The Republic of Spain. The startling rapidity with which lynasties are set up and overthrown, and destroyed in Spain, is hardly late the followers of Don Carlos have been inciting insurrections in various parts of the country. And now King Amadeus has taken the jeweled circlet of anthority from his brow, before the echo of the joy bells that made melody over the birth of an heir to his high estate have ceased, and given it back to the representatives of the people. His reasons for this act are not given, and are by no means clear. Three days ago his purpose was not suspected. The sensation all over Europe was intense. And now we have trustworthy intelligence of the establishment of the republic by an overwhelming vote of the Spanis Congress. Dr. Alward keeps well in the background, canvassing only just enough to keep his hand in, or because it has got to be second nature with him to canvass, and will not come out unless the hostile vote promises to be bretty equally divided between Mayor Reed and Mr. Chipman Smith, or Alderman Rowan and somebody else.

The condition of our civic affairs is stock that it is to be regretted that other than gurely civic issues are to enter into the contest.
