CHAPTER XXV.

A Game of Cards.

Charlie was as popular with the set as Percy himself; indeed, it would be difficult to name any society where the gay, frank, generous-hearted and handsome boy would not have been welcomed, excepting, perhaps, a meeting of the Society of Friends. Charlie would certainly have been out of place at the Quakers, for his open heart made him free of speech, and his happy, well-bred laugh was easily excited. It must not be forgotten also, that Charlie was only two remove from the Vering title; the two men between were old and childless, and life is uncertain. Already anxious mothers were beginning to speculate on Lord Percy's remaining a bachelor, and letting "young Merivale" in after him. "Lord Vering is not a marrying man, my dear," they would say, "though he is young, and has the Vering beauty. Something went wrong with him a few years back, and men of his kind do not get over these little things easily."

"But there is always the Devigne girl," would be the reply, followed by a doubtful shrug; for by this time Lady Devigne and her daughter had somehow lost ground a little, and the curious ones looked back to those years of her absence, and were still inquisitive about her whereabouts and doings therein.

The afternoon following that on which Lillian Devigne had given them five o'clock tea under the veranda, Charlie was passing what was called the earl's room; the door was open, and Percy, who was reading, knew his cousin's step.

"Is that you, Charlie?" he called. Charlie, exquisitely dressed in a morning suit of Schultz's latest, turned back and came in.

"What!" said Percy, looking up with a smile, "not dressed yet?" He pulled out his watch. "Six o'clock. It will take an hour to drive to Richmond, and Egerton said half-past seven, did he not?"

Charlie nodded, and went up to the window overlooking the square.

"Yes," he said, "half-past seven. You'll go without me, Percy, won't you?"

"Yes, if you wish it, dear boy; but don't you care for it? Ungrateful vagabond! I shouldn't have accepted but for you."

Charlie colored, and bit his whip with evident annoyance.

"I know that, Percy," he said—"I know how often you go out of your way for me. Don't think I'm a blind, ungrateful puppy; but—but I'd rather not go to Egerton's banquet, thanks."

"All right," said Percy. "I must go, if only to carry your excuses—a prior and forgotten engagement, eh, Charlie?"

Charlie nodded, with something like a sigh.

The evident reluctance expressed by this sigh did not escape Percy's quick ear; he put his book aside, and went over to where Charlie was standing, looking down rather dolefully on the broughams and carriages below.

"What is it, Charlie—really another engagement, or are you already bored by the little dinners which, at your age, are generally looked upon as the delights of our short existence? You are beginning early, Charlie, if that is so."

"No, I'm not tired yet," replied Charlie, candidly. "I know you'll have a jolly evening, and I'd like to go, that's the truth; but—" and he hesitated.

Percy put his hand on the strong, broad shoulder.

"Charlie," he said, "if there is anything to tell, you can go to no one who will listen to it with a warmer heart than mine, my boy."

"Don't I know that?" exclaimed Charlie, looking round with a great flush and a twitch of the lips not unpleasant to see. "What should I be without you, Percy? You've been everything to me, father, brother—ah, almost mother; that—that makes it harder to tell. It would come easier if you had been different, close and stiff like other fellow's elders. But I'll tell you, Percy. They'll bring the picture books out to-night at Egerton's, and—it must out, Percy, and its shameful with my allowance—but I can't afford it."

A smile came upon Percy's face that was almost sad.

"I know of no one who could better afford such play as we shall get to-night than you, Charlie."

"Than I," exclaimed Charlie, with rueful surprise. "Why, Percy, I'm cleaned out!"

Percy shook his head.

"Not yet, I hope, Charlie, we've still a few thousand at the bankers—and Vering would fetch something in the market."

Charlie stared—then smiled.

"We," he said.

"Yes!" responded Percy; "for half of what I have, to the last penny, is yours, Charlie, if you wanted it. If I had only known!" Then, with a look of self-reproach, "I must have been dozing, or half dazed, not to have thought of it! Of course your allowance was not enough! Haven't I done Oxford myself?"

Why had he not thought of it? Because his mind was wholly absorbed by another subject. And now he was full of self-reproach and remorse.

"Where's the bills—of course there are bills—you silly boy."

"Yes, Charlie admitted there were bills.

"Put them on my desk to-morrow, any time, and now," he stopped, and going to his escritoire, took out a bundle of crisp notes. "Will you put these in your pocket to go on with?"

"Oh, Percy—"

"Oh, Percy, indeed, you silly young idiot!" retorted Percy shaking him on the shoulder. Then, more gravely, "Charlie, my dear boy, you and I are alone in the world, so to speak; you'll never keep anything like this from me again—never again."

"That I won't, Percy," warmly responded Charlie; but, indeed, I don't Percy smiled.

"Charlie, you have my views on the question. I don't say 'don't play,' because I know that men of our class must play; but I will say—if you like, and if there is any occasion for me to say anything—don't play beyond your pocket!"

"Percy! I never will again; you may trust me!"

"Not a word more!" said Percy, laughing, "or you'll make me think I'm gray-headed. Why, dear boy, what difference is there between us in the matter of years?" and he put both his long, white hands on Charlie's shoulders and gazed.

"Very few, Percy!" laughed Charlie. "Not ten, I should say. But then, see what you've been to me! How I've come to you in everything! I couldn't have carried half the things to a father that I have to you!"

"Always bring your troubles to me, Charlie," said Percy. "There is nothing more to tell me now, is there?—nothing I can help you in?" He fixed his eyes with keen and almost anxious scrutiny on the handsome, candid face before him.

Charlie's eyes fell for a moment, and there was a queer look about his mouth; then he looked up frankly.

"No, Percy; nothing you can help me in at present."

Percy's hands dropped, and he turned away with something like a sigh of relief. What was it he dreaded to hear?

"Time's short now, dear boy. Beauty unadorned adorned the most. We have got a quarter of an hour. Take Beamish."

"All right, he'll pull me through in ten minutes," said Charlie, and he strode away with a light heart, "Dear old Percy!" he murmured. "Was there ever such a thorough picnic as he is? Never, since the world began. I wonder whether he suspects anything about Mary—Dear little witch! He looked at me awfully hard! Ah, Kyra, was right! He's never happy unless he's laying himself out for somebody's benefit!"

In a quarter of an hour the two—Charlie happy enough now—were riding rapidly along in Percy's mail phaeton toward Richmond. They were a little late as they entered one of the handsome of the many hand-some rooms in the Star and Garter, and were received with all the more enthusiasm. Such greetings as:

"Here you are, Apollo!" and "Percy, my boy, thought you'd thrown us over for the Geographical Society, or sailed for Kamschatka," went round as seats were found for them.

Percy looked round the table with mild curiosity, replying to greetings and questions here and there, and suddenly the little dark shadow, so well known by his friends, came over his brow as his eye rested, for a moment, on the dark, smooth face of Count Hudspliel.

Charlie did not notice it and he had just nodded, rather carelessly, to the Count, and taken the seat found for him beside a friend, young Lord St. Clare, who was scarcely out of his teens, but had recently come into a peerage and an immense estate, and who was seeing life, as he called it, at the rate of a Brighton express.

He and Charlie had been at Eton together, and were great chums, and, of course, the young peer had caught from Charlie's touch of the hero-worship in regard to Percy; indeed, so much had Lord St. Clare heard and read of the Earl of Vering that he looked upon him as something more than usual, and when Percy, on entering, had cast him a smile and nod in his kindly fashion, the boy literally beamed with pride.

The dinner was of the stereotyped kind; the viands and wines of the best that money could procure, the waiting of that high, silent sort which money even will not always command, and the conversation, roaming like a wild horse over a plain in Tartary, fitting from the last ballet dancer to the newest horse, from the latest scandal about a certain countess to the most recent expedition to the Arctic regions, and it was noticeable that when Percy opened his lips he attentively his words were listened to, especially when they treated of travel or adventure, for he was their high authority.

Then, the dinner being over, and much claret having been consumed, some strolled out on the balcony and enjoyed scenery diluted with tobacco, while a few adjourned to an inner room, where cards were produced in a half-mysterious fashion, and more claret and champagne made its appearance.

Among those rotaries of the goddess Chance, were the count, Egerton, and Lord St. Clare; not that the latter was fond of cards, but rather that he considered it inconsistent with his present occupation of "seeing life," to ever let slip a chance of losing money in a fashionable, dissipated way.

Percy and Charlie lounged half an hour away on the terrace, and then, being reminded that coffee was waiting in the card-room, turned in there, Charlie and he making two at a whilst table at a corner of the room.

At some little distance Count Hudspliel, young St. Clare, and one or two others, all strangers to Percy, were playing at ecarte.

As they entered the room, Charlie had stopped to look over his friend's shoulder, and had noticed how flushed and excited the young peer seemed, and that excitement appeared to increase as the half hours flew by.

The party he had left called for champagne, and amid the popping of corks, the click of the cards as they were shuffled by the supple hands of the count, arose the feeble voice of St. Clare, not clear as it should be, but thick, rapid and strained.

Percy never glanced that way, but at last Charlie said, in a loud voice: "They seem going it rather fast over there, Percy. I hope St. Clare isn't losing! Do you see?"

"I see," said Percy, almost grimly, as he led his ace.

Presently the laughter seemed to subside at the further table, and looking round Charlie now saw that only two men were playing. St. Clare and the count, the others looking on intently.

"What is it?" asked Charlie, of his partner.

"Poker," was the significant reply.

"Nice game for a millionaire. Can't afford to play it myself. Lucky it's young St. Clare."

There was a smile and a significant shrug of the shoulders, but, of course, nobody could interfere.

Then the rubber came to an end, and Percy glanced at his watch.

"We'd better have the boys put to bed," Charlie said.

Charlie turned to one of the footmen to give the order.

"I don't know whether I can give any one a lift," said Percy.

Charlie seized the opportunity in a moment.

OFFICIAL.

LONDON, July 3.
The Governor, Newfoundland:
In the Somme fighting, yesterday British reports announce the capture of a German trench labyrinth on seven mile frontage to the depth of 1,900 yards.
The situation on either side of the Ancre, valley is unchanged. Northward to Gommecourt we failed to retain some portions of the ground taken in the first attack. It is announced to-day that La Boisselle has been taken.
To-day the French report their advance continued south of the Somme five kilometers. Second line trench and the village of Ancre court have been occupied. The total prisoners reported last night number 9,500. The details of the number of guns and munitions captured are not available.
In Verdun the Thiamont work which has frequently changed hands is now held by the French. Damlou work was lost, but recaptured yesterday.
The Russians have captured Kolo meo and are advancing westward. Heavy enemy attacks on the latter salient have been repulsed. The total prisoners taken number about 220,000.
The Italian offensive is progressing favorably.

REPORTED PANIC IN BERLIN.

NEW YORK, July 3.
A despatch from Zurich to the News Agency here says a panic had been produced in Berlin by the steady advance of the Allies in France, according to information received to-day. The newspapers are urging the people to be calm, but at the same time they print vigorous protests against the use of asphyxiating gas by the British, which is said to be more deadly than that employed by the Germans. Berlin War Office reports to-day that the continuation of the French and British drive on both sides of the Somme has gained any advantage for the Allies, north of the river, but south of the Somme the Germans withdrew their divisions to the second positions.

LONDON BUDGET.

LONDON, July 3.

The Drive Continues

As long as we are able to use this title, hopes of a decision in France or a long step towards it will remain undiminished. Neuve Chapelle and the Champagne were victories, but they came to an abrupt conclusion. They were both progressive experiments, imparting lessons which the method of the present advance shows to have been well learned. At Neuve Chapelle the hopeless shortage of shells was first demonstrated; in the Champagne, the strength of the German second line of trenches held the French up. There is now no want of ammunition: it is being used with amazing prodigality; and successive lines have been pounded to pieces by it.

That the fighting is proceeding with sustained intensity is certain. It is noticeable that the French have so far made greater progress than the British, and are now but a short distance from the important Peronne, which may become a smaller Verdun. The Germans will certainly contest it with their utmost resources. The capture, however, by the British of the villages of LaBoisselle, Fricourt and Mametz marks a distinct progress which will greatly assist the French in confirming their gains to the south. Perhaps the most important fact yet recorded is the report that the German forces were divided at the Somme; this may account largely for the extent of the French advance. It is directed by General Foch, by many considered the most brilliant of the Allied commanders.

All the important elements of warfare enter into the fighting—heavy bombardments by large guns, blowing the trenches and their concrete reinforcements to pieces; trench mortars, useful particularly in demolishing wire entanglements; great aerial activity, in which we seem to have a complete ascendancy; and the final and most effective weapon of all, infantry assaults, leading to fierce hand to hand fighting. When the tremendous strength and skillful organization of the German trenches is considered, such an advance as has already been reported is a fine achievement. If New York is to be believed Berlin complains indignantly of the use by the British of yet another weapon, asphyxiating gas. Both the fact and the German state of mind are likely enough. The poetic justice of the situation does not seem to strike the enemy at all. It is barbarous warfare, but they introduced it. The offence of the British appears to lie in their having improved it and in their using it against the inventors. To the German lack of a sense of humor, which is after all a sense of proportion, one critic ascribes the whole war. We have heard more extravagant theories.

The next thing which London and Paris will await with anxiety is the casualty list, representing the cost of the advances made. In the two previous offences it was very heavy, and hardly justified by the result. That they will be considerable here as well is inevitable, but the greatly increased efficiency of the French and British artillery and the thorough preparation it makes for the advance, as well as their preponderance in actual numbers, will help to minimize the losses sustained. Without doubt, Peronne is the great objective of the French, and it will be worth taking at a large price. If it falls and the German line has to be reformed above all if they are forced to any great extent into the open, the dream of the Allies since the battle of the Marne may be realized.

MINARD'S LINIMENT USED BY PHYSICIANS.

The Irish Question.

The announcement from Dublin yesterday that the United Irish League had agreed to accept Lloyd George's proposals for settlement of the Irish question is very good news. That celebrated arbitrator has added to his laurels. He must share some of the credit of the achievement with both of the rival leaders, Redmond and Carson, and also not a little with the force of circumstances. Earl Selborne's resignation threatened a deplorable split in the cabinet, which has happily and patriotically been averted. For both Redmond and Carson amenable to Lloyd George's scheme, there should now be little difficulty in its realization. Though it is not a triumph for Home Rule, it seems to be a modification of it. The settlement is the result, of course, of the Sinn Fein outburst, though, as so often happens, hardly the logical one. There was no reason why Ulster, the province most, if not altogether unaffected by the rising, should be in a worse position than before. For this reason, Ulster and Carson are particularly to be congratulated on their attitude at this juncture, whatever may be said of past history. There will still remain many minor details of dispute, but they will not be allowed to assume undue proportions while the war demands the undivided attention of our statesmen. To the Empire at large the fact of some agreement being reached, binding all factions in Ireland and out of it, will be of more importance for the present than the particular terms of it.

B. I. S. Defeat Saints

In Football Match.
Before a large gathering of onlookers the Saints and B. I. S. faced off on St. George's Field last evening, the latter coming off victorious by 3 goals to 1.
Mr. Kerr was referee and the players were:—
B.I.S.—Phalen, goal; T. Duggan, Walsh, backs; Brown, Burke, Thomas, halves; Brien, Hart, Morgan, Phalen, Smith, forwards.
Saints — L. Ewing, goal; Pearce, Belbin, backs; Calvert, Barnes, Foster, halves; Ankenleck, Elton, McCowan, Reid, Bastow, forwards.
Inside of ten seconds from the start of play the Irish scored through Hart and a few minutes later Smith did the needful. In the next period each team scored once. The teams showed lack of practice and individual play was indulged in too much. There was a noticeable change in the line-ups since their previous appearance. The Saints seemed to be slow rushing the goal while the Irish satisfied themselves at times with skying the ball.

Bell Island Fisherman.

Bell Island prior to the opening of the Iron Mines, was a prosperous farming and fishing habitation but of late years the younger generation have entirely abandoned the fishery and it is doubtful to-day if they would know how to set a trawl. However, history is now repeating itself, for Mr. Geo. Normora and Mr. Patrick Bowden have gone into the business on a large scale and to date have a few hundred quintals of the finest quality of codfish curing for the market.

Welcome to Sir Edgar Bowring.

Bowring bears an honored name since in the days of yore, when the founder to Newfoundland came. To dwell upon our shore. They toiled among our fathers here, and always did the right. And generous when they, I declare, Down to our present Knight.
Sir Edward comes once more to see The land that gave him birth, We welcome him right loyally To-day with glee and mirth. He helped our cause with heart and hand Across on England's Isle, So all true hearts in Newfoundland Will praise him for his toil.

The gifts which he unto us gave And to our bold brave sons Who nobly sailed across the wave To fight our foes the Huns, We always will remember those, They'll keep his memory green And fresh as each sweet scented rose Which at Bowring Park are seen.
We all delight to honor him, The rich man and the poor, To-day we'll sound his name with vim All round our native shore; We always for the Bowring's felt Respect for them at home, We wish Sir Edgar wealth and health For many years to come.
JAMES MURPHY, July 4th, 1916.

6 Months For Theft.

An old offender named Baird, convicted of the larceny of an overcoat, was sentenced to six months imprisonment to day by Judge Hutchings. A week ago Baird was arrested when he admitted having stolen the article and having sold it at a second-hand clothing store for $2.50, which amount he received from the purchaser. Since then the prisoner was remanded while the police were getting after the man who bought the coat. The latter was summoned to court to-day, but the evidence submitted satisfied His Honor that the defendant could not be fastened with the blame of having any guilty knowledge of theft when making the purchase.

A Dozen Deaths From Unknown Disease.

Six more deaths, or twelve altogether, have occurred as a result of the outbreak of the unknown disease near Little River, which is in the interior of Ramea on the S. W. Coast. We understand that Dr. Wilson, of Harbor Breton, has proceeded to investigate and ascertain the nature of the malady with a view to coping with cases as they develop.

Wedding Bells

DUNCAN—ROSS.
The wedding took place at Gowan Brae, Topsail Road, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Henderson, on June 22th, of Miss Elsie Duncan, eldest daughter of the late John and Grace Grant Duncan, to Mr. Alexander Ross, of Banffshire, Scotland. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. S. Sutherland; the bridesmaids were Miss Josephine Duncan and Miss Marguerite Ross. The groom was supported by William Duncan, brother of the bride. They left by the evening train for Tor's Cove. They were the recipients of many useful and valuable presents.
FLEET—BLOYD.
On the 21st June, a very pretty wedding was solemnized at the R. C. Cathedral, when Miss Bessie Fleet, daughter of Mr. William Fleet, of Spencer Street, and Mr. George Floyd, son of John Floyd, of St. John's, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony by the Rev. Mr. Dermott. The bride was handsomely attired in a costume of white voile with hat to match and carried a bouquet of white roses, the bridesmaid being her sister Miss M. Fleet, who looked charming in a dress of white embroidery. Mr. George Chapter ably supported the groom. Following the ceremony a sumptuous supper was partaken of at the residence of the bride's parents where a great number of friends assembled. Games were participated in until the early hours of the morning. The presents received were many and useful.

10.30 A.M.
GERMAN COMMENT ON ALLIED OFFENSIVE.

AMSTERDAM, To-day. The beginning of the Anglo-French offensive was announced by the German press under heavy headlines. From the great Champagne battle of last autumn, says the Cologne Gazette, we know the imposing preparation with which the French staff introduced such enterprises. We can be certain that on the enemy's side nothing will be lacking with regard to the technical means of piercing our lines. For seven days artillery fire was poured over our trenches; our brave troops must have greeted it as a deliverance when at last the enemy storming columns came on. We should not be deceived by the fact that the enemy reports already speak of great successes; only within the next few days will it be possible to ascertain how far the general attack has brought the enemy. The Cologne Volks Zeitung refers to the "futility of holding the foremost German trenches in the face of the enormous energy of the attack, but notes that the attacking forces have not succeeded in piercing the German front. Although Germany confronts the coming battle with confidence, says the paper, nevertheless the movement is without doubt fraught with significance and perhaps decisive results. Great Britain, it adds, now for the first time has to bear the main burden of the British arm in France, it continues, is strong and well equipped. Britain's industry, after it was organized for war, has scored great achievements in the manufacture of guns and shells. Thus prepared, it believes it can now at last gain a war dance on the soil of Northern France. As regards the military fitness of the English troops, it has now an opportunity to show what it is.

THE FRENCH PROGRESS.
PARIS, To-day.

The French advancing east of Avocourt Wood have captured Chapitre Wood and the village of Feuilleres. Further to the south Assovillers was taken by an infantry assault, according to an official statement issued by the War Office to-night. South of Assovillers the French have taken advances as far as the outskirts of Estires, and advanced beyond the second German line, where they have captured the villages of Bruscourt and Flancourt. The total advance in this section was five kilometres.

THE FRANCO-BRITISH OFFENSIVE.
LONDON, To-day.

To-day's news is again of continued progress in the Anglo-French offensive. Heavy fighting is proceeding along the line. The British maintained all positions south of the Amore River, where the battle still rages. They have captured La Boisselle, the garrison of which surrendered, and are fighting successfully around Ouilleville north of Fricourt. The British, people learned for the first time to-night that the famous French General Foch, who has won great reputation during the course of the war, is directing the operations south of the Somme River. This has given increased confidence in the result of the Allied offensive. The French captured Herbecourt and Asseliers, and have made other substantial gains, taking additional prisoners and heavy guns, thus making great progress in the direction of the important German junction of Peronne, which is only a little over three miles distant from their advance at Herbecourt. The non-committal character of the German official issued today is considered in London as a virtual confirmation of the success of the Anglo-French operations. The Germans admit divisions of their forces, abutting on both banks of the Somme, which were partially withdrawn on Saturday and have not been brought back to the second line. No data is yet forthcoming from either side as to the casualties suffered. According to a German communication, the Anglo-French losses were extraordinarily heavy, according to unofficial British reports, however, the British casualties were less than had been expected. All reports emphasize the tremendous nature of the British bombardment. The gunners worked so incessantly as almost to fall asleep at their guns. When there was a slight recess in the firing, they slept easily amid the thunders of battle. Great importance is attached to the newly invented mortar, which plays havoc in the German trenches. Air craft are taking an important role in the operations. Thus far the new offensive appears to have had little influence on the battle around Verdun. The Germans are still showing undiminished vigor in the Meuse region and the French are steadily resisting.

11.00 A.M.
DETAILS OF THE DRIVE.
LONDON, To-day.

Under command of the dashing General Foch, the French troops which are co-operating with the British in the great offensive in the Somme River region have made notable gains in the direction of Peronne, one of the most important strategic points. They have captured Horecourt, Feuilleres and Flancourt. Further south the French infantry stormed and occupied Asseliers. They followed this by carrying the second line of German entrenchments as far as the outskirts of Estires; then came the capture of Bruscourt and Flancourt. Something over three miles was thus gained, which added to previous gains, gives the French troops a clear advance of about six miles, the furthest point being within three miles of Peronne. Meanwhile the British are moving more slowly but over a longer front have captured La Boisselle, where the fighting for the past two days has been of the fiercest character. The British also report substantial progress in some places and the repulse of many counter-attacks by the Germans. The British troops, however, have been forced back from some positions which they had taken early on Monday morning, and it is evident that the German artillery fire has become much heavier than during the earlier stages of the battle. The prisoners taken by the British so far number 4,300, while the French have captured 8,000 or more. War material taken by the French includes 7 batteries, 3 of large calibre, many machine guns, other batteries and casemates also fell into the hands of the French. Beyond the withdrawal of a division from this front line of trenches, the German official makes no more reference to the battle now progressing. The Verdun operations are apparently slackening, although at certain points a heavy bombardment is being carried out by artillery, the infantry are resting. Aerial activity is increasing, in connection with the battle of the Somme hundreds of machines are being engaged reconnoitering and directing the guns and fighting. In the three days engagements the British lost 15 machines. Heavy fighting on many parts of the Russian front. The Italian offensive continues without cessation, both artillery and infantry being employed in strong force against the Austrians.

NOON.
THE IMPORTANCE OF PERONNE.
LONDON, To-day.

The military expert of the London Daily News says that whatever intentions may be in the minds of Joffre and Haig, it is clear that a battle on a big scale is developing both north and south of the Somme Valley. A tactical push is evidently being made up the Somme towards Peronne, which is four miles from Herbecourt, now in French hands, and directly threatened by the French advance. Peronne is on the main line of railway between Cambrai and Roye, which runs pretty nearly parallel to the front held by the Germans in this locality, and must be their principal line of lateral communication. We only need look at the line representing the position of the opposing forces on the map to realise the significance of this advance up the Somme. The Allies must be numerically superior to the Germans along the front, and they evidently have established an equality, if not preponderance, of artillery strength. Meanwhile, there are indications that pressure has already been taken off Verdun.

The Allies' Drive is On.

Grand Offensive on Three Fronts is Now Beginning—Great Battles Are Expected—Plans for the Drive Were Agreed Upon at Conference in Paris Russians and Italians Have Started Attacks, British and French to Follow.
(By Arthur S. Draper.)
London, June 26.—At last the grand offensive of the Allies, long heralded, longer delayed, is already well under way. It has been left to admissions from the Central Powers to establish its existence.

In the East the Russians, while still held up in their advance on Kovel by the Germans, are continuing their advance against the Austrians in the South. Their flank now protected by the Carpathians, they have turned northward in their sweep through Bukovina, and are now approaching Kolomea. They are already within ten miles of the town.
Thus, though the Germans do succeed in preventing progress from the north, they may still force the evacuation of Lemberg and Tarnopol by advancing from the south. Similar tactics were successful when the Russians took the city before.

Germans on Defensive.
To stem the Russian tide, the Germans have taken over the defence of the whole sector from Kovel down to Brody. They have replaced the shattered ranks of the Archduke Frederick with fresh regiments from the West front, who are called upon here to undergo the same artillery hell they experienced at Verdun.

The semi-official Paris "Temps" also voices the view that the Allies' offensive is at hand. Its military expert, regarded as one of the most competent in Europe, declares that "the hour of action for the Allies is here. Attacks succeeds defence on many fronts." It sees especial significance in the visit of Premier Briand to the headquarters of Sir Douglas Haig, the British Commander, on Saturday and Sunday.

The Allies' Plan.
The Allies' plan, as it is understood here by military men, is not for any combination of assault on all fronts at once. Instead they are perfectly content to allow events to take their course, and as weak links in the Teuton defence disclose themselves, strike with overwhelming might.

This strategy was agreed upon at the Allied conference in Paris, and was subsequently developed in greater detail by General Joffre in his recent conferences here with Sir William Robertson, British Chief of Staff. To aid co-ordinating it with Russian plans is believed to have been the mission of Lord Kitchener when he lost his life in the sinking of the Hampshire while on his way to Petrograd.

The weakening of the Austrian lines in Galicia for their assault in the Trentino gave the Russians the first opportunity of taking the offensive. With their success here, the Teutons were forced to withdraw troops from the Italian West fronts. Now the Italians, in turn, have resumed the attack.

On the French Front.
The Germans have been slower in withdrawing men from the French front because they knew of the formidable massing of troops that has been going on behind the Anglo-French lines. In fact, military observers declare that the Verdun assault has been prolonged in order to forestall any Allied offensive. Against the British portion of the front alone it is estimated that the Germans have maintained in reserve no less than 700,000 men.

That these at last are being withdrawn, either to throw into the final effort on the Meuse or to stay the Russian drive, seems to be the meaning of the "important battles" which Berlin records as developing on that front.

"They" are not Wearing Them.

RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON.

In a shop the other day I was looking for an outing hat. All the hats were straw. Now I had seen a most delectable linen hat the year before or thought I had; very likely it was the face under it seem desirable, and I decided that I would have a hat like that this year. So I turned from the straw hats and asked the girl if there weren't any linen hats.

"They're not wearing linen hats this year," she said, disapprovingly. "Haven't you any at all?" I persisted.

"She opened a drawer grudgingly, and drew forth an armful. One of them I found much more becoming than any of the straw hats.

"She was bound I shouldn't have Linen.

"But they're not wearing them at all," she persisted. "I know you'd like the straw much better."

In other words, it was simply incomprehensible to her that anyone should prefer a hat that was not what "they are wearing," even if it were more becoming.

I am sure if I had told her that the fact that it was indifferent was a recommendation rather than a drawback, she would have thought me violently instead of mildly insane.

There really are people not afraid of "They."

Yet there really are people who like to challenge the styles now and then instead of following them slavishly.

"I meant to get a black and white coat this year," a friend said to me regretfully. "Well, why don't you?" I asked. "There seem to be plenty of them to choose from."

"That's why," she answered. "There are too many. I'm going to get something else and rest people's eyes with it."

She Looks Different. In this season of colored blouses, one of the best-dressed women I know still refuses to wear anything but the sheer and dainty white blouses she has always worn. I do love the little colored blouses, but there are so many of them this year that her whiteness strikes a distinctive and refreshing note.

To wear something unbecoming just for the sake of being different is an affectation.

To wear something unbecoming just for the sake of being in the style is foolish.

The golden mean is to wear the things that best become you, whether they are exactly what "they are wearing" or not.

Von Hindenburg.

Pen Picture of the German General. An American journalist—James O'Donnell Bennett—who has been with the Eastern German Army, thus depicts General the Field-Marshal Paul von Beneckendorff and von Hindenburg.

He is at dinner in the main dining-room of the Hotel de Rome, which the Hunns now call Gasthaus Start Rom.

On the table is a large bunch of early lilacs-of-the-valley, which the Germans call schnee gluckchen (little bells of the snow) in a vase and some pink carnations. The waiter who is serving the party wears white gloves. He is the only waiter in the room who does.

The rich brown of the tapestry on the wall behind the field-marshal finely outlines his big square head. All through his meal his manner is quiet, modest, unself-conscious, and he bears the eager scrutiny of the room without giving a sign.

Sad Searching Eyes. On his breast are three decorations, among them the Iron Cross of the second class, which he won in the Franco-Prussian War, when he was a lieutenant of twenty-three years. His grey-white hair is cropped close at the back and sides of the head and in a wide, flat pompadour on the top, and that emphasizes the squareness of his head. His forehead is low, his nose smallish, his complexion pale, and the skin like fine parchment.

The notable feature of his face is the eyes. It is they, and the big moustache and the strong jaw that give the man his lionlike aspect. There are deep, heavy, sad lines under the eyes and at each side of the mouth. Even the large black moustache does not conceal the latter.

The eyes, too, are sad—small, and searching eyes—small, not wonderful when the general's attention is not roused, but at once starting and commanding in their effect when he becomes alert. When he turns them on you you know it—and the realization is accompanied almost by a gasp. One glance searches a man.

There is power in the well-poised head and in the erect shoulders, and that impression of power is increased because the man moves so little. For many minutes he seems to sit motionless, and when he does move it is with slow deliberation. His countenance is not stern, but melancholy and meditative; not gloomily, though, for there is a sweetness in it that none of the portraits quite convey, for the painters are inclined to make him burly.

Von Hindenburg's hands are small for the man's size and very white, and at dinner he used them almost in a dandified way in stroking his moustache; and when he applied his serviette to his lips he did it fastidiously. His table manners are much more scrupulous than those of most Germans of either high or low degree.

A few minutes later the field-marshal rose from the table, and every man in the room, civilian as well as military, rose with him and stood facing him in perfect silence. There was something very thrilling about this, and when it happened the lips of the women trembled and the eyes of some of them filled with tears.

The old man bowed low and kissed the countess's hand. Then he advanced from the table and faced the room, bowing three or four times this way and that, and saying, in a deep, suave voice, "Adieu, adieu, adieu."

It was then that you got the effect of his Bismarckian proportions and poise. He is six feet tall, and he carries himself so well that he looks more than that. He made a superb picture of quiet dignity, and as he stood there he seemed indubitably a great, simple, commanding man. He dominated that room full of notable soldiers, men of title, and civilians of power.

It was the eyes as much as anything that wrought the spell, for they were not any more the eyes of a drowsy old lion but of a lion that was seeing everything.

Two servants hurried to the door, swung it wide, and stood at attention, while the general, followed by the solicitous Bernhard, made his exit. In the entree he paused to respond to the bows of the hotel staff.

Everyday Etiquette!

"Should a married woman have her own Christian name on her visiting cards? Should she use her husband's title?" asked Mrs. Newlywed.

"It is customary for a married woman to have her husband's entire name after the prefix 'Mrs.' She should never use her husband's title," said her older sister.

Handsome Sailing Craft in Port. A handsome and able craft is the "Edith M. Cavell," which arrived here yesterday from Shelburne. The vessel was recently launched from the yards of McKay & Son, at that port. She is a credit to her builders. As she came up the harbor yesterday, her white hull and sails glistening in the sunlight, her graceful lines standing out boldly against the dark background of water, she looked like a beautiful yacht. The "Edith M. Cavell" was built for John Penny & Sons, Ramona, Nfld., and will engage in dry fish freighting to Mediterranean and Brazilian ports. Capt. E. G. Vallis is master of the vessel. Her plank is all oak and beech, and a greater portion of her frame work is of oak. Her cabin is spacious and is finished in polished oak. She is fitted with auxiliary hoisting gear and in every way as modern as science can make a sailing vessel. The "Edith M. Cavell" is 172 tons. The schooner will load part cargo of general freight for Ramona and Burgeo.

Rev. Dr. Bond is Leaving.

Rev. Dr. Bond, who has been pastor of the Sackville Methodist church during the last year, will leave this week for St. John's, Nfld. He will become pastor of the Cochrane Street Methodist Church in that city. Many people in Sackville will regret Dr. Bond's departure. Seldom has the Methodist church here had a more popular pastor, and one whose sermons were listened to more attentively. Dr. Bond always gives his hearers something to carry home with them. At the close of the service Sunday evening the doctor said goodbye to his Sackville congregation.—Sackville Post, June 27th.

Our Base PLAGIARISE

To-morrow morning's game the CUBS and WANDERERS be interesting. A win for the would be welcomed by all the and the fans generally, as the race then in the first round was exciting.

The addition of Orr on third CUBS will greatly strengthen the field, as besides being a clever man, Orr has the reputation of a terrific slugger, and has been all season with his schooling which made a successful and out tour through Rhode Island Connecticut.

King, the WANDERERS' slugger, the last game seemed a fussy facing lefthanded batter by all the CUBS are lefties, King should not be as effective against the LIONS.

The game will start promptly 10.30 with Umpire Chesman, and Mr. Outerbridge having scores from his dugout.

The line up will probably be:

CUBS.	WANDERERS.
Hall	Pitcher.
Clouston	Catcher.

Our Baseball Column.
PLAGIARISED AND OTHERWISE.

Owing to the St. Bon's Sports being run off for Patriotic purposes, the Baseball League have decided not to play any afternoon game.

Our good friends, the "Daily News," are evidently a little mixed on the world-famed baseballers John J. McGrath and Christy Mathewson, the famous manager and pitcher respectively of the New York Giants. In Friday's issue they published Christy's picture and called it Jawn J's, and yesterday they presented Jawn's and labelled it Christy.

The gentleman who runs the baseball column in the "Star" also needs a slight correction, and I am sure he will thank us for pointing it out to him. Over his dome appears the heading "On the Gridiron." Now the gridiron is always associated with the American game of football (which is somewhat similar to our English rugby), and the reason for its name is that the playing field is marked off in diagonal strips, being somewhat similar in appearance to that very useful culinary article the GRIDIRON. Thus, speaking of the GRIDIRON refers to football only, and the proper term to use when speaking of baseball would be the DIAMOND.

We have received a letter signed "Cub" asking us to publish the schedule of games for 1916 (which we do below) and requesting us "to define a sacrifice hit (not a fly)." In reply to his last query Spalding's Annual gives the following definition of a sacrifice: "With less than two out an intentional bunt which advances a base runner or base runners but resulting in the batsman being thrown out at first. The batsman gets credited in the batting averages with a hit just the same as if he had hit safely and reached first."

"Talking to your opponents is not prohibited by the rules, partly because it ought not to be necessary, and possibly because no rules can make a gentleman out of a muck. No good sportsman is ever guilty of cheap talk to an opponent. Let the Fans do it."

Is there any truth in the report that Danny Rossiter is coming down here again this summer? Danny, it will be remembered, was the little "Born in Newfoundland" youngster who saved the city from defeat against the Grand Falls in 1914 and then won the Penman and Allen Cup for the Shamrocks by his work on the mound. There is a funny little history about his appearing on the diamond here. At the close of the season and after he had left for New York, some on "discovered" that he had not been born in Newfoundland and was therefore not eligible to play, though the League had decided in a special secret session that he was a Newfoundlander who left here when a small child with his parents, and that as Newfoundland was his native country there was nuthin' to it but that he was eligible. Subsequently it was found that the League's confidence has either been misplaced or that fake records had been produced. There the matter ends, some contending now that as he was permitted to play before whether eligible or not, he should be allowed to play without question when he arrives here. While we ourselves do not hold with this view exactly, still it is only fair that Mr. Rossiter himself should be given an opportunity to explain his position before commenting on his case.

Topsail Welcomes Sir Edgar Bowring.

Yesterday the people of Topsail turned out in large numbers to welcome home our distinguished townsman, Sir Edgar R. Bowring. The village was nicely and profusely decorated with flags, strings of these being stretched across the main road at intervals of about one hundred yards, more or less from Woodstock to the far end of Chamberlain's, a distance of three miles. At Woodstock, there was erected a handsome arch, decorated with flags, having been built by the people of Topsail, and near the Church of England school house a very large and handsome arch was erected and decorated with flags with motto, "Welcome" in large scroll letters on a white ground. Underneath this arch the accompanying address was read by Mr. J. F. Bancroft, President of the Topsail Branch of the Patriotic Association:

ADDRESS
To the Honorable Sir Edgar R. Bowring, Knight, M.L.C., etc., etc.
Dear Sir,—

When the historian of the future tells the story of Newfoundland, the name of Bowring must figure prominently. The generous public benefactions and private benefactions with which your firm, and you, personally, are identified, and in the promotion of which you have been the moving and predominant factor, speak more eloquently than any words of ours. The great struggle for Right and Liberty in which our beloved Empire is now engaged, has found patriotic and loyal support in Newfoundland. Our boys on Field and Flood are upholding the Flag fearlessly and valiantly, and it is a matter of grateful pride to know that in every possible way their interests have been safeguarded and protected, and their physical comfort fostered and assured through your personal helpfulness and devoted service.

Whilst we recognize with gratitude the manner in which you have aided the Empire of which, this, your native island is a part, we cannot forget that you are a resident of Topsail, and therefore take this opportunity to express to you (not only on behalf of ourselves, but on behalf of the fathers, mothers and relatives of every soldier and sailor that have joined the forces) our admiration and affection for all your goodness to "Our Boys" of the Newfoundland Regiment and the Royal Naval Reserve, and to wish you all happiness, honors and prosperity that life can offer.

We rejoice that it is our privilege to know you as a fellow citizen, and although you move in larger circles and in other lands, the old homeland remains first in your thoughts, and that once again you have returned to spend some weeks in our midst. On behalf of the residents of Topsail, whose esteem, affection and respect it is our privilege to voice.

We are, dear Sir Edgar, your true friends and earnest well wishers: James F. Bancroft, Chairman; Jabez H. Butler, Treasurer; James K. Bursell, Secretary; Rev. T. G. Netten, Canon C. E. Cathedral, and Incumbent, Topsail; Rev. James Nurse, Methodist Minister; Rev. Fr. Kelly, P.P., Topsail; John J. Butler, Reginald Hibbs, F. A. Hill, Samuel Squires, Joseph Fowler, Wilfred Barnes, John Mercer, Harvey Daws, Pierce O'Brien, Thomas O'Brien, Patrick O'Brien.

Sir Edgar, who was evidently taken completely by surprise, responded briefly and feelingly, being evidently much touched by the expression of good will from his Topsail neighbors. He was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. John S. Munn, Mr. Eric Bowring and Mr. Arthur Donnelly, who had motored with him from the city. At the close, Mr. Bursell, the Hon. Secretary of the Topsail P.A., called for cheers for Sir Edgar Bowring, and our gallant soldiers and sailors, which were accorded a ringing response.

THE F. F. DALLEY CO., Ltd., Buffalo, N. Y.

"Greater Canada" By Union With the West Indies.

That is the Vision of Mr. Harry J. Crowe Who Fuses the Trade and Imperial Advantages of Adding a Vast Tropical Empire to the Dominion.

Mr. Harry J. Crowe arrived in Halifax yesterday on the steamer Halifax and on route to Newfoundland, in which island he is greatly interested. He has shown extraordinary energy with success in large undertakings and has been a keen supporter in favor of uniting the Ancient Colony with Canada. He is now looking forward with strong hopes for a "Greater Canada" by the Confederation of the British West Indies.

The Morning Chronicle, having noticed very flattering and extensive articles in several Canadian newspapers, referring to Mr. Crowe's ideas to establish a political and commercial union between Canada and the British West Indies, secured an interview. When asked his views on this subject he said:

"Every intelligent man, that is taking any thought of the future, knows that a new map of the world is about to be made, with a revolution of all trade relations. What is Canada doing in the matter? We find Australia and New Zealand have won tropical islands from the Germans, and when peace comes they will develop these possessions. South Africa also is adding German colonies to her territory and after this war will devote itself to the development of what amounts, in reality, to a tropical empire. Canada has won no territory, nor will she as far as this war is concerned, although she certainly is paying her full share of the price. There is an opportunity now for her acquiring a rich tropical territory, the British West Indies, larger than the Dominion of New Zealand, and with double its population, without the expenditure of millions or the shedding of blood."

les to her territory and after this war will devote itself to the development of what amounts, in reality, to a tropical empire. Canada has won no territory, nor will she as far as this war is concerned, although she certainly is paying her full share of the price. There is an opportunity now for her acquiring a rich tropical territory, the British West Indies, larger than the Dominion of New Zealand, and with double its population, without the expenditure of millions or the shedding of blood."

The Practical Side.
"Do you think, Mr. Crowe, that this is capable of practical realization? Do you think there is any sentiment in Jamaica for union with Canada in view of this island recently refusing the overtures of our trade commissioners for closer trade relations with us?"

Mr. Crowe replied with enthusiasm: "The day for dreaming has passed and we Canadians must be up and doing. Jamaica declined our overtures because they feared the United States would retaliate and penalize them in her large banana trade, should she give any preference to Canada. Confederation and better trade relations are vastly different propositions."

"If Jamaica became a part of the Dominion, the island would always be treated with the greatest respect and consideration by the United States, in view of the fact that we are the United States' best customers and they rely greatly upon us for their raw material. Therefore a proposition for Confederation would remove all former fears in Jamaica."

"The editor of the Gleaner, the largest newspaper in the British West Indies, after I fully discussed with him the matter of Confederation, said recently in an able article favoring union with Canada: 'There is now in the Empire a solidly Imperial sentiment, of Oneness of outlook, which suggests a reorganization of Imperial relationship. If the British West Indies stood with Canada as one political, economic unit, their position would be greatly strengthened. They would be a part of a larger Canada, a Greater Canada, a Canada that had proved her worth on the battlefield as well as on the peaceful plains of trade and commerce.'

"Many leading Jamaicans are extremely interested in the prospect of an alliance with Canada and display an agreeableness with regard to subsidy and representation that should meet the wishes of Canada."

Consumers of Tropical Products.
Mr. Crowe points out that we are becoming large consumers of tropical products. During the last nine years this consumption has increased from sixteen millions in 1906 to thirty millions in 1915.

"Apart from the sugar, three-fourths of these imports come to Canada from the United States. At the same ratio our consumption of tropical products in ten years will exceed fifty millions, having regard to our future expansion. This should impress all Canadians with the importance of possessing tropical territory. 'The geographical position of Jamaica will be of great importance to Canada in the future, lying as it does in such close proximity to the Panama Canal, and is in the pathway of the future expansion of trade with South America for the United States as well as for Canada. In as much as the future development of British Columbia will probably be through the Panama canal, having this British island a part of Canada, may be of great strategical value."

"By rounding off our Dominion with the B. W. I., including British Honduras and British Guiana we would add one hundred and ten thousand square miles of rich tropical territory which we now lack, thus giving us every variety of climate and resources, placing us on a superior footing with our neighbor to the south of us in this respect."

Control of Great Market.
"If we continue to buy British West India products through the United States, where returned cargoes are furnished, we shall lose the benefit of this large interchange of commerce. We ought to buy direct from the British West Indies and not only secure our tropical requirements at a minimum cost but also control their market of two million consumers, for our manufactured and agricultural products. In order to secure this trade we must have a suitable line of boats run up the St. Lawrence into the centers of population where they are now importing their tropical fruit from the United States, much of which comes from Jamaica and other B. W. I. islands. As an illustration we imported last year over $2,000,000 worth of bananas from the United States and only about one thousand dollars worth from the B. W. I. islands. With free trade established between the West Indies and Canada, these steamers will receive cargoes of merchandise at Montreal, St. John and Halifax, which will be confined to the two latter ports during the close of navigation."

"Plain facts are strong arguments and there are many of them to place before the people in favor of this confederation. First and foremost leading Jamaicans themselves would prefer to buy and sell within the Empire. In the future they will raise larger areas of their rich soil for the development of a sugar industry, the growth of which will be stimulated as a result of this war. Canada needs this sugar."

Secure New Markets.
"The key note of the discussion that took place in the Manufacturer's Association Convention, held a few days ago in Hamilton, was for an expansion of our trade, securing new markets for our manufactured and agricultural products, having regard to the severe lean countries after the war, where they will work overtime at a low rate of wages for their existence."

"During this reconstruction period we are bound to face a serious labor problem. Our three to four hundred of munition factories will cease operations, throwing thousands out of employment. Over two hundred thousand of our brave boys beyond the seas will be seeking labor on their return home. Following them will come hundreds of thousands of other boys and men of other nations, hastening to turn their backs on war cursed Europe. How are we going to take care of them all? They must be placed on the soil and in our factories. Hence the importance of enlarging our markets."

"If the British West Indies," continued Mr. Crowe, "were united with Canada, Newfoundland might be further stimulated to enter the Confederation. She would see a free market of two million consumers, where she could dispose of enormous quantities of fish; and like us import direct from the planter, sugar, molasses, and all kinds of tropical fruits."

Canada a Big Brother.
"As for matters of sentiment," said Mr. Crowe, "why should not all the inhabitants of the British West Indies have Canada for a big brother. We should be glad to assist in the development of her coloured population; a population that will never invade Canada on account of our climate. This population, gentle with kindly feeling and craving further enlightenment would eagerly grasp the friendly hand of a big brother of the same Imperial family."

"We are all, black or white, proud children of the greatest Empire in the world. The Mother Country would probably look with favor upon such a union," continued this ardent Imperialist thoughtfully. "Let us have a greater Canada, a Canada comprising the beloved ancient colony of Newfoundland whose inhabitants have been so strangely shy, so unaccountably reluctant about entering into partnership with our rich young nation. There is no way we can strengthen the Mother Country more than by using our best endeavours to bring about closer and more intimate political and commercial relations between her outlying, scattered colonies."

"Let us not be un-expansionists or little Canadians, and above all let us not look upon this as a party question. We are all patriots whether Liberals or Conservatives. When a question of national importance arises we are first of all Canadians, then afterwards politicians."

"Let us join hands with our sister colonies, for a union that will be a very tower of strength and protecting bulwark to our beloved Mother Country in the day of peace, as well as during such a time of stress and warfare through which it is passing at the present day. We love her, we honor her, and to her we would give the strength of loyalty and support that will follow such a Confederation as the British West Indies, Newfoundland and Canada." - Halifax Morning Chronicle.

Mr. Crowe's views on the subject of a political and commercial union between Canada and the British West Indies, secured an interview. When asked his views on this subject he said:

"Every intelligent man, that is taking any thought of the future, knows that a new map of the world is about to be made, with a revolution of all trade relations. What is Canada doing in the matter? We find Australia and New Zealand have won tropical islands from the Germans, and when peace comes they will develop these possessions. South Africa also is adding German colonies to her territory and after this war will devote itself to the development of what amounts, in reality, to a tropical empire. Canada has won no territory, nor will she as far as this war is concerned, although she certainly is paying her full share of the price. There is an opportunity now for her acquiring a rich tropical territory, the British West Indies, larger than the Dominion of New Zealand, and with double its population, without the expenditure of millions or the shedding of blood."

"Do you think, Mr. Crowe, that this is capable of practical realization? Do you think there is any sentiment in Jamaica for union with Canada in view of this island recently refusing the overtures of our trade commissioners for closer trade relations with us?"

Mr. Crowe replied with enthusiasm: "The day for dreaming has passed and we Canadians must be up and doing. Jamaica declined our overtures because they feared the United States would retaliate and penalize them in her large banana trade, should she give any preference to Canada. Confederation and better trade relations are vastly different propositions."

"If Jamaica became a part of the Dominion, the island would always be treated with the greatest respect and consideration by the United States, in view of the fact that we are the United States' best customers and they rely greatly upon us for their raw material. Therefore a proposition for Confederation would remove all former fears in Jamaica."

"The editor of the Gleaner, the largest newspaper in the British West Indies, after I fully discussed with him the matter of Confederation, said recently in an able article favoring union with Canada: 'There is now in the Empire a solidly Imperial sentiment, of Oneness of outlook, which suggests a reorganization of Imperial relationship. If the British West Indies stood with Canada as one political, economic unit, their position would be greatly strengthened. They would be a part of a larger Canada, a Greater Canada, a Canada that had proved her worth on the battlefield as well as on the peaceful plains of trade and commerce.'

"Many leading Jamaicans are extremely interested in the prospect of an alliance with Canada and display an agreeableness with regard to subsidy and representation that should meet the wishes of Canada."

Consumers of Tropical Products.
Mr. Crowe points out that we are becoming large consumers of tropical products. During the last nine years this consumption has increased from sixteen millions in 1906 to thirty millions in 1915.

"Apart from the sugar, three-fourths of these imports come to Canada from the United States. At the same ratio our consumption of tropical products in ten years will exceed fifty millions, having regard to our future expansion. This should impress all Canadians with the importance of possessing tropical territory. 'The geographical position of Jamaica will be of great importance to Canada in the future, lying as it does in such close proximity to the Panama Canal, and is in the pathway of the future expansion of trade with South America for the United States as well as for Canada. In as much as the future development of British Columbia will probably be through the Panama canal, having this British island a part of Canada, may be of great strategical value."

"By rounding off our Dominion with the B. W. I., including British Honduras and British Guiana we would add one hundred and ten thousand square miles of rich tropical territory which we now lack, thus giving us every variety of climate and resources, placing us on a superior footing with our neighbor to the south of us in this respect."

Control of Great Market.
"If we continue to buy British West India products through the United States, where returned cargoes are furnished, we shall lose the benefit of this large interchange of commerce. We ought to buy direct from the British West Indies and not only secure our tropical requirements at a minimum cost but also control their market of two million consumers, for our manufactured and agricultural products. In order to secure this trade we must have a suitable line of boats run up the St. Lawrence into the centers of population where they are now importing their tropical fruit from the United States, much of which comes from Jamaica and other B. W. I. islands. As an illustration we imported last year over $2,000,000 worth of bananas from the United States and only about one thousand

Newfoundland's To-Morrow.

Newfoundland, the "senior colony" of Great Britain, a neighbor but not a part of the Dominion of Canada, and the cause first and last of considerable friction between Great Britain and France, owing to clashes over fishery rights, is doing her share in the filial service of the colonies united to save their motherland. Her seamen, renowned for generations, are fighting with the British fleet in various ways, but always gallantly. Her craft are busy in the transport of goods, and men. Her landmen are at the front. In the west and in the east, and are equalling any of the colonials in courage and elan.

Looking ahead, as to what may and should come to pass, in case of a victory of the Allies, the colony's statesmen now foresee not only changes with respect to Imperial federation and unification, but also in the attitude to be shown to the Dominion of Canada, and to the plan of merging Newfoundland with it. There seems to be agreement that the next move must proceed from St. John's, and not from Ottawa. Canada's overtures in the past have not been cordially welcomed; and Newfoundland's last proposition to the Dominion had financial conditions to it which the Ottawa officials very properly were loath to meet.

Newfoundland's fiscal condition today is much better than in 1894-95. She will come, if she comes, as a suit or fairly prosperous, with a treasury so filled that an annual large loss of customs duties, through prohibition of imports of liquors, is not causing any fear of a treasury deficit. The officials, both of the Dominion and of the colony, owing to the influence of the war, are in no mood to haggle over financial phases of the proposed compact of union. They argue that, preceding a federated British Empire, there should be a federated British North America; and in so doing they reason well and sensibly.

But the Newfoundland ministry cannot settle the policy. It is dependent upon the voters. They, it is said, are much more inclined to favor the merger than they were twenty years ago. Memories of past strife with Ottawa have faded away. Where scars are left there is less bitter feeling than there used to be. Canada is not so much under suspicion of being pro-United States as she was then. Her record in the "great war" has convinced Newfoundlanders, as perhaps nothing else could have done, that the Canadian is loyal to London, and to all that city symbolizes in any plan for Imperial federation and unification. St. John's wants the closest sort of relations with the financial centres of Montreal and Toronto, so that Newfoundland's resources may be developed. Thus it is that already the press of Canada and of the colony is busy debating a merger, in which Newfoundland would surrender its autonomy and become a province of a federated Dominion—Boston Monitor.

We have followed with much interest the busy "debate" which has lately been proceeding in the local press over this important question. It has not been remarkable for its volume, whatever its momentous consequences may be. However, we are getting accustomed to receiving news of ourselves from abroad, and we are glad to know from the same source what our attitude towards the question of our national existence really is.—Ed.]

HOLIDAY PICTURES AT NICKEL THEATRE.
The charming serial "The Strange Case of Mary Page" was continued at the Nickel Theatre yesterday and attracted very large audiences. The story is highly interesting; and afforded the greatest pleasure to all. The other pictures were equally as good and were highly praised. "This evening the programme will be repeated. To-morrow there will be a grand holiday bill one of the finest ever shown in St. John's, including "The Romance of Elaine." All should make an effort to attend to-morrow's elaborate show. Bert Stanley, the popular ragtime singer, farewells this week.

Presentation to the Rev. A. G. C. Stamp.

Yesterday the Sunday School children of St. Michael's Church, through their Superintendent, Miss A. Hayward, presented Rev. A. G. C. Stamp with a handsome writing set and a pair of candle sticks, all enclosed in a satin lined morocco leather case. The Superintendent spoke highly of the valuable time given and services rendered the Sunday School by the rev. gentleman, evidenced by the many improvements inaugurated in the past three years.

Mr. Stamp, who was taken by surprise, thanked the children for the beautiful and useful gift and regretted the parting after being so closely connected with them during the past years.

Our Generosity and Hospitality.

Every Newfoundlander is proud of the reputation, we have from visitors here of our generosity and hospitality; no more worthy cause has ever been presented to us to show these natural impulses, than to the Belgian Refugees Artists, who will appear at the Methodist College Hall on the 11th, 13th and 14th inst. Not since "Alban" has anything in their class of concerts been given here; there is a change of programme each night.

All Newfoundlander has done exceedingly well in giving to so many objects the past two years. There is still much to be done; the burden is heavy in many directions, but Newfoundlanders will not fall to carry their share of the load. Let all who can telephone Mrs. Charles Harvey at once, for subscription tickets. To those who cannot do so, we request them to accept this appeal, as a personal canvass, and be ready to subscribe without further request, when called on by Mrs. Harvey, or those assisting her in the sale of tickets.—adv.

A Matter for the Board of Trade.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—A rather serious situation has arisen lately, affecting particularly fishermen who have gone into the business of refining cod-liver oil. A great deal of expenditure has been made in fitting up the Plant, etc., necessary for the work and oil has been purchased and refined. Now I learn that recently the merchants as if by common consent are refusing to purchase this refined oil. I hear that it is a concerted action on their part and it looks very much like a combine, which is of course a very objectionable feature. Now we all have a common interest in our produce. It is to the mutual benefit of merchant and fisherman that there should be co-operation in marketing our produce.

Therefore I hold that this action of the merchants is one which is inimical to the best interests of the Colony and that something should be done, and at once, to relieve the situation and break this deadlock between merchant and fisherman.

The Board of Trade is constituted in the interest of our Trade. It lives, or should live, not for our merchants but for our workers and all producers of our wealth. If the merchants will not act, I commend this oil situation to the Board of Trade and ask for a prompt solution.

Yours truly,
T. N. M.

TOBACCO.

Tobacco is a harmful weed, the learned physicians are agreed. It stains teeth and bites the tongue and injures larynx, heart and lung, it spoils the whistlers, taints the breath, and sends man to an early death, and when he's laid he sends the sod the legal lights divide his wad. And yet if this punk weed were barred, we'd find the sledding pretty hard, for in one thing tobacco's best, in that it soothes the savage breast. And many husbands are sane, who would be quarrelsome and mean, indulging off in mental gripes. If you should take away their pipes, when I am smoking I'm as mild as any gent that ever smiled, and folks who hear me chirp and bleat, remark, "His temper is so sweet!" But when, impelled by aims sublime, I cut out smoking for a time, I'm sore as any growing bear that mumbles sponges in its lair, and all the women in the shack are hoping I will soon get back Dust and Flies.

This is the time of the year when the dirty dust from the streets, and flies are in the air and watching their chance to alight on your bread and bring dirt and disease to your children. Guard against them by buying Lynch's Pan-Dandy Bread, white, and brown, wrapped and sealed by machinery in a dust and germ proof wrapper; it is the only bread in Newfoundland that is made, wrapped and sealed by machinery. Ask your grocer for it. Did you get any of Lynch's Beauty Cake, yet? Oh, what a beauty cake! the best in the land. Ask your grocer for it. June 22nd.

A pretty finish for a silk blouse is a wide girdele sash of the blouse material, draped tight around the waist and knotted in a single loop and end at the side.

Fashions and Fads.

White handkerchiefs with Dresden flower borders are charming for sports wear.

A silk shawl, cleverly used, can be most effective, if worn with Spanish lace.

New bags are all and ruffled, like the skirts, the ruffles having beaded edges.

Royal purple with navy blue is a new color scheme seen in taffeta dresses.

Blouses of contrasting color are now favored for dressy tailored suits of silk.

A pretty blouse is of handkerchief linen in white, dotted with delicate color.

The transparent hat with underbrim trimming is the latest fancy of millinery.

Bright handanna handkerchiefs are being used by women with their sports suits.

Dark blue taffeta is still in favor for silk suits. Often it is edged with tiny knife pleatings.

A plain linen frock for a small too is well trimmed, if edged all around, including the bottom of the skirt, with large scallops of hand embroidery.

"Music Lovers Enjoyed Rare Treat"

The Belgian Royal Concert Company Give a Delightful Performance.

Auditorium and galleries of Convocation Hall of the School for the Blind, were filled to capacity last night when the Belgian Royal Concert Company treated the inalienable music-lovers of Halifax, to a very rare and unusual, if not unique, banquet of tonal arts. The concert was in aid of the Belgian sufferers, and locally was given under the distinguished patronage of His Honor the Lieut. Governor, and Major General Benson.

The receipts will be forwarded to the Fund headquarters (Le Cercle Esperanza), in London for the Belgian sufferers. The function and the musical treat were made possible by the Daughters of the Empire, Halifax, who brought the Belgian Royal Concert Company to the city.

As for the concert itself, it evoked the utmost applause from the auditors, and gave them delectable experiences in the way of choice sensation, aesthetic refreshment, and pure transports of joy. Mr. Jan Collignon, whose son, by the way, has been made a prisoner by the Huns, disclosed a voice of great range, having both a resonant "basse cantante," or baritone, and a rich rounded bass. In the "Toreador Song" from "Carmen," he used his baritone with dramatic poignancy, and in Elgar's ringing "Land of Hope and Glory" he employed both his baritone and bass registers with the beauty and power of the late Pol Plancon. Mr. Collignon was, as were the others, insistently encored. Miss Daisy Jean, 'cellist, was possibly the artist, who most sent the auditors into aesthetic transports. To a technique as finished as that of Schroeder or Cassals, she added to her playing a temperament that made her instrument sigh, sob, or sing a song of triumph in Scriab's noble concerto for 'cello with piano. Here she was the absolute lyrist. But in Popper's famous and difficult "Tarentelle" Miss Jean was the adroit, deft technician, and made a conquest by her brilliant, faultless, chromatic runs, trills and thirds. She received a beautiful bouquet.

It seemed as if Gadske—"Glorious Gadske!" her person and her voice, were reincarnated in Miss Octavio Bellou. Possessing a soprano lyric beauty, she sang with such a clear, flute-like tone, and with such dramatic intensity and expressiveness, Gounod's "La Reine de Saba," and Mimi's poignant song from Puccini's, "La Boheme," that she created an ecstasy of delight. It was all the purest melody, beautifully delivered, and as winsomely sung. Miss Bellou captivated the auditors by singing for one of her encores, "Till the Boys Come Home." She was awarded with a lovely bouquet. Miss Gabrielle Radoux treated the audience to highly finished pianism in the brilliant short forms, much after the dexterous method of Pachmann. Her digital adroitness, inruns and trills suggested fairy fingers at the keyboard, ringing fairy bells, having as she did, a predilection for compositions which employ largely the upper treble registers. She was all art, and artistic in touch, tone and temperament.

Altogether the concert was a very happy evening spent, with pure gain to the heart and the imagination, in the House of Lady Beauty. From the Halifax Chronicle, April 27, 1916.
