, the farmers, the railways and—

An hon. Member: The C.C.F.

Mr. Shaw: —government policy. I would like to know if these conflicts were actually reflected in the questions that were asked by hon. members in the agriculture committee and if it was those questions which did in fact cause the transport controller to resign. It seems to me there must be something deeper involved in this than we have yet learned. It is not the first time that an official has been called before a committee of this house and subjected to rather severe cross-examination, but we find very few officials resigning as a consequence of that. Was Mr. Milner dissatisfied with government policy? Did he find inadequate the powers granted to him as transport controller by this government?

We feel we should have an answer to that question. Did he resign to take another position such as the chairmanship of the board of grain commissioners? The minister has said that the position is completely untenable. Is he suggesting that the position of controller and action taken by the controller should be beyond the criticism of the agriculture committee of the House of Commons? I would ask the minister finally to tell us once and for all whether he considered the position of transport controller necessary? Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce, does the Department of Agriculture, does the government as a whole actually consider the position of transport controller necessary?

At this stage we have reason to believe that such an appointment is necessary. The minister has said the position is untenable. We do not know whether anyone has been approached. As far as I am concerned personally I am quite in the dark with respect to this whole thing.

I am hoping the minister will deal in detail with these things. Before sitting down may I emphasize again that we have supported the Canadian Wheat Board Act and the Canadian wheat board as the sole marketing agency, but that does not mean that at all times and under all circumstances we agree with the prices being paid for farm grains. We do recognize that it has brought a degree of orderliness into the marketing of these farm products.

I rose principally to ask these questions with respect to the transport controller and I think before we pass this bill we should be given the answers.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few remarks.

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will conclude the debate.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I had hoped that we could get this bill through committee tonight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand that the hon. member for Kindersley is on his feet and wishes to speak?

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet when the minister rose. I am pleased to take part in this debate and I was waiting to see if other government members from Saskatchewan would display their enthusiasm for the principle of orderly marketing. It is apparent however that their interest in this matter is limited indeed.

I am pleased to take part in this debate because it gives us in this group an opportunity to try to convince members from all parts of Canada of the desirability of maintaining the system of orderly marketing which we have finally achieved through the Canadian wheat board. This is an example of what can be done by government planning. It is in marked contrast with the system which the government allowed to prevail before the introduction of a compulsory board. The system of marketing under the Winnipeg grain exchange was indeed chaotic and left the individual farmer to the mercy of the speculators and the returns he received for his product bore little or no relation to the cost of production. The returns we get from our wheat still bear no relation to the cost of production, but one result of this system of orderly marketing has been a stabilizing of prices so the farmer may know within the crop year what price he can expect to receive for his products.

I wish members of the government were as forthright in their request for orderly marketing schemes as the C.C.F. have been. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny), this has been a C.C.F. policy since its inception. We have heard some idiotic remarks to the effect that the C.C.F. are attempting to sabotage the wheat board. If there is anyone in the house who can document that statement, who can give a quotation from Hansard indicating a statement of policy by the C.C.F. against the principle of orderly marketing by the Canadian wheat board, I would be only too pleased to have him put it on the record.

If the government were honestly convinced that this principle of orderly marketing was desirable I would expect that they would attempt to encourage it in other fields. I submit that the principle of orderly marketing which we have achieved for our grain could be extended to livestock, but I have noticed on past occasions when members of this party have attempted to have the orderly marketing principle extended to livestock we were vigorously and vehemently opposed by the government, the so-called champions of this system of orderly marketing.

They could have brought in provisions for a poultry marketing board which would have taken care of the serious and violent fluctuations in poultry prices which presently exist and which are apparently beyond the capabilities of this government to resolve.

If this government was dedicated to maintaining this principle of orderly marketing it certainly would have included flax and rye and thus extinguished for all time the Winnipeg grain exchange which has preyed on the farmers of Canada for the past number of years.

Indeed, if the government was honestly interested in maintaining this system of orderly marketing it would carry out the suggestion made by all speakers in this party and make the legislation permanent. It would put it on the statute books of Canada so that we would not run the risk of some future government which was not in favour of this principle of orderly marketing taking it off the statute books.

The system of orderly marketing which we have under the Canadian wheat board is able to operate only within the legal terms defined by this government. Its operations are continually complicated by the barriers which this government puts up to confound it. I think we can well imagine the ease with which the Canadian wheat board could operate under the administration of a government which believed in economic planning for the benefit of all rather than a privileged few. We find that the only political party in this house which believes in organizing our economy for the benefit of all rather than for the privilege of a few is the party to which I belong.

It has been stated that one of the reasons—indeed the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has said it is the sole reason—for our large carryover is the series of bumper crops we have had in western Canada. Only recently be made reference to the decline in wheat acreage which has occurred, but he did not take any credit for that. I would point out to the minister that that decline came about because farmers have been forced out of the production of wheat. Many of those farmers have land suited to the growing of wheat and since we have achieved a system of orderly marketing through the Canadian wheat board for our wheat it is only natural that they will tend to follow that production which has reasonable security.

How much better it would be, and how much simpler it would be for the Canadian wheat board, if we had a government agricultural policy which would give the same stability and security to farmers who are raising livestock, poultry, and other grains. If we had an indication of what prices we could expect in the future, we would then be in a position to plan our production. The dominion-provincial agricultural conference specifically has this function. But, Mr. Speaker, this conference meets each year; the members carefully divulge their platitudes to each other, the federal government, under the leadership of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), supplies various quantities of figures to prove various contentions, and the net result is a complete lack of guidance to the farmers of western Canada. The Interprovincial Farm Union Council has suggested and requested that this conference should make some concrete proposals to guide farmers in their future activities.

I think this could also apply to other aspects of government policy. We experience these bumber crops, and we have the largest carry-over of wheat on record. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) put on record some of the solutions which have been offered by this party, but I would like to point out again that the wheat board is only as effective in disposing of this grain as government trading policies will allow it to be. If our trade policies are continually geared to a deficit, how can we expect to sell wheat on a very competitive market in anything above the present quantities.

These are some of the barriers which this government is putting in the way of orderly marketing by the Canadian wheat board. They have, moreover, refused, in the face of demands from farm organizations of western Canada, to introduce a system of cash advances to allow individual farmers to have some return with which to operate their farms. We went over the subject very thoroughly last year when the government proposed its bank loan legislation—legislation which has been a complete and unequivocal failure. It has been a failure because it does not supply the needs of the farmers.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has stated that the wheat board should not operate a system of cash advances. I think he has assumed we are requesting that the present officials of the Canadian wheat board should assume this responsibility; but he will be the first to admit, from his experience of the operations of the Canadian wheat board, that a system of cash advances must be operated in very close co-operation with the wheat board, and be an agency of government established in conjunction with it.

The purpose of this proposal is, of course, to allow farmers from different areas to have the same opportunity to get a return from their grain. It is most unfair for a farmer in one area to have a four-bushel or five-bushel quota when a farmer not many miles away has a unit or a one-bushel quota. The purpose of a cash advance is to equalize these returns. If a man is denied the privilege of delivering his grain to the elevator, he should have the privilege of receiving the same money for that grain as if he had a box car available to deliver it.

While I am dealing with this subject of box cars and quotas, I should deal for a moment with the largest barrier that this government has set up in the way of the Canadian wheat board. The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated in his opening remarks that the Canadian wheat board is a marketing agency. I would agree with that definition. But I would ask the minister why they have saddled the Canadian wheat board with the onerous responsibility of distributing box cars. They have saddled the board with this responsibility because of their dismal failure with regard to appointing a man as transport controller to ensure that cars are distributed. I recall that last year, when we were discussing the bill to extend the powers of the transport controller, it was indicated that the responsibility of the Canadian wheat board was to allocate shipping orders, but that the responsibility of seeing box cars were available to fill those orders rested with the transport controller—the more arduous task of the two, perhaps.

Yet now we have this post left vacant since the former transport controller, Mr. Milner, moved on to a higher position with the board of grain commissioners. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is a very satisfactory situation to find the government hiding behind the criticism which has been directed at the former transport controller in justification for its refusal to appoint a new transport controller. It is apparent that the resignation of the former transport controller was prompted by the differences of opinion which he had with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I vividly recall the meetings of the agriculture committee when the C.P.R. gave its evidence before the members of that committee. The failure of the government to appoint a transport controller to direct the movements of box cars along these railway lines to marketing points is an indication of the complete submission of this government to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

There is evidence, Mr. Speaker, that the situation is not as rosy as many members on the government benches would have us believe as far as the quota position is concerned. The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated last year that preference would be given to those points which were unable to deliver the same quota as other points, which indicated that at the end of the last crop year some farmers would be able to deliver seven bushels an acre, and others would be confined to four or five bushels to the acre. They used as an excuse for that the desirability of getting the class and kind of grain required into position. They needed that excuse because the transport controller was not using his powers—or, should I say, the government was not seeing that the transport controller used his powers to ensure an equitable distribution of boxcars.

I had a resolution sent to me from the Hazlet branch of the Canadian Legion which is an accurate interpretation of much of the thinking of farmers at these low marketing points, and since it is very short, I would like to place it on the record. It is a resolution passed unanimously at a meeting of branch No. 202 on January 10:

> Whereas the Minister of Trade and Commerce the Hon. C. D. Howe stated at the close of the 1955-56 crop year that points on low quotas at that time would be given priority for quotas and boxcars in the new crop year and—
> Whereas the quota at the close of the 1955-56 crop year was five bushels per seeded acre at Roseray and six bushels per seeded acre at Hazlet, and
>
> Whereas the quota on January 10, 1957, is one bushel per seeded acre at Roseray and two bushels per seeded acre at Hazlet we resolve that—> quotas be increased and boxcars allocated to these points immediately to bring deliveries up to a par with stations which had seven to eight bushel quotas at the close of the last crop year, many of which are on a three to four bushel quota at this time.

Mr. Speaker, when we have a situation like this occurring in the country, who gets the blame? The person who gets the blame is the person saddled with this responsibility, and some criticism is directed at the Canadian wheat board because of the boxcar distribution—through the failure of this government to appoint a controller to take this heavy burden of responsibility from the shoulders of the Canadian wheat board.

I have given indication of the stand of this party with respect to the system of orderly marketing. I have given some indication of the obstacles the government is continually placing in the way of a continuation of the system of orderly marketing. I say to the minister and the other members of the government that action must be taken to make the Canadian Wheat Board Act permanent legislation and to include rye and flax under the operations of the board so that in spite of the indifference of the government we will have a complete example of how orderly marketing can be effective in the Canadian economy.

I should like the government to give consideration to extending the system of orderly marketing to the other fields I have enumerated. As we proceed with such a program in conjunction with a sensible over-all agricultural policy I think we will achieve some measure of relief to lift the farmers out of the cost-price squeeze in which they find themselves today. The problem is increasingly serious. Farmers become critical of the supply of box cars. They become critical of the quotas because of the pressure put on them as the result of their limited deliveries.

Government policy in allowing inflation to run away and in allowing the cost of production to rise is just as responsible for any discontent existing among the farmers as limited deliveries. If the prices of goods and services had been maintained at a proper level I think the farmers would be able to operate on a quota of seven or eight bushels an acre. At least they would have been able to survive. As it is now, with limited quotas and severe inflation in all aspects of our economy, it is most difficult for them to make ends meet with limited deliveries and the low prices they receive.

My colleagues have placed on the record other aspects of C.C.F. policy in connection with the orderly marketing of our grain. I do not think I need to repeat them now but I will look forward to hearing the minister state the attitude of the government with respect to the early appointment of a transport controller, making the wheat board legislation permanent and the inclusion of flax and rye under the operations of the board.

Mr. Thatcher: You still have not told us how to sell more wheat.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, before the debate concludes I should like to say a word because I come from a wheat-growing section of the country. I have also attended a good many farmers' meetings, have carried on a good deal of correspondence with respect to wheat-growing problems and have received numerous resolutions from time to time. The bill now before us gives us an opportunity to speak about the operations of the Canadian wheat board and to say whether or not we are in favour of the continued life of the board.

I am quite certain that the wheat-growing farmers of Canada are almost unanimous in their desire to have the Canadian wheat board continued. Wherever I go I find that this desire exists. There is the odd occasion when some may say that they wish we could go back to the type of wheat marketing we had before the board took over all deliveries of wheat.

I recall being at a farmers' meeting a number of years ago. They had their problems. Among their problems was that of marketing their grain as well as the price they were receiving at that particular time. The chairman of the meeting was the reeve of the municipality and it happened that the reeve was a very good political supporter of mine. I do not know whether or not I made any remarks which left a wrong impression. I think perhaps I did try to explain that there was another side to the question of marketing wheat which the odd individual may have expressed. However, no matter what remarks I may have made at the time, after the meeting the reeve came to me and in spite of the fact that he was a very good supporter of mine he said "Mr. Hansell, we are glad to know that you support the wheat board but if you ever talk against it in the House of Commons there will be no use of your ever coming into this community again." That was said by a man who knew what he was talking about and I think he was only expressing the opinion of almost 100 per cent of the farmers of that community.

I believe that the reason the farmers want the continuation of the wheat board is that it does tend towards a more orderly marketing policy. The farmer is not left altogether to chance. Not only does it offer a more orderly marketing policy but it puts the farmer in a position where he is a little more certain of his future. He is not dependent upon fluctuations which might occur on the open market and might occur by reason of design. He knows that his wheat will be sold. He knows there will be a payment coming along and he knows that in the long run there is more stable marketing and a more stable income for him.

There is one point that we must remember. We cannot blame the wheat board for that which sometimes appears to be impossible for them to do. We must recognize that, while the wheat board is the only avenue through which the farmer can market his wheat, the wheat board must go out into a very competitive world, particularly at a time when there is no international wheat agreement in existence. The wheat board has to go out into what might be termed an open market among the nations of the world. Therefore the board goes out into a competitive market. It may not be able to do all that might be desired and we must not blame the board for minor failures which we might suppose it has made. If the board has not met all the wishes of the wheat grower I do not know that it is always and altogether the fault of the board. It could be by reason of circumstances that exist in the world and over which they have little control.

[Mr. Hansell.]

However, we do know that the world is in need of wheat. Wheat is a very stable food and perhaps the world would starve if it were not for the wheat supplies that come from the farms. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Smith), the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston), and a few minutes ago the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw) and the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn), all being members of this group, have placed upon the record a good deal of valuable material as to the position which this group takes with respect to the wheat board, with respect to the farmer's position and with respect to the marketing of wheat generally. I believe the hon. member for Acadia mentioned the fact that the world needs wheat. The Alberta Wheat Pool Budget of November 9, 1956, points out that while the world carry-over of wheat is 1½ billion bushels—at that time—the population of the world stands at 2½ billion people; so 1½ billion bushels represents only 36 pounds of wheat per person. In the United States 190 pounds of wheat per person are consumed annually. The annual world consumption of wheat is about 6 billion bushels. So a carry-over of 1½ billion bushels is equivalent to only a three months' supply for wheat-eating nations.

The need for the reserve is further highlighted by a speech made by the North American representative of the food and agricultural organization, Mr. Hambridge. He pointed out that over 50 per cent of the population of the world are underfed and underclothed with millions dying from starvation. Then he made the significant statement that the situation would be bad enough if the people knew that it could not be avoided owing to a shortage of food in the world. But, he pointed out, they know that that is not the situation and they know that there is an abundance of food in the world. Hence they are no longer willing passively to submit to this intolerable situation.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, the fact that sometimes it may be difficult to find markets but I am rather of the opinion that sometimes that difficulty exists because we are not always willing to take the various currencies of the world. We have two policies to propose. One is that we would be willing to go out into the world and offer credits to other nations who care to take our wheat. That has been done with some other countries. I think I am right in saying that that is the way in which the United States handled a good deal of their surplus wheat. There is no reason why we cannot do the same thing.

The wheat would be taken from the farmers, and the farmers would be paid for it, and we would be paid for it in the currencies of the nations that take our wheat. So in that respect it is not necessarily a wheat-marketing problem as much as it is a financial problem. This government here should embark upon a solution of that particular financial problem.

We advocate also a two-price system. We advocate that support prices should be maintained at 100 per cent of parity for farm products sold in the domestic market and that the surplus products should be sold abroad for the best price obtainable, preferably under some form of international agreement but in any event covered by a support price sufficient to meet average costs of production.

In view of the fact that over 94 per cent of all farm products, excluding wheat, are sold in Canada it would mean that farmers would receive 100 per cent of parity for 94 per cent of their products excluding wheat. In regard to wheat, approximately 80 per cent is sold abroad and 20 per cent is sold in the domestic market. Therefore 20 per cent at parity of, we will say, about $2.27 per bushel or thereabouts and 80 per cent at the ceiling of $1.95 per bushel under the international wheat agreement would give the farmers a support price of approximately $2 or a little over $2 a bushel.

We believe that careful consideration should be given to building up efficient family farms. Right now I want to put in a plug for the small farmer. We believe that we should give consideration to building up efficient family farms. If it is conceded that family farms, in order to make the most efficient use of power machinery, will have to be in the neighbourhood of two sections of average land or one section of heavy land, and if the average annual production of wheat on such farms might be approximately 8,000 bushels of wheat, then we feel that by limiting the support price to 8,000 bushels per farmer we would help to strengthen the family farm. The large operators farming thousands of acres would receive the support price on the first 8,000 bushels and would receive the world market price on the balance.

I see that the clock has moved around to the point of ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I believe there are one or two others who wish to speak, but I am not through. I should like to spend the balance of the time that is allotted me to the furtherance of my speech, and I would ask that you call it ten o'clock. I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Hansell the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we shall continue with the business that I indicated last evening.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK—NEW BRUNSWICK LOANS

Question No. 13—Mr. Van Horne:

1. Did the industrial development bank make loans in New Brunswick in 1956?
2. If so, how many loans were made and what was the amount of each loan?
3. How many applications for loans were made?
4. What percentage of the loans applied for were granted?

Answer by: Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance):

Answer provided on Tuesday, January 15, 1957, as recorded on page 290 of the House of Commons Debates:

"1, 2, 3 and 4. The only information of government record is contained in the annual report of the industrial development bank which shows that loans to the amount of $1,346,000 were authorized in the province of New Brunswick in the fiscal year ended September 30, 1956".

Corrected answer:

1, 2, 3 and 4. The only information available is to the effect that the industrial development bank authorized 8 loans in the total amount of $1,346,000 in the province of New Brunswick during the fiscal year ended September 30, 1956.

DISABILITY ALLOWANCES, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 35—Mr. Buchanan:

1. To how many citizens in Nova Scotia was the disability allowance awarded during 1956?
2. What is the total number of citizens in Nova Scotia receiving an allowance under the Disabled Persons Act?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Records furnished by the province of Nova Scotia show a total of 386 applicants awarded disabled persons allowances in the calendar year 1956.

2. 1,409 as at December 31, 1956.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK—NOVA SCOTIA APPLICATIONS

Question No. 43—Mr. Purdy:

For the fiscal year of the industrial development bank, ending 30th September, 1956:

1. How many applications for advances were received from concerns in Nova Scotia, and what amount in each case?
2. What was the number and total amount of such applications approved?

Answer by: Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance):

1 and 2. The only information available is to the effect that the industrial development bank authorized 8 loans in the total amount of $400,500 in the province of Nova Scotia during the fiscal year ended September 30, 1956.

FEED GRAIN—FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS, N.S.

Question No. 87—Mr. Balcom:

What was the amount of freight assistance on western feed grains paid to Nova Scotia during the year 1956?

Answer by: Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture):

$1,722,509.60.

HEALTH OF ANIMAL INSPECTION, B.C.

Question No. 90—Mr. Hahn:

1. How many eviscerating plants receive health of animal inspection in the province of British Columbia?
2. Are they permitted to use the H of A stamp of approval for dominion retail sales?
3. How do the regulations under the health of animals inspection regulations compare with provincial regulations?
4. To what extent has health of animal inspection materially improved in the dominion market, during the past two years?
5. What effect has it had on the sale of birds not so marked?
6. How many processing plants are there, other than health of animal inspected in the province of British Columbia, which are inspected under the British Columbia provincial health act?

Answer by: Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture):

1. There are five poultry eviscerating plants in British Columbia operating as inspected establishments under the federal Meat and Canned Foods Act and receiving veterinary inspection by the health of animals division.

2. The "Canada Approved" stamp, identifying the product of such inspected establishments, must be applied to all carcasses, cuts and packages of meats, including poultry, processed in those establishments, regardless of whether the products are to move in export, interprovincial or local trade.

3. The provincial act provides for standards of plant sanitation, as a basis of accepting a plant under inspection, virtually equivalent to those established under the federal Meat and Canned Foods Act. The provincial act does not make inspection under that act compulsory. The federal Meat and Canned Foods Act, administered by the health of animals division, requires that any plant engaging in interprovincial or export trade must operate as an inspected establishment under that act. Federal inspection is, however, granted on a non-compulsory basis to any poultry eviscerating plant, doing business entirely within a province, which meets the standards for plant sanitation established under the Meat and Canned Foods Act and regulations. There are no minimum volume requirements for the granting of such inspection.

4. In the fiscal year 1954-55 there were 27 poultry eviscerating plants operating as inspected establishments under the Meat and Canned Foods Act. At the present time there are 45 such plants.

5. In some trade channels and with certain classes of poultry there is reported to be a preference for the product of inspected establishments.

6. We do not maintain records of provincial inspections.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 8, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—PETITION OF ALBERTA INDIAN ASSOCIATION TO THE QUEEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and ask him whether final disposition has been made of the question of forwarding a petition from the Indians to Her Majesty the Queen. Does the minister intend to follow the course previously outlined of looking into it himself rather than following the traditional policy toward Indians of permitting them to appeal direct to Her Majesty? If that is his view, will he table the petition so that we may know exactly the nature of this petition on behalf of these wards of the Canadian people who, while they have no votes, have rights?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, having looked at Hansard for the past few days I rather anticipated I would be asked a question about this subject this morning. As I told the house on a previous occasion, since this petition came into my hands I have sought the advice of the legal advisers of the government as to the appropriate disposition to be made of it.

As hon. members are aware, and if they were not aware they were told I believe the day before yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), the Queen in Canadian affairs has only one group of advisers, her Canadian advisers. It is obvious that the Queen as a constitutional monarch can act only on advice. Obviously there would be no purpose served from any point of view by forwarding the petition without some responsibility being taken for such advice.

I have been advised by the deputy minister of justice and I shall read the advice I received from him as the house is perfectly entitled to know what I have received. This advice came to me in the usual constitutional manner through my deputy minister. The document is addressed to the deputy minister and reads as follows:

February 4, 1957.

The Deputy Minister,
Department of Citizenship and Immigration,
Woods Building,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,

I understand that Mrs. Gorman, barrister, of Calgary, sent a petition addressed to Her Majesty to His Excellency the Governor General concerning proposed amendments to the Indian Act and that His Excellency in turn referred the matter to you.

You have asked my opinion whether the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is required to take any action in respect of the matters petitioned for. In my opinion, he is not.

I might add that it is established practice for the Governor General to refer matters of this kind to the responsible minister.

Yours truly,
F. P. Varcoe,
Deputy Attorney General of Canada.

I may say that I have examined the petition and it does not appear to me to be in the form prescribed by the rules of the house for submission to the house. Since I am not an expert in these matters I would not wish to express any view of my own, but it does not appear to me that I should offer to table this petition without its being examined in the way prescribed by the rules. I may say, before the Leader of the Opposition gets too excited, that I would not have the slightest objection to the petition being made public; indeed I would be most happy that its contents should be known to every hon. member and to every other person interested, because the petition merely sets out the same arguments as have been made previously in other documents addressed to me and to the officers of my department. There is nothing new in it and there is no difference in substance from those arguments which have been made up to now by Mrs. Gorman, a barrister in Calgary, on behalf of the Indian Association of Alberta.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, does the minister now say that the reason he will not table it is that this petition is not a petition that would be accepted by parliament if it had been made to parliament? Is that the ground?

Mr. Pickersgill: What I said, sir, was that I have looked up the rules and it did not appear to me that this petition was in the form prescribed by parliament, and that I would not venture to offer to table it without that point being considered by you, Mr. Speaker, or by the appropriate officers of the house.

As to the substance of it, I have not the slightest objection. I would certainly be delighted to make copies of it available to every hon. member. But I do not want to break the rules of the house.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order arises out of the statement which has just been made by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. He said the petition should be looked at, and its propriety determined, before he tables it. Is it not the practice according to our rules —and I am looking at standing order No. 70—for a member who has received a petition to table it, and for the decision as to whether or not the petition is in proper form to be made by the clerk of petitions?

Standing order No. 70 provides under paragraph (1) for a petition to be tabled. Without reading all the paragraphs I will proceed to paragraph (7) which states:

> On the next day following the presentation of a petition the clerk of the house shall lay upon the table the report of the clerk of petitions upon the petitions presented and such report shall be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day.

And so on. I do not think the rest of it is relevant.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is usurping a function of the clerk of the house and the clerk of petitions. The petition may well be in a form which is not proper, but should not the clerk of petitions make that decision rather than the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the point of order which has been raised.

This is just another example of the minister taking upon himself, and arrogating to himself, a power of censorship which he does not possess. This is not a petition to parliament. This was a petition to Her Majesty the Queen, and the hon. gentleman, in what appears to me to be a monstrous perversion of his rights, refuses to permit that petition to go to its destination.

Then, when a proper request is made that parliament should at least know what is in the petition, the minister resorts to what I consider to be another subterfuge in order to deny Indians the opportunity of bringing their petition of wrongs before the house. I think Your Honour will agree that the statement made by the minister at this time, and his latest stand on this subject, show not only lack of knowledge of the rules but a continued desire to act tyrannously toward these Indians.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point just raised by the hon. gentleman, may I say that I did not refuse to table this petition, and I am not refusing to do so. I said that I wished to stay within the rules of the house, and that I needed guidance on that point.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no doubt about that.

Mr. Speaker: With regard to this matter of order which has been raised: In the first place one would have to know to whom the petition has been addressed, because it must be borne in mind, according to citation 584 of Beauchesne, third edition, that a member cannot be compelled to present a petition. And according to citation 593:

> Every petition should commence with the superscription: "To the Honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled." Then should follow the formula: "The Petition of the undersigned . . . humbly sheweth." Follows the subject-matter on the petition, in the third person through, and commencing each paragraph with the word "That". The conclusion should be the "Prayer" tersely and clearly expressing the particular object which the petitioners have in view in coming before parliament. The petition should close with the formal words: "and your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray". Here follow the signatures which must be in writing and not typewritten or printed.
> Without a prayer, a document will not be taken as a petition; and a paper, assuming the style of a declaration, an address of thanks, or a remonstrance only, without a proper form of prayer, will not be received.

There is no doubt that, according to standing order 70, once a petition is presented by a member, either by passing it over to the clerk or presenting it in the house at the beginning of routine proceedings, the clerk of petitions has the responsibility of examining it and making a report and the Speaker on that report will make a ruling whether or not the petition will be received. But it is up to the member who is in possession of the petition to do what he wishes, and that is the information which I think I might give the minister with respect to the matter. He is not compelled to deposit the petition, as it is said in citation 584, but if he wishes to do so he can leave it with the Clerk, the clerk of petitions will examine it and if it is not in conformity with the requirements of citation 593 the petition will have to be ruled out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank Your Honour for this guidance and I will be glad to give the petition to the Clerk at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Since the minister has made himself the final addressee of the petition from the Indian Association of Alberta instead of sending it on to Her Majesty the Queen to whom it was addressed—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Harkness: —has the minister sent a reply in answer to the petition to the Indian Association of Alberta? If so, what is the reply?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might begin by saying that it does not surprise me that several members of the Tory party seem to want to go back to the days before responsible government when this country was ruled from London.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is just nonsense.

Mr. Harkness: We do not have responsible government at this time, so perhaps we ought to go back.

Mr. Pickersgill: Our position on this side of the house is that it is our duty to take our constitutional responsibilities. Now that I have received the advice I sought from the law officer of the government, I intend to make a reply to the lady who submitted the petition.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Wetaskiwin wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Ray Thomas (Wetaskiwin): I should like to ask the minister if he would, as he indicated a few minutes ago, have copies of the petition made for individual members and send them to them, provided the form of the petition is such that it cannot be tabled in the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad to do that.

[Later:]

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the letter from the deputy minister of justice which he read a few minutes ago, would the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration state whether he read the entire contents of that letter?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir, I did not read "The Department of Justice" or whatever appears on the letterhead but I read everything that had any substance. I do not think I read "yours sincerely" or "yours truly" or whatever language appeared at the end of the letter, and I am not even sure I read Mr. Varcoe's signature.

Mr. Fleming: Smart fellow.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—LEGALITY OF MARRIAGE CEREMONY AT SIX NATIONS RESERVATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Haldimand): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the minister been advised of the situation at the Six Nations reservation, having to do with the legality of a marriage ceremony performed under Indian tradition in the long house by an Indian chief? What is the ruling of the minister on this matter?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The ruling of the minister on this matter is, sir, that the solemnization of marriage, under the British North America Act, is a provincial matter.

Mr. Charlton: May I ask a supplementary question. If it is a provincial matter, how is it that the name of this particular widow is on the Indian records in her maiden name?

Mr. Pickersgill: I know nothing about the facts in this particular case, but I shall be glad to look into the matter in question. I did not understand from the hon. member she was a widow; I thought she was married.

Mr. Charlton: I do not see anything funny about it. Apparently, the minister is not aware of the facts. The husband was killed in an accident a short time after the marriage.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—TIME LIMIT OF OCCUPATION UNDER ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Campbell (The Battlefords): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the time expired under the Indian Act when Indians can protest the occupation of other persons on a reserve? My second question is this. Are there any persons other than those in the Samson case under protest at the moment on Indian reserves?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I understand, sir, that it will no longer be possible to make any protests about persons who were on the reserves at the time the act came into force. However, I would like to examine carefully the hon. gentleman's question and give a full answer the next day we are permitted to answer questions.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO REASSESSMENT OF 1950-51 RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Will the minister say if it is the policy of the Department of National Revenue to keep the door open on assessments of 1950 and 1951 income tax returns by reassessing taxpayers before January 1, 1957, when the revision of section 46 (4) (b) came into effect?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): I will have to take the hon. lady's question as notice and I shall give her an answer later.

Mrs. Fairclough: May I ask the Minister of Finance whether, when presenting the amendment to section 46 (4) (b), he had any idea that the department would adopt some measure for circumventing the effectiveness of the amendment.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I am firmly convinced that the department does not take action to circumvent the action of parliament.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—APPOINTMENT OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL HANS SPEIDEL AS COMMANDER OF LAND FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Was the Canadian government consulted concerning the appointment of Lieutenant General Hans Speidel as commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization central European land forces? If so, did the government express its approval of this appointment?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that all the nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization were consulted. I have asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney) to get out the record and prepare a more detailed answer than the one I am making at this moment.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

VISIT OF UNITED KINGDOM MINISTER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I ask the Minister of National Defence if he intends to make a statement to this house on the visit of the United Kingdom minister of defence, as was made by Mr. Duncan Sandys in the British House of Commons on February 6?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of making a statement beyond saying that we discussed matters of common interest, as would be the case with any minister coming from Great Britain. If there are any matters involved which anyone cares to raise when my estimates are up, I will try to answer them.

Mr. Pearkes: Is the minister aware that the minister of defence did make a statement in Westminster on February 6?

Mr. Campney: Yes, he did, about his visit to Washington. In the statement he made to the press here, however, he said there were no particular problems to be discussed with the Canadian government.

Mr. Pearkes: In his statement to the British House of Commons he referred to conversations he had had with the Prime Minister and the minister of defence in Canada. Will the minister not consider making a similar statement?

Mr. Campney: He referred to conversations but not in respect of the matters he discussed in the House of Commons.

UNITED NATIONS—CANADIAN FORCES IN NEAR EAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the dangerous impasse created by the adamant stand of both Egypt and Israel in the Near East, has the government made any arrangements to withdraw the Canadian forces presently with the United Nations emergency force should further hostilities break out in the area?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of this dangerous situation in the Near East is it the present intention of the government to continue with its plans to send further Canadian forces to the United Nations emergency force in Egypt until the present situation is clarified?

Mr. Campney: As regards the supplemental personnel of the services which were mentioned in the house the other day I said I would make an announcement as soon as it had been finally decided what is to be done in that regard. I think I may say that generally it is our intention to support the United Nations emergency force as long as that support appears to be useful.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA—REFERENCE TO INCREASE IN DISCOUNT RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Will the minister comment on the fact that at the moment when the Bank of England has reduced its rate from 5½ per cent to 5 per cent the Bank of Canada rate has actually gone up from 3.95 per cent to 3.97 per cent?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the only comment that need be made is that the Bank of England raised its discount rate perhaps a year ago or a little more to what was considered to be an extraordinarily high rate and that this action was intended as a very pointed comment on the money market in the United Kingdom. The Bank of Canada have not felt it necessary to do that in Canada, though they did raise their rates successively during the last year when, I think, the rate reached 3½ per cent by action of the Bank of Canada. Then a decision was made by the bank to establish the rate at ¼ per cent above the going rate for 91-day treasury bills from week to week. The action of the Bank of England, as explained yesterday in the House of Commons at Westminster by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, has been anticipated for several months because of the improved position of sterling and the improved position generally of the United Kingdom with respect to its balance of payments problems and is nothing more than an indication—perhaps I should not interpret anything that the chancellor interpreted—that the problem which arose in the United Kingdom some months before it arose here has been dealt with successfully up to the present time by the same kind of action that is being adopted in Canada.

Mr. Macdonnell: From what the minister has said am I to take it that we may quite well expect our rates still to be going up?

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question in view of his answer to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell). He referred to the action of the Bank of England as a pointed comment on the situation obtaining in Great Britain. Would he say that the action of the Bank of Canada in raising the rate during the past year was in effect merely a pointed comment on the situation in Canada?

Mr. Harris: Not quite to the same extent as in the United Kingdom, Mr. Speaker, because there, as I pointed out, they raised the rate beyond perhaps what the money market had expected and perhaps unnecessarily having in mind the ratio to the 91-day treasury bill rate. I do not want that to sound like any criticism of the action that the Bank of England took but it is a fact that they raised the rate some months ago to a high in a manner which has not been adopted by the Bank of Canada. As I say, the result is that their problem arose earlier than did ours and over a period of time they are finding that they are working out of it. We in Canada are now perhaps in the position that they were in six months to nine months ago.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I have a supplementary question to ask the Minister of Finance. Will the minister tell the house why this government maintains such a high rate on 91-day treasury bills?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I should like to go into this matter at great length on my estimates but I can perhaps give just one brief answer for the moment. We do not maintain a high rate of interest. This is a matter of public tender weekly and the tender system establishes the rate for that week.

Mr. Sinclair: Free enterprise.

Mr. Macdonnell: I wish to ask a supplementary question. Does the minister think it is fair to try to make the members of this house believe that the Bank of Canada has nothing to do with the level of interest rates when everybody in the business world who is old enough to come in out of the wet knows that it has?

EXCISE TAX ON AUTOMOBILES—REFERENCE TO MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON FEBRUARY 7

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. McLeod (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday we were quite agreeably surprised by the announcement made relative to taxes on automobiles, and we took the understanding that this would apply to all cars—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McLeod: Just a minute; let me explain.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McLeod: We took the understanding that all cars shipped to dealers on and after February 1 until the date of the bringing down of the budget would not be subject to tax unless sold in the meantime. However, the minister stated, as reported on page 1046 of Hansard, that a car would not be a tax-paid car until after title to the property had passed to the dealer. I should like to advise you—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McLeod: —that title passes—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. gentleman has had ample time in which to lay a foundation for this question and he should now put it.

Mr. McLeod: I should like to ask the minister if he is aware that title to a car passes to the dealer the minute the seal is broken on the car at the point of delivery?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I intended to say yesterday was that I would recommend an amendment to the act during the budgetary bills which would overcome the difficulty to which my hon. friend is referring. If he will read my statement carefully he will see it is a remedial decision and not one of penalty.

HOUSING

LAURENTIAN TERRACE, OTTAWA—PETITION PROTESTING HOUSING OF MALE RESIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works? Has the minister received a petition from girls residing in Laurentian Terrace protesting against the minister's action in quartering his male employees in this girls' residence? Will the minister reconsider this matter with a view to finding other quarters for male members of his staff?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have received a petition. It was signed by 14 of the ladies who occupy Laurentian Terrace out of a total number of some 300, I believe. It has been the practice to accommodate men from various departments of government in spare accommodation in Laurentian Terrace from time to time as an economy measure. It is considered desirable to use that space rather than pay the relatively high cost of accommodating these people elsewhere at times when they come to Ottawa for conferences, courses and the like.

I understand that seven of these 14 young ladies were accommodated in single rooms, and suitable single rooms have been found for them elsewhere in the Terrace. The remaining seven were living doubled up—

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Winters: —and similar accommodation was found for them, also in the Terrace.

Mr. Harkness: Are they objecting to being doubled up?

Mr. Winters: I may say that this practice of using spare space in Laurentian Terrace has been followed ever since I have been associated with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and I do not think there has been any great objection to it.

Mr. Nicholson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not a fact that this building was constructed during the war when materials and manpower were scarce as a public service to provide accommodation for girls who came from all parts of Canada? Would it not seem reasonable to retain this service for girls who are forced to live away from home in the city of Ottawa?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, there is no effort here to take away the accommodation from these girls. What we are doing is—

Mr. Fulton: Making it more interesting.

Mr. Winters: —utilizing the spare accommodation.

HIGHWAYS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DEAS ISLAND TUNNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister approved the application of the provincial government of British Columbia under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for permission to construct the Deas island tunnel under the Fraser river? If so, what is to be the depth of water at extreme low tide above the tunnel and over what width of the channel?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes, and I have so notified the government of British Columbia in a telegram this morning.

In reply to the second part of my hon. friend's question the design provides for a minimum depth of 40 feet 9 inches over the tunnel at low water for a minimum width of 700 feet.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works with respect to the Deas island tunnel. Would the minister indicate how the minimum depth that is proposed for this tunnel compares with the St. Lawrence seaway depth? Secondly, would he guarantee that the same depth will be held at all times in the Fraser river from its mouth to the city of New Westminster?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I understand the St. Lawrence depth is 27 feet. The proposed minimum depth over this tunnel is 40 feet 9 inches. I might say for comparative purposes that the guaranteed depth at low water in the first narrows is 37 feet 6 inches and the present dredging contract when complete will provide for 39 feet at low water. In connection with this tunnel there are certain guarantees to be given by the government of British Columbia that the depth will be maintained not only over the centre line of the tunnel itself but within certain distances on either side of the tunnel.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works concerning the subject of tunnels. Has the minister yet received an application from the government of British Columbia to construct a tunnel under the straits of Georgia from the mainland of Vancouver island? If so, what will be the maximum depth at low water if that tunnel is constructed?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no, and therefore the second part does not apply.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED MONOPOLISTIC OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government taken note of the request of the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour in its recent brief to the federal cabinet for the creation of a special commission to inquire into the monopolistic character of the operations of the Bell Telephone Company in order to make recommendations as to the best means of having this company owned and administered in the public interest? Will consideration be given to this request?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, consideration will be given to the request, but in my answer I shall not attempt to give any encouragement to the hon. gentleman's desire to see the Bell Telephone Company socialized.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister care to tell the house what answer he made to the request of the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour for bringing this company under an administration that would be in the public interest?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember that there was any specific answer given to that question and of course I do not agree with the hon. gentleman's suggestion that the proposed method would be in the public interest.

Mr. Knowles: That is a criticism of the stand taken by the C.C.C.L.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the Saskatchewan pipe line.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INDIAN AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can the minister explain why all of the first 39 questions on the order paper have been answered with the exception of four, all of which relate to Indian affairs and have been on the order paper for four weeks or longer? It seems a very strange thing that these questions are the only ones that have not been answered. I would like an explanation concerning this and I wish also to ask another question. Can the answers to these questions be expedited and when might they be expected?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I think, sir, the answer is very simple. If the hon. gentleman who is rather familiar with some of these questions will examine them carefully he will see that they involve a good deal of historical research. This is being done as expeditiously as possible having regard to the need for carrying on the day to day business of the Indian affairs branch at the same time.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the minister if the question which I have asked involves any historical research expense?

Mr. Pickersgill: It involves a good deal of research, sir.

Mr. Harkness: Very little.

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON LANGUAGE USED IN DEBATE ON FEBRUARY 7

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: I think I owe an explanation to the house with respect to the matter which I suggested be left in abeyance yesterday. We now have Hansard of yesterday and I am referring to page 1049. A question was asked by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) which reads:

In view of the minister's answer yesterday, which I could not understand because of the covering-up noises of the Liberals, to the effect that he did not know of the several weeks' delay occurring in the processing of thousands of unemployment insurance claims, will the minister tell us when he will get busy and do his job and remove the dagger held over the backs of the workingmen of Canada? The minister's do-nothing attitude is that of a saboteur of the rights of the workingmen of Canada, and I am not going to stand for it.

At that moment I asked the hon. member to revise his language and he did not consider that he should be called upon to do so. A point of order was raised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) and at that point I said:

I would not want to have a discussion started on the exact words that have been used. I suggest that the matter be left in abeyance until I have had a chance to look at the transcript.

I have examined four dictionaries and have looked at the various definitions of the word that was used. In most instances the word "sabotage" is defined as the act of one who wants to damage or wreck. The King's English dictionary defines the expression as meaning malicious destruction of property. The expression is not one which I believe should be used, but I realize the consequences that may ensue should the Speaker ask that a certain expression be withdrawn. It may be that the sense of the house will not be behind his request or the hon. gentleman who has uttered the expression may not be disposed to adhere to the request of the Speaker. In such case it is automatic that the hon. member be named and then would follow all the consequences the house knows about.

I had hoped yesterday that the hon. member of his own volition would have done something about it and there is still time for him to do something if he so chooses. However, I am not going to insist upon the withdrawal of the word that has been used. For the benefit of hon. members I should like to read citation 234 of Beauchesne's third edition which is as follows:

It is impossible to lay down any specific rules, in regard to injurious reflections uttered in debate against particular members, or to declare beforehand, what expressions are or are not contrary to order; much depends upon the tone and manner, and intention, of the person speaking; sometimes upon the person to whom the words are addressed, as, whether he is a public officer, or a private member not in office, or whether the words are meant to be applied to his public conduct, or to his private character; and sometimes upon the degree of provocation, which the member speaking had received from the person he alludes to; and all these considerations must be attended to at the moment, as they are infinitely various and cannot possibly be foreseen in such a manner, that precise rules can be adopted with respect to them.

[Mr. Speaker.]

When the Speaker observes upon any expression as personal and disorderly, and tending to introduce heat and confusion, and this appears to be the general sense of the house, the member offending ought immediately to make an apology, and to ask pardon of the house for his breach of their order, in as large and liberal expressions as possible, so as in such apology, to comprehend the person of whom the words were used. This is often very difficult to be obtained, especially when the offending person thinks he had sufficient provocation for using the expressions objected to. This consideration ought to be a warning to the house, and particularly to the Chair, to interfere at first; and not to permit any expressions to pass from a member unnoticed, which being applied by any other member as personally offensive to himself, may draw forth further words of heat and contumely, till at last confusion arises—different members take a warm and eager part in the dispute—and, besides the time that is lost in composing these differences, the House of Commons exhibits a scene of indecency and disorder, not very becoming their character as gentlemen, much less as one of the component parts of the great council of the nation assembled in parliament.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I rise to pay my tribute to the Minister of Labour as a great Canadian, as a great Christian. To apply the word "saboteur" to him is low.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. When I had taken up the matter of the language that had been used I thought that all hon. members had concluded taking part in the question period and I was about to call the orders of the day. I think we ought to proceed with the orders of the day.

REFERENCE TO DISORDER DURING DEBATE ON FEBRUARY 6

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, while we are on this subject may I say that on February 6 I rose in my place to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question, although he was not present at the time. There was so much noise raised by the Liberals, so much clacking and thumping of desks, especially by the rump of the Liberal party—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hodgson: Before I got my question before you there was so much noise made by the rest of the Liberals after there had been an exchange between me and some of the members in the rump that the Hansard reporter did not get my question at all. If Your Honour wants to cut down the question period to a reasonable time an attempt should be made to keep order among the Liberals in this house when anyone rises to ask a question.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the intervention of the hon. gentleman is one to which I should pay too much attention. I remember the question he was asking and the noise that was made, but I must say that my experience is that it is generally because of provocation which comes equally from both sides of the house.

Mr. Hodgson: There was no provocation on my part that day.

An hon. Member: You are an angel.

PRIVILEGE

MRS. SHIPLEY—REFERENCE TO REPORT IN "GLOBE AND MAIL" OF FEBRUARY 8

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ann Shipley (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, on a question of personal privilege, a report in the Globe and Mail of this morning referring to the debate of yesterday has this to say:

> From the Liberal side, and particularly from Mrs. Ann Shipley (L. Timiskaming) came shouts of "Shut up".

Neither yesterday nor at any other time have I used such an expression. The only thing I said yesterday was with reference to the Leader of the Opposition, and the words I used were "outrageous" and "shame".

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND EXPIRY DATE

The house resumed, from Thursday, February 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) for the second reading of Bill No. 9, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, last night I was in the process of speaking to the second reading of the amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I was not able to conclude my speech, on account of the time reaching ten o'clock. When I adjourned the debate I was talking about the necessity of paying some attention to the establishment of the family farm. I do not know that I need pursue that subject to any great extent, but I was mentioning the fact that the two-price system which we propose would help to some small degree in assisting the small farms. It is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that this is entering into the realm of fiscal policy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we talk of the wheat producers' problem we are always told by the Liberal supporters of the government that we have sold more wheat than usual, and they begin to boast of the markets they have been able to secure for the farmers' wheat. They also boast that the total farm income is, perhaps, a little higher than in the past. It is all very well to talk in that strain, but it is also advisable to point out that while there is an element of truth in these contentions there is another element which must be considered, namely the question of what has been termed the "price squeeze", as a result of which the amount of income the farmer receives today does not go as far as it did some years ago. In consequence, even though there may be more or less satisfactory markets and the over-all income may be slightly higher, the farmers, because of the price squeeze, find themselves in a very precarious position; they find it very difficult to keep their heads above water and to survive without going into bankruptcy.

The boast of markets and the boast of over-all income does not satisfy the farmer who is on the verge of bankruptcy. Let me remind hon. members of this, Mr. Speaker: Mr. J. H. Wesson, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, issued a statement in which he outlined some of the developments affecting agriculture in 1956, and speaking of this price squeeze he said, and I quote from his speech:

> But even on the basis of these good sales many farmers did not break even on the year's operations. The continued high cost of things needed to operate a farm and to maintain the farm family was putting the farmer in an impossible position. The price he received for his grain and other agricultural products was too low to keep the average farmer out of debt.
> This situation can be illustrated by reference to the farm income and cost figures for 1955. Cash farm income for Saskatchewan that year was only eight per cent above the level of 1946, but prices of things farmers buy were 52 per cent higher than in 1946. The improvement in income in 1956 will not bridge the gap between costs and prices as shown in 1955 figures. The result is that many farmers are dipping into reserves to keep going while other farmers are accumulating debts which will be extremely difficult to pay at present prices.

Mr. Speaker, when you think of that, and then think in terms of the small farmer, you will realize that the small farmer is in a position where he is just about bankrupt. The other day I got a letter from a farmer in my constituency. He is a small farmer, and he writes this way—I will quote from his letter:

> What I really wanted to write to you about is this: What is to become of the small farmer in southern Alberta? Is it the policy of the government in Ottawa that these small land holders should give up, sell out and try to make a new home somewhere else? What chance would a man almost 50 years of age, who was born here and lived here all his life, have of finding work elsewhere?
> I suppose he could dig ditches or gardens, but I doubt if he could make a living at it. Is it right that a man should have to give up his home just because he did not venture out and grab up a lot of land? Everything seems to be in favour of the big land owners. Banks will lend them money; machine companies will give them discounts, wheat quotas on big acreages give them more return, etc.

I am not saying, Mr. Speaker, that a man should not acquire a large farm if he wishes to do so and if he is a successful farmer, but I am saying that the fiscal policies of the government in respect of the wheat grower should be such that the small farmer can keep out of debt, support a good farm family and receive an adequate income in return for what he produces.

There is one further thing I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, in respect to the wheat board, and that is with regard to the quota system. I know it is difficult when we have such huge surpluses to move the grain as many would like it to be moved, but there does seem to me to be some discrimination in the matter of quotas at the various points throughout western Canada. I do believe that there should be some policy adopted whereby there would be, by the end of the crop year, an equalization of the quotas throughout the country. In making reference to this I do not wish it to appear that I want any quotas in some sections of the country pulled down to the level of a lower quota that may exist in other parts of the country. But it must be kept in mind that there does appear to be some discrimination at times.

For instance, I find that farmers at some points, where they have had as much as an 8-bushel quota, are not always dependent upon wheat for their income. We may have certain points where the farmers can go into other lines of production such as cattle or hogs and are not dependent upon wheat for their income. Yet it will be found that at those particular points the quotas have been as high as 7 or 8 bushels whereas at other points dependent upon wheat growing the quotas have been lower. These other points are wheat growing areas where the soil is suitable for the growing of wheat and the water condition is perhaps not suitable for the raising of cattle. Therefore the farmers at such points grow wheat exclusively and are dependent upon the income they receive from their wheat. Yet at some of these points the quotas have been as low as 5 bushels.

That does seem to be discrimination, especially when these particular points may not be very far away from each other, perhaps 30, 40 or 50 miles or in an adjacent community. That situation does not tend towards satisfaction among our farmers. Therefore I urge that some attention be given to the equalization of quotas by the end of the crop year, particularly at the present time when we have huge surpluses which may continue for a number of years.

I wonder whether I might put on the record a table given to me in answer to a question I asked some little while ago. The table shows the number of delivery points throughout the western provinces and the quotas delivered. I could read it but I will not take the time if I may have it put on Hansard. It is a short document.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. gentleman unanimous consent to put the table on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: What is the source of the figures?

Mr. Hansell: It is in answer to a question which I asked in the house. It is already on the record but it is not very long.

Mr. Knowles: Very well.

Mr. Hansell: The table is as follows:

Province	Number of Delivery Points
Over five bushels
Manitoba	375
Saskatchewan	1,001
Alberta	492
Total	1,868
On five bushels
Manitoba	—
Saskatchewan	103
Alberta	85
Total	188
Under five bushels
Manitoba	None
Saskatchewan	"
Alberta	"
On eight bushel quota
Manitoba	316
Saskatchewan	307
Alberta	195
Total	818

I do not think I need to say anything further at the moment. This group is in favour of the passage of the bill and we would like to see the life of the wheat board continued. Furthermore, we will do anything we can to strengthen the efficiency of the wheat board in the interests of the western farmer.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. A. M. Campbell (The Battlefords): Mr. Speaker, before the question is put I should like to say a few words prompted by two statements made in the house on the first day of February. The first statement was made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and, as found at page 890 of Hansard, it reads as follows:

That is the main reason why, on every and all occasions, the board, strongly supported by the government, has resisted efforts to put the board into the money-lending business by making advances to producers against grain stored on farms. That is not the business of the wheat board and should not be its business. To put the wheat board into the business of making farm advances is the surest way I know of playing into the hands of those who would like to wreck the board as an effective marketing agency . . .

I think that statement needs some consideration. First, may I say in no uncertain manner that we in the C.C.F. are wholly in support of the wheat board method of selling wheat. We believe that had the board not been operating for the past ten years prices would have tobogganed to a ridiculous level. We know that the farmers know that and will resist almost with ferocity any attempt from any source to do away with that system and will not allow themselves ever again to be forced to sell through the grain exchange.

To those of us who have produced grain for the past 45 years that would be unthinkable. We will never forget the years when we were obliged to sell our wheat in the fall. When the first few loads of wheat came in the prices started to fall and they fell steadily until all of the wheat was in the hands of the speculators. Then prices started upwards. The grain exchange was the greatest gambling institution in the world at that time.

However, having said that, should we set up the wheat board on a pedestal and say that its members are supermen who will always be right and must never be criticized, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce implied in his speech on February 1? Surely in a democratic country governments themselves should be subject to criticism even by their own supporters. That is all to the good and makes for better government.

One statement of the minister with which I must take issue is his statement that the board is strongly supported by the government. I am amazed at that statement. Does the minister suggest that the government has relegated all its authority to the board regarding every phase of the handling of wheat? I have always thought that when a board was set up by a government the government provided a policy and instructed the board as to that policy.

The minister states quite correctly that the board was set up to sell wheat. But does he mean to tell the house that the wheat board dictates policy to him. I think hon. members know the minister too well to believe that. The minister has shown too many times in the house just who the big boss is on the government benches.

The minister complains that farmers are asking the government to make cash advances on farm-stored grain and says that if the wheat board had to do this it would wreck the board. He makes this as a bald statement without producing any facts to back up the statement, nor does he offer any alternative. Apparently he and the government have decided that the farmer needs no more consideration.

Two years ago the government allowed elevator companies to make use of offsite storage. This was a big help, especially in those districts which built skating rinks. Those districts fortunate enough to have skating rinks, or which built skating rinks on the strength of the idea that they would derive revenue from the storage of wheat, were helped a great deal in that the farmers in these favoured areas were able to deliver a much greater quota of wheat. For some reason or other the government has cancelled this arrangement without in any way providing additional inland storage.

The minister seems to be quite satisfied that the farmers are not doing too badly, and when they bring their problems to the government and ask that certain action be taken to remedy some of the conditions under which they find themselves the minister as much as says that they are trying to sabotage the wheat board.

What are the things that the farmers are asking the government to do? First, they have asked that cash advances be made for grain which is stored on the farm. Anybody who knows anything about wheat farmers in particular at this time knows that the cash shortage on the farms for the past number of years has been very acute. While the cost of production has been going up rapidly, many farmers have not received sufficient cash on the amount of wheat they were able to sell to carry on their day to day operations.

The second complaint is that they want a better quota system. They want a more equitable quota system. We find that at some shipping points last year, as has been mentioned by many other members during the course of the debate, the quota got up to 8 bushels while other points did not get above a 4 or 5 bushel quota. To give one instance, the village of Marsden in Saskatchewan had an 8 bushel quota last year. When I left home a little over a month ago they were already up to a four-bushel quota this year. But the very next village eight miles away got up to only five bushels last year and at the time I left they were only on a one-bushel quota for this year. When complaints were made last year with regard to the quotas the minister gave to the house a definite commitment, as I thought at the time, that the situation would be remedied when the next crop year came around. So far that has not been done.

In the third place the farmers ask that a transport controller should be appointed to see that the movement of wheat is carried out as expeditiously as possible and that no shipping points will be discriminated against. So long as the minister takes the attitude that he is not going to appoint a transport controller and that he cannot find one, he himself is the one who is putting an extra load on the wheat board, though he complains that the board should not be loaded down by some of these requests that our farmers have been making.

Another matter of interest is that farmers who belong to the wheat pool point out that, owing to the way box cars are allocated between elevators, they often have to use elevators they do not want to use when they have gone to the trouble and expense of building their own elevator system. This year the Saskatchewan wheat pool is paying a cash patronage dividend of one cent per bushel on 1955-56 deliveries amounting to over $1½ million; there is also credit to members' accounts at the rate of 13/16 cents a bushel, amounting to about $1½ million. This sum is to be used for the revolving fund deduction. While this amount is not large it would be completely lost if that grain were delivered to the line elevator companies. The farmers are demanding that something be done by the transport controller in order to see that they can deliver to elevators of their own choice.

Farmers are asking for more internal storage space so that the movement of wheat can be speeded up and so that, instead of cars having to go all the way to the lakehead, they can be emptied several times in the same length of time it would take to haul them to the lakehead. They have pointed out that with the exception of Churchill there has been no building of inland elevators for many years.

I think it would be a wise precaution if the government built up a good-sized wheat bank, some of which could be held in interior elevators to ensure our customers of a plentiful supply of bread food at all times. The western plains have always been subject to cycles of wet and dry years. While we have been in a wet cycle now for a number of years, a dry cycle will most certainly come again, and if we do not have the wheat to sell —and we have been in that situation in the past—when our customers want it, we are going to lose some of those customers; and once we have lost a customer, it is not always easy to get him back again.

Farmers are also suggesting a two-price system, with a domestic price which would bear a relation to the prices of the things the farmer has to buy. The minister has stated that he was not in favour of the consumer subsidizing the grain producer. But let me remind the minister and the government that during both world wars the wheat growers subsidized not only the people of Canada but our overseas allies as well.

When world war II was over the Agricultural Prices Support Act was passed and $100 million was voted to support farm prices. The farmers were told at that time that this was compensation for the low prices paid during the war years. Surely the government could go as far as to accede to the demand of the farm organizations that a domestic price for wheat be set at $2.25 per bushel. This action would not raise the price of bread more than one half a cent a loaf.

Almost every major wheat-producing country in the world has taken steps to keep the farmers in business except Canada. Here the farmer seems to be the forgotten man. There is a sharp contrast between what the United States is doing to keep her farmers solvent and on the farm and what is being done in Canada. Last summer I drove across North Dakota. On the outskirts of every town and village were rows and rows of granaries full of wheat owned by United States government agencies. When a United States farmer harvests his crop he can do one of two things. He can sell it to the government agency and get cash in full, or he can store it in his own bin and collect storage payment until he is ready to sell. If he is short of storage space the government will lend him money with which to build granaries. If it so happens that the government agency has no space available and the farmer wants to sell, the agency will measure his bins, pay him for the grain, seal the bin and put on it a sign showing that the grain in that bin now belongs to the government agency. This seems to me to be a very simple transaction, and as yet I have seen nothing in United States papers finding any fault with that operation.

This scheme provides the farmer with the cash with which to pay his bills, provide for his family and home, and carry on necessary improvements. The banks, oil dealers, grocers, implement dealers, et cetera get back the credits that they have extended and the economy runs smoothly. For the life of me I cannot understand why the federal government here in Ottawa continues stubbornly to refuse the request of farmers and their organizations to make living on the farm a little bit more secure.

We in the C.C.F., because we have put forward some of the demands of western farm organizations, have been called calamity howlers and cry-babies. John Wesson, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, can by no stretch of the imagination be considered to be a calamity howler or a cry-baby. In speaking to the annual convention of the wheat pool on November 15 last year he said this:

..Western farmers face one of the greatest crises in the history of agriculture. Unless the government of Canada takes action to improve the relationship between farm costs and farm prices, farmers face the prospect of once more being pushed deeply into the morass of debt.

Two things were necessary, he said. One was the acceptance by the government of the principle that farmers were entitled to a reasonable price for their farm products. If this result could not be achieved in the market place, Mr. Wesson argued, then the government must make up the difference by deficiency payments.

There is one statement made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) that I cannot pass up without comment. As reported at page 913 of Hansard of February 1, 1957, he said this:

But I also say that the lot of the farmer is not made easier in Saskatchewan by the socialist members who since 1945 have acted in this house as professional cry-babies.

Mr. Speaker, I have been speaking for the farmer and have been working with farm organizations for the past 40 years and I am quite certain that the people that I represent do not consider me to be a cry-baby. Surely it is the duty of a member representing any constituency to place before this house and this government the problems that confront his constituency; and if he does not do so, he is not doing his job and he is not doing his duty. I am quite certain that the people in my constituency will resent the sort of insinuation which has been made. I would remind the hon. member that he himself shed a few tears during some of the earlier years when he was in this house, and not only when he was in the house but also when he was out on the hustings and out talking to the people in his own constituency.

On April 22, 1949, he is reported in the Moose Jaw Times-Herald as having said that farmers have been forced to accept prices 50 cents to a dollar under those prevailing in world markets and that, instead of setting floor prices, the government had set ceiling prices which constituted "vicious discrimination against farmers".

He said that world markets, guaranteed in election promises made by J. Gordon Ross, defeated Liberal candidate, had not been forthcoming, and that British and overseas markets for Canadian wheat, meat and apples were shrinking steadily. "Only the C.C.F. party", Mr. Thatcher said, "could give Canada full employment, social security and good farm prices." Introduced by Dempster Heming, M.L.A., Mr. Thatcher was thanked by Chairman Fred Jones, who urged delegates to tell their friends about the little barefooted boy of 20 years ago who made such a splendid speech tonight.

In the same paper, the Moose Jaw Times-Herald, Mr. Thatcher is quoted as stating that a C.C.F. government at Ottawa would set up export and import boards to dispose of surplus Canadian food products in exchange for goods which are desired by the Canadian people.

In the same paper, of June 14, 1949, he is quoted as saying:

The C.C.F. will set up a system of guaranteed or parity prices for agricultural crops.

On October 23, 1952, at the C.C.F. nominating convention at which he sought and received the C.C.F. nomination for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre for the 1953 election, Mr. Thatcher said, as reported in the Times-Herald:

When I joined the C.C.F. party originally, I did so because I felt that it was the party which alone could guarantee full employment and reasonable farm prices in a peacetime economy.

Listen to this:

After eight years at Ottawa I am infinitely more certain of that fact. Surely there can be little doubt that our present prosperity is based on a war boom and re-armament.

As reported in the same paper on July 2, 1953, the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre called upon the Liberal party to remove trade barriers which were preventing potential customers from selling goods to our markets. The article reads:

"The Liberals have always professed to be a free-trade party yet Trade Minister C. D. Howe has displayed indifference, if not downright hostility towards improved commonwealth trade relations.—Mr. Howe must assume a large amount of responsibility for the loss of Canada's traditional markets in Britain for farm products—actually he has mishandled the trade portfolio in a way that could only spell ultimate tragedy to thousands of western farmers."

Today Canada's agricultural economy was facing a critical situation with mounting surpluses and falling prices, according to the speaker.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, if a condition such as he describes existed in 1953, there has not been any change up to the present time. On August 7, 1953 an advertisement appeared in the same paper together with Mr. Thatcher's picture. The advertisement read, in part,

Your C.C.F. candidates are pledged to fight for the west and the C.C.F. federal program to provide guaranteed forward prices based on parity for primary producers.

On August 4, 1953, the Times-Herald carried a personal write-up on each candidate for the Moose Jaw-Lake Centre constituency with a summary of the platform of each party prepared and approved by the candidate himself. The platform of the C.C.F. and the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre was in part as follows:

> Instead of producing munitions, we must build homes, roads, irrigation works, schools and hospitals.

The C.C.F. believes that minimum farm prices are needed just as much as minimum wages. We shall introduce legislation providing for guaranteed forward prices on all agricultural products including livestock, poultry and grains.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that if extracts from the press are to be read, at least they should be pertinent to the subject matter of the bill. This is a bill to extend the life of the wheat board.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand the minister is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We have had a good deal of discussion on Saskatchewan politics, but I suggest the time has come when we should consider the bill before the house. These extracts from newspapers have no relation whatever to the bill. Whether or not it is proper to read extracts from newspapers is a matter of opinion, but I do say if they are to be read they should be relevant to the bill.

Mr. Ellis: It depends on whose ox is gored.

Mr. Campbell: I was very careful to choose ones—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon member who has the floor indicated he was replying to a speech made by another hon. member. I think he will agree that I have given him a good deal of latitude in doing so. I have for some time, even before the point of order was raised, been wondering if we were not departing entirely too far from relevancy in this debate. I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the discussion of the principle of this bill which is now before us.

Mr. Campbell: I was just about through. I should like to point out that I was very careful in picking out these quotations to pick those which had to do with farming and marketing and with wheat.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): This bill has nothing to do with farming or marketing. It is a bill to extend the time in which the wheat board may function, and that is the only purpose of the bill. There is a limit on the amount of Saskatchewan politics that we should have to take on a bill of this kind, I suggest.

[Mr. Campbell.]

Mr. Campbell: Evidently the minister does not like what I have to say. If politics had not been introduced into this debate I would not have been the first one to introduce them. When politics have been introduced from your own side of the house, then I think I should reply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Campbell: I am just finished. I should like to close by saying this. If the time ever comes when I cannot support the principles and policies of the party with which I am associated, and I come to a point where I feel that I must change my allegiance and sit with a group in another part of the house, I hope I will have enough courage to go back to the people of my constituency who elected me and ask for their endorsation.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I do not wish to hold up the bill, Mr. Speaker, or to extend the political debate, but I do have a few things I should like to say at this time and particularly because of what was said in some speeches made last evening. I want to help the minister get this bill through and what I shall say will be directly relevant to the bill.

The whole principle of Bill No. 9 is under consideration at the moment and I want to indicate to the minister that we support the extension for another five years. I want to tell him also that we have not given too much consideration to the question of making the act a permanent piece of legislation. I am speaking only for myself, therefore, when I say that at the moment I do not see any real reason why it should be made a permanent piece of legislation. I believe the fact that we have to bring it back into the house every five years for renewal and consideration at least opens up the whole question of the wheat board and its operations so that the members of the house can debate fully whether or not it has been a good thing. For that reason I say, while I am not opposing the idea to make it permanent, I see some advantage in having it renewed five years at a time, at least for the present.

We have supported the principle of the wheat board as the sole marketing agency for the farmers' wheat since its inception. Many of those in this group, Mr. Speaker, were amongst those who advocated the establishment of this form of orderly marketing long before the wheat board came into operation. The great majority of the farmers in the west are ardent supporters of the wheat board. They may not all have been, but I say the great majority of farmers always have been and certainly the great majority during these past few years. We know that there are some who are opposed to it yet, but they are certainly in the minority. In my own constituency, while there are a comparatively few who have not supported the wheat board, the great majority of my farmers do support it and have asked me to support it. I believe in acknowledging and striving to do the will of the people who sent me here.

Like the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), I think we are fortunate in having a very fine group of men in charge of the board. I am not too well acquainted with some of the commissioners but I have known the chief commissioner, Mr. McIvor, for a great many years. In our youth in southern Alberta we lived only a few miles apart. We had a great many fine basketball games together. He was an excellent competitor and a clean sportsman in those days. I know, Mr. Speaker, from my knowledge, that Mr. McIvor has been playing the game just as well in his chosen field of wheat marketing as he used to play the game in basketball in southern Alberta. I wanted to commend him and his colleagues for the good job they have done and commend the minister for maintaining such men in their responsible positions.

I do not intend repeating those things that have already been capably expressed by other speakers in this group but there are two or three matters which I feel should be emphasized further.

I want to draw to the minister's attention the fact that some sections of Canada have not had justice with regard to quotas. Many hon. members have spoken about this matter. My territory in the Peace river country is one area that has not received justice in relation to quotas. Perhaps it is because of its isolated position. The Peace river country is a vast grain-producing empire some 250 miles northwest of the city of Edmonton. Frequently we have been left until the very last with respect to getting our wheat out. The wheat board has consistently followed the practice of filling orders especially for export from points that are nearer to the places of shipment overseas and as a consequence of this policy our territory in the Peace river has been left out. I imagine the same thing could be said of certain other areas but I feel there are ways of correcting this situation. In spite of the minister's declaration last year that those farmers who were on a small quota at that time would be brought up this year to something approaching the level of those enjoying the best quotas the farmers in my country are not receiving that treatment. I am not blaming the minister but this does point up the necessity of having an appointment made to the vacant position of transport controller in order that something may be done to correct the situation that has been referred to so frequently during the course of this debate.

In most of the points in the north Peace river area the farmers are on a 2-bushel quota and even with such a low quota they cannot deliver because box cars have not been made available and many points have been plugged from the early part of the season. One reason not many orders have been placed in that area by the wheat board this year is that frost hit the country and there is a great deal of low-grade wheat, No. 5 and below. Perhaps the demand for that type of wheat has not been very great for export purposes or for feeding purposes in Canada. This, too, serves to point up the necessity of improving our storage situation. It seems to me that an area 250 miles away from the nearest inland storage elevator ought to be considered as a location for an elevator with a capacity of one and a half or two million bushels. This proposal is given considerable weight by the fact that shortly the Pacific and Great Eastern Railway will be linked up with the Northern Alberta Railway at Dawson Creek and much of the farmers' produce will be marketed on the west coast. That being the case, the use of the Edmonton internal storage elevator would be practically denied to our people in the Peace river country. It seems to me that the building of an elevator in that area which is so far isolated from the main centres would be nothing more than justice to the farmers who have pioneered that country and are making of it a great food producing empire for which the people of Canada should be thankful.

Another point in this connection is that the minister should reconsider his position with respect to off-site storage. There are many points up in that country that could use off-site storage and would provide it if they could obtain a licence. The granting of further licences ought to be considered by the minister. I would hope that the Minister of Trade and Commerce would give more favourable consideration than he has in the past to this request for an inland storage elevator located somewhere in the Peace river country. I am sure he would find upon careful study that the construction of an elevator there would not only be justified but would to a large extent relieve the situation under which the farmers in that area have to operate. As I said, they are isolated and therefore frequently are not given shipping orders from the wheat board to take care of the demands from overseas. The farmers in that area are finding it extremely difficult to pay their bills and to keep their families supplied with food, clothing, fuel and the necessities of life. As a matter of fact they are finding it difficult to keep ahead of the sheriff in connection with machine purchases because they cannot market enough of their crops to provide them with money to meet their bills. The people in that territory would have a much better chance of earning a decent livelihood if more inland storage was provided through terminal elevators and off-site storage.

The forward-looking enterprise of the government of British Columbia in extending the Pacific and Great Eastern Railway to connect with the Northern Alberta Railway at Dawson Creek is to be commended and this will be of great assistance to the farmers in the Peace river territory when the route is completed. I wish to pay tribute to that enterprise and the vision behind it.

I would like to say a word or two concerning the question of parity prices. Other speakers from the Social Credit group have presented arguments in favour of parity prices and there are only one or two points I want to emphasize. Other hon. members of this group have declared that the Social Credit party in this house favours the establishment of parity prices for farmers. I do not think anybody could sensibly argue that farmers are not entitled to parity prices. Certainly no one on the government side of the house could reasonably argue that farmers are less entitled to parity prices than are industrialists. Industrialists get parity prices; they set their prices and many of them are protected by government policy on tariffs and customs. I think it is unreasonable to argue that farmers are less entitled to parity prices than labour is entitled to the stabilization of wages and salaries. Hon. members on the government side of the house have favoured, as we have in this group, the stabilization of wages and salaries for labour, through measures such as unemployment insurance and that sort of thing. We have also given support and consent to measures granting the labouring people in this country the right to strike, to have collective bargaining and things of that nature which enhance their chances of receiving a fair return for their labour. Having protected all other segments of Canadian society, why in the name of common sense are we so loath to come to the aid of our farming population which produces the food we need to keep alive? The Minister of Trade and Commerce and others have argued that to grant parity prices to the farmers would mean we would have to subsidize those prices. As was said so well by the hon. member for Lethbridge last night, even if we have to subsidize farm prices in order to achieve parity prices we would be perfectly justified in doing so. I strongly suspect that because farmers constitute only 15 or 16 per cent of the total population of Canada this is one reason their voice is not heard as well as it was heard when farmers constituted 80 per cent of the total population of this country.

There was a time in Canada's history when 80 per cent of the population was engaged in farming and in those days the farmer had a far better deal than he is getting today. Today with only 15 or 16 per cent of our population engaged in farming the farmer is lucky if he receives 7 per cent of the national income. That is not right, nor is it fair.

For a number of years the Social Credit group have been proposing in this house the adoption of a two-price system of marketing of Canadian farm products. That cry has now been taken up by farm organizations and even our friends of the C.C.F. now advocate it. We are glad of that because we do not feel we have any corner on the idea, not for one minute. We are happy to see them putting it forward rather than to take issue with them. We rejoice in that action because it is the only way we can ever get anywhere, that is to have a universal acceptance of the idea. We have suggested that the establishment of a two-price system would be a step toward the establishment of parity prices in this country.

There are two phases to the two-price system, as has already been suggested. One phase has to do with external marketing and I do not intend dealing with that this afternoon because it has been dealt with already by other speakers. The other phase has to do with internal marketing. It is well known that approximately 94 per cent of all farm production in Canada, exclusive of wheat, is consumed in Canada. However, the peculiar thing is that the 6 per cent that is exported governs the price of the 94 per cent consumed internally. That should never be; that is a completely wrong principle which denies fairness and justice and denies the principle of supply and demand.

Over and above that the Canadian people consume approximately 160 million bushels of our wheat, either in the form of bread and cereals or seed, but not feed for cattle. That 160 million bushels could be made a very important factor in the establishment of parity prices. Our suggestion is that since the wheat board has the control of the total supply of wheat it would be a simple matter to grant to that board the right to set parity prices on that portion of our grain which is marketed and consumed internally. If they had that right it would go a long way toward the establishment of parity prices. There is no reason why that could not be done as it would not interfere in any way with the good work being done by the Canadian wheat board.

I know the minister and several others have expressed their opposition to the idea because they do not want the Canadian consumer to subsidize farm prices. Bless my soul, what are the consumers of Canada doing in connection with automobiles and electrical goods. They are paying a price set by a protected industry and this government is providing that protection through its policies. If that is good for the electrical industry, if that is good for the automobile industry, it ought also to be good for the farmer. My contention is that we would be justified in giving the wheat board the right to establish parity prices on all grains marketed inside Canada. If that were done No. 1 wheat would sell at approximately $2.37 per bushel which is the price which has been established as being the likely parity price, a price which would bear a fair relationship to the prices the farmer has to pay for what he buys.

If that were done what would be the result? Would it in truth be necessary for the consumers of Canada to subsidize the price? I do not look upon an increase in price due to costs as being a subsidy. Subsidies are taken out of taxation and paid over as compensatory payments to certain classes or groups, but this matter of charging a price which is fair and just is not subsidization in any sense.

It has been pointed out already, and I want to emphasize it, that if our farmers were granted a parity price for their wheat, for that portion which is used internally, it would not necessarily increase the price of bread by more than one-half cent per loaf. The reason for that is plain. Anyone who has taken the trouble to examine into the way costs have risen since 1945, labour costs, paper costs, packaging costs, retail marketing costs and so on, will have found that the great bulk of the increase in the prices of 16-ounce or 24-ounce loaves has been made up of the increases in things other than the cost of wheat. The fact is that the wheat content in a loaf of bread would not raise the retail price of a 16-ounce or 24-ounce loaf by more than one-half cent if parity prices were adopted.

Ask any person in this country who has the interests of the farmer at heart; ask the labouring man who works in industry what he would think of having to pay a half cent increase in the price of a loaf of bread, and I will guarantee that he would think it through and say: "I favour it because when the farmer gets an increase in his wheat return he is going to buy more of the products of industry and that is going to stabilize my wages or salary position."

It is well known that in those years when the total volume of wages and salaries in industry has been approximately the equal of the total volume of farm cash income there has been no unemployment, the country has been considered to be prosperous and everybody has been happy. But just let farm cash income begin to decline below the volume of industrial salaries and wages and it will not be long until those industrial salaries and wages will follow the decline and someone will be out of a job. Labour favours the establishment of parity prices for farmers because they know that the farmers constitute their best markets for industrial goods and that their chances of remaining in good jobs with decent wages depend to a large degree upon whether the farmer can buy what is being produced.

Under those circumstances and with those facts in mind I submit that we are not justified in doing anything else but give the wheat board the right to set the internal price at parity for all farm products consumed internally. So far as the external part of the parity price system is concerned, I agree that it would be necessary to establish a floor below which we would not allow that price return to go. However, that is another matter. Even so I think we would be perfectly justified in establishing parity prices all the way through in order to stabilize our economy and insulate us against the sharp declines that are bound to take place when farm cash income does not come up to the required level.

I think that is about all I wish to say at the moment in that connection, but there are two things I should like to deal with very briefly in rebuttal. These were called for last night, otherwise I would not mention them, and I am not playing politics when I do. I want to assure the minister of that.

While the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) was speaking the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Decore) interpolated some questions. I have looked them over carefully as they are set out on page 1071 of Hansard for yesterday, and I can come to only one conclusion, namely that those questions were asked for the purpose of implying that because the Social Credit group in the house voted for the British wheat agreement we had no justification whatever for criticizing the result of the British wheat agreement. That is the only way in which I can interpret what the hon. member for Vegreville said in his questions. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that we voted for the British wheat agreement, but at the same time we pointed out that the promise of the government would have to be kept. That promise was that if the farmers would submit themselves to a "ceiling" on the prices which they were to obtain for their wheat over a period—a price that would be lower, perhaps, than the world price—the government would protect them by stabilizing prices over a long period of time.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask the hon. member a question. When was that promise made? As I remember the situation the British wheat agreement provided a better price for wheat than we were getting at the time, and everyone thought we were getting a good deal. The hon. gentleman said, "We might have liked the deal you made but we may not like the way it works out." I think you have to make up your mind whether it is a good deal or not when you sign the document.

Mr. Low: I think that if the minister had listened to what I was saying, and allowed me to continue, he would not have needed to make that interpolation. I do not blame him for being a little nervous these days.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Not nervous. Just bored.

Mr. Low: I will give the minister an answer to his question—

Mr. Knowles: Parliament always bores the minister.

Mr. Low: Here again are the words of the prime minister of this country, Mr. King, as spoken over the radio on September 4, 1943.

> I wish tonight to thank the farmers of Canada for their magnificent contribution to the battle of production. I wish again to appeal to them to continue to help hold the front line against inflation by continuing to support the price ceiling. If, to help win the war, the farmers are asked to accept a ceiling on prices, we believe they are entitled to a floor under prices to ensure them against an agricultural depression after the war.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There was no ceiling on wheat, ever.

Mr. Low: The minister cannot possibly defend that position, and when he speaks in rebuttal I challenge him to defend that.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am stating a fact. If the hon. gentleman will tell me when the ceiling was placed on wheat—

Mr. Low: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows full well that wheat was sold to the millers in Canada under exactly the same terms as the British wheat agreement. He knows, too, that throughout the war Canadian farmers were forced to sell their wheat to Canadian millers at prices well below world prices. He knows that.

[Mr. Low.]

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What has that to do with the present bill?

Mr. Low: It has a lot to do with it, especially since you butted in. I just want to point out that the Prime Minister of this country did give a firm and unequivocal promise. He went on to say:

> As an essential part of its post-war policy, the government intends to ask parliament at the next session to place a floor under the prices of main farm commodities.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to say too much more about that, except this. Speaking in the debate in this house in 1947 on the question of the British wheat agreement, my hon. friend from Acadia had this to say—and it puts our position perfectly plainly in connection with the agreement which at that time was under consideration. He said, at page 746 of Hansard:

> I believe that the wheat agreement with Britain was fully justified but it does entail in its early stages a considerable sacrifice on the part of our farmers. We feel that the sacrifice should be borne by the people of Canada as a whole—

That has been the position we have taken right from the beginning, and we took that position because it began to be perfectly plain that under this agreement the government's policy was to make the Canadian farmer bear the whole cost of lower prices, and not to distribute that cost over the whole of the population of Canada. The minister knows that that is so, and later the government did acknowledge, in part, its responsibility for the fact that the wheat agreement had failed the farmers to a certain extent, by granting to them a payment of $65 million which was, of course, only a pittance compared with losses amounting to something like $500 million.

Mr. Hosking: Sixty-five million dollars a pittance?

Mr. Low: Compared with the total figure involved.

Mr. Dickey: In Social Credit terms that is a pittance.

Mr. Low: Sixty-five million dollars was a compensation that this government decided, arbitrarily, that they would give to the farmers, and even that came from a left-over pot in Britain.

Mr. Decore: They paid $32 million last year for the storage of grain.

An hon. Member: Is that Liberal policy?

Mr. Low: There was one other reason, Mr. Speaker, why I felt I should say a word in rebuttal—I will be finished in three minutes.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You only have one minute left.

Mr. Low: If the minister would rather I called on the clock I will be glad to do so, but I imagine he would want me to finish so he can get his bill through.

While the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) was speaking last night he used the tar brush quite liberally, and suggested that the whole Social Credit group was speaking out of both sides of their mouths at one and the same time.

An hon. Member: Just what you would expect.

Mr. Low: He called, he said, for a more balanced expression of views from the Social Credit group as to why they were prepared to endorse this legislation if they were prepared to oppose similar moves in other fields under discussion. I gathered from the tone of his speech and that of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) that they resented anybody else in this house supporting the wheat board or giving any indication that they favoured this idea of marketing. Evidently they think they have a corner in this idea and that it is a socialist idea.

Mr. Speaker, I deny that they have any corner with regard to the orderly marketing system now being carried on by the wheat board. I deny that is was a socialist idea in the beginning and I deny that it is a socialist idea now. We have given every indication of supporting it in the same way as they have, but let me just point this out: As I understand it, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni was simply indicating that he did not know very much about socialist experiments in this country. I will tell you something that we have been opposed to but which the socialists have gone along with. I refer, for example, to the timber board in Saskatchewan.

An hon. Member: And the fish board?

Mr. Ellis: What about the fur-marketing service? Are you opposed to that?

Mr. Low: The hon. members are just giving evidence of what I was going to say. The socialists did support the government's intervention into these fields and the imposition of a government compulsory service under which they took away from the people the right to their own individual enterprises.

An hon. Member: Is the wheat board not such a body?

Mr. Low: Just listen until I am through and you will get the answer. In the case of the timber board in the province of Saskatchewan the government moved in and took over timber berths that had been in the possession of private enterprise.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Ellis: You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Nicholson: Crown timber only.

Mr. Ellis: Stick to Alberta.

Mr. Low: They forced the timber people to sell their lumber to the board at a price.

Mr. Nicholson: Crown lumber.

Mr. Low: Then they turned around and marketed that lumber at a greatly enhanced price and instead of returning the benefits to the producers they kept them themselves.

Mr. Ellis: Who are "they"?

Mr. Nicholson: The people of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Low: I am speaking of the government of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Harrison: The heelers of the government.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid it would be better for all concerned to call it one o'clock because we will not get any further ahead now.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Not now, it is one o'clock.

Mr. Low: I should like to call it one o'clock because I want to finish.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Low: Mr. Speaker, I was in the process of explaining why we support the Canadian wheat board and the present bill when I was interrupted at one o'clock. I would just like to take one or two minutes in which to finish what I had to say and then to help the minister get his bill through if we can.

In the first place, the Canadian wheat board was established as a consequence of the demands of the overwhelming majority of the wheat producers in western Canada for a marketing board of that type. It was not imposed by the government upon the farmers. It was given to them as a result of a request for such a board. That is the first important thing. It seems to me that when the overwhelming majority of the producers in any division request some form of marketing service which will be theirs, we have no alternative but to grant it to them if we can.

Mr. Speaker, the wheat board has continued to operate as an agency representing the producers themselves and certainly in no way can be considered to be a government agency imposed upon the farmers. That is quite distinct from the kind of thing that the socialists would do. The socialists would not wait for the producers in any division to express their desire to have a marketing board of this kind. If they took it into their heads to do so, they would impose it by compulsion on those producers, just as they did in the case of the lumber board in Saskatchewan. The difference between the two ideas, the two types of marketing agency, is this. In the case of the wheat board, having been requested by the producers and having been granted control over 100 per cent of that type of production, the board goes ahead and markets and pays back to the producers the total of the moneys taken in the process of marketing the goods, less perhaps some of the costs of the service of marketing. On the other hand, the lumber board in the province of Saskatchewan was not set up as a consequence of the demand of the lumber producer. In the second place it was imposed by the government as a compulsory service, whether the people wanted it or not. In the third place—

Mr. Nicholson: You can sell your own lumber.

Mr. Low: Just a minute. When the lumber is produced in the province it has to be sold to the government.

Mr. Nicholson: You can sell your own lumber to anybody.

Mr. Low: Wait a minute. Ninety-nine per cent of the lumber that is produced in all the provinces of Canada is produced on crown lands.

Mr. Nicholson: Oh, no.

Mr. Low: It certainly is and there is no exception. Ontario is no exception.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): The lumber belongs to the people.

Mr. Ellis: You want to give it away to United States interests.

Mr. Low: The third point I want to emphasize is this. When the lumber producers in the province of Saskatchewan produce the lumber, they are forced to sell it to the board and the board just pays to the producer a very small return, less than half what the board sells for on the world market.

Mr. Nicholson: They contract—

Mr. Low: When you begin to tie a tin can to these braying jackasses' tails, they make a lot of noise.

Mr. Nicholson: You fought that in Saskatchewan last year.

Mr. Low: You fight it all the time when you can make a lot of noise in order to try to bray somebody down. But I assure you that you cannot bray me down. The fact is that the lumber board does not distribute back to the producers the difference between the small price which that board pays to the lumber producers and what they get for the sale of the lumber in the markets of the world.

Mr. Nicholson: They distribute to all the people in your province.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Low: The difference between the two marketing ideas is perfectly clear when you compare the Canadian wheat board and its operations and the lumber board and its operations in the province of Saskatchewan. Our position is simply this. We do not support in any form the kind of thing that is envisioned in the Saskatchewan lumber board. We support and have always supported the kind of marketing agency that is represented in the Canadian wheat board, one that is set up as a consequence of a demand of an overwhelming number of producers who get the full benefits of the returns from the sale of the products.

There is one other point I wish to make. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) asked why we would not support the setting up of a lumber board or a timber board in British Columbia. The answer is perfectly simple. The people of British Columbia who are in the lumber-producing business have never asked for such a thing.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): They do not produce the lumber. They just cut it.

Mr. Low: The lumber producers have never asked for such a thing. The people of British Columbia gave a good answer to that question in the last election when they very definitely turned down the socialists and put a Social Credit government into office. I think that is the answer. Our position on the wheat board is perfectly clear. No matter how many statements are made in an effort to tar-brush our group,—

Mr. Ellis: You are able to white-wash it.

Mr. Low: —they cannot get anywhere with it. We do not believe in socialism. We believe in the right of the producers of this country to have a marketing agency of their own that will operate for them and not for the government of the day.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Huron wish to ask a question?

Mr. Cardiff: The minister made a statement this morning that there was never any ceiling on wheat. I should like to ask what difference there is between a ceiling on wheat and selling below the world market price.

Mr. Speaker: I thought the hon. member for Huron wished to ask a question of the hon. member who just resumed his seat. But if it is a question that he is addressing to the minister, I am afraid that he will have to ask it when the house is in committee, or perhaps the minister when he has the right of reply may give his answer then.

Mr. H. A. Hosking (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to delay this debate—

An hon. Member: Then sit down.

Mr. Hosking: —but I should like to make some remarks for about five minutes only. I make these remarks only because the debate criticizing the wheat board, has gone on February 1, February 6, February 7 and February 8. During these days we have listened to complaining, snivelling and whining—

Mr. Blackmore: Nothing of the kind.

Mr. Hosking: —by the socialist members for all those days. I should like to point out that this is a simple bill to extend the date to which the wheat board can operate.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): It is still not simple enough for you.

Mr. Hosking: Because of that fact it is of little interest to the people in my part of Ontario. But I think we should point out to those members from the west who are continually criticizing the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) that the people in my part of the country have been extremely favourable to those in the west. I need only recall what happened when I was a little boy when the government of Canada used to subsidize the fares on the railways so that our farmers' sons could go out and work in the west. Our farmers in the east used to send their sons out to help the western farmers take off their crops. Then when the depression came along I can remember that our church collected clothes and that we sent bales of clothes out to the people in the west. We did this because we thought that the western people were proud, hardy farmers who were trying to make a living in this country and that they honestly needed help. Since I have been a member of this house I voted to give $65 million to these western farmers.

Mr. Ellis: The farmer's own money.

Mr. Hosking: I heard it called a mere pittance in the house today. When beggars get to the stage that they call $65 million a mere pittance, I am beginning to wonder if perhaps the description of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) of his farmers is not pretty close to correct. I would much rather think that the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) describes them properly when he says they are proud hardy individuals who only want fair play,—

Mr. Ellis: They are still asking for fair play.

Mr. Hosking: —such as the minister is giving to them by this bill. Last year I believe we voted them some $32 million for the storage of grain. This year there will be another $29 million, I suppose. It should be remembered that the farmers and others in the east, the people who live in Ontario, pay one-half of this money. If it were not for the fact the Minister of Trade and Commerce persuades the Liberal members of this house that this help is required to give a balanced economy in Canada, I am quite certain it would not be voted by the members of parliament who come from Ontario. The C.C.F. members speeches would persuade us not to vote for this bill.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Do you mean to say that the Liberals generally do not favour it?

Mr. Hosking: If this is a bad bill as the socialist members particularly state by their criticism that the wheat board is badly handled, that it is not a good thing, then I would suggest that perhaps the time has come when some of us should take another look to see if we should continue paying half of the subsidies that go to western farmers.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): That is a Liberal attitude for you.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): I might say it had not been my intention to participate in this debate until remarks were made within the last 20 minutes or so. I am a little concerned about the remarks made by the speaker who has just resumed his seat. I am hoping that his Liberal colleagues from the province of Saskatchewan will take this opportunity of setting him right on a few of the very grave misconceptions under which he is labouring at the moment.

One thing which has concerned me, Mr. Speaker, has been the tendency on the part of the Liberal government to feel that when they are making payments on wheat they are handing out a gift to the farmers who grew the wheat. Such an attitude, of course, completely ignores the whole principle of the wheat board. When a farmer is paid an initial price and then the books are closed there is a final payment, and that money belongs to the farmer. I resent this tendency on the part of the Liberal government to hand out these payments just before election time with the deliberate intent of creating the impression that the money is coming out of the pockets of the members of the government or the Liberal supporters of the government.

There has been enough of the line of argument just presented by a Liberal member in this house, that I think it is high time some of the Liberal members from Saskatchewan who know better put the man right. I am suggesting that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Mang) or the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Studer) or the member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher)—although he spoke, he did not speak on the resolution but talked about Saskatchewan politics in the main—and some of these other members who have just taken part in the debate should seek to set the record straight. It is their job, because after all he is one of their colleagues. I am just wondering whether or not the member for Qu'Appelle, the member for Swift Current-Maple Creek and the member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre are not actually uncomfortable over remarks of the type just made because they indicate a complete lack of understanding on the part of Liberal members in this house. I blame the Liberal members from Saskatchewan for their failure to acquaint their colleagues in this house with the problem.

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Ellis: You sit down.

Mr. Thatcher: You asked me a question; why don't you let me answer it?

Mr. Ellis: You made a speech the other day. You can sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ellis: So far as interruptions are concerned, I am not too concerned about them.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it the hon. gentleman does not wish to be interrupted at this moment.

Mr. Studer: He asked for interruptions.

Mr. Ellis: The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek is now in his seat and I would be happy to hear him make a speech immediately after I have concluded.

Mr. Studer: The hon. member—

Mr. Ellis: Do not interrupt.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ellis: We have heard remarks in this house about calamity howlers, and so forth. I am going to place on the record a statement made just the other day. I am going to give you the statement of a member in the Manitoba legislature:

> A member for the Manitoba legislature urged immediate action to save Manitoba farmers from a situation they are unable to cope with and ease a crisis that threatens disaster to agriculture in the province.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I understand it is not the practice in this house to introduce into debate the opinions of people from outside of this house. Further, the bill has nothing to do with the subject matter of the present discussion. I do not mind a loud voice being the cover for an empty mind, but I think there should be some respect for the subject matter under debate.

Mr. Ellis: I want to assure the members of this house that I am not concerned about the insults which are frequently hurled in my direction, in this case by the minister, by the members of the house because I feel that rude remarks do not compensate for a lack of logic or reasonable argument.

A remark was made by the leader of the Social Credit group a few minutes ago, and there have been a number of interjections of that type from this group. As a matter of fact, this morning a Liberal member took exception to a statement in the press to the effect that she had told a member to shut up. The only member in this house whom I have ever heard shout "shut up" was the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell). I do not feel that is a substitute for a reasoned answer. I can appreciate his concern at times and his desire to avoid criticism of the things he has to say, but I suggest that he give logical answers rather than simple, rude remarks which I do not think add to his stature or the stature of the house itself.

A moment ago, Mr. Speaker, I placed on the record a statement made in the Manitoba legislature by a Liberal M.L.A. Now, there is a calamity howler for you. Here is a Liberal in the Manitoba legislature who has courage to do what the members here should be doing in this house. They should be up on their feet presenting the case for their wheat growers in their constituencies, yet they sit in supine silence. If they agree with government policy, if they think the government is doing all it should do for the wheat producers, let them get up and defend the government and not sit in their seats. They will not say they are for it and they will not say they are against it. I suggest that they emulate the example—

Mr. Studer: We will vote for it.

Mr. Ellis: —of their colleague in the Manitoba legislature who placed on the record the situation as it actually is in his own province of Manitoba. I suggest that these Liberal members, if they were doing their job, would be presenting the situation as it exists in their particular part of the country and would be standing up in support of representations being made on behalf of the agricultural industry.

Mr. Studer: No one believes a socialist member.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I ask all hon. members in all parts of the house to cease this practice of interrupting the member who has the floor. It has reached the point where we cannot follow a discussion according to the rules, and the method of interruption is not in accordance with the decorum which should be kept in this house.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, would you mind ruling on the matter of relevance. It seems to me that the remarks which have been made by the hon. member have not touched on the subject matter of the bill. They have touched on nothing important and represent mere ranting of my hon. friend, relevant to nothing.

Mr. Speaker: As to that, I must say the debate has been proceeding for several days now. I have not been in the house throughout the entire debate and when a matter of this kind is debated at great length hon. members are bound to make certain comparisons and to go over the various declarations that have been made from time to time; then in the rebuttal that is being addressed to the remarks made by previous speakers it may be necessary for someone to advance arguments which necessarily are aside from the matter which is under discussion. From the point of view of strict relevancy there is not very much in the bill that must be discussed at this time. However, the discussion has ranged far afield and from all indications I think the discussion should be terminated rather shortly. Until then I think we ought to allow the same latitude that was allowed previously.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your ruling. When the minister spoke I noted that he ranged far and wide.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He certainly did.

Mr. Ellis: He discussed matters of a very general nature.

An hon. Member: Including the Gordon commission.

Mr. Ellis: A colleague of mine reminds me that he discussed the Gordon commission report. I also noted that the minister's colleague the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) devoted a great deal of his time to discussing matters which could have no relevancy to any debate that might take place in this house. I want to assure that hon. gentleman and members of the house that if they wish to discuss Saskatchewan internal politics we will be only too happy to oblige. There is nothing that would give us greater satisfaction than the opportunity to debate at great length the activities of the government of the province of Saskatchewan.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre the other day dealt with matters that have been bandied about in the province of Saskatchewan during the past ten years. They were rejected by the people of Saskatchewan in provincial elections and it was that sort of campaign which drove the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) out of provincial politics and sent him down to exile in this chamber. I am appalled when I consider the depths to which some hon. members sink in their discussion. I am thinking now of a statement made the other day by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, for example, concerning the connection of two ministers with a drive-in theatre. They have had no connection with that enterprise for three years and yet either through sheer ignorance or simply in an attempt to convey an entirely erroneous impression the hon. member resorted to an attack of the sort which the people of Saskatchewan have rejected in previous elections. I do not think there is any point in answering charges of that nature on the floor of the house at this time. I do not think it is worth the time that would be required to untangle all the erroneous statements that have been made.

I remember when the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre participated in the debate on the pipe line. He did not talk about the pipe line but made a speech containing 15 inaccurate statements in the space of a few paragraphs.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Although the hon. gentleman may take wide latitude I think he should return now to the wheat bill that is before the house.

Mr. Ellis: Well, Mr. Speaker, just prior to the time the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) resumed his seat he gave us a little dissertation on the principle of orderly marketing. He was attempting to show us the difference between the marketing of timber and the marketing of wheat. It seems to me he missed the whole point of the argument because one thing that must be remembered is that the wheat belongs to the individual farmer who grows it. I observed that hon. members across the way were agreeing when he admitted that most of the lumber is on crown land. The lumber belongs to the people of the province. There is the essential difference which my hon. friends for some reason or other cannot appreciate and I suspect it is simply because they do not want to recognize that difference. To try to suggest there is no pressure by the lumber producers for the sort of board we have established for the wheat producers is rather a spurious argument to say the least. I realize, of course, that the policy of the Social Credit party is simply to turn over our natural resources lock, stock and barrel to the big interests, the people from whom they are seeking financial support. I noticed a reference in the press the other night to a letter which was being mailed to all the big interests of this country by the Social Credit party soliciting funds for that party and I just wonder whether they included members of the Winnipeg grain exchange in the distribution they made of that letter.

An hon. Member: What about the lumber interests?

Mr. Ellis: You will get it all. MacMillan and Bloedel and other lumber interests pretty well have a stranglehold in that province. That is your method of doing it in British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ellis: The lumber resources belong to the people of Saskatchewan and the idea that for some reason or other the relatively few people who are in the lumber business have priority rights that transcend the interest of the general public is something with which I cannot agree. In actual fact no one sells lumber to the timber board. The timber board hires people to cut the lumber because lumber belongs to the people of Saskatchewan and as long as there is a C.C.F. government in that province that is the way it is going to be.

Mr. Lesage: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, what has lumber to do with wheat?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know if the minister was in his seat just before one o'clock, but comparisons have been made between the wheat board and the timber board in the province of Saskatchewan and I take it that previously in this debate remarks were made by some hon. members with respect to the attitude of others in relation to the policies of the wheat board as compared to the policies followed by the timber board. Just prior to one o'clock the hon. leader of the Social Credit Party gave a rebuttal to these arguments and I understand the hon. member for Regina City is now answering the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Ellis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I certainly had no intention of talking about lumber today—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ellis: —but when an hon. member decides to introduce that subject during the course of a debate I think some effort should be made to set the record straight and that is precisely what I proposed to do at this time. However, I am not going to pursue that matter further in deference to your desire to see a quick end to this aspect of the debate.

There is one other matter which I think should be closely examined. When the hon. member for Peace River was speaking a number of hon. members asked about the fur marketing service. From what I can gather the hon. member for Peace River is opposed to the fur marketing service. In the past Liberals have gone up and down the province of Saskatchewan opposing the fur marketing service and yet that service in principle is precisely what the wheat board is, a marketing agency for a particular product.

An hon. Member: Where is it now?

Mr. Ellis: How can it be that in one breath a man can say he is all for the wheat board and he is all for the principle of orderly marketing while in the next breath he condemns exactly the same principle in another field of economic endeavour. It seems to me that if you are going to be logical you must be consistent. You cannot praise one form of orderly marketing and damn another. That should not be done even for political reasons.

I think the statements made by the hon. member for Peace River were completely uncalled for and I think that if hon. members will read the speech made yesterday by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) they will find he gave a very dispassionate and reasonable address—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ellis: —in which he made a few statements that I am sure have ruffled the feathers of some of the members of other parties who come from the province of British Columbia.

I am going to make this comment, Mr. Speaker, concerning some of the statements which have been made in this debate about the wheat board. It is now becoming the fashion for Liberal politicians to attempt to place the wheat board in the very untenable position of being responsible for all the blunders and mistakes of the federal Liberal government. They suggest that anyone who takes issue with anything done by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and anyone who criticizes the marketing policies of this government is in some way attacking the wheat board. That line of argument in itself is the most dangerous path along which anyone could go with respect to the future of the Canadian wheat board. The wheat board is not responsible for the impasse in which the agricultural industry of this country finds itself at the present time. The wheat board is a creature of the government and is not responsible for the government's marketing policies and its failure to find markets for our wheat. This effort on the part of Liberal politicians to suggest that any attack on the government or any questioning of the government's agricultural policies indicates a lack of support for the wheat board is of course very skilful to say the least. I would say that, as far as the protestations made by Liberal members concerning the support of the wheat board are concerned, there are three points on which they can be judged.

In the first place, they did not want the wheat board. They fought it tooth and nail when it was first introduced into this house. After they came into power they sought to destroy it by underhand methods by means of an order in council which would have had the effect of destroying its effectiveness. However, as a result of the protests by farmers throughout western Canada they realized that they dared not go through with their plan. They then adopted the stratagem —I have forgotten the author of this little expression: if you cannot beat them, join them.

When they realized it was not politically wise to go on opposing the wheat board they turned around and said, "Of course, we are great friends of the wheat board." The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) indicated that quite clearly the other day when he said that in his opinion 99 per cent of the farmers on the prairies were in support of the wheat board. I agree with him. By that statement he indicated why Liberal members dared not openly oppose the wheat board. They have come to the position where they must at least pay lip service to it.

As far as the Social Credit members are concerned, those who represent agricultural constituencies in Alberta have from their past association learned that the wheat board is doing a great thing for the agricultural industry, but I am thinking now more of the party as a whole and its propaganda. They go out and talk against compulsion; they condemned the hospitalization scheme because of the feature of compulsory contribution. A few years ago the leader of that party was reported in Maclean's magazine as being against any form of contributory plan if it was compulsory. Now they wonder why some people are a little dubious about the depth of their support for this principle of orderly marketing. They tried to destroy it in British Columbia. I realize that some of these statements are very unpalatable to my friends to my left, but nevertheless I think they should take them into consideration.

Another aspect of the protestations by Liberal members is in connection with the request of this group that the legislation be made permanent. I realize that at times legislation is introduced to set up a board of commission in connection with which there may be some reasonable doubt as to its effectiveness, whether it will accomplish the purpose for which it is being set up, but here we have a case of the wheat board being set up in 1935 and continuing to function in spite of the early efforts of the Liberal party to destroy it.

The very fact as stated by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre the other day, that 99 per cent of the farmers of the prairies are in support of the wheat board, indicates the logic of not denying the request that this legislation should set up the wheat board as a permanent feature. Today the member for Peace River (Mr. Low) indicated his opposition to the setting up of the board on a permanent basis.

Mr. Low: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of personal privilege. I do not mind the hon. member saying anything he wants to say that is true, but when he stands up and says something that is absolutely untrue involving me I must protest. I said nothing of the kind today. I did say that I was not opposed to making the Canadian Wheat Board Act a permanent act, but I said I did see some advantages in the method being used today to extend its life five years at a time.

Mr. Ellis: I must thank the hon. member for intimating that he agrees wholeheartedly with all the statements I have made up to this time concerning that particular point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Low: The hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Ellis) has misstated something else. I did not indicate by anything that I said that I agreed with everything he had said previously, nor with any part of it. When he deliberately tries to put words in my mouth which are untrue I must intervene. I intervene again. I will say that 99 per cent of what he has just said is utter hoopla.

Mr. Ellis: I was under the impression that the hon. member had indicated some reluctance to support the permanency of the wheat board. However, I will accept his correction of that particular statement. I suggest that Liberal members in this house have a duty to their constituencies. First of all, they have a duty to stand up in their places in this house on occasions such as this to present the views of the people in their constituencies. I am convinced that the farmers in the Qu'Appelle constituency are not happy with the situation which prevails in that area. While it is true the hon. member for that constituency may take some comfort from the fact he has a few people who may have expressed satisfaction, from my observations and from speaking to people in that area I know that there is as much dissatisfaction in his constituency as there is in the constituencies of the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Johnson), the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) and the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson). They have a duty to their constituencies to present the cases of their constituencies in as forthright a manner as possible.

I suggest that if they honestly believe that this government is doing all it can for the farmers in their constituencies they should do the right thing and get up and defend the government on the floor of this house.

Mr. Thatcher: I would like to know if the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Ellis) knows that the destructive speeches which the socialists are making here are undermining the wheat board in the minds of members from other parts of Canada.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree that that is hardly a question. It is not even phrased as a question, it is just an effort to get a point of view across.

Mr. Thatcher: If you talk much more nonsense we will not have a wheat board.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to say more than a few words in closing this debate. As I have said before, the bill is very simple. The effect of its provisions is to make three changes in dates in the bill, from August 1, 1957 to August 1, 1962. That is the whole purpose of the bill.

I opened by making a few remarks about the wheat board. We have heard the spokesmen for all three parties say that they favour the bill. I think there is every evidence that the Liberal party is unanimously in favour of the bill and I am satisfied that the official opposition is in favour of the bill. The suggestion has been made that the board should make payments on farm-stored grain.

In that the official opposition differs from the other parties because, I noted, the other parties say someone other than the wheat board should make advances on farm-stored grain. I would like, Mr. Speaker, to correct the impression which the socialists are trying to convey that the board is a great socialist experiment operated by the government. That is totally untrue. The wheat board method of marketing antedates the socialist party. I do not think there was a socialist in Canada when the wheat board method of marketing was originated in 1924 or 1925. Until the depression came along to interfere with its functioning, the board operated entirely as a voluntary organization of prairie farmers running their own business of selling wheat. The only difference between the board as it functioned then and as it functions now is that the government nowadays guarantees the finances used by the board in carrying on its operations. And, more recently, it has taken over part of the wheat pool surplus and is carrying it on government account. That is the only difference, and to claim that the board is socialistic, or that it has any particular love of or tie with socialists is completely false.

The board is a farmers' board. Operating expenses of the board are paid by the farmers themselves. The board is advised by an advisory board made up entirely of producers and producer organizations. Moreover, the authority for setting the price of grain is vested in the board and not in the government—it has been vested by this parliament in the board itself. Let us, therefore, get rid of the idea that there is anything socialistic about the wheat board.

Mr. Speaker, I said I believed that the official opposition favour this bill. I do not believe for a moment that the socialists favour the bill. They say they favour the bill, but—just sit down—what did they say about the wheat board?

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I would like to know on whose authority, or on what statement made in the house, the minister can base the ridiculous statement that members of the C.C.F. party do not favour the principle of the orderly marketing of wheat.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I will be glad to elucidate. The marketing of Canadian grain is essential to the Canadian economy. I am sure that is true. And we think that a market for Canadian grain must be preserved—a market which will return the value of Canadian grain to the Canadian economy. The United States is in a different position. The United States was never an important factor in the world market for wheat until towards the end of the second world war. The economy of the United States does not depend on the export of wheat. Through internal policies the United States has built up production of wheat in excess of its requirements, and it has undertaken to market that surplus wheat in a way which we believe is destructive of Canadian markets and of the position of Canadian wheat on the world market.

We have protested about these methods. The socialists tell us these methods of United States selling are right. Several speakers, both in the Social Credit party and in the C.C.F. party, say that is the way to market wheat. Do they mean to tell me that a man who is supporting the wheat board in Canada would make that statement? Could anything be more ridiculous? We have heard a good many strange statements, particularly from the C.C.F. party, and I hope the people in the prairies will read these speeches which C.C.F. members have been making. If they do I think we will have fewer C.C.F. members in the next house than we have in the present house.

An hon. Member: A lot less.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I do not know that the disagreement with the United States about marketing methods has any particular place in this discussion. As I say, I have protested about others talking about everything but the bill and the wheat board, and I think, perhaps, I had better keep to the text.

There is one matter I might deal with, and that is the question raised by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn) as to why Alberta grain cannot be bought directly from farmers by feeders in British Columbia. This act provides that the wheat board shall be the sole marketing agency for wheat in the designated area, that is, in the prairie provinces. You may say that it is not the sole marketing agency because one farmer can sell to another—in other words, that a farmer can be a marketing agency. Well, we try to carry out the intention of the act that the wheat board should be the sole marketing agency, and in doing so we use every method consistent with the powers of the federal government.

We can legally prevent wheat moving across interprovincial borders; we can prevent wheat moving across the international border; we can prevent wheat not marketed through the wheat board moving on the railways; and we can prevent wheat not under the control of the wheat board being received at government elevators and feed mills which are agents of the wheat pool. We do all that. But we cannot prevent one farmer selling to another farmer within the same province. Only the government of the province itself can do that. Each province has, in the case of barley and oats, passed legislation regulating sales within the province. However, this government cannot do it, and we do not attempt to stop it—in other words, as far as we are concerned it is legal for one farmer to sell to another farmer within a province.

Mr. Harkness: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I would prefer he did not interrupt me in the middle—

Mr. Harkness: I understand you to say that the provinces had all passed legislation to prevent one farmer selling oats and barley to another. That is strictly not the case, is it?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What the provincial legislation is I am not too sure, but certainly provincial legislation prevents farmers selling to feed mills within a province. Whether it would prevent one farmer selling to another, I do not know.

Mr. Harkness: I am quite sure it does not.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): However, the point I am making is that so far as it lies within federal authority we carry out the spirit of the act. For that reason it is not possible for any individual to take wheat across a provincial border. No individual can do that legally under the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

A farmer can buy wheat from the wheat board. He does not get the discount that a farmer in distress may be willing to give on wheat for which he needs quick cash. I think farmers are realizing more and more that it is not good business to discount their wheat too quickly for the sake of a quick sale.

That is the situation, and I would like to make it clear. There are certain farmers in British Columbia, within the designated area, who have protested that they cannot take their wheat to Vancouver. They could—if they could do it without crossing an interprovincial border. But we do not ask those farmers to stay in the designated area. We are quite willing to remove those districts in British Columbia from the designated area and let them sell their wheat where they like. We have put that proposal to them, and it has been turned down unanimously as far as I can find out. But in dealing with the wheat board they must take the good with the bad and obey the rules, and that applies to the farmers of British Columbia just as it applies to the farmers of the prairie provinces.

The wheat board has a very difficult job. It is attempting to maintain order in world markets for wheat. It is attempting to maintain a stable price in world markets, and it is being undercut in many of those markets by competitors who do not have the same desire for stability. Happily we have maintained the price and at the same time have been able to sell something like our proportion of world markets. We think that when the United States wheat surplus is disposed of and the Americans retire from the markets, as they are pretty sure to do unless the subsidy on American wheat is continued indefinitely, we will have a world market on which Canada can trade as she did in earlier days. But it is a very difficult job and every discussion we have here in the house always has a depressing effect on the sale of wheat. For example, the suggestion is made that we should follow the American practice and put wheat afloat unsold that can be offered through brokers at prices lower than the market price. Every suggestion of that kind makes the task of the wheat board more difficult and is always reflected in the sales of wheat for a period after these debates take place.

In my opinion we have gone far afield in this debate. We have taken up matters that have no reference whatever to the proposal I am making to the house, and I think the wheat board has been the sufferer as a result. I do not know what we can do about wheat legislation. Last year I had a reasonably simple bill requested by a great number of people from the prairies. It was filibustered here for weeks. This is the fourth day of debate on this very simple bill to change a date. I have another bill in mind that should be put through at this session and I think that legislation I have in mind will be required. A great many people on the prairies want it. I cannot ask for the time this session from the leader of the house which would seem to be required to put that bill through and it may have to go over until the fall or whenever we have another session. I might try it for a day. If it goes through, all right, but if it does not the bill is out. But I think the idea that we can tie up the House of Commons for weeks to change a date in an act just because the bill refers to wheat is a theory that is untenable.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I wonder whether the minister would permit a question.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No. I do not want to be interrupted. I think that is all I have to say at the moment. I must say that as far as I can see the reasonableness of the ideas that have been put forward is just about in inverse proportion to the length of time taken to make the speech in the house and I think the loudness of voice has been in inverse ratio to the sensible material of the speaker's discourse.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I wonder whether I can ask the minister a question. Does the minister think that four days' discussion of the important topic of selling Canadian wheat is too much time for the Canadian parliament to take?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, this bill has nothing to do with selling Canadian wheat. It has to do with whether the wheat board will be continued for another five years.

Mr. Hahn: May I ask the minister a supplementary question with respect to the matters I raised the other day?

Mr. Speaker: Inasmuch as the house has now come to the point where it has to accept or reject the motion, may I suggest that as soon as a decision is reached the house will go into committee of the whole at which time members may ask the minister piloting the bill all the questions they wish to ask. Is the house ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Do hon. members wish me to take the yeas and nays?

Mr. Thatcher: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are opposed to the motion will please say nay. In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Fulton: Now who is wasting time?

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howe, Port Arthur) which was agreed to on the following division:

Bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Duration.

Mr. Herridge: I want to take this opportunity to bring two questions to the attention of the minister upon which I have been asked to get information. As I have mentioned before, the dairymen, poultrymen and livestock feeders in my constituency find that the cost of feed is a very high proportion of their costs, in fact it is twice the normal Canadian average. The cost of feed to these producers in my constituency is about 40 per cent of their selling price, whereas the normal Canadian average is about 20 per cent, so I am sure the minister will appreciate what a serious thing this cost of feed is to my constituents.

This matter was discussed quite completely at the last annual convention of the B.C. federation of agriculture. Two things were discussed, the high cost of feed and the possibility of buying direct from the farmer through the wheat board in order to save the handling costs. Then, there was another question, and that was the refusal of the railways to load grain within the province for transportation to another point in the province, as a result of instructions from the wheat board. In that connection, I want to read very briefly from Country Life, which deals with a report of that convention:

> Questions Authority
> There is a feeling among some agricultural producers in this province that the Canadian wheat board is operating beyond its legal powers when it controls rail shipments of feed grains within the province, as in the case of the Creston movements.

I might say in that connection that producers in my constituency had repeatedly tried to purchase grain in that area but the railway company would not accept it for loading because of some rulings of the wheat board. I continue the quotation:

> This was expressed by central Vancouver island poultry producers' association when it received unanimous endorsation of a resolution calling for the B.C. attorney-general to study wheat board practices and to proceed to obtain judgment from the courts if he finds that the wheat board is acting without legal authority.

My two questions to the minister are as follows: Is it possible, owing to the circumstances of many producers in British Columbia with respect to the high cost of feed, for some arrangement to be made for purchases direct from the farmers through the wheat board, that is to save handling costs between the farmer, the elevator and so on? Then again, what authority has the wheat board to prevent the railroads loading grain within a province for transportation to another point within the province?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The answer to the first question is that it is not possible to buy direct from the farmer through the wheat board. It is possible to buy direct from the wheat board at any marketing point in the province, that means any country elevator, and the purchase price there is the export price at Vancouver less the freight costs charged for the movement from that point to Vancouver. This purchase is legal and afterwards the grain bought in that way will have a certificate that lets it be moved anywhere and by any vehicle.

The reason the railroads cannot accept a shipment of wheat is the provision in the act that we are now extending. That provision has recently been tested in the courts. The case was taken to the Supreme Court of Canada and the court upheld the regulation of the wheat board, so I think that has been settled by the highest court in the land that it is not legally possible.

Mr. Hahn: Further to what I said earlier in this debate and following what the hon. member who just took his seat had to say, I have a question I should like to pose to the minister. During the course of the debate I proposed he set up a fact-finding board to discover if there is any means whereby we can, without circumventing the wheat board, because we in British Columbia realize the value of boards, stop this discrimination between the various provinces, or within the province itself, as a result of the sale of wheat at fire-sale prices.

No one wishes to have grain or any other products sold on the basis of a fire-sale price. We are fully aware of the need for the wheat board, and for this reason we have such boards in my own province. However, I do question whether we will not find ourselves in an awkward position in the very near future if we should have all grain go through the wheat board, as it undoubtedly would, and a short crop year should come to this country. It would appear to be a blessing as far as the farmer is concerned. The wheat board would be able to get rid of the grain by reason of our having a short crop year, and this would give the farmer an opportunity to get ready cash. The farmers on the prairies could go into the poultry business; but we in British Columbia would be in the awkward position of not having these goods supplied to us.

[Mr. Herridge.]

I would like to know if the minister has examined the possibility of setting up a fact-finding board to determine what would be the long-range effects of this act. The act has been in operation long enough to enable us to assess its immediate effects, and we certainly can observe them; but has he given any thought at all to the long-range effects?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): When this act was passed, Mr. Chairman, parliament made it clear that the wheat board was to be the sole marketing agency for Canadian wheat. I should not like to take any step that would weaken the position of the board in that respect. They enforce the intent of the act as far as they can.

Mr. Hahn: One further matter, Mr. Chairman. I can fully appreciate the minister's point. It is not my intention to suggest that the wheat board's position should be weakened in any way. What I am proposing is that the act should be examined to see if it could be extended in order to make it stronger.

I believe the hon. member for Lethbridge, in speaking the other day, brought out a point that might be the answer to the whole problem. If there were cash advances for feed grain, seed grain or grain of any kind stored on the farms the problem would not arise, because the farmer would not have to sell his grain at fire-sale prices.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the sentiments expressed by the minister a little earlier. I am sure, however, that upon a little reflection he will agree that it was the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre who was responsible for this bill not being given second reading a week ago today. Members of all parties had spoken and expressed their support of the wheat board, and though I attempted to persuade the chairman to rule that a discussion of Saskatchewan crown companies would be provocative and would not be in order, the hon. member proceeded with his remarks.

This afternoon when everyone was in favour of second reading the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre assumed the responsibility of the leader of the government and of the Liberal party, and forced the taking of time by giving everyone an opportunity to stand up and be counted during the vote. I am indebted to the hon. member, but the minister must hold him responsible for slowing down our progress today and consuming this extra time.

I wish to make it clear that hon. members in this group think this legislation should be permanent. As I mentioned a week ago, the argument the minister used two years ago in relation to the defence production legislation, which was to make it permanent with a view to making it feasible to get personnel on a permanent basis, is an argument which is applicable to this legislation. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Johnson):

That clause 1 of Bill 9 be amended by inserting a period after the word "repealed" in line 4, and by deleting all the words thereafter.

While hon. members are having an opportunity to decide whether or not they will support this amendment I might continue with my remarks. The fact that this is one of the few times in Canadian history when 100 per cent of the members who were present stood up and were named as being in support of this legislation should give the minister a great deal of satisfaction, and perhaps should result in his accepting this amendment so that whoever is piloting such legislation five years from now will not have to waste time. I think it is obvious that once each year when the estimates of the department are before parliament hon. members will have an opportunity of reviewing the situation. The fact that this debate has continued at some length and that hon. members on the whole have been given such a courteous hearing indicates that this is a very important problem, as the minister himself has suggested.

When the hon. member for Vegreville was expressing the fact yesterday that the wheat board had a tough job, I interjected that their job was not as tough as that of the farmers. To my surprise the hon. member for Vegreville used improper language similar to that which has been used by hon. members like my friend from Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. The hon. member for Vegreville said I was "calamity howling" and "singing the blues". When the hon. gentleman was up in my constituency he did not use that sort of language. When he was there he was face to face with farmers who are hard against it. I understand that the hon. member for Vegreville is not coming back to this house, and I understand that the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre is not planning on coming back. It is all right for them to get up and suggest that everything is rosy. The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre will be able to retire on a pension of $3,000 for life without any means test, and I am sure he will be granted the earliest opportunity to do that.

Mr. Thatcher: I think my chances of re-election are as good as your own.

The Chairman: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that we are approaching the situation which I was forced to draw to his attention yesterday afternoon. We are now in committee, and our discussion must be directly related to the item before us.

May I point out to the hon. member that we are discussing clause I of this bill, which amends section 23 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I have the act before me, and that refers only to part 2 of the act, the heading of which is "Control of elevators and railways". There are other subheadings such as "Application", "Permit books", "Administration" and so on, but I would think that under this clause our discussion in committee should be limited to part 2 of the act.

The hon. member has introduced an amendment which I shall read in a moment, but that amendment merely extends the termination of part 2 as set forth in the act. Therefore I must ask hon. members to confine their remarks to the item under discussion.

While I am on my feet, it has been moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley:

That clause 1 of Bill 9 be amended by inserting a period after the word "repealed" in line 4, and by deleting all the words thereafter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, possibly it would be helpful if the minister would explain the basis upon which the administration decided to extend the period for five years. At one time, as I recall it, the extension was for three years and on the second occasion it was for four years. What is the reason for extending the period of five years at this time?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I do not know that there was any particular reason. The country seems to be getting used to the wheat board and it did not seem necessary to have this discussion come up as often as it did in the early stages. Our machinery of marketing is becoming adjusted to the wheat board system. There was no particular sanctity about the five years, and if anyone wanted to suggest some other period we would be glad to consider it. It seemed to the government that five years was a reasonable period.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Chairman, I support this amendment because I believe the Canadian Wheat Board Act should be a permanent act and not subject to repeal, revision or expiry at a given date. I have always supported the wheat board. I looked up the very first speech I made in this house on February 16, 1936, and before dealing with the matter then before the house, I had this say, as reported on page 175 of Hansard of that date:

Under the last administration—

That was the Bennett administration.

—a wheat board was established, and that board was satisfactory to the producers of western Canada; the resolutions of the organized producers show that, I think, completely. Since hon. gentlemen opposite have taken office very disquieting events have occurred.

I then went on to elaborate those events. I do not want to leave the matter for revision or expiry in the hands of governments which may prove again to be unfriendly to the wheat board method of marketing. I was here during the whole of that controversy and I remember most definitely that the original basis of the wheat board was undermined by the present administration. When they have the nerve to stand up in this house and accuse those of us who through the years have supported the wheat board method of marketing of trying to undermine and destroy the wheat board, I say that that is slander and when it is written, libel on a group of people who have been wholeheartedly in favour of it.

To suggest that there are today any members of this house who oppose the wheat board at this time is equally slanderous, as the vote this afternoon will show. I resent very much the implications by people in this house who try to say that we are opposed to this method of marketing. In fact we want to see it extended to rye and flax and to have a system of orderly marketing set up for all farm products as the producers desire it. It should not be something inflicted upon them, but as they wished it. There should be such a system of orderly marketing under properly constituted boards for all farm products.

My memory is quite good about the long debates which took place between 1935 and 1940 when the war broke out. Then we got the marketing of wheat completely under the control of the wheat board, something we did not have before. I would like to see this act on the statute books as a permanent piece of legislation so that there may be no ifs and buts about it in the days to come.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, on this clause and on the amendment I think it is important that the government should make some statement of policy in regard to its position in connection with the transport controller. This particular clause relates to the loading of grain into railway cars. I think it is important, when considering how long the wheat board is going to be able to exist in the face of the government's refusal to assist in this regard, to give consideration to this matter.

I think we have had an adequate discussion of this principle in the past. As pointed out by members of the government, the office of transport controller is a necessary one. In its annual report the Canadian wheat board referred to the problems confronting it in allocating box cars to marketing points. This is one matter which we should have clarified before deciding what action we are going to take because it is apparent that if the government continues to refuse to assist the Canadian wheat board by appointing a transport controller it will be necessary to have continuing legislation, otherwise the confounding of the wheat board by the government will make it very difficult for members supporting that government to support that policy. I wish the Minister of Trade and Commerce would clarify this matter and make a statement as to his attitude toward assisting the Canadian wheat board by the appointment of a transport controller.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The transport controller was never a member of the staff of the Department of Trade and Commerce nor was he an official of the wheat board; he operates in a separate orbit. I suppose at an appropriate time my hon. friend can ask the Minister of Transport to elucidate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, in so far as this amendment is concerned I see no reason why it should not be supported. It has been an interesting revelation to hear the degree to which those supporting the government are now in favour of the wheat board, having regard particularly to the opposition in July 1935 to which I referred when it was originally introduced. In view of the fact that it has received the support of members of this house over and over again when extensions have been asked for in the tenure of the board, having regard to the support which farmers in general have given to orderly marketing, I see no reason why this amendment should not be supported. It will be interesting to find out the degree to which my hon. friends who support the Liberal party will indicate their support of and belief in the wheat board when the vote takes place on the amendment.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, as the leader of this group said in the discussion on second reading, he was not opposed to the board being made permanent but he saw certain advantages in the bill under discussion in that when the expiry date was reached we would review the operations of the wheat board. Right here may I say that I do not think the Minister of Trade and Commerce need be too alarmed at the scope of the debate we had on second reading. It is true as he said that this is a simple bill which extends the life of the board for another five years, but we were debating the principle of the bill. Therefore we had the right to say, "Do we want the wheat board to continue for five years, or do we not?" It did open up the whole matter of the wheat board, and rightly so, I think. I do not blame the minister for being concerned at the political trend of the debate, because he had some reason.

In respect to the amendment, I am willing to support it because I see no reason why the wheat board should not be made permanent. At the same time I do not think the amendment is as serious as some might indicate, because it is a matter of fact that in law nothing is permanent. As a matter of fact, though it may seem paradoxical to say it, the wheat board is permanent for the next five years. The leader of the C.C.F. party has said he wants it to be made permanent because he does not know what might happen should a government come into power which is not too favourable toward the board. Well, the result would simply be this. Even though the act were made permanent, any government which came into power which did not like it could repeal the measure. So it does not make any difference, and I cannot work up any enthusiasm one way or another as to whether it should be extended for five years or made permanent.

However, I have no objection to the amendment and I am quite willing, personally, to vote for permanency.

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Chairman, I said earlier in this debate that I thought 99 per cent of the farmers in the west today support the wheat board, and I presume that is one of main reasons the minister has brought this measure forward on this occasion. But that does not mean that farmers five years from now will still feel the same way about it. Conditions can change, and I think it is sensible to have the matter reviewed in five years and hear what the attitude of the farmers is at that time.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar said today that no one is opposed to the wheat board, as demonstrated by the vote in the house. That is true, but I still find it strange that a party which is so strongly in favour of the wheat board has been, for five days, criticizing just about everything the wheat board has done.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise for only a minute because I believe it might be desirable to have on the record of Hansard just exactly what is involved in the amendment that has been moved by my colleague the hon. member for Mackenzie.

The Canadian Wheat Board Act as it now stands, section 23, reads as follows:

> The provisions of this part shall be deemed to be repealed on and after the 1st day of August, 1957.

The effect of clause 1 of the minister's bill would simply change "1957" to "1962". The effect of the amendment moved by my colleague the hon. member for Mackenzie is to make clause 1 of Bill No. 9 read as follows:

> Section 23 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act is repealed.

Obviously the effect of an amendment which would repeal section 23 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act would be to leave part II of the Canadian Wheat Board Act without any provision for its automatic repeal, as is now the case. This is the desire of those of us in this group who feel that this act should be put on a permanent basis. To achieve this effect would perhaps require certain other amendments which will follow in due course but, as I say, it might be desirable to have on record the exact effect of the amendment which has been moved, the purpose of which is to make this part of the Canadian Wheat Board Act permanent legislation.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that the Canadian Wheat Board Act involves the compulsion of the ordinary citizen. A man can object to this method of wheat marketing as much as he likes, but if he does not follow the rules prescribed by this act a sheriff comes to his home and hauls him before the court. I have heard the Leader of the Opposition discussing compulsory measure of this kind, and I am a little surprised that he has changed his viewpoint, and now should want to place compulsion on the people of Canada as a permanent measure.

Mr. Knowles: What about the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I recall discussions on the Defence Production Act—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this emergency legislation to which the minister is now referring?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Certainly, in the sense that any legislation which places compulsion on a great number of people should be subject to periodical reconsideration. That is the purpose of the bill, and I believe it is sound; it is a principle which the Leader of the Opposition has expounded eloquently in this house. I notice that from time to time he changes his ideas about the sanctity of law, and his views on fundamental freedoms and human rights. I notice that his attitude changes, depending on the subject under discussion. However, I suggest that if he was correct in his earlier assertions involving fundamental freedom and human rights he might very well consider whether or not the right of a producer to sell his product to whom he pleases cannot be considered a fundamental freedom.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This indeed is a great day. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has commenced to parade fundamental freedoms. It is a great day indeed, and one that is long to be remembered, because there is no one in this house who has done more to crush fundamental freedoms than has the right hon. gentleman.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Today, in shining armour of a new revelation, he stands here and says one of the reasons a period is fixed in this act is because of his belief in the freedom of the individual. It is only a matter of a few minutes ago that he was telling us why farmers are not allowed to deliver wheat themselves or to sell it in other provinces.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is part of the present Wheat Board Act. That is why the act should be reviewed from time to time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: "Sit down" is the usual attitude of the minister. As a matter of fact, his answer to me that this is emergency legislation indicates the reasons for the fixation of the period. That was the attitude in 1935. I have a copy of Hansard before me which shows that the Liberal party at that time did everything it could to destroy the efficacy and effectiveness of the wheat board. Mr. Bennett wanted it to be a compulsory board but Mr. Ralston, who spoke for the Liberal party at that time, condemned anything in the nature of a compulsory feature as being detrimental to the Canadian people, and said this was in effect emergency legislation.

I am not going into the later history because I want to remain within the terms enunciated by yourself, Mr. Chairman, with regard to discussion in committee of the whole. In order to find an excuse for voting against the amendment the minister finds it necessary to alter his stand and become an exponent of human freedom. That is, indeed, amazing. When we go back to last year's debate in connection with the trans-Canada pipe line and the degree to which parliament was made his pawn and his puppet, I thought, "Well, it is a great day when what we taught him on that occasion has resulted in his realization that the freedom of the individual is, indeed, of some consequence." If that debate did nothing else, it achieved a great deal in that respect.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Amendment (Mr. Nicholson) negatived: Yeas, 26; nays, 55.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, the purpose of our group is to endeavour to get the house to support amendments which will make this legislation permanent. I was very gratified to note that in the vote on the motion for second reading of the bill all members voted to extend the Canadian Wheat Board Act for another five years. With such unanimity I believe we can be justified in feeling that hon. members should give full support to making the legislation permanent.

The arguments of the Minister of Trade and Commerce do not seem to me to be very sound, when he says it is the wish of the government not to make the legislation permanent because it is pretty binding on individuals. I recall that a year ago when the defence production bill was before the house—

The Chairman: Order. I understood the hon. member was rising on clause 2 and that clause 1 had carried. The discussion he is carrying on now is with regard to a matter which has been negatived on a vote in the committee.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Then I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny):

That clause 2 of bill 9 be amended by deleting from line 8 thereof the words "paragraph (a) of", also by commencing the word "section" in line 8 with a capital "S", and also by deleting lines 10 and 11 and by substituting therefor the following words:

"24. Subject to section 31, in this part 'pool period' means each crop year subsequent to the 31st day of July, 1950."

The intent of the amendment is, of course, to conform with the idea of making the legislation permanent. It would then be left to the will of parliament if it should see fit at any time to discontinue the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, perhaps my brain is not working fast enough, but I am a little confused. As I read the amendment, in the light of the fact clause 1 of the bill remains as it appears in the bill I cannot see that the amendment has any effect whatsoever. The only effect, if any, is to indicate that a crop year ends on the 31st day of July, 1950. That goes without saying. Inasmuch as the first clause has been carried as it is printed in the bill, it simply means that the other clauses follow automatically. I do not think the amendment means anything. Vote on it if you like.

Mr. Knowles: May I offer an explanation which I think will make the amendment clear to the hon. member and all other members of the committee. Reference has been made to clause 1 of the bill, which has been disposed of. That dealt with part II of the Canadian Wheat Board Act which is entitled "Control of elevators and railways." We are now dealing with a clause that relates to section 24 of the act, which is the first section in part III which is entitled "Interprovincial and export marketing of wheat by board."

In other words, what we are now aiming to do is to make permanent the part of the wheat board act that has to do with the marketing of wheat by the Canadian wheat board. I realize that my hon. friend has not a copy of the statute before him at the moment, but may I tell him that at the present time section 24 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act reads as follows:

> 24. Subject to section 31, in this part "pool period" means
> (a) each crop year subsequent to the 31st day of July, 1950, and prior to the first day of August, 1957; and
> (b) thereafter, such period or periods as parliament may fix for such purpose.

In other words, at the present time seection 24 of the act states that for the purposes of part III the only crop years to be considered are those that commenced since the 31st day of July, 1950, and will be concluded before the 1st day of August, 1957. Clause 2 of the bill presented by the minister would extend the crop years to be included for the purposes of part III to the 1st day of August, 1962.

The effect of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Moose Mountain is to remove any concluding date. It would leave section 24 of the act just as it appears in the amendment, namely:

> 24. Subject to section 31, in this part "pool period" means each crop year subsequent to the 31st day of July, 1950.

In other words, the same starting date for part III that has been there for a number of years would be continued but there would be no cut-off date, neither the 1957 date that is now in the act nor the 1962 date that the Minister of Trade and Commerce proposes. Rather than having such a cut-off date, part III of the act, having to do with interprovincial and export marketing of wheat by the board, would be put on a permanent basis. That is to say, this is parallel to the proposal made a moment ago. Perhaps it might be said that it deals with an even more important part of the act, namely that part having to do with the marketing of wheat by the board.

Mr. Harrison: In the area I have the honour to represent, socialist policy as indicated by the amendment now before us and with respect to many other things has been so detrimental and, having been argued in elections from time to time and at no time supported, I therefore rise to say that I will take great pleasure in voting against any such socialist motion. If I could vote twice I would do so.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): May I ask the hon. member a question. Does he consider the wheat board act to be socialistic legislation?

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Chairman, I see that maybe I should have spent a little more time on this debate. I do not consider the wheat board to be such. It has been discussed as a measure before the electorate from time to time and has been endorsed there. From time to time we have had socialist measures discussed in the area from which I come and they have been repudiated. If anyone wishes an indication of that fact, may I say that the main indication is the fact that I am here.

Mr. Ellis: What did the Liberals do in the north country in the last provincial election?

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 24; nays, 55.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Duration.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on clause 3. There are three places in this bill where reference is made to a cut-off date. As a last hope in trying to get this made into permanent legislation I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin:

> That clause 3 of Bill 9 be amended by inserting a period after the word "repeal" in line 12, and by deleting all the words thereafter.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Question.

The Chairman: Do I understand that the committee is ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I notice that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is calling for the question. Perhaps he might be willing to wait for a moment until it is made clear on the record just what this amendment would do. Section 34 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act as it now stands reads as follows:

34. The provisions of this part shall be deemed to be repealed on and after the 1st day of August, 1957.

The part referred to in that section is part IV, entitled "Regulation of interprovincial and export trade in wheat".

Clause 3 of the minister's bill would merely change the cut-off date to 1962. The amendment proposed by my colleague the hon. member for The Battlefords would make clause 3 of this bill read simply as follows: "Section 34 of the said act is repealed." Obviously the repeal of section 34 of the act which I read a moment ago would leave part IV of the Canadian Wheat Board Act without an automatic cut-off date. That is the purpose of this group in the amendments that have been moved this afternoon, namely to try to make this permanent legislation rather than emergency legislation, to use the term used by the Minister of Trade and Commerce this afternoon.

I confess that I was surprised when I heard the minister use that word. I thought he believed in this legislation. But apparently with him it is just emergency legislation, and it seems to me that makes it all the more important that parliament should put it on the statute books in permanent form.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce also had a little bit of fun, he thought, at the expense of the Leader of the Opposition by referring to fundamental freedoms and human rights. I suggest that one of the rights to which the farmers of western Canada are entitled is the right to be protected from exploitation by the grain exchange, and to have that protection made permanent.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 26; nays, 55.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Clause 3 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF TWO NATIONAL MUSEUMS

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources Act to provide for the establishment of two national museums in lieu of one, as at the present time to be known as the Canadian museum of natural history and the Canadian museum of human history.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few words to say in explanation of the resolution. In the course of its development to the position of national importance it now holds, the national museum of Canada has assumed a function for which its present organization is now no longer entirely appropriate. To rectify this it is proposed to establish two museums. As the minister, under the present act, does not have the power to establish museums, the proposed amendment would give him that power.

In the organization of the national museum there is a definite division between the different parts of the work relating to human history, including the fields of archaeology, anthropology and ethnology, and those parts relating to natural history including geology, botany and zoology. In 1951 the royal commission on the arts, letters and sciences studied the work of the national museum, and concluded that its organization did not make adequate provision for the best possible development of each of these two main divisions. The commission proposed that to provide for full development in the future of the museum functions in the fields of both human and natural history two museums, one to deal with human history and one with natural history, should be created from the existing museum. By such a reorganization and subsequent expansion of activities the two national museums would be able to make their full contribution to Canadian life.

Until recently it would not have been practicable, because of space limitation, to make the change. We can now see, however, that within three years new building programs in the Ottawa area will make possible the move from the present Victoria memorial museum building of both the national gallery and the geological survey, thereby increasing by three times the space now available. With this great improvement in the space situation in sight and with the enormous amount of planning and exhibit preparation that must be done to make ready for this, the time has now become opportune to carry out the anticipated reorganization as recommended by the Massey commission.

Mr. Harkness: I was not quite clear as to what the minister meant, Mr. Chairman, when he started his remarks on this subject by saying that the present museum set-up is no longer appropriate. I hope we might get a little explanation of what he meant by those words.

Mr. Lesage: The organization set-up—

Mr. Harkness: He has stated as his only reason for introducing this bill to form two museums instead of one the fact that such a course was recommended by the Massey report. I do not think the fact that it was so recommended should be taken as a sufficiently good reason in itself for legislation of this sort. After all, a considerable number of things were recommended in that report which the government has not seen fit to implement. Recently another report, the Gordon report, has been received and if one can judge from the remarks made by some, particularly the Minister of Trade and Commerce, it would seem evident that the government is not going to implement the recommendations in that report. Therefore the fact that a certain recommendation is made in a certain report cannot be taken, in itself, as sufficient reason for passing legislation.

The minister concluded by saying that within three years' time space will be available in the present building as a result of the removal from that building of certain branches of other departments which have been occupying it for some time. I know that so far as the museum is concerned, space has been very much at a premium. This has been one of the great difficulties. I am glad to hear that more space will be available and that the present building, which was built as a museum, will be available for use as a museum. However, since both these projected museums are going to be in the same building, I find it somewhat difficult to understand why we need legislation to set up two separate museums. I should like to know whether the curator of the museum has found it impossible to carry on his duties, and whether there is any necessity for dividing the functions between two curators, thereby doubling the expense. I would doubt very much whether that is the case.

As to the necessity of forming two museums which would be under the same roof, apparently the great museums which exist in the various countries of the world have not found that necessary. The British museum is an example of the fact that it is not necessary to divide this into two or three museums. If these museums were to be in two separate buildings there would appear to me to be more justification for setting up two museums in place of one. Since all the museum facilities are apparently to be housed in the one building, and since nothing has been advanced by the minister so far to indicate that one curator and one museum would not be adequate, possibly divided into two or more branches—in fact I think perhaps the museum should be divided into three or four branches dealing with different types of material—I can see no real reason for the introduction of this legislation. After all, the two museums will continue to be really one museum in one building. It would seem to me a matter of duplication and an increase in what you might call administrative responsibilities. I would think the extra money involved would be much better devoted to securing more specimens for the museum.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I welcome the announcement by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources because, as an individual, I find nothing more enjoyable than being able to spend an afternoon in a museum. I have been disappointed on visits to the museum in Ottawa to find it very crowded, and to find much of the space in that building occupied by the geologicial branch of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. These departments take up space which could very well be filled with displays concerning some phases of our past history which visitors to the museum would find very interesting.

I think the decision to divide it into two branches is desirable, because it will give the branch of the museum dealing with human history an opportunity to explore more extensively the past history of Canada and to display its findings. There have been several field expeditions in various parts of Canada exploring civilizations that have existed on this continent in past centuries. I believe this legislation will make it possible for more extensive expeditions to go into the field. Unless we explore the various sites of which we have knowledge while we still know where they are located it will not be too many decades before the sites have disappeared and those portions of the record of history will be lost forever.

Another important point arising from the introduction of this resolution is that we will have an opportunity to take out of storage many of the findings of former field expeditions, since there will be room in the museum to display them. I hope that as a result of this resolution we will have here in Ottawa as a national museum an institution which will favourably compare with the Royal Ontario museum in Toronto.

We have an excellent museum located in Regina, and have received favourable comments about it from people who have had an opportunity of visiting there. I welcome this endeavour by the minister to establish a museum of natural history and a museum of human history, so that as Canadians we may be proud of our display of history and as individuals we may have a knowledge of and an interest in what has occurred in the past.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary for me to dwell on this subject at great length, but I should like to point out to the minister that I feel here is a great deal of merit in the resolution he is proposing today. As has already been indicated by previous speakers, it will be a good thing to establish a national museum on an extended basis.

I am wondering, though not in a critical way, what will be the added cost involved. I understand that both the museum of Canadian natural history and the museum of human history will be housed in the one building. The building will require a certain amount of renovation, and though I would not imagine that the cost will be great I think we should have some indication as to what it might be. Of course there will also be the additional cost of providing the separate staffs that will be neceessary, and we should have some indication of that cost.

It seems to me there is a great deal of work to be done in preserving both our natural history and our human history, and I would think some attention should be paid to giving assistance to museums in other parts of the country that maintain the record of our history. My mind goes at once to my own constituency. A museum has been established in the city of Drumheller under vast difficulties. I do not suppose there is an area in Canada which holds greater prospects for field expeditions exploring the record of the past than the so-called badlands of Drumheller, where the remains of nearly all the prehistoric animals have been found. Wonderful work has been done by the small museum in Drumheller, which has unearthed discoveries that are thousands and thousands of years old.

Many donations have been made to that museum. Although I have referred to it as a small museum I should qualify that by saying it is not small in relation to the size of Drumheller, but only when we think of museums in the national sense. I think it would be wrong to concentrate all our efforts on the construction of a national museum at the expense of ignoring the efforts being made by museums in other places to preserve our history.

There is an excellent museum located in the town of Banff, which I am sure the minister has visited. I understand the work of this museum is carried on entirely through donations received from private individuals. I have gone through that museum on a number of occasions, and they have many wonderful displays of animal and natural life. Practically all the wild animals are on exhibit there. I am sure no one who visits the national park, and there are many thousands each year who do, fails to visit the museum. I venture to suggest that just as many people visit the Banff museum as visit the museum in Ottawa, if not more. Many thousands of people go through the museum during the tourist season, and you can hardly enter the building because of the crowds.

Although I am by no means belittling the proposal contained in this resolution, I think some attention should be given to assisting museums in other areas where the local people have taken a keen interest in preserving historical treasures. If the minister would give consideration to the museums at Banff and Drumheller I am sure it would enable them to make a further contribution to the preservation of historical records, and thus assist the national museum.

I want to assure him that I think he is following a wise course in introducing this resolution, and I trust he will see his way clear to extending his thinking to museums and activities beyond the scope of those mentioned in this legislation.

Mr. Lusby: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak briefly in approval of the principle of this resolution. It seems to me the principle is entirely in keeping with the growth and development of Canada during recent years.

I do not suppose there is anyone in this chamber who has not taken advantage of the opportunity to make a tour of the national museum during his years in Ottawa and certainly none of us would fail to agree that it was a most instructive and interesting experience. But I remember that on the first occasion—not the last occasion but the first—when I made a tour of the museum, I came to the end of the tour feeling, "Is this all?" It seemed to me that for a country of the present status of Canada there should have been something more; it should have been a more extensive establishment. For that reason I think the proposal to divide the museum into two separate branches will enable a great deal of development to take place in each branch.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private and public bills.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West) moved the second reading of Bill No. 16, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company and certain wholly owned subsidiaries.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill if enacted, together with the supplementary provincial legislation, will simplify the corporate structure and organization of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It is similar to the act of last year which is chapter 55 of the 1956 statutes. It provides for the vesting of the assets of 12 wholly-owned subsidiaries of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the assumption of the obligations and liabilities of those subsidiary companies by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Of the twelve subsidiary companies, seven are incorporated under acts of this parliament and five are incorporated under provincial legislation. The bill provides also for the dissolution of the seven companies incorporated by federal acts. The other five companies will require provincial legislation for their dissolution, and provincial legislation will also be required to vest certain assets in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. In all such cases the legislation is in process of being dealt with or being put before the appropriate provincial legislatures.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, last year we dealt with a similar bill covering I believe twelve subsidiary companies of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That bill was sent to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and I presume the same course will be followed this year and that officials of the Canadian Pacific will be in attendance to explain various details in connection with these lines.

Mr. McIlraith: That is correct.

Mr. Green: May I point out to the sponsor of the bill that one of these companies, the Kaslo and Nakusp Railway Company, operated a line running from Kaslo to the vicinity of New Denver in British Columbia. Just two or three weeks ago the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was given permission by the board of transport commissioners to abandon the line, subject to the condition that a portion of the roadbed would be transferred to the province for use as a highway. I would hope when the bill comes before the committee, officials will be present to indicate what the Canadian Pacific proposes to do in connection with the ruling by the board of transport commissioners. There may be questions having to do with the other railways, and I take it that officials will be present to give all the facts in connection with those lines.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I was quite interested when I read this bill to find one significant omission from the list of wholly-owned subsidiaries of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I refer to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company, which operates on Vancouver island. I think this omission is significant, in that there might have been some unfortunate results from the Canadian Pacific's point of view if they had included that railway company in this measure. I submit that if parliament is going to aid the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in a reorganization of its property it should give consideration to the position in which the people of British Columbia have been left on account of this particular subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

This line was not built by the Canadian Pacific, it was built as a result of one of the most scandalous land steals in the history of Canada. It was bought later, in 1912, by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As there was some doubt at that time whether or not the tax exemption privileges which accrued to the original grantees would accrue to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the legislature of British Columbia of that day passed a special enabling act granting those tax exemptions.

I would think if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company wishes parliamentary aid in straightening out its affairs in British Columbia and other parts of Canada it should be prepared to submit to the penalty of having the whole system brought under one unified organization, and thereby perhaps rectify some of the damage done to the people of British Columbia by its predecessors, the Esquimalt and Nanaimo land syndicate.

The losses to the people of British Columbia are estimated to be in the millions of dollars. A former chief forester of British Columbia told me that at the time he was speaking to me we had lost up to $50 million in royalties because of this particular provision in the grant to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo land syndicate and because of the provision in the tax exemption act of 1912.

I hope when the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway appear before the committee they will be prepared to answer questions as to why they have not included the notorious Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company in the bill which is before us at the present time.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should answer one or two of the points that have been raised. First I want to make it clear that the question of a railway ceasing operations is dealt with by the board of transport commissioners, and that would not be affected in any way by the legislation now before the house. The jurisdiction of that board will be just the same after the vesting of the railway undertakings in the parent company has taken place.

As to having officials of the railway appear before the committee, perhaps I should have explained that that was done last year and it certainly is the intention to have it done again this year. The officials will be available to answer questions as to any of these companies.

As to the last point raised by the hon. member for Nanaimo, I think the hon. member misapprehends this legislation. There were some 36 or 37 small railway companies which were wholly-owned or almost wholly-owned subsidiaries of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. They were operated by the Canadian Pacific under long-term leases. This necessitated additional bookkeeping, the holding of annual meetings and so on. Legislation was brought before the house last year dealing with 13 of these companies and vesting their undertakings in the parent company. This year another 12 are being dealt with in the same way by the bill now before the house. There will still be 12 or 13 to be dealt with in future legislation.

The reason these different subsidiaries are still being left outstanding can be given when the officials are before the committee. It may be because there are shares of stock outstanding, it may be because there is a particular clause in an agreement, or some complication of that sort. It is anticipated that within another year they will all have been dealt with in the way the group referred to in this bill are being dealt with.

I do not think there is anything more I can usefully add at this stage.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

TRANS MOUNTAIN OIL PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fairey for the second reading of Bill No. 15, respecting Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Regier.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. gentleman had a chance to look at the remarks I made the other day with respect to the amendment?

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that when a change is contemplated in the capital structure of a company the whole operations of the company are open for discussion and debate, and that even its continued existence as a company chartered by this parliament was open for debate. However, as a new member in this house I am perfectly happy to abide by whatever ruling you may desire to make.

Mr. Speaker: Having given fully the reasons the other day, namely on February 5, why I considered the amendment to be out of order, I may say that I am still of that view and therefore declare it out of order today.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I have been quite interested in this bill because it seems to me to be almost a classic example of the sort of thing against which I and my colleagues in this house have been protesting against for years. I was interested the other day to hear the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre remark that the socialists usually did not have much connection with business, and I would be the first to agree with him. Socialists, like other intelligent people, do have some doubts as to the wisdom of devoting the short period during which we are on this earth to the business of buying things cheaply and selling them dearly, whether it be selling hardware in Moose Jaw or embarking on wider areas of rapacity and dealing in oil and natural resources of various kinds.

We are asked to believe, Mr. Speaker, that the promoters and owners of the present company wish to take this action in order to distribute the shares of their holdings among the general public. Now I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that when they ask us to believe that they insult our intelligence. In the first place, if this were so they would be almost the first promoters in history to decide that they wished to invite the public in, unless their enterprise was in a shaky condition or they hoped for some stock market scheme whereby they would gain big profits.

But in this instance the case is clear cut; this is just nonsense, and dishonest nonsense, that is being told to us in this regard; because if the people who had formed this company had wished to have the public participate, then it seems very odd that of the 5 million shares of no par value which were authorized in 1951 only some 1 million-odd have been issued, and of that 1 million only 450,000 were made available to the general public.

We are told that another reason why they want to split the stock is that the price has gone so high that the general public is unable, or unwilling, to engage in trading in that stock. Again I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that the price had gone so high only in the last year since it became obviously an extremely profitable undertaking. There were two years in which it was not nearly so high, but these gentlemen made no effort at that time to attempt to sell some of the shares, amounting to nearly 3½ million, which they had in their company treasury. They waited until the exorbitant profits which were shown last year caused the price of their stock to rise to its present dizzy and encouraging height.

Then it was decided that they wanted to split the stock five to one in order to permit the general public to participate in their operations. But we have had no indication whatever from the sponsor of this bill that the company does actually intend to sell to the public any of those 3½ million shares—they would become 16 million shares—which are in their treasury. We have no undertaking to that effect.

We have, indeed, the possibility that what will happen is that those who own the present shares will decide to cash in on their profits after the shares have been split and traded on the stock market until their price has reached an encouraging level. These gentlemen may then unload some of their holdings; they may, indeed, initiate a regular campaign of unloading with the idea of resuming possession of the stock later on.

I cannot imagine for the life of me, Mr. Speaker, how anyone could consider that there is a respectable reason for this proposition which is, of course, just the well-known old racket of melon-cutting. And this parliament is being asked to enable that to be done.

There are those, of course, who imagine that the capital gains that would accrue to these gentlemen would come out of thin air. My friends to the left will probably think that. But I would like to assure them and other hon. members of this house that this is not the case, and that the capital gains which will be made by these people will come out of the pockets of their fellow Canadian citizens. Let no one try to tell you anything different. If this parliament permits this bill to go through, then they are permitting these gentlemen to draw their capital gains from the pockets of the Canadian public; and I would suggest to all those hon. members of this house who have been making heart-warming speeches about the necessity for providing more for our old age pensioners, increased family allowances and larger sums in the way of general social security benefits, that they bear in mind that the economy of Canada can carry just so much of a load. It can carry a certain load of old age pensions, of family allowances, of income for the ordinary citizens. It can carry just so much in the way of profits for stock market racketeers; and with every dollar of capital gain that we permit by this scandalous and iniquitous proposal we will lessen the area from which help for the less fortunate members of our society may come.

If parliament decides to pass this measure I trust we shall hear no more demands for increased old age pensions; that from now until the election all those hon. gentlemen who have joined the chorus in favour of increased old age pensions will have the grace to keep their mouths shut.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): How about individual oil rights? Would you agree that they should be socialized too?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I would point out to the hon. member for Bow River that we are not talking about individual oil rights at the moment. We are talking about a barefaced attempt by one of the oil companies who help to keep his party in office in Alberta to mulct the general public a little more than they have been able to do in the past.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I ask hon. members in discussing this bill not to venture into provincial politics. It may be that the experience we have had in the recent debate should be beneficial to us all.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I think, Mr. Speaker, this parliament should be very cautious about what it is asked to do in these circumstances, and should realize that this is not a bona fide attempt to broaden the basis of ownership in this company but a barefaced attempt to use parliament for the purpose of providing capital gains for a few rapacious individuals.

Mr. Winch: And it is to be made on the stock market.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): As the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) points out, to be made on the stock market. The money is not coming out of thin air. It is coming out of the pockets of the Canadian people. I think these gentlemen should be made to answer some very critical questions. The first one is, why have they not seen fit hitherto to release on the public market the shares that were authorized by parliament six years ago? The next question is, is the company prepared to place on the open market the shares it still holds in its treasury and, if so, to what extent and at what price?

These are questions these gentlemen should be made to answer. The history of oil and pipe-line companies in this country does not lead us to suppose that they are in the main philanthropists. They have in the main done very well out of the people of Canada and their natural resources. I see no reason why parliament should aid them to do well out of the people of Canada by means of a stock market racket of this barefaced nature. Since the amendment moved by my colleague the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was ruled out of order, I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam:

That Bill No. 15 be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo will not object, I am sure, to associating with himself in moving the amendment the name of another member as seconder.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I thought I had done so. Possibly you did not get the copy on which I placed it.

Mr. Speaker: I understood the hon. member to say that the seconder of the amendment was the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, but he has already spoken on the main motion.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) will second it.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Nanaimo certainly should go a long way to meeting the suggestions made when the bill was being debated earlier that an opportunity should be given to members to have placed before them all information that could be made available. In a matter of this kind I think the approach suggested in the amendment is a much more appropriate way to deal with the question than for us to be compelled to accept the principle of the bill and then go into committee to get the information that may be required.

The information placed on the record by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam at an earlier stage of the debate was brought into serious and, I thought, unnecessary question by one or two who took part in the debate. Suggestions were made that he had pulled some figures out of a hat and had used them loosely. I suggest that was a rather unwarranted approach to take to the matter, because we all know that reliable figures with respect to earnings and other matters concerning companies do appear from time to time and are available for the use of those who have occasion to discuss matters relating to the operations of firms or the nature of transactions that are being proposed. I think perhaps it was a little unfair to suggest that the member for Burnaby-Coquitlam had not taken the pains to go to sources that he considered reliable in order to obtain the information he used.

I have no real quarrel with the fact that other hon. members may place a different interpretation upon the facts or may have a different view of their implications than the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam; nevertheless I feel that it was not a proper approach to take in a serious discussion of this measure.

This company have come before parliament seeking approval for a certain action which they contemplate taking, and I certainly think we have a right and a responsibility to inquire seriously into all the implications of their request. I am aware of the fact that long before I came into the house a great many debates took place on a number of pipe-line questions and that, of course, the original incorporation of Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company was a matter of discussion in the house. If the company is going to request the kind of change in their operations suggested in the bill now before us, I believe the house should have the right and the opportunity to go into the history of the operations of the company before we decide whether or not we approve the principle of what they are doing.

There are probably members in the house who are prepared to accept without question as a general principle the right of a company to split its shares as it pleases. I do not happen to subscribe to that view. I think the whole approach to the making of unearned wealth, which in my opinion has been followed all too commonly by many companies and corporations in this country, is basically wrong. As far as I am concerned the onus should be upon the company to prove beyond any shadow of a doubt that the proposal they have in mind is necessary and justified.

I think a good deal of confusion exists in the minds of a lot of people as to the basis on which proper earnings should be made by a corporation. As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said, we in this group take the view that under certain circumstances companies which are operating efficiently and without damage to the public interest have the right to a reasonable return on their investment.

We also take the view that in certain fields of operations where high risks are involved, those risks rightly should give entitlement to more generous treatment than would be legitimate in other fields. I feel that this applies particularly to the field of the basic development of mines and of oil producing wells. No one will quarrel with the fact that in their initial stages at least such ventures are more risky than are many other types of operations. But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that a debate on the pros and cons of what is a proper return on invested capital or a proper return for risks which are taken is an altogether different matter from this business of making speculative profits through the manipulation of stocks on the market.

I may perhaps be subject to prejudice in this matter, but certainly my opinions in this regard are not of recent origin. In the days of 1928 and 1929, when in my view the world had gone a bit crazy or at least the people on this continent had done so in respect of gambling in stocks, I can recall the views I came to then, and they are substantially the views I continue to hold. I mention that fact because I want to make it clear that I am not approaching this subject from any narrow, partisan political view, but rather from the point of view that the principles involved here, as far as I am concerned, cut rather deeply into the moral fabric of society.

For that reason, as I say, as far as I am personally concerned, in an instance of this kind the onus should be put upon the company to prove beyond any peradventure of doubt that this stock split is necessary to the continued financial health of their operation before I would be prepared to go along with the principle of this bill. That is one of the reasons I feel that the amendment we now have before us is proper.

I hope that serious consideration will be given by other hon. members to the desirability of following this course in the case we now have before us. I was interested enough to look at the debates that took place when the bill to incorporate this company was first introduced into the house, and to note some of the assurances that were given to the house at that time by the then hon. member for Vancouver South, Mr. Arthur Laing. One of the assurances he gave was that this was going to be a company which would bring oil to the coast of British Columbia and, as I understood him to present the matter to the house at that time, that it would be used only for the development of the oil extraction industry in British Columbia.

I think most of us in British Columbia recognize the fact that British Columbia at the present time at least may not be able to absorb the full capacity of that line. Nevertheless we had a right to expect that the line would be used for the development of the oil processing industry in British Columbia, and that the products surplus to our needs would go into adjacent markets after having been processed in British Columbia. I think one must have that consideration in mind when one considers the request that is now before the house with respect to this stock split.

I believe one must analyse the record of the company to date. One must realize that while the Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company as such is engaged in the transportation of oil, nevertheless it is in fact a tool—and I am not using that word in any derogatory sense—of certain producing and manufacturing oil companies of this country and of the United States, and that therefore its actions cannot be considered only in the light of the operations of an independent company. Because of that fact we must realize that the policies which they have followed, and which have been dictated to them as a corporate entity by those who control them, must affect our attitude to the application they now have before parliament.

I know this is perhaps a matter of more interest to those of us who live in British Columbia than it is to those who may live in other parts of the country. Nevertheless I think the principle involved should concern members from all parts of the country. I hope recognition will be given to the fact that the economic situation in British Columbia is as important to those of us who live there as is the economic situation in the region of Canada around which discussion revolved in a recent debate in this house.

I hope other hon. members will take advantage of the opportunity to express their views on the principle of the bill, and in particular upon the amendment which has just been moved and which, as I have suggested, should go a long way toward meeting some of the objections which were raised when the bill was first up for debate in the house.

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on behalf of my colleague the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., who is unable to be here today and who is the sponsor of this bill. I am not going to get into any prolonged discussion of the rather remarkable amendment moved by my good friend the hon. member for Nanaimo, because it seemed to me that by the nature of the amendment he moved he gave away his own case. I am certainly not going to get into any involved argument as to whether or not you can submit the subject matter of a very complicated thing like this to a committee without submitting the reason for the discussion in the first place. I shall just content myself by saying that even if we were to vote for the amendment, the only result of that vote would be to accomplish by a very inefficient, confused and involved way what we are asked to do in the bill itself.

Without making any comment whatever on the merits of this bill, I should say it is a very simple submission to this house. We are simply asked to give to this company, a very prosperous British Columbia company of which a great many of us, contrary to some of my friends opposite, are quite proud, the opportunity to do business in the same way a great many other companies do. We are quite proud of the fact that this company, after overcoming the original difficulties it faced, has managed to do so well in the matter of a very few years. I for one believe it is most vexatious and irresponsible for anyone in this house to stand up and say that any company should not have the right to do what all its competitors in the same field are doing.

But ignoring all that, surely there is a very special way for us to deal with all these very real, complicated questions. Surely the way is for us to not continue wasting time, the very limited time we have in these private members' hours. We must be able to find out all the complicated facts about the financing of this company we are discussing. We have to get this before a committee, and the whole purpose of this bill is to get the matter before the appropriate committee of this house.

Therefore, just referring back to the original debates of this house, I recall that my very distinguished predecessor, the hon. member for Vancouver South at that time, had the great honour of being the sponsor of the original bill. I see that at that time there were some submissions made by the hon. member for Kootenay West and the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra which concerned the route of the pipe line.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think I should say one word about my good friend the hon. member for Nanaimo. I think the one thing that distinguishes my own thinking from his thinking is that he seems to resent the fact we have private corporations in this country that are making a good profit. It is on that point I cannot go along with him. I would be extremely pleased to have a profitable company in my riding. I was astonished the other day when I heard the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam almost bemoaning the fact that this company, which is located in his riding, has been showing a good profit for the last couple of years. I will tell him that if he does not want corporations in his constituency making a good profit, I shall be glad to have them move into Vancouver South.

Speaking very seriously, how in the name of common sense are we going to continue to raise the money we require in this country to finance family allowances and old age pensions, especially with the more generous old age pension that some of us believe is necessary, unless we have prosperous companies operating in this country? I for one am extremely glad we have a prosperous oil company operating in British Columbia. I know of no reason why this company should not be treated in the same manner as all the other private businesses operating in western Canada. I think this house should approve the bill and send it to the appropriate committee, where my hon. friends opposite will have unlimited time to cross-examine the officials of the company. Then they can deal with facts, and not have to continue dealing with fiction.

Mr. Winch: You will have to support the amendment, then.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to follow the hon. member for Vancouver South, but I always find it rather difficult to ascertain just what he does mean. He spoke of the complicated simplicity of this bill, and I wondered as I listened to him whether he was complicated or I was simple. However, I should like to assure the mover of the amendment that it is my intention, and I believe the intention of this group, to support the amendment he has proposed, if for no other reason than to be opposite to the hon. member for Vancouver South and ensure that the bill will be sent to the appropriate committee.

I would refer to what the hon. member for Bow River had to say the other day in respect to the bill. He said he hoped the bill would be sent to a committee where it could be given more complete study, and that is the reason we are supporting the amendment at this time.

Then the mover of the bill, and I regret that he is not in his seat today, said at page 988 of Hansard for February 5, 1957:

> . . . I am sure that this bill will be examined by the appropriate committee.

He does not indicate that the bill is going to be sent to a committee, but he says he is sure it will be examined by a committee. I hope before this debate is concluded he will indicate that such is the case, thereby satisfying each of us that a bill of this type will be sent to the appropriate committee.

My reason for suggesting that it should be sent to a committee is that here we have a form of utility, and whether or not it is privately owned or not it should come under government scrutiny from time to time. Certainly much of the argument we have heard about old age pensions and other factors do enter into it, but we are agreed that possibly such subjects are extraneous to the subject matter of the bill itself and should be considered at another time. It is not my intention, therefore, to continue the debate along that line.

But I would suggest that here, when we have all the members of the house fully realizing the fact we have so many charges against the company itself in respect of the monopolistic way in which oil is being handled; with the recent price increases, and the fact that the Minister of Justice has been asked to ascertain if there is a combine in the oil industry because of the rise in price, then all these charges should be examined. Possibly when the bill comes before the committee the terms of reference will be such that they will make it possible to examine the need for dividing these shares as indicated in the bill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for New Westminster I was a bit puzzled by the remarks of our good friend from Vancouver South. Of course he is the member who can vote one way one year and another way another year. One minute he says this is a very simple bill, let us pass it; the next minute he says it is a very complicated bill. Well, perhaps he should make up his mind.

Mr. Philpott: I was talking about the amendment moved by your party when I spoke of it being complicated.

Mr. Knowles: The amendment is complicated but the bill is simple in the judgment of the hon. member. Perhaps if he has another interruption to make he will make it even more confused.

Mr. Speaker, there is one point which I think should be kept clear, and I realize it is a point upon which the house frequently gets confused. There is no question but that a private bill such as the bill that has been introduced by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., if it is given second reading, has to go to the committee. We know that; all hon. members of the house know that. But, Mr. Speaker—and I recall your interest in this point in the days before you were exalted to your present position—there is a difference in our view between sending to a committee a bill which has been given second reading, and sending to a committee the subject matter of a bill.

If we had before us merely the motion for second reading and that motion were to pass, of course the bill would go to the committee; but it would go as having had the endorsement of its principle by this house. We do not think this bill should have its principle endorsed before it goes to the committee. That is the reason for the amendment that has been moved by my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo. We are quite prepared to have the subject matter of this bill discussed by the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. We are also quite prepared to have the promoters of this bill go before that committee and state their reasons why parliament should consider this bill. But from our study of its provisions we feel that that questioning and discussion should take place in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines before the House of Commons has been asked to endorse the principle of this bill. That is the reason for our amendment.

I say again, either way the matter will be referred to the committee. If the bill passes second reading the bill itself goes to the committee. If the present amendment passes, instead of the bill going to the committee the subject matter will go before it, and discussion will take place on the subject matter without the House of Commons having endorsed the principle of the bill.

I want to join with my colleagues the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, the hon. member for Nanaimo and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, who have already spoken, in saying that we feel this bill should not be supported. The hon. member for Vancouver South expressed some amazement that we are not delighted when we hear of a private corporation like this making huge profits. Mr. Speaker, when we in this group stand up in this house and ask for certain things that are rather costly, let us say in the social security field, it is sometimes said to us by representatives of the government that for us to ask for these things is to ask for the taxpayers of Canada to pay for them. When the government does not want to agree to a request of ours it takes the position that it has to be responsible and has to consider whether or not all the taxpayers of Canada should be asked to provide money to pay for a particular piece of social legislation.

Mr. Harris: We only believe in telling the truth, you know.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I welcome that interjection because that is precisely what we are doing, telling the truth—a truth which my hon. friend refuses to face—that if this bill goes through a financial return will accrue to certain individuals from this stock splitting which has to come out of the total wealth of this country just as surely as tax money comes out of the total wealth of this country. In the one case parliament in the name of the people controls it, decides the rate of taxation and decides where it will go. In this case a few private individuals get a share of the wealth of the country which has to be created by the people of Canada whether or not those few people need it, and whether or not it is in line with good social policies. No money finds its way into the pocket of any person in this country without wealth to back up that money having been created by the toil and labour of the people of this country; and I say to you that I am telling the truth, as the Minister of Finance suggested a moment ago, when I say that if parliament passes legislation like this it is permitting a few people to get hold of a certain portion of the wealth created by Canadians without regard to the social policy involved in action of this kind.

Mr. McCann: This is a transportation company.

Mr. Knowles: The Minister of National Revenue says this is a transportation company. He means it is a company engaged in the transport of oil from one part of the country to another.

Mr. McCann: Why then are you talking about resources?

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue does not seem to realize that there is no wealth in Canada that is not created by the application of the labour power of our people to our natural resources. That is how the oil is brought to the surface in the first place. That is how the pipe line is built. That is how the pipe line is operated. And the wealth that is created in the operation of this pipe line and in the transporting of oil through the pipe line is created essentially in the same way wealth is created when workers are employed in a factory, when farmers toil on their farms, when fishermen work at sea or in any other way.

Our point, Mr. Speaker, is that basically all the wealth that is created in this country is created in the same way, by the application of the labour power of our people to our natural resources. A certain portion of that wealth created by our people is obtained from them in the form of taxes. That portion that is obtained from them in the form of taxes is by the decision of the people's representatives here in parliament.

It is decided by parliament how that portion of the wealth that is obtained from the people is to be applied. But the taxes that are taken from the people of Canada are by no means the only money that is taken away from those who produce wealth. Every time a company makes a profit, whether it is a company that transports oil, a meat packing outfit, a railway or a firm that manufactures farm machinery—

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: Surely.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I wonder if the hon. member would tell the house how five or six shareholders would benefit because the stock was split?

Mr. Winch: Because they get four shares for one.

Mr. Knowles: As has already been described by my colleagues who have spoken to this bill, if these shares are split on a five-way basis the immediate result will be that the price of the new shares will be approximately 20 per cent of the price of the present shares, which will produce trading on the stock market; and in view of what has been said about this company it is inevitable that such trading will result in the price of the new shares going up and wealth will be made. My hon. friend thinks it just comes out of thin air, that it just happens—

Mr. Hosking: If it is easy money why don't you buy some shares?

Mr. Knowles: No one has to buy these shares. But the wealth that is created has to be backed up by the labour of the people of Canada, and in transactions of this kind they do not have any say in where that wealth will go.

Mr. Hosking: Did you or your theories ever provide anyone with a job?

On motion of Mr. Knowles the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we shall have a supply motion.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

CANCER—WORLD WAR I PENSIONER MORTALITY

Question No. 63—Mr. Michener:

1. What proportion of the first world war veteran pensioners have died as a result of cancer?
2. What is the number of such pensioners whose death has been ascribed to this cause?
3. In how many of such cases were disabilities from war service determined to be a contributing cause of death?

Answer by: Mr. Bennett, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

1. 14.57 per cent of deceased pensioners.
2. 7,673.
3. 343.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 11, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PETITION OF ALBERTA INDIAN ASSOCIATION TO THE QUEEN—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: The clerk of petitions has found that the petition which was filed with the Clerk by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on Friday, February 8, 1957, from the Indian Association of Alberta is irregular on the following grounds:

(a) It is not addressed to the House of Commons and parliament assembled;

(b) It is not in the form required by the standing orders and practice of this house since it bears no signature and does not conclude with a prayer, nor is it introduced by a member of the house. Bourinot at pages 233 and 234 states:

> In case any irregularity is reported in any of the petitions the Speaker will state it to the house and rule that the petition cannot be received.

In accordance with that I must rule the petition out of order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS OF UNITED KINGDOM AND CANADA AND PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform hon. members that the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom announced in the House of Commons in London today that he and the President of the United States would be meeting in conference from March 21 to March 24. Evidently as a courtesy to the Prime Minister the President suggested that the meeting take place in Bermuda. That is the arrangement which has been agreed upon. Since we heard of the arrangements that were being made we naturally renewed the assurance to the Prime Minister that he would be very warmly welcomed in Canada if he found it possible to come here on the occasion of his visit to Bermuda, but he informed us it would not be possible for him to come either before or after his conference in Bermuda with the President.

However, as there seemed to be matters which it would be valuable to have discussed at this time—matters of common concern to the United Kingdom and to Canada—it has been arranged that I will join him in Bermuda on the 25th and 26th of March to discuss these matters of special concern to the United Kingdom and Canada.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that we welcome any meeting with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom or the President of the United States. A meeting such as that cannot but be beneficial and helpful to the friendship, comradeship, and the common dedication of the forces of freedom they represent, and I am very happy to learn that the Prime Minister will be present on this occasion.

He will remember that last November or December we suggested from this part of the house that in order to bring about the closest possible relations between the United Kingdom and the United States and Canada a conference might be welcomed here in Canada in the city of Quebec, and I am wondering whether the Prime Minister gave any indication to the President, and to the Prime Minister of Britain along those lines.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, Mr. Speaker, I did not, and I hope I did not convey the impression that I would be taking part in the discussions between the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the President. I am to join the Prime Minister after the conclusion of his conference with the President.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, I understand that.

INDIAN ACT

AMENDMENT TO PREVENT EXPULSIONS FROM RESERVES

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 104, to amend the Indian Act.

Mr. Knowles: Explain.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to prevent the expulsion from Indian reserves of persons who have had Indian status for many years and thus bring to an end what some newspapers have called "the brutal and inhuman treatment being meted out to some of our Indians."

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FISHERIES

SOCKEYE SALMON—MEASURE TO IMPLEMENT CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Hon. W. E. Harris (for the Minister of Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to implement a convention between Canada and the United States of America for the protection, preservation and extension of the sockeye salmon fisheries in the Fraser river system, signed at Washington on the 26th day of May, 1930, and a protocol thereto signed at Ottawa on the 28th day of December, 1956, and for carrying out Canada's obligations under the said convention and protocol.

Motion agreed to.

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO NEW NORTH PACIFIC FUR SEAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Fisheries or the parliamentary assistant. Would one or the other of them tell the house the terms of the new north Pacific fur seal agreement which I understand was signed in Washington on Saturday? I am particularly anxious to know whether the Canadian quota remains the same as in pre-war years.

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I have had no notice of the intention of the hon. member to ask this question. I will therefore take it as notice and bring in an answer tomorrow.

[Later:]

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT WORK AT SITE OF MORAN DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries possibly the acting minister or the parliamentary assistant could take this question as notice. In view of press reports that there is tremendous development work going on around the site of the proposed Moran dam, 20 miles from Lillooet, would the minister make a statement regarding this matter?

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): I shall be glad to take the question as notice.

[Mr. Harkness.]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

NOVA SCOTIA—ANNAPOLIS RIVER RECLAMATION AND HIGHWAY PROJECT

Motion No. 7—Mr. Balcom:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged during 1956 and 1957, between the federal government and the government of Nova Scotia, respecting a combination land reclamation-highway project across the Annapolis river.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): We shall accept this with the usual reservation that we receive the consent of the provincial government.

Motion agreed to.

SCANDINAVIAN AIRLINES SERVICE, WINNIPEG

Motion No. 8—Mr. Zaplitny:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, memoranda and other documents exchanged between the government and Scandinavian Airlines, also between the government and the council of the city of Winnipeg, since January 1, 1956, related to the request of the said air line for permission to provide air passenger service at Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should inform the house that there has not been, since January 1, 1956, any request of the Scandinavian Airlines for permission to provide air passenger service at Winnipeg, Manitoba, and in consequence there is no correspondence between the government and Scandinavian Airlines with regard to such a request. There was an exchange of letters between the mayor of the city of Winnipeg and myself as Minister of Transport which has already been made public. I shall be glad to table that correspondence but that is all I am able to give the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Zaplitny: May I point out to the minister that the request does not relate to January 1, 1956. Only the correspondence relates to that date. The request can be as of any date.

Mr. Marler: Well, Mr. Speaker, there has never been a request for permission to provide air passenger service at Winnipeg, so the date is not material.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the remarks of the Minister of Transport?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

Motion No. 9—Mr. Coldwell:

For a copy of all memoranda, correspondence, agreements and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada or any of its responsible officials and the provincial governments or any of their officials, from November 1, 1956 to date, regarding the immigration, reception, care, placement, etc., of Hungarian refugees.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatsoever to this motion but I assume it will be understood that the provincial governments concerned will have to be agreeable to production. I know no reason why they should not be.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

LANDING OF IMMIGRANTS AT OTHER THAN CANADIAN PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. R. Balcom (Halifax): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is the minister aware that some steamship lines bringing immigrants to this country by-pass Canadian ports and land them in New York, from which point they go directly to other Canadian provinces by rail?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are no assisted passage warrants issued by my department for any except Canadian seaports or airports. Hungarian refugees who are given free passage are given it only to Canadian seaports or airports. Of course, I dare say it does happen that immigrants who are paying their own way may pay their way on ships to New York and travel by air or rail to Canada afterwards. Naturally there is nothing any government can do about that.

ADMISSION OF CHINESE FEMALES TO MARRY CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is the policy that permits the admission to Canada of females of Chinese nationality for the purpose of marriage to Canadian citizens to be continued?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I think, sir, this was established as an experiment for a certain length of time. So far as I am aware the experiment has worked out quite well, and I think it may well be continued.

AMISH MENNONITES—INQUIRY AS TO ADMISSION TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. N. A. Matheson (Queens): Can the minister inform the house whether the Amish Mennonite people are being admitted to Canada as immigrants? If the answer is in the negative, can he say why?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I think it is well known to all hon. members that under our immigration policy no account whatever is taken of the religion of prospective immigrants. Strictly speaking, therefore, the answer to the hon. gentleman's question is that no one is excluded because he is an Amish Mennonite. It does happen that some people who are Amish Mennonites do object to accepting citizenship of a country and to participating in elections and other ordinary democratic procedures. As it has always been laid down that the main purpose of our immigration policy is to add to the citizenship of this country, such a factor is taken into account when it is present in a particular case. It is not because they are Amish Mennonites. The same consideration would apply to any other prospective immigrants about whom there was a really serious ground for believing that they did not intend to become citizens.

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES—PROVISION OF COMFORT ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): May I inquire of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration when I may expect an answer to my question asked on February 1, and also to the supplementary question I asked on February 7, relative to a telegram from the chairman of the Abbotsford and district citizenship council requesting information as to a comfort allowance for Hungarian refugees in that area?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I answered the telegram and I thought probably the hon. member would be informed of the answer and also that it probably would not be of any great interest to the house. The answer is that all immigration officers receiving Hungarian refugees are authorized, in the case of necessity only, to provide pocket money up to a maximum of $5 monthly for adults over 16 years of age only. Since pocket money was issued on arrival no additional issue would be made until one month after arrival.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION AFFECTING PRAIRIE FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the house the subject matter of a further bill affecting prairie farmers to which the Minister of Trade and Commerce referred in the house last Friday afternoon? What I am particularly interested in knowing is whether the bill will be introduced at this session despite the threat made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that if it were going to be debated it would not be introduced.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I made no such threat; and if my hon. friend will read from Hansard what I said on that occasion he will find there is no foundation for his remarks.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, I took the minister to mean that.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a resolution on the order paper and when the resolution is passed the bill will be ready for introduction.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister tell the house to which resolution he refers? I have the order paper before me and I do not see at the moment one that has been introduced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There is a resolution concerning amendments to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and there will be a resolution concerning interim loans on wheat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then the resolution regarding loans will be introduced. Apparently that is the one to which the Minister of Trade and Commerce referred and which the Prime Minister inadvertently or mistakenly said was already on the order paper.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I am sorry; I did not look at the order paper. I said what I did because the resolution had been before us and it had been determined that we would get the approval of the Governor General to its introduction.

Mr. Coldwell: Since the Minister of Trade and Commerce asked me to look at Hansard, may I say that I have looked at Hansard, and if he will look at page 1124 he will see that he used these words:

> I cannot ask for the time this session from the leader of the house which would seem to be required to put that bill through and it may have to go over until the fall or whenever we have another session. I might try it for a day. If it goes through, all right, but if it does not the bill is out.

I took it to be certainly, as I used the term, a threat that if the bill did not go through in a day, then it would not go through at all.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That remark was made in the light of the fact that it took four days' debate to have the bill for a change in one date discussed. I also recall that it took several weeks to put through a similar bill at the last session. I said that this session we had not time for the discussion should the C.C.F. try to talk the bill out, as they have tried to talk out other bills. Every member of the C.C.F. spoke at length on the change of date bill, just as they tried to talk out the wheat legislation of last session.

Mr. Coldwell: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Certainly my colleagues did not try to talk out the bill. As a matter of fact, the bill continues an act in which we were primarily interested when the government was opposed to a wheat pool in the sense we have it now. Had the objections to extraneous matters been raised that were raised by my friend the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) to the speech that was made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) the debate would not have been that prolonged.

HIGHWAYS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DEAS ISLAND TUNNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the answer the minister gave me on Friday last that the guaranteed depth of the Fraser river at low water in the first narrows is 37 feet 6 inches, would he now answer the question I asked him that day, namely would he guarantee that the same depth will be maintained at all times from the mouth of the Fraser river to the city of New Westminster, that is to a depth of 37 feet 6 inches?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will recall that when I answered the previous question I said that the design depth over the centre line of the tunnel was 40 feet 9 inches and that the government of British Columbia was to undertake to maintain that depth both over the centre line of the tunnel and within a certain distance of either side of the centre line. It is the government of British Columbia that is giving the undertaking to maintain the depth to which I referred.

Mr. Hahn: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The question has to do with the possibility of ships going past the Deas tunnel to the city of New Westminster. There is 40 feet 9 inches of water over the Deas tunnel. I should like the minister to tell the house what the purpose is of having the tunnel down that depth if you are not going to be able to run ships up to the harbour at New Westminster.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend knows what the purpose of the tunnel is.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The question as to what purpose the department might have is a matter which should be debated and this is not the time for a debate.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

GASOLINE AND FUEL OIL—INQUIRY AS TO RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES REPORT ON INCREASED PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Justice. I believe the Minister of Finance is the acting minister. I wonder whether the minister could inform the house whether or not he has received a report from the restrictive trade practices commission in connection with the recent increases in the prices of gasoline and fuel oil. In view of the fact that a probe has been ordered in the United States to investigate price-fixing collusion by the major oil companies, will the minister consider again ordering an inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Acting Minister of Justice): I shall make inquiries, Mr. Speaker, as to whether or not the report has been received and advise the house.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—STATEMENT ON TIME LIMIT OF OCCUPATION UNDER ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Perhaps I might be permitted to give an answer that I promised to the hon. member for The Battlefords. On Friday he asked me whether the time had expired under the Indian Act when Indians could protest the occupation of other persons on a reserve. He also asked whether there were any persons, other than those in the Samson case, under protest at the moment on Indian reserves.

The answer I gave to the first question the other day was correct. It is no longer possible to make protests about persons whose names were placed on the band lists which were posted pursuant to the act of 1951. Such protests had to be lodged within six months of the posting of the lists. The only protests which can now be entertained are those respecting names which may be added to the lists from time to time in the future.

In addition to the Samson case there are four other cases which have been appealed to the courts where the courts have not rendered a decision. These cases involve 23 families. In the case of 18 families, the appeal is against the decision of the registrar that those families have Indian status. In the case of the other five families, the appeal is against the decision of the registrar that the families do not have Indian status.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS IN PREPARATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): May I direct a question to my genial friend the Minister of Finance? Is he making progress in the preparation of the budget that will be presented to this house before the dissolution of parliament?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have made a great deal of progress on the budget in recent days.

PUBLIC WORKS

ANNAPOLIS RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED CAUSEWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Can the Minister of Agriculture tell the house what is the present status of negotiations between Nova Scotia and the government of Canada with respect to the causeway across the Annapolis river, the announcement of which was made some time ago and which has not appeared in the main estimates?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Just a few moments ago I agreed to bring down the correspondence in connection with the matter under notices of motions for the production of papers. I presume it is the same matter about which the question is being asked.

There has been no change whatsoever in the meaning of the correspondence or discussions which have taken place as a result of the fact that there has been a change of government. There has been a change of government in Nova Scotia since the negotiations took place in connection with this matter and the present government has been notified, as the correspondence will indicate, that we are prepared to proceed right from that point in the matter as though there had been no change.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CONTROLLER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention to appoint a transport controller?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I have already made some comments on this subject in the house. I do not think I can usefully add anything to what has already been said.

EGGS

STATEMENT ON OPERATION OF FLOOR PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on February 6 I directed a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. If the minister has taken notice of the question I wonder whether he is prepared to give an answer to the house? My question was this:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister say whether the government has sufficient concern about the serious condition facing the poultry industry in Canada with respect to eggs to take government action to assist the industry?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Yes. Well, Mr. Speaker, a number of questions have been asked on this matter and one was asked on Wednesday last which had to do with the detail of the same matter, and I shall answer the larger question later.

On Wednesday last the hon. member for Victoria, Ont. (Mr. Hodgson) asked a question regarding the price of eggs being delivered to grading stations in his constituency. I have made inquiry and am advised that apparent prices available to producers in that area have been on the basis of 30 cents or more per dozen for grade A large eggs, which is regarded as being in line with the support price.

With regard to the larger question which has been referred to by the hon. member for Moose Mountain, the arrangements which have been made in connection with eggs date back to about six years ago, and we have been carrying on the same policy from that time down to the present, which is to the effect that we are prepared to accept eggs in storage at storage points across Canada on the basis of 38 cents a dozen at the storage plants. Difficulties have developed on two or three occasions during the last six years which have made it necessary for us to change the regulations from time to time in order to make it possible for us to enforce the intention of the policy which we are following.

We had some difficulties two years ago which resulted in our having eggs off the market at a time when eggs were going up very high in price. They went up to 85 cents a dozen and we were holding 107,000 cases of eggs. Therefore, during the next year we changed the regulations to make it possible to put the eggs back on the market at any time, with the result that we continued on through last year without any difficulty.

This year, for reasons over which we have very little control, there did develop a very high supply of eggs around the middle of November and it increased into the month of January. The regulations, as they stood, were found again not to be such as to make it possible fully to enforce the intentions of the policy, and so we have again changed the regulations to make it possible for us to take the eggs, oil-dipped, as of a date in January and we continue to do so. That has had the result in most places of putting the eggs up to 30 cents grade A large to the producer. There are odd places where they are down to 29 cents and there are some where they have been down perhaps even lower than that. The difficulty in places where they have been priced lower, such as, say, in western Ontario, in certain parts of Saskatchewan and elsewhere, is that we have no control whatsoever over the dealings within a province. Since control over intraprovincial trade is with the provincial authorities and always has been, if someone does sell eggs at 28 cents a dozen, grade A large, intraprovincially we have no means of prosecuting anyone for doing that, nor have we any authority to say that they must be sold at some other price. There will be places across the country where eggs are sold at prices lower than the 38-cent price delivered at storage plants. That is sometimes due to the fact that the storage plant is a long distance removed. All I can say is that in so far as it is possible to enforce the idea we are prepared to buy eggs at 38 cents grade A large at storage, and that is all we can do under the circumstances. We say we are prepared to buy eggs at a certain place under certain conditions at a certain price; if the eggs are delivered there we buy them, but if somebody undertakes to sell eggs to some person at a lower price than that within the province we have no way of enforcing the price. We cannot compel him to deliver them to us at some other point.

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Where does the minister get his information with respect to the riding of Victoria (Ont.) to the effect that eggs are selling for 30 cents? I have information from his own department that slips have been issued at 26 cents for grade A large.

Mr. Gardiner: We sent people up there to look into the matter and they report that they could have got 30 cents if they had taken them to the place where the required conditions were met.

Mr. Hodgson: Where is the right place? The slips I have are from every grading station in the riding.

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. member had better consult the government of Ontario and get them to enforce the price that is available.

Mr. Hodgson: The minister had better do something for the dominion government.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PENSIONS OF SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister any progress to report in connection with the consideration to which he referred on January 14 to be given to the plight of superannuated civil servants, especially those whose pensions are in the lower brackets? Is he yet in position to announce whether an increase in those pensions will be provided?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I suggest that this is not a proper question at this time. I do not want to labour the point, but I think the rules provide that questions are asked to elicit information for use in subsequent debate in the house. A question should not be asked at regular intervals if the government is formulating policy because everyone in the house knows that government policy is announced in the normal way in the house if the house is sitting, or if the house is not sitting by a public statement. I suggest that we do not waste too much time in asking this kind of question.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

HAMILTON—INQUIRY AS TO DELAYED PAYMENTS TO AUTOMOBILE WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, and as he is not in the house perhaps someone else could answer it. Is the minister aware that there is a serious situation existing in Hamilton with regard to delay in providing unemployment insurance benefits, particularly to workers in the automobile industry who have been laid off recently?

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I will draw the attention of the Minister of Labour to the hon. member's question.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNIGHT—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "STAR-PHOENIX" OF FEBRUARY 9

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of personal privilege which may not seem important to the house generally but which would involve considerable injustice to the Conservative opposition if I did not rise at this time. The Star-Phoenix of February 9 contained an article which stated that in the course of my speech I had blasted members of the Conservative party in this house for having voted against certain resolutions, and the first one named was the resolution in regard to federal aid to education. I immediately called the editor and he assured me that it was a mistake on their part which will be corrected today.

So it may be clear may I state what I did say. I gave the Conservative party full credit for having supported that resolution on former occasions. I stated that Mr. Drew, a former leader of that party, had on several occasions spoken immediately after I had and led his followers in support of that action, both by voice and, when the opportunity occurred, by vote. The mistake may have arisen from the fact that I had said that I thought that for certain reasons, which I need not go into now, the support of that party had been somewhat less enthusiastic than before and that I was disappointed that the only member of the party who had spoken in favour of the resolution was the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan).

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF EXPORTS AND SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce a question because of the criticism offered by many hon. members to the effect that Canada was losing sales of wheat in the markets of the world and also because there appeared in the Manitoba Co-operator details of wheat sales which showed an increase for last year. My question to the minister is this. Is there any foundation for this criticism? Second, what other countries in the world have increased their sales?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we do not discuss sales of wheat, we discuss exports of wheat. Exports of Canadian wheat were higher this crop year than at the same date last year to the extent of 26 million to 27 million bushels. We have increased our sales of wheat to our three largest customers, the same customers this year as last year, Great Britain, West Germany and Japan.

Mr. McIvor: I thank you.

Mr. Winch: I have a second question—

Mr. Speaker: The first question should not have been asked.

FINANCE

RESULTS OF SURVEY OF INVESTMENT INTENTIONS FOR 1957

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have arranged to make available a departmental release summarizing the results of the survey of investment intentions for 1957. On the basis of the plans reported in the survey, total capital expenditures in Canada, both private and public, would reach $8.5 billion in 1957. This outlay, if realized, would represent an increase of 8 per cent over the $7.9 billion spent in 1956.

LIVESTOCK

STATEMENT ON INQUIRY INTO METHODS OF SLAUGHTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West on Thursday regarding the humane slaughter of meat animals, I regret that I am not in a position to go into the matter in any great detail. It would seem more appropriate that discussion of this somewhat involved question should take place on estimates rather than during the question period.

However, I can indicate to the hon. member that officials of the Department of Agriculture have had the question under study and information has been collected from official and other sources in the United States and from several European countries. This has been discussed with responsible officers of the packing industry and there have been some discussions between the industry and certain sections of the S.P.C.A. to which officials of the department have been invited. At the present time both groups are considering the issue in a frank, exploratory manner.

As the hon. member knows, there already are provisions in the Criminal Code under which action can be taken against persons responsible for cruelty to animals, whether such cruelty is associated with slaughter for meat or otherwise. Study so far given to the problem by our officials does not indicate the desirability of further federal legislation on the matter at the present time.

I can assure the hon. member that the minister and officials of the Department of Agriculture are genuinely interested in promoting the most humane methods possible of slaughtering meat animals adaptable to meat packing operations in Canada, and are pursuing the course which they think is best fitted to achieve that end.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I ask a supplementary question?

Has there been any discussion between the minister's department and the provinces on the question of jurisdiction in this matter, and has there been any understanding between the department and the provinces that the provinces would like the federal government to take appropriate action under federal legislation?

Mr. Gardiner: As the statement indicates, there have been discussions with the provincial authorities and those who are interested in the question in general, and we are at all times giving consideration to those matters in relation to which we have authority. But—and this, of course, is obvious from the question asked—there are certain matters which can only be dealt with by the provinces themselves.

Mr. Winch: If I may continue, Mr. Speaker, is there any understanding yet that the provinces have asked your department to accept the responsibility of bringing in legislation?

Mr. Gardiner: There is no doubt—although I cannot give an instance of it—that this kind of request has come out in the discussions which have taken place, but the constitution pretty well settles the question whether we can or cannot legislate.

SUPPLY

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF NATURAL RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT POLICY

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, today's announcement by the Prime Minister regarding the meeting that is to take place in Bermuda, at which he will be present during the latter day or days, is one more indication of the degree to which Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom find themselves allies, making their respective contributions to the preservation and maintenance of peace with freedom throughout the world.

However, I was disappointed that the Prime Minister did not see fit to invite the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to Canada. I cannot understand the attitude of the government in this regard. In the days of war, at the Quebec conference, there was begun a movement, in a joint alliance, that led to victory. Why the government of Canada should now seem so afraid to do anything in so far as our country is concerned to bring together Britain and the United States in a conference is difficult of understanding. I wonder what is the reason for this.

Notwithstanding the vast reserves that we possess, the contribution that has been made in two world wars, the degree to which today our mineral and other resources are making their contribution to the forces of freedom everywhere in the world, for some reason that has not been explained, though there is a tremendous desire—and a commendable one—to make a contribution in the United Nations, there does not seem to be a similar attitude of mind when it comes to bringing together the United Kingdom and the United States with Canada.

Only today Canadians heard with, I would say, considerable surprise an announcement made over the American Broadcasting Corporation by Mr. E. O. Newman regarding Canada's attitude last fall during the Suez affair. We have never been able to find, nor were we able to secure, the message that was sent by the government of Canada to the former prime minister of the United Kingdom, Sir Anthony Eden. What that message contained no one knows, because when application was made to the United Kingdom for publication of that message the government of Canada very carefully provided in the request that if that message were to be made available then all of the correspondence and all of the private messages which had passed over a period of months would have to be included.

And over and over again, because of the government's failure to produce that document and its apparent desire to conceal it, having regard to the kind of message that was sent to the government of the United Kingdom, information is forthcoming in various ways interpretative of what that message included. And today we are faced, over the American Broadcasting Corporation system, with information that the Prime Minister's letter to Sir Anthony Eden in the fall of 1956 contained a warning that unless Britain and France called off the invasion of Egypt within 24 hours Canada would withdraw from the commonwealth.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Whoever made that statement, Mr. Speaker, made a very inaccurate statement and one that is entirely false.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that statement on the part of the Prime Minister places him in a position where he interprets the message—

An hon. Member: It does not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —where he says that we cannot see the message, but where he gives us the contents by negation.

And when I heard the Prime Minister say today that no invitation had been extended to Britain and to the United States to meet here in Canada, I found it difficult to understand the reasons why, after so long, this government, in view of Canada's outstanding place in the international world, should seem so diffident about doing a thing that on the face of it would seem to be a reasonable one.

Certainly, the events of the past few weeks indicate that there will be an acceleration of the "cold war"; that everywhere in the world it will be waged more aggressively than ever before, and that we, within our own country and within the nations of the free world, will have to give more and more attention to the preservation of our freedom on the defence front, and also to the preservation of our economic strength in order to meet the trade offensive that is being launched everywhere in the world.

Everywhere today the search is for the raw materials necessary for defence. One of the major reasons for Nasser's action in the Suez and also the degree to which he is undermining Britain and France in the Middle East is the fact that in that area there are vast supplies of oil which as Nasser has set forth in his book are necessary if the instruments of technology are to be mobilized effectively. We know more in the last weeks as the result of Khrushchev's announcement that the de-Stalinization of the idol has taken place. He now reverses that attitude and everywhere in the world the U.S.S.R. is engaged in an offensive to secure control of the economic things so necessary to the maintenance of the military machines.

In recent years we in this party have over and over again endeavoured to secure on the part of the government a determination to launch in Canada a national policy of development, not one that is effective only in certain parts of Canada but one that will be universal and apply to every part of the country, one that will prevent the present situation whereby certain provinces find themselves frozen in underdevelopment and other provinces, because of their greater resources, are enabled to advance and to increase their trade and their industrial production.

Going back over the years, because it is of this situation that I intend to speak today, we in this party have consistently endeavoured to bring to the attention of the house the necessity for the launching of a program of extensive national development. The Minister of Trade and Commerce gave certain figures today indicating that total capital expenditures were $8½ billion during last year, an increase of 8.9 per cent. That in no way meets the challenge that we have over and over again brought to the attention of the government, that whatever the amount of capital expenditures may be those capital expenditures are not reasonably distributed across the country. In the result, various provinces—I refer particularly to the maritimes and the province of Saskatchewan in the west—find themselves unable to have that type of economic advancement which other provinces, more blessed with the resources of power than are the areas in question, have been able to achieve.

On June 16, 1952, as recorded at page 3263 of Hansard, this party presented a motion moved by Mr. Drew and seconded by the late Mr. Graydon in these words:

> . . . whereas the natural resources of Canada are a heritage that should be developed and conserved for the purpose of providing the greatest possible measure of opportunity and security for all Canadians this house is of the opinion that immediate consideration should be given to a national policy under a system of free enterprise and in close association and collaboration with the provinces that will:
> (a) promote and develop all the country's natural resources for the benefit of the people of every part of Canada;

I emphasize those words and say that the events that have taken place since indicate that in the view then expressed we were entirely correct in our evaluation of the situation.

> (b) protect and conserve our forest, mineral and other resources from undue depletion or exhaustion;
> (c) expand the use of our resources for industrial production in Canada and thus create greater opportunities for employment and advancement of Canadians.

Later, in 1955, a further motion was presented by way of amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne. It was moved by the then acting leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) and it proposed that action should be taken for this, among other purposes:

> To facilitate and encourage the processing of our natural resources in Canada, and thereby increase opportunities and employment for Canadians.

Then, on the 9th of July, 1956, less than a year ago, a motion was presented by Mr. Drew, seconded by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), in these words:

> This house is of the opinion that the welfare of the Canadian people requires the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada, encourage more processing of those resources in Canada, correct the present serious unfavourable trade balances, foster wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of our resources, and promote greater opportunity and employment for a steadily increasing population.

That was in July of 1956. That was when the Gordon commission was engaged in hearing evidence across this country, a commission which cost Canada at least $1 million and which by its report has given support to almost every one of the points raised by this party in July of 1956 and back through the years to 1952. Yet we hear nothing about what the government intends to do with the Gordon report. Is the report to be embalmed? There has been a thunderous silence on the part of the government with respect to the action that it intends to take in this regard. The only words that have been spoken have been words of condemnation by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Is it not a strange thing that the report of the Gordon commission, which was referred to in such warm terms in July last by members of the government, which was going to set forth in detail the course to be taken by Canada, which would be the instrument whereby the government would have information upon which it could act, has at this session been filed and forgotten? It has been put away in mothballs. I asked the Prime Minister on one occasion what the government intended to do, and in effect the answer was that at this session the government had no program in this regard.

Will the government say what portions of the report will receive its imprimatur? We know there are certain portions that have already received the utmost condemnation from the government. It is a strange thing that this commission, which was to be the chart, the compass of Canada's future in the next 25 years, has indeed become something in which the government shows but little interest. Is it because with regard to national development, with regard to the criticisms of this party, respecting not American investment in Canada but the degree to which the investment in Canada by foreign corporations was uncontrolled for the benefit of Canada, we in this party advocated and now advocate a national policy that will provide a dynamic influence in the economy, that will have a sense of national purpose and national destiny.

We do not want a day-to-day course wherein there are great developments in Canada depending on the world situation, but a plan; not a planned economy but a national policy; not a policy of nationalism but one whereby Canada in the days ahead will remain an independent Canada and will not inexorably drift into economic continentalism; one whereby Canada will maintain her economic independence and her sovereignty; a policy that will provide national development for a greater Canada in which growth and prosperity will not be purchased at the expense of our economic independence and our effective national sovereignty.

When we said these things and warned of these dangers in past years, we were met by a contemptuous attitude on the part of the government. Today as one reads the Gordon report one can only conclude that Mr. Gordon and the outstanding group associated with him found that there was a solid basis for the amendments which we moved and the courses which we suggested. Our attitude was misinterpreted. It was said that we were opposed to a flow of foreign investment. Over and over again we took our stand on that matter. We said it was necessary, that it was part of our development; but we pointed out that the Canadian share of ownership and control was declining in certain mining, smelting and petroleum industries and in certain manufacturing industries. We pointed out that, as realists, we understood that if foreign investment were to stop or to be seriously hampered, a serious if not deadly blow would be struck at our development.

We did not object to United States investment but we asked for a positive national policy which would prevent foreign investment from furthering the process of continental economic integration and ultimately undermining our national identity. We said we wanted to encourage foreign concerns to develop more Canadian interests and character in their operations. We wanted them to sell equity interests in Canada. The ministers of the government ridiculed our suggestions at that time. We said that Canadians should be on boards of directors and that Canadians should have the opportunity of investing in industries operating in Canada. We pointed out that it was possible if not likely that foreign corporations operating here would have in mind at all times not Canadian considerations or Canada's public welfare. We contended that if foreign investment were to remain predominant in our resource industries this country of ours, with its almost fathomless resources, would come to have a purely extractive national economy supplying the materials for other nations to process and to turn to useful purposes.

Those were some of the questions that were raised. We said it was not in keeping with Canada's destiny that foreign industry should have almost absolute power and control over many enterprises in our country; that in many cases Canadians were denied having more than token interest in those companies. We suggested that there should be an opportunity of a greater participation in those companies by Canadians and a voice in sharing in the destiny of important sectors of our economy and in particular among those extractive industries to which I have made reference.

Those were the views that were expressed. Those were the views that, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) last July, were categorized as some of the greatest rot he had ever heard. Mr. Speaker, I am going to read some of the suggestions made by this party on July 9, 1956 and which, in the light of subsequent events and an analysis of the Gordon commission report, now stand out as being approved by that commission as justifiable criticism of the situation then prevailing. I am going to quote for a moment what Mr. Drew said at that time in a speech in which he set out the views of this party on this question, and in particular in connection with the financial expansion from the United States into Canada and the interlocking economy created as a result. He raised certain points and in particular, as reported at page 5777 of Hansard, July 9, 1956 he set out some of the results of the situation which had developed:

1. A heavy net outflow of interest and dividends increases the amount of goods which have to be shipped abroad to raise the necessary foreign exchange. In other words, the profits are drained out of the country and the amount of goods which can be imported at any given level proportionately reduced.

2. Foreign interests control the pricing policies of their Canadian subsidiaries in a way that could be a great disadvantage to the Canadian consumer.

3. Foreign financial control is in a position to decide the extent and the form of the operations of their Canadian subsidiaries, and they can use earnings from their Canadian subsidiaries to finance expansion of plants outside of Canada.

Natural Resources—Development

On October 16, 1956, speaking in Chicago, the Minister of Trade and Commerce used many of the arguments which we had used and which were criticized here in the house. He did this as he spoke to Americans with regard to Canadian operations of United States corporations. Among the things that he asked for were those which he had ridiculed when they were advanced by this party over and over again. In the course of his speech there he said this: 1. Let Canadians have a chance to become minority shareholders in subsidiaries. 2. Provide more opportunity for advancement of Canadians to top jobs. 3. Let Canadian branch plants take on more export business. 4. Make public more information on branch operations in Canada.

Those were some of the things that over the years this party had been advocating. Indeed the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the month of October, having for a period of five years or more cast nothing but contempt and scorn on the views expressed by this opposition relative to this matter, adopted several of them on the occasion of that gathering in Chicago. Indeed, he went on to point out one serious situation that arose, because these companies were United States companies operating in Canada. When subsidiaries here in Canada endeavoured to export from Canada in order to fill orders in international trade in various parts of the world, they were stopped from doing so and the exports were made from the United States. All this we on this side had referred to over and over again.

In addition to the points to which I have already referred the attitude taken by this party included certain other criticisms. I quote again from page 5777 of Hansard for July 9, 1956:

> In many cases senior positions in Canadian subsidiaries are held by other than Canadians.
> Foreign management may use its Canadian plant to manufacture goods for export only when the United States plant is too busy to handle its export orders. This creates undesirable fluctuations in production and employment in the Canadian subsidiary.

When we stated that last July we were answered by laughter and ridicule, yet by the month of October, apparently under the impelling influence of the Gordon report which today seems almost as dead as the Dodo so far as the government is concerned, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) changed his attitude very considerably.

It was also pointed out by Mr. Drew on the same page of Hansard:

> A foreign company may not give the Canadian public adequate information about the affairs of its Canadian subsidiary. A number of Canadian subsidiaries today are operating under laws which do not compel them to give the information which is essential for an understanding of their operation.

This point, too, was brought out by this party, and again in his Chicago speech the Minister of Trade and Commerce adopted that criticism in part and indicated that it would be to the interests of Canada if United States companies or their subsidiaries in Canada would provide information similar to that required by the S.E.C. in Washington.

Then we stated:

> United States interests doing business in Canada are subject to some laws of the United States such as the anti-trust laws. No matter how desirable the purpose of any of those laws may be, the result is that there can be an interference with business in Canada by the decision of the United States court or other tribunals.

The next paragraph reads:

> Industrial research for Canadian owned subsidiaries of foreign owned corporations may be carried on outside the country so that there may not be adequate inducement for skilled personnel to remain in Canada.

Again, this idea was adopted by the minister in his October speech. Our position today is this. While we do extend a considerable additional amount of assistance to students in the universities, many of our technological and trained scientific men find it necessary to migrate to the United States and there engage in research in the mother companies of Canadian subsidiaries. Over the years we have contended that United States companies in Canada, and their subsidiaries, should be required to divert a share of research to the Canadian company proportionate to that expended in the United States.

I am not going to quote further from that speech of July 9, 1956. All I have quoted is for the purpose of showing the degree to which those criticisms that we made as to the danger of the situation were founded on reality, and their weight has now received the support of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, not in this House of Commons but in a speech delivered in the city of Chicago.

When we were taking this stand which the Minister of Trade and Commerce ridiculed as a nationalistic one and characterized as an emotional outburst against United States capital, he said, in effect, we were indulging in scare stories, in fantasies. Then, a few months later, in a speech in October, the minister quoted verbatim from the Gordon report in certain particulars and supported many of the criticisms which we made and will continue to make.

What of this report? What does the government intend to do about it? Are the recommendations to be carried into effect? If they are valid recommendations, they should be used. They must be valid because several of them to which I have referred have received the approbation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Why should there not be legislation introduced at this session in order to correlate all the recommendations and to give substance to those that could be made the subject of legislative enactments.

I am not going to quote from the report except to refer to certain pages that are indicative of support for the stands that we have taken. At page 48 the recommendation in connection with iron ore is that it would be difficult to greatly extend the fabrication or processing of iron ore in Canada. Then, the report continues:

> There may be sound arguments and better opportunities for refining a greater percentage of certain metals—for example, nickel, lead, zinc, titanium and perhaps uranium—prior to export, but each situation requires careful study on an individual basis before any such conclusion would be justified. . . .
> As a way in which to come to grips with this problem, there might be some merit in requiring exports of ores, concentrates and other semi-processed commodities to obtain export permits, which when issued would be good for a stated number of years. Each case should be examined carefully and individually. New mines, for example, could be given every opportunity to get under way and into production. But it could be made clear that the circumstances in each case would be re-examined at stated intervals and that exporters would be expected over the years to do more processing in Canada except when the obstacles in the way of doing so proved to be real and the cost disadvantages appreciable.

At the moment I am not advocating export permits. I am asking the government, now that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has at long last agreed with many of the suggestions that have been made by this party, what is going to be done in order to preserve to the greatest possible benefit of Canada those vast mineral resources that are ours? What attitude does the government take? Our resources are not inexhaustible. This becomes apparent when one reads of the situation in the United States and how in recent years many minerals have become reduced to a degree that could never have been anticipated 25 or 30 years ago. When the United States becomes more dependent upon Canada, what are we going to do about it? According to Professor Allan N. Bateman, chief of the department of geology of Yale University, by 1975 the United States will be dependent for 65 per cent of its copper, in part from Canada, whereas during the war it was only dependent for 37.6 per cent of its requirement.

Iron ore, during the war, 2 per cent; by 1975, from 35 per cent to 45 per cent, mainly dependent upon Canada and Venezuela; lead, during the war, 44.2 per cent; by 1975, 70 per cent; mercury, 43.2 per cent. By 1975 it will go up to 80 per cent. Petroleum; it was not dependent upon importation during the war. By 1975, it will require in imports from Canada, the Middle East and Venezuela, 50 per cent of its needs; sulphur, from nothing to 50 per cent; titanium, from 26 per cent to 80 per cent; tungsten, from 61 to 70 per cent; zinc, from 36.7 per cent to 60 per cent. In every one of these instances there are, of course, other countries which provide a portion of the necessary supplies.

Last year the dominion bureau of statistics answered those who contend that Canada has an inexhaustible supply of raw materials, and indicated that Canada's present resources would be exhausted in varying degrees in from 22 years to 64 years if further discoveries were not made. The figures were that Canada's copper resources would be exhausted in 24 years unless further discoveries were made; petroleum in 22 years; lead in 26 years; nickel in 30 years; zinc in 30 years; and asbestos in 64 years. All of this indicates that our resources are not inexhaustible and that action should be taken to encourage the processing of those resources in Canada in a considerable way instead of shipping them in the main in raw form.

Now, sir, that is the background of the amendment which I intend to move after I have placed before the house certain suggestions and ideas with regard to a national development policy. We say first that every encouragement must be given to the processing of domestic raw materials in Canada to a much greater degree than exists today. The reason is that our resources should be utilized to the maximum advantage of the Canadian people. Again, I repeat, that does not mean the discouragement of foreign investment, but it means that investment in Canada in our resources must be directed to the maximum benefit of Canada. We follow the recommendations of the Gordon commission in this connection, that wherever possible foreign companies should employ Canadians in senior management and technical positions, should retain Canadian engineering and other professional and service personnel and should do all of their purchases of supplies, materials and equipment in Canada.

I mentioned a moment ago the degree to which we are losing such a percentage of our highly trained engineers and technical scientists to the United States because of the fact that in connection with research, most, or all in many cases, of the research done by these large United States corporations operating in Canada is done in the United States rather than in Canada. We feel if those companies within our country would provide that a reasonable share of the expenditures be made for research in Canada it would assure the keeping in Canada of outstanding young men and women for the building up of Canada and would assure as well that our technological advancement would be in keeping with the tremendous resources that our ours.

Second, in so far as northern Canada is concerned, there can be no question whatever that in the territories there has not been a policy of vision in keeping with the tremendous potentialities of that area. There is no question of constitutional division of responsibility between the dominion and the provinces in the North West Territories. In that area there are vast resources that should be developed, with the state making possible that development by providing the means and the climate for private industry to develop and expand. I can see this northland of ours with developments envisaged by D'Arcy McGee in his magnificent speech at the time of confederation as he saw that great Canada. I can see cities in northern Canada north of the Arctic circle. There are vast power potentialities in that area. I can see cities developing there as they are developing today in Norway, if only the government would catch the vision of the possibilities.

As we enter this age in which science we believe will dwarf the achievements of the past, the northern storehouse in the territories must be rendered accessible and available. Airway transportation cannot discharge that responsibility. Railways are limited in what they can do. Water transportation is insufficient.

I am one of those who believe in the vision of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and of Sir Robert Borden in 1912; I am one of those who believe that there should be undertaken, in co-operation between the federal government and the provinces, a national highway policy to provide highways for vast developments in the north. The challenge of communism now and in the days ahead demands that our vast northern resources shall be made accessible and available to industry. A proper resources program whereby the federal government would make contributions or assure costs in co-operation with the provinces would be one that would make available and accessible vast areas in the north that still remain undeveloped and will remain so unless action is taken.

In this connection, many hon. members in the last few days have received a resolution that was passed some time ago. I give this as an illustration only because it represents the general summary of the possibilities. It is contained in a brief submitted by the Uranium City chamber of commerce and the Prince Albert chamber of commerce in regard to the vast developments in Uranium City and in northern Saskatchewan, and to the need of action for development. It points out that in the Beaverlodge area on the north shore of lake Athabaska, with its focal centre at Uranium City, is an area that has developed rapidly within the last decade. In 1956 it produced some $27 million worth of new wealth in the mining of uranium ore. Large-scale expansion programs are now under way. The resolution shows that what is needed is transportation. The water route takes too long and the air route is too costly. It comes up with the suggestion—it is one that I said a moment ago was advanced in this house as far back as 1912:

> That we urge the government of Saskatchewan to approach the government of Canada for grants in aid for the construction of such a road and that we request the government of Canada to consider such grants in aid as part of the national program for the development of our natural resources.

I mention that because it is an example of the kind of thing I have in mind. After all, in so far as northern development is concerned, the responsibility within the provinces is left to the provinces but the major beneficiary is always the federal government in the additional taxation which is made possible by reason of the expansion.

We in this party have enunciated certain principles in this regard which we believe are necessary if the development of our country is to equal its possibilities. We believe that the welfare of the Canadian people requires joint investment from time to time for the development of power and other self-liquidating projects in any province where the government of such province requests the co-operation of the Canadian government in carrying out such development. In the case of projects which are not directly self-liquidating we believe that in co-operation with and at the request of a province the federal government should embark upon a bold and aggressive program of the development of natural resources by means of railways, highways and access roads, and also reclamation and conservation schemes, and that these projects will make available to this and future generations the natural wealth of Canada.

Also in connection with power development which is so necessary we believe that Canada's right to the potential hydroelectric power latent in international rivers in Canada should not be parted with under any circumstances, and that the benefits of such hydroelectric power should be preserved for the ultimate use of the people of Canada. These are one or two suggestions in connection with power development which we believe deserve the serious consideration of this parliament and the Canadian people.

We think that there should be an exhaustive investigation into our power resources in a manner similar to that followed in the United States by a representative of the atomic energy commission and also by the Paley commission. In this way the energy requirements of this nation and the degree to which they will be available to us will be set out in authoritative detail. In order to meet the industrial demands of Canada's future there is a need, as is set forth in the Gordon commission report, for the setting up of a Canadian energy board with a membership composed of technical personnel which might be selected by the ministers of the departments particularly interested and also by the president of the national research council. Upon that committee as well there should be representatives of industry and of the dominion and provincial governments to the end that the most effective use of the energy resources of Canada in the interests of public welfare may be assured.

These are recommendations which are contained in the Gordon commission report, but they were first brought before this house on October 22, 1951 by this party in a speech delivered by Mr. Gordon Graydon in which he set out with unusual prophetic capacity for Canada's future the need of the setting up of a national development and production board. I suggest that perhaps the name "energy board" should now be used as the Gordon commission has used that name as being more representative and typical of the needs of Canada. As Mr. Graydon said, that board should be set up and be composed of representatives of government at the federal and provincial levels, of the agricultural industry, of labour and of other branches of our national endeavour. It should achieve among other objectives a survey of the national resources of Canada in relation to their availability and the foreseeable demand as indicated by the requirements of our defence program and also the domestic demands of an expanding economy, and it should recommend upon the basis of such investigation how best this nation could meet the demands and obligations that face it in this regard.

We believe that there should be formulated a federal power policy in voluntary cooperation with such provinces as desire it in order to assure a continuing expansion of low-cost energy in Canada. Such a policy would help create, if asked for by the province of British Columbia, a huge industrial empire there and it would certainly revolutionize the maritime provinces which in the main today find themselves in a position of retarded advancement because of the lack of power development and the failure of successive governments to provide power facilities and thereby assure the decentralization of industry.

In so far as the territories are concerned, which come under the jurisdiction of this parliament, it has been estimated that there are millions of horsepower of electrical energy waiting for development and any expenditures made today in order to make possible an extension and expansion of power development in the future will pay dividends. Such expenditures would be self-liquidating and will repay dividends one hundredfold in the years ahead. It will also assure that in those parts of Canada that today find themselves unable to keep up with the general rate of development in other parts of Canada there will be an equalization which up to the present time has not been considered by this government.

On the prairies, and in particular in Saskatchewan, it would also assure developments such as the South Saskatchewan river project which becomes a matter of consideration whenever an election is in the offing but then seems to be forgotten as an unfeasible proposition thereafter. To say that a development such as the South Saskatchewan dam is not economically feasible is to forget the national policy of Sir John Macdonald which was followed throughout the years that he was in power. Alexander Mackenzie doubted that it was feasible to build the Canadian Pacific Railway. Sir John said it was feasible and indeed essential if we were to have the development that is ours today in the western provinces and which otherwise never would have taken place. The same thing was later true within the British empire and latterly within the British commonwealth.

Then finally I say that it is interesting to read the recommendations of the report in connection with taxation and the need of taxation changes that should be made to encourage industry within this country, and developments. I shall do no more than refer to the pages of the report. Pages 58 and 59 deal with the oil and gas industry. Also in so far as foreign investment is concerned, under the taxation laws existing today, United States corporations are placed in a better position and have greater opportunities to take over the oil development of this country than Canadian corporations. Certainly, Canadian corporations may not be able to ask for advantages over those corporations that come into our country and assist in its development. But Canadian corporations have a right to equality with those that come in from foreign countries and I repeat what I have said on previous occasions—that the time has come—and, certainly the Gordon report indicates and emphasizes this—for the entire tax structure in Canada to be overhauled with a view to providing encouragement to the promotion of primary and secondary industries in our country.

Promoters, investors and those who venture in risk enterprises should have precisely the same advantage with regard to taxation as exists in the United States, for unless this is provided here in Canada, Canadian promoters and investors are placed in a secondary position, a condition of affairs that no one can possibly justify. And in making this survey of the tax structure of Canada, federal, provincial and municipal steps should be taken to assure by the necessary changes in taxation, many of which are recommended in the Gordon report, provision for the encouragement of Canadian corporations. In addition to that, the provinces and municipalities, with their own responsibilities for development, should be assured of sources of revenue whereby a more equitable share of tax yields would be made available to them, thereby permitting them to discharge their full responsibilities in the direction necessary for the proper development of this country. These are but a few of the matters that will be considered during the course of this debate.

We look back on what was said in July, 1956 with a considerable amount of appreciation when we realize that many of the things which we advocated now find themselves in the Gordon commission report. I again ask the government this: what are you going to do about it? Are you going to let the report die a natural death, or are you going to act on the evidence that has been gathered by this commission if Canada is to achieve its proper development? Is action to be taken now? If not, why not?

There is no reason why measures should not be introduced at this session in connection with taxation which will assure that the handicaps under which Canadian investors operate today will be removed and Canadians will thereby be encouraged to share in our national development to a greater degree than has been possible under the hobbling influence of taxation measures at present on the statute books. I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Green (Vancouver-Quadra):

That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house is of the opinion that the welfare of the Canadian people requires the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada, encourage more processing of those resources in Canada, correct the present serious unfavourable trade balances, foster wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of our resources, and promote greater opportunity and employment for a steadily increasing population."

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Speaker: May I be allowed to say a word at this moment because of the broad description of "various matters" included in the amendment that has been moved as a grievance? I have made the point before, and I would like to tell the house that in my humble opinion this is not the type of grievance provided for under our rules upon a motion to go into supply.

The citation to which I would like hon. members to refer is citation 345—Beauchesne, Third Edition—to start with, especially the latter part which says:

Members may discuss various matters on the motion for the Speaker to leave the chair without any amendment being proposed; but once debate is stopped on one matter and another matter intervenes, members cannot again discuss the former.

The question is: What is "a matter" with respect to this? Let us turn to citation 468, which says:

It sometimes happens, on the motion that the Speaker leave the chair for committee of supply, that members air grievances without moving amendments. A member may speak on railway rates—

That is a matter.

—another on naturalization—

That is another matter.

—and so on. Five or six different matters may then be brought to the government's attention. But no member is allowed to speak more than once on the motion. He cannot discuss all the matters which may then come up, and when he has spoken on one of them he has exhausted his right to speak to the motion before the house, namely, "that the Speaker do now leave the chair".

If no amendment had been moved at the end of the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), what matter would hon. members consider would have been before the house? Is it the Bermuda conference? Is it the Quebec conference suggested by the Leader of the Opposition? Is it the suggested policy about the development of natural resources? Is it the Gordon commission report? Is it American investment in Canada, or foreign investment in Canada and its implications? Would it be federal-provincial co-operation in the matter of economics? Would it be grants in aid of the development of our northern resources? Would it be power development policies? Would it be the equalization of economic opportunities across Canada, such as the South Saskatchewan river dam which, hon. members will recall, was the subject of a grievance at one point—I think it was a year or two ago? Would it be changes in taxation?

I say again that if no amendment had been moved, where could the Speaker intervene and say: "These matters have already been dealt with. You have got to speak in a relevant way to the matter that has been placed before us". Under the amendment the field is so wide that I do not think there is any matter which cannot be linked with the amendment. I will allow the Leader of the Opposition to speak.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I am not through. If I may continue, may I say that this matter is important to the house. There is another point I should like to stress. There are notices of motion on the order paper. I indicated to some hon. members privately last year, and now that the opportunity arises I should like to do so to the house generally, that members place notices of motion on the order paper in which they ask for certain changes in taxation, certain developments affecting economic policy and various facets of our economic activities and that they should realize what the situation is if they make on this amendment the speech they would like to make on their own notice of motion when it is considered. If we had reached the time when the days for the consideration of notices of motion had expired it would be a different proposition but we have not reached that time. Since we have not it may be that some hon. members will find themselves in a predicament when these notices of motion are called and they may have to violate the rule against repetition because they will want to speak on their own motions and others will want to follow them.

In 1954 the then leader of the opposition had moved a wide amendment of this type and I ventured to express to the house the same opinion as I do now. I said that this was a very important matter. It is an important matter because I would not want to restrict the right of hon. members to air grievances. I am merely placing the position before the house. It seems to me to be a reasonable proposition that a grievance should not be of an all-embracing nature but should concern a more definite and specific matter. At that time I said that I would not want to decide the matter myself and would put it to the house and at that moment the then leader of the opposition withdrew his amendment. That was on April 26, 1954 and the discussion on the point is to be found at pages 4110 to 4112 inclusive of Hansard.

Again this time I am not going to rule the amendment out of order. I am not going to do anything unless there is in the house an indication that my views have an appearance of correctness—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: —and that they are not of such a nature as to curtail the right to air grievances. I hear hon. members to my right applaud, but I should like to point out that on a motion to go into supply the right to move an amendment is an opposition right and I think that the problem here is one for which the opposition has to take a responsibility.

I think it is to their own advantage because these wide debates, especially at the beginning of a session, open up such a vista of discussion that there are bound to be repetitive statements whenever other matters come up in the form of notices of motion or otherwise. I leave the matter to hon. members themselves. It may be that the opposition prefers to do it this way. There have been other amendments of a wide character. I mentioned the one in 1954 with respect to which I expressed serious doubts and the then leader of the opposition withdrew it. But there were others of a similar character moved at a later time.

As I say, I leave the position wide open to any representations which can be made. If hon. members do not care to make any representations I will leave the matter as it stands, but if they do I may be influenced by the representations they make.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to presume to suggest anything, but there was no objection raised to this amendment last year by Your Honour or anyone else. It is the second or third time that a similar amendment has been before the house and my recollection is that on no occasion was there any objection raised. The effective words are these:

> . . . the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources . . .

Then the purposes are set out. Those are the effective words. As late as July 9 last a similar amendment was placed before the house and this is the same amendment.

Mr. Green: The very same words.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was no question whatever raised then. I point that out because of the fact that Your Honour referred to the amendment as being rather comprehensive. It is all restricted to one thing, a national development policy which will have certain results.

Mr. Speaker: In 1954, when I spoke on the proposed amendment of the then leader of the opposition which he withdrew, I thought I had said all that was necessary, that if members of the opposition did not care to amend their ways with respect to these motions then it was up to them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If Your Honour did I have not seen it, and I have looked all the way through here.

Mr. Speaker: I am talking about the session of 1953-54, but as to the motion to which he refers, and about which I did not say anything in my earlier remarks, I indicated that I had had some conversations with some hon. members and had pointed out that the amendment embraced about six notices of motion already on the order paper. As a matter of fact, during the debate on the amendment to the motion to go into supply there were discussions on power developments in the maritimes and other projects.

There is one thing more I should like to point out to the Leader of the Opposition. One cannot divorce the speech that one makes from his amendment. The Leader of the Opposition has spoken in a much wider manner than is covered by the amendment with which he concluded, but from the point of view of relevancy I have to take into account the speech he has made in allowing other members to address themselves to the amendment. As I say, I consider an amendment to the motion to go into supply as being an opposition motion and there are bound to be some difficulties later on. It is up to hon. members.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, if there is no further discussion on the point of order I should like to comment on the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition. First of all, may I say that I agree it will be a good thing for the Prime Minister to go to Bermuda and meet with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. The Prime Minister met the President of the United States and had a chat with him and I imagine he will have the same sort of chat with Mr. Macmillan.

I would have liked to pursue international affairs further because I feel that at this time some expression of opinion should be made regarding matters coming before the United Nations tomorrow and particularly with regard to Canada's attitude toward some of the questions that will arise there. But I do not think I should do that. I think I should confine myself to the amendment already moved. I quite agree with what you have said, Mr. Speaker, that there is a danger not to the government but to the members of the opposition parties in moving omnibus resolutions. I know that from time to time in the past, on the address particularly and sometimes on the budget, we ourselves have been tempted to include four or five different matters in the amendment. The result has been that when something extremely important came up with regard to one of the matters to which we had referred on the amendment on the address, we have been precluded from doing something about it later in the session. I think it is very good of you, Mr. Speaker, to remind the house, and particularly those of us on the opposition side, of the dangers of moving omnibus resolutions in connection with going into supply, or on the address or on the budget.

We are most decidedly in favour of the government's adopting a national development policy for Canada. We have always been in favour of such a policy. Indeed, it is implicit in our philosophy of how the development of the Canadian economy should be proceeded with. We have always believed that the country should have some sort of plan in accordance with which it might move, a plan that would enable the people of Canada to guide the development of their resources in the interests of the people of Canada so that the results of these great productive enterprises and the development of our great resources might be available to all our people rather than be concentrated in the returns on investments by persons who invest their money in the great private industries and corporations; that our farmers and our workers, our old age pensioners and our children should benefit to the maximum extent that it is possible to do from the development of these resources which have been placed so abundantly in this country by Providence over the ages. Hence we are in favour of a national development policy for Canada.

When we look over the history of this country since it was settled, I was going to say, or more particularly since confederation, what do we find? Until I came down here this afternoon or shortly before then, I was unaware of the fact that an amendment was going to be moved. I did not know what the amendment was or its terms when I came into the house this afternoon. However, I have in my hand a statement that was made in 1879, twelve years after confederation, by Sir Leonard Tilley. Speaking in this chamber at that time he said this:

> I am not, I think, over-sanguine when I say, that the day is not far distant when the population in the western country will be greater than in Canada—

By that of course he meant in Upper and Lower Canada, now Ontario and Quebec.

> —and when the maritime provinces, with their coal, iron and water power, will be the manufacturing centres for this vast dominion.

But what actually happened was that when the Canadian Pacific Railway was built and the vast areas of the west were opened up for settlement, the prophecy of Sir Leonard Tilley was brought to naught because the economic balance within the country was more or less upset by the developments in western Canada. Instead of having a planned development of our country which preserved the industries which had already been established in the maritime provinces, for example, and which for some time reaped the benefits of the expansion to the west when the great steel mills of Nova Scotia provided the rails upon which the trains and the commerce across Canada ran, we find that industry shifted to central Canada; and ever since that time there has been an imbalance in the Canadian economy. More and more over these late years, particularly during the late war years, we find the concentration of industry speeding up in central Canada.

May I just in passing say that because we have no direction of the development of this country, no attempt to tell the industries that it would be wiser if they established themselves somewhere else, we have a concentration of industry in this country which causes us to stop and think when we look at it from the point of view of possibilities. I did not say probabilities, Mr. Speaker; I said possibilities, and I hope that the possibilities are improbabilities. In the event of a modern war, with the great industries of Canada concentrated in the Niagara peninsula and around the cities of Hamilton and Toronto and for a little way along the lakeshore, those industries would be found to be in a position so vulnerable that Canada could be put out of business economically almost as easily as the great centres of industry in the United Kingdom could be put out of business under the same circumstances. I am thinking also of Sarnia, our canal, and so on. Hence we are in favour of a national development policy, but we would go a step further than my hon. friend went.

We believe that that development policy should be planned and that some direction should be exercised by the governments of Canada and of the provinces in order to make sure that in the development there is no imbalance such as that which we find in our country at the present time or that the imbalance that now exists should be corrected to an extent. One welcomes, of course, the industrial expansion that is going on in western Canada on account of the new discoveries there of gas, oil, uranium, nickel in Manitoba and other resources of that description. But again, all that has been done not under any national plan or with any conception of the development of Canada as a national economy. It has simply been done because people are finding it more profitable to go there.

That brings me to this point in connection with national development. If we are going to have national development along the lines that my hon. friend suggests, so that Canadians may participate in that development, we should have a direction of investment in development. What we should have above all things, it seems to me, is a national investment board directing investment into socially desirable operations. Of course, Mr. Speaker, we make no bones about the fact that we believe that the development of some of our great resources and of our utilities, should be undertaken as public projects. We made that position abundantly clear in connection with the pipe line which is to be built across Canada. We failed in our attempts to persuade the government—and I suppose we failed in our attempts to persuade the people of Canada—that the proper way in which to undertake a project of that description was through a great public utility like the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission or a number of other similar utilities across Canada. Indeed my hon. friend this afternoon suggested that certain great electric projects in the provinces might be undertaken with the co-operation of the federal authority or in other words as public projects partly financed as federal and provincial undertakings. I agree that that would be a step in the right direction. I want to say further that I should like to see our industries more completely under the control of Canadian public authorities. Other great utilities and projects that are not brought under public control I would like to see under the control of responsible citizens of Canada.

In connection with the great project, the Trans-Canada pipe line, I hope that Canadians, now it has been decided this is going to be a private enterprise project, will see to it that there is sufficient Canadian capital invested in it to bring it under Canadian control so we shall have some authority over those who are going to control it.

So then, Mr. Speaker, we are in favour of this amendment. There are so many projects that would come within a national development plan that one can only begin to enumerate them. We have great drainage problems in the maritime provinces which would restore to the people of the maritimes land that could be tilled or upon which cattle could be raised. We have the great tides in the bay of Fundy which are going to be investigated and which might be of great use to the people of the maritime region provided the federal government undertook a large measure of responsibility for financing power projects which could not be undertaken by the maritimes themselves.

None of us like to think that the development of our country by regions is uneven, but under the present hit-or-miss private enterprise system we find that there are regions of Canada that are depressed, and the most depressed of the regions is the maritime region. As I said, I did not have time to look up data, but I happen to have in my desk some figures on the relative positions of the various parts of Canada which I used elsewhere a short time ago. For example, the average per capita personal income by provinces clearly indicates that in 1954, the last year for which I have figures, Ontario and Quebec led all Canada and the maritime regions certainly brought up the rear. From a high income of $1,470 per capita in the province of Ontario we go right down to $640 in Newfoundland, with New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island only slightly better than the per capita income for Newfoundland. Now, that is not good enough.

If we had a proper development policy, we could see to it that the benefits of development were spread more evenly over the several regions. Even within provinces there are grave discrepancies of personal income. Many people in Canada are not enjoying the benefits they should be enjoying. We have often spoken in this house of our old age pensioners. In 1949 the old age pension was increased to $40, and if we take the value of what a dollar would purchase then that is equivalent to only $32 in 1957 purchasing power. Today, it takes $40 to buy what $32 would buy in 1949. The same thing applies, of course, to family allowances; they have been more than cut in half since they were introduced. One could mention also veterans pensions and the P.F.R.A. payments to our farmers in western Canada which have been cut by more than half. The people who have suffered the most, and I noticed the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) recognized this in an address he gave on Saturday night, are the people on fixed incomes, the people who in the last 10, 20 or 30 years have purchased life insurance, Canadian bonds or Canadian stocks in order to build up some security for their old age. There has never been in the history of Canada more confiscation of individual savings than under the present government because they have allowed this to happen. If we are going to have a national development plan then we have to see to it that this plan takes into consideration the needs of the regions and, within the regions, the needs of individuals. In this way we would not have poor provinces and rich provinces; we would not have poor people and multi-millionaires from whom, when a couple of them die, we can collect a hundred million dollars in death duties.

Mr. Low: And then spend it on canned culture.

Mr. Coldwell: Never mind what it is being spent for, I am not dealing with that. That is a matter for a separate debate. I am pointing out we can collect that amount from a few people across Canada.

I have mentioned the maritimes, and the South Saskatchewan river project was mentioned. You know, I cannot understand the Gordon report in this respect. This report says it is necessary to change from a wheat economy into a mixed farming economy, and then goes on to advise the government that it should not consider large irrigation projects. This, of course, must refer to a large irrigation project, the South Saskatchewan river project. If you are going to encourage farmers to grow less wheat, then they have to grow something else. So long as those 400,000 acres remain unirrigated they are going to be a wheat proposition. They will raise semi-arid plants of which wheat is our best example. If you carry out the project, then you can grow legumes or perchance you can grow sugar beets and vegetables, establish canneries and so on and reduce wheat products. I am not going into the Gordon report, but I have read it, and I must say I am not going to endorse it by any means because I find a number of similar illogical positions taken in that report. All I can think is that Mr. Gordon was pressed to bring in some sort of a report and he sat down some evenings and dictated it to his stenographer as quickly as he could. This appears to be the case when I read parts of that report.

Then we have such projects that should be undertaken on a national scale. I am firmly of the opinion that we need a national development policy. I do not know what the resources of the north are. I am quite sure if the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra were in his seat this afternoon he would recall that both he and I and the former minister of national defence, Mr. Claxton, were surprised when we were attending a meeting of the foreign policy association in New York in about 1941, I think, to hear Mr. Stefansson, the Artic explorer, say that the largest reserve of oil in the world was in northern Alberta and the Northwest Territories. Afterwards I asked him if he knew of any geologist who would support that statement, and he named the vice president of Standard Oil of New Jersey. I asked him where I could obtain a copy of what that gentleman said, and he told me from the University of Missouri. I got a copy of the lecture he gave in which that statement was made, and I recall that I read a portion of it in this house. But I do not think it struck any of us at that time that there were those tremendous potential resources in that area. Now, if we made proper inquiry and if we had some idea of the national development plan, this sort of estimate of what we have to develop and what we have to plan could be undertaken and made, and we would know better how to proceed.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, that in northern Canada there are probably resources of which we have no knowledge which will bring to the people of Canada in the years to come a great deal of wealth, many opportunities and a better life.

With respect to the resources that we have, not only do we need development but we need conservation. Those of us who have lived in western Canada over the last half century—and it is going on to 48 years since I first went there—will remember how we thought the soil could not be depleted and that it was inexhaustible. The years of the 1930's came along and we learned a lesson. Today if you go on the prairies you will find the farmers there are practising conservation, so that if the dry years do come again and the winds blow there will never be the erosion there was in the 1930's. Our farmers are doing their share today in conserving the soil of the western plains.

Then as one goes through our forests and sees the depletion—yes, in some areas I know the forest reclothes itself and will give a yield of trees over the years—he comes to the conclusion that in some areas of this country if we want a perpetual forest cut there will have to be planning, there will have to be a conscious planning and authority. Yes, I agree it should be provincial but with federal encouragement, to see to it that the trees that are cut down are the trees that are ripe, to see that the trees which are taken out are the trees that are no longer needed there. The smaller trees should be encouraged to grow, or areas of land now treeless, which were once treed, replanted.

Last autumn I had the opportunity of driving through the Black Forest in Germany and seeing some of the lumbering that was going on there. Of course I was told what I knew already, namely that the Black Forest had been lumbered for centuries and would continue to be lumbered for centuries to come, because there is a plan. The government lays down the method by which the forest shall be cut and manner in which it shall be conserved.

I was in Norway and I saw the same thing there. No Norwegian can take down a tree without a permit. Are the people happy about it? They do not see it as regimentation. No; they look upon it as conscious planning for the welfare of the people in the days to come. If we are to have a national development authority or plan, then we must have certain measures of control in relation to such a plan.

I know that jibes are sometimes thrown at us that we like controls. I do not like controls. I do not advocate them for the sake of instituting controls; but in certain circumstances we need public controls in order to protect our people and our resources from exploitation, or our forests from being denuded, and to keep them for future generations. I am happy to say that in some of our provinces controls are being exercised. For example, oil control is being exercised by the provincial governments; gas control is being exercised by the provincial governments so it cannot be all used up at once, or in only a few years, leaving future generations without the resources that are necessary for the public weal. The same thing applies to mining, and so on. Therefore we are all in favour of national development.

One could point out the many fields in which that development could take place and how it could be done by planning. I am not going to do that this afternoon but, of course, you cannot have development without finances. If you are to finance it properly, then you must somehow or other direct investment into socially desirable projects. As I said at the beginning, and if I were moving the amendment, I would say precisely that the government should establish a national investment authority to direct investments into desirable economic and social projects within our own country.

May I say to members of the government that if they were true to their platforms of the past they would vote for that, because my recollection is that for some years they had a national investment board as one of the benefits they were offering to the people of Canada if the Liberal government were returned to power; but we have not heard anything about it in recent times.

Well, now, several of my colleagues will develop various aspects of this problem and I am not going to intrude on what I expect they are going to talk about. All I want to do is place my party on record as being in favour of this:

> . . . the Canadian people requires the adoption of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada.

Of course I would want something else in there to make it entirely satisfactory, such as "for all the people of Canada as individuals as well as groups of people in Canada". To that extent we favour this amendment and, of course, shall vote for it when the time comes. But again let me reiterate, if we are to have national development in the interests of all parts of Canada and of all the people of Canada, it has to be planned; it has to be directed consciously in the interests of the people of Canada, and great projects of fundamental importance to the people of Canada will have to be under public control and some under public ownership at the same time. Having said that, I am going to resume my seat.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the amendment which has been moved by the official Leader of the Opposition is so broad that if we were to take it in its entirety I think it would result in making it impossible for any hon. member to bring up and discuss any other grievance he might have in mind. It is really all-inclusive at it stands.

Mr. Knowles: The whole welfare of Canada.

Mr. Low: Yes; and for that reason I would indicate the part which we would like to discuss, at any rate, and it would be the same as that discussed by the leader of the C.C.F. party. I refer to that part of the amendment which reads:

> . . . the Canadian people requires the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada.

If the Leader of the Opposition would consent to have us concentrate attention on that portion of it, and when the vote comes have it understood that we are voting for that part, I feel that we would have better order in our talk and there would be a much better expression of opinion when we got through.

I am always glad to have these amendments brought in, Mr. Speaker, because they have the effect of concentrating the attention of hon. members on things that are very worth while, and particularly they give us a chance to express ourselves on how we feel with regard to the effect of government policy upon the development of resources.

I want to look at this whole resolution from the point of view of federal government policy, which does have a tremendous effect upon our resources, whether they are developed properly and in the interests of the people or just the reverse. It is because I feel this way that I intend in the time at my disposal this afternoon to deal with six important points of view which we have with respect to national policy. If we are going to have a policy of national development, then in my judgment it would have to consist of these six things at least. I am not thinking for one moment that my list will be all-inclusive, but at any rate these are the six items we put forward as a minimum which would have to be included. They are being suggested in the hope that the government will give careful consideration to the development of such a policy, because my judgment tells me that without this type of co-ordination, without this type of national consideration, we can never hope to get the maximum development of our resources and therefore we will always fall somewhat short of our aim to give full employment to our people and a full enjoyment of the products of their labours.

It seems to me that what is needed more than anything else at the present time is more co-ordination of federal government policies in order that one policy will not run counter to another. For example, I am thinking of the government's over-all blanket credit restriction policy. These credit restrictions have had a very detrimental effect upon the development of resources in Canada. When the government imposes over-all blanket credit restrictions without considering the whole field of fiscal and monetary matters, which would include the taxation policy, the investment policy, government spending, construction policy; unless they give careful consideration to the co-ordination of all these things in the best interests of the Canadian people, then one is going to run foul of the others and we will have a nullification of our efforts. That is what we are experiencing today.

We in this group have suggested consistently that the government set up a national financial and economic commission which will have as its purpose the co-ordination of government fiscal, monetary, investment, public works and budgeting policies which will be in the interests of the Canadian people. When you have that sort of commission guiding and advising the government you are going to have a co-ordinated effort, you are going to have well-adjusted efforts toward a maximum of development, without having such things as this blanket restriction policy which is causing such a retardation in the development of our resources.

There is a second important thing you must have, it seems to me, if we are going to experience a worth-while development of our national resources. I think the government of this country has to give consideration to a fairer and more just division of the revenue dollar among the federal, provincial and municipal governments. Most of the development of resources takes place within the provinces under the guidance of provincial governments, because under the constitution property and civil rights are given exclusively into the care of the provincial governments. But the provinces do depend to a certain degree upon their creatures the municipalities to bring along certain development projects. They depend upon them to a very large degree, but if the municipal and provincial governments are forced to come to the federal government periodically with their caps in their hands to ask for hand-outs, there is not going to be very much development.

I am thinking now in terms of large power projects and railway developments which are essential to the opening up of vast new areas, and which will in the end encourage and stimulate the development of mining and other resources. I am thinking in terms of irrigation and drainage projects and all that sort of thing, which have for their aim the fullest possible measure of economic development of our country in the interests of providing a better standard of living and increasing the strength and security of our people.

As I said, if the provincial and municipal governments have to come to the federal government with their hats in hand asking for hand-outs, then they are not going to get very far. This government has shown time and time again that when such things happen they simply have no idea of the importance of the things the provincial governments are promoting. They do not seem to have any vision with regard to the future of these things which the provincial and municipal governments are doing. As a consequence they get into their hands the control of an unjust share of the revenue dollar available in this country, which they dole out to suit their own whims. As a consequence there is a slowing down of development, there is unfair development, development is retarded in one section and accelerated in another, as has already been said. If you are going to have anything like uniformity in development you must decide on a fairer and more just division of the revenue dollar among the different levels of government. When you do that sort of thing the provincial and municipal governments will go ahead and do the job without having to wait for handouts from the government of Canada.

It seems to me there is a third important thing which ought to enter into our plans for the future economic development of this country. I think we have to make an early start on a revision of our taxation structure so as to make it possible for three important things to happen. In the first place we must make it possible for domestic industry to compete successfully with foreign industry. Thus far our taxation structure has favoured alien industry to the detriment of Canadian industry. How in the world can we ever become great, strong and secure under a system like that?

The second thing a revision of the taxation structure ought to achieve is to provide an opportunity for the average Canadian to build up savings so Canada can finance a greater share of her economic expansion and development out of Canadian funds. During the past year or two especially there has been a great deal said about the abnormal amount of money coming in from other countries for the development of Canadian resources and industry. I suppose under the circumstances and in the light of the great trade deficit we have with the United States each year it has been a godsend to have that investment coming in from the United States. No one can criticize the amount that comes in when you realize that we have a trade deficit of $1.2 billion or $1.3 billion each year with our neighbour to the south.

It seems to me that what we ought to be doing is getting at the root of our trouble. The people of this country have not been allowed thus far to build up a very substantial volume of savings out of which sufficient investment could take place to bring along our resources as they ought to be brought along.

We have to rely therefore on investment from other countries if we are going to get the development, and I say that at the earliest possible date we should examine this whole taxation structure to see what effects it has been having on individual savings and, therefore, on investments; and if we do that we shall at least make some progress. We in this group are putting forward the view that we would make the revision I have suggested, and see to it that there is opportunity for savings to be held by the Canadian public and gathered together in the aggregate to be invested in some acceptable form, as would be the case if the Canadian people did have that great aggregate of savings.

The third important thing which we feel should be achieved through the revision of the taxation structure is this. Canadian goods today are suffering a handicap in foreign markets because of the inordinate weight they carry by way of commodity taxation. The prices of many Canadian goods are forced up to the point where we cannot compete successfully with goods coming into Canada from foreign markets, or with foreign products in the markets of the world. We are bound to take this into consideration and correct it if we ever expect Canadian goods to compete successfully.

Thus our taxation review program would need to keep these three aims and objectives in mind, and I believe that if proper attention were given to these three considerations we could put Canadian producers in a far better position in this competitive world of trade than they are at the present time. Before I leave this question, Mr. Speaker, there is one other thing I would like to say. What is the use of building up our Canadian industries and developing our Canadian resources if it is going to be impossible for us to compete in world markets with the products that come from the development of these resources? It would be foolish in the extreme to think we can do anything successfully in this world of trade, even with all the materials we might have in storage, unless we make it possible for our producers to sell their goods in competition with other nations.

The fourth important matter which we must include in our national development policy, if we are going to adopt one, is this. We think it is essential, and in the interests of our country as a whole, to set up a national statistical and advisory bureau to chart, measure and record all Canadian resources including those having to do with the production of energy; and to study and advise continually—and I mean, here, to advise the provincial and municipal governments, together with those concerned with this country's production and the development of our resources—as to the most effective ways in which to preserve, utilize and, where possible, improve those resources for the benefit of all Canadians.

That is quite a comprehensive idea, Mr. Speaker, but until such time as we adopt a proposal of this kind, our progress is going to be haphazard; it is not going to be uniformly in the interests of the various provinces, and a great many things will be overlooked.

We do feel that at the present time, when our sources of energy are coming into great prominence and into great need, the bureau which I have suggested could be of special benefit to Canadians. I know that certain things are being done in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and also in the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. We know that is so, but what is being done now is only a fraction of what might be done.

Mention has been made here today of a certain great waterpower project which many people have envisaged. I think it was the Moran dam. My hon. friend from New Westminster mentioned it. I do not know how far the government has gone in its consideration of that project, but its implications are immense; it staggers the imagination when we read the figures given by reliable engineers concerning it. I am told that one of the important things holding up this scheme at the present time is the consideration of the damage it may do to the salmon fishing industry. I am told that here we have the matter of a two or three million dollar industry that is impeding and holding back a tremendous energy-producing project which would in the aggregate produce each year as much as ten or eleven times what the fisheries will produce.

I am not suggesting for one moment that we should go ahead and override the judgment of those who are interested in the fisheries. I am suggesting, however, that if we had a bureau of the type I have proposed —a national statistical and advisory bureau —they could be working continuously, on all the phases of this great project at one and the same time, and through their advice and studies they might be able to come up quickly with a solution to this fishery problem which would make it possible to go ahead and develop the Moran dam project without interfering too much with the salmon fishing. That is the kind of thing which, it seems to me, it would be very well worth while to study, and it is the kind of thing this bureau should have constantly under consideration.

There is one other matter on which I should like to say a word at this time. We have in Alberta, as has already been stated, vast areas of bituminous sand. The government of Alberta and the research council of that province have spent a great deal of time and money experimenting with the extraction of the bitumen from the sand, and they have succeeded in developing methods of doing so. However, up to the present date, perhaps, no method has been successful to a degree that would make it possible to sell the oil in competition with oil coming from oil wells.

I know the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has also done considerable work on this project, but it seems to me that all groups in Canada should be giving as much consideration as possible to the achievement of a method of extracting the oil from this sand so we can put Canada into the self-sufficient class as far as production of oil is concerned. It can be done. Not only that, but judging by the figures which are available it would be possible for us to supply completely the needs of Britain, France and other countries in western Europe, in addition to our own, out of the sands in northern Alberta for a good many years ahead. That sort of thing, it seems to me, could very well be brought under the co-ordination of such a body as the national statistical advisory bureau which I have suggested.

The fifth important thing, it seems to me, if we are going to achieve the maximum successful development of our resources in this country, is this. I think the one real shortage we have in Canada today is in the field of trained personnel. Manpower, generally, is not scarce, and as evidence of that there is quite considerable unemployment in Canada today. But in the field of trained personnel we are lagging behind.

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the hon. member permit a question? I am interested in what he has just said about a considerable amount of unemployment. That is not my information, and I wonder if the hon. member could break that down a little?

Mr. Low: Yes, I can. At the present time the lumber industry in British Columbia is in a slump and there is quite a sizeable unemployment problem. The hon. member for New Westminster reports that there are 10,000 lumber workers unemployed in the city of New Westminster alone, the largest number in the history of the city. I just received today from Windsor, Ontario, a letter from one of the unions in the automobile industry complaining that they have not had so much unemployment for quite a long time as they find in that area now. So it goes in quite a number of areas across Canada. There is a considerable amount of unemployment in the general labour field.

But certainly no one can make that statement successfully in the field of technically trained personnel. What we do need there is a stepped-up, accelerated program of training of technical personnel. To this end we must be prepared to increase our bursaries, scholarships and so on in order to induce young people to go on and take training to the extent that we will have a bank of personnel sufficient to take care of the needs of the future. We believe that should be included in any national program that has for its aim the maximum development of our resources.

Finally, we will have to give a whole lot more attention to transportation and communications. I have been keenly interested in the development of our northern area, because I have had enough information on which to build a faith that this great northern area is extremely rich in resources that in time will contribute to the strength and security of this great country and the higher living standards of the Canadian people. But it is no use just leaving them there undeveloped. We must take positive steps now to see to it that wherever minerals are found, wherever any great resource exists in that north country, we stimulate development, and it seems to me that one of the methods of stimulating is to provide adequate transportation so that people will be induced to go in and develop these resources with some decent chance of being able to market their products at a reasonable price. To do that they have to have transportation.

I have in mind, for instance, the very large fields just south of Great Slave lake in the Northwest Territories, not very far from the northern boundary of Alberta, where in recent years prospectors have discovered vast areas of base metals. It is estimated by the best technical brains we have in our country that there are no less than 60 million tons of high grade ore that can be mined in that area by open cut methods, which means that you do not have to go to the great cost of sending down deep shafts. You simply remove the overburden with drag-line steam-shovels, blast the stuff up and move it to the smelters and refineries. If that base metal field is to be developed properly transportation facilities must be provided.

It would require approximately 300 miles of railway construction to put a rail line in there from Grimshaw, Alberta. If a rail line were built I do not think there is any question but that the development of the field would go ahead; and not only that, it would stimulate further exploration and development in the area where there is every evidence that minerals of all kinds away beyond present imagination would be found. That sort of thing has to be; but if you are going to get the development you have to provide the transportation first and not have transportation follow development. Somehow or other the railways seem to have got into the state of mind where they feel that development has to come first and be carried to the point where the railways will be guaranteed the full return of their costs right from the day they start running into the area. Where is their pioneering instinct?

It seems to me that the federal government through its various branches could give a great stimulus to the development of these resources in the far-flung areas of Canada by helping a little more in the development of transportation. When the province of British Columbia wanted to extend the Pacific Great Eastern Railway into the Peace river block and link it up with the Northern Alberta Railways in that great block they had to come to the government of Canada to see if they could get some help. Here was an example of having to come to the senior government cap in hand.

The government of Canada, to be fair and honest, did give them some consideration. They gave them a subsidy of so much per mile for a limited number of miles, but it was not anything like what was necessary to complete the development or to make it possible for the government of British Columbia to build a railway sufficiently far into the north to tap all the resources that are available there. Therefore the government of British Columbia has had to go and borrow money. Things like that, Mr. Speaker, where a provincial government has to come to the federal government for aid and then only gets a fraction of what is required to do the job, cannot possibly contribute very much to the kind of thing we envisage here, the optimum development of our resources in the interests of the people.

Therefore I think we should adopt a national policy with these six important features; perhaps others, but these six anyway. To recapitulate, they are a national finance and economic commission to coordinate government fiscal, monetary, investment, public works and budgetary policies in the interests of all our people; a fair and more just division of the revenue dollar among the federal, provincial and municipal governments; the revision of our taxation structure; the establishment of a national statistical and advisory bureau that would chart, measure and record all Canadian resources, including those having to do with the production of energy; the training of adequate personnel so we would have sufficient to call upon in our developmental efforts, and better transportation facilities, especially into those areas that are somewhat isolated from the centres of population.

I believe, as I say, that if we were to adopt a policy involving at least these six important features we would then have a national policy that would be successful in doing the job envisioned by the Leader of the Opposition. Before I sit down I want to say that we support that part of the amendment which, as I indicated earlier, has to do with resources development.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in advancing this amendment today the members of the Conservative party are doing so because we believe very sincerely that it sets out what should be the long-term policy for the development of Canadian resources. On this issue there is a basic difference between the thinking of the government and our thinking, and first of all I propose to read the amendment. It advocates:

[Mr. Low.]

> . . . that the welfare of the Canadian people requires the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada, encourage more processing of those resources in Canada, correct the present serious unfavourable trade balances, foster wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of our resources, and promote greater opportunity and employment for a steadily increasing population.

Let us now look at the policy of the Liberal party in this regard. Government policy since the war has been in the first place to concentrate on trying to promote trade with the United States. Right through that picture this government has tried to put all Canada's trading eggs in the one basket. In the second place, its policy has been essentially to export raw materials, or materials which have been semi-processed, and to import manufactured goods.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that continues to be the policy of the Liberal party today. I have good authority for my statement, namely the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On December 3 of 1956 he spoke to the Women's Canadian Club in Montreal reporting on his trip to Japan. In the course of that speech he had this to say:

> But, as you know, Canada finds it economical to produce large surpluses of raw materials and foodstuffs with which to pay for the large quantities of imported produce and manufactured goods.

Then he also had this to say. He was telling these ladies what he had advised the Japanese. He said:

> I pointed out to them that Canada is the largest import market in the world for manufactured goods . . .

Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives have not the slightest ambition to make Canada the largest import market in the world for manufactured goods. We believe that Canada should be manufacturing far more of her own goods than she is manufacturing today. But here you have the responsible minister boasting of the fact that Canada is the largest import market in the world for manufactured goods.

Mr. Byrne: After all, he is the minister of trade.

Mr. Green: Perhaps my good friend the hon. member for Kootenay East will pay attention to what the Canadian Labour Congress have to say if he will not listen to me. No wonder that in their brief presented to the government of Canada on January 23 of this year they had this to say:

> . . . we question whether it is necessary and desirable for Canada to have to import $3,600 million worth of fully or chiefly manufactured goods as we did in 1955. We ask the government to give careful and active consideration to this question. We think that encouragement should be given to the development of secondary industry in Canada.

Why should they not think that? It means jobs if secondary industry is developed in Canada. The result of Liberal policies since the second war is now becoming clear. The government has been leading Canada steadily into greater dependence on the United States in the economic field, just as the government has been leading Canada into dependence on the United States in the field of external affairs.

Mr. Speaker, may I suggest this afternoon that now is the time when it is vital for Canadians to face this question of the use of their resources. I say that for several reasons. One is that since the war there has been a great increase in new discoveries of resources in Canada. By the way, I may say that those discoveries were made without the government being able to claim any great credit for them. I refer, for example, to oil, natural gas, iron ore, uranium, titanium and many others. The last ten years has been the greatest period in Canada's history for the discovery of new resources. It is therefore far more important now than it ever was previously—and goodness knows it was always extremely important in Canada—for us to decide how these resources are to be used.

Again, the United States in the same years suddenly discovered that she is running short of raw materials. That situation is caused partially by the great use made of United States natural resources during the recent war and subsequently. In any event, the United States is becoming a nation which will be short of most of the vital materials. That means there will be—and there is every day—an increasing demand by the United States for Canadian raw materials. In that regard it is worthy of note that while they need our raw materials all the more and want them all the more, they are being extremely careful not to change their fundamental policy, which is this. While they will allow raw materials from other countries into the United States so they can turn them into manufactured goods, they are extremely careful not to allow manufactured goods in from other countries such as Canada, for fear that those manufactured goods will compete with the goods produced in the United States. They are still sticking tightly to that policy which was one that built them into the great nation they are today.

Mr. Prudham: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Green: Yes.

Mr. Prudham: Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that the Steel Company of Canada is dependent for its ore supplies entirely on the United States?

Mr. Green: I am aware of the fact that the Steel Company of Canada gets quite a large portion of its iron ore from the United States. I believe it is now getting more from Canada.

Mr. Prudham: Not yet.

Mr. Green: However, that does not alter the broad picture which I have been painting and with which I think the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys will agree. If this government carries on as it has been doing; if it does not adopt a new policy with regard to natural resources, the United States is in a fair way to get the main benefit from Canada's raw materials.

This question has been highlighted by the Gordon report on Canada's economic prospects. That is an extremely important report. I remember how proud the ministers were when the setting up of this commission was announced. It was to decide what we were to do for the next 25 years. There had never been a commission like it. It was a commission to end all commissions. They were going to go to the people with the report that came from this Gordon commission, and they were going to sweep the country from coast to coast.

An hon. Member: We will.

Mr. Green: What a difference there is today. If you mention the Gordon report the chin of every one across the floor falls about an inch. The government is resentful of the report. The Minister of Trade and Commerce used a club on it last week, and the other ministers avoid it like the plague. You would think it was full of political typhus germs from the way the ministers steer clear of it. Mr. Speaker, it is a very sad thing to happen to a million dollar report. I feel extremely sorry for Mr. Gordon for the way the recommendations made by him and his fellow commissioners have been treated by the members of the cabinet. But there the report is, and it merits study by all Canadians, even though the government tries to shove it under the rug.

We believe that a national development policy must, in the first place, bring to Canadians the maximum return from their own resources. I am going to give several examples. First of all there is natural gas. We have heard at lot about natural gas in this chamber in the last eight years. Most hon. members will recall that this question first came to the fore over the piping of natural gas to the west coast. There were several groups of promoters who wanted to take gas from southern Alberta, pipe it over the boundary into southeastern British Columbia and then into the United States at the first possible practicable point, through the state of Washington to serve Spokane, Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, and then have a little stub line up to Vancouver. We would get Canadian gas after the people of the United States had had all they wanted, if there was any left.

There was another proposal that gas should be piped from the Peace river district of British Columbia down through the centre of our province to serve practically every community on the mainland. You remember, Mr. Speaker, what a row there was in the house. The Liberal members with the exception of George Cruickshank, who was then member for Fraser Valley, Jack Gibson, the member for Comox-Alberni and one or two others, were all for this plan of getting gas from southern Alberta down into the United States. My good friend the hon. member for Kootenay East was one of the main advocates of such a course. I do not blame him, because he represents that part of British Columbia. The Prime Minister flew into a rage on two or three occasions, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce got very excited. They were obviously in favour of getting these charters through which would enable the promoters to pipe gas from southern Alberta down into the United States. The Conservatives and our C.C.F. friends, on the other hand, stood firm from the start for a Canada-first policy. As a result of that stand—

Mr. Pickersgill: You nearly lost the pipeline.

Mr. Byrne: Does the hon. member know that because of the decision to pipe gas down from central British Columbia it is going to cost the people of the southern mainland about one-third more than it would have by the route proposed by the other people?

Mr. Green: If my friend's policy had been followed they would not be getting any gas, because it would have gone to Portland and Seattle.

Mr. Byrne: Would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Green: As a result of the stand taken at that time the pipe line is being laid now from the Peace river right down through the province of British Columbia, with great benefit to all that part of Canada.

Then there was the case of gas to eastern Canada. Who was it advocated a Canada-first policy in bringing gas to eastern Canada? It was not anybody on the Liberal side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Of course it was.

Mr. Green: No; again it was the Conservative and C.C.F. members who advocated that policy. The Liberals were late converts, Mr. Speaker. I have here the report of a speech by Hon. George Drew dated March 10, 1953, in which he is reported as saying:

"Let the government declare that the first interest to be served will be the interests of the Canadian people—a Canada-first policy in the use of these resources."

This was after we had advocated that course many times before that date. Finally, three days later the Minister of Trade and Commerce made an announcement that he, too, was in favour of a Canada-first policy. But even after he had changed his mind there was great worry about what he would do. In 1955, two years later, the mayors and reeves from the lakehead and from northern Ontario were worried to death for fear he was going to change the policy again and have gas go down into the United States instead of through their area. They wired for an appointment and they were turned down. They were told the minister represented the lakehead and he did not need any help from the mayors in that part of the country. Then apparently the Prime Minister intervened, and we have this dispatch dated July 19, 1955, saying they can come along and meet the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Then the dispatch continues:

Agreement by Mr. Howe to the meeting was a sharp about-face.

However, now he is apparently a convert to the Canada-first policy for natural gas to eastern Canada. We are very glad that he has seen the light on this particular question. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, we are still watching to see to what extent the Tennessee Gas Transmission Company is going to control this Trans-Canada pipe line to eastern Canada. We are glad some steps have been taken to give Canadians a chance to buy into the company. Those steps never would have been taken if it had not been for the protests made in this house by the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Green: I do suggest the Canadian people would be well advised to keep their eye on Trans-Canada pipe lines to see what the Tennessee Gas Company does.

Mr. Marler: I notice the hon. gentleman cannot help laughing when he says what he has just said.

Mr. Nowlan: It is the discomfiture on the other side of the house that makes him laugh.

Mr. Green: I notice I am getting a lot of interruptions from the other side of the house, and I have not said anything I do not sincerely mean.

Then we come to iron ore. We have huge deposits in the Quebec-Labrador area which have been opened within the last few years. I believe over 12 million tons were shipped away from Sept Iles during 1956, of which about 10 million tons went to the United States in the raw form. It was just dug out by steam shovels, put on freight cars and then dumped into the ships. It was not fabricated at all. We realize that there must be a lot of iron ore shipped out that way, but why do the government not make some attempt to have that iron ore at least partially fabricated in this country? They have not taken one step in that direction.

The former director of scientific services in the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys had something to say about that. I refer to Dr. G. S. Hume. Back in March of 1953, in the course of a speech, he had this to say:

> It is suggested as not beyond the possibilities of our research scientists to find ways and means in Canada to utilize electric power and iron ore occurring together in the same area to at least effect a partial processing which would be of immense benefit to this country. The Ontario research foundation has been doing excellent work on the study of iron and our mines branch at Ottawa has a number of scientists well versed in the technology of treatment of all kinds of ores. Thus well directed efforts might accomplish much toward reducing our iron ore to the metal before shipment outside Canada . . .

Another example is found in British Columbia. Some of us have been pointing out to the Minister of Trade and Commerce for several years that iron ore is not found there in large quantities, as yet in any event, yet there have been shipments of several million tons in the raw state to Japan. This policy makes it that much more difficult to establish a steel industry on the west coast. The minister has replied that he could not do anything about that.

If the government had wished to do so it could have taken steps to control the export of that iron ore. Now it looks as though, with the help of the Japanese, something is going to be done. The Japanese are saying, why don't you turn that ore into pig iron? Japan wants pig iron now instead of the iron ore, but there has been no move by this government to further the processing of that ore in Canada. Zinc and lead in New Brunswick are another example. There we have large deposits of tremendous importance to that province, yet it looks as though all that ore will be merely dug up and then shipped away to the United States to be smelted.

Mr. Winters: Not as ore.

Mr. Green: It certainly will not be smelted in New Brunswick unless this government wakes up and does something to assist the province of New Brunswick in getting the necessary power. If the government would enter into a joint investment program with New Brunswick for the development of power on the Saint John river, I believe it would be possible to establish a smelter in that province to smelt those ores.

I really do not see, Mr. Speaker, how anyone can quarrel with a policy which insists that every effort must be made to manufacture our own raw materials in Canada. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce dealt with that in their policy declarations for 1956-57. Let me read:

> The Canadian Chamber of Commerce believes that such policies must recognize
> (1) The primary interest of Canadians in the development of Canadian natural resources.
> (2) That the greater extent to which these resources are refined or converted within the country, the greater the return to the Canadian economy.

The Gordon report made recommendations with that in mind. I shall not read again the paragraph on page 48 of the report, which was read by the Leader of the Opposition, but it goes so far as to suggest that the government might institute a system of export permits for the export of certain raw materials from Canada, making it a condition of the permit that there would be certain processing done within our country. That shows how important this problem is to Canada today, not 50 years from now; yet the government does not show the slightest interest in adopting a policy of that kind.

Then we believe that a national development policy must correct the serious unfavourable trade balance. You know, Mr. Speaker, the unfavourable trade balance in 1956 was really something. The over-all trade deficit with all nations amounted to $848,-800,000. The highest it had ever been before in the history of the country was $361,100,000 in 1955. In 1956 it was more than double that amount. With the United States the unfavourable trade balance amounted to over $100 million a month. The total was $1,290,100,000. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce was questioned about it last week he had this to say, as reported at page 967 of Hansard:

> There is an over-all trade deficit which is due wholly to the present abnormal rate of capital investment . . .

That was just an evasion, just a case of trying to cover up the situation with a statement so far removed from the actual facts that it really does not merit consideration. Last year when the minister was criticized for an unfavourable trade balance with the United States he made the excuse—and I am referring to page 5797 of Hansard—that oh, we were getting in a lot of material and equipment with which we were going to be able to manufacture goods, and then we would not have to buy manufactured goods any more from the United States. He left the impression that the situation would be much better this year. What is the actual result? The result is—

Mr. Harris: The greatest production we have ever had.

Mr. Green: —the biggest deficit with the United States we have ever had, infinitely bigger than it was last year, and it will probably be a good deal worse in 1957. And yet this government does not give the slightest indication of doing anything about it. We export our raw materials and our semi-processed goods, Mr. Speaker, and we continue to import largely manufactured goods. At some time this has to stop or we shall be entirely dependent on and in the hands of the United States.

We have suggested on this side as a remedy that there should be a commonwealth trade conference, having in mind that we would get more of our trade spread out among the members of the commonwealth rather than concentrating it almost entirely in the United States market. It would give us a better chance to sell our foodstuffs and certainly our manufactured goods.

Then I believe more encouragement should be given to the secondary manufacturing industries in Canada. The Gordon commission went into that very thoroughly, and I imagine this is one of the chapters that the members of the cabinet hesitate to read. Mr. Gordon and his associates set out clearly what is happening. They say:

> Our secondary manufacturing industries sell most of their products on the domestic market; in 1955 only 6 per cent of the total output was exported. The main reason for this is the tariff and restrictive commercial policies of foreign countries.

This is particularly true of the United States whose tariffs, the report says, are in general much higher on manufactured goods than on raw or semi-processed materials. Yet in Canada these secondary manufacturing industries are finding their keenest competition coming from the United States. Here we have an industry which employs 20 per cent of the Canadian civilian labour force. In 1955 it employed 1,050,000 persons, and in that year it produced 22 per cent of our total net output. At page 66 the report says:

> The future growth of secondary manufacturing industry in Canada will depend largely upon the size of the domestic market for its products and the share of that market which Canadian manufacturers are able to obtain. Exports will probably be of even less importance than in the past unless important changes take place in the commercial policies of other countries.

The commission goes on to recommend—this will be of interest to the Minister of Finance—two things. The first is that the industry be given the privilege of writing off over a very short period their capital investment in buildings, in machinery and in equipment, which the commission points out would be a most useful and effective incentive for reducing costs and increasing the ability of secondary manufacturing industries to compete successfully with imported products.

They make another recommendation that the government and other large bodies such as railways should make a practice of discussing their prospective requirement and their capital expenditure programs with their principal suppliers well in advance, so there could be a more efficient spacing of production, leading to lower production costs; and they instance freight cars. These appear to be practical suggestions, and I do not see why the government should not take some steps to implement such recommendations; but as yet no action by the government is indicated.

It is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF VISIT TO CANADA BY PREMIER MOLLET OF FRANCE

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, may I ask leave to revert to motions for just one minute?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I should like to inform the house that Premier Mollet of France has accepted the invitation of the Canadian government to visit Canada after his conference with President Eisenhower in Washington, which will probably be toward the end of this month. I have not yet ascertained just exactly on what date he will be visiting Ottawa, but as soon as it is ascertained I will inform hon. members.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): That is very good news, but I suggest that the Prime Minister endeavour to arrange for Premier Mollet to address the House of Commons and the Senate, as has been done on former occasions.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): That will receive consideration, but I do not expect that his visit here will be of very long duration and some of these visits have come at week ends, as hon. members know. When the exact date of his visit has been fixed we will see what arrangements can be made so that all hon. members may have an opportunity of meeting him and possibly of hearing him.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker.

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF NATURAL RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT POLICY

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, before the house rose at six o'clock I had been pointing out some of the things we Conservatives believe a national development policy must do. One was that it must bring Canadians a maximum return from their natural resources and, second, that it must correct the present serious unfavourable trade balances and particularly the unfavourable trade balance with the United States.

This evening I would like to go on to deal with something else such a policy must do. We believe it must foster a wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of their own resources. After all, this involves the control of our own Canadian natural resources, and this country cannot afford to have such resources controlled from head offices in the United States.

This problem arises because of the very strong United States influence in our resource and manufacturing industries. That is pointed out at page 88 of the Gordon commission report, as follows:

> The more important Canadian industries in which a relatively few companies controlled by non-residents have a dominating influence include the oil and the gas industry, some sections of the mining, smelting and refining industry (including in particular, nickel, iron ore, aluminum and asbestos) some sections of the chemical industry and at least three of the more important secondary manufacturing industries, namely, automobiles, electrical apparatus and supplies, and rubber products.

The Gordon report goes on to make certain recommendations. For example, it recommends certain objectives as being desirable for foreign firms operating in Canada, such as, for example, the employment of Canadians in senior management and technical positions, the purchasing of supplies, materials and equipment in Canada, the publishing of financial statements, and the full disclosure of their Canadian operations. In addition it recommends that the larger Canadian subsidiaries should sell an appreciable proportion—perhaps 20 to 25 per cent—of their equity stock to Canadian investors, and should include on their boards of directors a number of independent Canadians.

Then the report goes on to recommend ways in which all this can be brought about. Perhaps the Minister of Finance would be interested in these recommendations of the Gordon commission. They recommend certain tax concessions at page 91, and they say:

> These suggestions for new and special tax concessions were put forward primarily with the object of assisting Canadian companies and Canadian businesses to compete successfully with their much larger competitors in other countries whose financial resources and research facilities in many cases far surpass what is available in this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here is the part of the proposal which would help remedy the situation to which I have referred.

> With this in mind, and if these suggestions for new and special tax concessions are accepted, it might not be unreasonable in the opinion of the commission, to make them conditional in their application to foreign-owned Canadian subsidiaries upon such companies, and more particularly the large or well-established ones, selling some part of their equity stock to Canadians and appointing independent Canadians to their boards of directors.

Then the report makes a further suggestion that it might be possible to charge a higher rate of withholding tax on dividends paid to United States residents by Canadian companies unless an appreciable percentage of the equity stock of such companies is held by Canadian investors.

These seem to be reasonable suggestions, and we would like to know what the government intends to do about them. I have been very much impressed by a pamphlet which was distributed to us all late last week by the Empire Trust Company of New York. It is entitled, "Observations on the Gordon Commission Recommendations Concerning United States Investment in Canada" and the situation is summed up very accurately, Mr. Speaker, in a paragraph on page 6 which reads as follows:

> In the opinion of many Canadians, however, there comes a point where the "continentalization" of the North American economy in many ways implied by the attitude of the U.S. corporation runs counter to the best interest of Canada. While many of the arguments against the "continental economy" approach may be described as nine parts emotionalism and one part fact—

—this is an American summary—

> —there is one that is irrefutable—the conflict in respect of the development of Canadian resources that may well arise between the objectives of the U.S. parent and those of the Canadian authorities.

Certainly there is a problem here to be met. Last year the Minister of Trade and Commerce scoffed at the suggestion that there was anything wrong with the way Canadian resources were being exploited by foreign concerns. But then, after the house rose, he made a speech to American businessmen which was really a repetition of the points raised by Hon. Mr. Drew last session and repeated today by the present Leader of the Opposition. I would like to read to the house a comment in the Victoria daily Colonist concerning the visit made by the minister to Chicago:

> Rather like an elderly ram addressing an audience of wolves, C. D. Howe asks American industrialists to be kind to Canada.
> He travelled to Chicago recently and pleaded with United States corporations to allow Canadians a bigger share in Canadian resources.
> He thus became the first Canadian minister of state to enter a foreign country with hat in hand, and mildly suggest that foreign industrialists let us keep some of Canada for ourselves.

This question cannot be shrugged off. It has to be faced. But this session, unfortunately, the government does not appear to be lifting one little finger to deal with it. Mr. Speaker, the indifference of the government to this problem of processing more of our natural resources in Canada, to our unfavourable trade balance and to the need for encouraging the wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of their own resources, and the complacency of the government with regard to the whole situation is leading Canada into a position of economic colonialism vis-a-vis the United States.

We believe that Canada can be one of the great nations of the world in her own right, but only by adopting without further delay a national development policy of the type suggested in our amendment.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the debate so far with a great deal of interest, and I have been looking at this amendment for the last few hours, forming my own opinions as to whether it can be implemented or otherwise.

The language of the amendment is, of course, all right. There is nothing wrong with it. And, as other speakers have pointed out, the main part of the amendment concerns the development of a national policy to exploit our own natural resources.

If I were a newcomer in the house and did not know the background of farming out our resources I would be inclined to go along with the arguments I have been listening to; but having been here for some considerable time, having taken part in similar discussions over the years and, in fact, having initiated discussions of this kind by resolution and in other ways, I think the arguments being advanced at this time are a little bit late and rather impractical, to say the least.

During the course of presenting his arguments leading up to the amendment the Leader of the Opposition made it quite clear that the national development policy he advocates must be brought about within the ambit of free enterprise. I said a moment ago that I consider the proposition impractical in the light of the circumstances surrounding the development of our resources today. For a start I should like to ask him how he proposes to get co-operation from the headquarters of the large United States organizations, located mainly in New York city, which have secured certain rights under leases granted particularly by the legislatures of this country. How is he going to bring these companies into a partnership that would help to develop the resources of Canada which they have today under lease?

Second, I should like to point out this fact. When we ask the federal government to implement a Canada-wide national development program we should remember that the resources of the country are in the hands of the provinces and the federal government has no authority under the British North America Act, unless we want to change it, to go into the provinces and do anything with respect to the development of resources.

Third, I should like to make this point. I said a moment ago that this debate was rather late, and I say that for the reason that in the development of pipe lines for natural gas and oil in this country the first five master bills were brought into the house in 1949. At that time we put forward all the arguments that were made this afternoon with respect to farming out our resources to United States interests. We not only made those arguments as far back as 1949 and 1951 particularly, but we also moved motions in the house that these pipe lines should be designated as common carriers so as to keep at least the main valves of the pipe lines in Canada instead of in the United States.

We did not get very much support in the house except from members of our own group. That development is finished. The policy with respect to that resource has been decided not only by the federal government with respect to the question of a common carrier but by the provinces that are developing natural gas and oil.

When we come to iron ore resources we are also a bit late, for the simple reason that when these resources were farmed out in the first place it was the governments of Quebec and Newfoundland which gave the exploration companies leases over a period of years to explore and develop. But when the application came before the house for a franchise to build a railroad into northern Quebec, and there were a lot of other concessions along with it, again I and other members of this group pointed out that these exploration companies with Canadian names that were getting the franchise were merely a front for large United States interests such as M. A. Hanna Company, the National Steel Company and others who were getting the iron ore resources and the franchise for the railroad to exploit the ore in Ungava and Labrador.

We suggested at that time that the bill to grant the railway franchise should be sent back to a committee so its implications could be studied. We also suggested that the federal government should hold at least 51 per cent of the shares in that development in the right of the Canadian people if risk capital could not be found in Canada to hold at least some of the shares for the Canadian people. We were not supported then. I suggest to my hon. friend that the time to decide about holding these resources is when legislation is going through the house and through the legislatures of the provinces for the purpose of farming them out. We pointed out particularly with respect to the iron ore resources that the future of North America depends on steel. It runs all through our economy. The section of North America that controls the iron ore resources of Ungava and Newfoundland will be able to place in the hands of the government of that section the future development of North America.

Not much attention was paid to those arguments, and today the legislation is there. To get the kind of national development suggested by the Leader of the Opposition it would be necessary to abrogate those agreements and it would be necessary to get the provincial governments to go along with the abrogation. It is all right to move this kind of amendment, but as far as I am concerned I should like to remain within the realm of the things we can do rather than suggest things that I am pretty sure are practically impossible today.

To say that the federal government should enter upon a national development program also presupposes that the government should set up a fund for the purpose of developing our resources where risk capital cannot be found, and unless the fund goes along with such a development policy it will not be very successful. The government will also have to have the power to enforce such a policy, something they have not got at the present time with the exception of the power to make public works available, and so forth. But I am afraid I cannot see how this particular piece of machinery could be put to work, because all the things that are presupposed in the amendment have already been decided by acts of parliament and of the legislatures. That is something that will be pretty hard to undo.

Mr. Nowlan: Nonsense.

Mr. Gillis: All right, you tell me when you get up.

Mr. Nowlan: I will.

Mr. Gillis: How are you going to get control of the pipe line?

Mr. Nowlan: I never knew you to be a defeatist before.

Mr. Gillis: I am stating facts. I am not playing politics. Before I am through I am going to tell the government some things they can do.

Mr. Nowlan: That is good. Go ahead and do that.

Mr. Gillis: But do not try to fool us with this kind of hogwash. Our iron ore resources and the pipe lines carrying gas and oil were farmed out to United States interests with the acquiescence of my hon. friends the Tories. Then the St. Lawrence seaway project came along, a project that just means the development of hydro power in central Canada as far as I am concerned, and in addition the provision of a seaway for the Americans to haul the iron ore up the lakes.

Mr. Knight: In American boats.

Mr. Gillis: I was the only person in the house who rose and protested along the lines suggested here this afternoon, namely that any large public investment made by the people of Canada through the taxpayers' money should at least bring some results to other sections of the country. But today, of course, everybody can see what the implications of these things are going to be.

I am just mentioning these few points in order to bring this discussion back into the realm of realism and to face facts as they are. As far as I am concerned, I am prepared to give the federal government the powers to do the kind of job suggested in this particular resolution. If my hon. friends are prepared to do that, they should say so. But if it is merely a matter of talking about it and advancing a great many nice words, telling a nice story that can be publicized across the country without any possibility of bringing that particular program into effect, that is another matter. That program is needed, but we are just about ten years too late in going after it.

This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition talked about the development of a national energy board; and of course, being a good politician, he said that idea came from his particular party, that the late Gordon Graydon advocated it in 1951 and Mr. Drew in 1953. The hon. member has been in this house as long as I have, and he will recall that I initiated discussions on that particular question as far back as 1941 and that I moved a motion in this house on April 17, 1946, not only advocating that national energy policy but setting out the mechanics that should be used in bringing it about. That was before the setting up of the dominion coal board as it exists today.

I am mentioning that fact just in order to keep the record straight. I have always had the opinion that in this world you can get anything you want provided you do not care who gets the credit for it. If the Leader of the Opposition had not raised that matter this afternoon and obviously pinpointed it in order to lead people to believe that any of these ideas had come from just one source, I would not have mentioned it. But I am setting the record straight by telling him that from a time going back to 1941 I have been advocating a national fuel board and a national energy policy in this house.

I am glad to see that we are making progress in that field, and I am glad to see there are some people in the government somewhere who have the good judgment to pick up things, no matter from where they come. I am reasonably sure that within the foreseeable future—maybe before this house closes—you will have an announcement that the kind of thing you are advocating by way of a national energy policy will be brought into being. I think that a departmental committee that has been sitting for several years now within the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has gathered just about all the information and data necessary to bring about that national energy board; and I want to say that it is badly needed.

A moment ago I said I was going to tell the government some things that I thought they could do. One of those things is the setting up of that board. They can do that. It is within the power of this government. But whether or not this government has the authority to do the kind of job that board should do remains to be seen. That will depend largely on the provinces also.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the hon. member place the resolution before the house? I refer to the one he mentioned. Was it on a fuel policy?

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. Gillis: A national fuel policy. The field has broadened since then. You now have oil in it and you have atomic energy. I said I was doubtful whether the kind of board that is visualized will have the authority to do the kind of job it should do. The Leader of the Opposition suggested that, with the mechanics of confederation as they are today, with control of fuel in the hands of the provinces, it is going to be necessary to deal with the provinces on the question of a national fuel board. They are going to have a big say in it. The companies which have the resources leased out today and can develop them or not, just as they see fit, still have them leased from a provincial government and not from the federal government. If that board is just going to be the kind of board that can suggest and plead, without any power of regulation, then I think that board is not going to perform the function it should perform.

When I talk about energy I am particularly interested in the energy that is produced in my own province. I am particularly interested in it because that energy—I refer to the coal industry—is the main base for the whole economy of that province. That industry is in fairly bad shape today, and in my opinion it requires some other body to bring some planning and some sanity to the management of it, if it is to survive.

In the last report of the dominion coal board—if any one wants to look this up it may be found at page 12—it is definitely suggested that the coal industry of that province is in bad shape. Of course the federal government has made money available for mechanization purposes and so forth. That was several years ago. During that period that action has not improved the industry very much. There has been the closing of several mines, with consequent unemployment. There have been five major disasters and several fires. I sometimes think that perhaps in the rush to secure production where it is not possible, the safety factor in those mines is being lowered to a point beyond that at which it should be maintained.

That is, of course, a matter that is in the hands of the provincial governments; but to date, in my judgment, they have not made a very good job of it. Whether or not the production targets that are being set by that industry can be met is something that remains to be seen. Most people in this house who have heard the matter discussed, particularly the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, will recall that back four or five years ago it was said to be just a matter of mechanizing these mines, and that was to bring about the millenium as far as coal was concerned. That has been done.

After that was done it was a question of markets. It was said there were not sufficient markets. Something has been done about markets. As far as the operating company is concerned, my opinion is that over the last year they could not supply the market that was available to them within somewhere about a million tons of coal. So the question of markets is not there. It is nearly time somebody began to find out who is fooling whom as far as that industry is concerned. The federal government has a stake in it by way of subventions and so on. In fact they have kept it breathing over the last number of years.

I look at the newspapers and I pick up clipping after clipping just since we came back to this house. The town of Westville is becoming another ghost town. The mine is closed. Coal mining in that area of Pictou county has been wiped out. There just is not any more. Something will have to be done for that particular community.

As I said before, these leases are farmed out by the provincial governments to big companies. When one big company dominates the life of any town or city in which it operates, you are in trouble. All they have to do to keep you in line is to say, "We will close up." They are using that threat at every opportunity.

I have received a resolution from the people of Westville saying that the lease of the company in that area should be broken so some other operator might be given a chance to come in there. Then you pick up press clippings—you can get them by the dozen, and I do not want to bother the house by reading them—saying that coal dealers complain supplies are not available right in that area. Local, domestic coal cannot be supplied. Press clippings indicate that there is difficulty in getting coal right in the area represented by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, an area in which coal is produced and where they are closing the mine, holding leases and preventing any other operator from operating the mines.

I hope when this national energy board is set up it will have competent personnel who can look into that particular angle of the matter. They could ascertain whether or not the people who are managing the industry are managing it in the best interests of the people who have to make a living there and in the best interests of the community, and whether or not the industry is pulling its economic weight in the whole national picture. The members of the board should be able to sit down and iron out the kinks that exist in the fuel industry, because that industry has to measure up to and meet the competition that comes from Alberta oil. It is not in a position to do that today.

The Gordon commission's report recommended that the whole question of subventions should be investigated. They suggest that the subventions now paid for the movement of coal into Ontario and Quebec should be revamped so they would apply to coal that is marketed in the Atlantic area. Well, water-borne coal is now receiving a subvention of around 88 cents a ton moving from Atlantic ports into Montreal. I leave that thought with the minister. I am not going to argue about it, because if press reports are correct this company cannot supply the coal markets it has at the present time. If that is true, then the answer would not seem to be in subventions, the answer would seem to be in production. Of course production is the company's responsibility. Whether or not they are going at the thing in a way that will get that production is not for me to say; that is for the mine workers to say.

I might point out to the house that the mine workers employed by Dosco are patient and long suffering. They have not had a wage increase in the past three years, yet the wages in practically every other industry in this country have been going up and up. They see the steel plant alongside of them with 4,500 men working for the same company, and their wages have gone up over the years as well as increases in fringe benefits. The mine workers have had no improvement in their wages or their fringe benefits. Negotiations are under way now with the mine workers. A second conciliation board is trying to iron out the difficulty. Judging from all the conflicting reports one sees I am rather doubtful whether anything is going to come out of it. I feel the federal government has some responsibility in the matter because of the enormous amount of money they put into the industry by way of subsidies and subventions.

I hope when this national energy board is set up, and I believe it will be set up, it will have some authority to speak to the provincial people about the management of the resources that belong to the people of that province. Most people seem to forget that when a company takes a lease on resources in any part of the country the company has a right to do what it likes with those resources. However, those resources still belong to the people, and the particular provincial government farming out those resources is the custodian of them and is answerable to the people for the way in which the resources are exploited. In Nova Scotia they are not doing a very good job of exploiting coal.

Now, with respect to this question concerning the formation of big companies—this is the question of fuel again—I may say that we seem to think once we get a pipe line piping gas into a town or city or pumping oil we are going to have cheap fuel. We forget that as long as there is competition the price will be kept down, but just as soon as the oil company gets control in a certain area and no other fuel is available, they will put the gun to you. As proof of that I am just going to read a few extracts from a letter I have from Langley Greenhouses Limited at Langley Prairie, British Columbia. This is signed by the president of the company. I am not going to read all of it, but it says:

> In this connection we beg to advise you that during the past 12 months the oil companies have advanced their prices to us for fuel oil by approximately 20 per cent. This is for pickup at the refinery by tank truck. As our fuel oil costs us from twenty to twenty-four thousand dollars per annum the increase amounts to a considerable sum which we have to absorb in our operations.
> When the Trans Mountain pipe line was completed we believed it would reduce our fuel costs, instead of this large increase. Our suppliers have been Imperial Oil Limited; their net earnings last year were $69,100,000, a net profit increase of 11.3 per cent over 1955, and we believe it would be difficult for them to justify the large increase in oil prices.

This company believed that when the Trans Mountain pipe line went in there they were going to get cheap fuel. Once the other form of energy was eliminated oil prices began to rise. This is the trouble with having all your eggs in one basket. The same factors will apply equally to natural gas. Anyone who thinks he is going to get cheap gas in Montreal or Toronto once the competition of other forms of energy has been eliminated is going to be in for a rude awakening.

Mr. Hahn: They still sell coal there. I buy it myself.

Mr. Gillis: You will be able to answer later. You can make a speech. If you want to defend Imperial Oil, that is for you to say.

Mr. Hahn: I do not want to defend them, but there is still coal there.

Mr. Gillis: Once they eliminate competition you are at the mercy of the company. I had a call from a small industrialist in Toronto who went over to oil on the assumption that it was going to be cheap. He inquired of me where he could place an order for Nova Scotia coal for power purposes. He had switched over to oil and it was now so expensive he had to get out of it. I am merely suggesting that this whole fuel question has to be looked at rather carefully. You can pick out examples from newspapers in the United States and Canada where gas lines have broken, something went wrong with one of their manufacturing plants, and they had to move the people out of their homes and find homes that were not heated with gas in which they could put those people until repairs were made. All these hazards will have to be faced, particularly with a line coming down from Alberta to the province of Quebec.

I am sorry the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is retiring from his post after this parliament. You know, you just get these fellows trained and they leave you. The minister has been doing a good job. I hope before he leaves the department he will leave as a monument to himself a national energy board to iron out the many kinks in connection with fuel at the present time and in the future.

I think one of the main problems in this country is the decentralization of industry. I believe the province of Ontario is in trouble now and will be in a lot more trouble within the next few years because of overdevelopment. In talking to the mayors of Canada a few years ago Mr. Frost said, without any equivocation, that all this additional development in the province was raising terrific problems in the municipalities with respect to schools and all the rest of it.

This is pretty well supported in an editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Journal on February 6. In a speech made by one of Mr. Frost's chief lieutenants in the legislature he pointed out the financial difficulties facing the province. He said the province had a $45 million deficit last year, and that the debt to date was around $700 million. He went on to point out the additional expenditures anticipated in the next few years, and finished up by saying that unless more help was forthcoming from Ottawa the province of Ontario would have to impose extra taxes, corporation taxes and perhaps go into the income tax field as well.

I suggest that the answer to the problems of Ontario is decentralization of industry. Decentralization of industry will help Mr. Frost considerably. Many of the industries that are being set up today in this province could be farmed out to other sections of the country, and that applies particularly to secondary industries. There is lots of room for them in the maritimes. Don't let anybody tell you there is any shortage of power in Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia can supply power to any industry that wishes to come in there. This is not my statement; it is the statement of the Atlantic provinces economic council, which has been doing research over the past several years.

Decentralization would relieve this province of some of its difficulties. As someone said this afternoon, this country would be very vulnerable in time of war. Two or three well-placed atomic bombs would put us in the position where nothing would be moving in Canada at all. As the editorial clearly points out, the financial difficulties of this province arise from having to farm money out to municipalities for all kinds of services. This province is going ahead too fast. The services that are being created for new people coming in, for new industries being set up and for industry being expanded, are putting a load on the provincial government and the municipalities they are not going to be able to carry. That is particularly true of the municipalities.

I think the federal government should take another look at the Maritime Freight Rates Act. They say they are doing it. I hope they are, because transportation costs are one of the biggest factors that militate against the establishment of subsidiary industry in the maritime provinces. I think they should overhaul the tariff schedules to find out what tariffs are militating against the outlying sections of the country. I think they will find a lot of revisions could be made in tariff schedules to help both the east and the west, particularly in those tariff schedules which are designed merely to protect central Canadian manufacturers.

I believe the federal government would be well advised to ascertain the possibilities of setting up a national development board. They should find out what the mechanics are, and what co-operation they can get from the provinces. But, in addition to that, there has to be a national investment fund to make capital available to sections of the country where risk capital cannot be found, and risk capital cannot be found today to develop anything in the maritimes. What development is going on in the maritimes they are trying to do themselves. I might say they are not getting very much help.

I hope the Minister of Public Works will remember a letter I wrote him a short time ago on behalf of a small section of one community which is endeavouring to create an industry. They cannot create that industry unless the minister's department builds a breakwater or provides anchorage for the ships or small boats they intend to use in a fishing and canning endeavour. They are working on it themselves and are getting it done by local capital.

I know the minister is going to put something in the supplementary estimates for that particular development. It is a co-operative development. This is one way by which the federal government can help in creating industry where local capital is being found for the development. The Atlantic provinces economic council has all the machinery there. If the minister can find some money for them they can farm it out. They are finding local capital to develop some small industries, particularly in the Cape Breton area.

The four things I have mentioned are practical suggestions. They are within the powers of the federal government. The government can overhaul their tariff schedules. Their experts can tell them what tariffs are impeding the progress of the outlying sections of the country. The government can set up a national energy board and do a good job within the limitations of the federal government with respect to the resources of the provinces. They can think about a national development program and the finding of the money necessary to assist in the provinces, where people are endeavouring to establish something for themselves.

Mr. B. R. Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words tonight on the amendment to the motion to go into supply. I would like to relate my remarks concerning the amendment to the constituency of Cariboo, where we have possibly a great deal more in the way of natural resources than most people realize. Accordingly, it is my opinion that the development of those natural resources depends to a greater extent on transportation facilities than on anything else. If we have not the transportation facilities in connection with the development of natural resources we just do not get the development.

The provincial government, of course, is providing an outlet from the great Peace river area in the form of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, which is going to be of great help to those who are looking for the great development that is to take place in that part of the country. We have, of course, been advocating the recognition of this development by the federal government in the way of construction grants.

The federal government has offered a grant of $25,000 a mile for 50 miles of construction. I have a feeling that in the not too distant future another look will be taken at this situation, and the results of the development going on in this part of the province will show that further construction grants are most desirable from the federal point of view.

Development is taking place in Cariboo riding as in other parts of Canada, and this does give a broader tax field to the provincial and federal governments. With the broadening of that tax field it is only reasonable that the federal government, benefiting as it does from that broadening tax base, should consider granting assistance in the development that is taking place.

It is necessary to develop within any area a climate attractive to capital investment. If we are going to have the development of our natural resources we must create a climate which will bring about the capital investment needed to develop the natural resources. Last year $1,200 million of new capital came into the province of British Columbia. That is a large sum of money that has been invested in the province, and this is due to the proper climate for industrial development.

I was glad to notice from a press dispatch that we are going to have some help in the west in the form of human resources. It is said that the minister of immigration has a plan by which many Britons will be able to come by air to western Canada for a set sum of money. We assure these people that they will be most welcome. Human resources are absolutely necessary for the development of natural resources.

I should like to interject here for the benefit of the Minister of Finance that in the development of natural resources in the north it becomes necessary for management to offer certain concessions to labour in order to have them remain on the job and help to carry out this development. A protest was made to the government in respect to the taxation on these concessions. I hope that in the near future the minister will help us to develop our natural resources by taking cognizance of the fact that it is necessary to give some consideration to those people who are working in outlying districts away from hospitals, schools and other amenities.

Referring further to our natural resources, particularly to the Cariboo, I should like to say that at the provincial level there must be a full return to the people of the province from the utilization of the natural resources in any particular district. The provincial government must see that there is a sufficient return to the people for parting with these natural resources. That is a provincial responsibility and it goes along with resource development. In the last year or two we have witnessed negotiations between the federal and provincial governments resulting in tax agreements designed to more or less distribute the wealth of Canada from the have provinces to the have-not provinces, and in that way the return to the people of a province in respect to natural resources will be reflected in benefits to all of Canada.

One of the great natural resources in the Cariboo is in the form of farm lands. We have good land in the Quesnel area, up through Prince George and in the Peace river block. It is my hope that once again agriculture will get a fair share of the national income. As this land is developed and used for the production of foodstuffs to be consumed in Canada I should like to see the people working in agriculture get a fair share of the national income. It is necessary that they get just exactly that in order to develop our natural resources.

Then a word with regard to the timber resources of northern British Columbia. It has been stated in this house, and it still stands true, that Prince George is the white spruce capital of Canada. I think most hon. members are familiar with the fact that the Sloan commission has been sitting in British Columbia for some time investigating land tenure as far as timber is concerned, sustained yield programs, silviculture practices and other related matters. This is the second commission that has been set up in British Columbia, and was made necessary by changing times and methods in the handling of timber.

Plywood plants are more numerous in these later years, and there have been plans for great expansion in the pulp and paper industry up in the Quesnel area. There is a plywood plant operating there now, and there is a pulp mill on the drawing board. We expect to have a pulp mill in the Peace river block in the not too distant future. Much research has been done in this regard up to the present time.

We have great water resources in British Columbia, and Cariboo constituency has not been left out of the picture in that regard. In the development of our water resources I submit that we must be mindful of the fishing industry. The world population is increasing very rapidly, and the fishing industry may become a most important factor in the feeding of that population in the not too distant future. So I think we must be ever mindful of the fishing industry when we consider the development of power.

In the field of gas and oil we all know of the great developments in the northern part of Alberta and in the Peace river block of British Columbia. There is a great amount of natural gas available for consumption at the present moment, with more reserves on hand. A pipe line to Vancouver and on into the United States is being built at the present time, and I shall have something to say on that matter a little later. In connection with gas and oil I emphasize that it is necessary that the province guard the people's rights so they may have a fair return for these natural resources. This is being done.

In the Cariboo riding there are large deposits of limestone and shale for the manufacture of cement. As we find the province developing the demand for cement is bound to increase; and as the northern part of the province develops, a cement factory would meet a growing need in the north country.

In and around Prince George, and in many parts of Cariboo riding, we have large deposits of clay for pottery and for brickmaking. With the advent of natural gas these industries will be developed. In the Quesnel area we have a large deposit of diatomaceous earth, and we expect that in due course this will become widely used in industry.

We have heard from several speakers this session about the trouble in which the coal industry finds itself today. We also have large deposits of coal in the Pine pass country and in the Hudson's Hope area of the Cariboo riding. When I say large deposits I mean very large deposits. Moreover, the coal is of very high quality, and it is expected that in spite of the difficulties through which the coal industry seems to be passing, development of these resources will proceed very rapidly once the railway is built into that area as projected. It is well known that we have a great deal of base metal in the Cariboo riding, gold in the Wells-Barkerville area, and one of the largest quicksilver mines on the continent in the Fort St. James area.

In addition, the Cariboo riding is one of the greatest natural tourist attractions in the whole country; the big game, hunting and fishing business has been carried on in this part of the country for many years, and it has been my pleasure at various times to have gone out with the so-called dudes from parts of the American continent other than Canada looking for grizzly bear and other big game in the mountains. We also have, of course, the highest mountain in the Canadian Rockies—Mount Robson—and a wonderful park is being developed at that point.

The development of local industry in the Cariboo riding will obviously be accelerated by the fact that we shall soon be able to avail ourselves of natural gas. Before I discuss that any further I would like to express my appreciation to the provincial government for the co-ordination of transportation with capital expansion programs. It was absolutely necessary that the Pacific Great Eastern Railway be extended into the Peace river country in order that the Westcoast Transmission Company should be able to build the Westcoast Transmission line for natural gas. It is my understanding that when the scrubbing plant which is now being built at Taylor Flats between Fort St. John and Dawson Creek is completed, there will be two trainloads a day of by-products sent out from this natural gas supply. It is absolutely necessary that these by-products should be shipped out by rail. Therefore the extension of the Pacific Great Eastern line was timed and worked in with the development of the natural gas industry in that area.

So, all in all, I suppose, we have in the Cariboo riding one of the greatest possibilities for development which lies before any area in Canada, and I might say that it has been a privilege and a pleasure for me in these last four years—it is almost four years now—to represent that great part of the country here in this House of Commons.

Mr. Byrne: Would the hon. member for Cariboo care to indicate whether or not he is supporting the amendment?

Mr. Wylie: That sounds to me like an emission of natural gas from the hon. member for Kootenay East.

Mr. Leboe: I think there will be a little more time for me to give full consideration to that after the debate has been completed.

Mr. Byrne: What was the 40-minute speech for?

Mr. Leboe: You just vote for your party. You do not give any consideration to the debate at all.

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to make a rather full statement about the part the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys plays in resources development when the estimates of the department came before the committee, but after listening to the debate here today I thought it would be timely to make a few remarks at this point.

The amendment before the house is:

> That this house is of the opinion that the welfare of the Canadian people requires the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada . . .

That is part of the resolution, and the part with which I would like to deal.

For the last seven years I have had the honour to be associated with the great resources development department of this government, namely the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. The hon. member for Cape Breton South very properly reminded the house that the resources of this country belong to the provinces. This is a vast country, 4,000 miles from coast to coast, with a great variety of terrain and geographical conditions, and I believe the fathers of confederation very wisely decided that its resources could be better developed by provincial governments in the light of the closer and more local control which they could exercise. This ownership of resources by the provinces places on the provinces themselves the responsibility for development. The federal government has the over-all responsibility to act in the interests of Canadians wherever they live.

We are very fortunate in Canada in that our mineral resources are fairly well distributed across the country. In the earliest days of settlement, when the pioneers settled the prairie provinces and, indeed, this part of the country too, they considered the great Canadian shield a barrier to human occupation. Today it is known to be a storehouse of mineral wealth and treasure.

The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has five branches, and one of the oldest branches of all, the geological survey of Canada, has been mapping the geology of this country for the past 100 years or more. The work of our department is usually many years in advance of actual development. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra made the remark this afternoon, if I heard him correctly, that this government has done very little to help discover new mineral resources. He went on to talk at great length about iron ore development in Labrador. I would remind him that the geological survey of Canada reported the presence of that iron ore deposit before the turn of the century, and there are many other instances across Canada where the geological survey has reported the presence of ore bodies many years before development took place.

A recent example is the great Blind River uranium development in western Ontario. That discovery and development was based on a geological report of the 1920's.

I could give many other instances. Today we are endeavouring by a study of the geology of the country and the production of maps—for maps indeed are the keys to the unlocking of our resources—to take some of the risk out of the highly risky business of resource development. Every year the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has 175 to 200 survey parties in the field in all parts of Canada. In recent years there has been very active interest in the Northwest Territories. My colleague will probably speak about the development of the territories later, but during the last five years the geological survey branch has conducted first look or reconnaissance surveys in that great area from Hudson Bay westward to Yellowknife. Last year they had a large party in the northwestern part of British Columbia.

Using modern techniques of surveying, including helicopters, we are now able to accomplish in one session what a few years ago would have taken 25 years by the ordinary ground or conventional methods of surveying. I mentioned the work of the geological survey during the last five years. In their reconnaissance survey in the Northwest Territories they had a first look at over 300,000 square miles of territory and between 60,000 and 70,000 square miles of that area look promising for prospecting. In these reconnaissance surveys they do not go into detailed mapping, but it is a first look in order to indicate where the best prospecting territory is so that private industry can go in and do the developing.

Two years ago we had a large party in the far north, on the Queen Elizabeth islands. That party was served by helicopters. The ground work always has to be laid for these parties a year before or sometimes two years before by establishing caches of fuel and supplies. The survey of the Queen Elizabeth islands showed indications of oil, coal and gypsum even in that far northern territory. During this coming season the geological survey plans to have a helicopter party in the upper Mackenzie river area to study the geological structure and see if the oil-bearing areas in northern Alberta and at Norman Wells are connected.

I could go on and give many more instances of surveys that have been undertaken recently, but I should like to mention the work of the Canadian hydrographic service. We operate 16 ships in all. A few months ago we launched and commissioned a new hydrographic ship which cost over $4½ million. It is equipped with the most modern sounding and surveying devices of any ship in the world, and it will be used to chart our northern waters. This is very important for the development of minerals. In the last couple of years our hydrographic survey has been surveying and charting possible new harbours in the Hudson Bay area for the development of the new discoveries in that region.

Our new ship, the C.G.S. Baffin, is equipped for icebreaking. The men of the department tell me they have had it out for trials and it is able to keep going even through ice up to 3 feet in thickness. It will be able to work the year round, whereas the other ships of the survey are usually laid up during the winter season.

Hon. members have spoken about the need for conservation. Our mines branch is constantly studying new methods of beneficiating ore, and special attention has been given to the low-grade uranium ores. The uranium developments at Beaverlodge and Blind River would not be possible today had it not been for the work of the mines branch in working out new methods of producing the uranium from low-grade ores.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra had quite a bit to say about the need for processing Canadian ores before they leave the country. I am all for that, too, but I would remind him that Canada was largely built with the ore from the Mesabi range in the United States before we had iron ore in commercial quantities, and if some of it flows back the other way for a while I do not think we should feel too badly about it. Furthermore, the iron deposits of Labrador would not have been developed today without the prospect of the market for the ore. I have no doubt that as this country develops and our population increases, and the possibility of larger markets develops, there will be larger quantities of iron ore as well as other minerals processed here in Canada.

A few months ago I had the honour to be invited to a dinner here in Ottawa with the representatives of three major steel companies who are opening up a deposit of low-grade iron ore some 40 miles west of Ottawa. During the conversation I asked them about the quality of the ore compared with that of the Mesabi range. They said, "Oh, we have a thousand years' supply of the same kind of ore in the Mesabi range." I said, "Why are you not developing it, instead of coming up here?" They said, "Oh, the taxes are more favourable to us in Canada; that is why we are coming here." To my mind that is an answer to some of the statements that have been made today.

A great deal has been said about the unfavourable balance of trade. I believe a great deal of the unfavourable balance today is caused by imports of capital machinery and goods going into the mining industry. It will only be a matter of months or years until that new capital equipment becomes productive and the trade balance will be corrected.

I have mentioned the wealth of knowledge the geological survey and other branches of our department have been accumulating over the years. In its early stages the oil development in Alberta was based on the geological knowledge that had been built up from the maps and reports produced by the geological survey of Canada. I have a very interesting quotation here from a speech made by the discoverer of the Blind River uranium deposit, Mr. Joubin. He said:

> The best place undeniably to find a record of observed facts is in the publications of our dominion and provincial geological surveys and departments of mines reports. If you care to research the project as I have, you will be amazed at the number of important mines that have been developed across Canada that were all previously described in the technical literature even decades before their importance was proved. This is a form of armchair prospecting, sometimes successful, in which almost anyone can indulge.

That is the end of the quotation from Mr. Joubin. He goes on to say that mining is an industry but mining exploration is a romantic adventure. There is a great deal in that last sentence. There is that spirit of adventure, a spirit of enterprise and self-reliance—a spirit that has built this country —which is evident today in the mining industry. It is the policy of this government to encourage that initiative.

Most of the speeches made here today have indicated that the government should be doing more about development. I think the very best way to develop our resources is to create the conditions that will encourage private enterprise to go out and do the job. Since I became Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys seven years ago the dollar value of mineral production in Canada has more than doubled. It has gone from less than $1 billion to over $2 billion last year. That was done by private enterprise, not by governments. We provide the foundation for private enterprise to go forward and do the job.

My friend the hon. member for Peace River, who always claims to be the champion of private enterprise, mentioned the need for a railway to Pine Point. I certainly hope that development takes place very soon. But I would remind him that this great deposit is owned by a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a half interest in the Northern Alberta Railways, and when the time comes that they approach this government with a request for assistance, if they need it to build that railway, I am sure they will receive a good hearing. I believe that private enterprise should take the initiative there.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to invite all hon. members of this house to pay a visit to the mines branch down on Booth street in order to see what this government, through the mines branch, is doing to encourage the efficient development of the mineral industry in this country, and also to see our mapping division. We produced and distributed over a million maps last year. It is worth a few hours' time spent in going down there to see the department in operation.

I am happy indeed to see the new buildings taking shape down on Booth street for the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. Our department has been housed in over 30 different buildings for a number of years, and it has been rather difficult to conduct as efficient an operation as we should like to conduct. However, the new building program now under way is going to provide a good home and good equipment for a good job.

I should like to give a list of these buildings; I think it is worth noting. The radioactive and chemistry building is under construction. The contract price is $3,134,000. The contract has been let for $6,330,000 for the geological building for the geological survey of Canada. There is the administration building, for which the contract has been let at $2,398,000. The surveys and mapping building to house the mapping branch will cost an estimated $8 million. This government is very much aware of the need for the development of our resources. Anyone who is in doubt should make a survey of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys establishment.

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we have listened with interest to the remarks of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I join with the hon. member for Cape Breton South and others in expressing regret that, according to the reports we have read in the newspapers, he will not be back in this house after the next election. I certainly agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South that the minister has given some direction in the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, and we appreciate the services he has rendered.

Frankly, however, I do not think his comments tonight were quite in keeping with the resolution which is before this house. The house is discussing the control of raw materials which have been or may be discovered in this country, whereas the minister dealt more or less fully with the work his department was doing in developing the natural resources of this country. I think they are two separate things. The minister stressed the work done by the geological survey of his department. With what he said I think we all can concur. We realize that we have there a large group of devoted civil servants who have done a great deal in developing the natural resources of this country.

I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, whether the minister who has just spoken belongs to the Howe school which sneers at the Gordon report, or whether he belongs to the other school which perhaps accepts it more or less regretfully. But if the minister will turn to page 49 of the Gordon commission report he will find one specific paragraph dealing with the geological survey.

It states:

> One way in which further aid and stimulus might be given to the mining industry would be to step up quite considerably the rate of mapping and surveying by the geological survey. Excellent work is being done by this branch of the government service, but unless a considerably larger staff is recruited and steps are taken to retain those who are recruited, the preparation of a geological map of Canada will not be completed for many years.

Then the report goes on further to deal with the work the geological survey has done. We admit it has done some work, but there is still much room for development in that connection.

The minister also referred to the geophysical survey and the hydrographic service of his department. We realize that is valuable work. I remember that last year, in committee of supply, the minister admitted that many of the maps which are at present under his department—despite the million which he said were published last year—are based on maps which were prepared by British naval captains and officers back in the days before Canada became a nation. Hence there is a great deal of room for development in that field as well. But as I said, what we are concerned with particularly in this resolution is the control of these resources as they may be developed.

My friend the hon. member for Cape Breton South, who is usually an optimist, I thought tonight adopted somewhat of a pessimistic attitude toward this resolution.

Mr. Gillis: A realistic attitude.

Mr. Nowlan: He says "realistic". I trust he has not become like Father Time in that he confuses pessimism with realism. I thought in his remarks tonight he was almost shrugging his shoulders and saying, as the saying goes, "Nothing can be done nohow, nowhere, no place". He said these national resources came within the control of the provinces, he spoke about the tremendous leases and contracts which have been granted, and he implied that nothing could be done.

The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, despite the fact that he is retiring, is much more optimistic than is the hon. member for Cape Breton South, because the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys pointed out the tremendous developments which are taking place every day, the new fields which are being discovered, the new mines which are being opened. Undoubtedly others which have not yet been leased will be leased to some of these huge corporations which are so repugnant to the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

As the minister pointed out, there will be tremendous discoveries come in the future. It is with that vision in mind that we are bringing forward this resolution tonight. It is granted that there are some resources which are leased. It is granted that there are contracts which have been made. But contracts have been made before by provincial governments and ways and means have been found whereby the federal government, if necessary, could step in and control the matter. I remember an instance a year or so ago when our friends to our extreme left in the Social Credit party were extremely energetic in discussing the control of a river in British Columbia which they said came within the scope of the province.

It only took this parliament about five seconds, under the direction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to introduce a bill which took control of the river away from the province, or purported to do so, and brought it within the federal arena. I think uranium is a natural resource which comes within the scope of the provinces, but uranium seems to be fairly well controlled by the dominion government.

One could go on and on but frankly, Mr. Speaker, I hope the pessimism shown by the hon. member for Cape Breton South is only temporary, because we enjoy his optimism. We would regret feeling that time has rolled on so rapidly there is nothing that can be done in this world to alleviate the conditions which he admits are bad and about which he says it is now impossible for anyone to do anything.

This resolution, Mr. Speaker, is a most important one. I have been out of the house, frankly, as some hon. members know, for the last few days. I have been in the east, in my own constituency and in the maritimes generally. I would say there are two questions which are of vital concern to the people of that portion of Canada today. The first is our external affairs and the situation which has developed in that connection vis-à-vis the relationship of Canada, the United States and the commonwealth. This is not the time nor the place to discuss that, but because of that perhaps the feeling, emotional or otherwise, has been greater about the second question. I found more interest and more concern about the control of Canadian corporations and Canadian natural resources by United States interests than I have ever experienced before. There is an atmosphere in connection with this matter today which is much more intense, I think, than perhaps the members of the government realize or, frankly, than I realized until I talked with many people of all political parties who were concerned with these two matters.

Let us not have any foolish statements in this respect, Mr. Speaker, about the Conservative party being opposed to the importation of United States capital. It is not; it welcomes it. We realize that United States capital has played an important part in the development of this country. We welcome United States capital at any time. However, it is one thing to welcome United States capital and it is another to witness a situation developing whereby we might become the economic vassal or economic satellite of United States interests.

Now, that is not Conservative propaganda. It is suggested that this matter was discussed some years ago. As the hon. member for Cape Breton South said, there is no point in one person trying to take credit for introducing this prior to another person. I do not know when it was first discussed in this house. I know it has been discussed many times during the years I have been here, with some intensification during the last three or four years. I have heard it suggested that this is narrow, Tory propaganda. They go back to these old cliches about no truck or trade with the Yankees, and so forth and so on, all of which is sheer nonsense. At least now we do not have to stand at the same time as our own lawyers and our own witnesses arguing our own case, because we can call many witnesses.

We can call, for instance—perhaps they will say they are associates of the Conservative party, but I think they are now mostly associates of the hon. gentlemen on the other side—the bank presidents of this country, who in their annual statements have worried about this situation and have deplored it. We can call the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself, and quote the speech to which the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra referred this afternoon. Of course we can call the Gordon commission, but I am not sure whether or not that should be quoted to hon. gentlemen opposite. At least, this was the bible on which they were going to run the next election, and they are going to have a hard job running away from some of the things contained therein.

The Gordon commission very carefully, of course, as a royal commission should and as able, intelligent men would, does not come out with any flagrantly violent statement, but if you read the report you will find they are rather concerned about this matter. They deal with questions reflecting on the control of Canadian corporations by United States interests. Then the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra spoiled the only speech I was going to make tonight by reading to the members of the house this report from the Empire Trust Company. It is a rather amazing document, Mr. Speaker. Here you have a United States corporation, one of the wealthiest trust companies and financial organizations in the United States, whose investment counsel department issues this brochure dealing with the Gordon commission report and the reaction of Canadians to that report. I think every hon. member got a copy of this brochure, and I presume it has been read. It certainly is an intelligent and sympathetic appreciation of a possible Canadian viewpoint.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra read one pertinent paragraph, and those who read Hansard, and who read my speech in Hansard can look back to his in the same issue and they will read the paragraph of this brochure to which I was going to refer. Then the article goes on, after dealing with this question of United States control, and says that the Canadian fear is justified—

> . . . when the ultimate managerial decision will be made by persons whose thinking is conditioned by the prevailing state of affairs in a different economy.

In other words, to paraphrase that, one might say when the ultimate managerial decision in Canada will be made by persons whose thinking is conditioned by the prevailing state of affairs in the United States. They say Canadians are justified in worrying about that, and they go on to give examples:

> Take the case of the development of natural resources. A United States company chiefly concerned with its world-wide raw material position may choose to "sit on" its oil or iron ore in Canada as a hedge against the future unavailability of reserves located in more politically sensitive areas.

Then they cite how during the depression years United States corporations withdrew their money from Canadian subsidiaries, leaving the Canadian subsidiaries broke, in order to finance their own operations in the United States and thereafter the subsidiaries were never able to get going again. As I said, I think we should appreciate the fact that there are people in the financial world in the United States who are broadminded, who are intelligent, and who have no desire to exploit this country. The fact that you do have a financial house which will deal with the situation as intelligently and as sympathetically as they have speaks well for that type of United States businessman. It is also a full answer to anyone who says that when we raise this question in the House of Commons it is Tory propaganda and should be treated accordingly.

So much for United States control of Canadian corporations, and I am going on now to this question, of the processing of Canadian raw materials in Canada. I feel the emphasis on this point has developed during the last five years because of the publication of the so-called Paley report in the United States. There you had a commission set up by the President of the United States to study the economic resources of that country. A tremendous study was made, and the report covered several volumes. The net effect of that report is that in some cases the United States is now, and in many other cases will rapidly become, a have-not country in so far as raw materials are concerned. The Paley report emphasizes the fact that if the United States is to continue to be an industrial nation it must get its raw materials from other countries and bring them in for processing and manufacturing.

You may believe me, Mr. Speaker, that this is of interest to the people of Canada, particularly the younger people.

The matter has been discussed. I realize the possibility of criticism, and I realize the implications. Here is the old Tory party talking about tariffs, and they must be involved, and so forth and so on. There are all these cliches of the decades which we have heard, and all the political controversies of this country; but I had one most interesting experience a year ago in travelling around and through the maritime provinces with the then leader of the opposition, Hon. George Drew, and speaking in a non-political way to student bodies at Mount Allison, at Dalhousie, at St. Francis Xavier and at Acadia University.

They were non-political groups, student bodies; they were not political organizations but student bodies to whom he spoke. Obviously, everyone knew who he was and what he would be like. At least half the audience would not be interested in him when he came in, but as he developed this thought, the tremendous potential of Canada in those raw resources and the problem which was posed in the future as to whether those could be manufactured in Canada or whether they should be manufactured elsewhere, in each case when he finished that audience of rather cynical—perhaps "cynical" is not the right word to apply to young students—that rather suspicious and doubting audience rose and gave him a tremendous standing ovation because of this picture of Canada of the future and what might happen if this development took place within Canada.

These young people, Mr. Speaker, had only one interest, at least one primary interest. That was an economic interest, namely to live in Canada and to obtain employment here. Most of them did not want to go to the United States to earn a living. They wanted to live, preferably in the maritimes but certainly somewhere in Canada, and they saw this picture which was being developed as an opportunity for them to obtain employment in Canada. That is why they greeted him and his message as they did.

Certainly the figures which the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra or the Leader of the Opposition, I forget which, put on the record this afternoon showed the present rate of depletion of Canada's natural resources. I emphasize these words "the present rate of depletion", assuming no greater expansion of that development. Time is very short. In many cases in 15 years, 18 years, 24 years and 26 years we too shall become a have-not country with respect to many of these minerals.

That is why, as I said, this resolution is timely, and that is why it is so important. Now, apply that to the area of which I have some knowledge, the maritime provinces. There are apparently two schools of thought with respect to our natural resources. I hold in my hand an editorial from that very excellent paper published in New Brunswick, the Fundy Fisherman, which cannot be accused of being an ardent supporter of the Progressive Conservative party, at any rate, Mr. Speaker. This editorial outlines the great natural resources of the maritime provinces.

I am not going to put it on the record because I realize that they are a trifle optimistic. They point out, and quite properly so, that the greatest fisheries in the world, with all due respect to British Columbia, are to be found in that area. There are natural resources second to none; there are vast deposits of limestone, coal, iron and so forth. There are thousands and thousands of square miles available for oil exploration which have not yet been surveyed by the geological survey of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. And so it goes.

Then you get the Gordon commission report, which rather apologetically shrugs its shoulders and says that nothing can be done for these poor people but to buy their tickets and send them out of the provinces somewhere. Somewhere between these two extremes is the proper situation with respect to the maritimes. There are tremendous natural resources there. There are more which can be discovered.

Take the mineral deposits in northern New Brunswick. I sat on the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines last winter when that committee was considering the construction of a branch railway line running between Bathurst and Newcastle. Mr. Fairweather, the vice president of the Canadian National Railways in charge of development, was there and he said to that committee, as his considered opinion, that the base metal deposit in northern New Brunswick was one of the greatest, if not the greatest, in Canada and possibly in North America. He said it had only been scratched in so far as the future development of that area is concerned.

What is to be done with that? Are those ore bodies to be taken out of there and shipped to the United States for processing, and a few people employed in mining them? Or is northern New Brunswick, and the whole province of New Brunswick, to become an industrial area because of the development of this base metal deposit which, again I say, Dr. Fairweather said was in his opinion the most important in Canada. When you think of the pre-Cambrian shield, when you think of the base metal deposits in Ontario, Quebec and in the rest of Canada—and he puts the deposit in New Brunswick up against them—you can envisage some of the possibilities of development there.

Now, one can say, and quite properly, well, what about the power for the development of that area? Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I do not think Beechwood, important as it is, would ever produce enough power to develop that whole area because, if the province of New Brunswick develops, Beechwood itself and the power from there will be required for domestic and various other uses in New Brunswick. Probably the proper place to get the power from is across the river and have it come down from the province of Quebec. Whether or not that can be done depends upon a certain situation. At least, for the moment it cannot be done. But there is another solution, and that is the establishment of thermal-power units along the coast burning Nova Scotia coal and developing power from that coal, thereby providing employment for Nova Scotia miners and also providing for the development of that area in the north.

When I speak of power in New Brunswick I think of the tremendous power development on the north side of the river. It is one of the greatest power potentials in North America. If that power is not to be kept within the province what is going to happen? Northern New Brunswick may develop its own power there, naturally, but also on the north side of the river an industrial area is going to develop during the next two decades. Thousands and thousands of people will establish themselves there if we maintain a policy of manufacturing things in Canada that can be manufactured here. If that is done markets will be provided for the farmers of Nova Scotia, for my farmers in the Annapolis valley and for the farmers of Prince Edward Island. Agricultural markets will be developed, which are sadly lacking at the moment, but which could be developed.

Since I am speaking of power I want to refer to one remark made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, and I quite agree with him that there has been a misunderstanding with respect to the power situation in the province of Nova Scotia. There is available today power for ordinary domestic use and power which may ordinarily be required in that province in the immediate future, primarily due to the industry, imagination and courage which have been shown by the directors of the Nova Scotia Light and Power Company in supplying these huge steam plants in Halifax and elsewhere which burn Nova Scotia coal. That puts us in the position where no ordinary industry that wants to come into that province has to be refused because of a shortage of power. In fact, no one has been refused. When you think of the tremendous power requirements of an aluminum plant, or something of that kind, where power is an essential, we certainly have not got that. But there again there are tremendous possibilities of tidal power at cape Split, Passamaquoddy, and others to which reference has been made in the house, where co-operation between the provincial and federal governments could result in a great deal being done in that field.

I have spoken of New Brunswick. It is not my own province. In Nova Scotia we have not had the fortune so far to discover great base metal deposits such as were discovered in northern New Brunswick. Do not forget that the pre-Cambrian shield that runs across northern Ontario and Quebec dips and comes up again in northern New Brunswick, dips and comes up half-way across the island of Cape Breton. What has been discovered in one place, when these geological surveys are completed, might easily be discovered in another place.

For instance, we have a steel plant at Sydney which provides employment for many people. However, there are men working in that plant and people generally in that area wonder why iron ore should be mined in northern Quebec and Labrador, brought down the St. Lawrence, transported up the great lakes and into the United States. They wonder why we should be spending hundreds of millions of dollars to build the St. Lawrence waterway for that purpose when none of that ore is coming down to the natural geographical location at Sydney, which is like a wharf sticking out into the Atlantic. Secondary industries could be established and you would have contact with all markets of the world with the cheapest transportation possible. That is one reason we are interested in the development of our resources in Canada rather than having them shipped to the United States.

It was not so many years ago that we went through a similar experience to this, but in a smaller way, in the province of Nova Scotia. I am referring now to provincial governments. More years ago than I like to recall I happened to be a member of the legislature when the question of the erection of a paper mill in Nova Scotia came up. The leases were tied up with United States interests, and it was suggested that this was Tory propaganda going around that the paper would be made in Nova Scotia. The Rhodes government of that day provided the requisites in the way of timber and a paper mill, perhaps not tremendous when compared with other mills throughout the world but nevertheless a sizeable mill, was built at Liverpool by the Mersey company. The prosperity of that whole part of the south shore is dependent upon that industry. A town has been maintained and employment given throughout the years because of the inauguration of the simple little principle which is set forth in this resolution, the processing of Canadian raw materials in Canada.

I realize that this has to be treated sensibly. No one is suggesting for a moment that we should cut off exports of raw materials to another country. There exist obligations, there exist contracts, there exist rights, all of which have to be protected. There are types of raw materials which perhaps cannot be processed economically in Canada. I have one instance alongside my constituency. As the Gordon commission says, each one of these cases must be considered on its own basis and an individual study made.

We have deposits of gypsum in that part of the country. Because of the geographical location and the cheap water rates we are able to ship tons of this gypsum to the Atlantic states, where it is manufactured into plasterboard and other components of the building industry. There are tremendous gypsum deposits in Illinois and probably many other places in the United States. If one insisted on this being manufactured in Canada and if a duty was imposed by the United States government, it might be possible for those plants located on the seaboard to pay the freight rate, which they cannot afford to pay today, to bring the gypsum from the interior.

We are approaching this on a reasonable basis. No one is suggesting that this is the end of everything, that this is the solution of all problems. When the Conservative party forms the government this year it is not going to cut off all existing contracts and revolutionize the whole set-up. There will be a reasonable approach to the problem which must be taken if Canada is to provide employment for the young people of this country.

With the natural resources which we have, with our young people who are with us, we must meet that challenge. That is the challenge facing the government of Canada. If it is met, Canada will become one of the great nations of the world. If it is not met, Canada will languish and always be a secondary power depending upon the economy and spending of the great country to the south.

On motion of Mr. Lesage the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Harris the house adjourned at 9.56 p.m.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—PAYROLL STATISTICS

Question No. 86—Mr. Low:

1. How many employees are on the payroll of the Canadian wheat board?
2. What are the salaries paid to these employees?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

The employees of the Canadian wheat board are not civil servants. They are employed by the board at salaries in line with those paid by other grain organizations. Publication of salaries paid to individual employees would therefore be prejudicial to the operation of the board.

The annual report of the wheat board for the crop year 1955-56 shows total salaries paid to board members, officers and staff of $1,921,159.48 and the staff and officers as at July 31, 1956, totalled 723.
