CHAPTER XXXII.

Miss North's Story.

'That would be something,' said Louis, with unflattering candor. 'So it would,' she said, with a smile. 'Well, we will try it. You take up the soup, nurse, and I'll go and play something quietly. He may like it.'

'He's far gone indeed if he don't,' said the dame, almost indignantly, as she went up with the soup.

Ethel wiped her hands and went into the parlor and opened the piano. But she stood a moment or two looking at the keys; she had not touched since that night when Harold Woodleigh had held her hands and looked into her eyes.

'I should be an ungrateful beast if I didn't try to eat a horse if you asked me, dame,' he said, looking up at her.

'She courted and looked pleased. He stared at her curiously. 'You are a good soul,' he said; 'you puzzled me. Why have you taken so much trouble to keep the life in this miserable carcass—why?'

'Oh, sir,' said the proud old soul, taken aback at the strange comment. 'Don't vilify yourself like that. A better man and a handsomer—excepting my Harold—'

'Con-found your Harold!' he groaned, and turned to the fire with a long sigh.

The dame was flying, aghast, but with a gesture of his white hand he stopped her. 'I—I beg your pardon,' he said. 'Yes, Harold Woodleigh is a fine fellow, there are few like him, and—'

The dame stole downstairs, and he put the soup down again untasted, and covered his face with his hands. Presently there rose a soft strain of music, but he did not move; suddenly there mingled with it a human voice, exquisitely melodious and soul-touching.

With a deep sigh, scarcely realizing that it was a human voice and real music—he had been delirious, remember, for nearly a week!—he looked round the room; his eyes fell on the picture beside the chair, and with realized it, for he had not come near her since that night.

With a gesture of impatience at her weakness, weakness which she felt would cling to her for life, for she was not one to love and unlove in a breath, she sat down and began playing softly a sonata of Haydn's.

The dame found the sick man leaning back in his chair, staring at the canvas, and she scarcely removed his eyes from it when she entered; but there was a bitter, hard look in them that was almost worse than the old indifference.

Suddenly he looked round at her and pointed to the canvas. 'Take that away, will you, dame?' he said, quietly.

The dame took it from the chair and placed it behind his chair. 'You'll try and eat the soup, sir, won't you?' she said, looking at him with that look of maternal affection which all good nurses feel for the creature they have pulled through the shadow of death.

'I should be an ungrateful beast if I didn't try to eat a horse if you asked me, dame,' he said, looking up at her.

'She courted and looked pleased. He stared at her curiously. 'You are a good soul,' he said; 'you puzzled me. Why have you taken so much trouble to keep the life in this miserable carcass—why?'

'Oh, sir,' said the proud old soul, taken aback at the strange comment. 'Don't vilify yourself like that. A better man and a handsomer—excepting my Harold—'

'Con-found your Harold!' he groaned, and turned to the fire with a long sigh.

The dame was flying, aghast, but with a gesture of his white hand he stopped her. 'I—I beg your pardon,' he said. 'Yes, Harold Woodleigh is a fine fellow, there are few like him, and—'

The dame stole downstairs, and he put the soup down again untasted, and covered his face with his hands. Presently there rose a soft strain of music, but he did not move; suddenly there mingled with it a human voice, exquisitely melodious and soul-touching.

With a deep sigh, scarcely realizing that it was a human voice and real music—he had been delirious, remember, for nearly a week!—he looked round the room; his eyes fell on the picture beside the chair, and with an effort he raised it to his knees and sat staring at it.

Then, with trembling fingers, he drew off the cover, and let his eyes rest on the lovely face that suddenly looked out at him with the large, dark, mournful eyes and sensitive lips.

And as he looked his lips quivered, his eyes grew moist, he was as weak as a child; and his hands trembled so that the exquisite face grew blurred and indistinct to his sight.

Then the cry of passionate despair welled from his heart: 'Oh, my love, my love! And I have lost you!'

Suddenly the music ceased; as it awakened, the hard look came into his face again, and, averting his eyes, he threw the covering over the picture, and laid it down beside the chair again.

AFTER FOUR YEARS OF MISERY

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Baltimore, Md.—"For four years my life was a misery to me. I suffered from irregularities, terrible dragging sensations, extreme nervousness, and that all gone feeling in my stomach. I had given up hope of ever being well when I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Then I felt as though new life had been given me, and I am recommending it to all my friends."

The most successful remedy in this country for the cure of all forms of female complaints is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means had failed.

If you are suffering from any of these ailments, don't give up hope until you have given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. If you would like special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. She has guided thousands to health, free of charge.

Then he started, and touched the bell.

'Was—that some one singing downstairs?' he asked, as Louis entered.

'Yes, sir,' was the reply. 'Ah! I thought I had been dreaming. Who was it?'

'Miss North, sir—a friend of Mrs. Hester's.'

'I never heard of her,' said Slade, languidly.

'She lives here, sir—eastways she did. These are her rooms.'

'And I have turned her out!' said Slade.

'She doesn't mind that, sir. No one could have been kinder all the time than Miss North. She's downstairs all day, helping Mrs. Hester—and a lady, too, sir.'

'It is very kind,' said Slade, thoughtfully; 'I don't understand it. Louis, take my compliments, and—no I will wait till I see her to thank her.'

'Would you like to see her now sir?' said Louis. 'She'll be only too pleased—'

'Confound you, how do you know?' asked Slade. 'Stop!'—for Louis was going at this rebuff. 'Give my compliments to Miss—the young lady—and ask her if she would be so kind as to pay a sick man a visit.'

Louis went down like a shot. Ethel stared, went pale, and then crimsoned.

'I!' she exclaimed; then her tone changed, and she said, calmly: 'Yes, certainly I will go; it must be very dull for Mr. Slade.'

And stopping for a moment to smoothe her hair—which was smooth enough already—she followed Louis upstairs.

'Come in,' said Dawson Slade. And she entered.

He looked up at her and attempted to rise, but fell back and stared at her.

With a quiet smile, she went up and held out her hand.

'Is it possible that you remember me?' she said, gently.

'Remember!' said Slade. 'Yes, of course I remember you; but how comes it that you are here? Are you the Miss North my man tells me I am so much indebted to?'

'I am Ethel North,' she said.

'Will you sit down?' he said, still glaring at her with his calm, dark eyes, puzzled and bewildered. 'And you have been here long? How is it that I have not seen you? I don't understand.'

'How should you have seen me?' she said, 'unless you had come to Higham Church, and then you might not have seen me, for there is a large curtain around the organ loft. I am the organist here, Mr. Slade.'

'I see,' he said, 'and you were coming here when I met you—'

'When you were so kind to me in the park,' she broke in softly. 'I was coming here, and so were you. It is very strange. It was a coincidence.'

'A coincidence,' he said, thoughtfully. Then he said, quietly: 'Have you avoided me?'

'She shook her head with a quiet smile.

'No. I have avoided no one. It was not for Ethel North, the organist, to claim acquaintance with Mr. Slade, the honored guest of the Grange, and Woodleigh Hall, because he had rendered her a service as delectable as even were those rendered by a knight of old.'

'You are eloquent as well as musical,' he said.

'It is only when I am grateful,' she said.

He looked at her, with that ardent look as such men wear.

'Why are you here, playing at being an organist, alone and hidden away? There is some mystery. I can read faces; I read yours that day in the park. You had known some sorrow, Miss North—'

It was a strange speech, as strange as his look.

'Yes, until I came here, my life was one continual sorrow; but it has not made me weary of the world.'

'That is a bit at me,' he said, without a smile. 'I confess that I am weary of it, for I have ceased to believe in it, but at least, Miss North, I have drained the cup to its dregs. I cannot go into some country village and play the organ, because I am not a woman. Women never cease to trust Heaven after they are loved. Men lose their faith; I have lost mine. Were you ever in love, Miss North?'

At any other time, from any other man than this mere shadow, Ethel North, quiet as she was, would have risen with indignant anger, but now she looked at him, and that look was enough.

Shea's Wharf Collapses.

Thousands of Dollars Worth of Goods
Sink With It, and Are Wholly or Partially Destroyed.

Shortly before midnight last night and just as the Allan liner Mongolian was being got ready to proceed on her voyage to Glasgow, the central part of Shea & Co's big pier which is situated over collapsed and suddenly sank bringing with it a large amount of goods which must be badly damaged if not totally destroyed. It is thought that on the submerged part of the pier were stored about 2,500 bbls. flour, 2,000 sacks flour, 1,000 sacks cattle feed and 200 iron pipes, representing several hundreds of tons dead weight.

About midnight the work of discharging the Mongolian's freight had been finished, and it was fortunate that it was so and all the tongshoremen began to subside and eventually went under, so that fully 70 feet of the wharf, in circumference is submerged. It was very dark when the accident occurred, and it was fortunate that no person was in the shed at the time of the accident.

His Holiness and the Modernist Campaign.

Special to Evening Telegram.
ROME, Sept. 9.

Pope Pius Tenth has issued a motu proprio, giving new and practical measures to be adopted against the growing modernist campaign. The Pontiff reiterates all of the rules previously set forth against modernism, especially in the Encyclical Pascendi, and adds that the Bishops and the Rectors of the Catholic colleges must watch attentively the development of young clergy, seeing to it that they are well prepared to fight error, forbidding them to read newspapers and periodicals and avoid distracting them from their studies. Every professor in beginning his course, every acolyte before being promoted, every new professor, curate, canon or holder of a similar stand, and every ecclesiastical officer, before taking possession of his post, must take an oath of loyalty to the healthy Catholic doctrine and discipline.

Death of President Taft's Friend.

Special Evening Telegram.
BOSTON, Sept. 9.

Solicitor-General Lloyd Wheaton Bowers, life-long friend of President Taft, died at the Hotel Touraine in this city to-day. Death came suddenly, the result of cardiac thrombus, which ended an illness of a month due to an attack of bronchitis. The death of Mr. Bowers, who relinquished an exceedingly remunerative position as railroad counsel to take up the duties of Solicitor-General at the instance of President Taft, removes a prospective candidate for one of the vacancies in the Supreme Court. In fact Mr. Bowers had been mentioned prominently as the next Chief Justice.

The HAGUE DECISION

Message From Hon. D. Morison Confirming
His Former Message to the Premier.

Copy of Message Received by The Premier From Hon. D. Morison, at London, Sept. 9th, 1910.

Returned here to-day. As cabled Wednesday, award practically decides all important questions favour British except Question 6. Following is a fuller resume, but not exhaustive:—

Question 1. Award decides that Britain has right without consent U. States to make reasonable regulations regarding exercise liberty to take fish. United States. Treaty contains no special provision for decision question whether regulations reasonable. Award establishes separate commissions for Canada and Newfoundland respectively under Article 4 to decide question of reasonableness of future regulations. Also refers question of reasonableness existing regulations to commission expert specialists under Article 3.

Question 2. Award decides that United States has right to employ as members fishing crews, persons not inhabitants United States, but also decides that non-inhabitants so employed derive no benefit or immunity from Treaty.

Question 3. Award decides that requirement of American fishing vessels to report at Customs is reasonable, but should only be exacted where reasonably convenient opportunity afforded to report in person or by telegraph. Also that U. States fishing vessels should not be subjected to light, harbour, or other dues not imposed on Newfoundland fishermen.

Question 4. Award decides that U. States fishing vessels entering for shelter, repairs, wood or water, should not be required to report at Customs until 48 hours, or to pay light dues.

Question 5. Award decides that in case of Bays the 3 marine miles are to be measured from a straight line drawn across the body of water where it ceases to have the configuration and characteristics of a Bay, and recommends the same delimitation of certain Bays as is contained in Chamberlain-Bayard Convention, 1888.

Question 6. Award decides that American inhabitants are entitled to fish in the Bays, creeks and harbours of Treaty Coast of Newfoundland and Magdalen Islands.

Question 7. Award decides that American vessels cannot at the same time and during the same voyage exercise Treaty rights and enjoy commercial privilege; in other words, vessel must be either fishing or trading vessel, and cannot exercise both privileges concurrently.

"The Eucharist as the Antidote for Modern Life."

So Says Rev. Father Bernard Vaughan Before Five Thousand People—Ten Thousand People Greet Cardinal Vannutelli—Seventy-Five Thousand Visitors Expected at Montreal on Sunday—Procession of Thirty Thousand School Children—Archbishop Howley's Paper Considered One of the Best of the Series.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)
MONTREAL, Last Evening.

Father Bernard Vaughan addressed five thousand people in Stanley Hall last night on the Eucharist as the antidote for modern life. He paid a glowing tribute to the Irish race for always holding the faith. The civic reception of Cardinal Vannutelli held at the City Hall last night, was attended by ten thousand people. Cardinal Gibbons was present. Seventy-five thousand visitors are expected here on Sunday to witness the procession of four miles, from Notre Dame Church to the foot of Mount Royal, where an open air altar is erected. Cardinal Logue and Sir Wilfrid Laurier will speak at Notre Dame to-night. A procession of thirty thousand school children took place in the city to-day when Archbishop Foley, of New York, addressed them at Notre Dame Church. Archbishop Howley delivered an address on practical study of the decree of Pius X on frequent communion, at the Windsor Hall to-day. His Grace's paper was considered one of the best of the series, and he amply upheld the honour of Newfoundland, whose people should feel proud of him.

30 Lives Lost by Sinking of Car Ferry.

Special Evening Telegram.
LUDINGTON, Sept. 9.

Thirty lives were lost to-day when the Pere Marquette Car Ferry, No. 18, bound from Ludington to Milwaukee, went to the bottom of Lake Michigan half way across. The dead include Captain Killy of Ludington, the purser and wireless operator, whose signals of distress brought assistance to the sinking steamer, and two members of the crew of Car Ferry No. 15, who lost their lives in an effort to rescue the crew of No. 18. The steamship company issued a list of 35 names of survivors, all members of the crew, most of whom were brought here tonight on Car Ferry No. 17. Eight bodies were recovered, six being brought here on Car Ferry No. 17, and two being taken to Milwaukee. The cause of the disaster is a mystery. The cabin watch said that the boat was very low at the stern when the first alarm was given. He said they pushed railroad cars into the lake to raise the vessel, but without avail.

Magnificent Spectacle, Sunday Services.

Special Evening Telegram.
MONTREAL, Sept. 9.

The prettiest spectacle of the Eucharistic Congress was witnessed this afternoon when 25,000 school children marched from Notre Dame Church through the streets of the city to St. James' Cathedral and passed in review before the Papal Legate, scattering flowers at his feet and receiving his benediction. Thousands of visitors are pouring in for the crowning feature of the Congress, the Eucharistic procession on Sunday next. The route of the procession is nearly three miles long, and it is expected that nearly half a million people will line the route and be present at the celebration of Pontifical Mass at the altar on the slopes of Mount Royal. Never has Montreal seen such a crowd as that now within her gates. So far there has not been a hitch in the arrangements and everything has gone off like clock-work.

The Crippen Trial.
Special Evening Telegram.
LONDON, Sept. 9.

The Crown prosecutors are slowly unravelling a chain of evidence with which they expect to convict Dr. Crippen for the murder of his wife and Ethel Le Neve as accessory after the fact. It was expected that important medical testimony would be given early in the court proceedings, but its presentation has been delayed until the experts for the defence have had an opportunity of viewing the remains. The trial, therefore, has been adjourned to September 14.

Preparing Messrs. Bowring's Sealers.

The progressive firm of Bowring Bros. are taking time by the forelock and are now putting all their wooden sealing ships in thorough repair for the coming sealfishery. An army of shipwrights and other workmen are employed on the boats, which are having their topsides put in order, getting new sheathing and having their decks caulked and otherwise repaired. The engines and machinery are also being attended to and will be thoroughly overhauled and repaired. The ships the coming spring will be in splendid trim to follow up the harps and hoods, which we hope they will do with their accustomed success.
