The motion originates back in July, 1980 when I was sent as a Canadian observer to the sixteenth Caribbean regional conference. However, my interest in the Caribbean goes back many, many years before that. I guess my first interest was when I visited Barbados many years ago after Trans-Canada Airlines had completed the airport on that island, the completion of which airport led to a substantial increase in tourism in Barbados and the resulting improvement in the economy of that island.

I personally was enchanted with Barbados. In fact, I termed it paradise island. I love the people, their attitude, and above all, I like the music. I mention the music because I will be referring to it in connection with another island in a moment.

I want to tell a couple of stories about Barbados which are pertinent. I talked to one of the barmen at the hotel where I was staying. He had been in Florida for some time. I asked him why he was working in Barbados at a much lower salary than he could get in Florida. He said it was simply because of the wonderful life, that there was a lot more in life than just earning a high salary.

I must agree with him because on that very happy island, when you look at the children very seldom do you see a child crying. They were always well dressed, particularly on Sunday. It was a pleasure to see them going to church on Sunday dressed in their finery.

I remember during my first visit there the emphasis on some of the social problems of these islands. As most people are aware, the majority of the inhabitants of Barbados in those days were what might be termed illegitimate. The church had gone to some length to try to get couples together to be married.

I watched a wedding ceremony. Along with the couple being married was a long line of their children. The observation was made to me that this couple was very brave. Because of their religious beliefs, they were getting married. In return, government assistance for their children was being cut off. As long as they were living in sin and their children were illegitimate, government assistance was available to them. When they got married, they had to start supporting their children. That is indicative of some of the problems in the islands of the Caribbean.

I have been very fortunate in the many years since, having been able to visit many of the Caribbean Islands from Bermuda in the north, through Bahamas and Puerto Rico, right through to the south, including the island of Cuba. I refer to Cuba because one cannot help but notice the difference in an island that is run by a dictatorship.

The first observation is that it seems as if one in three of the male population is in uniform. The difference in the music on that island is something that one cannot help noticing immediately inasmuch as it seems to be disciplined. It is almost as if the people who are playing are playing from music, which they cannot do. They have never been taught from music. It is not the same rhythm. I attribute it to the conditions that pertain in that island.

I did observe while I was there that one of the things they are doing in Cuba is trying to provide a good education for the children. I visited the schools. I noticed the children were well dressed and well disciplined. I could not help but think that if that situation continues, in the years ahead the children in Cuba, because of the ease of communication with Florida and the southern states, will probably want to change the nature of the country in which they live.

Another one of my interests in the Caribbean of which I have spoken in this House on several occasions deals with the sugar industry. One knows that the giant controlling industry in the sugar business throughout the world is Tate and Lyle. It is installed in several islands including Bermuda, Jamaica, Guyana and Trinidad. I hope to speak in this House on other occasions, as I have done in the past. I am disappointed that the Foreign Investment Review Agency and the government have failed to enforce the regulation made by FIRA that Tate and Lyle divest itself of its interest in Redpath Sugars. Those two or three speeches which I made on this subject in the House are on record.

There are some very special problems in the islands of the Caribbean. The disadvantages of island developing derive from a combination of several characteristics of which the most fundamental and most easily identifiable factor is that of size of population and production. An inadequate reservoir of human resources, of potential producers, consumers or taxpayers to facilitate the attainment of self-generating development mitigate against development and, of course, give rise to serious communication problems.

Many Caribbean countries suffer from a limited and in some cases virtually non-existent natural resource base. Such countries are therefore more vulnerable to the disruptions caused by outside influences. Limited population and available land area inevitably expose a country to a greater extent to adversity, whether a natural disaster such as a hurricane or the incipient effects of brain drain.

Whilst I was in the British Virgin Islands in the month of July, 1980, I talked with a government representative from St. Lucia, Mr. Bruce Williams. He recounted to me how much the Island of St. Lucia is in need of assistance for development purposes. He pointed out that the Island of St. Lucia offers valuable incentives for hotel projects, condominiums, holiday villages and also industries. As he says, they enjoy seven years of tax holiday. He also pointed out, of course, that Canadians like St. Lucia, which is a bilingual country. After reviewing the figures which were supplied to me by the Department of External Affairs as well as representatives of the Canadian International Development Agency prior to my visit to the British Virgin Islands, I noted that our imports from the countries of the Caribbean outdistanced the value of our exports to those same countries by a ratio of approximately 2 to 1. I was studying the Commonwealth Caribbean countries of Barbados, Belize, Guyana, Jamaica, Trinidad, Antigua, Dominica, Grenada, Montserrat, St. Kitts, St. Lucia and St. Vincent, and in almost all cases we import from these countries approximately $2 of goods for every $1 that we export back to them. This would indicate to me that we need to look at this imbalance and I suggest that could be beneficial to our own Canadian manufacturers.

On my return from the British Virgin Islands, I wrote to the president of the Canadian International Development Agency, Mr. Marcel Massé, and I stated that in my opinion there is no over-all reviewing body which looks at the total picture, including private and institutional activity and the efforts of the other major assisting nations, the United States and Great Britain. Such a co-ordinating or information-gathering body might affect the direction, amount or the form of aid which we have provided. I am particularly interested in education in the islands.

While in the British Virgin Islands attending the Commonwealth regional conference, I met a group of Canadian teachers who advised me that their federation was funded in part by CIDA. This item is not shown on any listing of aid for the Carribbean that I had received from CIDA prior to my visit to the Caribbean.

I put a question to Mr. Massé which said:

Of the 17 Commonwealth countries of which I understand seven are dependent, do you have a consistent policy as to which countries you are willing to assist, either directly or indirectly?

Mr. Massé stated in his reply:

In your recent letter, you made reference to the need for an over-all reviewing body which would examine the total picture of aid flows to the Caribbean region. By way of background to your inquiry, I should explain that there was in fact a major interdepartmental review made of the Caribbean region which was spearheaded by the Department of External Affairs. All aspects of Canadian interests were looked into as well as the levels of co-operation of other major donors. This review resulted in a document that is presently being considered by the government. It should assign objectives in a co-ordinated fashion to the various governmental organizations involved in the Caribbean.

A little further down in the letter he continues:

—I can only answer by referring to the interdepartmental review that I have mentioned above.

Thus, on December 8, 1980, while still awaiting the set of documents, I thought that the best step to take was to put a motion on the Order Paper asking for the production of documents of interest to persons looking at the situation in the Caribbean. This I did.

A month later, in January of 1981, I noted a rather interesting article in the Ottawa Citizen by Dian Cohen. She starts off by saying:

Consider these facts about the Caribbean:

300,000 Canadians vacation there each year.

$400 million Canadian invested in enterprises there.

$35 million a year is given on our behalf by the Canadian International Development Agency to help West Indians become more affluent in their own countries.

Later in the article she goes on:

Could it be possible that our goodwill, our good money, our sophisticated technology and expertise are not being put to proper use? Is it conceivable that a prime reason why the gap between "rich" and "poor" is growing wider rather than narrowing is that our leaders don't know what they're doing?

On March 9, a headline in The Globe and Mail read "Problems still plague Caricom as defenders seek co-operation". On March 21, in The Financial Post there was a headline which stated "Canada can celebrate Antigua independence." It speaks of the Canadian banks in Antigua; the Royal Bank, the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, and it speaks of the garment industry which is Canadian, of the condominiums owned by Canadians, a paint factory and several hotels in which there is Canadian equity participation. It goes on to say:

All these are dwarfed, however, by the multimillion dollar public projects, including the construction of a new airport for C$10 million, funded by the Canadian International Development Agency, supervised by an official on loan from the federal Department of Transport in Ottawa—

Then the article continues:

Other CIDA projects are the extension and modernization of Antigua's telephone system, school construction and assistance in irrigation. The Canadian Executive Service Overseas is involved in setting up a new prison and rehabilitation system and the Canadian Caribbean scholarship scheme is involved in vocational training.

Mr. Speaker, since we are on the subject of Canadian aid in the Caribbean, I would like to say a few words about the very substantial contribution being made by CUSO. This body, which started out without any assistance in the way of public funds, now receives a large part of its main budget from the Canadian International Development Agency. In some islands in the Caribbean where Canada has no official representative, CUSO is the only visible Canadian presence. CUSO is a non-governmental organization which co-ordinates the recruitment of Canadians who are prepared to work in Third World countries, including the Caribbean area. CUSO workers include teachers, nurses, agricultural and horticultural experts, technicians, fishery experts and food specialists. Thirty-two CUSO workers are now on assignment in various islands in the Caribbean. This number includes nationals working in various projects administered by CUSO. However, CUSO is not exclusively concerned with the transfer of human resources.

During the past few years, CUSO has become well known for supporting self-development projects. Its programs focus on development and change instead of being a straight transfer of technology and staff. CUSO assignments involve a training aspect, and projects supported by CUSO are expected to involve, and to be initiated by the local population.

CUSO helps to set up local non-governmental organizations that eventually will be able to manage their own affairs without outside help. Especially in the smaller islands in the eastern Caribbean, where almost half of the population is under 25 and three-quarters of the local people are unemployed, CUSO is supporting local co-operative projects specifically designed to create jobs. Two examples are the farm co-operative in Grenada and the craft co-operative in Dominica.

CUSO's involvement in such projects covers every stage, from initial planning up to the production and marketing of the finished product. Aid is given in the form of funding, materials and human resources. Each project has an educational aspect that ensures the continuity of the main goal: self-sufficiency.

Although a large part of CUSO's main budget is funded by CIDA, CUSO also receives valuable contributions from other sources, including Third World governments and agencies that pay the salaries of Canadian experts and provide housing, volunteer workers in Canada who give their time and energy to recruiting and selecting CUSO workers, and finally, educational institutions across Canada that provide office space and help with the agency's administration. Finally, the body receives financial contributions from a number of pharmaceutical companies, radio and television stations and newspapers and periodicals. Thanks to these contributions, CUSO's costs in keeping an expert overseas are much lower than for a number of other agencies, including CIDA. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there are agencies working in the Caribbean—

It was important for me to have some information from the government as to the way these various groups co-ordinated their activities.

If I have 30 seconds left, I want to refer to the committee report which was tabled in this House on December 8. As a result of reading that report, which was presented by a committee which was formed on March 18, 1981, I came to the conclusion that the information which the Department of External Affairs—I assume it was that department—was unwilling to provide to me was essential for a better understanding of the problems in the Caribbean. Thus, on December 16 of last year I asked that this motion be transferred, after waiting over one year—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to take just a few minutes of the time of the House to speak about this notice of motion for the production of papers, to urge the government to produce the papers requested by our friend from Montreal and perhaps to make a comment or two about that.

I believe we should have more freedom of information in this country. We should not be so nervous about providing information to the public and to Members of Parliament. That is only one part of what we must do to make this place more meaningful.

I cannot help but think that Parliament is not really working. As an institution it is not really working as it should for opposition members or for government backbenchers. I think we have to reform the rules of this place to make it much more democratic, to make it a place where Members of Parliament actually become legislators, rather than just rubber stamps for government policy or opposition members whose only power is to make speeches, and try to motivate public opinion so we can change the opinions of the executive or the cabinet. I hope Members of Parliament will speak in this House and lobby for some meaningful change. Of course, members of the government must be included in this effort as well.

If the government were to produce papers when requested and make things public, that would be one small step in a direction that is very important in terms of making this institution meaningful, making it work and making our work here useful and worth while to the Canadians who have elected us to this very honourable institution.

In terms of the issue itself, the hon. member who has just spoken referred to the importance of the Caribbean, and I cannot help but agree with him that it is a very important part of the world to our country. As we look at our own country, we see a country of many, many miles of tremendous resources, of mountains, lakes, streams, great prairies and great forest regions. We have almost everything we need in Canada, with perhaps one gereral exception, and that is a warm, tropical, southern climate. The United States has that. I suppose the southern part of China has that. The southern part of the Soviet Union has that, but that is really all we lack.

Mr. Cosgrove: What about Toronto?

Mr. Nystrom: Not even in Toronto do we have that kind of climate. The minister responsible for housing has a lot of hot air from time to time, but we lack that, and it seems to me that the natural place to make up for it is the Caribbean. We are not very far away from the Caribbean countries, and if we had a trading link with Caribbean countries which was more substantial, I think that would be something which would be of great benefit to us as Canadians and also of great benefit to the people who live in the many Caribbean countries.

The part of Canada this trading link would help the most would be the Atlantic provinces, Newfoundland and part of Quebec. That is the natural shipping route between Canada and the Caribbean. There are many things we produce in this country that people in the Caribbean could use. We produce many technological products. We have an aerospace industry and a telecommunications industry. There have been advances in relation to railways and aeroplane motors. We have expertise in hydroelectricity, forestry and so forth. We could provide many things to Caribbean countries to help them develop, to help them become more self-sufficient and more advanced, more developed and more prosperous as a society. In return, we could be importing much more from them. We could be importing things we cannot produce in our own country, such as tropical fruits, bananas and commodities of that sort. We could be importing cotton, sugar and many of the commodities we now import from the United States.

Our trade policy puts too many eggs in one basket, the American basket. About 70 per cent of our trade is with the United States, and it is important that we diversify that trade. Of course, it goes without saying that the United States will remain our main trading partner. We are neighbours. We share a border stretching thousands of kilometres. It is very natural that we trade back and forth. But I think it is also very important that we do not build a store in this country to sell to one customer only, because when we have only one customer, we become totally dependent on the economy of that one customer. If the United States retrenches or becomes more protectionist, that will affect Canadians very drastically.

If we are to diversify our trade, the natural place to look is to an area of the world which, in terms of proximity, is very close to us, and that is the Caribbean, a part of the world which exports products we do not have. It has a tropical climate and exports tropical produce, and it is very close to us. I might also say that it is a part of the world which has two linguistic groups.

[Translation]

Many people in the Caribbean speak French. French is very widely spoken in Martinique, Guadeloupe, Haiti and, as the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) already mentioned, there are also many places such as St. Lucia where both French and English are spoken. It is very important for Canada as a bilingual country to have trade relations with countries that have a similar cultural badkground.

[English]

These are just some of the advantages of trying to escalate and improve our relations with the Caribbean.

Hon. members might remember that at one time a member of my party, Mr. Max Saltsman, then the hon. member for Cambridge, went as far as to suggest one cold winter day in the House of Commons, that we talk to representatives of the Turks and Caicos Islands about the possibility of their becoming a province of Canada. That idea was examined and pursued by officials of both the Turks and Caicos Islands and Canada. Without endorsing the idea or rejecting it, I think that just demonstrated that there is a natural affinity, a natural friendship and a natural pattern which should be pursued and encouraged in the two countries.

In this respect I think of Cuba. During the difficult years in the 1960s under the Diefenbaker government and the Pearson government, Canada continued to have diplomatic and trade relations with Cuba when the United States cut theirs off. I think that was very important. It is very important that we continue our ties with the Cubans in the years which lie ahead.

Before sitting down, I want to make one general comment about trade and why we should diversify our trade and our contacts with the Caribbean and other parts of the world. Up until now, in addition to being dependent on the United States we have also been very dependent on being an exporter of raw materials. I noticed just the other day, for example, that in 1980 we had a net surplus in terms of export of raw materials of $23 billion. On the other hand, we had a net deficit in terms of finished products or finished goods of some $18 billion. That is the worst record of any industrialized country in the world, Mr. Speaker.

We all know that resources are very important to us—in my province potash, grain, oil, gas and in Quebec, hydroelectricity and so on. In addition to all that, it is important in terms of jobs to diversify; it is important in terms of jobs to start processing and semi-processing more of our goods before they are exported, and it is important, in terms of jobs, to start doing some things that we can do ourselves and that other countries such as Japan, France, Germany and others in Europe are doing.

I think that in this country we are going to have to put a lot more emphasis on trying to become specialists in more areas such as processing our raw materials and on trying to export more processed goods.

In 1608 when Champlain first opened a trading post in Quebec, it was primarily to have a point at which to gather furs, beaver pelts and so on in order to export them to Europe. Unfortunately, we have not changed our trade policy very much since the days of Champlain. We must make changes if we are to survive in a highly competitive world market.

About 25 per cent of our work force has jobs which are related to the export market. We now have a big problem of unemployment in this country, in large part because trade is becoming more and more competitive. We are moving into the post-industrial age but other nations such as Japan, France and other European countries are moving faster. We will have to start scrambling in order to catch up, never mind moving ahead.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to encourage the government to produce the papers requested by my friend from Quebec. I want to encourage the government to make public as soon as possible the plans the government House leader has for reforms of the rules of this institution so that MPs can be legislators and not just chronic bitchers and cryers and rubber stamps for government policy.

I should also like to encourage the government and Canada as a whole to continue expanding and improving our links, and trade with the Caribbean and with trade there. That part of the world can provide something that we do not have—a tropical climate, lots of sunshine and lots of produce from that sunshine. In return, that can help the economy of Atlantic Canada because of the natural shipping pattern that exists. As an industrialized nation with advanced technology, we could give people in that part of the world an extra boost to help develop their economies in the years that lie ahead.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for bringing this motion before the House. The hon. member is not really complaining about the rules, as was suggested by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). He knows the rules very well, and the day we produce all the documents he wants is the day that he will have no opportunity to speak about the things of substance that he cares for! He talked about trade, aid, lack of information in general—and not specifically to him—about the Caribbean. He spoke about tourism, about sugar—he has spoken about sugar at least half a dozen times, and I thank him for that. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has a valid point about all our eggs being in one basket. In 1980, we did a total export business of $73.8 billion and a total import business of $68.7 billion. Of this, $46 billion of export was with the United States and $48 billion was import business with the United States. Approximately $90 billion business was done with the United States last year. If there is a criticism of Canadians in general and not just governments, it is that we must treat the Caribbean and South America much more seriously than we have to date.

I should like, first of all, to look at the broad problem of what is happening in the world. The foremost problem is poverty, and this is shown by what is happening in the Caribbean and South America. The poorest country is Haiti where the gross national product per capita is $260 per year. The 2.5 billion of the world's poorest people depend for almost all their energy needs upon wood and agricultural residues. Of the world's 150 countries, 100 consume more food than they produce. At the present rate, the world's forest cover will be halved by the year 2000 because we are cutting the forests down for fuel and energy—things that they should not be used for—because better sources of energy have not been developed in these various nations.

By the year 2000 there will be two billion more people on this planet. We spent almost a year on the Constitution and perhaps we are inclined to forget the reality of the rest of the world until we see that each year 15 million children under the age of five die, mostly from water-borne diseases. Next year 15 million children will die for the same reasons. Three quarters of the world's population consumes 15 per cent of its commercial energy, and 90 million people in the world are short of firewood.

The parliamentary task force on North-South relations recently issued a report in which it dealt with the 800 million people who live in conditions of absolute poverty. The criteria of absolute poverty are unbelievable. It means that only four out of ten children complete more than three years of primary school. Of every ten children born, two die within a year, another dies before age five and only five survive to age 40. A child that contracts measles has a 200 per cent more chance of death than a Canadian child.

The task force report has the following to say:

> Half of those people live in south Asia, mainly in India and Bangladesh. A sixth live in east and southeast Asia, mainly in Indonesia. Another sixth are in sub-Saharan Africa. The rest—about 100 million people—are divided among Latin America, North America and the Middle East.

It is ironic that in the second paragraph on the same page the report states "some $500 billion is spent each year for military purposes." Yet so little is spent on important things such as shelter, food, and economic stability.

Why should our policy regarding the Caribbean be different from that of the United States? Sometimes I think that the United States has had so much trouble in the last number of years when it has been picking losers, that we should let them choose first and then pick the other side!

Our major contribution in the Caribbean so far has been tourism. Maybe that is why there are so many experts on the Caribbean in Canada who know so little about it.

For certain valid reasons we are moving out of the Caribbean. For instance, we are going to Australia for aluminium. The main reason, however, is that this country had had two decades of easy times in trading with other countries. What has happened in the last ten years is that there has been an increase in exports with Third World countries from $1.7 billion to $8.8 billion, while with the Commonwealth Caribbean the increase has been from $123 million to $286 million. In other words, the increase has been fivefold and sixfold with Third World countries but only double with the Commonwealth Caribbean.

In our travels through Caribbean countries we were told repeatedly that we were not competitive. We were told that our businesses were shifting to the more affluent industrialized areas such as Brazil, Venezuela, Mexico and perhaps Argentina and Chile, and that in areas where it is difficult to operate, Canadian businessmen have folded their tents. Prior to what was done this year, it was almost embarrassing that Trinidadian aid in 1980 to the Caribbean was greater than that of Canada—aid from a little country like that!

I think what was said by the hon. member for Vaudreuil was absolutely accurate. The fault is that we require more information. We may have to bring in trading companies and credit mix. We may have to provide more money and more facilities for Canadian businessmen dealing in that particular area. We may need more face-to-face discussion with government officials. We need much more education on what is happening in the southern half of this great area.

Let us look at the United States policy. The United States has had almost a disastrous two decades of supporting governments which have fallen. In the process there have been some atrocious governments. In 1953 or 1954, I was in Cuba and saw the combination of Batista organized crime and United States interests in Cuba. It was wrong then for the United States to support that regime. Canada was wise in not getting involved in that decade of hate which evolved around Cuba. Canada was wise to keep its dialogue open with the present administration. In 1979, the United States received at least half a dozen jolts. In Nicaragua the Somoza regime was replaced by the Sandinistra regime. In Grenada, Eric Gairy was replaced by the new JEWEL movement. In Surinam there was a semi-leftist coup. On top of this, Iran erupted and finally, just recently, there was the assassination of President Sadat in Egypt. The Rear Admiral and Naval Commander of the Caribbean, Robert P. Mackenzies, said that Nicaragua, Grenada and Cuba were "practically one country". Consequently the United States policy is different from ours. It is to provide direct aid to a specific country which fosters direct United States interest, usually business. This is why Canadians are so well accepted in the Caribbean—we have no colonial aspirations; we do not support governments for philosophical reasons resulting in profit; we support governments in the Caribbean because we think it is right. This is why we are ad idem with Venezuela.

At the present time Venezuela is the only major democratic option to Marxism and communism in the Caribbean. Prior to Venezuela becoming interested in the Caribbean and starting to expand, what did poor people do? They either lived in poverty and their children and grandchildren lived in poverty, or they resorted to guerrilla tactics and civil war. There was no other option except Cuban exploitation. They either lived in poverty and stayed there, or they aligned themselves with Cuban export of guerrilla warfare until Venezuela started to export not only philosophy but a few dollars, along with Trinidad and Mexico.

Last year the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) reported to the CARICOM ministers in Jamaica that we would give the Commonwealth Caribbean priority status. After the conference he indicated that there were certain countries which would be targeted by Canada. He specifically named countries such as Venezuela. In the interim we have done everything to try to build a connection between Canada and Venezuela. I do not think we should kid ourselves; because we talk of the Caribbean here and talk of our importance there, we are not that important yet. We should be, but we will not be unless we make the effort. Also the minister announced a framework. The major elements of the framework announced at the CARICOM conference were as follows:

All countries in the Commonwealth Caribbean, regardless of level of development, will be eligible for Canadian development assistance, with special attention on the LDCs of the eastern Caribbean.

LDCs refers to least developed countries. They continue:

Canadian development assistance will focus on the promotion of sustained economic growth and development.

With self-reliance of the recipient countries, the ultimate objective:

(a) Canada will increase its ODA levels in real terms;

(b) increased levels of technical assistance will be provided for economic and financial management in the public sector and for improving private sector management and productivity;

(c) increased support for industrial co-operation will be given;

(d) at the regional level, Canada will focus on supporting the Caribbean Development Bank, on essential common services, where appropriate, and on regional institution building and co-operation including that with CARICOM.

What does this mean? In dollars and cents it has some meaning. For the fiscal year 1981-82, we will almost double our assistance to the Caribbean to $55.3 million. This will be in addition to the $6 million already announced for Jamaica in support of its economic recovery program. Funds will be used for specific countries as follows: Barbados, up to $2.6 million; Belize, up to $1.5 million; Dominican Republic, up to $2.3 million; Guyana, up to $7.5 million; Haiti, up to $7.2 million; Jamaica, up to $10 million; Leeward and Windward Islands, up to $11 million. The funds to the Caribbean Development Bank will be up to $4.3 million. Industrial co-operation will be up to $2.5 million. Non-governmental organizations will be up to $4.5 million. Our total aid to the Commonwealth Caribbean will be $43 million, which is more than double what it was last year.

We will also be providing bilateral assistance as follows: up to $30 million for Guyana, up to $41 million for Jamaica, up to $44 million for the Leeward and Windward Islands, and up to $25 million for Barbados and Belize. Also Canada will provide non-bilateral assistance to the tune of $85 million which will be administered through the Caribbean Development Bank.

It is important to treat each one of these sectors as individual sectors. There is a misconception among Canadians that Caribbean people know each other well. The truth is that they do not. Many of these countries are large islands and are more familiar with the United States than they are with their neighbours. We must develop a separate policy to fit in with the culture and the economy of each individual area. Within the remaining time I will try to run through some of these countries. I will start with El Salvador. Right now the option which the president and the people of El Salvador have is either to try to become democratic with the aid of countries such as Venezuela, or to succumb to another revolution. I find it rather humorous that we in the House try to impose our democratic standards on a country that has not really had an election in over 50 years and in which there is civil insurrection. I think some of the members who are really attacking the electoral process that is evolving in El Salvador are more interested in getting headlines in Ontario than they are in the welfare of that particular country. They do not really understand. There is only one man there standing between the country and another dictatorship, whether it be a communist one or the normal type of dictatorship which the people have known in these regions of the Caribbean and South America, and that man is President Duarte. President Duarte has been a democrat for over 20 years. He was a mayor and he was a member of the opposition. He is president of El Salvador. On his right side he has the army and the rich and on the left side he has the poor and the guerrillas. In this House we repeatedly attack the government of El Salvador, which is really President Duarte. We do not attack the right or the left. We attack the only man who has a chance of bringing a democratic process into El Salvador.

I do not know one member of this House who deplores the fact that 26,000 people have been killed in that country or who deplores the instability in El Salvador. I think we should, as former prime minister Lester B. Pearson once said, bury our differences at our waterline when it comes to our foreign policy. We are not doing that. Consequently, by attacking what President Duarte is doing, we are not really espousing human rights there or in any other place in the world.

Venezuela is probably our most important partner in the southern hemisphere economically. We exported to them $641 million worth of goods last year, but we imported from Venezuela over $2 billion worth of goods. I think our Canadian businessmen should be much more aware of that imbalance. They should be prepared to go to Venezuela to sell our goods with the help of the Canadian government. Venezuela needs wheat. Is it not odd that a country we traditionally think of as being rich in agriculture cannot support itself for such reasons as that it has no water or that the weather is too hot? This also applies to the Bahamas. Venezuela needs pigs. We sell pigs, but we do not sell pigs to Venezuela. Venezuela needs certain technology, but we are not selling that to them. Meanwhile we buy $2 billion worth of goods from Venezuela, an ally with whom we agree philosophically. I think the parliamentary task force report dealing with trade is completely accurate. This report of the Special Committee on a National Trading Corporation, issued June, 1981, stated:

Canada has only a minimal position in many of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it appears that I have only four minutes in which to speak, the last speaker having gone one minute over his time. I want to deal with the motion. I cannot understand why the parliamentary secretary did not deal with the motion instead of telling us all the things he did. The motion is simple. It asks for the production of papers and communications during the last year between the government and the communities of the Commonwealth Caribbean relating to the exchange of commodities and technology, the exchange of students, tariff changes and other measures to improve trade, tourism and cultural exchanges. But the parliamentary secretary did not say one word about any of that. Why is the government refusing to give us this type of information? Surely to goodness Canadians, particularly members of the House, are entitled to this kind of information.

The parliamentary secretary tells us that we will continue to give to the Caribbean area $55 million, $6 million, $43 million and $85 million. He did not say one word about what we are getting for this money. He did not tell us what is being produced. He did not say anything about the extravagance or waste. He did not say anything about the low interest we are charging or indeed if this money is being given away while Canadians have to pay high interest rates. Why is the government not giving us this information? Is the government afraid to do so? Is it because the government is being extravagant? Is it because the government is giving this money and nothing is resulting?

The members on the other side of the House are saying that they live in absolute poverty, yet they live in a climate where production could be high. Why does Canada not make sure when making contributions to these countries that the money is used to increase production and not used as welfare purposes? That is what Canada should be doing. Why are we granting low-interest rates to these countries and yet charging high interest rates to Canadians? Even our own Indian band councils cannot get money at these low rates. Why does the government not answer questions? Is the government afraid? The government is refusing to give us the information and, therefore, people have to reach their own conclusions. Some of the information I have seen in information sheets from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) and from CIDA indicate that in many cases the money is being wasted. What about Grenada? Two hundred thousand dollars was spent for a garage in Grenada. What are we doing? We are helping a military build-up so that the communists can step in and get along a lot better. I am not in favour of helping communists in any country. I am in favour of helping people to help themselves. We should not give money away at low interest rates while charging high rates to Canadians. What about these amounts of $55 million, $6 million, $43 million and $85 million? The parliamentary secretary brags about this. But I want to know what the government is doing with this money. What good is it doing? Are we simply handing this money out as a gift from the people of Canada? Why does the government not answer the questions? What is the government afraid of? That is what I would like to know. That is what the people of Canada would like to know.

I am not going to talk this bill out. I am going to give hon. members over there a chance to vote in favour of this bill. If they had any guts, they would force the government to provide this kind of information.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to speak about such interesting countries, the Commonwealth Caribbean Islands. I might add that I am not at all surprised that the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) should show interest in those countries, all the more so since the Caribbean Islands are much closer to us than we think. Of course when Canadians think about the West Indies they dream of sun-drenched beaches. Mr. Speaker, we should not forget—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour allotted for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

FARM CREDIT ACT
FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the debate was interrupted at 5 p.m., the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Lapointe) had the floor.

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to resume my comments on the amendment to the Farm Credit Act as I was then explaining that during 1980-81, which is the last year for which full statistics are available, the Corporation approved 4,686 loans amounting to $508.8 million. For example, British Columbia, Mr. Speaker, obtained 175 loans amounting to $21,597,000. Alberta 640 for a total of $71,739,000. Saskatchewan, 1,346 for $128,456,000. Manitoba, 470 for $47,052,000. Ontario, 1,084 for $138,308,000. Quebec, 742 for $80,961,000 and the Atlantic provinces, 229 for $20,769,000.

Mr. Speaker, the Farm Credit Corporation also has outstanding loans under the Farm Credit Act of March 31, 1980. In this regard, British Columbia accounts for $111,440,000, Alberta for $594,533,000, Saskatchewan for $876,686, Manitoba for $306,275,000, Ontario for $917,487,000, Quebec for $413,587,000 and the Atlantic region for $81 million. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Farm Credit Corporation is to help as many young farmers as possible, and in fact, the majority of approved loans are granted to people under 35. Their share has remained relatively constant at 70 per cent in the last three years. Indeed, 3 per cent of all approved loans were granted under the special loans program for new farmers under which the borrowers can keep an outside full-time job for up to five years while they get their farm operation under way.

As for the purpose of the loans, about 27.9 per cent of those approved last year were used to purchase additional land compared with 29.8 per cent the previous year. Other loans can be classified as follows: new units, 24.4 per cent; permanent improvements, 16.5 per cent; mortgages, 12.3 per cent; other debts, 12 per cent; equipment, 2.3 per cent; livestock, 2.2 per cent and miscellaneous, 2.4 per cent.

The repayment record of farmers has remained favourable in 1980-81. Of the $75.2 million due during the period, 89.4 per cent has been repaid and the farmers have also repaid $52.2 million on the undue principal. During the year, 91.9 per cent of the $279.1 million in due interest was paid. At the end of the last fiscal year, 93 per cent of the active accounts of the Farm Credit Corporation were in order compared with 93.2 per cent the previous year. Real losses on these loans amounted to $1,537,000, or 1.4 per cent of the portfolio of the FCC.

During the current fiscal year, from April 1, 1981, to January 15, 1982, the Farm Credit Corporation approved 4,328 loans for a total of nearly $429 million. According to the estimates, the total budget for this year will reach nearly $455 million. We can only give approximate figures since an important part of the total budget of the corporation is made up of reimbursements or advanced payments by the borrowers.

Up to this point for this year, the major purpose of the loans seems to be the purchase of additional land, closely followed by the purchase of new units. However, the number of loans for debt consolidation purposes has increased markedly because of the crisis triggered by high interest rates which reached 24.8 per cent on March 31, 1980, and 27.1 per cent on September 30, 1981.

The FCC is quite aware of the fact that the profit-earning capacity of credit is directly related to a borrower's managing ability, and that tight management of a farm has never been more important than over the past few years, because of the instability of interest rates. That is why it also provides a counselling service on a voluntary basis to all borrowers, old and new, who apply for it. The purpose of this service is to give advice in the areas of organization, planning and management, and thus help families living on farms to achieve their economic and individual objectives. As of December 1, 1981, some 3,025 borrowers were availing themselves of this service.

The corporation also administers the Farm Syndicates Credit Act which makes loans to farmers who are willing to join forces to beat the high costs associated with the individual purchase and use of machinery, equipment and buildings. Loans are made available to syndicates of three or more farmers up to $100,000 or $15,000 per individual farmer, whichever is the smaller. In 1980-81, the FCC lent $4.8 million to syndicates, representing 169 loans. Between April, 1981, and January, 1982, it lent them $5.4 million, representing 171 loans. Therefore, there has been clearly a marked increase in the demand for this type of loan over the past few years, and it is due especially to the rising cost of sophisticated farm implements.

In this respect, I cannot help but think about my own riding and the way this new amendment should help the farmers of the Beauce region who are so close to me. Being a farmer myself, I am one of them. I am proud of my constituency which accounts for 40 per cent of all the maple syrup produced in North America. I am sure that with this new amendment and the new Crown corporation Canagrex, we shall be able to export the maple syrup of Beauce. That will be of interest not only to Beauce but also to neighbouring ridings, such as those of Lévis, Bellechasse, Montmagny, Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead and Frontenac which are not far from mine. To my mind, it will be a very good thing for all those farmers and maple syrup producers, Mr. Speaker.

Last week, I had the pleasure of welcoming to my office a great friend of mine, Mr. Victor Poirier, chairman of the board of maple syrup producers of Beauce. He told me that there still remains to be sold on the market in Beauce some 468,000 pounds of maple syrup. They are still on tap, as we say in Beauce. Well, with the new amendment and the new Crown corporation to be known as Canagrex, I feel sure that our producers in Beauce will be happy to learn that the Canadian government has decided to establish the Crown corporation of Canagrex and that in the future we can sell our syrup outside Quebec and Canada. Then, we of the Liberal party, will be able to tell the people in Beauce, in Quebec and across Canada that the Crown corporation Canagrex is a wonderful thing not only for our own farmers and maple syrup producers in Quebec, but for all farmers throughout Canada.

It is all very well to discuss all that, but something else must be kept in mind: from time to time we also have bankruptcies, and I would like to say a few words about that tonight. I am increasingly concerned as well as the farming community about the fact that from 1979 to 1980, the number of farm bankruptcies has increased from 124 to 222. There have been 261 in 1981, a 17.6 per cent increase over last year. As I said, I hope Canagrex and the amendment will bring about significant improvements. In 1979-80, 32 FCC borrowers went bankrupt compared to 56 in 1980-81. As of January 1, 1982, 70 FCC borrowers had already gone bankrupt. The government certainly recognizes the seriousness of this situation, knowing full well that official bankruptcies are only part of total farm failures.

I have already suggested that the Farm Credit Corporation should help farmers in distress through counselling assistance. The government itself provided further assistance to those farmers by setting up a special financial assistance program for farmers last November. This $50 million program enables the corporation to make loans to farmers unable to get a Small Business Development Bond from chartered banks. The corporation charges its current 16¾ per cent interest rate, on those loans, but it also grants a yearly interest rebate equivalent to 5 per cent up to two years. In some cases, the FCC loan must be combined with the Small Business Development Bond, the SBDB, because the farmer needs large sums of money to recapitalize his debts. In such cases, the corporation co-operates with the private sector in the best interests of farmers. In so doing, the government shows its concern for the precarious position of some farmers and its willingness to take concrete steps to help them. Since the program was set up November 12, 1981, the Farm Credit Corporation has approved 89 loans, for a total $11 million, as of January 15, 1982. It is expected that the funds earmarked for the program will be all spent by March 31, 1982.

This legislation is a further step toward improving the financial situation of Canadian farmers. The important amendment to the Farm Credit Act that will grant the corporation authority to tap the financial market for funds will enable it to meet the credit needs of farmers adequately.

[English]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the remarks that were just made. Unfortunately, they were not in the language in which I am fluent. However, I did understand that there is a lack of funding in the hon. member's province.

During the course of my visit to my constituency, I was told by my people that the farmers are very sadly disappointed. The government knows the problems of the farm community. It knows that the income in the farm community translates into incomes in other areas. When the farmers are prosperous, they are able to purchase new farm machinery, which in turn assists that industry.

Farmers are not greedy. It is through their efforts that we have food. Therefore, it is very disappointing that I have to speak on their behalf because of their need for additional money. They are making a desperate appeal to a government that will not listen. Why? Because it is this government which has brought in the present inflation. It is trying to restrain the farm economy in the same way as it is restraining other sectors of society.

One of the areas selected by the government was, unfortunately, agriculture. I saw an ad in the Western Producer, which I do not have with me at the moment, advertising a farm for sale at $1,600,000. Therefore, what good will $50 million do in a situation like this? The funds in the office in Tisdale will be drained with three such applications.

I have an office in Tisdale which I visited during the Christmas recess. When I asked the girl in the office what they were doing, she replied "Biding our time". I asked her what I could do or what kind of message I could take back to Ottawa. She said, "Get more money."

The minister thinks he is being responsive. I am saying he is not doing anything when three applications will drain the funds of that office. That office might as well be closed.

How do I go back to my people and ask them to transfer their land? What is a transfer? It no longer means a couple of hundred thousand dollars. Because of the tax measures brought in by the government, people are so screwed up they do not even know how to transact business between family members.

What are we doing here? We are wasting our time. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) should be ashamed of himself for perpetrating such a farce. He knows that $50 million does not mean anything with today's rate of inflation.

I again ask the minister to look in the Western Producer where there is an ad for a farm for sale at $1,600,000. That is the kind of money we are dealing with, yet the minister is coming through with $50 million. Does he for one moment think that three applications will satisfy the people of my constituency? Nothing of the sort will satisfy them. You are a farce. You are a phoney.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I call to the attention of the hon. member that his remarks should be addressed through the Chair. I am sure the hon. member will address himself accordingly.

Mr. Korchinski: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will address them through the Chair.

• (2030)

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to bring to your attention the point which you were making, that the hon. member was not addressing the Chair, he was addressing the minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has already brought this to the attention of the hon. member.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I agree that I should have addressed it through you. Through you, I say it to the minister. If that will take a little longer to get through to him, then I will wait.

If you think for one moment that those people out there are waiting for some kind of an answer from this minister, then you most know that they have lost hope in this minister. I say to him, through you, Mr. Speaker, that we made several proposals to him. I made a proposal some time ago, long before the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought down his budget, that there is a way out of this dilemma. I will repeat it as concisely as possible for his benefit. If he had presented my proposal to cabinet, he would have found a way out of this dilemma. But he lost his bet. The minister alone could have gone to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and told him that there is a way out of this situation.

I will repeat this solution to him once again. If and when a farmer is selling out, he does not want to be taxed on the whole price. I know, as a farmer myself, that he will accept 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent. If the minister puts these funds to use for the benefit of other farmers—and the minister should listen to this very carefully—then the minister can tax them at that rate. Does the minister for one moment think that I, as a farmer, will throw my money into a fund for other farmers just to discover that the greedy Department of National Revenue will just gobble it up?

The minister has a way through his own administration to charge the farmer just that limited amount, and he will find that he will have a fund so large that he will not know what to do with all the money. I say to the minister: do it in the way I have suggested and in the way our party, through our spokesman, the former minister of agriculture, has suggested. I ask the minister to listen to me and all others involved in this debate.

Finally, I have just a simple admonition to make to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the farming community, as do other areas of our business community, deserves attention at this time. I say to him that he should talk to his leader and make a proposal to him. He should tell him that there are funds available, including mine. I have a farm I could sell tomorrow. I do not know to whom I will sell it, but I want it to be turned over to a young farmer who wants to start his own business. I have three sons who may or may not be interested in agriculture, but there are neighbours of mine who are interested and I want the minister to take the bull by the horns and pick up the funds which are available and do it for the benefit of those young farmers.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, as one of several members of the House who grew up on a farm and has retained a close interest in the agricultural industry in Canada, I am pleased to see these Farm Credit Corporation amendments before the House tonight. For some reason, I have a somewhat different opinion of the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) from that of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski). I will explain that a little later, Mr. Speaker.

I was also pleased to see the Canagrex legislation in the House this week and the sense of urgency with which it moved through its stages. It is important that we maintain this kind of co-operation among all parties in the House. In that spirit, we saw the meat import bill passed through both Houses of Parliament before Christmas. All these bills are important pieces of legislation which will be welcomed by the farming community.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not take this opportunity to compliment the Minister of Agriculture for his strong continuing efforts to help the agricultural industry in Canada. He has been untiring in his job and it is important to give him encouragement and support. We all know that he is humble and very dedicated and we certainly know that he is not egotistical. He is just like an old racehorse—every time the bell goes, he is off and running to try to do good for the agricultural industry of Canada. I hope these complimentary remarks are just like that bell and will encourage him to continue working hard on policies such as the ones which I have just mentioned.

The agricultural industry should be given as much serious attention as any other business in Canada because agriculture is the biggest industry in Canada. Everyone must realize that as you drive through the countryside and see the farm buildings, the silos, the great variety of equipment and everything else related to farming, that agriculture has indeed become a very serious business and not just another way of life.

If we expect young people to take up this honourable profession of farming—because it is a profession—then we in Parliament must provide some policies which will prove to them that we recognize that agriculture must receive the full recognition of the important role that it plays in the lives of everyone. If we want to have food at reasonable prices that are related to costs of production and a return on farm investment, then we have to nurture the industry with viable and practical policies such as the three I have mentioned in my speech.

The farm community at large is not looking for a handout, contrary to the thinking of some. What farmers are looking for today is not unlike what they have always been looking for, and that is a decent price for their products and a decent return on their investment.

Unlike many other business sectors of the Canadian economy, agriculture consists almost entirely of small family farm businesses. In addition to the normal vagaries of the Canadian and world economies, farm businesses are subjected to hazards of nature which affect the supply of and the demand for commodities, both domestically and internationally. This results in the drastic fluctuating of farm incomes. Thus, although market conditions may indicate a change in production requirements due to the nature of the production cycles of some commodities—especially livestock—producers can often only respond to changing market conditions over a period of a few years or even longer.

The rapidly rising cost of land, buildings, livestock and equipment and the continual need for the adoption of new technology implies a heavy reliance on debt financing for those expanding or wanting to enter into primary agricultural production. The national average capital value per census farm was estimated at $79,800 in 1971, up to $190,000 in 1976 and at $340,000 in 1980, with equity averaging between 80 per cent and 85 per cent of the total capital requirements per farm. However, for young farmers, as we can well imagine, the average equity level is much lower.

In this climate of rapid change and uncertainty, the Farm Credit Corporation offers a type of loan which is highly beneficial to farmers but which has all but disappeared from the commercial sector, and that is the long-term mortgage loan at a fixed rate of interest.

Although bank lending to agriculture may appear to be long term in the sense that it is on the security of a mortgage with long amortization periods, the mortgages typically call for readjustment of interest rates at intervals as frequent as one year or floating, although in some cases five-year renewable mortgages are still being offered. This adds more uncertainty to a sector already faced with much uncertainty. Certain mortgages also have promissory notes attached, and if the conditions of payment are not met, the promissory notes can be activated or called immediately, thus forcing farmers to liquidate their assets, even though they could have a high probability of success in the long run. The nature of the agricultural industry just simply does not lend itself to this kind of financial arrangement.

The FCC lending program enables a young farmer to acquire farm assets over a long and progressive schedule. The farmer can predict the exact annual payments and incorporate this cost in the long and short term planning of the farm business. Knowing the cost of a basic ingredient like credit adds a great deal of stability to the farm plan—and we have seen that in recent months—and insulates the farmer in times of crisis such as periods of fluctuating interest rates.

It is my firm belief that this type of loan must continue to be offered to those Canadian farmers who need it to remain viable. Access to the financial markets may mean that the Farm Credit Corporation will also be able to offer mortgages with interest fixed for shorter terms such as ten years.

The Farm Credit Corporation also plays a vital role in ensuring that all Canadians have access to the advantages offered by a national program. Regional differences can make it more or less attractive for commercial lending institutions to extend credit in a given area. Higher returns can often be obtained by placing their funds in other areas or economic sectors.

The Farm Credit Corporation brings a strong national influence in the field of credit. In areas without provincial credit programs the FCC is almost the only source of financing for young people who want to start farming.

When an organization is established with a clear and distinct mandate, its mission is clear. The Farm Credit Corporation exists for the primary purpose of providing long-term farm credit and advisory services in order to develop viable farm operations. Its programs are therefore sensitive to the needs of farmers and to agriculture. Repayment schedules are tailored to meet the income-generating cycles of production.

In times of serious difficulties in a particular industry a borrower can make arrangements to defer his payments up to two years.

The FCC's philosophy in the administration of its loans is flexibility and service to the farmer. Credit advisers spent hours working on solutions to repayment problems, and the corporation fosters a lenient collection policy. In making over 70 per cent of its loans to young farmers, the FCC also accepts considerable risks.

Because commercial lending institutions deal primarily with farmers who have an established track record and are regarded as commercially acceptable credit risks, young people—in this case those under 35 years of age—beginning farmers and small farmers are excluded from commercial sources of long-term farm credit. Their exclusion has important policy implications, as it is these farmers who will play an important role in the future of agricultural development and the attainment of the potential envisaged by the agri-food strategy for Canada. Because agricultural production is based almost entirely on the family farm structure, entrants into the sector must be encouraged if the agricultural sector is to maintain or improve productivity levels.

Because of the additional risks in agricultural production, a higher equity ratio is normally required to survive than for other types of businesses. In addition, farmers, like other small businesses, do not have access to debt or equity markets which are available to large businesses. Beginning and small farmers are at an even greater disadvantage than established farmers because they have much less equity and are considered to be too great a risk by commercial lending institutions. Recognizing these factors, the risks faced by farmers and the unique credit needs of agriculture in general, most developed countries in the world have specialized agricultural credit programs with preferred terms and preferred conditions.

The Farm Credit Corporation is the government's way of showing its confidence in an industry which, over the years, has proved time and time again that it can, and will, pay its own way. Statistics on arrears and defaults are proof of this.

The FCC also plays a significant role in the transfer of family farms. Without sufficient long-term government credit, the intergenerational transfer of farms will be jeopardized. Out of the total Canadian labour force, those readily available to work in that sector or those wanting to become primary agricultural producers are generally those who have practical farming knowledge and experience. These are usually the sons and daughters of farmers. Without a mechanism by which they can take over the family farm, which is the unit on which Canadian agricultural production is based, human resources required for agricultural production could diminish, resulting in the possibility of decreased productivity of the agricultural sector.

One of the strengths of an organization like the Farm Credit Corporation is the calibre of its staff. I would like to pay a compliment to them. FFC personnel are trained in agriculture and farm management practices. The great majority are sons and daughters of farmers. They are familiar with the needs of the industry and have been trained in advisory services to help the individual applicant.

In 1980-81, 204 credit advisers, these are the front line staff, conducted more than 57,000 interviews in the selection of loan applicants or the administration of loan accounts. The Farm Credit Corporation was only able to approve 17 per cent of the applications received. This represented over half a billion dollars in loan funds, which is a considerable sum. But it is my firm belief that the amendments tabled by the Minister of Agriculture will bring much needed support to the Farm Credit Corporation in its mandate to provide even more assistance to Canadian farmers.

The increase in the amount of money that will be made available at a lower rate of interest will go a long way to help promote this.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that if the farm community is healthy financially, that means that the implement dealer is healthy, the local car dealer is healthy, and the local stores are healthy, and so on down the line.

In conclusion I should like to say that we can never cease to bring forth constructive and useful legislation which will encourage and help farmers to use the initiative that they have demonstrated over the years to build a healthy agricultural community. We must ensure that they will receive a fair return for their products and a fair return on their investment, which is very substantial.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Farm Loans

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to speak on this bill and on agriculture generally, because agriculture generally revolves around credit and income.

I should start off by saying that this bill is certainly no panacea for farmers in this country. It is a step forward but it does not touch the real problems of agriculture in Canada. The real problem, of course, is that farmers do not receive an adequate net income compared to the expenses that they incur.

For a number of years, farm income has remained somewhat stable but the cost of machinery, the cost of transportation, the cost of labour, the cost of everything that the farmer buys has gone up. There has been a constant wearing away of income to the point that it is not now adequate. In the last year, hundreds of farmers who might have been called reasonably well off found themselves in a very bad cash flow position. They may have assets but they do not have the cash to meet everyday expenses. This is a serious problem. Those who have not been farming for a long time have been in a serious position in that they did not have the cash flow and so were not able to get credit.

I want to deal with some items in the bill but I do regard it as a step forward. I will deal with the principle of a number of items. I am happy that the definition of agriculture has been broadened because I think it was too restrictive previously.

I should like to pay tribute to the officers of the Farm Credit Corporation in Alberta. I do not know the officers in other provinces but Mr. McEwen in Calgary and Mr. Jones in Edmonton carry out an excellent public relations program. They talk to anyone who wants to talk to them about these things and they explain whether they can or cannot meet the application of a farmer. I believe that the farmers of Alberta appreciate that.

Such officers should not be confined to a definition of farming because they know, better than anyone else in the country, what farming is in that province. The former definition held that farming included livestock raising, beekeeping, dairying, fruit growing and all tillage of the soil. That was a fairly wide definition but certain items were not included. I prefer the new definition which incudes livestock raising, beekeeping, dairying, fruit growing, tillage of the soil and any other husbandry activities that the corporation describes in writing as farming. That gives some discretion and some responsibility to the officers of the Farm Credit Corporation. I like that particular clause of the bill.

I am not sure whether I like the next clause. I should have liked to hear the minister say why the board membership has been increased from five members to seven. Today there is a tendency to increase everything, particularly boards. More members on the board means more overhead, more costs, more bureaucracy, and perhaps more Liberals. I hope that for once the government will appoint people because of their ability and not their political stripe.

Maybe the work load of the board is greater than it was when five members were sufficient. I suppose the greater number gives a little better chance of having a quorum in case some members are absent. If the minister can give us sound reasons for the increase, I am sure the committee will endorse it but if not, I think it should be brought back to five members. After all, Mr. Speaker, the corporation does not do very much of the work. It does the planning and makes the policies, which are now included in the act anyway, but the advisory board, which consists of people in the field, really knows the score and it has most to do with administering of the bill.

The next item that I am interested in is the increase from $150 million to $225 million which is to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. Some other members have already spoken about this item. I think the increase is long overdue and I do not think it is enough—perhaps it would be impossible to have enough money to meet the demand. I hope the figure was reached after a survey of the needs of agriculture in the various provinces. That should be the criterion in determining the amount of money to be made available.

No industry in Canada is more important than agriculture, Mr. Speaker. It produces the food of this nation. The family farm has been a major factor in the production of our food, and if we do not make sure that production continues, then in future we may expect to run into severe difficulty.

A few weeks ago we discussed the sterilization or killing of land by pesticides. That is only one item but today there are many others that are taking good agricultural land out of production. That is something that should concern every thinking Canadian. At times there is no other alternative but in many cases there are alternatives. Poor or non-productive land should be used for purposes other than good agricultural land. I hope this $225 million figure was arrived at after careful study of market demands, because it is a very important item.

Then the next clause of the bill deals with Section 13, which is really the key to the entire bill. It is an amendment which will give the corporation additional authority to borrow money. Clause 8(2) reads in part:

> At the request of the corporation, the Minister of Finance may, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, lend money to the corporation—

As well, Clause 8(1) reads:

> The corporation may, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, borrow money by any means, including issuing and selling bonds, debentures, notes and other evidences of indebtedness of the corporation.

I hope "by any means" will mean that they will not suddenly go into the bond market. Over a period of time the Farm Credit Corporation should build up its credibility in regard to this particular item. It should build up its credibility in regard to borrowing. If it does not build up credibility first, it will not receive the best results in borrowing.

In the United States, its corporation may borrow money from pension funds and from various other funds. I hope it is not the purpose of the federation to go to banks to borrow from them. After all, the present rate of interest is 15.75 plus one, which is 16.75 per cent. I would hate to see the Farm Credit Corporation having two interest rates—one with the money which comes from government revenue, taxpayers money, and one which it must levy to meet the charges for the money it borrows. This would be dynamite and counterproductive; I would hate to see it happen. Some very careful thought must be given to the borrowing of money if we are to keep the common interest rate down. In my view it is too high now. This is not a gift to farmers, it is a loan. Farmers pay interest on it and the Farm Credit Corporation pays the interest to the government. It is earning money for the people of Canada; farmers will pay that money to the people of Canada, for the use of money which belongs to the people of Canada. I do not think it is unsound. It is fair and sensible. But the amount they will pay for the borrowing of that money will have a very important effect.

Perhaps in Alberta the Farm Credit Corporation will be able to borrow from the Alberta Heritage Trust Fund. I understand that it will have the guarantee of the Government of Canada. If so, I do not think there would be any objection from the people of Alberta if this money was lent to the FCC for the use of young farmers in the province. I have not discussed this matter with the trustees of the Alberta Heritage Trust Fund, but I know the trustees well. They are interested in lending money where it will do the most good, where it will help to not only develop farms but the agricultural industry, and will have the effect of increasing employment all the way down the line. There is a possibility that the FCC would be able to borrow money from the fund. After all, the Alberta Agricultural Development Corporation now borrows from the fund and pays a reasonable rate of interest. Because it is receiving a reasonable interest, it is able to give farmers of Alberta a much better deal; probably one of the best deals available any place in Canada. Farmers pay 12 per cent on their borrowings which might have been high a few years ago, but it is quite low when one considers today's rates. Every percentage point means a substantial amount of money out of the pockets of farmers. It also charges 15 per cent to processors. Both those rates are below the interest rates of the FCC. Consequently, there has been a tendency in Alberta to move, wherever possible, to the Agricultural Development Corporation and away from the FCC, although the legislation indicates that ADC is the final borrowing, not the first. The FCC has been out of money; it has not had any money, so it has not been able to accept many applications. The banks will not touch these applications at all, except at prohibitive interest rates. I am not sure whether the policy is still in effect, but at one time the ADC lent money to young beginning farmers at 6 per cent because the objective of the government of Alberta was to keep people on the land, to encourage them to stay there, and to increase production. The entire country benefits when farmers produce.

After building up a good credit rating, it may well be that the Farm Credit Corporation will go on the bond market and do well. I think this is a step forward, giving the FCC the right to borrow money. I hope the section which includes "with the approval of the Minister of Finance" will not be detrimental. I hope the minister views this from a broad horizon because the money will be used to develop the country probably as much as any other money in the entire economy.

This section dealing with borrowing is fine, but I wish the minister had gone one step further. I read an article about some easterner who studied farms in Canada. He said that farmers in Alberta were better off than farmers anywhere else in the country. Perhaps that is so for some farmers, but there are farmers in every province, including Alberta, who are having difficult times because of inadequate net incomes. We must recognize this. But there are some farmers who have done well, who have had lucky breaks, who have made the correct decisions and have been able to accumulate considerable wealth. There is no better way to provide an incentive for those farmers who are wealthy, those farmers who have made their money from the land and from agriculture, to invest their money in helping other young people to become farmers and help in the development of the agricultural industry throughout the country. The minister should have provided an incentive in the bill for people who have become wealthy through their farming operations, their ability and their hard work, perhaps some good luck, co-operative weather and making correct lending decisions. Farming is probably one of the biggest gambles in the world. Sometimes a gamble pays off, sometimes it does not. For those with considerable wealth, what would be a better way than supplying them with some incentive to provide money to the FCC; then it could be lent to young farmers to start farming. There is plenty of land available in Alberta. We need more food; the world is hungry for food. We must get our young people on the farms. When one looks at the price of land, of machinery and of getting started today, it is practically prohibitive for any young farmer unless he has extra currency from some place. His father may be able to help him to some degree, but many times it is not sufficient for him to start producing. In fact, the farmer may have several other sons who require some of the wealth he has accumulated. I ask the minister to consider putting incentive into the bill.

If a farmer invests in FCC, it is somewhat like having an RRSP. The farmer will get some benefit from income tax, incentive enough to encourage him to lend his money so that he will put it there instead of putting it in short-term loans. Therefore, it would have to be somewhat comparable. I think this would be excellent. Many people in this country have made good money off the land. They are now looking for places to invest. They would invest in this sort of thing if the government were to provide an incentive and guarantee that three or four years down the road that incentive will not be removed, as has been done with the IAACs and the RRSPs.

That is what takes the breath of life out of our farmers and our people when they see something like that going on. The government has done more harm to itself in this budget than any other single thing by the action it has taken affecting retiring farmers. However, I will deal with that in a few moments. But the government has broken the hearts of many farmers who plan to retire. After all, the land is the farmers' pension. A farmer has no pension scheme from a government or from a large corporation. His only pension scheme is his land. You take that away from him, and you leave him destitute in his old age, destitute in his retirement years. That is a very important item.

Let us deal with one other item. I know we are not in the Committee of the Whole so I will not go clause by clause. Nevertheless, I do want to deal with the final section of the bill, an act respecting rebates of interest on farm loans made under the Farm Credit Act. This is an important item. This is the legislation under which the government is making $45 million available plus $5 million for the interest subsidy to help farmers who are in dire straits. It seems as though every time our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) mentions farmers, he also mentions the words dire straits. I do not know why he does this. Surely our farmers who are on the verge of bankruptcy should be able to seek some help to prevent them getting into dire straits which causes them to lose their farms.

But what does the Canadian Federation of Agriculture say about this bill? I say the minister is telling us that it is doing us some good. I think it will. But the government is providing $45 million for an industry across Canada when probably $500 million would be more appropriate. What does the Canadian Federation of Agriculture say with regard to this particular item? I shall quote for hon. members' benefit as follows:

> The FCC refinancing capability of $45 million at 5 per cent under regular FCC rates would be a help if there is a decent amount of funds available to lend. But the $45 million is wholly inadequate. To qualify, you have to be in such bad shape that you can't even get an SBDB loan, and are sure therefore to go under, if you don't get relief. Also, you only get two years of interest relief. The $45 million will in any case only refinance 450 farmers at $100,000 each—

The next paragraph reads:

> The FCC provision is a disgracefully inadequate sop to the requests of farmers for some real help. Under the absurd and deceiving budgetary convention that federal investment is called an expenditure, the government says it will spend $50 million to help farmers in trouble.
> It is doing nothing of the kind. It is spending $5 million over two years (2.5 per year) in reducing interest rates. The other $45 million is an interest-bearing loan to farmers that must be repaid. Where a billion dollars of such money is needed, $45 million is provided.

That is what the Federation of Agriculture, which is made up of agricultural people, thinks about this particular bill. I hope it will be able to help some farmers, however. But even if it cannot help everyone, it will help some. I think the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) should take the thoughts of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to heart and deal with them.

The next item that follows is a very important item also. It involves financing. It involves whether or not farmers will be going to the FCC. The difficulty with the present government, particularly in the field of agriculture as well as almost everything else, is that it does the turkey dance. The government takes one step forward; turkeys only take two steps backwards. The government outwits the turkeys. The government takes one step forward and five or six steps backwards. You cannot advance doing that. It is somewhat akin to what the army does. I had a commanding officer who told us our battalion would never retreat. He said "If things get too bad, I will say 'about turn, forward march. But we will never retreat'." That is what agriculture is doing. Here we have something that is hurting the farmers and something unnecessary, in my opinion. I am referring to the capital cost allowances. Capital cost allowances are important to farming. A farmer has to buy machinery. Machinery wears out. For many years it was understood that machinery would wear out and that the farmers would be able to write that off in capital cost allowances. On page 41 of the document entitled "The Budget in More Detail", tabled with the budget papers, we read the following under the heading of Capital Cost Allowances:

> —it is generally recognized that assets can be written off for tax purposes at much faster rates than is warranted by their actual economic lives.

The income tax people made it very clear that they are recognizing capital cost depreciation. If we take a look at the 1981 farmers' income tax guide, we find that this particular item is dealt with. In order that everyone who is not acquainted with this document will know, I will read what is found on page 9 as follows:

> It is, however, recognized that over a number of years these assets wear out or become obsolete.

The government arranges for the person to depreciate this equipment over a period of years. But suddenly the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) thinks that depreciation is too fast, faster than is warranted by their actual economic lives. In other words, a person can depreciate a machine before it is actually worn out and make money from it. On page 2 in "The Budget in More Detail", we read:

> In many cases, the capital cost allowance rates are deliberately set in excess of economic depreciation rates in order to provide incentives to certain types of investments in the economy.

Then they come to this conclusion:

> For assets acquired after November 12, 1981 taxpayers will be permitted to claim only one-half of the normal full-year's capital cost allowance in the year of acquisition.

They, the bureaucrats did not know what was going on in the agricultural industry when the Minister of Finance came to that conclusion. They say the rates are deliberately set. You can only take depreciation in accordance with the rates which the Department of Revenue permits. The rates are there on the back page of the farmers' income tax guide. If you use one percentage point more than what they say, the people in the Department of National Revenue correct your income tax. How can the Minister of Finance say that some of these are being depreciated at much faster rates than is warranted? They can only be depreciated at the rates that are allowed by the Department of National Revenue. How can he say that some of these rates are deliberately set in excess of economic depreciation? They can only be applied as granted and permitted by the Department of National Revenue.

Now, let us look at whether this is sensible and reasonable, at whether, as one of the hon. members opposite said the other night, it will hurt anyone if he only gets half the depreciation the first year because he can get the rest later on. I say he might not be alive later on. He needs it now in the same way he has always had it.

Let us look at a drawn combine. You can depreciate that at 10 per cent a year. That means ten years before you can depreciate the purchase price. It is little enough, but it helps to buy a combine. Now, who uses his combine for more than ten years? Advances in technology make it necessary to buy a new combine earlier than that. If you are working a lot of land, you are going to need one before ten years. Is that too fast? It is just being sensible. When you say that you can only depreciate half of that the first year, well, you know what happens?

An hon. Member: Twenty years.

Mr. Taylor: Right. A farmer said to me the other day that he was going to buy a combine this fall, but nothing doing. Another one said he was going to buy a tractor this fall, but we will just have to buy parts and put up with the old one.

So, who is that hurting? It is hurting the manufacturers in Ontario and other places where they make these machines. The Minister of Finance should put that in his pipe and smoke it. It is not just hurting the farmer, it is hurting others. You can only depreciate a swather by 10 per cent, a tractor by 15 per cent. Whoever came up with this nonsense in "The Budget in More Detail" that such machines can be written off "at much faster rates", and some are being "deliberately set in excess". Well, there is something wrong with their heads. It must be the Department of National Revenue who made the mistake; they are the ones who set the rates. We need something better than that.

Then we have another statement in the Manitoba Co-operator of December 10, 1981, at page 6. It says:

> Indications are that the new tax law has already had an adverse effect on farm machinery sales. Co-op Implements' executive officer David Tate said the firm suffered a 70 per cent drop in sales last month from November last year—

For example, one of the men said:

> —the purchase of an $80,000 tractor would now result in a farmer paying an additional $5,000 in income tax the first year.

Well, already the farmer is short of income, and here we are loading another $5,000 in taxes on him. It is not going to help farming because the farmer will have to start buying parts. It will hold him up if that tractor is too old. Yet here we are forgetting all about the farmer and his family. It is hurting the family farm.

I would like to see members from all sides speak for the farmer for once and say we do not want this "one half of the capital cost allowance the first year." Maybe in some industries it is sensible, but not in farming. You only use a combine for part of the year, while you use a tractor for practically the whole year, but no one is going to buy a combine in the latter part of the year if he is only going to get a little bit of depreciation. Even if he buys at the beginning of the year, he is only going to get half the first year. What nonsense. Let us encourage the farmer to keep his equipment up to date and help him operate efficiently.

I want to deal next with the matter of capital gains. Again the government takes a step backwards. I said before that the land is the farmer's pension, and we should remember that. I received a letter from the County of Wheatland which is situated east of Calgary. The councillors there are all farmers and have been for many years. They wrote me saying that there is not one farm being financed by the banks in western Canada. The sale of farms to young people has stopped because of this item in the budget. They cannot find the money. Prior to this the farmer would say, "Yes, I will sell this farm perhaps to my hired hand. He cannot raise $200,000 but he can raise $10,000". So he said he would take the ten, put it into an RRSP and live off the interest the first year. The next year there will be another five and the next year maybe another ten.

So the man has spent 50 years of his life on the farm, he is able to retire and the new man comes in to make a living, but that is not good enough for the Minister of Finance. He says no, you are not going to do this any more. If I had the time I would read the section of the bill saying that we are not going to permit this any more, which is ridiculous. How are young farmers going to get farms? Do you want centralization and the wealthy people of the United States, of Germany or Saudi Arabia coming in and buying our farms? Well, I do not. I want the family farm maintained, and this is one of the worst features I have ever seen for defeating the family farm.

I wish the members of this House would realize what will happen if this is permitted to stand. Surely a man who wants to sell his farm on the basis of receiving so much every year should be able to do it, surely that is sensible and he should be permitted to do so.

I have some pitiful letters from people who have sold their farms and were going to buy an RRSP or an IAAC. Now they cannot do that because the minister says, no more. Well, he does not realize what he is doing to our farms. The pillows of women who have been on the farm for 40 or 50 years are wet with tears, and I am not kidding. Children are crying and frustrated, as are the farmers because they do not know what to do. They never thought their own government would treat them like this, would stop them from retiring.

That land is their nest egg, their pension. They do not have a pension from the government or the corporation, so how can a reasonable person ask them to pay the capital gains tax all at once when they do not get it all at once? A man sells a farm for $200,000 and all he gets is $10,000. Where in the world is he going to get the money to pay the capital gains tax? It does not make sense. This policy is not going to work for the family farm, but will only work for the wealthy, because only those who have $200,000 or $500,000 are going to be able to buy farms from now on. Let us change this thing. There is demand enough now on the FCC without this going any further. The capital gains tax itself is wrong. A farmer pays tax on his land all his life and when he goes to sell, the government comes in and takes another chunk out in capital gains. It is bad enough that they have to do it on the small amounts; but when they have to pay it on the whole sum, and they do not even get the whole sum, it becomes an entirely ridiculous operation.

• (2130)

Next, I would just like to deal with one or two of these other matters. These are backward steps. Consider this thrusting of the metric system on the farmers, which is costing them more money. Consider the policy of the government, with the CTC and the CPR abandoning railroads, again costing the farmers more money. Recently the CTC approved an application of the CPR to abandon the line from Carbon to Kirkpatrick. These farmers must now haul their grain from 8 to 30 or 40 miles. Who pays for it? The farmer. It comes out of his income. The CTC would not even bear to listen to that. It made up its mind that it would not even permit sufficient time to get the grain out of the elevator. I mentioned this to the CTC officials the other day. There are still 12 carloads of grain in the P&H elevator in Sharples, and the CPR decided it would not haul one carload after December 31. Who is running this country, the government or the CPR?

Mr. Deans: Neither.

Mr. Taylor: It seems to me that the CTC is right under the thumb of the CPR. When the CTC refuses to abandon one line which is affecting our farmers, then I will believe there is someone in that corporation who has some interest in the farmers and in retaining the farm.

Yes, there are all kinds of things like this which are going on and which hurt the farmers. Let us see what some of our people are saying about it: "I have not been able to have an RRSP but relied on my land and hard work to provide me with a little nest egg at retirement." They say to the Minister of Finance, "Now you have squashed that in your budget." What does a farmer or small-business man do to keep himself in his old age?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I also have very important remarks to make on the bill now under consideration, since it is of vital importance not only for farmers but also for our customers abroad and for all Canadians. We know that every Canadian and every individual throughout the world depends on thriving agriculture to live comfortably and eat properly. That is why I will try in my comments to stick to Bill C-88 now before the House instead of doing like my colleague from Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who made a general survey of agriculture and often wandered from the subject. That is why I feel the government and everybody else, Mr. Speaker, cannot remain indifferent to the financial problems faced by farmers.

Agriculture would never have been so thriving without the determination and ingenuity of Canadian farmers. The role of the government has always been confined to supporting and promoting efforts and, in my opinion, it should continue to precisely play that role; for instance, through the many research programs carried out by Agriculture Canada, the stabilization programs and inspection services. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I also had the opportunity to speak about the bill to establish a corporation for the export of agricultural products, Canagrex. I would like to dwell on one of the essential instruments of farming, a modern instrument called credit. Canadian agriculture would never have achieved such an output and such efficiency without various forms of credit. And when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) praises the efficiency of the family farm and of Canadian Agriculture, he is not making up stories. He is simply trying to induce an awareness of that undeniable fact. The government has set up the Farm Credit Corporation to give farmers that tool that is essential to their development. Established in 1959, precisely 22 years ago, the corporation has assisted over 160,000 farmers.

As the minister pointed out this afternoon, out of these, 114,000 now have loans with the Farm Credit Corporation. It is, of course, difficult to measure in dollars and cents what contribution the Farm Credit Corporation is making to our country by financing the establishment of productive farms. However, we do know that as of January 1, 1981, Canadians farmers had about $117 billion in farm capital, breaking down as follows: 12 per cent short-term assets, 25 per cent medium-term assets and 65 per cent long-term assets, and 117.5 billion is a lot of money for Canada's agricultural sector.

The Farm Credit Corporation facilitates the transfer of farms to the younger generation and provides farmers with the investment capital they need for long-term productivity and stability. The agricultural sector must have access to investment capital if it is to provide the Canadian consumer with abundant supplies of high quality commodities at reasonable prices, and also supply foreign markets, thus contributing very substantially to our balance of payments. The Farm Credit Corporation is helping the family farm to play its role as a major supplier of food at national and world levels. In 1979-80 and 1980-81, the FCC granted nearly 90 per cent of all these loans, to family farms. In 1980-81, FCC borrowers increased their operating expenses by almost $100 million as a result of expansion projects, capital improvements and other farm investments which have been described by various members of this House since this afternoon. Loans granted by FCC and the annual expenditures generated by the corporation contribute very substantially to the economy and growth of rural communities and agricultural industries and services.

The successful results achieved by FCC borrowers show that the corporation is helping improve farm productivity and thus the Canadian economy. During the past years, it had to turn down many loan requests because it did not have enough funds, and that was particularly the case during this past year and the past months. Statistics show us that 65 per cent of loan seekers who were turned down because of their sound financial situation had previously borrowed from the FCC. Ninety-one per cent of 2,622 borrowers whose loans were either taken over or reimbursed in 1980-81 were a financial success. Furthermore, 93 per cent of the 72,663 accounts were paid up as of March 31, 1981.

Mr. Speaker, all this goes to show that farmers are indeed worthy of the trust placed in them by the Canadian government. Once more, I can say that as a representative of a typically rural and farm riding in the province of Quebec, namely the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, that the farmers in this area are strong and proud people. I used to work with some of them before I entered politics, and I am sure that they will continue to honour their debts in the same way they always have done. Last year, an analysis of the effectiveness of the FCC showed that the corporation had promoted the establishment of viable farm businesses and had made a very substantial contribution to the Canadian economy. A special farm survey made by the FCC in 1981 shows that the Corporation is now lending to operations that are below average in size. This statement strengthens our view that the government has a definite role to play in financing Canadian agriculture. We feel that this role should be emphasized, notwithstanding the fact that the private sector has become increasingly active on the long-term farm credit market during the past five years. Only a few years ago, the Farm Credit Corporation was providing over 70 per cent of long-term farm credit in Canada. At that time, the remainder came from provincial institutions, credit unions and private lenders. In 1980, in spite of pressing demands, it could only provide 26 per cent of the long-term credit. The proportion this year will be even smaller for the simple reason that the total demand for long-term credit has increased by as much as 20 per cent every year, while the funds made available to the Farm Credit Corporation have decreased year after year. And this is quite understandable when one considers the rising cost of farms in this country, of farm land per acre, and realizes that the prices of farms have doubled and sometimes tripled over the past ten years. The prices of farm equipment necessary to operate farms have also doubled and even tripled. The prices of inputs, animals and everything else have increased as well. Which means that a farm which was bought for $100,000 some ten years ago could be worth $300,000 or even $400,000 today.

It is clear therefore that the budgetary restraints imposed by the government over the past few years have made it impossible for the Corporation to meet an increasing demand. We recognize that this situation is creating serious problems for many farmers. Some of them have had to obtain short-term loans from banks with floating interest rates but with interest rates spiralling upwards, this credit is becoming very expensive, if not too expensive.

The action of the Farm Credit Corporation has nevertheless contributed significantly to the stability of agriculture, because its interest rates on loans are not only attractive, but fixed for a period of up to 30 years, while private lending institutions can only provide long-term credit with floating interest rates. And of course a farmer could not go to banking or lending institutions to borrow $100,000, $200,000 or $300,000 for 30 years. All he could get at the most would be a ten-year loan while the Farm Credit Corporation with its formula has always been able to lend Canadian farmers money to be reimbursed over a 30 year period. Moreover, it makes money available to applicants with worth-while projects but who lack collateral to borrow from private lenders.

The Farm Credit Corporation will continue to give credit to high risk and not only those who cannot obtain loans from lending institutions. Since 1975 when it was authorized to grant loans up to full government guarantee, it has been lending increasingly on lower guarantees. Often new farmers are unable to give enough guarantee to private credit institutions but the corporation does not hesitate to take greater risks. Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that over the last few years, the corporation has, much to its credit, made 70 per cent of all its loans available to young borrowers.

Recently, I heard hon. members on the other side complaining that the Canadian government provides no assistance to young farmers, that it does not help them find the money necessary to settle down on a farm. The figures I have here tell another story. They show that 70 per cent of all loan recipients were young farmers; in other words, the Canadian government, more specifically the Farm Credit Corporation, is eager to assist young people who wish to take up farming. In addition, it authorizes some of its borrowers to defer their payments until such time when pressures on their income have eased off. I need not say, Mr. Speaker, that at the present time, pig breeders in Canada, and more specifically in Quebec are having a rough time and I have just been informed that pig abattoirs will shut down on Monday. As a result, the corporation may at the request of borrowers and after examining their situation, have to allow them to postpone their payments on either the interest or the capital. That has surely allowed quite a few of them to survive and will enable them to carry on their operations.

Despite budget restrictions, the corporation has managed to stay in touch with the farming community. The farmers, even when they knew that the corporation had less money to go around, kept on calling on its personnel for advice. The FCC was thus able to foster a sensible utilization of credit while assuming a consulting role in so doing. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the staff of the Farm Credit Corporation, whether they operate out in the field, in regional offices, as provincial representatives or here at head office in Ottawa. I have been in contact with them on a regular basis and I can say that they have always listened well to what I have had to say, and that they are eager to help the farmers. Inevitably, some of the latter will claim that it is impossible for them to get in touch with the FCC personnel. It may have happened, but I would suggest that it has been a very rare occurrence because I have had many opportunities to discuss with them, and I can certainly commend them for the work they have been doing for 22 years in the field of Canadian agriculture.

In its budget of November 12, the government introduced special measures to bring immediate assistance to those people who have been unduly affected by the economic doldrums. As the previous speakers pointed out, unincorporated businesses, particularly farmers, now have access to the Small Business Development Bond. Thanks to the special agricultural assistance program, the Farm Credit Corporation has spent additional funds of roughly $50 million to help the most severely affected farmers. Earlier this evening, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) was saying that three loans in his riding would just about account for those $50 million. He ought to think it over a bit before speaking because in the first place the corporation is not allowed to lend more than $400,000 if the applicant is a company. In other words, those $50 million will indeed help quite a few farmers and the measure we are studying today, Bill C-88, opens another avenue for potential loans to farmers. It is precisely the bill we are studying which matters and which will give us a more permanent solution.

According to the agricultural food strategy of Canada, Canadian farmers might boost their production by two thirds between now and the year 2000. However, if the farmers want to achieve a degree of efficiency which will enable them to corner the available markets, they will have to reorganize their production over maximum scope units so as to benefit from modern production technology. One cannot optimize economies of scale unless one is prepared to use credit judiciously and make major investments. Farmers must therefore have ready access to sufficient long-term financing at reasonable conditions. This document highlights the role which the federal government and the Department of Agriculture want to play by making long-term farm credit available to farmers so that Canada's agriculture will reach its objectives.

It is therefore essential that the Farm Credit Corporation be given access to additional funds for Canadian farmers so they will be guaranteed an uninterrupted and sufficient long-term credit margin by a body which acknowledges their requirements. The most significant amendment to the Farm Credit Act paves the way toward a new source of funds. Several provisions of the bill will authorize the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow on financial markets. Most of its budget will still come from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, but it will be able to supplement it by borrowing on Canadian or international markets. As the borrowing mechanisms are gradually set up and as the Farm Credit Corporation carves a place for itself on the financial markets, it will be in a position to secure on those markets an ever-larger portion of its funds. The bill also provides that the limits for loans will be set by way of regulations and not by way of the act itself. The minister explained this earlier this afternoon when he said that the present limit is $200,000 for any single operation with one eligible applicant and $400,000 for an operation involving more than one applicant. It is a well known fact that farm financing is becoming increasingly expensive. To be in a position to meet the present and future needs of farmers, the Farm Credit Corporation must be able to increase the limit on its loans when the situation warrants. Providing that the limits will be set by way of regulations rather than by way of the act gives the corporation the required flexibility to respond more quickly to the economic conditions of the eighties. We now intend to raise these ceilings to $300,000 and $500,000 respectively for operations involving either one or several applicants. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this ceiling of $300,000 for one applicant and $500,000 for a corporation is not too high, far from it, as I said earlier, when you think about the over-all value of the farms, the equipment, the herds, the livestock, the quotas and so on.

The Farm Credit Corporation will also be able to pay up to 30 per cent of a loan on provision of satisfactory security before the mortgage is registered and the other documents respecting the security have been completed. This new provision will avoid additional costs and administrative inconvenience for the farmers who, previously, had to obtain bridge financing before the FCC could provide the approved funds. Mr. Speaker, this change will actually help the farmers as they often have had to wait for deeds executed by a notary or other documents and borrow from the banks for a certain period of time, and always at higher rates. The borrowing authority of the FCC is now lmited to 25 times its capital, which amounts to $150 million. The capital provided by the government to the corporation will be just under $143 million at the end of this fiscal year. The Farm Credit Corporation will therefore have exhausted its borrowing authority early in 1982-83. It is therefore imperative that its registered capital be increased from $150 million to $225 million to avoid a serious shortage of funds to be made available to farmers.

In recent years, we have received many representations, as I believe have all members who represent rural ridings, with respect to the age limitation in the case of gradual establishment loans. The age is now 35 but the bill will remove that. Part II of the bill enables the Farm Credit Corporation to write off 5 per cent of the interest rate on loans granted under a special farming assistance program intended to help the farming community in difficult times. This will make it possible to get the necessary funds out of departmental estimates.

In recent years, serious consideration has been given to the transfer of farms to the younger generation, with a view to finding a way of ensuring the continuation of the family farm system that is so important in our country. Bill C-88 which is before us is offering a solution to this very problem. It will authorize the Farm Credit Corporation to lend a farming corporation money to be used to grant a loan to anyone wishing to become a shareholder and member. It will thus be easier for sons and daughters of farmers to join the family operation. According to the present Farm Credit Act, the FCC may lend money on the security of farms lands alone or on farm lands and chattels. The FCC can obtain additional security but it cannot take it into consideration when determining the amount of the loan. The bill will make it possible to get additional security, as defined by regulation, and to take it into account when figuring out the amount of the loan. The additional security could, for instance, consist of equity in feeder cattle or even in savings certificates that cannot be cashed in before maturity without incurring a loss.

At present, the Farm Credit Corporation can keep accounts in its name only in the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks designated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). The bill would enable the corporation, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, to keep accounts in its name in any financial institution in or out of Canada. This would streamline the financial operation of the corporation and enable it to improve its financial efficiency. The bill would increase from five to seven the number of members of the board. The number has been limited to five since 1959, but the business of the corporation has increased, as mentioned earlier, and has become more complex since its inception in 1959. The addition of two members will increase the expertise and resources available to the corporation and Canadian farmers. Other housekeeping amendments are made to the act. Their purpose is to eliminate some obsolete aspects and to update others. The wording of the act will thus be improved and it will be easier to administer.

The Farm Credit Corporation plays a vital role by helping Canadian farmers finance their operation and giving them valuable advice. This is done without calling upon Parliament for money. Operation expenses, including losses, are paid for by a 1 per cent margin. Again, it must be especially commended for its flexible and tolerant repayment policy toward farmers in difficulty. Over the years, it has followed sound and worth-while management policies, but above all it has remained humane and understanding.

I would like to comment at length on the role played by the Farm Credit Corporation, but before I conclude, I must pay tribute to the Canadian farmers. Loans are repaid by the borrowers. The Canadian government, the Department of Agriculture, the Farm Credit Corporation do not extend charity. Quite the opposite, they make very sound and viable investments. Farmers repay their loans. They are proud people. I am convinced they are worthy of our faith in their ability and competence, by using the credit facilities we are extending to them. This legislation certainly will bring significant benefits to all Canadians, both consumers and producers. Mr. Speaker, I am confident this bill will pass second reading. We can then consider it without delay clause by clause in committee, in order that we may help Canadian farmers as soon as possible.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

THE BUDGET—EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS TO MEDICAL AND DENTAL PLANS. (B) EMPLOYEE LOANS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, this evening I read a speech delivered by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), and I want to read one sentence from that speech: It is up to governments to provide an atmosphere where Canadians can pursue opportunities, and I think that is happening in this country. How I wish that were the conviction of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen); how I wish that were the vision of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and how I wish that were the conviction of the government of this country!

Mr. Neil: And the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

Mr. Fretz: And the Minister of Agriculture. However, sadly, that is not the case.

On December 11, I rose in the House to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) a question regarding the negative impact of the budget on working Canadians, especially the provision which calls for employer-paid medical and dental plans now to be considered as taxable benefits. At that time the Minister of Labour indicated that he had made representations to the Minister of Finance on behalf of those millions of Canadian workers and their families who would suffer because of this provision. In spite of those representations and the representations of many unions and employers, the Minister of Finance has not seen his way clear to dispose of this reprehensible proposal.

Instead, in the House on Tuesday the minister responded with his usual sophistry to a question on this very issue raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke). The minister, who while minister of national health and welfare introduced medicare and who has cloaked himself in the robe of the great social reformer, is, by his actions, condemning millions of workers to higher taxes in these times of unspeakably high inflation.

We on this side of the House are reasonable people, but when the Minister of Finance has the bare-faced effrontery to call this budget one of fairness, one which takes from the rich and gives to the poor, when in actuality this particular provision will affect Canadians, 78 per cent of whom earn less than $25,000 annually—such outrageous behaviour makes it extremely difficult for us to respond with sweet reason. More than that, these actions on the part of the minister are leading to a growing sense of disenchantment on the part of Canadians with the democratic process. People have been moved as never before to take pen to paper or to pick up the telephone to plead with the minister to change his mind. All these entreaties fall on deaf ears, and the minister goes on his merry way, seemingly oblivious to the damage his budget has wrought on Canadians already straggering under the burdens of obscenely high interest rates and skyrocketing inflation.

On this issue employees and employers are on the same side. The employers are just as upset as the employees. I received in my office just today a letter from Mr. E. B. Magee, Jr. of the Port Colborne Iron Works, who sums up the feelings of employers pretty well. I would like to quote briefly from his letter addressed to the Minister of Finance:

Dear Sir:

I am greatly disturbed that no change has been announced to your budget proposal to tax employer-paid Extended Health Care and Dental Care premiums and also the proposed imposition of personal tax on the so-called "income accruing" within life insurance policies.

This proposal sounds great in theory but is destructive in practice. Let me explain how it affects my employees. My Extended Health Care and Dental Care plans have been in existence for many years. The annual premium cost per year per married employee is $478. My company pays 100 per cent of the cost therefore the full amount will be taxable to my employee. This will increase the tax paid by my average employee by $157.74 per year.

This is wonderful. If you repeat this same calculation for millions of working Canadians you generate millions of additional revenue. Its high time we increased taxes on these rich people!

While you get $104.11 and Ontario gets $53.63, a total of $157.74, what do I get?

I get:

(a) the pleasure of explaining to some employees why they should continue to belong to my Extended Health Care and Dental plans (i.e. "Why should I pay taxes of $157.74 when my drug bills and dental expenses last year were only $50.00?")

(b) the thrill of adjusting my tax reporting systems to include this trivial benefit and increasing the workload of my clerical staff already bogged down by government paper work.

(c) the joy of telling my customers my prices will have to increase if my insurer is forced to raise his premiums to cover lost revenue from subscribers who drop the plan; and

(d) the depressing feeling that comes from realizing that the party of Wilfrid Laurier has indeed lost all contact with reality and the needs of working Canadians.

In conclusion I should like to know, Mr. Speaker, in the light of these facts, and in view of the impassioned pleas from the millions of Canadians who are going to be adversely affected by this budget, if the minister has any intention of putting the interests of the little guy before his own narrow political ambitions, and will he withdraw this iniquitous provision? Indeed, will he withdraw this whole budget altogether?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) makes reference to two of the budgetary measures relating to employee benefits—the taxation of employer contributions to private health and dental plans and the subsidy element of loans from employers. Before I comment on these specific items, I feel it is essential that the general concept of equity that underlies these measures be explained.

Critics of the budget have argued that if this is a "soak the rich" budget, then it is a sham because it really hits lower and middle-income employees. This kind of criticism involves a fundamental misunderstanding of the concept of equity. An equitable tax system has two fundamental characteristics: higher-income individuals bear a proportionately greater share of the tax burden; and individuals with the same income should bear relatively equal portions of the tax burden.

The full taxation of employee benefits improves the equity of our tax system in both of these fundamental respects. The previous exemption for health plan benefits, for example, was inequitable to those who did not have access to such plans through their employer. In fact, they were subsidizing, through the tax system, those employees who did receive these benefits through their employers. The exemption was also inequitable between low and high-income employees. For example, the exemption for a $200 premium paid by the employer was worth only $50 to those in a 25 per cent tax bracket, but $100 to those in a 50 per cent tax bracket. The proposed change will also be consistent with the treatment of employer contributions to hospital and medical insurance plans administered by the provinces. For example, employer contributions to OHIP have always been a taxable benefit so why should supplementary benefits available to Canadians not be a taxable benefit when OHIP is a taxable benefit? These contributions have always been taxable in the hands of employees.

More generally, budget changes such as those referred to by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) serve to achieve a more coherent and consistent set of rules for the taxation of various types of income. While these employee benefits accrue to individuals in all tax brackets, they accrue to a relatively small percentage of individuals in the lower-income brackets and their amounts are modest. More importantly, for a vast majority of low and middle-income Canadians, any tax increase due to the removal of such tax exemptions and deductions is more than offset by the lowering of the marginal tax rates and the enrichment of the federal tax cut of $200 per individual and allowing married taxpayers to claim an additional $200 tax cut in respect of the spouse. This provision is worth over $1.5 billion per annum in federal and provincial tax savings to Canadians.

AGRICULTURE—NATIONAL BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM. (B) INQUIRY RESPECTING CONSULTATION WITH SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, on December 16 I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) a question related to the national marketing and stabilization required in the red meat industry, and particularly the beef industry. I wanted to know if he had had any communication with the province of Saskatchewan about the process or feasibility of implementing a stabilization program. I want to emphasize the word "stabilization" as compared to the program of supply-management. I should like to supplement my words, Mr. Speaker, and try to lay the groundwork for the minister and the House.

The reason I asked the question is that it is important now for stabilization to take place within the Canadian beef industry. The Minister of Agriculture has the power under the Agricultural Stabilization Act to implement the necessary planning of stabilization within the beef industry. This planning should involve three groups. The first group would be the federal and provincial governments of the cattle producing provinces and cattle producers. There should be a three-way partnership in stabilization among these groups.

The cost which is necessary to implement the plan should be shared by these three groups. Ways must be found so that cattle producers can share in the cost of the program, much in the same way as wheat producers share in the grain stabilization program. I hope there could be some set time period for adjustment in the cattle stabilization program, as I see it, rather than following the manner in which the grain stabilization program has been carried on, where increases have been made once and predicted to be made the next year after producers are locked into the program. Cattle producers must share in the cost of their own stabilization program. Most important, the 95 per cent figure could assist the cattle industry. If it were adjusted on a quarterly basis, it would be significantly greater than if it were 95 per cent straight across the board. If it is 100 per cent and the cost is shared by producers, there would be some form of stabilization to save the beef industry as we know it in Canada today. If we have to move to 100 per cent, I think it is acceptable if the costs are shared. The only additional burden in the first year would be the payout which is needed. The payout is needed now, right now. If we continue to ignore the problem, we will see greater and greater distress in the beef cattle industry across Canada.

I should like to refer to a survey of 93 beef farmers in three Ontario counties. This survey is applicable across Canada, I do not think there is any doubt about it. The three Ontario counties were Bruce, Grey and Wellington which showed that 42 of the 93 producers surveyed had debts of more than 75 per cent of what they owned and 23 had debts which exceeded their assets. It would appear that most of these producers whose debts exceeded 75 per cent of their assets are in serious financial difficulty. Most of those farmers will not likely be able to finance their cattle operations this year. The average debt of the 93 farmers was $405,000; nine had liabilities of more than $1 million; one had a debt of $2.2 million. Most of this debt is at floating interest rates which has doubled in the past year while beef prices remained low.

The survey also showed that only seven farmers answering the questionnaire reported a profit of more than $5,000, while 22 of them said that they lost more than $75,000 in 1981. To cope with interest rates of more than 20 per cent, 12 farmers sold off land or machinery, four liquidated their assets, six got off-the-farm jobs, and 23 of them, for whatever good it might do, took out another mortgage. I submit that this survey speaks for the cattle industry across Canada, not just Ontario.

The province of Saskatchewan has the space, the cattle numbers, and the grain to finish those animals. The province introduced a beef stabilization program which is neither stabilizing nor marketing. It is a program which less than 60 per cent of the farmers have joined. The criteria for joining the program eliminates any benefit to the cow-calf operator. There is no point for the feed lot operator because he is not eligible. The biggest drawback in the Saskatchewan program is that one must join for six years. Before one joins for six years, one should know that not much planning has gone into the program as yet. According to the minister responsible, Mr. MacMurchy, it is still being worked out but it is a start and an important one. I understand the Saskatchewan government rejected an offer from the federal government for 100 per cent cost of production in 1977 as a stabilization program. I can understand the minister responsible in Saskatchewan, Mr. MacMurchy, when he said that he rejected the Minister of Agriculture's supply-management approach.

I would like to know tonight if the 100 per cent cost of production return offered by the federal government was based on the province of Saskatchewan entering a supply management project. Stabilization is needed now in the province of Saskatchewan. It is needed across Canada in the cattle industry. The longer we delay, the more difficult it will be to rebuild the industry, if our beef producing herds can ever be rebuilt in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) wants to know whether we have conferred in the last two or three weeks with representatives from the province of Saskatchewan regarding the implementing of a national beef prices stabilization program. The answer is yes. However, I should also explain to the hon. member the advisory mechanism that was set up several years ago.

When the Agricultural Stabilization Act was amended by this House in 1975, departmental officers did try to standardize Canadian stabilization programs for all farm products. Their efforts have ended in failure, Mr. Speaker, mostly because there were widely differing views among various provinces as to the level of assistance that was to be extended to producers. A number of provinces were advocating very strong aid while others recommended very limited aid or no aid at all. In 1978, after having ascertained that this approach was leading toward a deadlock, we offered all provinces the "GM 100" plan. Essentially, this program would have assured all producers a cash refund of all production costs paid out in cash, plus 100 per cent of the average five-year return obtained on the market, this latter amount being added to the cash production costs.

This was a sure guarantee linked to the way the market works, through which the farmers would have avoided very costly adjustments in their operations from year to year. We have to remember, Mr. Speaker, that the beef market was especially strong in Canada in 1978. The devaluation of the Canadian dollar in 1977 had caused a rapid increase in the price of beef from $45 to $80 a hundred pounds. The market was up and producers were not really interested in support programs. As a result, the provinces unanimously rejected the GM100 approach in the belief that this program was too much of an incentive and might cause overproduction and the eventual collapse of the beef industry. Since 1978, the price of beef has been ranging from $75 to $80 a hundred pounds for A1 and A2 steers in Toronto, and costs have been rising quickly. Because of this, what was a good price in 1978 has become an unrewarding and stagnant price unrelated to increasingly high costs. Obviously, beef producers do not apply the cost of living factor to their prices. In 1980, Department of Agriculture officials tried once again to develop a joint stabilization program for Canada as a whole, but again without success.

I would like to point out to the hon. member that Saskatchewan has always taken part in these discussions. Of course, in 1981—and I shall close with this comment, Mr. Speaker—the provinces and the producers abandoned the position they had taken in 1978 and indicated that even the GM100 approach would not be enough.

ANNOUNCED SHUTDOWN OF MINE AT URANIUM CITY, SASK. (B) ATTENDANCE OF ELDORADO NUCLEAR OFFICIALS AT STANDING COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): I would like to begin by saying how pleased I am that the federal government and Eldorado Nuclear have co-operated in setting up a task force to examine the problems associated with the closure of the Beaverlodge mine and mill. The task force is composed of representatives from the Uranium City area, the Saskatchewan government, the federal government and Eldorado Nuclear. The group will be formulating recommendations and submitting them to the appropriate people or agencies in an initial report due March 31, 1982. However, this is where my pleasure stops.

I am extremely disappointed that the Saskatchewan government and the municipal corporation of Uranium City had to push so hard to get the task force set up. I am even more disappointed that the meeting between the four concerned groups was held in Ottawa instead of Uranium City, the area most gravely affected by the closure.

How can a federal Crown corporation be allowed to spend millions of dollars on the Beaverlodge operation and then shut it down so abruptly? In the last couple of years expenditures have been made that include: Relocation of head offices from Edmonton to Saskatoon; purchase of a Boeing 737 aircraft; a new hangar for the aircraft; a new cookery; new homes in Uranium City, with the total of homes now exceeding 500; the Charlotte River hydro dam; a complete overhaul of the mill; the recruitment of people up until the week the closure was announced, and other expenditures too numerous to mention, but which total hundreds of millions of dollars.

Everyone accepts the fact that eventually all mines must close down because the ore runs out. But no one expected the mine and mill at Uranium City to close because of the confidence Eldorado had shown in the ore body, through large expenditures and an active recruiting program. Was this a cynical plot, or the result of gross mismanagement?

As the Member of Parliament representing the Uranium City area I want to do everything I can to see the town remain a viable and active community. This is why I am particularly interested in the section of the task force's mandate dealing with economic development of the area. It would have been great if the federal government had asked Eldorado to remain open for an extended period of time to allow the development of alternate industries, but with the closure announced for June 30, 1982, everyone is under the gun. Many people have already left Uranium City. I do not like to see it, but with all the uncertainty I sure do not blame them.

When we look at the closure of the Beaverlodge operation we find that the people fall into three easily identifiable groups: Those who are direct employees of Eldorado Nuclear; those who do not work directly for Eldorado Nuclear but depend on the spin-off benefits of the company and those who live in other communities such as Camsell Portage, Black Lake, Stoney Rapids and Fond du Lac.

On behalf of the people of Uranium City and the Athabasca Basin I am asking you to help us revitalize the community, not just relocate the employees of Eldorado. Granted, there are some who will want to leave and they should be assisted, but there are others who have strong roots in Uranium City and they wish to stay. Some of them were born there and grew up in the community; still others have lived there ten, 15, 20 years or more. It is their home and they do not want to leave. They won't leave. These people have investments in the community. If some are forced to leave they must receive compensation for their investments in their homes and businesses.

It can be appreciated that someone living in Ottawa, Toronto or Montreal would have some difficulty understanding what it would be like living in a community of 3,000 people after an industry employing 840 of its residents had closed down. If an industry employing 840 people closed down in a city of say one million people it would have small effect on the total population and devasting effects on the families of the 840 who lost their jobs, but the day after the city would go on as if nothing had happened. Neighbouring communities would not likely even be affected. This is not so with Uranium City. If that situation happens in this community, the communities in the Athabasca Basin lose their supply centre. The displaced employees have no other jobs to go to and there is no economic base to support the remaining businesses in town. If the Beaverlodge mine and mill must close there has to be something else developed to replace the economic base.

Please allow me to tell you a bit about this area, about this community. As I mentioned, Uranium City has a current population of about 3,000 people. One industry, Eldorado Nuclear, employs about 840 of its residents. The setting is on the north shore of Lake Athabasca, the largest lake in Saskatchewan, which is not many miles from the 60th parallel, or the Northwest Territories border, as it is more commonly known. There are no all-weather roads; the only year-round access to the town is by air. During certain times of the year it is accessible by barges on the water or ice roads in the coldest part of the winter, for a very short period of time. The people of Uranium City and the Athabasca Basin are good, hard-working Canadian citizens, and we are asking for your help, just as we are asking and receiving help from the government of Saskatchewan and the municipal corporation of Uranium City.

There should have been consultation with the local people before the announced closure so that many of these problems could have been worked out satisfactorily.

In the past, Eldorado Nuclear was always viewed as a good corporate citizen by the residents of Uranium City and the area. The abrupt announcement of an unexpected closure hurt that image deeply. It is the hope of all those concerned that Eldorado Nuclear may be viewed as a good corporate citizen again after June 30, 1982.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in a statement in the House on December 4, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) explained that the decision to close the uranium mine at Uranium City had been taken by Eldorado Nuclear Limited with much concern and only after careful assessment of all factors. Further, the mine will not be closed until June in order to give time for the implementation of measures to ensure that the workers and their families will find suitable new employment. The prospects are favourable in this respect because there is a considerable demand for competent workers in the mining industry.

On the matter of consultation, there was a thorough appraisal of all factors concerned with the economics and operation of the Eldorado mine before a decision was reached. In the course of this assessment, there was consultation with the minister, with Premier Blakeney, and with the federal Department of Employment and Immigration. The company then concluded that it was important to make the decision known as quickly as possible so that steps could be taken to provide for the phasing out of the operation in a manner that would protect the employees to the maximum extent possible.

Concerning an earlier reference by the member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) to financial support being given the heavy water plants in Cape Breton, each form of assistance must, of course, be assessed on its own merit. Not only is the cost of uranium production at Uranium City about two and a half times the selling price, but also the world market for uranium has been declining and will remain at greatly reduced levels for the foreseeable future. It will be recalled that 80 per cent of our uranium goes into the export market. On the other hand, the two heavy water plants in Nova Scotia and the plants in Ontario are the only significant producers in the world. It is important to maintain heavy water production capacity for the domestic market and also in relation to heavy water export opportunities in Mexico and Korea.

To ensure the effective co-operation of all interested parties in dealing with community problems arising from the closing of the mine, the Uranium City task force has been established. It consists of representatives of the community, the Saskatchewan government, the federal government, and Eldorado Nuclear Limited. The task force is charged with developing recommendations by March 31 concerning a development plan for future economic development in Uranium City. It is also required to investigate the social and economic impact of the mine closure and to consider compensation and mitigating measures, if appropriate.

Eldorado Nuclear has already made provision for implementing generous measures for its employees consisting of the following: a special severance package; a new contract involving a 13 per cent wage increase retroactive to January 1, 1981; and a relocation program providing for up to $9,000 per employee. The relocation program would involve total—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Minister of Finance has long been known for his quiet, withdrawn demeanour, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Minister of Finance quietly withdraw his misdemeanour.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT FOR SHIPS BUILT IN COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion. At the present time ships built by offshore countries and plying their services completely in Canadian waters are subject to a 25 per cent duty. However, this duty does not apply to ships built in Commonwealth countries. This has created considerable hardship and unfair competition for the Canadian shipbuilding industry, which is having a difficult time as it is competing for contracts with these countries, that give a greater subsidization to their industry than does Canada. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the government take the necessary steps to change the Canada Shipping Act and remove this preferential treatment which has been an anachronism for many years.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EMERGENCY MEASURES

AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH CIVILIAN INTERNMENT CAMPS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The emergency planning order, Order in Council No. 1981-1305, gives the Solicitor General for Canada authority to:

Facilitate the selective reduction and transfer of prison populations to provide for the establishment of civilian internment camps.

The government has to date refused to supply the background information upon which this authority was premised. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That this House either produce the reasons for this authority for a full debate in the House or rescind the said order in council at once.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE—FUNDING FOR REMOVAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 concerning the government's urea formaldehyde foam insulation policy. The government's UFFI aid policy for victims of urea formaldehyde poisoning is completely inadequate because it is a token remedy for a serious problem the government now admits it created; it fails even to begin to help thousands of Canadians who must rid their homes of UFFI; it will bring serious financial hardship to home owners who are now left with properties that have little or no resale value, and it arbitrarily sets a suspect gas level without considering the different reactions by thousands of Canadians who are and will be exposed to UFFI. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

S.O. 43

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources reassign funds now allocated for CHIP to insulate homes this year and next and make these moneys available for an emergency fund to assist all UFFI victims with the costs of removing this foam and restoring their homes to previous condition.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROVISION AFFECTING MEDICAL AND DENTAL PLANS PAID FOR BY EMPLOYERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given that the budgetary provision deeming that employer-paid medical and dental plans are now to be considered taxable benefits has caused consternation and upset throughout the business and labour communities, and further given that this provision will affect millions of Canadians, including a local business person who writes:

—the proposal is destructive—the average increase in tax payable per employee will be $157.74 per year—my prices to my customers will have to increase—

—therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to reconsider all representations on this particular provision, and after having given it cool, sober second thought, withdraw this inequitable provision.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED DECENTRALIZATION OF DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES MAPPING BRANCH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, concerning the decentralization program of the government I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the President of the Treasury Board make a statement forthwith as to whether it is the policy of the government to move the survey and mapping branch of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to Sherbrooke, or whether that move has been abandoned because of the uncertainty it is causing for those public servants employed in that branch.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that our foundering economy has resulted in a 37 per cent increase in unemployment insurance applications in British Columbia over the last year, and in view of the fact that this mass of unemployed has swamped Manpower offices resulting in a two-month backlog in the handling of unemployment insurance claims, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly):

That this House instruct the minister to have his regional unemployment officials hire whatever new staff is necessary to handle the backlog and to write emergency cheques so unemployed workers are not forced to apply for social assistance while waiting for their unemployment insurance benefits.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTION BENEFITS BE PAID TO FRESHWATER FISHERMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas there are thousands of freshwater fishermen across Canada who are obliged to make unemployment insurance contributions but who, at the same time, are unable to collect benefits under this program because their season does not coincide with that of saltwater fishermen, and whereas not only is this situation grossly unfair it is also causing undue hardship for those thousands of fishermen unable to find work in the off-season due to the disastrous state of the economy under this Liberal government, and who are suffering, like all Canadians, from the effects of the government's high interest rate policies, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That the government take action immediately to amend this unjust and discriminatory section of the Unemployment Insurance Act so that unemployment insurance benefits can be received by freshwater and saltwater fishermen alike.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, in view of the growing concern about family violence, wife battering and sexual assault, and in view of the fact that the Rape Assault Centre in Duncan has not been able to get a tax number as a charity because, in addition to front line work with victims of assault it also works toward change in our antiquated laws, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That this House instruct the Department of National Revenue to cease its anti-women policy and issue the Duncan Rape Assault Centre with a tax number as a registered charity, and to give such recognition to all rape assault centres across Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of the pending lay-offs, summer shutdowns, and early retirement schemes affecting hundreds of mine, mill and smelter workers in resource communities across Canada, due largely to the government's misguided economic policies and the November 12 budget, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the government withdraw immediately the November 12 budget and take positive steps posthaste to restore economic stability and productivity to this nation.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

QUERY RESPECTING TAX INDEXATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who has been going around claiming he has reduced taxes for some 12 million Canadians. His own figures indicate that a basic component of what he calls a tax reduction is simply the continuation of the principle of indexation. Does the minister consider continuation of indexation to be a tax cut?

• (1115)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, of course it has that very effect. It must be regarded as such. The President of the United States is discussing and implementing tax cuts which, in total, globally, are much less than the tax cuts which are provided through annual indexation. As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows very well, it is an option, at each budget time, for the Minister of Finance to determine what happens to indexation. Indeed, the Conservative Party has recognized that this is an option for the Minister of Finance each year, because before the October budget of last year, that party ran extensive advertisements appealing to the government not to disturb indexation which, in itself, is an important part of tax reductions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FORECASTED INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT REVENUES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Well, things are a little clearer now. The minister has admitted that if, indeed, there has been a tax cut for some 12 million Canadians, and that is highly arguable, that it is largely due to indexation. The House knows that the architect of indexation was the Hon. Robert Stanfield.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Therefore, if the minister is saying that there were tax cuts for 12 million Canadians, those tax cuts were introduced by Bob Stanfield.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What he is also saying is that if what he calls tax cuts were protected for Canadians, they were protected because of the advertising program of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. That is what he is saying.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Now that we have cleared up a little of that deliberate Cape Breton obscurity, let me ask the Minister of Finance another question.

The Minister of Finance is predicting higher unemployment and low growth rates for the next two years, yet his own budget papers also claim a $3.7 billion increase in revenues coming to the government from the personal income taxes paid in 1982-83 by ordinary Canadians across the country. Will the minister explain how he can reconcile his claim that he is cutting taxes for individual Canadians while gaining nearly $4 billion from these same people?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the first point is that we all know that the minister of finance who introduced indexation into the House of Commons was the former minister of finance, Mr. Turner.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Oh, the hero, the darling of the backbenchers!

Mr. Paproski: What's his name?

Mr. Nielsen: The new leader!

Mr. Crombie: You are in trouble when John comes back!

Mr. MacEachen: While I have the greatest admiration for my fellow Nova Scotian, Mr. Stanfield, to my knowledge he has never occupied the post of minister of finance, which would have given him the opportunity to introduce tax legislation to the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. MacEachen: The right hon.—

Mr. Nielsen: Now, where was I?

An hon. Member: It's Friday.

Mr. MacEachen: —member, the Leader of the Opposition, has referred to Cape Breton obscurity, and he has a habit of ridiculing that part of Canada, which I find to be rather upsetting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. MacEachen: But I would remind the hon. member—

Mr. Nielsen: Right honourable member.

Mr. MacEachen: —that in the budget tax tables the source of all the tax cuts is clearly laid out, and indexation is included among those. There is absolutely no obscurity. What is obscure is the hon. member's—

Mr. Nielsen: Right honourable.

Mr. MacEachen: —grasp of the information which ought to be available to him.

Now the hon. member—

Mr. Nielsen: Right honourable!

Mr. MacEachen: —talks about tax cuts. I have stated and repeat that in January, 1982, the total amount of tax deductions implemented in Canada comes to $3 billion. If that had not taken place, let me explain to the right hon. gentleman that the volume of tax collections would have been increased by that amount.

• (1120)

BASIS FOR TAX PROPOSALS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me say that I intended no slight upon Cape Breton. The only, most outstanding, and perhaps the singular example of Cape Breton obscurity is the person of the Minister of Finance. I am sure the people of Cape Breton would be as delighted to get rid of that obscurity as would the members of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I am not going to argue with the minister whether it was John Turner or Bob Stanfield who introduced the tax cuts that he claims are in the budget. The point is he did not do it, and he should stop pretending to the people of Canada that he did.

I would like some clarification from this minister who claims he is cutting the taxes of people from whom he is claiming $4 billion more. Let me ask the minister the following question. He is saying that in effect the continuation of indexation would be a tax cut for Canadians. The only way it would be a tax cut would be if the income of Canadians did not go up at all, despite inflation. Will the minister tell us whether he based his budget on the assumption that the income of Canadians will not go up this year?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I based the budget strategy on the necessity of doing something to control the deficit. That was the basis. In achieving that I attempted to apply the greatest possible expenditure restraint and to gain new revenues. I had an option in gaining new revenues either to make a general tax increase, which I rejected, or to attempt to increase the tax base by removing what I considered to be in certain cases unjustified tax preferences. That is the basis of the over-all thrust of the fiscal stance of the budget.

EFFECT OF REMOVING INDEXATION

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question with regard to this indexation. As I understand it, the minister pleads before us to believe that continued indexation is a tax cut. He is nodding in the affirmative. That, by the way, is the same as a notorious killer, having murdered his mother and father, saying to the jury, "Have mercy on me, I am an orphan." That is exactly what he is saying.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: Let us follow the minister's logic. He is alleging that indexation is a tax cut. By his logic, as he points out, at the whim of the government it can be done away with, thereby raising billions more in tax revenue. Given that situation, is the minister now saying that doing away with indexation is not a tax increase? Is that what he is saying? He cannot have it both ways.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have not said that. It is evident to me that if indexation had been limited or eliminated, there would be a very great benefit to the treasury.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INDEXATION

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Absolutely. Absolutely! When a predecessor of the minister, John Turner, introduced this measure, adopted from Mr. Stanfield, this is what he said, and this was eight years ago:

● (1125)

A person will no longer pay tax at a higher marginal rate simply because inflation swept him into a higher tax bracket.

There was not one word from the then Liberal finance minister or any member of the government that indexation was a tax decrease. It was an adoption of a progressive tax reform—not a word about increase. It was to prevent the government from having a vested interest in inflation. That is what it was for.

Does that principle which was enunciated by his predecessor, John Turner, continue to be a principle of this government and of this Minister of Finance? If that is the case, will he now stop misleading taxpayers by alleging that continued indexation is any kind of a tax reduction whatsoever?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is quite evident that if indexation had been eliminated, or had been limited in some way—

An hon. Member: Taxes would have increased.

Mr. MacEachen: Taxes would have increased.

Prior to the budget of November, 1981, there was a great deal of speculation, which I had not originated—

Mr. Clark: Yes you did.

Mr. MacEachen: —that it was my intention to eliminate indexation. Members opposite raised a very strong protest on the understanding in their minds that that would have been a tax increase. When indexation is retained, it is a tax cut. That is very clear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. Clark: A supplementary, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition later. At this point in the question period I do have to recognize the hon. member for Oshawa.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REQUEST THAT TERMS BE OBSERVED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the new Minister of State for International Trade. In Canada today there are 50,000 auto workers on lay-off, 21,000 of whom are not likely ever to be able to return to their jobs. Because of the failure of the minister's predecessors in Industry, Trade and Commerce to insist that the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact be lived up to, we have 15,000 fewer jobs than we ought to have. Will the minister take immediate steps in exercising his responsibility to ensure that this pact is lived up to so those 15,000 Canadians who ought to have jobs in this industry, because of that pact, will get them?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, first of all, I would like to say that no one has ever worked harder for the Canadian automobile industry than my colleague, the hon. member for Windsor West.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: You have identified the problem. Let us have the solution.

Mr. Lumley: Last year, for the first time in our history, this government made an effort to obtain export markets for Canadian automobiles. We were successful in obtaining the largest single contract in export markets ever in the history of Canada, for Canadian automobiles. In Iraq we sold 13,000 cars worth over $100 million.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: We on this side of the House are not as pessimistic about the future of the automobile industry as the hon. member alleges.

QUERY RESPECTING INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, if hard work by his predecessor produced 50,000 lay-offs for the Canadian automobile worker and a shortfall of 15,000 permanent jobs, I hope that the present minister will fall asleep, if he says that is what hard work will do.

I do not want to joke about this. That pact has been in existence since 1965, as the minister knows, and in the first clause of that pact it says that both countries were to share on a fair and equitable basis in future growth. That has not happened. We now have a lower percentage of jobs in that industry in Canada, compared to our sales, than we had before the pact came into existence. That is a disgrace for which the government and no one else is responsible.

I would ask the minister, quite apart from export sales to other countries, which are important, will he take immediate steps to ensure that the major producers in North America live up to the letter of the auto pact and ensure that we get investment in Canada proportionate to our purchases in this country, so that we will get our fair share of jobs?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party understands that both the United States and Canada are experiencing severe domestic decline in our automobile industries.

Mr. Broadbent: We have had greater decline.

Mr. Lumley: One of our major concerns is that if the North American automobile industry improves the North American share of the world market, this will ensure jobs for Canadians for many years.

• (1130)

With respect to the implementation of the auto pact we are determined that Canada will attain its fair share and that the letter of the auto pact will be followed by both our countries.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, we are looking forward to the concrete realization of that goal. All the minister's predecessors have failed, since 1965, to achieve that goal, and we want to see some evidence from the minister soon that there is a new approach being taken by the Government of Canada.

REQUEST THAT JAPANESE AND EUROPEANS UNDERTAKE MANUFACTURING IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to talk about a different aspect of the auto industry. Considering that imports from Japan as well as some European countries are increasing their share of the Canadian market, I would like to ask the minister whether, in fairness to Canadian consumers as well as workers, the Government of Canada will enter into agreements with those offshore producers to obtain from them a commitment to start producing in Canada either parts or assembled vehicles equivalent to what they are selling to Canadian consumers, so that we will get some of those jobs we need in this industry, and to which we are entitled.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, at the present time the United States has a three-year agreement with respect to Japanese imports from Japanese automobile manufacturers. We happen to have a one-year agreement, and we will be initiating discussions next week with the Japanese under the terms of our agreement. My colleague, the hon. member for Windsor West and I have both made trips to Japan and talked to authorities there, both in the private sector and in the government, to try to encourage exactly what the hon. member suggests, the purchase of more Canadian parts for cars from that country sold in Canada.

MINISTER'S POSITION ON TAX EXEMPTIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I want to try to clear up the most recent fraud the Minister of Finance is trying to perpetrate on the Canadian public.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: In admitting now that the basis for his claiming to reduce taxes is that he has kept in place the indexing proposal, the minister is saying that he has cut taxes by leaving in place an element of the tax system which was already there. That is what he is saying. Just following that logic along, I want to ask the minister whether he will be arguing, in a subsequent budget he might introduce in a couple of months, or at any other time, that continuing the $100 charitable exemption or any other exemption that is available—for example, for pension contributions, for children or for spouses, other exemptions which are already in the tax system—will also be a tax cut. Is that his logic?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, just to clear up the first point, I have said that the basis of my claim that there has been a very substantial tax cut amounting in deductions to $3 billion this year is not entirely indexation. That is part of it. There is also the reduction in the marginal tax rate, and there is also the reduction in the federal tax credit, which has benefited and will benefit over a million low and medium-income families in Canada. Taken together, the indexation, the cuts in the marginal tax rates, and the restructuring of the federal tax credit, that is the total basis.

I am not forecasting what arguments might be necessary in the future to meet the rather erroneous position taken by the Leader of the Opposition this morning, yesterday, the day before yesterday, and probably on into the future.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

CALCULATION OF PROVINCIAL REVENUES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. A front-page story by Andrew Szende in the Toronto Star this morning reports revised Department of Finance calculations that provincial revenues for health, post-secondary education and other services will be slashed on a net basis by $4.5 billion over the next five years. That estimate is twice the size of the one contained in the minister's budget when he brought it down on November 12.

Will the minister confirm those revised calculations, and will he not admit that the new figures will almost definitely force the provinces to cut back substantially vital services to their people and to increase taxes in order to cope with the shortfall?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to examine that particular article; therefore, I cannot comment on the figures quoted. However, it is my contention that the proposals which I have placed before the provinces will improve the fiscal position of the provinces each year during the course of that five-year period. Even with the proposed elimination of the revenue guarantee, for each province, taking into account the total transfers there will be and the tax offsets which were provided in the budget, these transfers will grow on an annual basis quite significantly.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW FORMULA

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He does not have to see the Toronto Star article. It was based on documents made available by the minister himself to the provinces on Friday in anticipation of the negotiations on the economy with the premiers this coming week. In light of that, and in light of the fact also that the minister has already made one multimillion dollar error—$660 million, to be exact—in calculating the impact of his budget on provincial revenues over the next five years, is he therefore reviewing the projected impact of his new formula for equalization payments to ensure that he is not also underestimating the harm that proposal will inflict on the have-not provinces of the country? I am thinking in particular of the Atlantic provinces.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I had a meeting last week with the ministers of finance, and I will be meeting with them again next week. The question of equalization is very much at the fore. We have been considering the Ontario standard, which is the proposal I have made to the provinces. As a result of representations made by ministers I have made some adjustments to the Ontario standard as it was first proposed. I think we all understand fully the impact that formula will have. It will flow additional funds each year into the equalization-receiving provinces.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE QUEBEC WILL NOT LOSE SUBSIDIES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for Quebec affairs. In view of the present lack of communication between the governments in Ottawa and Quebec City, a situation that has been deplored on both sides of the House, I should like to remind the minister that, as the leader of the Liberal caucus has pointed out, Quebec might lose two subsidies—one for $11 million for the modernization of pulp and paper plants and another for $30 million for the Montreal convention centre. In the circumstances and considering the agreements that have already been finalized for some time, can the minister give us the assurance that Quebec will not lose the subsidies?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Minister of State): I wish to thank the hon. member for Joliette for his question. Regarding the subsidiary agreement signed with the government of Quebec with a view to modernizing the pulp and paper industry, I can inform the hon. member that the total envelope provides for $240 million in funds; to date, $200 million have been committed to specific projects, which leaves another $40 million. There are a number of projects on the table that could be covered by the remaining amount, but to do so, a satisfactory agreement must be reached by representatives of both governments. As for the subsidiary agreement on tourism, it is a fact that the Canadian government has offered to contribute $24 million for the convention centre. Early in December, representatives of the Quebec government informed representatives of the Government of Canada that they were willing to accept this amount which, at first, they had refused. So as far as the Montreal convention centre is concerned, we shall soon be able to announce that documents have been signed and the designated funds transferred.

The remaining aspects of the agreement on tourism which concern the ski industry and the renovation of Old Montreal are still being discussed, but to date it has been impossible to reach any agreement on specific projects.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, yesterday I was informed by a very reliable source that officials of the two departments in Quebec City are now negotiating and discussing the subsidies with their federal counterparts. At this point, could the minister give us the assurance that, contrary to the views of the hon. member for Longueuil, there is no danger that Quebec will lose the subsidies if they are not claimed before March 30. It seems that negotiations between senior officials of both governments are taking shape.

Mr. Joyal: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Longueuil was correct in saying that a real danger exists in this respect. I mean that without immediate and close co-operation between both levels of government, Quebec may not be getting all the benefits defined in the agreements. The representative for Quebec failed to attend a federal-provincial conference on tourism held on December 10 and 11 of last year. It is clear that if Quebec had been present at this federal-provincial meeting, the funds earmarked for Old Montreal and the ski industry could have been used immediately, which unfortunately is not the case. Consequently, if the hon. member for Joliette has any influence with the Quebec government's representatives, he should make the point that co-operation is the best policy to ensure that Quebec will receive substantial economic benefits.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PROCEDURES TO COPE WITH NUCLEAR CONTAMINATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. In the case of the Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. spill at Tunney's Pasture there were numerous examples of lax emergency procedures, such as I shall enumerate. There was no established plan of action in the event of a spill; some workers left the dangerous area without being inspected for contamination; cleaning staff reported to work without being informed of the spill or its potential dangers; workers reported to work the next day and the area was still not decontaminated, and there were no shower facilities for women workers in the operation.

Does the minister not feel that this is yet another example of federal workers not being adequately protected by the laws of this land and by the safety procedures of government-operated facilities?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the hon. member probably knows that the workers in the various buildings are protected and that a number of measures are taken by different departments. We in Labour Canada do not have jurisdiction in most of the cases the hon. member has mentioned this morning. Nevertheless, I will take his advice as notice and look into the question.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): That is exactly the point, Madam Speaker. We have been waiting for a number of years for the government to introduce changes to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. This is the section which deals with occupational health and safety for workers. Is it not time that the government finally introduced this important legislation and, speaking to the ministers concerned, is it not time that we protected all federal workers under that umbrella legislation and that we made sure that no other legislation interferes? The minister admits that that is a problem at the AECL plant. He should do something about it.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I have received a number of letters from all sides of the House urging the introduction of amendments to the Canada Labour Code. I hope that, when a measure is introduced, which I hope will be very soon, it will be given speedy passage by all members of the House so that we can reach the objectives that everyone has at heart, including this particular matter.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON EMPLOYEES MEETING INCREASED ACCOMMODATION COSTS FOLLOWING TRANSFERS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. One of the provisions that concerns some of my constituents with respect to the recent budget is that which amends Section 80.4(1) of the Income Tax Act relating to the non-inclusion in income of the interest element of employer-provided mortgages to employees. While that may well be regarded as one of the loopholes, the problem is that some people have moved at the request of their employer and found that accommodation in the new location was much more expensive than the accommodation they could afford at their previous residence.

Some of my constituents have found themselves in that position, and the consequence is that it will cost them at the very minimum $200 per month extra after tax as a result of the move. I wonder if the minister might consider the circumstances that relate to this amendment introduced in the budget, upon people who have been obliged to move at the request of their employer and now find themselves caught in this unfortunate position?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I understand the concerns that the hon. member has raised. Representations have been made to me on this subject. I have introduced these changes in order, in a sense, to establish a more common treatment of compensation. That is the purpose of the proposal in Section 80.4(1), as the hon. member has reminded us. However, he has asked me to consider his views, and I shall certainly do that. We will have an opportunity, as members of the House of Commons, to consider each of these proposals in detail when the tax measures come before the committee.

REQUEST THAT PROVISION AFFECTING MORTGAGES BE POSTPONED

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, further to that issue I have one more question for the minister. Obviously what has happened is that taxpayers have relied upon specific provisions of the Income Tax Act which were implemented by a former Liberal government, and which this Liberal government now wishes to remove. This is equivalent to one government setting a snare and another government tripping that snare and catching the taxpayer.

I should like to ask the minister if it would not be appropriate that an arrangement be made so that the mortgages that are now in place, and implemented, as a consequence of that trap or snare set by the government, at least be permitted to go their full course before the tax provision to which the minister refers is implemented?

Mr. Nielsen: Spring the trap on the minister!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I said to the hon.

member, his representations will be considered, as will the representations of all members, when we are considering the bills in committee. I can certainly assure the hon. member that his particular views on this matter will be scrutinized very carefully.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT PENSIONS BE PAID TO VICTIMS OF MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The minister is probably aware that when one contracts multiple sclerosis in the Armed Forces it is not considered a disability and does not qualify for a disability pension. I understand that recently in the United States the veterans affairs administration decided to include MS as being pensionable. I wonder if the minister is prepared to give similar consideration to this, because there are a number of Armed Forces personnel who have contracted MS in the service and are not entitled to a pension.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the answer is yes.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY RESPECTING RECONSTRUCTION OF WHARF AT RIVERPORT, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. On December 1, 1981, the management of Riverport Seafoods Limited informed the minister that it would commence a program of reconstruction of its plant which was destroyed by fire on September 26, 1981—which put some 600 people out of work—if the government made a commitment to reconstruct the wharf which was also destroyed by the fire. When no answer was received, this request was repeated by telex on December 22. Still no answer has been received.

Since more than four months have passed since this disastrous fire, I would ask the minister if his officials have completed their surveys of the damage and when we can expect a statement concerning the government's plans for this area.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member can read Hansard if he was not in the House. Certainly I did answer very clearly that if the plant was rebuilt the facilities would be prepared to accommodate the fishermen who landed their fish and that, if the plant was not rebuilt, then of course we might be dealing with a different situation. We would look at it to ensure that fishermen had the necessary facilities in that district. But if the company has a firm plan to rebuild, and if it is not sent to me through the newspapers, then obviously that commitment will be honoured in the next fiscal year, April 1.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE COMMITMENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I am very well aware of the minister's statement, for he made it to me in committee. He avoided my original question this morning by stating that if the company makes concrete plans the commitment will be honoured. I hope he will reread my question wherein I stated that the company has already sent him not one but two firm notices that it will rebuild, if the government makes a commitment to reconstruct the wharf. If any activity is to take place at Riverport, the company requires some lead time, since it cannot proceed unless it is certain that the wharf will be reconstructed. Will the minister make that commitment today and not roam all over the lot? Will he just make a commitment today so that management can make concrete plans to proceed with development in this area?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes or no.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, devoid of the rhetoric and the gesticulation, I would say very simply that, if a decision is made to rebuild the plant, we will have facilities to accommodate the fishermen who have to land fish.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON STUDENT LOAN REPAYMENTS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Because the budget contains no job-creation measures for students, and since the government high interest rate policy is discouraging business investment and expansion for job creation, many recent graduates of colleges and universities are unemployed and are unable to repay their student loans. Will the minister consider placing a moratorium on student loan repayments for registered unemployed students?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will be glad to consider the hon. member's representation on that point.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB-CREATION MEASURES FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have with me, for example, a letter from a frustrated job-seeking graduate who must begin her $1,800 loan repayment on February 1, 1982. What job-creation measures or help will the minister be providing for students who are registered with his department but cannot find jobs to repay loans which are coming due? Will he work toward a moratorium on loan repayments if graduates are registered with his department?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it may be of interest to the hon. member and perhaps other hon. members of the House to know that in the current fiscal year the federal government, through its federal job-creation programs, will be providing over 100,000 direct employment jobs in the country. This is a significant contribution to keeping people, particularly young people, in the job market. As part of that program we have instituted a major summer employment program which hires people both for work in the federal public service and in a number of community projects. Furthermore, it provides placement opportunities for close to 300,000 Canadian students.

We are very aware of the need to provide for Canadian students alternative employment and summer employment. We have those programs in place. If the hon. member would check his own desk he would know that he has already received information about how he can develop projects in his constituency to help students work this summer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADA-UNITED STATES DISCUSSIONS ON CROSS-BORDER ROUTES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. I am sorry I could not give the minister notice; I sent it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question concerns the bilateral Canada-United States air talks which are now in progress. I want to ask the minister whether, in addition to the five routes from western Canada and three from Toronto, at least one from the Atlantic provinces will be added to the list of priority routes which are now under discussion?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I regret that I cannot be specific. The discussions are ongoing, as my hon. friend said. I admit that they are quite difficult and that the negotiating parties have not yet arrived at a determination of routes. They are still debating more fundamental issues, for example, who at the moment is receiving the most from the bilateral air agreement because of charters? Are the American carriers obtaining an unfair percentage of traffic because of the scheduled routes? Canada maintains on the scheduled side that it gains less. What should be the role of cargo transportation in the agreement? In other words, we are trying to clear the basic principles. We are not yet at the distribution of routes stage. I will report to my hon. friend in due course.

IMPORTANCE OF FRESH FISH AIR FREIGHT

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer. In his answer he touched upon the cargo feature, which is the basis of my supplementary question. With the decline of the frozen fish market and the growing increase of the fresh fish market in the United States, will the minister consider the cargo export potential for air transport of such primary products from Atlantic Canada to the United States of America, in addition to the commercial and passenger role, in defining priorities for negotiation? My advice is that the five routes which are established as priorities from western Canada and the three from Toronto are now in the course of negotiation. My concern is that the primary product in Atlantic Canada has an export potential which I would like weighted in connection with the considerations.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I can only take the questions as notice. I will look into it with that particular regional preoccupation in mind and report to my hon. friend earlier on that subject than on the previous one.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

SITE OF NEW TAXATION DATA CENTRE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Could the minister tell us whether it is still within the contemplation of the government to develop a taxation data centre in the national capital region? Is the site at the corner of Woodroffe Avenue and Baseline Road in the city of Nepean one of the sites being considered within the area for such a facility?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the short answer is yes, it is one of the seven taxation data centres which were considered across the country. There will be one in the Ottawa area. I can tell the hon. member that that is one of the sites being considered, but I must also say that it is not the only one. We have not finalized the site at this time.

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, it does not surprise me at all that the government might be considering other sites. Is it within the contemplation of the government that a decision might be made in the near future? I do not want to tie the minister down, but might it be made within 1982?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the item must go through the regular government process. We will try to advance it as quickly as possible. It depends on the available funds, Public Works programming, and so on, but it is my intention to advance it as quickly as possible. Hopefully we will see some start this spring.

AIRPORTS

GUIDELINES GOVERNING FUNDING

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Given that there are some 1,000 airports in Canada, I am sure we all welcome the brochure which crossed our desks indicating that funding will be available if particular standards are met with respect to obtaining help. However, as the minister knows, representations have already been made by some airports across Canada, and some commitments have been made. Will those commitments be carried through, notwithstanding the new policy of meeting these particular guidelines?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am not too sure to which program my hon. friend is referring, because we have many programs for airport construction.

Mr. Jarvis: It was just placed on our desks yesterday.

Mr. Nielsen: Don't you know what you send out?

Mr. Pepin: I am particularly aware of the situation in Sarnia. If the hon. member has in mind his particular regional airport, I want to assure him that progress is being made and that I have that particular subject very much in mind. I agree with him that the Sarnia airport is not at par in relation to the importance of the city and the area in the Canadian economy.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

THE "HUDSON TRANSPORT" SHIPWRECK—ABSENCE OF RESCUE HELICOPTERS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Considering the inexcusable loss of Canadian lives when a Canadian ship, the Hudson Transport, sank in the Gulf of St. Lawrence on December 25 of last year, and the fact that these people could have been saved if a rescue helicopter had been on duty in the province of Quebec, either on the north or south shore, could the minister inform the House why that was not the case?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the Hudson Transport incident on the St. Lawrence occurred just off the south shore of the St. Lawrence. At the present time, the Department of Transport and my own department are carrying out a joint investigation to find out exactly what caused the incident in which a number of people lost their lives. I would rather not comment on what has been said in the press or elsewhere. I prefer to wait until the investigators publish their findings and we shall then be able to see whether any negligence was involved or there were situations that could perhaps be corrected in the future.

REQUEST THAT EFFICIENT PROTECTION MEASURES BE ADOPTED IN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a supplementary question, Madam Speaker.

In view of the absence altogether of rescue helicopters in the province of Quebec, I wonder whether the minister could inform the parties concerned, including the seamen and other parties, that the situation will be remedied as soon as possible so as to provide merchant seamen with more effective protection in the Gulf?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, without wishing to anticipate the conclusions of the investigation, I feel that as far as I am able to judge, there have been no deficiencies in this respect. I do not believe that having a helicopter on duty on the south shore could have prevented the loss of life that occurred in this case. However, before making any kind of judgment in this respect, I would much rather wait until the conclusions of the investigation are available.

PETITIONS

MR. McKNIGHT—HERD MAINTENANCE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and seventy-second report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) on Thursday, January 28, 1982, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McMILLAN—ALLEGED MISUSE OF HOUSE OF COMMONS FACILITIES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege that arises from the Oral Question Period this morning. I hope you will hear me out; I am not trying to engage in debate. My question of privilege has to do with the misuse of House of Commons facilities by members on the government side. It relates to the fundamentals on which the House of Commons must operate in order to maintain its integrity in the eyes of the Canadian people.

Very briefly, my questions this morning related to documents released on Friday to the provinces by the Department of Finance in anticipation of the federal-provincial negotiations that will be under way this coming week on the economy. Those documents make very clear that the federal government's figures in the budget of November 12, 1981, will have the net effect of slashing provincial revenues over the next five years by $4.5 billion. In contrast with the slash in provincial revenues mentioned in the budget itself, namely, $1.9 billion, the minister revised his figures because of incompetence and an error—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McMillan: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order. No argument, please. It is quite obvious to me that this might be a marvellous matter for debate, but it is certainly not a question of privilege.

Mr. Clark: Hear him out, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, but it is quite obvious that the hon. member is discussing a document. It is a marvellous subject for debate but it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Clark: You cannot judge that yet.

MR. BOSLEY—RELEASE OF INFORMATION RESPECTING BUDGET

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I recognize the importance of privilege and therefore I rise at the earliest possible moment to bring to the attention of the House a matter that I believe deeply affects members' privileges. It relates to the budget. It is a separate matter, Madam Speaker.

All members of the House have found it virtually impossible to sell Canadians the virtue of the budget, and if there is a way to sell the budget that was adopted by this House and which forms House policy, I believe—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, this is information that affects Members of Parliament.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. I would like to know whether his question of privilege flows from today's question period or whether it is a question of privilege that he is bringing forth about a matter that occurred to him some time before.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, my question of privilege relates to information that was provided to me within the last hour relating to the budget. I have no alternative but to present it to you and ask you whether you will consider it.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, I think there is information being circulated—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please resume his seat. I need some information and therefore I need to ask a question of the hon. member. Is he raising a question of privilege that flows immediately from the deliberations that we had in this House this morning? I must tell the hon. member that if he has a question of privilege relating to something else, then he does have to give me notice and I will hear him on Monday. However, if this question of privilege arose directly from deliberations or a statement made in this House in the course of today's question period, I can hear him now, otherwise I cannot.

Mr. Bosley: Yes, Madam Speaker, it does relate to information presented in question period today.

Information provided by the government in my view should be provided to all members. This is the privilege of all members. I am speaking about information which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) produced with regard to the budget during question period today. If members are to deal with the matter adequately, whatever information the minister produces and uses during question period to deal with the budget should be provided to all members.

My question of privilege is as follows. It has come to my attention that the Liberal government last evening held a school for Liberal backbenchers in an attempt to teach them how to sell the unsellable to Canadians. The example of the quality of that school today occurred when the Minister of Finance pretended that a cut from $500 to $200 in a tax credit is a decrease in tax—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Sit down.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It seems that if the Chair does not get up to interrupt the hon. member and tell him he does not have a question of privilege, somebody else will. I am afraid that the hon. member has no question of privilege. He recognizes that he is engaging in debate. That is perfectly legitimate, but not at this time.

MR. McMILLAN—ALLEGED MISUSE OF HOUSE OF COMMONS FACILITIES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I am rather concerned about the manner in which the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) was unable to develop the question he wished to place before the Chair. I did not know that he was going to raise this question. Obviously, it arose from proceedings during question period. I was anticipating that it might be based on the fact that the minister supplied certain information to the provinces which has been published in one of the more prominent Toronto papers with respect to the changes the minister intends to put to the provincial ministers. That information is now in the public domain.

It may be that is the basis for the hon. member's question of privilege. But with great respect to the Chair and without any reflection on the Chair, I was waiting for that aspect to be developed. If that is the basis, then the provision of such information to Members of Parliament, as well as to the other recipients who have it in their possession, indeed would form the basis of at least the submission of an argument for the Chair to consider as a question of privilege. This is particularly so in light of the continued questioning which took place this week on budgetary matters on opposition day last Tuesday, which will no doubt continue on the opposition day coming up next week. In other words, the current interest and the current questioning of the government on budgetary measures has been the constant attention of members of this House.

I was waiting for the hon. member to state as the basis for his question of privilege that the government had provided information to others but not to Members of Parliament, which information was published in one of the more prominent newspapers in Toronto. If that is the basis of his question, I would suggest that the Chair might wish to hear the hon. member out in order that we can determine whether the Chair might wish to hear others on the subject.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is confirming the ruling that I have just made. I did understand the basis of the question of privilege to be exactly what the hon. member has stated.

I am sure the hon. member knows that the fact the government issues information to certain bodies and not to others is not the basis for a question of privilege. The government sometimes issues information to their own caucus, to all members of the House, sometimes to the premiers of the different provinces. The way in which the government administers its affairs might be a marvellous subject for debate; indeed it has often been debated in the House and probed in question period as to why this kind of information has not been disseminated universally. These debates take place constantly in the House, as they should, but they do not form the basis of a question of privilege.

I am afraid I have acquired a lot of experience in dealing with questions of privilege. Members will, I think, want to reflect on the fact that, in the course of the time I have been in the chair, I have only had to consider one question of privilege, brought up, I think, by an hon. member on this side of the House and resolved before I had time to rule on it, which was founded. So I would say, and I will bring out the statistics, that the overwhelming majority of the questions of privilege I have heard were not founded. This one, taking into account the statements of the hon. member for Hillsborough and the hon. member for Yukon's confirmation of his understanding of what the hon. member said, leads me to insist that indeed, I am sorry, the hon. member does not have a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, with great respect, that was not the point of my rising. I do not know, because we did not hear enough, what the hon. member for Hillsborough was basing his question of privilege on. When I rose to speak in the first instance I said that I did not know what foundation he was laying. I do not know yet what his question is going to be. My point is, with the greatest respect for the Chair, that enough has to be heard by members and the Chair—

Mr. Collenette: We heard it.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, if the ex-parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council would hear me out, he would understand this is an entirely different question. I do not want to engage in debate; I wish to point out emphatically and as clearly as I can, Madam Speaker, that we at least as members, and you as the occupant of the chair, are entitled to hear sufficient in order to determine what the hon. member's question is. I say to you in all sincerity and honesty that I hypothesized that it might be what I submitted to you, but I do not know. Surely, Madam Speaker, we should know in a brief statement—

Mr. Collenette: You are not the Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: I wish you would shut that jackal up, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Paproski: Jackass, not jackal.

Mr. Nielsen: We should at least hear enough to know what the foundation is—one or two or three sentences, the member can do it—so we know his argument. I do not know what it is.

Madam Speaker: Well, it was clear to me when the hon. member made his statement what formed the basis of his question of privilege, and on that basis I ruled it out. Now, that is within my discretion. I think it has to be accepted or else very formally challenged.

If the hon. member feels that he is not satisfied with my ruling, I would like him to give me in writing in my office the further arguments and elaboration on this question of privilege that he wanted to make today. I will read them there and I am certain I will not reach a different conclusion. On the basis of the argument that he made in his first sentences, I ruled that he did not have a question of privilege, and it is on that basis that I make all my rulings in this House.

Mr. McMillan: Madam Speaker, I will, as you have suggested, write down my question of privilege in a way that I have not been allowed to elaborate in this House. The opposition House leader said he did not hear enough of my argument to know what in fact it was. He admitted that he was ignorant of my question of privilege and proffered a guess as to what I had in mind. The very fact that his guess was dead wrong, even if it conformed with your understanding of my question of privilege, confirms and corroborates the argument he was making that I was not given enough time to present to this House my question of privilege—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I will receive the hon. member's arguments, but it is on the understanding that it will not come back for discussion in the House. This is just a test we will be making between the two of us. The ruling is there and I have to stand by it.

PETITION

MR. ROSE—MANUFACTURE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS—WORLD DISARMAMENT

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a petition signed by nearly 450 students from Port Coquitlam secondary school in the province of British Columbia protesting Canadian involvement in the manufacture of new nuclear weapons. The students support their position by citing the devastation a nuclear war would inflict and the futility of civil defence capacity to deal with the resulting injury, death and destruction. Further, the students call upon the government to support vigorously the UN in its efforts to bring about world disarmament.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEDUCTION OF TAX WITHOUT LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has given notice of his intention to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26, and I would hear a brief statement from him.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), under Standing Order 26, that the House do now adjourn for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, that the Ministry of National Revenue is counselling employers in this country to deduct income tax from the wages of employees for which no legislative authority has been sought or given. The collection of the said tax by these employers under the circumstances outlined may be placing them in a legally indefensible position.

Madam Speaker: I have received notice of and looked at the statement the hon. member has just made. It must be understood that the Speaker's only duty is to determine if the request for an immediate debate meets the requirements of Standing Order 26, in that it is imperative that the matter be debated right away and the daily business of the House set aside.

One condition for such a debate, as enumerated under Standing Order 26(16), is that:

The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration;—

● (1220)

In his written statement, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, in my view, has not established that clearly and precisely. He has not established that there was a genuine emergency when he said, and I am using his words:

The collection of the said tax by these employers . . . may be—

I emphasize the words "may be".

—placing them in a legally indefensible position.

The matter which the hon. member brings before the House is an important one which probably ought to be debated at some time; but I cannot see my way clear to set aside the business of the House in order to allow it to be debated under the provisions of Standing Order 26. Therefore, I regret that I must reject the hon. member's application.

FOOD AND BEVERAGE MANAGER FOR NAC

Question No. 2,758—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was Mr. Hal Gethings at any time employed as food and beverage manager for the National Arts Centre and, if so (a) was he appointed subsequent to a recommendation by the Auditor General concerning the operation of restaurant facilities at the Arts Centre (b) did restaurant and beverage operations move from a deficit to a profit under Mr. Gethings?

2. Was Mr. Gethings visited by Mr. Don Marriott and was Mr. Gethings confronted with a letter already prepared for him to sign in which he was to resign from the Arts Centre staff and, if so (a) what was the date of the visit (b) did Mr. Gethings refuse to give his resignation and was he subsequently offered seven months' salary to resign?

3. (a) Did Mr. Gethings resign (b) was Mr. Marriott appointed Director of Restaurants and Catering of the Arts Centre and, if so, on what date?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows:

1. Mr. Hal Gethings has been employed by the National Arts Centre as Manager, Catering and Restaurants.

(a) Pursuant to a recommendation by the Auditor General, the National Arts Centre created the position of "Manager, Catering and Restaurants"; Mr. Gethings was engaged to fill the position.

(b) During the term of Mr. Gethings' employment, under the direct supervision of the Director of Operations, Mr. Christian Gurney, the Restaurants and Catering Department showed a book surplus in the last two of the three fiscal years which terminated during this period, whereas in the previous years of operation the department had shown a book surplus in only one fiscal year (1971-72).

2. No.

3. (a) Yes.

(b) Mr. Marriott was appointed Director of Restaurants and Catering for the National Arts Centre on April 1, 1979.

NAC—GRIEVANCES OF EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,770—Mr. Cossitt:

Were grievances submitted by employees of the National Arts Centre, including those working under the direction or control of Mr. Donald Marriott, Director of Restaurants and Catering, since Mr. Marriott assumed that position and, if so (a) how many and how many concerned Mr. Marriott directly or indirectly (b) were complaints received at any time about harassment of employees by Mr. Marriott?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows: Yes.

(a) and (b) Forty-one grievances have been submitted of which 21 relate to the department for which Mr. Marriott is responsible; further details of these complaints would be considered internal, personal and confidential information.

SCULPTURE AT NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

Question No. 2,771—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a camel sculpture ordered under the direction of Mr. Donald Marriott, Director of Restaurants and Catering, for a wine bar at the National Arts Centre and, if so (a) at what cost (b) did his superiors consider it tasteless and not usable?

2. Was it disposed of and, if so, what are all the details?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows:

1. Yes. (a) $300. (b) No.

2. The sculpture was used as part of a promotional scheme for a wine bar called "The Oasis" and later donated to the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario by the NAC staff who contributed $171 toward its cost. The remainder of the original cost was charged to promotion.

TELEPHONE LINE FROM BROCKVILLE

Question No. 3,536—Mr. Cossitt:

What is a list of all persons, departments, etc. that have access to the use of the government-leased telephone line 345-0001, from Brockville in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville, other than the Member of Parliament for the constituency?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows: The Brockville telephone number 345-0001 is an access number to the government Brockville-Ottawa intercity facilities. As such, after dialing 345-0001, any holder of an appropriate authorization call code can obtain usage of the government network.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANAGREX ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed, from Wednesday, January 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-85 to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday I had the opportunity to make a few comments with respect to this bill. I understand that I have about 36 minutes left in which to make my remarks.

Last Wednesday the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) attempted to table a statement in this House listing the accomplishments of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). He said there were some 50 items on the list. I suggest that if the minister's list of accomplishments were so lengthy, the farming community would be shouting from the rooftops, "How great thou art, Mr. Minister". However, I have not heard the farming community shouting such exhortations; it will not, because the agricultural community in Canada is in very serious trouble.

There is nothing at all in the budget to help alleviate the situation. Of course, the Minister of Agriculture will say that there are some changes in the Farm Credit Corporation Act which will provide $50 million for those farmers and producers who are in trouble. That $50 million is only a drop in the bucket.

The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) will suggest that the changes to provide for the Small Business Development Bond are such that they will help those farmers who are in trouble; but the banks are simply not lending on the Small Business Development Bond because the terms set down by this government are such that a borrower must be in serious financial difficulty. There is no government guarantee on a small business development bond and, for that reason, the banks look at the borrower, the individual who is in trouble, and treat the individual in the same manner as they would any other borrower. If he is in financial difficulty, and the chances are that he will be unable to pay the loan, he cannot benefit from that bond.

Why is agriculture in trouble? First of all, it is in trouble because of the high interest rates created by this government. Even the Farm Credit Corporation rate of 16.75 per cent is an unbearable burden. The bank rates, of course, are higher than 16.75 per cent. They are in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent, 21 per cent or 22 per cent.

What does this mean to the farmer? It means that if a farmer is buying land at, say, $1,000 an acre, which is not an unusual or unrealistic price as much land in the prairies is being sold for more than $1,000 an acre, and with the Farm Credit Corporation interest rate of 16.75 per cent, this farmer will have to pay $167.50 a year in interest on each acre. Most farmers in the west, because of climatic conditions, operate their farms on a two-year rotation: one year of summerfallow and one year of crop. In other words, one must produce a sufficient amount on one acre to pay the interest on two acres. Therefore, at 16.75 per cent interest, one must produce $335 on one acre to pay the interest on two acres. If one relates that to the price of grain today, which is approximately $6 a bushel, that means that one must produce 50 bushels to the acre in order to pay the interest costs.

However, on top of one's interest costs, one must pay back part of the capital. Where does that come from? Then, of course, one has input costs. Input costs and interest rates are killing the farmer today. Over the Christmas holidays, I spoke to a farmer who farms north of Moose Jaw. He told me that without taking fertilizer and crop sprays into consideration, his input costs are over $50 an acre. He must produce almost another ten bushels to the acre to pay the input costs, and these input costs are going up.

What will happen to the farmer? What will happen is that, as a result of the budget, we will see the end of the family farm. The budget will sound its death knell. Under the budget provisions, with the elimination of the IAACs, the elimination of the reserve provisions and the requirement to pay the capital gains tax up front, I suggest there will be a situation where the family farm will not and cannot be passed on in the family. The result will be that there will be cash sales only. Who will be able to buy this land if the cost of interest and the input costs are such that one cannot produce a sufficient amount to pay the price of the land? I suggest that the only way the land can be sold will be to the land bank, to the government or to large corporations.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It certainly won't be to a farmer.

Mr. Neil: That is right. If the land ends up in the land bank or in the hands of the government, we will have a country of tenant farmers.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Communes.

Mr. Neil: Or communes, as my colleague said. I think the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues would like to see this happen, because over the years the minister has spent a great deal of time discussing and promoting supply management. If farmers in Saskatchewan, for example, become tenants of the government and the land bank, it will be no problem for the state to control production, supply, price or the selling of these products.

Canagrex would be an ideal vehicle for the minister under these circumstances. Let us look at Clause 14 of the bill. It is fairly lengthy. The clause sets out the powers of the corporation. I quote 14(1):

> Canagrex is established for the purposes of promoting, facilitating and engaging in the export of agricultural products and services and food products and services from Canada to other countries by means of the financial and other powers provided in this act, and for such purposes Canagrex may
> (a) purchase agricultural products and food products and package, process, store, ship, insure, import, export or sell or otherwise dispose of products purchased by it;

It is not a selling agency. It can do almost anything. It can enter into joint ventures with individuals or corporations. Subclause (g) states that Canagrex can:

> —purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold real and personal property—

Is that clause in the bill for the purpose of giving the government the power to acquire farm land when the farmer cannot pass it on to his family? Is that what it is for? I thought Canagrex was a selling agency to facilitate the selling of agricultural products, but it is wide open. This is unbelievable. It can get involved as a corporation in every aspect of agriculture.

There is a pattern emerging, one which started to emerge in 1968 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office. Since that time there has been a move away from the free enterprise system, a system which the Liberal Party espoused in those days. It was a system which was serving us well.

I thought that in the years following 1968 we were being led toward a socialist system, but recently I have had serious doubts. What is happening is we are moving toward an elitist system of government, a system of strict government control. This bill is one of the aspects of this government control. Is it a nationalist-socialist system or a move toward the fascist state? I think members opposite would be wise to sit down and consider what is happening in their party and what is happening to our country.

I notice some smiles on the other side. All one has to do if one is pondering what is happening is to consider the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which was passed by resolution in this House and which is now in England, provides for freedom of speech, freedom of religion and freedom of the press. The hon. member across the way nods. If he reads further in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, he will find that the federal government and every provincial government in the country can take away our freedom of speech, freedom of religion and freedom of the press.

Mr. Cousineau: What does that have to do with this bill?

Mr. Neil: I suggest this is part of the pattern and design that is taking place. It is the government which passes orders in council and in the event of an emergency, whether there is war or not, allows the release of prisoners and provides for the operation of civilian internment camps.

Let us look at the pattern that is evolving. I suggest the man at the helm knows, but at the moment the passengers on the mythical boat which the Prime Minister spoke about several years ago do not know on what shore they will land.

In May, 1976, a well-known figure in the agricultural field, Alf Presber, prepared a paper with respect to marketing. I have a copy of it. It is entitled "Summary of a Proposal for a Foreign Agricultural Marketing Service in Canada". He lists the objectives. I gather he was concerned about the fact that there had been a splinter approach developing with respect to sales of agricultural products in our country. The provinces were involved and the federal government was involved. He felt a program should be developed to deal with the situation. He suggested a foreign agricultural marketing service for Canada which would be made up of a few key individuals. I will summarize the terms of reference. I quote:

(a) To bring about effective contact between the Canadian seller of agricultural commodities and prospective foreign buyers—

(b) To initiate sales and sales promotion projects as a co-operative effort between the Canadian seller, industry in general, trade and government(s)—

(c) To attract foreign agricultural processing technique and... foreign investment into Canadian agriculture;

(d) to ascertain and to report in the fastest possible way, if necessary directly to Canadian sales organizations, on marketing opportunities for Canadian primary and processed agricultural products;

(e) To specialize in the analysis of existing tariff and trade barriers and to search out ways to overcome such barriers;

He saw that this little group of key individuals stationed in various parts of the world with their finger on the pulse could report directly to the Department of Agriculture. He envisaged that eventually there would be a corporation set up like Canagrex to carry out these sales. He said and I quote:

The overriding purposes of the foreign agricultural marketing service in Canada is sales—

As far as I am concerned, Canagrex as a corporation should be concerned directly in sales, in co-ordinating sales with foreign governments and the industry in Canada.

● (1240)

I note, Mr. Speaker, that a few days ago there was an article in The Globe and Mail, on January 27, written by Kevin Cox. The headline read "Public misled on export plan, agriculture officials tell Ottawa." I will read one or two excerpts from that article. Mr. Cox writes:

The federal Agriculture Department has been accused of misleading the public into thinking there is widespread support for a proposed national agricultural export company.

Agricultural marketing officials from eight provinces have recommended the federal government abandon its plan for the export firm, Canagrex, saying the country lacks the personnel and the finances for such a venture.

It goes on to say that:

The controversy is complicated by the fact that the provincial ministers of agriculture say they support the Canagrex plan, even while in many cases their own marketing directors oppose it.

The article goes on to quote the marketing directors as saying that "State trading is not a general practice in developed countries and is not acceptable to most Canadians." This is the reason the Minister of Agriculture puts forward for Canagrex. He says that we need state to state trading. However, this group involved in agricultural marketing says that is not so.

It is interesting to note that the article goes on to say that Saskatchewan also supported the critique which was in opposition to the government's proposed program of Canagrex, "—fearing that Canagrex might displace provincial marketing boards which export pork and other products."

It seems to me that the critique expresses the concern of Mr. Presber, who said that the sales programs have been splintered because of provincial and federal involvement. It seems to me that effective selling requires the co-operation of the federal and provincial departments of agriculture, the producer and private business with the necessary leadership to bring these groups together, a leadership which the present Minister of Agriculture has not shown.

I suggest that while the basic concept of this bill is sound, namely, a Crown corporation which would fill in the gap where necessary to encourage or make sales which would not otherwise be made, the bill as it now stands is too all-encompassing. The reason for this is that the name of the game should be sales. It should not be processing, it should not be packaging. The agency should not be involved in joint ventures or the acquiring of land for the purpose of leasing it out. It should deal with sales.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that when this bill goes to committee it should be given substantial consideration. The committee should be able to have before it as witnesses provincial representatives to give the provincial viewpoint, industrial representatives to give their views and the Minister of Agriculture should be prepared to accept proposals for amendments, setting aside politics, so that this bill can be effective.

This is not what generally happens in committee or in the House. No matter how valid a suggestion for an amendment may be, when presented by a member of the opposition it is ruled out because the person submitting the amendment or making the suggestion might gain some political points.

I think that the minister was elated when an amendment I proposed before Christmas to include lamb in the meat import bill was ruled out of order on the basis that lamb was not meat.

Mr. Jarvis: It is fish.

Mr. Neil: It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that this time around the minister is big enough—and I do not mean physically—to accept recommendations not only from provincial or private industry representatives, but from opposition and individual Members of Parliament, regardless of their political affiliation. It is my hope that if an individual Member of Parliament proposes an amendment which will effectively improve the bill, the minister will be man enough to accept that amendment. As far as I am concerned, the problems faced by the agricultural industry today are far beyond party politics. Unless there is co-operation between parties, unless there is co-operation between governments, we will not solve the problems which are facing us today. I know that all the producers in western Canada, as well as I, do not want to end up in a situation in which the government owns all the land and the producers are tenant farmers.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on this bill to establish an agricultural exporting agency, Bill C-85.

At the outset, I want to say that the establishment of an agency such as this is a measure which our party supports and has urged for a long time. Canada should have a corporation that is involved solely with the promotion and export of agricultural products around the world.

My only concern is that too often an excellent proposal for a program in this country is spoiled by the people or the agency running it. It is important that we analyse the bill before us very carefully to ensure that the agency which is created is not destroyed by some bureaucrats who have no idea how to operate the agricultural economy of this country. I suggest that we try to democratize the people that run the agency as much as possible from the beginning, to make it a truly federal exporting agency. It should not be run solely by the federal government and its bureaucrats in Agriculture Canada.

For example, Clause 3 provides for a board of directors made up of a chairman, vice-chairman, president and eight other members. I suggest we should look into the possibility of amending Clause 3 which states that the federal government alone shall appoint the eight directors who will run the agency, to include a written guarantee that some of those directors shall come from the agricultural community, the farmers themselves. The Board should include some members from private industry, and some from the federal government, of course, because that is important. Incidentally, I would point out to the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) that not only private industry but many agencies are involved in agriculture, such as Intercontinental Packers Limited in Saskatchewan which are publicly owned. They should also play a role in the direction of the board.

There should also be representatives of the provinces on the board. Under our Constitution the federal and provincial governments have concurrent jurisdiction over agriculture. It has been that way since 1867, and when we set up an agency to export our agricultural products, we must reflect that reality in the agency. Because if we do not, we may have some conflict with the many dozens of provincial marketing boards which exist in each and every single province of this great country of ours.

My first suggestion is that the directors come from four different groups. There should be federal government appointees, provincial government appointees and representatives of producers and the industry, so that we have an agency that is truly federative, truly national and truly reflective of the reality of our country and of agriculture in the country.

I think it is appropriate that the agency have the powers it is being given. The hon. member for Moose Jaw was concerned about the extensive powers of the export agency. He referred to the powers of the agency respecting entering into joint ventures, signing contracts, storing products and so forth. Those powers are very extensive but I think the agency needs them. We are dealing in a highly competitive world today. Other export agencies and state agencies in other countries make sure that their exporters have the power and flexibility they need to make decisions so that they do not have to come back to their parliaments time and time again because circumstances change and are different for various agricultural products. However, in the exercise of the powers of this agency it is important that the directors operating the agency know what powers to use and how to use them, and that they use them in the interests of the farmers and the agricultural business of this country. Those powers should not be exercised solely by a few bureaucrats centrally located in Ottawa who are not sensitive to the agricultural community.

In terms of financing, I think $12.3 million for three years is probably less than the agency should have, but at least it is a start on something which is a very good idea.

In terms of the production of agricultural products, we in this country have a long way to go. We must examine the basic facts. About 40 per cent to 45 per cent of our agricultural goods are produced for export. Most of our exports are grain and oil seeds from western Canada. In 1980 we exported some $8 billion worth of food and agricultural products from Canada and imported some $5 billion worth of agricultural products and food. One of the tragedies associated with imports into this country is that many of the products we import are products we could be producing right here. We could be providing jobs for farmers, income for Canadians, support for the Canadian dollar and jobs for workers in processing the foods we could be growing right here in this country.

One of the tragedies associated with our agricultural exports is the same tragedy associated with other exports such as oil and energy. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) talked about this. We tend to export unprocessed basic raw materials. I will give one example. We produce pork in huge factory-like processes and export it en masse from Canada. This provides very little real economic benefit and few jobs. We should be processing more food products. We should be processing labour-intensive products. This would help solve the unemployment problem we have.

I do not have current statistics on the production of food in Canada, but much research has been undertaken by Agriculture Canada, by GATT-Fly, by churches and by other organizations. If we do not smarten up, by the end of this century Canada will be a net importer of food. We will not be able to feed ourselves. In a country with a small population but a large geographic area, I think that is a crime in the twentieth century.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture said the other day that about 26 acres of farm land goes out of production in the province of Ontario every day. The hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is very familiar with what has happened in the Niagara region of Ontario, where farm land has been paved over for city suburbs, freeways, hydro lines and parks. Those developments could be undertaken a few miles away from good agricultural land, on land which cannot be used for agricultural purposes.

According to statistics we are no longer self-sufficient in many products in which we were self-sufficient in the past. Many fruits once grown in Ontario are no longer produced here but are imported from the United States and other countries around the world. There have been massive losses in the peach industry, the grape industry, the apricot industry, the pear industry, the plum industry and the vegetable industry. This is happening not only in Ontario but also in the provinces of Quebec, British Columbia and other provinces. We now produce only 18 per cent of the peaches we eat in Canada. At one time we produced the majority of peaches consumed here.

In conjunction with the export agency we are establishing, we should be looking to a national agricultural plan and the kinds of products we could be producing but are not producing in Canada. There are specialty crops we should be producing right across the country. On the prairies we could be producing for export much larger volumes of peas and faba beans. These could be exported to many countries around the world. In British Columbia we could be producing much larger volumes of fruits and vegetables. In Ontario and Quebec we could be producing and exporting more maple syrup. A few days ago one of the members of this House from Quebec spoke in the House about the export potential for maple syrup that there is in many countries around the world. The northeastern part of the United States is probably getting some of the markets we could have. This is a job for the new export agency we are setting up. It should try to promote some of these specialty crops. We should look at the possibility of producing more mushrooms and aflatoxin-free peanuts in this country. There are cole crops in the maritimes. Some other crops are potatoes and seed potatoes. We produce specialty cattle, purebred cattle and chickens. There are all kinds of animals and livestock we could be producing and exporting to other countries around the world. I think it is important that the board of directors and the people who run the export agency are aware that they have to get out there and be aggressive and devise—along with the Parliament of Canada and the provinces—a national agricultural plan so that we can do just that.

I want to sound one note of caution. I hope the new export agency we are setting up will not try to do what our friend Jack Horner did a few years ago, and that is to export infant feeding formulas to the Third World or South America. I do not think that is the job of an export agency of this kind. It is not the job of an export agency to try to set up huge bakeries in places like Tanzania, which we have done in the past, so that they will import Canadian wheat and put local people out of work. The job of an export agency is to make sure that when we export something to other countries, especially the developing countries of the Third World, we help those countries to help themselves become self-sufficient. We should give them some of the technology they need. We should not destroy their local markets. We should not be importing products from their best farm land which are not necessary for consumption in this country. Time and time again we have imported from countries in Africa and South America crops like peanuts, tobacco and cotton produced on the best farm land in the Third World, while the people living right next door are going hungry and dying of starvation and malnutrition. We must make sure our export agency is sensitive to some of the problems of the developing world and that we do not repeat some of the historical mistakes of this government and other governments.

I see that it is one o'clock. Perhaps I could resume at two o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2.00 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few more minutes to deal with this bill. Some hon. members have expressed concern about farm size and about farm land disappearing in this country. I have in front of me a copy of the GATT-Fly magazine issued a few years ago. That organization did a fair amount of research into the problem of diminishing farm land, the fact that farms are becoming larger and larger and that as a consequence there are fewer of them.

In 1951 the average farm size in this country was 113 hectares and in 1971 it was 188 hectares, which is an increase of 66 per cent.

Mr. Mitges: How big is a hectare?

Mr. Nystrom: A hectare, for the information of the Conservative member, is about 2.5 acres. I do not have the statistics for 1982 but we have a similar projection which shows that the size of the farms have jumped by a corresponding 40 per cent, 50 per cent or 60 per cent.

As we make advances in technology and agriculture, I suppose it is normal that the size of farms will increase. As a farm boy from the prairies, however, I know that many farms are far too large at the present time. In many cases this is because people have more money and so they are buying more land, as are large corporations. But beyond a certain size a farm is not economical and can destroy the fabric of the rural way of life, of the villages and towns.

My other concern is that so much land is being taken out of agricultural production and being paved over for industry, for roads or for hydro lines. Statistics given by the GATT-Fly magazine show that in 1951 Canada had some 70.4 million hectares of farm land and in 1971 the figure had dropped to 67.2 million hectares. By 1976 it had dropped by about another million hectares.

We also see the greater concentration of farm holdings in fewer hands. In 1951 there were 623,000 farms in this country. In 1971 there were only 366,000 farms. I am sure the same trend will show up in the 1981 census which has just been completed.

As a member from rural Canada, I want to make it clear that I am very concerned about the increasing size of farms. The owners of large farms are buying up the small ones and thus becoming larger and larger themselves. The small towns, the rural communities and villages are shrinking. As the farming population shrinks, the need for the small towns is less. In Colorado there are a few farms of township size run by large agricultural corporations. I do not want to see that in Canada—agriculture becoming as General Motors is to automobiles. That can be prevented with a rational and sane national agricultural program.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the export development corporation that will be established by this legislation can be part of that program. The corporation can sell our farm products to other countries. It can sell farm products that are more labour-intensive than capital-intensive. It can sell more and more of the specialty crops that can be grown in this country. I think we can do it and compete with the best of countries in the world. On the domestic front, we must become more and more self-reliant so that we can feed ourselves and produce in Ontario, British Columbia and other parts of Canada much of the food we consume. We must move in that direction. We can only do it by planning and involving the farmers and producers themselves.

My last recommendation is that the export corporation must be controlled by those individuals involved in the agricultural industry itself. Farmers, producers and workers in the agricultural industry must have input as to who will sit on the board of directors. Because of the fact that agriculture is a shared jurisdiction under the Constitution, federal and provincial, and because of the fact that there are literally dozens of provincial marketing boards selling products every day in the world, the provinces as well as the federal government must be represented on the board of directors.

I should like to refer to a relevant example in my province. It is not a food, it is an agricultural product. The province of Saskatchewan provides 35 per cent of the world's potash which is used as a fertilizer and sold to many countries. It is important to have provincial governments involved because of realities such as this, so that there is a co-ordination of food sales, agricultural product sales and such things as potash sales in various countries around the world. I think it is a good idea. I think its time has come. But let us not destroy the idea by an insensitivity to the reality of food and agriculture in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I feel it is significant, and I hope farmers across Canada and especially those in my riding will appreciate this, that the first two bills the government is tabling in 1982 in the House of Commons are concerned with agriculture. In recent years we have often had the impression that agriculture is being overlooked. Now that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has tabled a bill whose purpose is to establish an agency for promoting export markets for Canadian producers, I should like to point out that this government, and other Liberal governments that preceded it during the past 15 years, have had a special concern for agriculture as one of our vital sectors. I may add that the fact that the first two bills on which we shall be voting at the beginning of this year in the House concern those Canadians who feed us and are feeding an increasingly large part of the world, demonstrates that a country that is capable of feeding itself and feeding other people besides is also capable of developing its resources and giving its people a healthy environment in which to live.

In the past, when the government set up marketing boards, it was attacked by groups in our society who claimed prices and markets were being supported artificially, and that if the market were free, prices would come down. Before discussing the bill on the agenda today, I want to point out that such claims are entirely false. Prices of farm products have not increased as fast as prices for other commodities. Just compare what you were paying for a quart of milk a few years ago and what you are paying today for a package of cigarettes or a car, neither of which are produced under a quota system, and you will see that the prices of the latter have increased far more. Mr. Speaker, I also wish to congratulate our farmers and prove the extent to which they have been leaders in our society, leaders whose example, unfortunately, we have not always followed. The problem today is essentially one of productivity. Today's high interest rates and inflation are due to the fact that we are still producing at the same rate with the same number of workers, the same machines and the same plants as we were ten years ago, but our production costs are constantly increasing. In the agricultural sector this has not been the case. Western farmers are now producing twice as much as they were ten years ago on the same amount of land. Quebec farmers are getting twice as much milk from the same cow as they did ten years ago. The way these people have been fighting inflation is absolutely marvellous. They have shown what the whole country could be like if we had modernized operations at all levels and had increased our production per capita.

A few minutes ago, I heard the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) say that there were fewer and fewer farmers and that less land was being farmed. With an increasingly small number of farmers and less and less land, Mr. Speaker, we are producing much more than we used to. That is what is called an increase in productivity, that is what is called fighting against inflation, that is what is called fighting against high interest rates. That is how our society must develop. How have we achieved this? I have no hesitation in saying that it is quite simply thanks to the Government of Canada. I know that when something goes wrong, Quebecers often lay the blame on the federal government. I cannot say that we owe everything to the federal government; however, I know that the fat Quebec Minister of Agriculture would never say that it is a little because of the federal government. For my part, I shall show you that everything which happens is partly due to the federal government.

Around 1965, under the leadership of the right hon. Lester B. Pearson, if I may quote as an example, the farmers in eastern Quebec and my constituency whom I know quite well, these farmers had tremendous problems because of a lack of financial options for capitalization, of old and outmoded facilities, of production problems, and of people who were not professionals and who belonged to an era when the farmer lived off the land and fed the people around him and then went looking for part-time work to purchase what he could not produce on the farm. Thanks to the farmers who pulled themselves up by their own bootstraps, and thanks also to the assistance provided by the Government of Canada to establish well-developed and well-designed structures, we were able to transform these people into real professionals. How did we achieve this? First of all, by guaranteeing their revenue, by setting production quotas and by establishing marketing boards so that these people could go to the banks and tell them: "We want to borrow; we must replace our equipment; we must update our facilities to be more productive in the future."

Programs were set up. Our farmers obtained loans and invested their shirt in their business. They worked very hard seven days a week. What is the result today? If you go all over a province such as Quebec, you will see new facilities, dynamic producers, hard-working people who have the potential to develop and, most important, who are professionals. Now the farmers are able to do their own accounting, they can make projections for the future and they can do their own financial planning. Mr. Speaker, you know that this is very important because the first duty of the country is to its citizens, and I emphasize this fact because we must understand that whatever party is in power, the main thing in this House has always been that Canada must work for Canadians. In this assembly, in this House of Commons, we have never asked Canadians to give everything for their country because we are all aware of the fact that Canada exists because Canadians wanted it to exist for their own welfare and development.

In this context, I believe that our first duty is to see to it that Canadians can feed themselves. As a Canadian, I am proud today to be able to rise in this assembly and to say that in addition to feeding ourselves, we also feed a large part of the world. We can look at other countries, especially those of the east bloc, with millions of farm workers and an extremely planned economy, which is supposedly communist and is designed to make life easier for the workers, but which are unable to feed their own people. Vast countries like Russia now realize that they are facing an economic disaster because they have stifled initiative.

There is no will to produce more on the same small piece of land, with the same facilities and the same livestock. It is up to us to help them to survive, and I am aware of it. However, I would not want Canada to allow these countries to take the money that they would normally use to feed their people to manufacture arms or to build up enormous armies, as we have seen them do in the past. We have come to the point where marketing boards have been established, and we are now on the point of developing the last structures we need, namely, in the pork and the beef industries, where our producers are now facing tremendous difficulties.

We have a few programs to support them but beyond that I think that Canada has demonstrated that agriculture and stability undoubtedly go hand in hand, and I say to those who hope to save five cents per pound of meat by leading farmers to a dead end of instability, not knowing what price they will get to feed themselves and what products they will sell, that the main thing is to know that we can look after the needs of our children and this will happen when production is stabilized and well established. We therefore still have to establish a few marketing boards and we are working at it.

We have now reached a stage of agricultural development which requires us to look forward. Canada has shown that as a basic structure, as a country which I consider the finest in the world, it is in a position to help the Third World and to feed more than 26 million people, and I believe it. For that purpose, Canagrex, as a new government organization, will help to ascertain the needs of other countries and the products that we can provide and that can be consumed by people living in other climates. In those circumstances, the market is extensive.

It is useless to mention the millions of Canadians who holiday abroad each year. The Caribbean countries mentioned yesterday attract 400,000 visitors, to say nothing of Mexico, Florida and Europe. Tourists are often unable to find in those countries the food they usually eat. This can become a problem. Those countries are surely interested in welcoming wholeheartedly Canadians who spend billions of dollars abroad. That area represents fantastic potential markets for our agricultural products. It is up to us to seize that opportunity. I am pleased to see today that the minister has introduced a bill establishing the organization responsible for gaining access to those markets. Moreover, there are many countries, as I said earlier, which are not self-sufficient in agriculture. Of course, I am aware that we will always have to import bananas or coffee. We will never be in a position to grow all the foodstuffs we need, but we can export a great number of products.

With regard to meat or even to a typical product of my region, blueberries, is a unique product with a fantastic flavour that is now being massively exported to the United States but is still unknown to several countries because our markets have not been extended. Tons of that product remain each year in the fields and woods in my region. They are not picked due to the lack of markets. This is a prospect which could be developed and new markets could be sought. However, the main thing is that with the structures we have set up, our agri-food co-operatives can develop, and our companies with a huge output but not operating at full capacity can find the markets required to dispose of their products.

You know, a turnover of some $42 billion is forecast for the agri-food industry by 1985. That is quite an amount of money. I am convinced that the establishment of Canagrex will generate much more than these $42 billion if we combine our efforts and join forces as a nation to develop new markets for the sale of constantly renewable products for daily consumption, especially if we can export the very good name which Canada has earned for itself among our local merchants as a producer of good quality foodstuffs. When you see the Canadian seal of approval of the Canadian government on meat or other foodstuffs, it means that quality is there. We could export this quality. I need not tell you that new markets will continue to open in different parts of the world, for mankind will always need to be fed. That is a basic need. It is clear that the Canadian government cannot afford to develop all these new markets entirely by itself. It will require, for instance, the co-operation of the provinces.

I am not worried, because we already can rely on the co-operation of farmers. I want to congratulate them once more, because they have become excellent businessmen, and extremely productive ones at that, in just a few years. They have constantly asked the government to give them a break, so that they could fulfill their duties as farmers and feed the Canadian people. No, I am not worried about them. On the other hand, I am concerned about the provincial governments, and when I refer to provincial governments, I mean the Quebec government. Here is an example which is very close to me. In my capacity as a representative of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, I was one of the officials who had to negotiate the deal on agricultural expansion and especially land drainage. You probably know that good farm lands are few in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area where I come from.

People often say that our area is some sort of an island deep in the heart of Quebec with a highway linking it to Quebec City. Keeping that in mind we strive to be as self-sufficient as possible in the agricultural fields where we produce. Unfortunately, when that agreement was signed, millions of dollars were earmarked for the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area to help our farmers drain their land. What has happened in the past two years? I found out about it and this is official. First of all the Quebec government began by telling the farmers that it would no longer pay for the engineering costs to prepare the drainage plans they wanted for their land. On the one hand the government of Quebec was offering them money of which 60 per cent came from the federal government to help them, but on the other it was telling them that it would no longer foot the bill for the preliminary projects it used to pay for, that is the blueprints. Try draining without a plan which shows which way your land will slope, how much and so on! The second beef I have is the fact that last year the Quebec agriculture department decided that the funds allotted for farm drainage in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area would quite simply be transferred to Montreal's plain region.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to leave you with the impression that I have something against the plain of Montreal for it happens to be our main source of agricultural products in the province of Quebec. But still that is a far cry from trying to empty regions such as ours where the people work extremely hard in a climate which can be unforgiving; as you know, the growing season in Lac-Saint-Jean is more than a month shorter than in the Montreal area. Why go out of their way not to help a region such as mine? Why take the funds which were supposed to be there? I know that many of my friends in agriculture applied for drainage assistance but they were turned down because of the lack of funds. I fully realized that the funds had been shifted over to the Montreal area. It may be that there are more voters in the Montreal area, I do not know, but at times I wonder if the party which claims to be pro-Quebec and which calls itself Parti Québécois would not rather take us for a ride instead of lending us a hand. I would describe that as a sort of living room nationalism. Now and again I derive some pleasure when I describe them as pseudo-nationalists. All in all, that is a polite way of saying that they are not fascists, but semi-fascists of the extreme right whose sole intent is to sell a flag, to sell a so-called country about which they do not know anything and have no idea whatsoever how it is to be made up.

When you represent a riding and you fight to try to obtain some benefits for those people and then find yourself confronted by a government elected by the same people, a government which instead of working hand in hand with you makes every effort to win votes in a referendum—or a "Renérendum", call it whatever you like—I wonder what the future has in store for our farmers in Quebec, what can our co-operatives expect and what will happen to our agricultural food industry. If it were only up to us here and our policies I would say we have a very bright future. That government holds a majority in the National Assembly and at times it does everything it can to channel away from the Lac-Saint-Jean farmers the funds which end up in other regions; as a result those same farmers might have to pick up the tab, not to mention the fact that they feed the people and that thousands of related jobs are created in the agricultural food industry. I believe that over the years the Government of Canada, the Liberal Party of which I am proud to be a member—the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) seems to be smiling. I regard his smile as a sign of approval because in this country, when agriculture is being discussed, even the opposition has good reasons to smile, since agriculture is the industry which has progressed the most in Canada in the last 20 years, under a Liberal government.

Coming back to what I was saying, Mr. Speaker, over the last 20 years, the Government of Canada has done well in the field of agriculture and it will continue to do so, not to sell Canada to Quebec farmers but to help a vital sector of our society, namely, our agricultural producers, develop, and increase their output so that they may become the breadbasket of that long-suffering and ill-treated part of the world, the Third World. May I add, Mr. Speaker, that on the other hand, in the last five years, we have seen people in Quebec, going about the province, professing to be nationalists, claiming to be ministers and to be working for their fellow-citizens, who never for one moment understood that they were elected members expressly to represent the people. In Quebec we now have to contend with a group of demagogues who resort to all possible means in an effort to convince people that the federal government is a monster, that Canada is in dire straits and that their future lies in withdrawing within themselves.

How is it then that in 1982, 74 of us sitting here to represent six million Quebecers, should decide that the time has come to set up a corporation known as Canagrex, open up our markets the world over, broaden our horizons worldwide, while in Quebec, big Garon goes around saying that they will close down the boundaries, stop importing food products, and communicating with the Canadian government, and break off relations with outsiders? Who is being truthful, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is the big problem!

Mr. Gimaïel: I can well imagine Mr. Garon and his tremendous potential at work in 1882, at a time when there were no planes, no telecommunications, no telephones, nothing. Then he could reasonably have claimed the right to be the cock of the walk, because he could not go far in less than two weeks even if it meant only going to his neighbour's place. But fancy that heap of lard coming today in 1982 to advocate the isolation of Quebec! What would he have Quebecers believe?

I shall never forget what my father told me: Son, beware of him who shows you a gold coin, he is after your dollars. While you are looking at his gold coin, he will rob you of something. Beware. That is exactly what is going on in Quebec at this time. Those people who are promising Quebecers the moon, whether it be in the field of agriculture or any other are also unable to provide for their daily needs. The moon I do not promise, I know I could never get it. I do not pretend to be any brighter than the people who came before me. But the basic commodities that my constituents need from day to day, that I promise on my life, on my conscience to get for them because I know I sit in an assembly where, regardless of party affiliation, people have been worthy enough not to blame the decisions of our forefathers, but to build on what has been left by our predecessors. This is what we are trying to do here.

I am pleased today, Mr. Speaker, as the member for Lac-Saint-Jean, to publicly condemn the Parti Québécois, its premier and ministers. Our farmers tell us they are faced with a major interest rate problem, they are faced in Quebec with an internal war among pork producers. We are prepared to introduce a share-cost program for pork but meat packers oppose it and some producers as well. While Quebecers are faced with that kind of problem, what is the Parti Québécois doing, Mr. Speaker? All they could find is a "Renérendum" to find out whether they are separatists or not.

How long can they go on laughing at Quebecers? Those people were elected by more than two million Quebecers but their major concern is not the welfare of their pork producers, it is whether they will be separatists or not, whether we are going to associate or not. Let us wait and see. Time will tell this is nothing but outrageous politicking. What I find most displeasing is that they stuff the minds of our Quebec people and some of our young people with taboos. Stay clear of people who are not like us! Do not speak to anglophones, it is dangerous! Do not go outside the province for work, it is dangerous! Let us make us a small country just for ourselves! We, Premier Lévesque and his ministers, are going to send ambassadors to talk to people in Ottawa—not Members of Parliament that are elected by the people and are accountable. Careful there, they will trick you! That famous taboo! I discovered something astonishing, Mr. Speaker. It would seem that taboos are an invention of the elite to ensure their control over people. This is what saddens me most, because in my view—I know I went somewhat beyond agriculture and I apologize to my colleagues, but in Quebec, as soon as we deal with agriculture or any other issue, when we are honest with our constituents we know that being Canadians means a lot, but when people suggest the opposite, it is our duty to prove to our constituents that those people are wrong.

As I said, what is most astounding is to see that elite now trying, under the cover of a fleur de lys, under a flag, under the term Québécois which by the way they have stolen because some years ago that word described every Quebecer. Now, in their view I am a bad Quebecer. It has even been suggested I am a traitor, because I spend nearly 90 hours a week working for the people who elected me. In my view, to be a nationalist means more than to boast of speaking French, of being a Quebecer. To be a nationalist is a frame of mind. Being a nationalist is living and working every day for the people one represents. To be nationalist is to do your duty. We have seen enough big mouths in Quebec! Stage people, historians, intellectuals, all those members of an intellectual elite, unable to bring the least thing to the population, who can only criticize others, who can only claim to be nationalists, but who are in fact more fascist than nationalist. We have had enough of them in Quebec! We do not need any more of them! In 1982, Mr. Speaker, the moment of truth has come. In Quebec, we now have to build for the future. Let me look at what is going on at this time. The James Bay project is nearly completed, Mr. Speaker. What has the PQ government done in five years? The James Bay project? It is nearly completed and there is nothing else for hydroelectricity. People have been talking about the Ashuapmuchuan for eight years in my region. Studies are still going on to determine if the landlocked salmon will still run the river if they build a dam. They have been studying the salmon behaviour for four years. If you look at other fields of endeavour, you will find that there are still two projects under way in my area: the federal taxation data centre in Jonquière and the Canada Games gymnasium in Chicoutimi. Nothing else is under way.

And when we go back to basics, this is what it means to be a nationalist. It means coming here to represent the 60,000 people who have elected you, to give them the best, to help them develop not in a closed environment, but at the same rate as all other Canadians. Because you speak French, you have to be a Quebecer and you will no longer speak to anyone else; I will tell you what to do. We have to be open to the world, to develop, to speak as many languages as possible, to be the best we can, the most developed in every respect, to have a future in every area. That is my duty. From now on, I have decided no longer to tolerate those who will prevent me from doing my job; I have decided to condemn them on behalf of those who have elected me, and if my constituents decide in two years that I have not done my job, they will tell me so in the most democratic way possible, in the way which is the most generally accepted by all.

Personally, I have done my duty. I did not come here to do the pseudonationalists a favour by saying: Yes, I am a Quebecer and I love Mr. Lévesque and I love the flag. No, I came here as a real Quebecer. I did not come here to say that I am a Quebecer and I speak French. I came here to get results for my constituents. I came here to help them get ahead, to think for themselves and to show leadership in our country and in the world. I came here to help them increase their output and solve any problems they might have involving production, employment and their health situation—you know, in Quebec we have reached the point where health care just isn't there. Mr. Speaker, during the winter the roads are hardly plowed anymore! Talk about problems! I feel that as a Member of Parliament my work is not much different from anybody else's. When a carpenter goes to work he takes a hammer and nails and the skills he has learned and starts building. I want to do much the same thing. I talk to my constituents. I come here to represent them, to build and work with them, and I tell them they should be Canadians, period. I am not trying to shove the Maple Leaf down their throats. I realize they live in a political context called Canada and in another political context called North America. Mr. Speaker, I cannot tolerate—and this also applies to the agricultural sector we are discussing today—seeing people who get themselves elected and, instead of listening to their constituents, grab a microphone and tell them that they have to be Quebecers, they have to be separatists, they have to be in favour of sovereignty or secession, and they have to watch out for the federal government. The latest news is that Quebec is considering a bill—and I am not afraid to say it—to prevent any initiatives by the federal government in the regions. I suppose that the Quebec government—we could compare the matter of the farm drainage agreement—is considering the possibility of letting the federal government invest only in Montreal and Quebec City to keep the people happy and get their votes, and let the people in the "sticks", as Mr. Bernard Landry would say, fend for themselves. This had better not happen, because they will realize that even if they want to separate, federal Members of Parliament are still there. Sooner or later they will have to realize that we are still there and that we mean to serve our constituents.

If I feel, even though it is not in an area of federal jurisdiction, that the Quebec government is preventing me from doing my job or preventing the Government of Canada from spending money in my own riding, like the $800,000 earmarked for Mont Valin or the $40 million earmarked to develop Saguenay Park, something it cannot do because the Quebec government refuses to transfer the land unlike what happened in Shawinigan, I am going to fight to the limit, because I was sent here in the first place to obtain money from the federal government to invest in my own riding and help it develop, and I know that in this respect I can count on the understanding of my hon. friends of the Progressive Conservative Party and New Democratic Party, because these people have come to realize, as I said, that what happened in the past is not perfect, but that it is at least honourable. Those who cannot respect the past, Mr. Speaker, like those in Quebec, cannot respect the present or the future, and any idea runs counter to despotism, something which is not entirely foreign to the Quebec situation just now. Not many ideas from other sources than the Quebec government can prevail at this time. Everything must come from high above, I swear, to be worth anything.

But to come back to agriculture, I am proud to be a Liberal and to be part of a government which is made up of 30 Liberal ministers under the leadership of Pierre Elliott Trudeau, for the Liberal Party has provided Canadian farmers over the years with the tools they needed to really develop. I continue to be proud of that, even when the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) says that it is not true. I have been trying to make him understand that everything was not fine and dandy 20 years ago in his own province, and that the Liberal Party has been in power for the past 20 years, except for eight or nine months. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) may correct me if I am wrong.

An hon. Member: You are wrong!

Mr. Gimaïel: The fact remains that everything is selling well just now in the riding and the province of the hon. member. And all is fine, it is one of the healthy provinces in Canada. I am sure that the hon. member, if he did not already belong to the No Decision Party, or the New Democratic Party if you prefer, would have been pleased to cross over to this side. Because it often happens that our western friends from the New Democratic Party look much more like converted Liberals than anything else. Sometimes a few of them take on a communistic look, but very soon everything goes back to normal. I hope, in that context, if one day you from the New Democratic Party want to join us, that the Chair will let us know. We will show you how to be good Liberals. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I should address the Chair. At any rate, as I said, I am proud to be part of that Liberal Party of Canada.

Often we are asked by young people in our ridings what it means to be a Liberal. Indeed, they are being told that being a PQ is being a Quebecer. A Liberal, what is that? That is something else. They tell us: "How can we be Quebecers and Liberals at the same time? Of course if we are Canadians, we are in the Liberal Party". I said no! This needs not be so. Being a Liberal is first and foremost to be working for the development of the individual person. This is what it means to be a Liberal. We should create a situation in which each and every Canadian can enjoy maximum freedom, whether he be a farmer, a New Democratic Party member, a wavering opposition leader, or a provincial premier. To be a Liberal is to work so that the individual can develop. To be a Liberal does not mean to fight for a province called Quebec, or a country called Canada, to fight for NATO or the Warsaw Pact. To be a Liberal is first and foremost to be an elected representative, a person whose leitmotiv, whose supreme will is to provide opportunities for development and progress for all Canadians. In such a situation, anything can be justified. If the development of individual Canadians is to be achieved through socialization, the Liberal Party can turn socialistic. If the development of individual Canadians is to be achieved through a turn to the right through a strenghtening in the industry, the Liberal Party can move to the right. If in order to promote our development the Liberal Party thinks we have to be communistic, we shall be communistic. This is what it is all about to be a Liberal. To be a Liberal is to be open to all ideas.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) left the Progressive Conservative Party yesterday. Because I know him personally, I can say that he is a great humanist. I have seen him at work in committee, I have discussed with him, and I can even tell you that he is a true member of the Progressive Conservative Party, knowing that he is one of the founders of that party in Alberta, where they are now in power. He has devoted many hours, even in very difficult times and he succeeded in being elected at the very beginning, when there was not a single Conservative in that province. He is a great humanist. What I regret most today, Mr. Speaker, is that, being on this side of the House, I am aware of the situation. However, I feel that on his side there are not enough people who are aware of that. You know, there comes a time, in a politician's life when it is extremely difficult to be left on one's own, when it is so very easy to adopt a party line. But when you are a great humanist, when you think first about the future, about your children, when you think first about the people you represent, you have to promote, for example, the development of farmers. This is one thing. I should have liked the Progressive Conservative Party to understand, for instance, that the development of Canagrex may have depended on the presence of the hon. member for Edmonton East among them. They did not understand and they shouted him down.

The Liberal Party, however, understood that the development of farmers depends on exports, now that we have built a sound agricultural structure in Canada. He has also understood that some people may have different ideas. If we had talked about establishing Canagrex a few years ago, Mr. Speaker, they would have thrown tomatoes at us. It does not make sense. Let us develop first our own agriculture, we shall see afterwards whether we should import and export. Let us feed ourselves first! But there were people who believed in it and with whom everyone failed to agree. They were left alone, they were not opposed to, and were told: "Go ahead, do it! Put forward your arguments! That is what it means to be a Liberal!" I am proud to be a Liberal, as proud as Canadians were at the last election. I am more and more convinced that they will not change their mind in the next election, especially when people from the New Democratic Party seem to be more concerned about what a country like El Salvador is exporting than about our own exports. I am all too convinced that those who, today, are thrilled with the thought that Liberals are dead and gone in western Canada will soon realize that people will see that being a Liberal is much more than supporting a political party. It is first and foremost to be free to think.

Once again, I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture for this measure and want to remind the farmers of my riding of Lac-Saint-Jean that the first two bills to be introduced in 1982 deal with agriculture, that we start the year working for them, for their development, for the development of their markets and that we shall do the same throughout the year. We are a bunch of Members of Parliament who work for the wellbeing of the farming community. We have introduced special programs for them and we have overcome some difficulties on their behalf and shall continue to do so.

As regards the success of Canagrex, I have no doubt whatsoever. The only request I want to make to the minister, and to those who are involved in Canagrex as a corporation, is to show plenty of aggressiveness. And on that point, I shall ask for the support of the provinces, as well as that of the opposition parties: Gentlemen, let us not build Canagrex while planning to destroy it tomorrow morning. Let us build it with the intention of helping its development. Let us take a pile of Canagrex business cards along with us whenever we travel abroad and give them to the people we meet. Let us be ambassadors for Canagrex everywhere we go. Let us not waste time looking for difficulties, something the provinces should also avoid doing. To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I thank you and hope heartily that Canada, under the leadership of Pierre Trudeau and his cabinet, will continue to be one of the world leaders in the area of agriculture and that tomorrow we shall be feeding those who, today, are going hungry in the rest of the world.

[English]

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a pleasure to rise to speak on this bill which affects ridings such as mine, Huron-Bruce. It is a major producer of many commodities currently being exported and many others that could be exported. Any help given to promote Canadian agricultural products will be of benefit to my riding and many others. The overflow effects of exports of agricultural products is of help to our secondary industries.

I am pleased to participate in this debate at long last because the export of agricultural product has concerned me throughout my career as a farmer, particularly in the past few years as a participant in a provincial marketing board that aggressively sought markets around the world for our products. Since being elected to this House, I also sat on the special committee formed to examine the usefulness of setting up a national trading corporation to promote general trade under the umbrella of a state trading corporation.

With this background I have been eager to examine the bill which was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as long ago as May, 1979. I am glad that after three years it has finally come to the point of debate.

As one of the members of the Special Committee on a National Trading Corporation who opposed the majority report recommending a general state trading corporation, I want to make clear my position in relation to the bill now before us. When I opposed the majority on the special committee that recommended to this House that we proceed with legislation to create a state trading corporation, I made it clear that I did so for particular reasons.

To quote from the press release which I and my colleague from Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) issued after the report of the special committee was tabled last June, that recommendation to form a state trading corporation flies in the face of advice received both from Canada's private sector businesses and from the many government departments and agencies which appeared before the committee. Bear in mind that this House created that special committee to examine on behalf of the whole House the views of Canadians whose business is to concern themselves with our export trade.

We spent a year conducting hearings here in Ottawa and across the country to hear the views of the Canadian private and public sectors. We also travelled to Europe to examine the experience of a range of European countries which have tried a wide variety of methods of promoting and improving their export performance.

What we found in the course of that full year of study was that the great bulk of informed opinion among Canada's manufacturers and exporters, and indeed the majority opinion among our own public sector experts, was that a state trading corporation was not what was needed to improve our export performance over all. Instead, we received a great deal of expert advice which had never been gathered before in Canada and which should serve as a primer to anyone interested in the matter of Canada's export performance. This advice is all to be found in the transcripts of the committee hearings. I hope it will be researched and used by future task forces and groups concerned with Canada's export performance.

We have heard talk of Canagrex for quite a long time. We did not have the opportunity of examining the bill until very recently. In Ontario there are approximately 26 or 28 marketing boards which are producer-run. A general type of meeting was held with some of those boards. They had an opportunity to express some of their views and concerns but have not had a real opportunity to examine the bill, even the opportunity that we have at this time. I hope that at the committee stage some of these marketing agencies will have the opportunity to examine and look at this board and give their final views before we continue with this agency.

A lot of our marketing boards in Ontario have been very successful in their export endeavours. I was involved in a marketing board. It created a fantastic market for a lot of producers in Ontario. In ten years it completely reversed a trend of 80 per cent domestic use of a product and a 20 per cent export, to an 80 per cent export and 20 per cent domestic use without any sacrifice of consumption of that product in Canada. That is only one board. There are other boards just as successful.

I know these boards have some serious questions about this proposed agency. Is it going to complement what they are doing or compete with what they are doing? Also, will it compete with our food processors which are actively exporting agricultural products? Are we going to be creating a Crown corporation which will be in direct competition with them? We know, because of the wide range of products involved in export marketing, that we cannot have salesmen who will be experts in all areas. We know that it takes a great amount of market research, and it is my hope that if Canagrex is established it will make use of research and involvement that many of our marketing boards have used up to this time in marketing research that has already been done. If this board is established, I hope the expertise of those people involved in marketing organizations will be utilized and that they will have a place on the board of Canagrex.

It is obvious that there should be people involved who initially have something to sell, people who have the authority to finalize deals and complete the entire package. The agency should have qualified people in all areas, from financing to shipping. As a corporation, Canagrex should be expected to guarantee the high quality of agricultural products for which Canada is held in high regard throughout the world. We want to maintain that.

If this corporation is established, it should start small and not be in competition with services now available either through the federal government or provincial governments. We do not want it to be in competition with a producer or organization directly involved in the export of agricultural products at this time.

Before I continue with the text of my speech, I should like to quote for the record a letter which was sent to me by a constituent. It says:

The letter is signed by Ross S. Proctor.

The work of the Special Committee on the National Trading Corporation, of which I was a member, had to do with exporting from the enormous Canadian lumber industry to the communications industry and the tool manufacturing industry, from the newsprint industry to the shipbuilding industry and the engineering sector, which exports no hard goods but which exports Canadian expertise in dam building, irrigation projects, oil drilling and so on. The point which we made in opposing the creation of a state trading corporation was that after seeking a very wide range of expert advice, the committee as a creature of this House had an obligation to reflect the advice which it had received when it reported to the House. I maintained then, and still maintain, that the majority on that special committee failed to discharge its primary duty to the House by submitting recommendations to the House in the final report, which did not reflect the advice we had received.

We face an entirely different situation with the bill which is now before us. The creation of an agricultural export corporation has been talked about in Canada for many years now. The present government has campaigned on the promise of creating such a corporation twice in the past five years. In view of the fact that the government has had the introduction of this legislation in mind for so long, it is fair to wonder why it has dragged its feet for so long before introducing the legislation. It is almost two full years since the present government was elected and since the promise to bring in this legislation was formally made in the Speech from the Throne which began this session. The agriculture minister's advisers told the press in May of 1980 that it was only a matter of a few months before the legislation would be presented. One of them was quoted in the agricultural press as saying that the creation of the Canadian agricultural export corporation was "about as high as something can get" on the minister's list of priorities.

Well, farmers now understand sadly and clearly just how fast they can expect results when something becomes a matter of priority with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). It took him a year and a half, plus the ammunition of a 70 per cent increase in farm bankruptcies, merely to convince the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to include farmers in the provision of the Small Business Development Bond. Even then he failed. Instead, farmers were allowed limited and restricted access to a small business survival bond, which they could only use when they had become so financially shaky that the banks would no longer want to lend to them. So much for the usefulness of having any matter high up on the list of the minister's priorities.

In fact, I recall when the Minister of Agriculture appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture in the fall of 1980 and told us Canagrex could increase agricultural exports by as much as $3 billion during its first year of operation. One of his officials from the marketing and economics branch of Agriculture Canada announced at that time that there would definitely be money for Canagrex in the 1981-82 budget. By this logic, plus the added assurance that Canagrex would begin very quickly with an aggressive sales campaign, we should by now have been able to look back on a full year of Canagrex operations and, if the minister is to be believed, should be able to take satisfaction in the fact that Canadian food producers have $3 billion more cash in hand to meet the crisis they are facing in farm financing than they in fact have.

However, we cannot look back on a year of Canagrex. Canada's food producers have had to look back on the worst financial squeeze most of them have faced in their whole farming careers or that Canadian agriculture has faced since the Depression of the 1930s. Instead, those producers who have been watching a lifetime's equity melting away month by month during this past year and have watched the outrageous growth of interest rates, have not had the benefit of a single penny of the $3 billion which the Minister of Agriculture said Canagrex could add to the agricultural export drive in its first year alone. Therefore I, along with many other food producers in Canada, am left wondering whether the Minister of Agriculture or his cabinet overlords have the slightest idea what they are talking about when they talk about the value of an agricultural export trading corporation.

I am not for a moment suggesting that Canagrex is a bad idea. I am simply suggesting that if the Minister of Agriculture believes what he says about the value of creating such a corporation, then he should hang his head in shame for taking so long to bring forward legislation which, by his account, could have had such an enormously beneficial effect during the past year in which it could have been operating.

In short, I would like to see the minister talk clear sense and take his responsibilities to Canada's agricultural industry seriously. The last thing that we need in the beleaguered food industry is more rhetoric and empty promises. We need a clear policy, serious planning and prompt implementation of programs. What we have had in the case of Canagrex for almost two years now is apparently a bureaucratic fumble, centred in the cabinet, as a directionless government has concentrated its attention on reshuffling the bureaucratic deck instead of acting to meet the needs of the agricultural economy in this country.

Having said this, let me say that now that we do have the legislation brought forward for examination and debate, I for one am anxious to see it passed to the Standing Committee on Agriculture so it can be examined in detail and commented on by those who will be affected by the creation of such a corporation and whose livelihood is dependent on their being experts in the field not only of food production but of marketing.

There cannot be any significant objection in Canada, and certainly not among food producers, to the goal of increasing our agricultural exports. This is a thoroughly laudable goal in itself. Certainly, however, there are powerful reasons why this country's food producers will want to look very closely at any scheme brought forward by the present government, even when it is sponsored by the Minister of Agriculture, for whom I think the farming community has had much respect in the past. Recent evidence of the incompetence with which the current government has faced the economic problems of Canada certainly does not inspire confidence in the Canadian agricultural community that any measure brought forward is going to be valuable just because this government says it will be valuable.

We in this party will want to look very closely at this legislation in the committee, and we will want to do so soon. Ever since the present government was elected, the Standing Committee on Agriculture of this House has been spinning its wheels and doing almost nothing to serve the interests of the economic sector whose interests it is charged with protecting.

In almost every Speech from the Throne we have heard, whether it be federal or provincial—and I think we could dig out any throne speech over the last number of years—agriculture has been mentioned, and it has always been said that agriculture is the backbone of this great country. However, that apparently seems to be about all that happens. We only get lip service to agriculture when the crunch comes.

Another reason, of course, is that the Minister of Agriculture has not brought any real grist to the mill. There is a vacuum, a powerlessness, in this government which has cost the farming community in Canada unnecessary billions of dollars in outrageous interest charges as a direct result of government economic and fiscal policy. And there is a vacuum where there ought to be a powerful and effective minister of agriculture in the cabinet, where, once upon a time, there was such a minister.

For all these reasons the agricultural sector in Canada will want a full examination of this legislation now before us at the committee stage, even though the need for an improvement in the prospect for Canadian agriculture is immediate.

As a representative of one of Canada's leading pork and beef producing areas, I can tell the House with certainty that there is absolutely no value for our redmeat producers in increasing our markets for pork and beef if we are going to continue to fetch prices below the cost of production. If we increase beef and pork sales by $3 billion a year, under the present price regime Canadian farmers could expect to lose more millions as they subsidize foreign consumers more heavily, the way they now subsidize Canadian consumers. Canagrex, in other words, is of no help to the agricultural sector in Canada if it merely increases our food exports without increasing the returns to farmers.

So, as we look at this legislation in committee, we will need to be convinced that Canagrex, as it has been envisioned by this government and the bureaucrats who drafted the legislation, will in fact serve the interests of Canada's food producers and not merely fit into some macroeconomic strategy as part of Canada's over-all trade picture or as an aspect of Canadian foreign policy.

On the face of it I believe there are grounds for hoping that Canagrex can work to the advantage of Canada's trade performance over-all and to the benefit of the food-producing sector, which should be the primary beneficiary. But, I add, let us be certain that it does before we come to the final debate in the House on the legislation now before us.

To ensure that Canagrex is workable and does work to the benefit of food producers I support the reference of this legislation to committee promptly for rapid and very careful and close study. I hope, when the committee finishes its examination and reports this bill, it will have proved itself harder working and more competent than the government's lack of interest in agriculture has allowed it to be thus far during the course of the present Parliament.

Canada's food producers have been crying out for clarity and competence in the government's management of agriculture, and they have not yet got it from this government.

I hope we can unite in sending this bill to committee with the strong demand that it receive prompt, close and careful scrutiny and comment from a wide range of groups which will be affected by the creation of an agricultural export trading corporation such as the government has now, at last, proposed.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Cardiff: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member referred to the Canadian trading corporation committee and the fact that he dissociated himself from its report. He knows, of course, that the main recommendation had two components. The first was undertaking capital projects, and the second was general trading.

Since the general trading component relates to what Canagrex will want to do in the field of agricultural products, how can the hon. member reconcile the fact that he seems to favour in principle the institution of Canagrex to promote exports but, on the other hand, he does not accept that the Canadian trading corporation should support the export of manufactured products?

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might recall that indeed I did support in general the proposal he speaks about, but I felt I received a message in the hearings which were held from the 450 witnesses who appeared before our committee. The clear and direct feeling relayed to me was that a national trading Crown corporation was not what was wanted by those people. The same feeling might exist in relation to Canagrex. I think it is only proper that commodity groups and people actively involved in exporting have the opportunity to look at this bill and to put their views forward. I think it is my obligation to support what the representatives of the various organizations and the people I represent want.

Mr. Pepin: Have you any views of your own?

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased, at the end of this week, to be able to take part in the debate on the Canagrex bill, especially since this corporation constitutes our challenge to the food industry in the eighties. A few weeks ago, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) tabled a white or beige paper in which he stressed the projected increase in the world population and the enormous markets that would be open to us during the next 20 years. The white paper has three major concerns: development of resources, development of markets and thematic agricultural research. I think the bill now before the House is aimed more specifically at realizing the second objective. It is becoming absolutely essential for Canada to develop export markets, considering the fact that surpluses are a problem for many producers. In my riding, people also have this problem and they have a good understanding of export markets.

According to our statistics and projections, Canada will be able to increase agri-food exports by about 60 per cent during the next twenty years. But how am I to reconcile the words of the previous speaker who said that he is anxious to examine the legislation in committee for the benefit of our farmers, with those of his official critic, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), who said that the Minister of Agriculture could wait, that they had plenty of time, that there was no rush and that the House could debate the bill for a few days more. Honestly, when you consider that farmers have been asking for this legislation for several years! We made a promise during the election, the corporation was mentioned in the throne speech and even the members of the opposition agree with the concept. That is why I fail to understand their desire to delay the democratic process. However, if they are willing to refer the bill immediately to committee, I should be glad to sit down and give them a chance to vote. To most Canadian farmers, international trade opens a host of possibilities and will enable them to expand their business and to get a return on their often quite considerable capital investment.

Many farmers are now producing at 60 per cent, 50 per cent or even 40 per cent of their capacity because of a lack of markets for their products. The corporation we are proposing will be a focal point for the entire agri-food sector in Canada, because not only producers but also processors will be interested in meeting the challenge of Canagrex. In fact, the real challenge for Canada in the eighties will be to be able to market processed farm products, thus providing a living wage for many more Canadians and making a very substantial contribution to our balance of payments. In 1980, Canada succeeded in exporting $7.8 billion worth of agricultural products. Unfortunately, the vast majority of these were primary products, involving a minimum amount of labour, which of course had a negative impact on our employment rate. Once Canagrex becomes the instrument of our agricultural export policy, I am convinced that we could easily exceed the $2.7 billion surplus we had in 1980 and probably will have this year. In Canada we must rely on advanced production techniques. We have a large pool of workers and, even more important, we have enough space to increase farm production.

Sales abroad now account for 40 per cent to 45 per cent of the normal income of farmers, and this percentage could increase substantially if Canagrex fulfills its mandate. Feeding the world is a constant challenge. We only have to look at the Third World countries, at the enormous trading potential with the socialist bloc or at the even greater demand from the Arab countries to realize that Canada can easily get a share of these markets with the help of experienced salespeople. This is why I hope that this new corporation will be staffed with qualified people who will probably be able to operate from within our embassies and sell our farm products instead of merely selling equipment. This would be a welcome change for a constituency like Shefford, where there are poultry, egg, maple syrup, apple, pork, dairy and other producers. Maple syrup is a very good example. We now have a surplus of millions of pounds in Canada and this product is not well known in most parts of the world. We have a very limited market of people who know this extraordinary product, but they are just a minority in the world, and I am convinced that with a good sales program we could first sell our surplus, and then increase our production.

Among the problems now facing agriculture, one of the most important is that of pork production. In Quebec, pork production is virtually at a standstill; a number of producers are just about bankrupt and there is a very big surplus. I am convinced that even though our slaughterhouses and our federations have developed markets in Japan and the United States, there are many other opportunities elsewhere in the world, and if Canagrex could not compete with them, but co-operate, our farmers might earn a decent living. According to the most realistic projections, the world population should reach 6.4 billion within the next ten years. Such an increase means a lot of mouths to feed and the challenge facing Canadian producers is great.

I am even more satisfied when I see who the officials of Canagrex will be. This corporation will not turn out to be the type of institution which suffers from structuralism and is nothing more than a bunch of thinkers. We intend to have a corporation managed by a board made up of 11 directors who will be directly responsible to the Minister of Agriculture, seven of whom will be appointed from outside the federal public service. And with all due respect to our public service, I am convinced that we can find seven Canadians outside our system who can make Canagrex, as well of course as all Canadian farmers, benefit from their knowledge of agriculture, marketing, and the marketplace itself.

There will also be a policy advisory committee which will be made up of representatives from the provincial governments. A while ago, one of my colleagues spoke about problems with the provincial governments, but I am certain that the provincial governments will consider it their duty to take an active part in an organization such as Canagrex because if the balance of payments of Canada is improved by the work of Canagrex, it will be of great benefit to the provincial governments. The corporation will include representatives from business and farm associations who will be in a position to advise the minister in all areas concerning the market development strategy. Management will be restricted. A president and two vice-presidents will be hired to manage Canagrex under the board of directors. I do not think farmers would have liked it if we had created a top-heavy structure that would have hampered their ability to communicate with and understand those who will try to open up new markets. Another significant aspect of the legislation, one which I hope will be found in other bills in the future, is the provision in clause 31 that the corporation will prepare a three-year plan. This means that every Canadian farmer, everyone in the agri-food industry, processors and even bankers will know in advance where Canagrex is going, what its objectives are for the three following years. And I quote:

> (2) The corporate plan referred to in subsection (1) shall set forth
> (a) the purposes and general objectives of Canagrex, not inconsistent with this act or the bylaws of Canagrex; and
> (b) the projected activities of Canagrex in the three financial years covered by the plan, including
> (i) the specific agricultural products or food products with which Canagrex will concern itself in the first of those three years.
> (ii) the specific objectives of Canagrex with respect to the products referred to in subparagraph (i), and
> (iii) the means that Canagrex intends to use in those three years in order to achieve the objectives referred to in subparagraph (ii).

I think this is a new approach, a long-term one that is really needed. There has been a number of complaints, other corporations involved in agriculture lacked vision. In some cases, pork producers blame us for having provided them with ample funding that led to future losses. I think the provision of such a three-year plan will enable other corporations like the FCC and a number of other boards involved in that area to plan ahead, and this will mean stable revenues for all our farmers. As matters now stand, as soon as there is a surplus, difficulties arise, financial problems. Basically we developed export markets on the strict basis of periodic surpluses. Until now, we never had a consistent long-term policy.

Exactly! Right now, in order to produce surpluses, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) said, if we did not have a corporation like Canagrex, there would still be surpluses every year, one year it would be potatoes, another year maple syrup, milk, powdered milk, or cheese. Truly nobody developed long-term projections.

It is my view that the Minister of Agriculture, first with his document "Challenge for Growth in the Eighties", and second, with the establishment of that corporation, will give a long-term outlook to a whole industry that is highly developed. Despite private initiative in the area of exports, it has always been difficult for various groups, packers or others, to negotiate with foreign countries. I know that it has very often been so with wheat, but in the other less conventional products this has always been difficult. Now that Canagrex will have authority to negotiate with governments and foreign corporations, I am sure Quebec producers in particular, who are so often dependent on foreign markets, will profit tremendously.

To return to my own riding, I am sure that the work that Canagrex and the Canadian Dairy Commission will be doing together will help a co-operative such as Agropur, one of the world leaders in the area of industrial milk, which must fight every year to find new export markets either for its cheeses, its powdered milk or its butter. A joint effort by the Canagrex-Canadian Dairy Commission team could mean only greater security in the area of new markets. The same applies to the Canadian Wheat Board. Canagrex has no intention whatever of replacing or competing with the Canadian Wheat Board, but I am sure Canagrex officials could give a tip or two to those of the Canadian Dairy Commission or the Canadian Wheat Board. Now, the new corporation will have to take up the challenge of making agriculture a stable and profitable business so as to convince farmers to make new capital expenditures. We have in Quebec legislation dealing with farm zoning.

Strictly on the basis of zoned land, we find that we have the potential to feed countless people. And most of that land is not even under production. Now we have the possibility of new markets. The Canadian market is much too limited to allow our producers to operate at full capacity. In Canada, at the present time the problem is not one of productivity in agriculture. We have to limit our production, which explains our quota system, because of circumstances beyond our control. Still, it is frustrating for the hard-working farmer to see his potential and production resctricted. He knows he could produce twice as much but, unfortunately, he does not have the markets for his products. The processing industry is in its very infancy in Canada, especially in Quebec. Where do our processing industries manage to process right on home ground? At this time, in our area for instance, people are processing apples; those plants are located in the riding of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. There are people who process apples, make cider and all sorts of products and by-products, and that industry has given jobs to a great many workers.

The agricultural cooperative has over 600 people working in processing plants and I am convinced that a lot of new industries would open up if the markets were there. Canagrex will be able to help those people develop new markets and arrange their own financing, and I am sure that . . . Someone said earlier that the plain of Montreal was given preferential treatment over some other localities and I have no doubt that the future of the plain will be brighter still if Canagrex can fulfil its mandate. Indeed its mandate is very simple: Canagrex is established strictly for the purposes of promoting, facilitating and engaging in the export of agricultural products and services and food products and services from Canada to other countries by means of the financial and other powers provided in the act under which it is established of course. We have been waiting a long time for that corporation. I know that during the last electoral campaign we often referred to our determination to set up that corporation. The throne speech did refresh our memory and we are now about to deliver the goods.

I hope that our colleagues opposite will be responsible and generous enough to let the bill go to committee without undue delay. If they have specific questions Committee of the Whole House is not the place to put them. I suggest that a committee would be a much better place because, of course, we are not fully aware of every aspect of the operation and the producers as well as the associations will appear before us to tell us exactly what they think of the bill. As members we do our best, but at the earliest opportunity we should call for people outside who will comment on the bill and help us improve it if it has any deficiency. I know how our colleagues opposite feel, I can understand them, perhaps it hurts a little to realize that we are doing something for which the farming community will be extremely grateful, but it is really essential and we know all about the difficulties. Every day during Oral Question Period they remind us that farmers are going through difficult times. Here is a solution which might relieve somewhat their financial hardship and I hope hon. members will act diligently and efficiently.

The Minister of Agriculture is very optimistic about the potential of this corporation. I share both his optimism and his determination in the hope that the people will get to work immediately and sell our products. Again I say that the driving force behind our export policy and our challenge over the next 20 years will be Canagrex and the long list of supporting organizations which will enable Canada to become a major exporter. There are financial considerations, of course, because farmers must earn a living and the processing industries and their workers must have work, but there are human considerations as well.

The scarcity of food in the world weighs on our conscience especially as we live in a land of plenty. All reports provided to us by organizations such as OXFAM and others constantly make us aware of destitution and hunger in the world and should induce us to pass that legislation as soon as possible. Many new systems and ideas will have to be developed and officials such as those of Canagrex could try to make that foodstuff available to those remote communities. We will need, of course, some valid economic grounds, it is unfortunate but such is life. However I am sure that we can also play a humanitarian role and Canagrex will help us considerably to do so. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that in the next few minutes we will be in a position to set up a committee to consider the provisions of the bill and amend them to the satisfaction of the members opposite. I hope that we will be in a position to implement the bill very shortly and that the minister will proceed with the appointment of new directors, so that those people will set out to sell abroad and give some hope to our farmers who are, I would say, tired of having their production restricted as well as their capacity to produce and make their land profitable. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that this new corporation will have an enormous impact on our region, our country and even throughout the world, and we should establish it as soon as possible. Some are complaining that it is too late; I think it is never too late to act right and if we can do that as soon as possible I am convinced that it will be generally beneficial in the future.

[English]

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to enter into debate today. I welcome the opportunity to make some comments about the bill before us. Bill C-85 establishes the Canadian Agricultural Export Corporation, Canagrex. Hopefully the corporation will carry out the functions desired by the minister to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural food products. Also it shows that the government is at least willing to recognize that there is an agricultural industry out there.

Please allow me to refer to a certain amount of concern which I have, Mr. Speaker, about the act, the subject relating to it and the powers given to the corporation. Also allow me to mention other concerns which I should like discussed at great length in committee and debated on the floor of the House. When we were looking at other questions regarding Canagrex to which we must have answers, we looked at such things as the role of Canagrex and the export of agricultural goods. We must ask ourselves whether it will be in support of or in competition with other exporters, both large and small. Who has the power to determine the sale and price of goods once a market is found? Is this the sole responsibility of Canagrex, or will it be shared with other departments such as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Department of External Affairs? How many fingers are actually in the pot when it comes to who has final say in sales to the corporation? The co-operation among Canagrex, other government departments, organizations, the agricultural community and national marketing boards is of utmost importance. This brings us to the thought of developing a multiple government agency which must relate with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of External Affairs or whatever the new massive complex may be. I would hate to see it evolve into a situation where trade-offs are made of manufactured goods coming in and out of the country, where we must deal with other department agencies and be willing to trade some of our produce to another country provided that we are willing to accept its manufactured goods or possibly even its produce which competes with our own. The actual sales being made as a result of negotiations between countries and departments are of major concern as well as the resulting agreements. As to the question of whether or not Canagrex should be a Crown corporation, it should be examined closely both in committee and here in the House.

I am sure that hon. members are aware of my concerns about Crown corporations, since I am the Post Office critic. We are a little shell-shocked on this side and so are the people in this country when it comes to Crown corporations, especially when we look at the Post Office and Petro-Canada. We on this side of the House together with many people in the agricultural field are leery of Crown corporations.

I feel we have a sufficient number of Crown corporations in Canada now. But whether Canagrex should be a Crown corporation or a wing of the Department of Agriculture or some other department of this government should be weighed in order to determine what is most advantageous to our country and to our farm community.

In this past week the word "partners" has been mentioned. The possibility is that Canagrex would enter into a partnership in sales and negotiations. Farmers in Canada do not want to be partners with the government, assisted yes, but not partners. We have too much government intervention in agriculture now. On page 6 of Bill C-85, we read:

(g) purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold real and personal property for actual use by Canagrex—

My concerns about this corporation are increased, having read that particular subclause.

I am concerned about jobs. Who are the people who will serve on the board of directors of this corporation? Who will be its vice-presidents? Who will go out looking for areas in which to sell our produce? Who will make the contracts? I hope these positions will not be patronage positions for those who have done well for the Liberal Party. I hope they will not be political appointments. I have sufficient faith in the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to believe that he will ensure that the best possible personnel will be put into this corporation and they will be agriculturally-related individuals.

I am also concerned about who this corporation will be responsible to. We see that the Auditor General is to have some say in the matter. But will the corporation be responsible to the minister and cabinet or will it be responsible to a committee of the House? Will it have the advantage of sunset laws? That is a concern of mine because of the responsibility. If it is to be the minister and cabinet, we have to look at the timing and the enthusiasm that cabinet has shown toward agriculture.

One can only think of asking oneself why it would take ten months to get this bill onto the floor of the House now when the minister had announced the cabinet had given the green light in February of 1981. We do not know how long the Minister of Agriculture had worked to get the cabinet to that stage, but now all of a sudden we are into a position where everything is rushed. Everyone on that side is very concerned that this bill go through immediately, that we get this bill passed in the House today. Why, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Pepin: Because we are very busy.

Mr. Bradley: Why, Mr. Speaker, do we do it now? It took ten months to get the bill to the position at which it is now. Why is there such a rush to get this bill passed? The previous speaker, the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) mentioned that he hoped the bill could be wrapped up in a matter of minutes today if that were possible. He said that if members had other questions and other concerns, they should take the bill to committee immediately, ask their questions in committee and debate the bill there. I am sure the hon. member has as many questions as those of us on this side have. We would like to take this bill to committee. We hope to take it to committee. But we have many questions and we have many people who want to speak on this bill. We are not all members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Pepin: You have said nothing yet.

Mr. Bradley: Therefore, we must take our opportunity to present our views to the House.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Ferguson), while speaking to this bill earlier this week, said that with Canagrex we must learn to walk before we can run. I agree with the parliamentary secretary. We must walk before we run. That is why we should not "run" this bill through the House. We should "walk" this bill through the House to ensure that it is the best possible bill for agriculture that this House can produce.

Certainly we must increase our agriculture exports in Canada. All members on this side of the House are aware of that. I am sure that all members on that side of the House are aware of that too and agree. We have always been informed and had the idea that Canada had a food trade surplus. We have. But the surplus is dependent directly on the world grain market, world grain trade, and Canada's sale of grains around the world. When we take the grain sales out of the figures, we find that we have an ever-worsening food trade deficit in Canada. That is something we must work together to turn around. While doing this we must also ensure that we protect our own agricultural community from imports of goods that we can grow here in Canada. Such as those grown in my area, which include apples, fresh fruits and vegetables, oil seeds and soybeans.

If we are going to look for markets around the world for our produce, we must also ensure that we protect produce in Canada that can be produced and sold also within our boundaries. It must be protected from imports from abroad. We must promote home sales as well as sales abroad. It is important that agriculture is helped at this time in Canada.

It is very important that we here in Ottawa take steps to help agriculture. We have to help find markets. Assistance must be given in the selling of goods to these markets. We must protect the goods that can be grown competitively here within the country. All sectors in agriculture must be helped. Agriculture has tremendous problems today. There is a tremendous cost-price squeeze placed on the producers in this country. Government tends to forget farmers, all levels of government, be they municipal, federal or whatever. It is very easy to say that farmers make up only a small percentage of the voters in this country and that we must really look to the consumers who make up some 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the voters. We must keep prices down to those consumers to ensure their votes. We must keep the cost of living down. We must keep inflation down. But let us not forget that farmers are also consumers, and on the average they consume much more than other sectors of the population. They too are having problems. They have problems with overhead which is continually rising. But the prices farmers receive for their goods are already on what is classified by too many people in the country as the top rung. These expenses which are continually climbing the ladder will eventually push the farmer off the ladder. The farmer faces tremendously increased costs in the transportation of his goods to the marketplace. The farmer faces increased costs in seed to plant his crops. There are increased costs for animal feed, fertilizer for his fields, labour to work his fields, and a tremendous increase in the cost of energy for his buildings and equipment. In addition, we have seen in the last few years a tremendous increase in the cost of equipment used on the farm.

What do the farmers do about it, Mr. Speaker? They go into debt; they have to in order to survive. They borrow money at the first of the year to put their crops in and hope they have a good year so they can pay it off at the end when they hope they can sell that crop. What do they borrow it at? Their interest rates are at 20 per cent or more. This kind of burden can no longer be placed on agriculture.

I am swamped in my constituency office, as I am sure members on both sides are, by farmers coming in with financial problems. Proud people with a 40-year farm history, people who have paid off as many as five mortgages on their farm to get to the position they are now in. People who have raised proud families, many of the children having returned to agriculture. One particular case comes to mind, Mr. Speaker, of a farmer whose son recently had his farm foreclosed and has himself been given 60-days notice. There are countless examples of this, Mr. Speaker, but this is not the bill on which to debate that.

They have been turned down by lending institutions, be they banks, government agencies or whatever. They do not know which way to turn. We are now debating some method of offering assistance in selling their goods and products. We must also consider the bankruptcies in agriculture. There is talk that the number of farm bankruptcies is much lower than what people believe; they are not really at a critical level. That is a fallacy, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned earlier that farmers are proud people. That is what keeps the bankruptcy figures down. If it reaches that stage in agriculture, you not only lose your home and your farm, but your whole life's work, your pension plan.

What do farmers do in that kind of situation? They borrow money, Mr. Speaker, at those high interest rates on which most of us would turn our backs and do anything but borrow. Or they go outside the farm and get a job at Stelco, Dofasco, Hydro or wherever. Then they come home at night and on the weekends and farm their land in order to keep it and to prevent bankruptcy. Or their wives go back on the labour market instead of staying home and looking after the family. When it comes down to it, rather than declare bankruptcy, most of those farmers will put their farm on the market for what they can get, thereby ensuring payment to their creditors rather than taking the final step into bankruptcy. So the bankruptcy figures, Mr. Speaker, do not represent the problems in agriculture today.

If we are to arrive at the best way to market farm products, we must understand and address the problems of the producers, we must assist marketing not only within Canada but around the world. The Farm Credit Corporation has been given a new lease on life to help the agricultural industry, and the Small Business Development Bond program is going to be given great amounts of money to assist those farmers in dire straits but, typically, it is all too little, too late and masked in confusion.

If a farmer goes to the FCC, he is told the regulations are correct and he must be turned down by banks and other lending institutions before he qualifies. It is not the fault of the FCC's field men, Mr. Speaker. Those who man the offices are capable and very concerned. It is the fault of a government that will not properly fund the corporation to enable its officials to look at the farmers' problems and help them to produce the goods we hope to sell around the world through Canagrex.

So the farmer, having been told that he must be turned down by the banks first, turns to the banks, Mr. Speaker, and inquires about the Small Business Development Bond. What is he told? We do not have the regulations yet from the government as to what it entails. Two months after the budget was brought down the banks still do not know what to do about it.

Now that we see a draft of the Small Business Development Bond program, what do the regulations say? They say you must first be turned down by other lending institutions. So we have the FCC saying you must be turned down by the banks and other lending institutions, and the Small Business Development Bond regulations saying the same thing. Where does the circle end, Mr. Speaker? When is that government over there going to assist farmers with acceptable interest rates?

This government makes promises. Canagrex was one, and a good one, but there were other promises made during the election. Farmers in my riding were told that the government would review the capital gains tax with the idea of reducing or eliminating it for farmers. They were told that V-day would be advanced from 1971 to 1974. What actually took place, Mr. Speaker? The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) took those promises, threw them out the window and hit the farmers harder than they have ever been hit before.

Mr. Nielsen: Right between the eyes.

Mr. Bradley: What could have been done for farmers in that budget in order to bring Canagrex in at a time when it could be of some assistance in ensuring production of goods and to provide us with a definite picture of agriculture's future? Something could have been set up to give real assistance on interest rates. The Farm Credit Corporation could have been allowed to acquire money from the private sector. A mortgage interest deductibility program could have been set up, if not for all Canadians at least for those in food production. Concessions could have been made on fuel and energy rebates for agriculture. Capital gains could have been exempted at least, as we have proposed, once in a lifetime for the bona fide farmer.

A farmer's operation is his pension plan, Mr. Speaker. He puts all his money back into the farm for his eventual retirement. Then he has to turn around and hand it all back to the minister in charge of income tax. Those are some of the things that could have been done, Mr. Speaker and they must be done if we are going to be realistic in facing the problems of agriculture, if we want to assist in the necessary marketing abroad. Farmers should be able to grow all they can and be satisfied that they will have a market for their produce.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that there are a great many arguments for and against the government's getting into agricultural export assistance. I am anxious to get into this subject in committee to see what the advantages are and what can be done. I want to find out if this is the best method to assist in the export of agricultural products. This leads me to the corporation versus the department, Mr. Speaker; to the utilization of embassies and staff, and whether it can be done with the number of staff members and funding allotted to the corporation.

I would like to carry on, Mr. Speaker, but I see the time is running short and I wonder if I may now call it four o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

Item No. 48 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

METRIC CONVERSION

PROPOSED MORATORIUM AND REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should declare a moratorium on metrication, disband the Metric Commission and, refer the question of conversion to the metric system to a standing committee of the House of Commons for study and review, and that the review extend to all aspects of the metric system and include the hearing and consideration of the views of interested persons and organizations and that the committee make recommendations that appear to the committee then to be necessary or desirable; and that the committee have the power to adjourn from place to place within Canada.

He said: In the Monday, January 11 edition of the Kingston Whig-Standard, there was an editorial entitled "Metric Madness: An Unconscionable Assault on Freedom." I would just like to read, for a moment, the first two or three paragraphs, because I think they are very interesting. The editorial states:

For people who can't tell the difference between an end and a means, I recommend a Mac Tackaberry.

In a front-page story the other day in The Whig-Standard, Mr. Tackaberry said all that there is to say. I'm only writing this to praise him.

For Mr. Tackaberry, there is no difference in principle between metric law and martial law. There isn't.

And for this Kingston businessman, metric measurement itself is not the issue. It isn't.

It is the use of force, by government, to do something that it wants to do, and to make many people do what they do not want to do.

Mr. Tackaberry says that he is prepared to resist the forcible imposition of metric law; that he is prepared to let the government close down his business, with its 30 employees; that he is prepared to go to jail.

How did this all come about? Canada has recognized the metric system since 1871. It was a voluntary system, and I emphasize the word "voluntary". Then, on January 16, 1970, to be exact, a white paper was tabled in the House of Commons. As is customary, the white paper, when it was tabled, was briefly commented on by a representative from each of the parties. At that time, our then House leader, Mr. Ged Baldwin, the then hon. member for Peace River, as recorded at page 2471 of Hansard, had this to say:

I agree that there must be a continuous and detailed study. We are prepared to co-operate with the government in this regard ... I would strongly urge the minister to give some thought to having the white paper he tabled today submitted either to a special or to a joint committee so that there might be a continuous study and reports from time to time to this committee by the boards the minister proposes to set up.

There was no reference of the white paper to a committee, and there was no debate in the House of the basic principles of metrication. However, based on that white paper, the Metric Commission was set up. I am not sure under which minister it was set up. I assume it was the then minister of industry, trade and commerce. However, the Metric Commission was comprised of four bureaucrats who were out of touch with the real world, the same types of bureaucrats, I would suspect, who prepared the budget which was handed down in the House on November 12.

Once this metrication committee was set up, it proceeded to try to implement metrication in the country. The committee members were able to persuade some of their fellow bureaucrats in the other provinces to go along with them. In Saskatchewan, for example, the land titles act was changed. The basic law of the land in the province of Saskatchewan was changed by an order in council dated April 20, 1976, prepared by bureaucrats and presumably signed by a minister somewhere along the way. However, what was interesting to find out, as we did, was that the matter of changing the land titles system in the province of Saskatchewan and, I assume, in the other provinces as well, was never debated in the legislature. As a matter of fact, when some of the Saskatchewan Members of Parliament found out that this order in council had been passed in Saskatchewan, we contacted some of the provincial MLAs and some of the ministers of that government and we asked, "What has happened? What went on? You have changed the land titles system to metric." What was their response? They said, "You are crazy. We never did that." We said, "Well, here is your order in council."

The Metric Commission bureaucrats persuaded the bureaucrats in Saskatchewan to change the land titles system. It is really a physical impossibility to change the land system from acres to hectares because the land in the prairies is surveyed on the square mile. There are 640 acres to the square mile, and 160 acres to a quarter section. One cannot convert to the metric system without having a whole bunch of decimals, which is absolutely ridiculous. The Metric Commission bureaucrats, as well, persuaded the bureaucrats in the provinces to change our speed limit signs in the provinces to kilometres per hour. There was no discussion and no debate. It was passed by order in council.

It was not until December of 1976, or early in 1977, that the question of the metric system ever arose in the House again, but by then it was a fait accompli. The metric system has moved along to the stage where the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Hon. Otto Lang, brought a bill into the House which was to change the Canadian Wheat Board Act, to change the Grain Commission Act, and to change the Weights and Measures Act from imperial to metric, making the imperial system illegal. That led to quite a lengthy debate.

Mr. Smith: This is true.

Mr. Neil: It was violently opposed by the members of the official opposition because we knew, through discussions with our constituents, what they felt. It was interesting, because the present leader of the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan, the former hon. member for Assiniboia, Mr. Ralph Goodale, who prided himself on having his finger on the pulse of the people spoke in the House on January 26 in this debate. What did he say? He said:

I want to deal with a few of the aspects of metric conversion affecting grain which may not be fully appreciated but upon the basis of which I believe this measure is not only supportable but is also in the best long-run interests of all segments of the grains industry, including producers in the prairie region. First, it should be noted that this change has a broad and virtually unanimous base of support in the farm community.

He went on to say that he had visited his constituency and that the people there were all in favour of metric.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Do you know what happened to Ralph? Where is Ralphie now?

Mr. Neil: The minister in charge of the Wheat Board at that time, the Hon. Otto Lang, supported the metric system, of course.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Where is he?

Mr. Neil: He is not here, either. However, his argument was that the change to metrication would save the farmers and grain producers some $5 million a year. He could not explain it. They were not letting anybody off. They were spending all this money on conversion of their scales, but he said, "We are saving the prairie farm producer $5 million."

● (1610)

I travel throughout my constituency on a regular basis. I visit every elevator in my constituency, and there are a lot of them. In my travels I have only found one elevator agent who agrees with and is in favour of the metric system. He is in favour because he started after the system was imposed. However, without exception when you visit an elevator, the agent will tell you two things. First, they wish it had never been changed. Second, 99 per cent of the farmers delivering grain to the elevator say to the agent that it is fine to receive their ticket marked in tonnes, but they would like to know how many bushels were on their load and how many bushels they have sold.

This not only concerns the elevators but the stores. We have moved to the stage where a recent order in council has made metrication in the stores compulsory. Two years ago when it was rumoured that the stores would be forced to go metric, I visited many storekeepers in smaller towns where there is only one store.

Generally speaking, such a store is run by an elderly couple. They live above the store because their income is marginal. They told me that if they had to convert to metric and spend money on new scales, their income could not stand it and they would have to close. We would have a situation where there is a small town and no store. That is fine for young people with a car. They can drive to the nearest city or town where there is a store. However, the senior citizens who live in those towns, and there are many of them, will be faced with great difficulty when buying their groceries.

The grocery stores are being forced to convert to metric, and we do not even manufacture such scales in Canada. They must be imported. The cost to convert the scales in Canada will be $584 million, and that is only an estimate. Who will pay for that conversion? It will be added on to the price of the goods and you, I and other consumers will pay the cost. Our cost of living will increase. This is inflationary. No wonder our cost of living keeps going up.

In addition, money is being spent on advertising. We are going to pay Madame Benoit and Bruno Gerussi $110,000 for appearing on a television advertising campaign. They will show how to cook food using the metric system. I do not think it will taste any different, but that is good money for them. I understand that $1.8 million will be spent to advertise the change to metric in the grocery stores. This is unbelievable.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is not in the chamber. However, when the white paper was tabled in January, the present Minister of Transport was then minister of industry, trade and commerce, and this is what he had to say when the white paper was filed:

Because of the close ties between the United States and Canada in science, technology, industry and commerce, each country has a special interest in the course likely to be followed by the other in respect of metric conversion.

All we on this side of the House have ever asked is that we move in step with the United States, our largest trading partner. It is interesting to note that the Americans are not going metric.

Mr. Smith: Have you bought gas in the United States lately? It is in litres.

Mr. Neil: It is not compulsory there like it is here. It is voluntary. I do not have anything against something being voluntary but when a government, be it federal, provincial or municipal, forces something upon the people against their wishes, it is wrong. That is what is happening here.

The United States is not going metric. In fact, it is disbanding the metric commission in the United States. It is walking its last kilometre. Britain went metric and now it is changing back. New Zealand went metric and it is changing back.

Talk to those in the lumber mills and you will hear from them that the call for metric lumber is minimal. A few days ago I talked with a lumberman who ships a lot of lumber to the European Economic Community which uses the metric system. He said that the lumber he ships is 2×4, 2×8 and 2×6. He does not ship one piece of metric lumber. However, an attempt was made to force the lumber industry to convert to metric. Unbelievable.

The temperature has been given in Celsius for the past six or seven years. Most people now understand Celsius. However, the CBC shows a little fellow paddling a canoe. First it shows 10 degrees, then 9, 7, and so on down to zero when his paddle freezes in the ice. At zero degrees the water freezes, turns to ice and that is the end of the act. I do not know how many hundreds of thousands of dollars is being spent on that advertisement.

I see my time is running out, Mr. Speaker. I only have another two or three minutes. However, I would point out that many members, including myself, have conducted polls of their constituents on various matters such as capital punishment, metrication and so on. It has been found that 98 per cent of those polled are opposed to the metric system. When travelling around my constituency or in my constituency office, the metric issue is raised more often than any other item, with the exception of the budget which caused great consternation among my constituents. The metric issue is always in the mind of constituents. They cannot understand why the government forces it upon them. However, Big Daddy knows what is best.

When you have a Prime Minister who says he approves of martial law, it is not likely he will change his position with regard to the metric system. I urge backbenchers on the government side to give heed to the pleas of their constituents with respect to metrication and urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the minister in charge of metrication to take a second look at it. The minister responsible for the metric system should take a look at it again. I would recommend that the way to do it would be in accordance with my motion which provides for the placing of a moratorium on metrication, the disbanding of the Metric Commission and the setting up of a standing or special committee which could travel across Canada to receive briefs and hear the recommendations of Canadians. It could then come back with its recommendations.

Mr. Smith: It is a backward step.

Mr. Neil: If it is backward, it is backward because the Liberal Party forced metrication on the people of Canada.

The standing committee should have gone across the country initially, before the decision was made. It was not done and now is the time to do it.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to the motion put forward by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) concerning the metric conversion program.

The motion before us suggests that we should replace an effective and efficiently running organization, namely, the Metric Commission of Canada, with another committee which will not only duplicate much of the work already completed by the commission but which will have no responsibility to achieve any concrete results.

The program that we already have in place is progressing very well and is about to come to a successful conclusion in the near future, largely due to the co-ordinating efforts of Metric Commission Canada.

I would like to explain how Metric Commission Canada has already fulfilled and is now fulfilling exactly the role proposed by the hon. member for a standing committee. Since its inception, the commission has assumed the responsibility, and its mandate, of reviewing all aspects of the implementation of the metric system in Canada. From the time that all House leaders supported the white paper on metric conversion in 1970—I would remind hon. members opposite of that—through to the end of 1975 when the investigative phase of the conversion program was essentially completed, the Metric Commission was actively involved in assessing the impact of metric conversion on every sector of the economy in Canada.

I would like to quote from the statement of the former member for Peace River, Mr. Baldwin, made at the time of the tabling of the white paper on metric conversion. He said:

> I agree there must be a continuous and detailed study. We are prepared to co-operate with the government in this regard.

That is what Mr. Baldwin, a Conservative member, had to say at that time. Yet, when the Metric Commission has been and continues to be, engaged in assessments and reviews, there is a motion on the floor to undo the work of the commission.

An integral part of carrying out this assessment was and still is the co-operation and support received from over 2,000 volunteers representing private industry, agriculture, education and consumers at large. These representatives were chosen by their peers through national associations and organizations, large and small, to work on sector committees in order to recommend, guide and monitor individual conversion plans which reflect the best interests of their respective industries.

Speaking of the education sector, I was speaking to a teacher from a junior high school who is a friend of mine in Toronto, and a very reasonable person. She was saying that the students of this generation have picked up metric very easily.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): So did I. Years ago. Where were you brought up?

Mr. Smith: It is shocking that you want to go back to this. These sector committees continually review the progress of conversion in light of changing conditions such as, for example, consumer reaction, trade opportunities and economic and practical experience. This is an ongoing and knowledgeable review by those who will bear the brunt of the costs and the benefits of metric conversion. This continual review, assessment and corrective action are the ongoing business of sector committees, and their worth is efficiently co-ordinated by Metric Commission Canada.

It should also be emphasized that it has taken many years of co-operative effort to acquire the necessary knowledge and expertise to make the multitude of decisions required to set each industry on the least costly and most judicious course of metric conversion. This has been accomplished through volunteer representatives under the co-ordination of the Metric Commission.

One of the great achievements of Metric Commission Canada has been to organize some 100 sector committees, bringing together representatives from large and small businesses alike, from management and labour, to sit down together around one table and to work co-operatively toward a common objective. This accomplishment is not a minor one and it should not be expected that a newly-appointed standing committee could do anything different from what the Metric Commission has already achieved.

As part of its responsibility to co-ordinate metric conversion in Canada, the commission continually monitors the views of Canadians at large and is open to representation by both individuals and organizations.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You cannot believe all that.

Mr. Smith: The commissioners meet on a regular basis in cities across Canada and hold open sessions which are publicly announced well in advance of the meetings. Time is set aside at each meeting to hear representations from interested persons and organizations on whatever aspect of conversion they wish to discuss. These meetings are usually well attended by local citizens and the press and opportunity is provided for anyone who wants to address the commission. I was shocked when I heard the hon. member from Drumheller talk about Hitlerism and this being imposed on the people.

Mr. Taylor: That is what it is.

Mr. Smith: He simply is not familiar with the process that allows the maximum possible input which has been in effect since the beginning of the commission.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is not standing in law.

Mr. Taylor: You are not familiar with what the people think.

Mr. Smith: A further responsibility which has been assigned to Metric Commission Canada is to make available a broad range of information materials both for those who specifically request them and for general use by the public. The co-ordination and dissemination of information is most essential when the implementation of conversion plans are under way. This is one of the key roles of the Commission, and the one which is only just coming to a peak as the implementation phase passes the mid-point of completion. Any disruption in metric conversion will seriously undermine the information program which is progressing not only through Metric Commission Canada but, more important, through the auspices of the various sectors of the Canadian economy as they implement metric conversion.

Another of the key functions of Metric Commission Canada is to make recommendations to the minister regarding the future progress of conversion in Canada. In this regard, the sector committees which have embarked on the metric conversion program, with the guidance and support of the government through Metric Commission Canada, have made it clear that metric conversion cannot be accomplished unilaterally by industries alone and that the government's commitment and leadership are essential to the successful completion of the program. It does not appear logical for the government to terminate the support and co-ordination provided by Metric Commission Canada just as the program is reaching its final stage. Without the co-operation and involvement of all levels of government, metric conversion is likely to be unnecessarily prolonged and the interests of consumers and businesses will suffer accordingly.

Mr. Taylor: Throw it out entirely.

Mr. Smith: It is extremely important to recognize the amount of time, effort and money expended by thousands of people across Canada from every walk of life in support of the decision to proceed with metric conversion in an orderly fashion. This decision was taken to ensure that Canada is in step with the rest of the world.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: This effort is about to come to fruition. I cannot help it if hon. members opposite still prefer to live back in the ice age. That is up to them.

The implementation phase which has been under way in some sectors of the economy since 1975 is close to 60 per cent complete at this time. Over 50 per cent in the 94 sectors of the Canadian economy which have published sector plans expect that their programs will be substantially completed before December, 1984. By this time, metric measures will be used by Canadians for most commercial and legal transactions.

Is this really the time to impose a moratorium on metric conversion?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, absolutely. You should never have started.

Mr. Smith: On the contrary, I suggest that this is the time to strengthen our effort, to realize the benefits and to complete the program. Let us not carry on forever analysing the pros and cons of metric conversion. It has been said the most costly aspect of conversion has been the debate. The expenses incurred over the years on debating the pros and cons, the costs and benefits, and the problems and opportunities would likely have paid for the major portion of the conversion program itself. I do not think that we should add to that expense with another protracted debate.

I would like to illustrate how different sectors of the Canadian economy are adapting to the changeover to metric with a minimum of fuss.

Metric conversion in the oil and gas industry is an example of a conversion that has proceeded relatively smoothly. I know that my hon. friend is very interested in the oil and gas industry. That is one example. This has been brought about by the leadership exhibited by the Canadian Petroleum Association. The Association, realizing the necessity to formulate a well-thought-out plan for the industry, established a committee in 1972 with the responsibility of bringing about an orderly transition to metric conversion on a least cost basis. The committee is truly representative of the industry and comprises individuals knowledgeable of all phases of the industry. In this sector, which is very important to Canada, production and field operations have been essentially metric since January, 1979. Similarly, the mining industry and the chemical industry are now operating to a great extent with metric measurements.

Motor vehicle manufacturers are one of the leaders in Canada's metric conversion program. In this regard, Canada had to keep in step with the United States automotive industry which started the move to metric. Early in the conversion process the industry identified many long-term advantages to going metric and, by careful planning, were able to introduce a progressive conversion, thus minimizing the short-term costs. Some of the advantages foreseen were standardization of designs and components, reduction in the number of sizes of items such as fasteners and the use of one system of measurement throughout worldwide operations.

An example of how a major industry has an impact on other supplying sectors is metric conversion in the rubber and plastics industries. With automobiles and parts designed and manufactured in metric terms, many rubber and plastic components have also been converted to metric. Further progress toward metric conversion is expected as more companies are identifying their products in metric terms in response to the market demands. Metric production is also under way in the reinforced plastics composites, injection moulded parts and many other plastic items in response to market demands.

The rubber and plastics industries have both stated that hard conversion, with product size rationalization, will be pursued wherever possible for long-term benefits, with the ultimate objective of international standardization. Conversion is to be compatible with related domestic and worldwide industries and achieved with minimal cost.

Metric conversion in Canada is not confined to heavy industries. There is considerable progress in areas that relate to consumers.

Metric conversion of specific food products has included prepackaged meats, confectionary items, dairy products, canned and frozen fruits and vegetables, jams and jellies, juices, biscuits, cooking and salad oils, sugar and snack foods.

This conversion in the food industry, a sector of the economy that impacts on every consumer in Canada, has been achieved with a minimum of inconvenience. In many cases the consumer is not even aware that the product he or she is buying has been converted to metric.

It is estimated that 75 per cent of prepackaged grocery products have been converted to metric sizes. Grocery manufacturers have completed this planning on a voluntary basis via 16 industry-sector committees. The benefits for the Canadian consumer resulting from metric conversion have been less proliferation of product sizes and ease in calculating unit prices and in comparing product prices because of uniform product sizes.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Do you really believe that?

Mr. Smith: Sure.

In conclusion, it is evident that the metric conversion program embarked upon by this country over ten years ago is well on its way to completion, due to the tremendous support, co-operation and effort of every sector of the Canadian economy. By delaying the completion of the program any further, not only would we be creating needless confusion and expense but, of more serious consequence, we would be undermining the support and trust of Canadians from coast to coast who have worked so hard to make this program a success.

In light of the many accomplishments achieved to date under the guidance of Metric Commission Canada, which is successfully fulfilling the roles proposed for a new standing committee, I must reject any moratorium on metric conversion, the abolition of Metric Commission Canada or the creation of a new standing committee. Consequently, there appears to be no valid reason for supporting the motion before us.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I fully support the sentiments expressed in the excellent and splendid address given by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). The hon. member for Moose Jaw reflected the thinking of the people. The Metric Commission wrote a lovely speech for the parliamentary secretary. The Metric Commission writes well, and the parliamentary secretary reads well, but surely he does not believe that baloney!

I have never seen anything so totalitarian in this country as the imposition of metric on the people. The people are told they have to have it. It was a dupe from the very beginning. Organizations were told that this has to be. The heads of organizations were talked into believing that the United States and England were changing. The agreement of these organizations was almost forced from them. Talk about something being totalitarian and communist—the way this was done is comparable to the way the German people were duped by Hitler. It is exactly the same. The people of Germany were duped by Hitler. They got involved in Nazism, and millions of people lost their lives. Metrication is as totalitarian as anything the communists in Moscow ever produced. It is as communist as that.

We are living in a democracy. The government is supposed to reflect the thinking of the people, but here the parliamentary secretary, speaking for the Liberal Party, objects to going out to the people and finding out what the people want. The hon. member from Moose Jaw wants a moratorium. He wants to go to the people to find out what the people want, but the Liberals do not. Oh, no, that is too democratic. They cannot go for that.

Metrication is imposed on the people of Canada. The Liberals tell the people they have to have it and that they are going to like it. Then what do they do? They take the people's money and spend it to persuade the people that they have to have metrication. Two excellent artists were paid $110,000 to try to persuade the people of Canada that metric is okay. Metric has already been imposed on us, but now the government has started to try to sell the idea to us. It is trying to make us think it is good. Thousands and perhaps millions of dollars are being spent to persuade the people through TV, radio, newspapers and so forth. The commission is travelling and it has spent more than $50 million. Then the people are asked to exercise restraint and to tighten their belts. The government talks about cutting down government expenses. This is an extravagant government. It says one thing and does another. Members of the government talk about restraint and then spend like wild drunkards spending somebody else's money. That is exactly what this government is doing.

We are told we cannot have two measurements. We have two languages in this country. Do the Liberals say we cannot have two languages? Oh, no; we can have two languages, but we cannot have two measurements. One can be voluntary; the other cannot. The Liberal government is the most inconsistent government I have ever seen or heard of. Hon. members opposite talk about being backward. The parliamentary secretary read from the brief prepared by the Metric Commission that a moratorium would be a backward step. The budget of the Liberals has set the country back fifty years. They do things backwards all the time. Turkeys take one step forward and two steps back. The Liberals occasionally—as in the case of the FCC bill—take one step forward, but then they take about ten steps back. They are completely backwards.

Mr. Smith: Watch your blood pressure now, Gordon.

Mr. Taylor: There is nothing wrong with my blood pressure. I am speaking for the people of Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Right on.

Mr. Taylor: I do not have somebody writing my speeches for me. I am speaking for what the people of Canada want.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: It is about time the Liberals started to learn what the people of Canada want. The Liberals tell the people what is good for them and spend their money.

The hon. member from Moose Jaw spoke about lumber. A trucker told me he hauled a truckload of lumber from British Columbia to the United States. The load was measured in metric, and the Americans told him to take it back. That was a complete waste of money. It is no wonder Reagan is being supported in the United States. He has disbanded the metric commission there, and it is about time we did that here. The Prime Minister (Mr.Trudeau) says we have to have metric, so every Liberal member says we have to have metric.

A few weeks ago the Prime Minister said we would have a constitution unilaterally whether the people of Canada liked it or not, and every Liberal said, "Yes, yes, right on, Pierre". Then a few weeks later when the court ruled against that—the issue having been forced by my party—the Prime Minister said, "Oh, no, now we have to have consensus". So every Liberal changed his tune again and said, "Yes, yes, oui, oui, right on, Pierre, we want consensus". They said they could not go for unilateralism, yet they supported it previously. Now we have Metric Commission bureaucrats telling this country we have to have metric.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Metrocrats.

Mr. Taylor: We do not have to have metric at all. This is a hoax. The people of this country are being duped. The people of Canada are being tricked and deceived. They are being dealt with inconsistently and in a totalitarian way. They are being dealt with in a way even more totalitarian than is the case in Moscow, yet the Liberals stand up and support that. I ask Liberal members to go to any town or village and to talk to the thousands of people who sent letters to the commission when they were given 30 days to demonstrate whether they wanted metric in grocery stores. Thousands of people signed it, but what was the use? The government did not even read the petition. We have not got a democratic government, we have a totalitarian government. If I were sitting on that side of the House I would move. I would not support totalitarianism. I fought against it and I never expected that I would have to fight it again in this House. The government is imposing the metric system on Canada and that is not right, Mr. Speaker. It is completely wrong.

• (1640)

I suggest that we should have a vote in the House today to find out if the people of Canada want a moratorium. The people could tell us whether they want metric at all. I challenge the Liberals not to talk this bill out. For once, let us find out what the people want and reflect it in the legislation. That would make hon. members opposite much happier than the totalitarianism that is being practised now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will try to display more restraint and moderation than the previous speaker in my attempt to show that the metric conversion process really meets the expectations of Canadians in this new decade. It is a pity the hon. member opposite who spoke before me is still living in the thirties, but I want to tell him that this government is legislating for the young people of the future, not for the past. And I might tell him also that people of my age may have some difficulty adjusting to the new system, but there is no point asking younger people to think in terms of pounds and miles and so on. All they know is the metric system. Therefore, as a responsible government, we have to legislate for the present and mainly for the future, for the generation which will take over from us in a few years.

The motion seeks to stop all metric conversion in Canada and to set up a standing committee to reconsider metric conversion. I think that after ten years, the time to set up a committee to find out where we stand is long past. I notice that newspapers, commercials and supermarkets are already advertising in kilograms and in pounds. Since January, all advertising by the big food chains has been in kilograms and pounds so that people can get used to it. Several sectors with representatives on the Metric Commission have pointed out that in their industries, metrication is almost completed. Until now, various sectors of business, industry, education, labour and agriculture have published 94 conversion plans. Today, I rose precisely to speak on behalf of Canadian producers, consumers, etc. Eighty per cent of these sectors are expecting to reach their conversion objective before December 1984. Moreover, the conversion of scales in retail food stores, which is the last major program to affect consumers, is now being implemented in most Canadian cities.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the progress of metric conversion and its importance for the Canadian economy. Here is important news for farmers: the Versatile Manufacturing company, from Winnipeg, which produces agricultural machinery, has just launched on the market a line of farming tractors designed in metric units. Canadian subsidiaries of American corporations, including John Deere, Caterpillar and others, had already done so several years ago. Let's not forget that total Canadian exportations of agricultural products are worth more than $6 billion annually, which represents almost 40 per cent of cash revenues for farmers, and this figure equals our fourth largest field of export to the United States, newsprint. Over 80 per cent of these agricultural products are exported to metric countries.

From now on, newsprint and pulp will be traded at the international level only in metric measures. Heaven knows how important that industry is for us in Canada! The province I have the honour of representing in the House, the province of Quebec, is an important newsprint producer and exporter. The oil and natural gas sectors having been converted to the metric system, almost 50 per cent of our exports, even those destined for the United States will from now on be measured in metric.

Mr. Speaker, let us add to that the ever-increasing share of our exports to the European Economic Community, Japan, Mexico, Brazil, the Soviet Union and China, all countries which converted to the metric system long before we did. It will then be realized how important metrication is. At least two thirds of Canada's $10 billion exports increase in 1980 were shipped to countries other than the United States. It should also be understood that if we want to keep on benefiting from the products we grow or make in Canada, we must export in order to be able to import the products we want.

Since the Canadian government adopted, its metric system policy ten years ago, our exports as well as their percentage expressed in metric units, have increased threefold. Since the beginning of the week, yesterday as well as the day before, we have been discussing Canagrex, a corporation engaged with the export of agricultural products, and if our Canadian exporters and farmers want to trade with the countries I have just mentioned they must go metric. The Task Force on packaging of freight goods recommends and promotes the conversion of standards for palettes, containers and charging units. Ironmonger shops within the iron and steel industry are already metric and the construction industry is proceeding well. Of great significance is the fact that the National Building Code was only published in August 1980.

Certain industrial sectors with the advice and help of the Consumers' Association of Canada and the responsible government departments have requested that deadlines be set and the exclusive use of metric units be compulsory thereafter. This explains, Mr. Speaker, why the Statute Law Metric Conversion Act (Statute Law Amendment 1976) was passed by Parliament and received royal assent in August, 1977. Pursuant to that act, for instance, a modified regulation under the Weights and Measures Act provides that retailers must sell gas by the litre. This conversion was completed by the end of 1980. A similar regulation established pursuant to the Weights and Measures Act provides that furnishings such as wallpapers, carpets, and bedspreads must be advertised and sold only in metric units as of January 1981.

The role of the Metric Commission Canada which will soon celebrate its tenth birthday is to give support to over 16,000 metric system conversion co-ordinators within the industry in the carrying out of their companies' conversion plans according to the sectorial plans and the four-phase investigation, planning, organization and implementation program. The metric labels on prepackaged products like toothpaste or food products such as sugar and salt, were the first visible signs of the metric conversion being in process. Later on, weather bulletins and forecasts started referring to Celsius degrees. Then, in September, 1977, traffic signs began indicating distances in kilometres and speed limits in kilometres per hour, as well as speedometers on new car models.

Many of us, Mr. Speaker, tend to resist any kind of change. Therefore I am glad to note that since metrication has been introduced Canadians' response has been very favourable. More and more people support this program as they get better acquainted with the new metric system and their initial fears are dispelled. The fact is that metrication has been gently phased in. Since the new temperature units were introduced in 1975, every stage of the conversion program has been preceded by a cooling-off period to allow people to become thoroughly familiar with the process until further changes were made. In their daily life, most Canadians will only need four basic metric units, metres for distance, litres for volume, kilograms for mass and Celsius degrees for temperature. The last stage, namely implementation, will soon be 60 per cent completed. Most Canadians are getting used to metric units as various sectors of our economy implement their conversion plans.

For instance, the conversion of scales in the food retail trade is a significant metric development for all Canadians. As regards the general public, it is the most important step in the conversion program to the metric system in Canada. In other areas of our economy that conversion is essential as it is carried out in accordance with the objectives of the metric policy of the Government of Canada.

As I said earlier, food stores will continue with the conversion of their scales into metric units, and this was started on January 4, 1982, in the larger cities in Canada. Sales and promotional activities with respect to individually weighed food products in the stores will be converted over a period of two years according to a carefully conceived and planned schedule. Individual schedules have been prepared by 19 district committees in all areas in Canada, those committees being made up of well over 400 volunteers from the food retail trade, the Canadian Consumers' Association, the scales industry, Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada and the Metric Commission of Canada. They are co-ordinating their efforts in order to convert the scales at the retail store level with a minimum of costs and inconveniences. Regulations on weights and measures as applied by Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada have delineated 100 geographical areas in Canada and established their respective schedules.

Mr. Speaker, may I recall that we have decided upon metrication because we want to promote the export of Canadian products. And we all know that exporting our products means creating jobs for Canadians. We are largely dependent in this country upon the export trade to make a living and to maintaining our standard of living which is envied all around the world. Indeed, 31 cents out of each Canadian dollar come from exports. By converting to the metric system we will join 99.8 per cent of the world countries which have already adopted that system or are in the process of doing so. This should level the barriers which are created in a world where people work under two weights and measures systems and that could prevent Canada from improving its export trade with United States and the rest of the world.

I am speaking, of course, on behalf of Canadian agriculture and I know my friends opposite, those who spoke before me, are staunch supporters of Canadian agriculture. For many years, I had the opportunity to discuss and meet with farmers, and I have yet to meet a farmer from my riding, my area, my province who told me that the new metric system caused him problems. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the farmers I meet, and as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture I meet many of them, teach me a lot about metrication. They know that system by heart, they have no problem in talking about 2,000 metric tons. And as I said at the outset of my speech, on this side of the House we legislate for the present and the future, and the future is our youth.

Of course, I repeat that it might be somewhat difficult for our generation to use the metric system but I urge the hon. members opposite to go and meet young people and ask them if they have any problems with the metric system. Mr. Speaker, that is why we cannot find any valid reason to support this motion.

[English]

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise to speak on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) concerning the metric conversion program.

The motion recommends that tens of thousands of Canadians stop the work they have voluntarily been engaged in for nearly ten years and that a standing committee of the House be set up to restudy why we decided to go metric in 1970. If I may, I would like to describe the nature of our national program in order to illustrate that the time for asking, "why go metric" has really passed, and that this is not a program which the Government of Canada can turn on and off like a tap without serious disruptions occurring in the marketplace.

Mr. Taylor: Let's vote now.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to seek the unanimous consent of the House to extend the sitting hours by one hour in order for the hon. member to complete his remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT POLICIES DEPLORED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the latest figures released by Statistics Canada show that not only were over a third of a million Canadians forced to seek UIC benefits in November, the highest ever in Canadian history, but that we are also now suffering, for the first time since 1958, a drop in year to year full-time employment, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House deplores the continuing failure of the Liberal government to do anything whatsoever about the unemployment and misery caused by its inane mismanagement of the economy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

CHALLENGE TO GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of utmost urgency to every Canadian citizen, particularly those who are unemployed. Considering that there were over 237,000 jobs lost in Ontario alone, from August to December, 1981, and that the figure will undoubtedly double in the coming months; and whereas the MacEachen budget has taken any employment incentive away from small business, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott):

That this House condemns the Liberal government for its lack of an economic program which would stimulate our failing economy and provide incentive to business to create employment opportunity, and, further, challenges the government to present its policies before the Canadian electorate to determine whether Canadians desire that kind of haphazard approach to economic problems.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

QUALITY OF EYE CARE PROVIDED FOR PERSONNEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, whereas the Department of National Defence employs ophthalmic technicians to act as independent practitioners in the servicing of visual needs and eye care of Canadian forces bases; whereas the position of ophthalmic technician was created to assist optometrists but not to replace optometrists; and whereas the practice of ophthalmic technicians acting as independent practitioners is illegal in the private sector and is condemned by the medical profession, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Minister of Defence immediately look into this shameful situation in which thousands of members of our armed forces are receiving eye care from inadequately trained ophthalmic technicians, and immediately rectify this idiotic practice and assign doctors of optometry to care for the visual needs of our servicemen.

VIA RAIL

FUNDS URGED FOR NEW PASSENGER TRAIN EQUIPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter which is urgent and pressing, under Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that 31 people were injured by a derailment of VIA's transcontinental passenger train caused by equipment failure, and since the government is stalling the replacement of these 30-year-old trains, risking the safety of the travelling public, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

S.O. 43

That this House calls upon the government to provide immediately VIA Rail Canada funds to buy new transcontinental passenger train equipment, and that the ordering and delivery of such equipment be given the highest priority.

FINANCE

PAYMENT OF TAXES BY PONY EXPRESS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, "Operation Tax Ride" is a Peterborough based citizens' group which is delivering federal tax revenues to Ottawa by pony express. In this way they are expressing their understandable disgust at the budget and so, I am told, is the horse, at regular intervals along the way. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees):

That this House express its support for Operation Tax Ride, and at the same time encourage the Minister of Finance to withdraw his budget and stop flogging a dead horse.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CALL FOR INVESTIGATION OF FRESH PRODUCE PRICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, eastern Canadian consumers doubt that the recent dramatic increase in the retail price of fresh produce imported from the U.S.A. is due entirely to frost damage. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott):

That the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs launch an immediate investigation into the price structure of imported fresh produce to ensure that Canadian consumers are not being exploited.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIVE RIGHTS

AFFIRMATION OF WILDLIFE AGREEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas on October 27, 1981, after seven years of negotiation, the Inuit people of the eastern Arctic and the Government of Canada signed a wildlife agreement as the first component of a comprehensive land claims settlement, and given the fact that this agreement has been affirmed by the Inuit but not as yet by the government, despite its expressed commitment to the settling of claims, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House call upon the government to demonstrate its commitment to the land claims process by affirming its support for the recent wildlife agreement in principle.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ENTITLEMENT TO RETROACTIVE PENSION PAYMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, some 4,000 veterans who receive under 5 per cent disability pensions have never been informed that they are eligible for a yearly consumer price index increase on a little known payment allotment. In many cases veterans are unaware that they may be eligible for over $1,000 in back pay. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House instruct the Minister of Veterans Affairs to inform all veterans in this category immediately of their potential entitlement, to make payments to veterans retroactively and to give veterans their yearly increases automatically in the future.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

PIPELINES

FAIR COMPENSATION URGED FOR RANCHER/LANDOWNERS IN ALBERTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise as a surrogate for the rancher/landowners in the Rocky Mountain House area in Alberta whose land value and land use are being threatened by the construction of the Alaska gas pipeline. Cash compensation is inadequate, there is an absence of safeguards and guarantees, especially in the third party liability, and the deck is stacked against the farmer. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources intervene immediately and stop all proposals for construction until Bill C-60 is proclaimed or steps taken by the Northern Pipeline Agency to ensure that landowners are compensated fairly and are given adequate guarantees that they will experience minimal upheaval or inconvenience to their livelihood.

HOUSING

HOMES BUILT ON RADIOACTIVE SOIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that 32 home owners in the Malvern subdivision of Scarborough have homes built on radioactive soil, and the federal government's attempt to move the soil to Camp Borden has been thwarted by court action, and because the owners cannot find buyers for these homes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House instruct the minister of housing to have CMHC purchase these contaminated homes at fair market value so the families can afford to move to other locations.

CANADA POST

SPECIAL POSTAL RATE SOUGHT FOR CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the charitable organizations of Canada are frustrated, discouraged, and sad. The laws of Canada require that their overhead must not be over 20 per cent of their receipted revenue. The postage increase under the new rates will cause an increase of some 76 per cent. The dismal part of the story is the suffering of the people who depend on these agencies, if they have to fold. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the House urges the government to show a little heart and provide a special rate or reduce the postal rate for charitable organizations to what it was before the Canadian postal corporation got this brainwave to increase the postal rates without any consideration of their disastrous results.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND MEDICAL CARE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On Friday my colleague from Hillsborough put a question to the Minister of Finance with regard to the recent story in the Toronto Star to the effect that the spending cuts by the federal government in post-secondary education and medical care were now going to amount to a net $4.5 billion. On Friday the minister said that he could not confirm those figures. Has his department now let him in on the secret, and can he confirm that figure today?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the first point to make is that I am not proposing any reductions in our support for post-secondary education or medical health care.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: That has not been our proposition in the past, or at the present time.

What I have put before the provinces is the intention of the federal government to eliminate the revenue guarantee which even the premiers in their communiqué last summer did not include as part of the federal support for medical care and post-secondary education.

I would draw the attention of my hon. friend to the budget paper entitled "Fiscal Arrangements in the Eighties", in which it is stated that the expenditure plan presented in last year's budget provided for savings and transfers to provinces and territories of about $500 million in 1982-83 and $1 billion in 1983-84 and subsequent years. There is no question that we are attempting to achieve savings in the transfers through the elimination of the revenue guarantee.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the minister has failed, for the second time, to answer the question. The question was if the figure mentioned in the Toronto Star article on Friday, of $4.5 billion net cut, was an accurate figure, and would he be prepared to confirm that figure today. For the purpose of my supplementary question I will assume that it was of that order.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FIGURES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In the original estimate in the budget the minister referred to a net cut of $1.9 billion. Presumably that was the maximum amount of net cut that he felt the provinces could stand without cutting services in post-secondary education and medical health. That figure has now been increased, first by a mistake on the minister's part to $2.6 billion, then to $4.5 billion as a result of the announcement on Friday.

Since the provinces cannot count on the figures which the minister or his department put out to the public, would he be prepared to enter into a new form of revenue guarantee which would limit the net cutbacks by the federal government in these two very important areas of spending to $1.9 billion, because the provinces cannot count on the figures that the minister has been throwing around in the past two weeks?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we have had several meetings with the provinces and the provincial ministers of finance. They have not been left in any doubt about the extent of the savings that the Government of Canada intends to achieve. These were discussed very intensively in the meeting which I had with the ministers of finance in Ottawa not very long ago. They have all the up-to-date figures.

Mr. Clark: Why do you not give us the up-to-date figures?

Mr. MacEachen: As I have stated to the hon. member, look at the budget paper entitled "Fiscal Arrangements in the Eighties" and he will find that I talk about a $500 million saving in 1982-83 and a $1 billion saving in 1983-84 and subsequent years. I announced subsequently that it was the intention of the government to eliminate the revenue guarantee. That is the total saving that is being sought in the EPF transfers. I would tell the hon. member that, despite the cut of the revenue guarantee, the total system of transfers will increase on an annual basis to the provinces by about 12 per cent per year. I believe that is a creditable rate of increase in view of the restraint that is being imposed upon the Government of Canada.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, twice the minister has referred to the budget papers, but because of mistakes 11 days after the budget, and because of new figures which came out last week, those budget papers are completely out of date.

REQUEST THAT NATIONAL CONFERENCES BE HELD ON MEDICAL CARE AND POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, let me approach this from another angle. It seems that the cart is being put before the horse. The minister is proposing to cut spending in two very important areas. He is prepared to risk major cutbacks in medical care and post-secondary education. Rather than rush into this on a unilateral basis and force spending cuts and service cuts on the provinces, would the minister and the government consider entering into two or three national conferences on health and post-secondary education so that we can set out the national objectives of the various levels of government in these two important areas before we cut spending, and before we cause closures of hospitals and cutbacks in post-secondary education?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, let me repeat once again the statement that there are no cuts proposed in the federal support for medicare or post-secondary education. For example, shortly after the budget papers were released, the president of the Canadian Medical Association stated at the association's annual meeting in Halifax that it would be wrong to claim that the budget would bring about any reduction in support for medical care. He said that would be wrong, and it is wrong. The same is true about post-secondary education.

The hon. member has asked for conferences. It has been laid out that it is the intention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to conduct consultations with provinces on program conditions, and it is also laid out that the Secretary of State will conduct discussions with the provinces in order to see how national objectives could best be met in that field.

Mr. Wilson: Why not do that first?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member suggests that these discussions ought to take place first. There is no logic to that because the proposed savings to the provinces will not affect in any way whatsoever our support either for medical care or post-secondary education, and that is widely understood by the client groups in the country.

FINANCE

TAXPAYER STATISTICS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance, who says there will be no cuts, just that there will be $4.5 billion less for the provinces to use for health and education services.

Let me refer to a statement the minister made in this House. It has to do with the reliability of this minister of hocus-pocus, the minister of Rubik's cube, and the reliability of his figures.

An hon. Member: Stick to your lines, Joe.

Mr. Clark: On January 26 the minister stated in this House:

> Twelve million Canadians will have less taxes to pay, about 3.5 million will pay the same amount and about 800,000 will pay more taxes. These are the facts.

By those figures the minister is claiming that 16.1 million Canadians will pay 1982 personal income taxes. The figures of the Department of National Revenue for the last year for which figures are available, 1980, indicate that in that year fewer than ten million Canadians paid federal tax.

My question to the minister flows from the fact that the minister is now claiming that some six million Canadians who did not pay federal tax in 1980 will be paying federal tax as a result of his budget. Will he tell us how he arranged that?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, all the information with respect to the tax cuts are contained in the budget papers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I am very pleased that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has raised again the question of tax relief and tax benefits. Last Friday he alleged that it was unjustified for the government—

● (1425)

Mr. Crosbie: Watch out, Pinnochio!

Mr. MacEachen: —to claim any credit for the retention of indexation. I had stated in the budget speech, and subsequently, that the equivalent of $3 billion worth of tax relief had been distributed to Canadians through the retention of indexation.

Mr. Crosbie: Malarkey!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. Leader of the Opposition contested that rather violently. I should like to refer him to the ad on indexation which his party put out before the October budget. This is addressed to the taxpayers of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Order. Order.

Mr. Crosbie: You are scraping the bottom of the barrel. Why don't you read the whole thing?

Mr. MacEachen: It says that in 1980 if your income was $15,000 per year you would have to pay $217 more income tax with de-indexing. It goes on to talk about $25,000, $35,000, $50,000—

Mr. Crosbie: Order!

Mr. MacEachen: —showing the amounts that taxpayers would have to pay in addition, in the absence of indexation. The hon. member goes on, or the ad goes on to say that that is how much more you would pay. I am telling him that the budget that was produced on November 12 saved the taxpayer these amounts, which the hon. member said would be lost.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I guess the minister is saying, "If you ask me a question this week I will give you an answer nobody can believe next week."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: To six million Canadians he is saying, "You didn't pay any tax before and, as a result of my budget, you will pay tax, and that is a cut, folks." That is what the Minister of Finance says.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NUMBER OF TAXPAYERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me ask the innocent lamb who is the Minister of National Revenue whether he agrees with his colleague, the Minister of Finance, that as a result of this budget, six million Canadians who were not paying taxes in 1980 will be paying taxes in 1982?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has referred to Rubik's cube. He would know, because of course he is just a plain old square!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Bring the hook.

Mr. Rompkey: The Minister of Finance has laid out clearly the savings to Canadians as a result of this budget—not simply the indexation but the change in the tax structure, the increase in the child tax credit, the reduction in unemployment insurance premiums, and all these things which add up to savings for Canadians. I would say to Canadians that, instead of listening to the hocus-pocus that is tried on that side of the House, they should look at their pay cheques at the end of the month and they will see the reductions.

TAXPAYERS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, better a plain old square than a government whose figures and whose word cannot be believed by any Canadian in this land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: If the minister is unwilling to explain those six million new Canadian taxpayers as a result of his government's budget, perhaps I can try him out province by province. Let us start with Newfoundland. The minister has said that there will be a reduction in taxes for 250,000 people in Newfoundland. That is what he said. In 1980 in Newfoundland fewer than 200,000 paid federal tax. Will the Minister of National Revenue explain what his colleague has done to impose on 50,000

Newfoundlanders who were not paying tax in 1980, tax this year, as a result of the Liberal government's budget? Could he explain that to us?

Mr. Nielsen: By your own figures.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, a representative of a knowledgeable chartered accountant's firm in St. John's says this budget is better for Newfoundland than any other part of the country. The fact is that by far the majority of people will see their incomes improved as a result of the budget. I say to the right hon. gentleman again that all people have to do—

● (1430)

Mr. Epp: —is look at their pay cheques!

Mr. Rompkey: —is look at their pay cheques at the end of the month, and not worry about figures.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

FIRST MINISTER'S CONFERENCE—POLICY FOLLOWED BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the First Ministers' Conference which opens tomorrow. It is very clear that a majority of provincial premiers are deeply concerned about unemployment and the general increase in job insecurity throughout the country. Considering that the minister has said throughout last week that he has no intention of changing his basic monetary and fiscal approach on the one hand, but on the other hand that he plans to listen and be open-minded to what the premiers have to say, does the Government of Canada plan to listen seriously to what the premiers have to say about unemployment programs? Specifically, is the government prepared to change its mind about its monetary and fiscal approach which has produced more than one million unemployed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I said on Friday that I would be interested to hear whether the premiers had an alternative to the current economic policy followed by the government. The policy now being followed is based upon the necessity of reducing inflationary pressures in the economy which are the main obstacles to improved job creation and improved growth in the country. Unless we have a better control of the inflation rate, I believe that we will have no possibility of getting the jobs we require in the future. I believe it is worth taking the necessary relatively short-term measures which are required in order to build a strong economy for the future; that is my approach. If the premiers can bring forward a better alternative which is convincing, of course the government is quite prepared to examine it with great interest and attention.

Mr. Broadbent: But presumably unwilling to change its monetary and fiscal approach. That was the question I asked.

MINISTER'S APPROACH TO UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering the approach currently pursued by the Government of Canada, the approach which has produced ten million unemployed in the United States under Ronald Reagan and has now produced three million unemployed, and rising, in Great Britain under Margaret Thatcher, is the Minister of Finance saying to the people of Canada that he is prepared to continue with this high interest rate policy even if it leads to this abysmal direction for the people of Canada? Does the minister really have in mind constant levels of unemployment? If so, will he say it openly to the people of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, that is not what I have in mind. I have in mind lower unemployment rates. The objective is to get unemployment down. The hon. member must know the experience has been that countries with lower rates of inflation have lower rates of unemployment. It is no accident that countries such as Japan, Switzerland, and West Germany, with relatively low rates of inflation, have the lowest rates of unemployment. That is a clear link. Until we break the inflation spiral, the prospect of obtaining jobs as quickly as we would like does not seem to be very close. This is what I have in mind.

NEWSPAPER INTERVIEW OF MINISTER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, countries like Japan and Switzerland particularly and persistently have pursued lower interest rate policies. As the minister well knows, the government of France today has an officially established low interest rate policy because it is concerned about both inflation and unemployment. The Canadian government has not produced results on either side of the economic ledger, either in terms of inflation or unemployment. The government has been an unmitigated disaster, and every Canadian knows it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I see the minister smiling; it reflects his deep concern. In an interview published in Le Devoir this morning the minister said, "Everyone has to accept some change in his life." What does the minister explicitly mean by this? Does he mean collecting an unemployment insurance cheque instead of a pay cheque? Does he mean foreclosure on a home instead of the security of a home? Does he mean no job at the end of the academic year instead of a job with a BA.? If this is what the minister means by change, why is he not at least honest like Margaret Thatcher and have the courage to put things out in the open, instead of using weasel words like "some change" in their lives?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member talks about a high interest rate policy as if it were something separate from the high inflation we are experiencing. They are both one and the same. It is evident that it will be impossible to make substantial progress in reducing interest rates anywhere, unless the rate of inflation comes down. The hon. member knows perfectly well. For example, he quoted in the House at least once or twice the new socialist government in France. He knows what has happened there. It attempted to stimulate the economy. Its prices went up. It brought in controls but, lo and behold, while all this was happening unemployment was rising as well, not going down. He has it a bit mixed up.

Mr. Broadbent: Not as a result of those programs, and the minister knows it.

THE ADMINISTRATION

COMPLIANCE WITH CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES BY MINISTER OF STATE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On September 22 the Prime Minister appointed Senator Jack Austin to the ministry. The Assistant Deputy Registrar General confirmed this morning that Senator Austin has not yet complied with the conflict of interest guidelines by filing the required declarations with the Conflict of Interest Public Registry. In view of the fact that Senator Austin has responsibility for the Canadian Development Corporation, a Crown corporation investing in private commercial concerns across the country, it is particularly important that compliance be made forthwith. Has the Prime Minister checked with Senator Austin and requested that he in fact comply with the conflict guidelines? Will he give the House his undertaking, if Senator Austin does not comply with them, that he will suspend him from his responsibility until compliance has taken place?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sure I do not have to give that assurance. The Senator will comply, as all other ministers in cabinet, with the guidelines.

Some hon. Members: When?

Mr. Trudeau: As fast as the ministers on the other side took to comply with the guidelines. Sometimes it takes a few months—

Mr. Clark: Pass an order in council to protect him.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition does not want to be reminded that his own ministers took quite a few months to comply with the guidelines.

INQUIRY AT TIME OF APPOINTMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I understand that Senator Austin is a personal friend and confidant of the Prime Minister. My question is simple. Did the Prime Minister satisfy himself, when he appointed him responsible for the Canadian Development Corporation, that there was no outstanding conflict of interest in the holdings of Senator Austin which might affect the performance of his duties in that particular responsibility?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sure Senator Austin, like all my other ministers, is a friend, but I do not know what the hon. member means by "confidant".

Mr. Paproski: It is the same as comrade.

CRIMINAL CODE

QUERY RESPECTING AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. A Gallup poll published on the weekend indicated that one Canadian in four, or about six million of our citizens, were victims of Criminal Code offences last year. Will the minister tell us what changes in the Criminal Code he is contemplating to try to protect Canadians, their homes and apartments, more effectively, given the fact that between a third and a quarter of these crimes consisted of attempted break-ins or actual break-ins? Will he tell us, for instance, whether he favours less bail for repeat offenders, stiffer sentences for career criminals, and a reform of our parole laws?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, to date we have tabled a number of bills concerning the Criminal Code, and other bills are being prepared. Obviously, the problem raised by the hon. member is not due to the Criminal Code itself. The offences he mentioned are prohibited under the Code, and it is up to the courts to hand down sentences. As for the need to reform our parole laws, I feel that the parole system in Canada is working quite satisfactorily at the present time.

USE OF DRUG PARAPHERNALIA

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, in other words, the minister thinks the system is working beautifully and no changes need be made.

The minister is well aware that many of the people involved in break-ins do so to steal property in order to maintain their hard drug habit.

An hon. Member: Name one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kilgour: The minister is aware, because he was informed by my colleague from Saskatoon West, that drug paraphernalia are now sold legally in every city in the country. I am told by the police in Edmonton that 30 stores alone sell paraphernalia. Will the minister tell us whether or not he plans to bring in any legislation to ban the use of drug paraphernalia which allow people to consume drugs ranging from heroin to cocaine to marijuana? Don't say you don't know about it because my friend told you about it last summer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I will take note of the hon. member's question. Crimes are committed in society, and we have a criminal code to take care of them. If the hon. member has a specific complaint, he can report it to the police who can look into it.

I do not think the problem is because of lack of legislation. However, if it is, we will undoubtedly present some legislation to the House. There are already some bills before the House, but it is very hard to get them passed.

Mr. Nielsen: You have not seen them.

GARRISON DIVERSION

COURT PROCEEDINGS IN UNITED STATES—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Late last week the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, in a rather remarkable turn around, made a ruling that will allow construction to resume this spring on the Garrison diversion project in North Dakota. Given that it is the mandate of the federal government to protect Manitoba's interests in this international matter, can the minister tell this House what steps his department took during last week's court proceedings to ensure that Manitoba's concerns were represented? In addition, will he tell us what specific future action he plans?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it would certainly not be appropriate for us to appear in a U.S. court proceeding. But I can tell the hon. member that we accept the responsibility of carrying forward interests not only of Manitoba but of all parts of Canada. We will indeed continue to make the kinds of representations that we have very actively made in the past to protect the interests of the citizens of Manitoba and of all Canada.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION BE SENT TO WASHINGTON

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I might point out to him that his department is doing such a good job that on Friday afternoon it had no idea of what had gone on in a Washington court late last week.

Obviously the time has come for a different approach. It is quite clear now that normal diplomatic procedures have failed to this point to protect the Manitoba environment from the threat posed by the Garrison project. Will the minister now entertain a suggestion made on numerous occasions by members on this side of the House to send an all-party delegation to Washington so that we might put our case more effectively to our American counterparts?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we have certainly no objection in principle to having Canadian parliamentarians deal with American Congressmen on this issue. Indeed, we have encouraged that. However, there are all kinds of assumptions in the hon. member's question which cannot be accepted.

We have a treaty with the United States in which we are assured that the kind of interference that the hon. gentleman fears will not take place. We are negotiating not in a vacuum but on the basis of agreements and understandings which have taken place over the years. Our position is indeed a strong one, and it is not to be judged on whether we participate in every judicial dog fight in the United States.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ENTITLEMENT TO RETROACTIVE PENSION PAYMENTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs. Close to 4,000 veterans receiving less than 5 per cent disability pension have never been informed that they are eligible for a yearly consumer price index increase on a little known final payment allotment. In some cases veterans are unaware that they may be eligible for over $1,000 in back pay. Will the minister assure this House that he will have the Minister of Veterans Affairs inform all eligible veterans of this hidden money and have their payments made retroactive? In addition, will he ensure that in the future the veterans will be given their yearly increase automatically?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I note the hon. member's question. I can assure him that this government has been very fair with veterans in past years. This government intends to continue its policy of giving veterans what is their due. I will convey the hon. member's question to our able Minister of Veterans Affairs. I am sure the hon. member will again see that our veterans, as usual, are treated very fairly.

REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF BULLETIN

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, as veterans and their families are also being affected by Resolution 53 of the crazy budget, and as this pension information is being suppressed from them, will the minister assure the House that he will have the Minister of Veterans Affairs issue an immediate bulletin to inform the veterans that a procedure will be put into effect to give them their back pension as soon as possible?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as hon. members know, I am very much concerned with our veterans. The question asked by the hon. member is a little puzzling to me. On Thursday, January 28, 1982, the Minister of Finance said in this House the following:

> Of course there is no provision whatsoever in the budget that would affect the current status of veterans.

The word of the Minister of Finance is enough for me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie (St. John's West): You poor fool.

METRIC CONVERSION

FORCED IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is now responsible for the Metric Commission, which is a total shambles. Over a year ago the minister informed this House, as reported on page 6191 of Hansard in answer to my question, that he had no intention of locking up stores, putting bands around cash registers, or of prohibiting stores from doing business for refusing to use the metric system.

At this time of the minister's debut as minister responsible for the Metric Commission, would he assure this House that he is still of the same opinion as he was last year, in other words, that there will be no confiscation or seizure of equipment, that merchants will not be fined or forced to use the metric system against their will, and that the use of imperial measurement will not be made illegal? Will the minister confirm that?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I believe that all members of this House are law-abiding citizens and that they should assume the same law applies to all Canadians. They will abide by the law in their daily business. I am surprised, Madam Speaker, that the hon. member who asked me this question has apparently urged Canadians to disobey the law. I do not know whether it is true or not, but if it is, I feel it is something that cannot be tolerated on the part of a member of this House.

[English]

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, those words came from the minister who feels the business community can do without a post office. I wish he would feel they could do without the Metric Commission as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S VIEWS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Over a year ago the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism went on record with remarks that he is now refuting.

In The Toronto Sun of January 15 it is favourably reported that Global TV news has started giving the temperature in Fahrenheit, the measurement of wind speed in miles per hour, and the measurement of snowfall in inches.

In the Kingston Whig-Standard for January 11 the editor in chief writes:

> There is no difference in principle between metric law and martial law.

In view of the Prime Minister's apparent endorsement of bureaucrats in the newsrooms of the nation, is compulsory metric conversion one more aspect of his determination as Prime Minister to control all of Canadian life from Ottawa, even to the extent of controlling the way people think about measurements? We on this side are in favour of the choice of the people by the will of the people. I believe this principle of freedom—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am prepared to nominate the author of that question as the prize winner in fiction for this year.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON CANADIANIZATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy. I would like him to react, so to speak, on a question dealing with public ownership in the petroleum industry. His parliamentary secretary told a recent meeting of the Committee for the Canadianization of the Petroleum Industry, and I quote:

> The federal government will press on with plans to make the petroleum industry more Canadian, but a takeover of an oil giant is not on the immediate agenda.

Our then ambassador to the United States, Peter Towe, told a group of American businessmen last March that it was not the intention of the Government of Canada to put Petro-Canada in a predominant position in the petroleum industry.

Do these statements accurately reflect the policy of the Government of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows perfectly well that if negotiations were in fact going on concerning a possible takeover by Petro-Canada of another company, such negotiations would not be the subject of speculation on my part nor on the part of anyone else. I can confirm to my hon. colleague that at the present time, I am not aware of any negotiations between Petro-Canada and another company regarding a takeover at the present time.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONTINUE PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Well, these statements clearly say the government is not going any further. I put to the minister that the Committee to Canadianize said at the end of their conference that, first, the goal of Canadian ownership must be increased to at least 75 per cent by 1985, with Petro-Canada the largest oil company; secondly, the federal government should acquire one of the four major foreign-controlled companies.

In view of the Gallup poll that same committee took, where 55 per cent said yes and only 28 per cent said no to the takeover of one of the big four, and 64 per cent said yes and only 23 per cent said no to 75 per cent Canadian ownership by 1985, why does the government reject the advice of that committee, the advice we have been giving in this House, and apparently, according to these polls, the views of Canadians? Why does the government not continue Canadianization, with public ownership being predominant?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we are fully committed to the Canadianization of the oil and gas industry. The record for the last year indicates that quite clearly. It is also our intention that PetroCan become as large if not larger than any other multinational operating in Canada. We are committed to achieving this objective.

We are also committed to achieving at least 50 per cent Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry by 1990, and I am happy that the Committee for Canadianization were asking for exactly that prior to the NEP. Now they want to go even further, now that we have accepted their initial proposal, and that is fine. There will always be those who want to go further and faster, and that is fine with us. We have succeeded in reducing foreign ownership by 6 per cent in the space of one year, and I hope we will be able to maintain that momentum.

AIRPORTS

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS OF EXPANSION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Does he confirm stories like these in the media—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): —"Pepin Rejects Compensation in Airport Growth"? Has he flatly rejected compensation for victims of airport expansion, no matter how special or unique the circumstances, such as at Hamilton Civic Airport?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, every member of the House appears to be eager to see the airport in his riding expand. That is the general proposition I get every day.

Mr. Crosbie: Like Mirabel.

Mr. Pepin: Very often the government is accommodating. However, if every time that happens the government had to compensate everyone around for prejudice or annoyance suffered, I dare say the expenditures would be tremendous and perhaps we could not build any more airports. So this is why as a general proposition—and the government is not obligated to do it under the law—there has been no compensation to surrounding residents when an airport is expanded. Hence the responsibility of local governments to see to proper zoning in the area surrounding airports.

RECOMMENDATION MADE BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, the issue here comes down to the unique situation we face at the Hamilton Civic Airport. I find it incredible that the minister is so insensitive to the parliamentary process, since an all-party standing committee of this House unanimously recommended in a report tabled in this House December 17 that there should be compensation in special circumstances. Is the minister then saying that all the time and trouble that committee went to in going to Mount Hope to listen to complaints and concerns was just a waste of time? Is he turning his back on those people?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker. What the committee has done is to attract attention to the problem. Unfortunately I cannot agree with the proposed recommendation. My hon. friend, by asking the question today, accentuates the importance of municipal and provincial governments seeing to the proper zoning of areas surrounding airports. I thank my hon. friend for attracting attention to that point.

POSSIBLE INVESTMENT BY ARAB NATIONS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I would welcome him back to Canada. During his Mid-East trip the minister apparently spent a great deal of time and effort coaxing the Arab nations he visited to invest some of their petro-dollars in Canadian energy projects. How is this effort to bring in Middle East petro-dollars going to help Canadianize the oil and gas industry?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as I indicated a moment ago, our program is quite clear. We want to achieve at least 50 per cent Canadianization in the future. That still leaves 49 or 50 per cent foreign ownership. There will certainly be growth in the industry, and our position has not been to refuse the infusion of new foreign money for exploration and expansion of this industry. There is no contradiction between the two.

QUERY RESPECTING CANADIAN INVESTMENT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the NEP caused the departure from Canada of, it is estimated, anywhere from $7 billion to $17 billion. Pitfield MacKay Ross said there was "unprecedented departure of Canadian capital" as a result of the NEP. The last budget contained several provisions which, by accident or design, discouraged investment by Canadians in Canada.

Why are Middle East petro-dollars preferable to Canadian dollars for investment in the Canadian oil and gas industry?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The least I would say, Madam Speaker, is that the hon. member certainly has a funny way of reading statistics. As indicated, Canadian ownership in the oil and gas industry increased by 6 per cent last year; it did not go down, it increased. It is our intention to achieve at least 50 per cent ownership well within this decade, and in spite of the opposition to and downgrading of this process by the hon. member's party, we are going to press ahead with this objective.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LOTTERIES

USE OF UNCLAIMED LOTO CANADA WINNINGS

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State, who is also responsible for Loto Canada. Would he inform the House whether the unclaimed prize money, which was to be returned to the Régie des Installations Olympiques and to the provincial lottery association, is going to be used to set up the minister's new sports pool?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is talking about two different subjects. The unclaimed Loto Canada funds have been held back as a consequence of some pending lawsuits against Loto Canada which arise as a result of the manner in which the government, of which he was a member, suddenly stopped Loto Canada without notice to the wholesalers, resulting in a grievance amongst them.

With respect to the funds for the sports pool, they will be advanced by Treasury Board to the new corporation which will run the sports pool once the legislation is approved by Parliament.

FUNDING FOR ALBERTA VENTURES

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): My supplementary question is very simple. Since the minister has now received $45 million from the provinces with regard to the lotteries, why has he not given the University Games in Edmonton their share of the money, the first draw, and why has he not given Calgary some of the moneys which it requires for capital expenditures?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, when I hear a question as confused as the one just put by the hon. member, and as lacking in fact, I can recognize why he got into trouble with Loto Canada and gave it up.

Mr. Paproski: Just answer the question.

Mr. Clark: Answer the question.

Mr. Regan: I want to say, in relation to the student games, which are to be held in Edmonton, that we in the Government of Canada have indicated that we will provide $3.1 million out of tax revenues.

Mr. Paproski: That is not true.

Mr. Regan: Depending on the availability of sports funds, approximately another $2.1 million will be provided from sports pool funds. In addition to that, the hon. member should well remember that the Government of Canada is assuming a $20 million responsibility for indirect costs incurred as a consequence of the games being held. I think the hon. member should recognize, in view of what a newspaper has quoted him as saying on this subject yesterday, that we did not want to give better support because it was Alberta—

Mr. Paproski: I didn't say anything.

Mr. Regan: —that I have devoted more time and energy to the support of the Olympics for Calgary in 1988 than to any other single project during the course of my years in this responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: You should have written the budget.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKENZIE—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I wish to give notice of a question of privilege relating to an answer I received today from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne). He made the comment that veterans' pensions will not be affected by the budget. That is totally misleading. I would like to study his remarks in detail in Hansard and pursue this matter further tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member should know that that was not a question of privilege. The fact that an hon. member is not satisfied with an answer given to him in the House does not constitute a question of privilege.

MR. I. LOBANOV

Question No. 1,551—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 31, which shows that Mr. I. Lobanov, Soviet diplomat visited Gravenhurst, Ontario eight times in the last year and a half for which figures are available, has the Department of External Affairs or the RCMP investigated the purpose of these trips and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, what was the purpose, in each case?

2. To the knowledge of the department or the RCMP, did the Soviet diplomat use the excuse that he was visiting the former home of Norman Bethune and to the knowledge of the government is it customary for diplomats of the U.S.S.R. to visit a location that is often referred to as the Chinese Communist shrine?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. (a) and (b) It is not in the public interest to divulge whether or not such trips are investigated.

2. It is not in the public interest to divulge whether or not the reasons for such trips are known or whether it is customary for diplomats of the U.S.S.R. to visit a particular location.

MR. V.I. MIKHEEV

Question No. 1,552—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 31, which shows that Mr. V. I. Mikheev, Soviet diplomat visited Gravenhurst, Ontario seven times in the last year and a half for which figures are available, has the Department of External Affairs or the RCMP investigated the purpose of these trips and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, what was the purpose?

2. To the knowledge of the department or the RCMP, did the Soviet diplomat use the excuse that he was visiting the former home of Norman Bethune and to the knowledge of the government is it customary for diplomats of the U.S.S.R. to visit a location that is often referred to as the Chinese Communist shrine?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. (a) and (b) It is not in the public interest to divulge whether or not such trips are investigated.

TRAVEL OF SOVIET DIPLOMATS OUTSIDE NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Question No. 1,558—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 31 which states in part, that the Department of External Affairs only maintains records of travel movements on Soviet diplomats outside the National Capital region for the calendar year prior to the current year, does any branch of the government maintain records for a longer period of time?

2. Does the RCMP keep such records and, if so (a) for what length of time (b) does the Department of External Affairs furnish the RCMP with such information as it becomes available?

3. What are all of the dates, names and points of destination of Soviet diplomats that may be known by the government prior to the list furnished in the answer?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. It is not in the public interest to divulge whether or not such records are maintained for a longer period of time.

2. It is not in the public interest to divulge (a) whether or not such records are kept, nor is it in the public interest to divulge (b) whether or not the Department of External Affairs furnishes the RCMP with such information.

3. It is not in the public interest to divulge whether or not the RCMP maintains such records.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 2,388—Mr. Herbert:

1. In each of the past three years, what were the gross sales in (a) Canada (b) other countries of films supported by the Canadian Film Development Corporation?

2. For the same years, what percentage of total gross sales was the investment by the corporation in the feature film industry?

3. What is the estimated amount paid for the importation of films from other countries?

4. What is the percentage of foreign ownership in the companies responsible for film distribution in Canada?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows:

1. The CFDC is not directly involved in the distribution in Canada or abroad of films in which the corporation has participated financially, through loans to producers or equity investment, in production. In keeping with the objects and powers of its act, the corporation advises producers on distribution to help the Canadian industry to develop its own capacity to market its product. Under a program established in April, 1981, the CFDC does provide financial assistance to Canadian independent distributors through short-term loans and investments to be used in the theatrical launch in Canada of a Canadian film.

In response to the question, the corporation has only recently begun to gather information from independent Canadian producers on the success of Canadian films in theatrical distribution in Canada and in the United States. This information is based on gross box office receipts for all Canadian films and does not include television sales. Information is not available on foreign markets except for the United States.

In answer to parts (a) and (b), therefore, the CFDC is able to provide the following:

	Number of new Canadian feature films released for theatrical distribution in Canada		Gross box office receipts ($000)
Year	Total	Number produced with CFDC participation	Canada	U.S.A.
1980-81	27	18	$12,000	$46,000*
1979-80	16	9	10,000	45,000
1978-79	16	11	6,500	Not available

*Note: 15 new Canadian feature films were licensed for theatrical distribution in the United States in 1980-81. Data on the number of new productions licensed in previous years is not available.

It should be noted that, due to the necessary delay of 18 to 24 months between the initial production of a feature film and its actual release in the theatrical market, the receipts indicated above do not reflect the performance of feature films produced in that year.

2. The CFDC financial participation in production of Canadian films, both loans and investments, in total and as a percentage, based on information available to the CFDC on gross box office receipts earned by Canadian films in Canada and the U.S. in the corresponding year is:

Year	Investments by CFDC	Loans to producers by CFDC	Per cent of gross box office receipts (as in 1 above)
1980-81	$ 1,200,000	$ 5,900,000	12.24
1979-80	2,200,000	8,400,000	19.27
1978-79	2,300,000	3,300,000	86.15*

*Based on Canadian gross box office receipts only.

3. Based on most recent Statistics Canada publication (1979), $136,188,324 in film rentals and royalties was paid to non-Canadian producers for films imported into Canada. Other importation costs are not calculable.

4. According to Statistics Canada's most recent published figures, 92 distribution companies were operating in Canada in 1979. Of these, nine were classified within the revenue size group of $5,000,000 or more, and together reported revenues representing 71 per cent of the $210,492,000 in total Canadian revenues from the sale or rental of films and videotape. Though ownership is not distinguished within Statistics Canada's published data, it can be assumed that among these nine companies are the six foreign-owned subsidiaries of the major American distribution companies. Thus, while the percentage of foreign ownership does not appear to be very high in terms of number of distribution companies, the foreign-owned establishments account for a superior portion of total Canadian revenues.

NAC—PURCHASES OF FLOWERS

Question No. 2,773—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since Mr. Donald Marriott assumed the position of Director of Restaurants and Catering at the National Arts Centre, what was the total amount spent under his direction on flowers and were the flowers discarded daily?

2. During the same period, what was the cost of fine granulated sugar purchased under Mr. Marriott's direction and has it been the custom to frequently dispose of it in the garbage and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows:

1. The total amount spent is $12,361.25, of which $4,271 was recoverable from persons ordering banquets. Flowers are not discarded daily but only when attractiveness has been lost (e.g. a carnation will on average last a week).

2. $3,494,94. It has not been the custom to dispose of such sugar in the garbage.

NAC—PURCHASE OF CASH REGISTER

Question No. 3,066—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since Mr. Donald Marriott became Director of Restaurants and Catering at the National Arts Centre, how many cash registers have been purchased for use at the centre?

2. Was there an occasion when Mr. Marriott negotiated directly or indirectly the sale of a cash register to the centre that either belonged to him personally or was in his care, custody or control and, if so, what are all the details, including the make of the cash register, the year of manufacture, the actual cash value at the time it was purchased by the centre and the amount actually paid by the centre?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows:

1. Since Mr. Donald Marriott became Director of Restaurants and Catering at the National Arts Centre, one cash register has been purchased for use at the centre.

2. Mr. Marriott did not negotiate directly or indirectly the purchase of a cash register that either belonged to him personally or was in his care, custody or control.

HEALTH CARE COSTS

Question No. 3,293—Mr. Dantzer:

What is the estimated annual per capita health care cost for those over 65 years of age and what is the estimate for the annual per capita health care cost for those over 65 years of age for (a) 1986 (b) 1991 (c) 2001 (d) 2011 (e) 2021 (f) 2031?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): It is estimated that the per capita cost for all types of health care expenditures (public and private) will be about $1,045 in 1981. Based upon limited data (age-specific cost data are only known for a few types of expenditures) it is estimated that the per capita health care costs for Canadians aged 65 and over will be approximately $3,500 in 1981.

Assuming that everything else remains unchanged (including the per capita costs of people aged 65 and over), the following is the estimated impact of a growing proportion of people aged 65 and over upon per capita health expenditures:

Year	Proportion of Canadians aged 65 and over*	Per Capita Health Expenditures (all ages)	Per Capita Health Expenditures (Canadians aged 65 and over)
1986	10.2	1,065	3,500
1991	11.1	1,090	3,500
2001	12.1	1,115	3,500
2011	13.3	1,150	3,500
2021	16.9	1,250	3,500
2031	21.5	1,375	3,500

SOVIET AIRCRAFT ENTERING CANADIAN AIRSPACE

Question No. 3,300—Mr. Cossitt:

In the past five years, were there occasions when Soviet aircraft entered Canadian air space without permission in advance and, if so (a) how many (b) what were all the details, including the date, location and type of aircraft involved?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): See reply to question No. 2,473 answered July 9, 1981.

DAY CARE CENTRES

Question No. 3,566—Mr. Herbert:

1. Does the Department of Employment and Immigration intend to locate day care centres before the end of the fiscal year 1982-83 and, if so, in which locations?

2. Has construction work started at any of these locations and, if so, what is the estimated cost?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Employment and Immigration Canada has submitted a proposal to the Treasury Board, seeking authority to establish a day care centre this year at its head office location in Phase IV, Place du Portage, Hull, Quebec.

2. Treasury Board approval is required before construction work can begin.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, because of the nature of the question I have placed on the Order Paper and the possible consequences which might flow from the answer, I wonder if I might ask the parliamentary secretary to take a look at question 3,698, which I recognize is a fairly new question, and bring to the attention of the appropriate minister the importance of answering that question forthwith.

Mr. Nielsen: Star it.

Mr. Deans: Thank you. This should be done, considering that the answer to that question could well impact on the legal positions of certain employers in the country.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will look into the matter and make representations on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, in the hope that I am helpful, we would have no objection, as far as this party is concerned, to permitting the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) to star that question in Hansard.

FARM CREDIT ACT
FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Thursday, January 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter this very important debate today. The bill before us has come at a very significant time, and I am sure the agricultural community is anxiously following and awaiting the passage of this bill.

Mr. Chrétien: Good. Let's vote.

Mr. Nielsen: Tomorrow night.

Mr. Mitges: Today, without a doubt, the farming industry in Canada is facing its worst financial crisis since the great depression. Last year alone, some 260 farmers were forced into bankruptcy because of the high interest rate policy while others were pushed into forced sales which, in some cases, ended farming establishments which had been in families for generations.

When we look at recent government responses to this rapidly worsening situation, we are left with the fact that, when the government acted, it offered too little, too late. A good example of just such an offer is the bill we now have before us, Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers. Another example, of course, is the budget itself. However, despite the drawbacks of this bill, which I will go into shortly, we support Bill C-88 in principle because it offers more financial aid to our farmers, and that is good. The bill, however, does not go far enough and we have some useful suggestions that we believe will strengthen this legislation and make it more helpful to the farming community.

Generally speaking, we think the Farm Credit Corporation has provided a valuable service to the agriculture industry over the years. Its financial assistance has been invaluable and we support the corporation in its efforts to extend financial assistance to the industry. By giving the Farm Credit Corporation authority to borrow funds from the private marketplace, some desperately needed money will be made available to farmers. With the FCC almost drained of funds to lend, any new injection of money, however small, is obviously a very good thing.

However, beyond this favourable principle of increasing resources, there are problems with this bill. We are very concerned about the amount of funds being made available by the government to farmers through the Farm Credit Corporation. Simply put, we believe, as the industry does, that the corporation is massively underbudgeted. We wonder why only $50 million was offered by the government in its November 12 budget when it knows a more realistic federal contribution is at least ten times that much, $500 million. Some, like the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, would say $1 billion is needed. In fact, every agricultural group has called for a higher and more reasonable level of federal funding. Hopefully, the government will finally recognize this obvious need and increase its aid to a more realistic level.

Of course, allowing the FCC to borrow from private sources will increase its resources, but we hope this move does not mean the government is planning to back out of its financial responsibilities. We need strong assurances that the FCC borrowing authority is supplementary borrowing only and is in no way going to replace direct federal funding. Perhaps when this legislation enters committee the minister will give us these necessary assurances.

Let me say that increased direct federal funding is necessary because allowing the FCC to borrow on the open market does not solve the immediate problems of underfunding. Bill C-88, simply put, does not address the very real problem of short-term relief. We all know that relief is needed, in many cases right now, in the short term.

The government has helped to solve the long-range funding problems, but it has not even mentioned short-term relief problems. This is why the $50 million offered by the government is so inadequate, considering the average farm loan today is for $100,000. This money will be gone in no time, leaving those in immediate difficulties in much the same situation they find themselves in now, facing imminent bankruptcy. This is an important element completely absent from the legislation, so again, during committee stage, perhaps we can get some positive answers to the problem.

We also question why this type of legislation was not introduced earlier. It is long overdue and, for that reason, it is welcome; but again, it does not adequately help farmers overcome their massive financial difficulties. It is too little and too late.

We would also ask, as my colleagues from Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) and Elgin (Mr. Wise) asked earlier, why no mention was made of offering further aid to farmers by way of placing a moratorium on farm bankruptcies. While this is not a solution to the problem, it could go a long way in helping to save farmers from very tough times.

The government has said time and time again that there is a need for economic restraint and that spending cuts have meant reducing available funds for many programs, including aid for our farmers. However, for an area of the economy as important as the agriculture industry is to the economy as a whole, the government's policies are simply ignoring the needs of farmers to create a thriving industry.

The government is only paying lip service to agricultural problems while its tightfisted monetary policy is bringing our farming industry to its knees by creating and maintaining high interest rates and record-high inflation, the very elements that are killing the industry. The government has long ago lost the power or strength of argument to justify its economic restraint policies. We only have to look at the agricultural industry to see how wrong and misguided those policies are to the well-being of all Canadians.

Looking to other elements of the legislation before us, we have to ask why the government sees the need to expand the board of the FCC to seven members. We can only hope that these new members are chosen because of their expertise in farming and financial matters, and not because of their past voting habits. Increasing the number may only create greater administrative costs while not necessarily benefiting the agricultural industry itself.

Let's not fool ourselves here. Farm credit loans are not handouts or charity. Each loan is paid back in full, with interest. Loans are a very major part of operating a farm, and dependence on long-term loans has become even greater in recent years. While prices have remained relatively steady over the years, operating costs, such as machinery, livestock feed, pesticides, fertilizer and, of course, interest rates on loans, have all skyrocketed. Therefore, many farmers find themselves coming up short in their current cash flow, even though they have large amounts of capital tied up in machinery and property. A much greater financial effort is therefore needed to help our farmers remain in business.

There are also serious questions concerning how the Farm Credit Corporation is administering the resources at its disposal and how it is treating applicants. Several farmers in my constituency have complained about what they feel is the arrogant, unsympathetic and downright rude attitude they have received in their dealings with some—and I stress some—FCC field workers. Many farmers I have talked to are very angry and upset to be treated this way when they apply for assistance, which often means the difference between bankruptcy and keeping a slim hold on their livelihood.

I believe very strongly that the FCC should take a hard look at how its program is being administered in order to make sure it is running properly. It is very important to treat our farming community with the respect and dignity deserving of such a hard-working and fundamental sector of our economy.

As I said at the outset, we support this legislation before us. We believe Bill C-88 is a worth-while measure for long-range funding of the FCC and, as my colleagues and I have stressed throughout the debate, as long as the federal government does not lower its direct contributions, we back the bill in principle.

We also hope that the government will guarantee the bonds floated by the FCC so they can be sold more quickly and benefit our farmers that much sooner.

If we want to have a strong agricultural industry, able to produce food efficiently and provide for a reasonable return, the government must be prepared to do its part by creating the necessary atmosphere of growth and recovery. Bill C-88 is a start and if the government looks closely at what we are calling for, we will go a long way in reviving this economically depressed industry.

Mr. Al MacBain (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak briefly on Bill C-88 respecting farm loans. The purpose of the bill is to ensure that Canadian farmers have access to adequate sources of the long-term credit they need to finance their farm businesses. There are important clauses in the bill which will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to be more responsive to the needs of Canadian producers.

The serious problem of how to see that the family farm stays in the family has received much attention in recent years. This bill provides a solution to that problem. One of the amendments would allow the FCC to provide financing to a farming corporation to fund a shareholder loan in order to allow the entry of another individual into the farming operation. Sons and daughters will thus be able to join their parents on the family farm.

According to the present Farm Credit Act, the corporation can make loans only on the security of farm lands or farm lands and chattels. Additional security can be taken but a loan cannot be based on this additional security. An amendment in this bill would allow additional security, as defined in the regulations, to be taken into consideration in calculating the size of a loan that a borrower may take out. This additional security could be, for instance, an equity interest in feeder cattle or even savings certificates which, if cashed before maturity, would result in a loss.

Currently, the corporation is limited to maintaining accounts in its own name in the Bank of Canada or in chartered banks designated by the Minister of Finance (Mr.

MacEachen). It is proposed that in the future the corporation, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, be allowed to maintain accounts in its own name in any bank or financial institution in or outside of Canada. This would greatly improve the cash management opportunities of the corporation as well as its financial performance.

This bill also contains a provision to increase the number of members of the corporation's board from five to seven. It has had a five-person board since 1959. However, 22 years later, the business of the corporation has grown in complexity and scope. The addition of two members with their diverse experience would greatly enhance the work of the board.

There are a number of other measures in the bill which could be considered a housekeeping nature. They are, nevertheless, necessary to eliminate obsolete items, as well as to update the act to reflect current agricultural conditions. The result will be an act which is easier to understand and to administer.

The Farm Credit Corporation fulfils a vital function in helping both Canadian farmers finance their operations and in providing advisory services to them. Credit advisers provide counselling to all clients and potential clients at the early stages of their development plans. There are also borrowers who recognize that they face higher levels of risk and would benefit from continuous farm business analysis, financial planning and the production and financial monitoring that the advisory services program offers.

Of the total loans approved annually, more than 15 per cent of the recipients agree to the continuous advisory services program. What I find so interesting about this program is the definite progress shown by the farmers who participate. Let us not forget that the participants are generally of a higher risk category with lower equity and higher loan-to-security ratios. When they start with the program, borrowers learn to manage their resources with a definite goal in mind—to become successful farmers. With time, most accounts become successful. By the time that they are released from advisory services, their repayment record is comparable to those who were never on the program.

As for the lending program, the results of the FCC special farm survey showed beyond a doubt how valuable the corporation's contribution is to the agricultural industry.

The survey examined the financial characteristics of the people who have received funds from the Farm Credit Corporation in 1981 and compared them to the average Canadian farmer. It is clear the FCC is currently lending to a much smaller scale of farm than the average. On a national basis, the average assets of FCC borrowers in 1981 were $375,000 compared to $518,700 for the average Canadian farmer. At the same time, FCC farmer debts were $185,000 as opposed to $78,000 for the average period. This results in a net worth of 51 per cent for the FCC borrowers compared to 85 per cent for the average farmer.

This indicates that the FCC is assisting the lower half of the farmers in Canada and also suggests that not many of the farmers in the top one third level are receiving aid from the FCC. The survey is evidence that the Farm Credit Corporation is meeting its objective of assisting the smaller, beginning farmer.

Let me point out that the corporation accomplishes these functions without appropriations from Parliament and covers its cost of operation, including losses, on a 1 per cent margin. Especially laudatory is its patient collection policy on overdue accounts.

It has displayed in the years since it was founded sound management policies, but above all a sense of humanity. I hope hon. members will join with me in supporting this bill which will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to do an even better job for Canadian farmers.

Mr. Alex B. Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to be able to take part in this debate this afternoon. I have the honour of representing one of the major, if not the major, agricultural areas of British Columbia. Naturally, I am vitally interested in all aspects of this bill which deal with the agricultural community and its problems.

In introducing this measure for second reading, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) stated:

> Madam Speaker, this legislation is extremely important to the farm community and to Canada as a whole. It proposes measures which will strengthen the role of the federal Farm Credit Corporation in helping Canadian farmers invest in their industry's future.

I appreciate the fact that the minister is interested in the cause of the agricultural industry. Of course, if he were not he would not be in the particular portfolio which he has. However, I think that we are in danger of restricting the application of policies to perhaps a relatively limited proportion of our population. After all, the population of the agricultural community is shrinking and therefore it seems as though it is destined, at least for the present time, to occupy a lesser position numerically than many other industries.

I say that we are inclined to look upon it as a measure to assist farmers, and I appreciate that fact, but I think we must broaden our vision and realize that this bill will not just help the farmers but will meet a worldwide need. I think that this will place a different perspective on this bill, rather than looking at it from purely an agricultural point of view. In actual fact, it is a matter of importance to approximately 24 million Canadians. It is also of vast importance to a great many people right around the world who will be looking to us in the future for their requirements as far as food products are concerned.

Although projected population figures vary considerably, it is generally agreed that the population increase will be very substantial in the future. In light of this there will be a greatly increased demand for agricultural products. It has been stated that in the eighties the scenario will be demand outstripping supply. We are told that world food supply has increased approximately 2 per cent over the last several years, while demand has risen at a rate of 3 per cent or 4 per cent. By 1990 the world's population is expected to increase to 5.25 billion from the 1980 level of 4.25 billion, and those with a seer's outlook state that by the year 2000 we could have a world population of about 7 billion people.

An article in Dun's Review of April, 1981, entitled "Enough Food for All" refers to previous predictions of food shortages which failed to materialize but states:

> Today, the spectre looms again. But, unlike the past, the subject is no longer confined to a debate among academics. The possibility of food shortages in the 1980s is being seriously addressed by farmers and economists, grain merchants and politicians, food company executives and commodity traders. Indeed, says University of Minnesota professor William Cochrane, who was the Agriculture Department's chief economist during the Kennedy-Johnson years: "For quite a while, I was a voice crying in the wilderness. But now quite a large portion of the agricultural analysts share my views that food shortages will occur during this decade."

Therefore, in view of these interesting facts it seems to me that we must give attention to the agricultural industry because in the final analysis we are making a contribution, as I have said, and must make a contribution not only to meet our own immediate needs but also to meet the needs of the world at large.

By that I am not implying that the answer to world food shortages is the massive transfer of produce only. The most important long-term solution in assisting many of the chronically underfed nations is to improve their own production capability, and in many instances this can be done in very unsophisticated ways. However, there will always remain a demand for food. Therefore, we talk about the Farm Credit Corporation and how we are going to assist farmers. According to figures presented with respect to suggested additional funds to be placed in the hands of the Farm Credit Corporation, under present circumstances only a little over 200 farmers will benefit. That will not go very far toward meeting the need of our agricultural community.

I suggest that the role of government is essentially to create an economic climate in which the private entrepreneur—that includes the farmer, of course—is able to function adequately in his own particular sphere of activity in the development and maintenance of a dynamic and productive economy. Unfortunately, while the minister says that he is endeavouring to assist farmers and is doing everything he possibly can to help them overcome present difficulties—I agree, and I believe he is trying—on the other hand government policies which tend to restrict activity, discourage initiative and penalize enterprise can only deepen resentment and despair and undermine the very foundations of our nation.

To many farmers today the question is whether they should continue to struggle on, in the face of the restricted impact of government policies, until the roof falls in, or should they quit, salvage what they can of their equity and apply their energies to other pursuits? This question was posed to me not too long ago by one of the farmers in my constituency. He was examining very carefully whether he would be able to deal with the crisis situation in which agriculture finds itself today and whether he would face it and fight it out or just close up shop and turn elsewhere to make a living. Today many are living on the depreciation of their assets, and when that is exhausted, that will mean the finish.

Farm income is tied in with this because when farm income is not adequate to meet needs and provide for the replacement of machinery and assets, then farmers certainly will not have any money left to expand their operations or to do whatever is necessary to fulfil their responsibilities to the common good.

I have an article taken from the Abbotsford, Sumas and Matsqui News, a paper published in my area. This article also appeared in some of the other papers in my constituency. The article states:

> Canadian farmers can brace themselves for smaller "take-home pay" in 1982 . . . and British Columbia is prophesied to take one of the largest percentage cuts.
> Estimates released at the federal outlook conference in Ottawa are for realized net farm income in Canada to reach $3.4 billion in the coming year. That is 15 per cent lower than 1981's level which, in turn, was up 22 per cent from 1980.
> Farmers will be faced with the same old cost-price squeeze. Their cash receipts are expected to climb about 4 per cent in 1982 to $19.2 billion. But their operating expenses and depreciation charges will more than eat up this slight gain. These costs are expected to grow about 10 per cent to $16.1 billion.

I will not put any more of that article on the record, but it does point out the difficulty farmers and other businessmen are facing. They have the problem not only of how to make a living but also of how to build up their operations in a way which will meet the challenges of the future and enable them to fulfil their responsibility in the field of agricultural production. I think this is something which ties in with the proposal we have before us today, which is to place more money in the hands of the Farm Credit Corporation.

One of the reasons we have to have more money and why there must be a greater contribution in this way to farm operations is that the farmer presently cannot build up a surplus in order to meet the needs of tomorrow. He is just living at the limit of his capacity and production at the present time. Why should this be? I suggest that there are too many obstacles in the way of achieving the very thing the minister is desirous of achieving, and that is to assist farmers, through additional financing, to carry on their operations and also to expand in order to meet the needs. One of the reasons this is necessary is that government policies, and particularly those contained in the recent budget, are counterproductive as far as farm income is concerned. We are lending farmers money yet extracting taxes from them beyond their ability to pay. I think one of the reasons for this is that they are still tied to high interest rates. Perhaps they could have got by if they were still able to borrow money at 10 per cent or 11 per cent but in recent times, when faced with interest rates of 20 per cent, 21 per cent or 22 per cent, they could not accomplish their objectives and pay their way.

The high incidence of forced sales, foreclosures and bankruptcies in the agricultural sector is a sad reflection on a nation such as ours. It is an indictment of a government policy that does not meet the needs of an important sector of our economy.

On May 5, 1981, before the exorbitant increase in the cost of money, the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture addressed Members of Parliament as follows:

> The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is most concerned about the increasing number of actual farm bankruptcies and foreclosures. The evidence is that there is a rising flood of farmers in trouble, and bank interest rates are the crushing blow that will put them under. If this is not so, a federal emergency program will get at the truth and no harm done.
> Farmers in this position who have nowhere to go for help must have some program which will give them a chance for survival. Failure by the federal government to act and act quickly on this matter would be simply irresponsible.

The minister states that he has been introducing legislation and has outlined various proposals made in order to assist farmers in this particular situation so that they will be able to carry on and function as operating farmers. When we have raised this question in the House he has referred to the Small Business Development Bond, but the qualifications required for that program are so restrictive that very few farmers are able to benefit from it. Even those who, to use the words of the minister, "need it most" have been unable to obtain any help when they are in dire straits. Many farmers who have applied to the Farm Credit Corporation have met with a response similar to the one they received when they applied for the development bond—that there was no money left. There was no money available under the Small Business Development Bond program, there is no money from the Farm Credit Corporation, there is no money anywhere.

I think this points very dramatically to the failure of the Farm Credit Corporation to meet the needs of the farm community. The result is evident in the increased numbers of forced sales, foreclosures and bankruptcies. These numbers are already on the record so I shall not repeat them.

The minister's rather pathetic confession was reported in the Valley Magazine of Wednesday, February 25, 1981 in an article which began as follows:

> If you're a farmer with a credit problem, federal agriculture minister Eugene Whelan says he'd truly like to help . . . but there may not be all that much he can do.

Later the article stated:

> But even at the national level there is only a limited amount we can do because it is a world problem. The fact is that Canada's success in holding down inflation has been so much better than many other countries is a tribute to the hard work and productivity of Canadian industry, as well as to our rich endowment of natural resources, including our agricultural land.

So the minister confessed that there was not very much he could do to assist farmers in their plight.

The recent federal budget which was supposed to be based on the principle of fairness, equity and justice is proving just the opposite, not only as it relates to the agricultural sector but to practically every sector of the economy. In an article which appeared in the Chilliwack Progress in my constituency, an accountant used the phrase "kick 'em while they're down" to describe the budget that was brought in. He was referring to the agricultural community and went on to point out a great number of the adverse features of the budget. The equity in a family farm for retirement has been eroded. Higher down payments will be required on the sale of farms and this will, in turn, reduce the number of potential purchasers which would no doubt have an effect on the price. The higher down payments will prevent young people from getting into agriculture. If the problems facing farmers were bad yesterday, they are compounded tremendously for the future.

There are many other things that work against the farmer's effort to pay his own way, to build up his equity, to get along under his own steam, as it were, without relying on the contributions or loans of the federal government. I do not think farmers want to borrow money for the sake of borrowing; they do it because they have to.

I wish to refer now to the matter of capital gains on farm sales which have a very serious effect on the agricultural community. As has been pointed out in debates in this House, promises have been made relative to legislation dealing with this subject but we, and the farmers of Canada, are still waiting for it. When are we going to see the update of the valuation day values to meet the demands of justice and decency? Why will the government not accept the common sense and valid position of this party that would permit a once-in-a-lifetime exemption from capital gains on the sale of a farm?

Some people may think I am getting a little far from the subject of the Farm Credit Corporation, but this is all tied in together. It is because of all these things that we need organizations such as the Farm Credit Corporation. I had other things to say on this question but I will not take the time of the House to deal with them now.

Perhaps I could do no better than put on the record a statement issued by the chairman of our caucus and the spokesman for this party on agriculture. In a news release dated January 28, 1982, issued by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), and the spokesman for agriculture for our party, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), it was stated:

> Finally, after three years of waiting, the government introduced Bill C-88 in the House of Commons on January 27. This bill will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow supplemental funding from the private marketplace.
> Last year Agriculture Minister Whelan held out the promise that this bill and the budget would help farmers overcome their financial difficulties. This was another empty promise on the part of Mr. Whelan.
> The budget produced more pain than help because it detrimentally changed the capital gains tax reserve and eliminated the Income-Averaging Annuity Contracts and the Small Business Development Bond program for expansion purposes. Although the budget also gave the FCC $50 million, this was a far cry from its real needs estimated to be from $500 million to $1 billion.

● (1550)

When we look at an additional $50 million, in light of the adverse effect of government policies on the agricultural community and the fact that the government is making it impossible for farmers to carry on their operations in a desired manner, it seems to be almost a slap in the face. When farmers have gone to the Farm Credit Corporation they were told, "Sorry, we have no money". The corporation ran out of money a long time ago, but now the government suggests that it will put in another $50 million. This is a far cry from what is actually needed in order to make money available to farmers who require it for survival, let alone those who require it for expansion in order to meet the increased needs of a world community which will be faced with food shortages in the near future.

The press release goes on:

> Bill C-88 will not provide any needed short-term relief. Even with the extra $50 million, the Farm Credit Corporation has virtually run out of money to lend. It needs more funds.
> Bill C-88 should be an important and worth-while measure in the long-range funding of the Farm Credit Corporation and, as a result, we will support it provided the government gives a firm commitment that its direct funding to the FCC will not be cut back. We also hope that the government will guarantee the bonds floated by the FCC so that they could be sold more quickly.
> The real tragedy is that this bill has been introduced three years too late. If it had been in place last year, the 261 Canadian farmers who had been forced into bankruptcy might still be productive farmers today, let alone the untold hundreds more who were forced out of business through foreclosure and forced sale.

In closing, I am not saying that the Farm Credit Corporation has not done the job given to it, considering the amount of money made available to it. It was not the fault of the FCC. It comes down to a matter of the government's unrealistic attitudes toward the farming community, its tremendous contribution to our nation today and the contribution it will make in the future to all those people who will be affected by the shortage of food which we are led to anticipate in days ahead. I trust the government will accept some of these suggestions.

I hope it will not only provide additional funds but will take a look at what has been done to farmers by federal government policy which made it necessary for them to turn, in such a great measure, to the Farm Credit Corporation and other lending institutions in order to succeed in their chosen vocation.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to address the House on Bill C-88, to amend the Farm Credit Act. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has been present in the House, but I am sorry he had to leave to attend a cabinet committee meeting. I had hoped that some of my remarks would evoke a response from him. The minister has been vocal and has said much in public respecting his views of the interests of farmers and the action that Parliament, and government in particular, should take to assist farmers. We find that in growing numbers farmers are coming under more and more pressure with respect to carrying on their operations. The parliamentary secretary is present and I am sure he will make detailed notes of what I say and take them to the minister, so that he will have the benefit of some of the advice I want to give him.

We should look back over the last few months to find out exactly what the minister said concerning the plight of Canadians farmers. I have one or two copies of press clippings which by and large are correct quotations of the minister. Certainly the minister has not taken it upon himself to challenge the accuracy of any of these quotations. He has been more than vocal. He has been pounding his chest in public, speaking on behalf of Canadian farmers and threatening dire consequences if certain actions were not taken by the government. A headline appeared in the October 11 edition of The Toronto Sun entitled "Whelan: 'Get off your butts'." I want to make a direct quotation of the minister, directed to Canadian farmers. He warned farmers and blamed Canadian banks for the woes of farmers. He said that there should be a temporary halt to farm foreclosures. Also he said that the banks were at fault for letting farmers take out huge demand floating loans which they could not afford. As reported in the article, he said:

> I used to have a farm and I was a farm leader. I didn't just holler criticism, but made constructive suggestions . . . I don't want to stay on as Minister of Agriculture if some new program isn't instituted. I'm an honest broker as far as politicians go.

As reported in The Windsor Star of October 10, 1981, the Minister of Agriculture was in full flight, oratorically speaking; the moon must have been in a certain position. This man was forging ahead on behalf of farmers. We were waiting with bated breath to see what would happen as soon as the minister returned to Ottawa. He met with his cabinet colleagues and told them the facts of life, how farmers across the country were suffering. As reported in The Windsor Star under the headline entitled "Gene: Wait and see what budget brings," Dave Pink, Star agriculture reporter, referred to Essex, which is the minister's home area. The article read:

> Agriculture Minister Gene Whelan says he's expecting help for financially troubled farmers in the new federal government budget.
> And if that help doesn't come, Whelan has said he's ready to resign from the cabinet.
> "Gene Whelan has been a backbencher before," he said in a Friday night interview.
> "I'm very concerned about my position as an honest broker in politics. You can only go so far," Whelan later told a gathering of Essex Windsor Liberals. "We've had meetings. We've made our submissions. We will wait and see what action the budget takes in the not too distant future."

The farmers of Canada, as one, stood and knelt by their bedsteads that night thinking that the Minister of Agriculture would take action and in fact do something to relieve the enormous economic consequences which they have suffered over the course of past years—unprecedented interest rates and costs of production rising almost daily.

The budget came down. As every farmer or anyone who has had a chance to read the budget knows, it contained virtually nothing for Canadian farmers. It was a disgrace. There was nothing for the average farmer. There was nothing to give any hope with respect to the economic circumstances faced by Canadian farmers today. What do we have? We have the same Minister of Agriculture. There has been no resignation. Interest rates remain high.

The Minister of Agriculture has now decided that rather than resigning he will change his tune slightly. Now the attack is on the banks. He talked about a "verge on fraud" in the banks' treatment of farmers, as reported in the January 14, 1982, edition of The Globe and Mail. What exactly does the minister mean by verging on fraud? He should give us some details so that we can change the legislation and do something to help farmers against the fraud which is being perpetrated upon them by banks. The minister is silent, he says nothing; he said, "I cannot speak". On an opposition day last week a motion was put forward, at which time the minister had an opportunity to rise and show where he stood with respect to banks. He stood with the government, in opposition to the opposition motion. This is the background of the Minister of Agriculture coming forward with this legislation as a solution to the problems of Canadian farmers.

What farmer or what Canadian can hold up the minister as a credible representative in cabinet of their interests? Surely this is a case where the minister's bark is far worse than his bite. There is no meaningful help for farmers, either in the budget or in any piece of legislation. He stands on the public stage humiliated and unable to get his way on behalf of farmers across Canada. I say that the honourable thing for the minister to do is to resign. Whatever happened to that old tradition, when a question of principle arose, of ministerial responsibility? Whatever happened to the concept of a minister saying "I have had enough, I am resigning; I said I would resign and I am resigning". As far as this government is concerned, that principle has gone by the by.

The answer which the minister brings forward with respect to the agricultural policy that he has for Canadian farmers is Bill C-88. This is a very important piece of legislation. It is far-seeing and will help every farmer across our nation. This legislation will enable the number of directors on the board of directors of the Farm Credit Corporation to be increased from five to seven members. Every farmer in Canada will applaud this progressive move on their behalf.

This bill contains a provision—

—(a) to remove the present thirty-five year age limitation for loans under section 33.

This is a brave minister!

This bill also updates some of the language in the Farm Credit Act. Every farmer is waiting for this to be done. I have letters by the carload asking when the language of the Farm Credit Act is to be updated.

You have heard from our colleagues, Mr. Speaker. Naturally we support the principle and thrust of this bill. But when we speak on this bill, we have to point out to the minister that something more is required. Surely this is not the response the government has to assist farmers out of the difficult times which they face in Canada today. We all have to look at the lack of economic support for our farming community in general that is being evidenced by the policies of this government. We see a disturbing trend on the part of this government to sabotage the economic viability of the small family-based farms. They are the backbone of my province and of Canadian agriculture and rural life. There are policies against farmers maintaining the family farm.

I want to point out to hon. members that in the west there are 150,000 producers. The families of these producers are directly engaged in the production of grain which is largely for export. At present $4 billion worth of grain is exported annually. This has a multiplier effect of four on the Canadian economy. In terms of economic benefit, there is no industry that produces more economic spin-off, stability and potential gains for our economy.

Some of the other sectors of the farm economy, such as the dairy sector, the poultry sector and the red meat sector, make a significant contribution to the over-all wellbeing of the Canadian economy. Canadian farmers have very special financial needs. Almost all independent farmers are dependent upon credit. They borrow in order to operate. General operating costs are fixed and unavoidable. Energy costs, machinery and other capital costs have skyrocketed. A farmer cannot rationally starve his livestock and ruin his land in order to cut costs.

Farmers are among the most seriously affected by a policy of high interest rates. This policy means that farm turnovers are made that much more difficult for young people who are attempting to get into farming. They simply cannot afford the additional interest expense. We see the average age of owners of farm land reaching 50 in 1982. Many farmers hold on to their land long past their age of retirement. They do this because the party to whom they wish to sell, very often a son or a daughter, cannot arrange the purchase financing or cannot afford it.

Obviously there is a major role for a corporation, such as the Farm Credit Corporation, to provide reasonable amounts of funding at reasonable rates. For an industry that provides so much to the Canadian economy, this is absolutely essential.

As my colleague who spoke before me has pointed out, there has been considerable delay in bringing forward this bill. In the process the Farm Credit Corporation has become cash starved. We in this party understand the importance and necessity of raising the limits on capital and providing for a corresponding increase in the corporation's borrowing capacity. We also welcome the new flexibility of being able to borrow in the market. As my colleagues have pointed out, we have taken a position of concern because this new direction may lead to a cut in direct funding of the Farm Credit Corporation. I am waiting to hear from the minister with respect to a commitment by this government that such a cut in that sort of direct funding will not occur.

The industry is also cash starved at this time. This government in its budget has made only a token effort to come up with assistance. Our party has called for additional short-term funding for the Farm Credit Corporation of $500 million. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture says that agriculture needs $1 billion injected into it immediately. People who are involved in the day to day operations of farms through their organizations indicate that is the kind of money that is needed at the present time to be injected into the farming industry.

This government saw fit to allocate only something in the vincinity of $50 million through the Farm Credit Corporation. This is an amount conceivably only enough to deal with as few as 225 applications for assistance, to take the maximum number in that particular hypothesis.

What else does the government give us aside from this additional money for the Farm Credit Corporation? There was, of course, reference to the Small Business Development Bond. What should have been a useful tool for long-term capital investment is now only available to those having serious cash flow problems.

Stories have been coming in about the difficulties that small businesses and farmers have had in convincing banks to extend any financing arrangements through the Small Business Development Bond. I simply ask the question whether hon. members have had any experience in this area. You have had experience in the private sector, Mr. Speaker, I know that, but I have yet to meet a lending agency, regardless of advertising, where money is available only on the signature of the borrower, whatever the particular sensitivity of the local manager may be. If someone is in so-called dire straits and approaches a bank for a loan, that person will not be greeted with open arms.

The federal government has restricted the loans in these instances to those in dire straits and financial difficulty. But the government has not said to the banks that if anything goes wrong the government will set up a guarantee that they will not lose all of this money. The banks will look at every application they receive on the basis that money lent must be recovered in the interest of maintaining the viability of their operation. It will be very difficult for those farmers in dire straits.

This government has created in this budget a further hindrance to transfer land by removing the income-averaging annuity contract. Even with the transitional rules announced on December 18, the purchase is vendor financed. The vendor may very well have to borrow to pay his or her taxes after the reserve period lapses. This again puts an impediment in the way of young farmers who want to get into the business and in the way of older farmers and land owners who want to get out. So, Mr. Speaker, we see the government offering only token support to farmers in additional farm credit funding in the budget while at the same time limiting the effectiveness of the Small Business Development Bond and the IAAC.

The farming industry in Canada, particularly in Saskatchewan, is going through all sorts of difficulties. Land prices have increased dramatically in recent years, as have operating costs. It seems the government could do far more to lessen the pressure on the industry at this critical time. The final irony is to watch a Minister of Agriculture who protests so loud and long about his love for the farming community, and then in the same breath allows the FCC rate of borrowing to go up to 16¾ per cent.

It is fascinating to listen to his criticism of the banks. On January 28 last he made one of his usual verbal outbursts on the subject when he said:

> Why can the farmers not borrow from their local banks or credit unions, as I might if I were buying a new home or seeking funds to start a new business? Why, indeed? One need only look at the record of the banks over the last five years as to how they have handled, or maybe I should say mishandled, farm loans to know the answer to that question.

It is utterly hypocritcal, Mr. Speaker, for the minister to continue his tirade against the banks when he stands with a government which cares so little for the economic needs of the country's farmers. If the government wanted to make a decent commitment to farmers, why did it put only $50 million into the FCC in additional funds? It needed ten times that amount. Why does it put up the FCC lending rate if it has such great sympathy for the farmer? Why did it assault the farmer's pocketbook in the budget? Little wonder, Mr. Speaker, that farmers do not bother listening to the minister any more; he simply does not deliver.

It is said in western Canada that the bones of long dead western Liberals are becoming archaeological treasures. A museum in Regina has a lot of these old bones and they have a new category. We have Tyrannosaurus Rex, Brontosaurus, and now we are getting the rare "liberalus defunctus".

Mr. Evans: When are we going to get "conservatus ridiculus"?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The "twin from Saskatoon East" is in the House as usual. I am saying these things so that he will take notes and go back to that Liberal rally in Saskatoon East held in the nearest phone booth and tell all the Liberals in Saskatchewan exactly what should be done on behalf of western farmers. If you take notes he may do some good, instead of making these interjections.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the farmers of my province have been subjected to massive pressures in the last ten years. Operating expenses have risen from $966 million in 1976 to $1.58 billion in 1980, a 63.6 per cent increase. In that same time interest payments paid by farmers have increased by 117 per cent. However, the farmers' income has certainly not kept pace. Farmers also have great difficulties in transferring land due to the imposition of a capital gains tax. They are taxed on a gain not of their making, one that is often artificially inflated due to speculation.

The November 12 budget contributed absolutely nothing to the resolution of their problems. It contained minimal financial help, further complicated land transfers and disabled the useful aspects of the small business development bond. Many of you will remember the display of support for the farming community in the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). Under that budget a farmer would have been able to roll over up to $200,000 of a taxable capital gain on the sale of farm land into an RRSP. That was certainly a more fair and effective way of allowing farmers to plan for their retirement. This outfit, this Liberal government, seems to think there is something wrong with a person spending his or her working years buying and farming land, selling it and then enjoying a productive retirement on the proceeds.

With the proper service guarantee and a clear commitment by the government to provide the appropriate subsidy, long-term planning can be made by the transportation industry, government and farmers alike, in western Canada particularly.

There have been suggestions recently that an announcement will be made shortly with respect to the Crow rate in western Canada. Some of these statements indicated an early decision by the government on this rate. This all affects the viability and stability of the grain farming industry in western Canada. I simply advise the Minister of Agriculture, as he is involved in these decisions, to heed the words of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall:

—once tampering with the statutory rate is accepted or condoned as an item on the bargaining table, all will be lost. For once the subject is on the bargaining table, it will only be a matter of time until it is lost step by step. There is no position to take except to adhere through thick and thin that the Crow rate is not bargainable.

I make those remarks with respect to another initiative announced by this government, and to take a look at what in fact may be the scenario western Canada is facing with respect to another program announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), among others. This is because, in my view, a decision on the Crow goes hand in hand with the appearance of the western development fund.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the $4 billion elusive dream of the October 28, 1980, budget is now a $1.3 billion nightmare for westerners. It was purportedly a fund to modernize the grain handling and transportation sectors, as well as promote western industrial diversification. In the last budget it was slashed by 60 per cent, which turns it into a complete sham. A portion of this year's allocation of $148 million is to be used to assist Vancouver in the purchase of urban light rapid transit. I point out, Mr. Speaker, that all this equipment comes from central Canada. So much for providing jobs, secondary industry and technology to the west.

I wish the minister was here because he indicated some incredulity with respect to this statement which was confirmed by officials in the Department of Finance. Out of this fund the sum of $81 million has been funnelled to Canadian farmers for losses sustained because of the Soviet grain embargo. Now, Mr. Speaker, western farmers are entitled to recover their losses from that embargo. However, this government is paying them from a fund declared to be for the economic development of the west. I should add that $13 million of that payment goes to farmers in Ontario and Quebec.

It is my submission that any payments for compensation to western farmers should have come out of the general treasury. For the government to pay those moneys out of the western development fund is a complete betrayal of the promises made to western Canada.

What about the rest of the western development fund? I fear that a much greater problem faces us. No plans have yet been announced specifically for the rest of that money. However, would it not be convenient for the government simply to remove the statutory freight rate and then have this new fund waiting to pay off farmers? The Liberals, of course, would be most anxious to point out that all this money is to be used to improve western transportation. Of course, the fallacy of that argument is that the railways are already partially compensated for losses sustained as a result of the Crow. Therefore, in actual fact, no new money will be put into the west. It will just be old money in new packages.

To let the Liberals get away with this sleight of hand will be an open door to the complete erosion of the benefits farmers have obtained because of the Crow rate. Maybe next year the fund will be slashed again and, all of a sudden, farmers will be paying the full cost of moving grain with no compensation. Therefore, I simply put the warning out to all hon. members of the House that the future shape of the agricultural economy hangs in the balance.

The problem is that if this money is simply paid out as part of the settlement of the Crow, it will not be used for its declared purpose of placing seed money in western Canada for industrial and transportation research and development. These crucial needs of the west are being ignored to the serious detriment of our farming community. I say to hon. members that the indecision on the part of the federal government in developing a rational, global transportation policy in the west causes much uncertainty, many lost opportunities, and ultimately affects the income of our western farmers. This so-called western development fund is a case in point, because it is unfortunate that this fund appears to be ending up simply as a Liberal slush fund to be administered in the usual ad hoc and arbitrary manner without the benefit of appropriate public input and debate.

If the minister were here, I would also point out that there are other initiatives which are needed in terms of the western farmer, aside from the budgetary assistance which can be rendered. An atmosphere could be created in western Canada to let young people know that farming is a career which will be productive and satisfying, and will bring in reasonable returns. There must be a general atmosphere of taxation policy and policy with respect to retiring funds so that people will know that a very productive, important and integral part of our society, the agricultural sector, will remain viable.

In this context I want to make only a few other references to another initiative I think the government should take. I think agricultural research must be stepped up across our country. Various projects are crying out for funding. There has been reticence, and pressure has been put upon the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Roberts), who has spoken about making new commitments with respect to research and development in our country. Again, I hate to sound immodest, but I say to the minister that it would do himself a lot of good if he simply looked back at some of the initiatives taken by my government concerning that particular area of policy.

In my city of Saskatoon, the veterinary infectious diseases organization is doing excellent work. An example of the research work being done is the development of a vaccine to combat the most common form of calf scours, a vaccine which took four years to develop. More money is now needed to develop vaccine to be given to young calves to prevent shipping fever. Another vaccine is needed to control mud fever in turkeys, which costs the Canadian turkey industry some $9 million annually, and another for the prevention of the spread of respiratory diseases in young pigs for the pork industry.

Major research is also required in the grain and oil seed industries. The ironic aspect here, as pointed out many times by my colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), is that a portion of the funding needed for this research could be derived from funds left over from the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Some $9 million remains from that check-off fund. It now sits in a non-interest bearing account while it could be used by researchers, on behalf of farmers, for very productive research projects. I congratulate the hon. member for Moose Jaw on his private member's bill which would make this a reality. For some reason which is hard for me to understand, that very reasonable, thoughtful proposition put forward by the hon. member for Moose Jaw has been resisted by the Minister of Agriculture. One would have thought that a minister, who has received headlines for his statements of support for farmers across this country, would have been in line to have said to my colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw, "That is a good, constructive suggestion; let us get on with the job. Let us put this money to work. Let us not keep it in the general treasury, where it is bearing no interest for the benefit of the people who, in fact, have invested this money in the prairie farm assistance program."

I think there is one last issue which affects many farmers in western Canada, and I want to make brief reference to it. It is a question which is being asked with respect to the Wheat Board and the contract which it has carried on, in fact, for the benefit of farmers. The projections by Saskatchewan agriculturalists forecast a final payment for durum which was in the area of $1.10 per bushel. The final payment was, in fact, 1.6 cents a bushel. Contract prices are not published. In light of projections, we must ask why such a shortfall took place this year. Why are we not able to get some information with respect to the basis upon which that payment was made? Many farmers want the Wheat Board to be more forthcoming with respect to the basis upon which that calculation was made.

I want to summarize my remarks concerning this bill. Its objective to free the Farm Credit Corporation to go into the marketplace to obtain funds needed to supply the requests for money by the farmers of this country is something we support, as indicated on different occasions by hon. members from our party who have spoken previously. However, in light of this government's lack of support for the farming community in the budget and its indecisiveness in dealing with the transportation of farm products, and considering the way things have been going over the last few years with this outfit, we seriously wonder whether this will not be used by the government to cut direct funding to the Farm Credit Corporation.

Farmers of this country have very special credit needs and operate on a very slim profit margin, particularly in these tough times, and this is not evident anywhere as much as it is in the west. The increases in operating and capital costs have not been of their own making. They need the support and encouragement of the government. The budget gives little tangible support and, in reality, causes hardships for many who are undergoing transfers, a process which is essential to keep youth in the industry and enable older farmers to provide for themselves during their retirement. Lack of a transportation policy causes long-term uncertainty and loss of income to farmers.

Therefore, I say to the Minister of Agriculture, "Be as good as your word." Speeches filled with the rhetoric for which the minister is famous are not sufficient; some action is now required. We take no partisan pride in standing here to tell the minister that he has miserably failed, as his government has failed, to help the farmers in Canada. I would just as soon stand up and compliment the minister, and to say, "Job well done! You have spoken out and taken action." As a member of the opposition, it gives me no pleasure to be critical; but if one lives in my district, one knows the problems of farmers. Over the course of the last recess, farmers came into my office to say that their own personal circumstances are such that they are experiencing a sense of uncertainty, that they do not know where they are going. I have received tragic letters. I think that if hon. members lived in my area, they would be standing, as I am now standing, to say, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, that words are fine, but action is better.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to speak on the Farm Credit Act amendments before the House today, Bill C-88. It is significant that during the past week we have been dealing with two important pieces of legislation. Last week we dealt with the Canagrex bill which will play a major role in the future in the marketing of farm products overseas. It will expand that role, working with the private sector, the agricultural community, co-operatives, marketing agents and boards to increase our sales overseas. Someone described the decade of the eighties to be the decade of food and agricultural production, just as energy was our top priority during the seventies. It is therefore significant that we are dealing immediately after the Christmas recess with these two important pieces of legislation.

There is no doubt that the Canadian agricultural industry requires additional assistance. It is an industry that extends across the country, mainly with small family farm businesses working at a time when farm input costs are rising rapidly. The cost of land during the past decade has been rapidly rising. The difficulties of young people getting involved in agriculture have increased tremendously. Added to this is the uncertainty of climate, money and world prices, making it very difficult for an uncertain industry, to say the least.

The important thing about the Farm Credit Corporation is that it brings stability to the lending institutions. There is the provision for long-term lending. During the past 12 months there have been tremendous problems in borrowing from the banks, which have a floating interest rate. The total uncertainty of that situation is just impossible for many farm operations to cope with.

It is significant that 70 per cent of loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation are to younger farmers who do not have the established track record that older, more experienced and more knowledgeable operators often have. The Farm Credit Corporation must continue to provide such interest and concern for young people wanting to get into agriculture. It is important that we have an agency like the Farm Credit Corporation which has a certain amount of flexibility. When unforeseen problems arise, especially for young farmers, they should be able to defer payments for short periods of time. That sort of assistance is available.

The staff of the Farm Credit Corporation offices does a very good job. In almost every instance it assists young farmers in particular with counselling and advises them on financial matters. It assists them in putting together an economical and viable unit.

We are not dealing with small amounts of money. Let us look at the farm capital investment reported in the national census carried out in 1971. On average, the estimated value of a farm was $79,000. By 1976 this had risen to $190,000 and by 1980, according to the national census figures on the value of farm property, it had increased to $340,000. Therefore, we are dealing with very large amounts of money.

I compliment the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on being able to get this important piece of legislation to the House. I also compliment him on establishing the Anderson commission on August 28 to prepare a report on marketing and other aspects of the beef industry. Of all the farm industries which have had a difficult time during the past two years, the beef production industry has perhaps had a more difficult time than any other sector of our agricultural community.

If we look at the 1979 fall sales, the upper average price for calves selling in the Algoma-Manitoulin district was $1 to $1.10 a pound, sometimes as high as $1.15. In 1981 the average dropped to 70 cents a pound, with top loads as high as 75 cents. In any event, we are looking at an almost 30 per cent decrease in returns. I do not think any other sector of our economy has had to take a 30 per cent drop in revenue during the two-year period from the fall of 1979 to the fall of 1981.

Looking at the input side, the cost of fuel, fertilizer, money and so on has increased by at least 30 per cent. Between September, 1976, and September, 1981, gasoline costs increased by 74 per cent, diesel fuel by 84 per cent, fertilizer by 47 per cent and bank interest rates by as much as 80 per cent. These figures were put together by the Manitoulin beef producers organization.

Looking at the price of beef calves going on to the market in the fall, we see that the consumer buying red beef in the store has noticed a considerable increase, perhaps by as much as $1 a pound over the period of time from 1979 to 1981. Therefore, the consumer has not benefited. At the same time the beef producer has taken a terrific drop in gross revenue and has shown practically no profit for his time, effort, investment and enterprise.

It is important that we place a very high priority on this farm legislation at this time. Input costs, funding and financing are terribly important and require the earnest consideration of this House and this government. If we look at the support offered by practically every other nation in the world, we see they provide preferential rates for borrowing, many well below 10 per cent and some as low as a zero interest rate. The legislation before us will enable the Minister of Agriculture and the Farm Credit Corporation to go outside of the conventional method of receiving all funding from the federal government, and borrow on the private market.

It seems to me that we should be looking at the possibility of assisting both young farmers who are going into business and retiring farmers by providing a means of funding. Both the retiring farmers and the young farmers starting up can take advantage of this new capacity of the Farm Credit Corporation to go outside the federal government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to secure its funding.

Another very important part of this bill is the measure for increased capitalization of the Farm Credit Corporation from $150 million to $255 million. This will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow up to approximately $5.6 billion. This reflects the increased amount of borrowing which will be required. It also reflects the increased value of farm property over the last few years.

It is interesting to note that in 1975 the amount of borrowing was approximately $655 million. In 1980 it was up to approximately $2 billion, an increase of at least 20 per cent. I might also note that this legislation provides that the upper loan limits may be increased by regulation or by order in council. It is my understanding that it is proposed to increase the borrowing limits from $200,000 to $300,000 for a single applicant and from $400,000 to $500,000 for more than one applicant.

Also, I note that the legislation which the minister has introduced will remove the age limit of 35 years for people who will be phasing into farming, that is, will be working part-time at another job but will phase in over a five-year period. Removal of that over-35-years age limit is a worth-while change.

Along with the Canagrex bill and the Farm Credit Act amendments, which I hope the opposition will support, I hope the minister will move on rapidly to implement the report which is being prepared by the Anderson-Vandermeulen commission which he appointed last August.

During this past weekend I had an opportunity to travel with Mr. E. H. Anderson, who is serving on that commission, to meet with the livestock and beef producers in the Algoma and Manitoulin districts and hear of the difficult problems which they are facing. I had the opportunity to hear him respond to the kinds of representations he has been receiving across the country about the possibility of reconciling the vast number of stabilization programs which exist at the provincial level and to hear proposals for the control of unlimited imports of red beef into our country from offshore areas.

I believe we must proceed in a deliberate, decisive but careful manner as soon as that commission report is given to the minister. If we do not take steps to ensure that we have a viable beef producing industry in Canada, we will end up with a few large producers and a few hobby farmers producing our beef. The present system of stabilization and marketing is totally inadequate, while at the same time—consumer prices continue to rise even though the returns to this vital industry have fallen dramatically over the last two years.

I am hopeful that the Farm Credit Act amendments will pass and increase the capacity of the corporation to secure funds at lower rates. I think the rates which were provided in the special legislation which was introduced in the budget, providing rates at 11¾ per cent, would be the direction interest rates would take under the legislation. I believe this bill provides some of the legislative framework for those special rates and will be useful in implementing them.

At the same time, the Small Business Development Bond which was introduced in the fall, to be available to agricultural producers who are not incorporated businesses, has been a useful tool. Of course, the Farm Credit Corporation legislation itself is the most desirable vehicle because of its long-term fixed rate of interest, there is counselling available, there is flexibility in it and it is especially valuable and more available to young farmers. At the same time, it provides a long-term credit plan to let agricultural producers know what the interest rate will be.

I hope that this legislation which will be beneficial to the vital farming industry, along with the other beneficial pieces of legislation which will be introduced in this session, will receive the support of the House.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to the amendments to the Farm Credit Act presented in Bill C-88.

I represent a sizeable community of farmers, many of whom have some financial problems, many others who are in desperate financial straits. These farmers and indeed all Canadian farmers have waited almost five years for changes to the Farm Credit Act to find their way from the minister's office to the House. That is a long time, especially for changes as general as those proposed in this bill.

I see nothing in the bill representing major changes either to the Farm Credit Corporation or to the government's over-all agricultural policy. Given the five-year wait, I doubt if many farmers will accept the minister's latest excuse for delay, that he was waiting to hear from the Ontario Federation of Agriculture before he introduced the amendments to the Farm Credit Act. In fact, it appears that the minister has paid little heed to the wishes of Canadian farmers in drafting much of this bill. It is true that more money will be available to borrowers and that age discrimination criteria for receiving a loan will be lifted, but on important questions such as the capital pool of the Farm Credit Corporation and the level of interest rates on loans from the agency, there is little or nothing at all in the changes that respond to the requests of farmers.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture requested early last year an increase of some $150 million for the Farm Credit Corporation to respond to the crisis in farm financing. What did they get? For many months they got nothing. In the November budget they finally got $45 million plus an additional $5 million to subsidize interest rates for approximately two years. That is one third of what they asked for.

The minister says that he listens. He does not listen very well. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture also said that interest rates of 14 per cent are all that farmers can afford to pay. But there is nothing spelled out in this bill to suggest measures will be adopted to reduce interest charged on farm credit loans from the current rate of 16.75 per cent.

I agree with my colleague, the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), when he characterizes the real problem of farm credit as not simply a problem of inadequate credit but one of net income being too low to pay the bills and maintain a viable operation. In Manitoba the realized net income of farmers actually decreased 42 per cent from 1975 to 1981. We all know, of course, that the cost of living did not decline with it. In fact, it increased by 88 per cent. To make up the shortfall in their net income or to undertake the expansion the minister suggested last week was necessary to achieve economies of scale for new technology, farmers have had to borrow at an increasing rate. In 1981 Manitoba farmers paid out $201 million in loan payments, an increase of some 359 per cent since 1975.

The agricultural policies of this government are forcing farmers further and further into debt. Last week the minister told this House that the Farm Credit Corporation is helping to ensure that the Canadian family farm remains a stable and viable entity. Perhaps the agency has helped some family farms, but has it not also been hindered in its ability to help make the family farm viable and stable?

In 1975, 72 per cent of all long-term credit taken out by farmers came from the Farm Credit Corporation. By 1979 the proportion had shrunk to 35 per cent. Who is responsible for that? Surely not the farmers. I doubt that there are many Canadian farmers who, on principle, would refuse to borrow at a lower rate from a government agency like the Farm Credit Corporation. It is this government that is responsible. It is responsible for the decline and the fall of the Farm Credit Corporation. With its tight purse strings it has hamstrung the agency. It has prevented it from keeping up with the increasing demand for farm credit. This government has stood in the way of the Farm Credit Corporation and prevented it from responding readily to the credit needs of Canadian farmers, and it has offered the banks—with their exorbitant interest rates and their $1.7 billion in profits—a bigger piece of the Farm Credit Act on a silver platter.

The crisis in farm financing and the declining role of the Farm Credit Corporation have been disastrous for Canadian farmers. Last year 261 farms in Canada were forced into bankruptcy. That is more than twice as many farm bankruptcies as in 1979. An increase in farm bankruptcies of more than 100 per cent in two years is shocking.

I mentioned a moment ago the dismal income situation faced by farmers today. When we see farmers' net income actually decrease over a period of seven years while the cost of everything else has increased, I do not think there is any reason to believe this increase in farm bankruptcies is in some way due to an increase in poor farm management. Farmers are doing their best to run stable and viable operations, but when their income is falling and their costs are increasing, they are forced to borrow. When the interest charges on the money they have had to borrow outstrip their earning potential, some of them are forced to declare bankruptcy. They are forced to give up their family farms.

Everyone should see the need to expand the role of the FCC in financing and refinancing Canadian farms. With that in mind I am happy to see that the amendments before us will increase the limit on capital the agency is able to receive from the government. With a larger capital pool the FCC will be able to borrow more money for its operation.

I mentioned before that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture asked the government earlier this year to increase the capital of the FCC. This bill allows for an increase in the capital limit of some $75 million, but there is no assurance that it will be approved for use by the agency next year. We are still waiting for an announcement from the government about how much additional capital it will provide for the agency in the next year. If the government does not come through quickly with a substantial increase in capital for the FCC, many more of the family farms the minister wishes to preserve as stable and viable entities will go under. While the increase of $75 million will eventually mean an additional almost $2 billion in credit, I fear it will be too little and too late.

I have some reservations too about provisions in the proposed legislation which grant the Farm Credit Corporation the authority to turn to the private market for funds. Let me say that our party is generally not opposed to authority being granted to borrow from sources other than the government. We appreciate that such authority opens more channels from which to borrow funds and that it permits the agency to respond more rapidly to increases in demand for farm credit; but the way in which the authority was announced leaves me with a number of questions. For example, how much of its funding will the Farm Credit Corporation obtain from government and how much from private sources? Will the cost of borrowing from the private market be higher than borrowing from the government, or will provisions be made to encourage investors to provide money to the FCC at less than market rate? Will the authority for the Farm Credit Corporation to turn to the private market for funding in the end really mean higher interest rates for farmers? The intentions of the government in this regard are not clear.

I can only hope that the minister will heed the plea of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that interest rates of 14 per cent are all that farmers can afford to pay, and ensure the authority granted to the agency to borrow on the private market will mean a reduction from the current 16.75 per cent interest rate.

Last week my colleague, the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre, spelled out a number of provisions which would allow the FCC to obtain funds on the private market for some two thirds of the market rate. I hope the minister heard them and will act on my colleague's recommendations.

The amendments in this bill will transfer the statutory loan limits from the act to regulations. I appreciate that that will provide opportunities to the agency to increase loan limits more rapidly than at present. I am glad to hear that the minister announced in the House last week his intention to increase the limits on farm credit loans from $200,000 to $300,000 for individual applicants and from $400,000 to $500,000 for groups of two or more applicants, but the minister did not mention whether the transfer from the act to the regulations of the statutory limit for Indian bands will mean a similar increase. I hope Indian bands applying for FCC loans will see an increase in their statutory limit as well.

I hope, too, that with its new authority to amend the statutory loan limits the government will make every effort to ensure they keep pace with the ever-increasing costs of farming.

I am heartened that, in addition to making provision for more rapid increases in statutory loan limits, Bill C-88 will end age discrimination in the agency. I am speaking, of course, about the requirement that applicants for loans to establish farms be under the age of 35. I am sure hon. members of this House understand that starting a farm is a very expensive undertaking and becoming more so every day. Five hundred thousand dollars does not buy a very large prairie farm these days. It is not unusual for new farmers to have to work and save for quite a number of years before they can even consider investing in their own farms. An age limit of 35 does not give many new farmers much time to build up the capital pools they need before investing in farms.

Last April one of my constituents wrote to me about his encounter with age discrimination in this act. He is not an old man at all—he is only 39—but when he applied for a farm credit loan to help him begin farming on a full-time basis the farm he had bought in 1978, he was refused. He was refused not because he was not in need of the money, nor because he was a poor credit risk; he was refused because at the age of 39 he was too old. It is a pretty sad state of affairs when someone is declared too old at the still tender age of 39.

My constituent and I were not alone in our charge that the Farm Credit Act discriminates on the basis of age. In its 1980 annual report to Parliament the Human Rights Commission urged the government to amend the Farm Credit Act to remove this age differential. It said:

> The Canadian Human Rights Commission agrees that it is desirable to provide for a phase-in period for farming operations to become established. We recommend, however, that non-discriminatory criteria be adopted for determining eligibility for a "phase-in farm loan", and in particular that an age limit of 35 no longer be imposed.

● (1700)

I promised my constituent last spring Mr. Speaker, that I would pursue amendments to the Farm Credit Act that would put an end to age discrimination until they were passed by this House.

I would like to mention in passing that my involvement with this particular case of age discrimination was an education in the machinations of Parliament. Although I do not consider myself a rookie, I have to admit I was both confused and a little perturbed about the rules members of this House have to operate under when they want to change legislation. When I first became aware, last spring, that the Farm Credit Act contained this discriminatory clause, I tried to have a private members' bill drafted which would right the wrong.

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that only ministers of the Crown are allowed to introduce bills which spend taxpayers' money. Most of our ministers are good at this sort of thing, even outside the House of Commons, when they like to jet about in government-owned JetStars or treat journalists to pricey lunches. When I wrote to the law department of the House of Commons to outline and have drafted a private member's bill which would eliminate age discrimination in the Farm Credit Act, I had no idea I was setting myself up for weeks of wrangling and complicated correspondence with the legal department of the House. The result of this wrangling was a ruling from the lawyers that in hoping to introduce a private member's bill I was completely out of order. It seems that the rules of the House say that a bill such as the one I wanted to introduce has the effect of, and I quote, "infringing on the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount but also if it extends the objects and purposes or relaxes the conditions and qualifications" of an act of Parliament.

It did not make much sense to me then and I am not sure it makes much sense to me now how I would be "infringing on the financial initiative of the Crown" by having age discrimination removed from the Farm Credit Act. I was not asking that the government allocate more money to the Farm Credit Corporation. I was only asking that the same government, which at that very time, last spring, was drafting its democratic and glorious Charter of Rights and Freedoms, remove from the books a discriminatory clause in one of its acts. I am happy to see the amendment I sought has finally been introduced.

We in this corner of the House viewed this bill as being somewhat less than we had hoped for. We look forward to dealing with the bill in committee where my colleague, the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre, among others, will bring forward a number of suggestions to make it a better piece of legislation.

We are thankful that after five years of delays the bill has finally come before us. We hope that it will only be the first step in a desperately needed major overhaul of agricultural policy in this country. If our farm community is to survive, it must be done.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to take part in this debate to amend the Farm Credit Act. I think it is quite significant that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) should bring forward this piece of very positive legislation at this time. I want to congratulate him for laying the groundwork to provide a solid foundation for agriculture. First of all, I should like to refer to the agricultural food strategy report "Challenge for Growth" which was released last fall. That report laid out the policy direction for agriculture in the eighties and I believe has been well received by the farming community, particularly in Ontario. The task force report of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, released in late November, 1981, states that the 1981 Agriculture Canada discussion paper "Challenge for Growth—an Agri-Food Policy for Canada," while having certain weaknesses, appears to provide an opportunity to develop short and long-term agricultural policies for the provinces and for Canada as a whole.

I believe that paper has gone a long way toward meeting the objectives and needs of this nation. I believe very strongly that the legislation before us goes on to fill the needs addressed in the recommendations of that task force report, particularly from the federal government standpoint. However, a wide gap remains as far as the other policies are concerned.

The minister has put in place the Meat Import Act which was passed in December. That legislation was requested by the producers of this nation. We have made the Small Business Development Bond available to unincorporated farmers in order to help them through times of low prices, particularly those engaged in red meat production. A week ago today the Canagrex legislation was introduced for second reading. This legislation will expand our agricultural industry and utilize the potential of Canadian producers. It will provide markets for increased productivity as the potential of the industry is developed. The agri-food strategy report indicated that we have the potential for much higher production but unfortunately the market system is not in place to take advantage of it.

I believe the minister was very astute in laying the groundwork to put our industry on a firm foundation before introducing the Farm Credit Corporation legislation. I want to commend him for taking this very firm and sensible approach, rather than injecting new financing into the industry in a hodge-podge fashion. It has always been my experience that you do not borrow yourself out of debt.

I also want to commend the minister for the amendments that will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow on outside markets to supplement its loan fund. It is an investment in the future of this nation. Many farmers and lending institutions would be very happy to invest in this sector, not because of the high returns at the present time but because food is the first essential of human life. The corporation's borrowing authority will be raised from $150 million to $225 million; that is a 50 per cent increase. This is particularly important because the corporation would otherwise have reached its maximum borrowing authority early in 1982-83.

Bill C-88 also removes the age limit in the phasing-in program and allows borrowers over 35 years of age to work off the farm for the first five years. Last summer I learned of an instance where a farm wife made application for additional funds because her husband was over the age limit. It is a credit to the minister that this discriminatory clause was removed from the bill.

The bill proposes to transfer the loan limits from the act to regulations. This will allow the corporation to react more quickly to the demands of the industry and the ever-changing need for credit. In addition, it will be able to disburse up to 30 per cent of a loan on the basis of available security until mortgage registration and other security arrangements for the loan are completed. It will be able to rebate 5 per cent of the interest on loans provided for in the recent budget and it will be able to authorize the corporation to lend a farming corporation money which is to be used as a grant or loan to one of the children who wants to become involved in the family farm corporation.

Certainly the increase in the number of directors will give the corporation a broader base of expertise in a sector which is so important to the total industry.

This is a very positive piece of legislation. Perhaps in one sense it should have come forward sooner, but I remind hon. members of the opposition that the minister amended this piece of legislation four times during his tenure, every 2.5 years, which is in keeping with the changes that have taken place in the agri-food sector over the past ten years. There have been some very dramatic changes in Canadian agriculture, in terms not only of the number of farms and farmers, but also the size of and investment in those farms. Indeed it is a credit to the minister that he reacted quickly to the changing needs of the industry.

We must bear in mind that the corporation was originally intended only as a lender of last resort. In this context we changed the legislation as needed. It is interesting that credit unions provide approximately 20 per cent of the line of credit to farmers, banks about 23 per cent, and the Farm Credit Corporation about 25 per cent. We are looking at the main source of financing and funding of the agricultural industry in Canada. It has been a good investment for Canadians, especially when we consider that 90 per cent of all loans were made to family farms. At the moment about 93 per cent of all Farm Credit Corporation loans are in good standing. The majority of these loans were made to individuals who could not obtain funding elsewhere. This is a credit not only to the FCC but to the industry as a whole. Since 1959 the FCC has assisted over 160,000 Canadian farmers, 114,000 of whom still have loans with the corporation.

The amendments before us today and the other economic legislation passed in December are the basis upon which we must build if we are to meet the potential outlined in the agri-food strategy last fall. When the amendments about which we are speaking today are passed and the Canagrex legislation is finalized, I trust Canadian farmers and their organizations will move quickly to avail themselves of all available legislation, to expand production and to seek out and develop long-term markets. All these steps were taken at the request of Canadian farmers. This is the way it should happen in a democratic society. The government has reacted in all these areas.

Now that we have these bills before us, it is up to the farmers, their organizations and the provincial governments to move forward. These bills indicate the commitment and concern of the federal government for the need of a healthy agri-food industry. The main financial bill, as far as farmers are concerned, has been amended on four occasions under the term of the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). A huge influx of capital into the industry above that laid out in the legislation would be irresponsible. We all know what happens in such an event—land prices increase very rapidly in value, prices spiral, and it ends up that young farmers are not helped. A huge influx of capital could set off another spiral of inflationary factors and make it completely unrealistic for farmers to expect a monetary return from their farms which would provide them with livelihoods. The situation would be worse than that of today's. The minister has been responsible in the manner in which he has drafted the legislation. We can go forward and make adjustments by regulation, as need arises, and not trigger another round of inflationary prices in the land sector.

The passing of the other legislation to which I referred earlier, the broadening of the base to allow the corporation to borrow outside the government, the raising of the corporation's borrowing authority by 50 per cent, the removing of the age limit, the providing of a disbursement of up to 30 per cent of a loan on the basis of available securities, the allowing of the corporation to respond more quickly to changing conditions, and certainly the allowing of persons to borrow in order to purchase shares of family farm corporations, are all very positive amendments which reflect our changing industry. Last but not least, the broadening of the base of expertise among members of the corporation will result in a better understanding of the needs of farmers across the nation.

In view of the very positive legislation before us today, I hope and trust that Canadian farmers will not only look at this legislation but at the agri-food strategy report which pointed out the opportunities ahead of us. They should look at the Meat Import Act which was passed last December. They should look at the Canagrex legislation which will assist them to take advantage of ever-increasing markets in this hungry world. We should bear in mind that Canada is one of four countries which are net exporters of food. We should focus on agriculture as Canadians working in partnership, farmers working with each other, processors and packers working together, not as Canadians from eastern Canada competing against Canadians from western Canada for the same market.

We should allow our food to be exported in an orderly manner, to bring into focus the potential which exists in Canada.

I call on the provinces to come to agreement as quickly as possible and to bring about a harmonization of the stabilization programs across the nation, rather than each province following a system of their own, or each province competing against others in a manner which puts one province at a very distinct disadvantage to that of another, I firmly believe that we must correct this situation if we are to achieve the great potential which exists in Canada. Agricultural organizations and provincial governments should examine their roles in this very essential industry.

Earlier I referred to the task force report of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. It realized there has to be assistance from provincial governments to producers. It was strongly suggested that the government of Ontario bring forward a loan program to assist its young farmers get established.

It is no accident that that report reflects many of the things that we have brought forward as legislation before this House this last couple of months. Certainly these three major bills have been in the works for many months. But it is the understanding the federal minister had of this industry that what was brought forward was done so in a very responsible manner, a manner that laid the firm foundation to which I referred earlier. The foundations are laid. But the total industry—and I include the farmers, the processors and the packers—the provincial governments and certainly this House all have to examine their roles in these times of changing forces in the marketplace.

When one considers the concentration of power at the retail level and the fact that only a few supermarket chains control about 70 per cent of our retail food sales, if the farmer is to survive then we have to have a countervailing force in the marketplace. The legislation is there, and I trust the farmers of Canada will use it to their advantage.

Certainly the legislation before us today goes a long way toward meeting the requirements of Canadian farmers for the foreseeable future. But no doubt in another couple of years the legislation will have to be amended and updated.

There are other areas to which I think we must respond, but I do not think the time is ripe for it yet. When you set up a financial package, that package has to be prepared, as I indicated earlier, in a very responsible manner, a manner that will not trigger another round of spiralling land values, values that with today's commodity prices could not give a proper return on investment.

It is in this context that I urge hon. members of this House to pass this bill as quickly as possible to relieve the financial problems before us in the agricultural sector of Canada.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Veterans Affairs—Entitlement to retroactive pension payments; the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble)—Finance—Effect of budget on employees meeting increased accommodation costs following transfers. (b) Request that provision affecting mortgages be postponed; the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle)—External Affairs—El Salvador—Holding of democratic elections. (b) Recognition of political movement.

FARM CREDIT ACT
FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak today on Bill C-88. Before I confine my remarks to Bill C-88, I would like to comment on the remarks made by the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson). He pointed out very clearly in his address to the House that the legislation fills the needs, particularly where the federal government is concerned, he said. I would agree that most of the legislation passed in this House meets the needs, particularly where the federal government is concerned. Very little thought, very little attention is given to the people who are being legislated, and I might add legislated to death.

The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex also said that the Small Business Development Bond was made available in the last budget to unincorporated farmers. The hon. member forgot to say unincorporated farmers in dire straits. In other words, the Small Business Development Bond was made available but only to farmers in dire straits. I have yet in my riding to find one farmer who has been approved for a Small Business Development Bond since the budget was introduced last year, even a farmer in dire straits. The terminology itself does not define for the banks or the lending institutions what is dire straits. I agree with the hon. member that investment in the farm community right across this country is indeed an investment in the future of this country. When you get right down to it, you cannot eat refrigerators, or cars, or drink oil.

The producers are men in the farm community who create wealth in our land. It has been estimated that 48 per cent of all the wealth in Canada is created by the farming community.

The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex complimented the minister for the removal of the age limit for farm credit loans. But it was the same government that implemented the act, enacted the legislation which put that provision in in the first place. His comment escapes me. It seems to me that if you put something into legislation and then a few days later remove the provision and say you have done a marvellous thing, you must not forget who it was who put it in the legislation in the first place. Other members of this House have indicated some of the problems that has created. Nevertheless, I am glad that provision was removed.

My hon. friend from Lambton-Middlesex also said that this legislation was put in place at the request of farmers, as it should be in a democratic society.

How about interest rates? Are the farmers supporting the unconscionably high interest rates that are affecting the whole Canadian economy? Are not the people of Canada saying that interest rates are too high? Are Canadians not asking the government to do something about high interest rates? Maybe that kind of input is not accepted in this democratic chamber, as the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex suggests.

How about the fight which the cattlemen are having now with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)? Cattlemen are resisting with all their efforts the controls which they see the Minister of Agriculture trying to impose on them. They are fiercely independent cattle producers and they are saying: "No, government, stay out of our business; we will handle it."

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the remark about controls. I think the hon. member should not be suggesting that the minister will impose controls.

Mr. Shields: If the heat is getting too much for the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex, he should get out of the kitchen.

The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex mentioned that this legislation was introduced at the request of the farmers, as it should in a democratic society. Those are his words as close as I can recall. I am only pointing that out to him. What about the cattlemen? They are expressing the same thing with regard to the farm community. Do these people not belong to the farm community? They are giving input to the minister. What is the minister doing? He is attempting with everything at his disposal to beat them down. It is a disgraceful situation. But, of course, that is another kind of democracy. Maybe it is only democracy and he should return to the words of the hon. member who said that the legislation fills the needs, particularly where the federal government is concerned. I underline that because that is exactly what the hon. member said.

The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) said they were putting an extremely high priority on this bill. It was mentioned two years ago—that is high priority. Last spring the minister was running around saying, "We have to do something about the Farm Credit Corporation. I am going to introduce legislation." It was promised for last fall. Well, we are now into February. Certainly we support this kind of legislation, but if it had been in place when it should have been, we would have something like 250 to 300 farmers still producing. Instead, they have gone bankrupt, or were foreclosed and are no longer producing.

The hon. member said input costs are up and he gave some excellent statistics. Gasoline is up 70 per cent, diesel fuel 80 per cent or more—I am not sure of the figures. The prices of pesticide, fertilizer, machinery and parts are up. Interest rates are up. Then he said that returns are down. That same member then alluded to the Small Business Development Bond, this great saviour mentioned in the budget. I have yet to find one unincorporated farmer in dire straits, healthy straits or any kind of straits, who has received approval under that bond. I challenge other members to bring them forward to see how many we have. They know full well this was a political gimmick. It has been a useful tool, that is all. Perhaps their ghost writers are the same, Mr. Speaker, I do not know, but they both said they support this bill and they want all members to support it and the other legislation that is coming. We have been hearing that for the last two years.

We basically support the bill giving the FCC authority to seek supplementary funds in the private money market. However, we do not support it unless there is a firm commitment by the government that support to the FCC will not be decreased.

Canada's agricultural industry is sincerely hurting. I have had people from every line of business in the agricultural sector phoning me day after day. They can see their life's work going down the tube after 30 or 40 years because, as the hon. member for Algoma said, their costs are up. They say the return is not there, they cannot make it go. Where is the help over the rough edges for those farmers?

This government will guarantee millions upon millions of dollars in loans to prop up the automobile and manufacturing industries, and yet it sits idly by when it comes to a very basic industry such as agriculture. It points to these red herrings: "Look at the Small Business Development Bond." Well, they cannot get it. We are going to allow the FCC to go out and get money elsewhere in the market. They say, "Boy, isn't that a good thing?" Well, it is in one respect.

The budget itself, what did it do? The Minister of Agriculture went around the country saying, "Wait until this legislation comes through, wait until the budget comes through; you will see how much this is going to help. I have the answers for the farmers; wait and see." Well, we waited, and what happened, Mr. Speaker? The government changed the capital gains tax reserve to the detriment of the farmer. It eliminated completely the income-averaging annuity contracts. For expansion purposes it eliminated the Small Business Development Bond to the unincorporated farmer. The budget gave the Farm Credit Corporation $50 million and said, "Spread it around, you have more money to lend." It is estimated by every authoritative source in Canada that they needed at least $450 to $500 million more.

I suggest to you and to all members of the House, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-88, while it is needed, will not provide the necessary short-term relief to enable the farming community to stay in business.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, we will support this legislation, but will the government give a firm commitment that its direct funding to the FCC will continue and not be cut back by way of sleight of hand as were transfer payments to the provinces? Why was this bill introduced three years too late? That is the question. Had it been there when it should have been, those farmers forced into bankruptcy might still be producing, and this government must accept the blame for this idiocy. In addition to those who went into bankruptcy, Mr. Speaker, hundreds were forced out of business through foreclosure and forced sale. This occurred because these are proud people and they said, "No way; I am getting out, getting my money out and getting out of here." These are men who put their hands to the soil years ago; generations of men who came here, Mr. Speaker, and said they were going to break the soil, develop it, grow food and create wealth in this country.

Where is the assistance to get those interest rates down which are affecting the farm community and, indeed, every other community? Where is the assistance which will bring the price of fertilizer to a reasonable level so that the input costs of farmers will not be astronomical? Where is the assistance for fuel oil, diesel fuel and gasoline so that a farmer can go out and plant his crop without being hit by unconscionably higher prices for his fuel? Where is the action toward moving the commodities to market? Where is all this action, this double-tracking? Where will we go with the commodity to feed the world? How will we get it to the world to feed the world? When will the government be prepared to admit to the House that interest rates are not holding down inflation but are adding to it because they are adding to the input costs of the farm community right across Canada? Someone must pay the interest cost.

Farmers are a fiercely independent lot. They do not ask for much. They only ask what any normal working man requests; that is, a little bit of reward for their efforts. Why should a farmer not expect a small return on his investment, not only his investment in money but also in time and effort? Is he not entitled to this? He certainly is entitled.

What would happen tomorrow if there were no farmers available in Canada to produce the food that we eat? We have long victimized farmers and the agricultural community. They have long been victimized. It is time that we looked at that problem seriously. We are prepared to subsidize prospective laywers so that they can go through university. Has Your Honour ever figured out the cost? I wonder if anyone has ever sat down to figure out the cost of putting one lawyer, one doctor, one dentist or one engineer through school. Then a government like this comes along and puts in a national energy policy and a budget so that the only ones who will benefit, of course, will be the lawyers and the accountants who stay behind, but the rest of the professions move out, saying, "Let us move to the States or find another place to live."

I think it is time that we seriously looked at the agricultural community and did right by it. The hon. member for Algoma mentioned increasing the number on the board of the Farm Credit Corporation from five to seven members. He stated that the workload of the Farm Credit Corporation is becoming so tremendous, so monumental, that they must get two more men. The board of directors of the Farm Credit Corporation does not do the day to day business; surely, the hon. member for Algoma knows that. The board sets policy; surely, the hon. member for Algoma knows that. I say to hon. members that five men can set as much policy as seven men, and can set it clearly and concisely. I would suggest, in all humility, that the expansion of the board from five to seven members is just another opportunity for the present Liberal government to do a little more pork-barrelling.

Mr. Smith: We never do that.

Mr. Shields: It will be interesting to see who the appointees will be.

An hon. Member: Jimmy Coutts.

Mr. Shields: However, one can bet that they will be good Liberal supporters.

An hon. Member: And competent.

Mr. Shields: Yes, I agree with the hon. member. He said "incompetent". That is correct.

An hon. Member: "And" competent.

Mr. Shields: They will be incompetent.

Mr. Regan: Be nice!

Miss MacDonald: Why?

Mr. Shields: The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex said, "Boy, this new agri-food strategy for Canada will be accepted and it will be an excellent program!" He quoted from studies which are being done. I wonder if he has spoken to the farming or to the agricultural community.

An hon. Member: Probably not.

Mr. Shields: Farmers are uneasy about the food plans. I will quote from "Agricultural Alberta", written by John Schmidt who, very briefly, states:

> What makes the farmers uncomfortable is the fact the government wants to pump up production without defining or signifying any specific markets abroad. There is a sort of nebulous feeling that somewhere out there are people who will eat a lot of Canadian food—and there is a panic to supply it.

An hon. Member: That is what Canagrex is all about.

Mr. Shields: We have had this before, have we not? Farmers do not need extraordinary memories to go back in memory to the early seventies when the government persuaded them to pump up the beef production to fill a non-existent need. They still have not recovered from that one.

Mr. Regan: Tell us about something they did right.

Mr. Shields: Yet the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex hails this agri-policy, this agri-food strategy, as the end-all. Again, I wonder where democracy comes in. The farm community is pretty skeptical. Are you listening to the farm community and the agricultural community, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Smith: We are listening to you.

Mr. Shields: I am glad the hon. member is listening to me. I hope he is learning something.

I can remember times when farmers were told to plant barley from fencerow to fencerow,—

An hon. Member: Concession road to concession road.

Mr. Shields: —when the markets were lacking, there were no markets, and we all know what happened. We see headline after headline: "Farm bankruptcies up 28 per cent." Nothing can help such a situation. The Farm Credit Corporation will not help that. The help must be directed at the commodity price. We must somehow get the farmers over these short-term dire straits they are in. What is the forecast for 1982? A drop in farm incomes is seen. In every paper that one wants to pick up one reads that every economist across the country is forecasting a drop in farm income for 1982. We are still not addressing that, to our shame.

Another headline states, "1982 Forecast to be Even Tougher Year for Farmers Caught in a Cost-Price Squeeze." This comes from the economist for the federal Department of Agriculture, George Andrusiak. He states:

> Farm returns are expected to drop or, at best, remain stable for most agricultural products, while virtually every farm cost is expected to rise. The result is that the cost-price squeeze will tighten its grip on farmers right across the country.

How does this affect the manufacturing sector? Indeed, how does it affect every sector? Farm machinery sales have been hit by revised tax regulation. It goes right to the budget. The farmer does not have his capital cost allowance to write off and he will not buy.

What did the Minister of Agriculture do? He spent a good part of last fall running around the country, blaming the banks for the high interest rates. Even a neophyte minister with no understanding whatsoever of an economic situation knows full well that it is not the banks that control interest rates but government policy. The policy of this government is to keep interest rates high.

Few sectors of the economy are as dependent on borrowed money as is agriculture. Farmers need money to start their operations and to remain in business. Most of their costs are fixed. They cannot cut labour costs because labour is not that kind of factor. They cannot cut their feed bill because the animals would starve. If they do not fertilize this year, they will not get as high a yield next year. That is something the members of this House do not understand.

The national farm debt for just over 300,000 farmers has reached $16.6 billion. With 10 per cent interest rates, most producers can manage, but they cannot manage at 18 or 20 per cent. Because they do not control the price of the commodity they produce, they cannot pass on their increased interest rate costs to the consumer. That is what makes the farmer hurt.

When the farmer hurts, the commerce of the country hurts. Commercial enterprise everywhere gets into trouble. One need only look at what happened to Massey-Ferguson, as well as the implement dealers in farm communities across this country. If we look at the farmers in the farm community, we see what is happening.

The government should adopt a program which would place a moratorium on farm debt, stop foreclosures and forced sales. This government has it in its power to raise interest rates in excess of 20 per cent in order to protect the dollar and, so they say, fight inflation. They must therefore have it in their power to place a moratorium on farm debt.

It is this government which provides millions of dollars for foreign aid and programs which at best are questionable. It provides loans to such countries as Mexico and supports sales to certain foreign countries at very low interest rates, yet it leaves the most basic and fundamental resource in this country, namely agriculture, with a high interest rate policy.

There should be an immediate infusion of $500 million into the Farm Credit Corporation in order to subsidize interest rates and increase the loan programs for farmers. This must be done because if we do not do this, the day will come when there will be shortages in the supermarkets in the large urban centres in some very fundamental areas.

Just once the government should adopt the suggestion of a couple of members opposite. The hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex talked about democracy. Let us bring in the farmers who till the soil, get their hands dirty doing it, and plant the crops that we need, to help us draft a policy. We should get away from this ivory tower in which we sit. Let the farm representatives monitor the Small Business Development Bond. The government should come forward with a bit of truth and honesty and say what the Small Business Development Bond is doing, "It is not doing the job we thought it would, so let's change it". For once the government should say it made a mistake and is prepared to make the necessary changes.

What is wrong with allowing farmers to use the Small Business Development Bond to build up their operations? If some farmers could get a loan against their equity, they could make their operation much more productive, they could streamline it. Instead, we have the government saying that the Small Business Development Bond is only for those unincorporated farmers who are in dire straits.

We should create a market insurance plan for farmers, one to which both the federal and provincial governments can contribute as well as the farmers. This would protect the income of farmers who do not have access to the unemployment insurance offices. We must be more enlightened and find a way of doing this. I am sure we can. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) had the floor.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would like to sum up by saying that we on this side of the House support this legislation provided that the government does not intend to cut back on its financial commitment to the Farm Credit Corporation. Other than for reasons of patronage, I fail to see why the government proposes to expand the board of the Farm Credit Corporation from five to seven members. To me, it is purely and simply pork-barrelling.

We on this side believe that the Farm Credit Corporation should be provided with an additional $500 million because this legislation will not solve the difficulties which farmers are experiencing today or provide the short-term funding which they need. The extra $50 million provided for in the budget is not sufficient. There is still no help for the farmers on a short-term basis. This is an oversight by the government which must be addressed. The legislation before us is too little too late.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the tabling of Bill C-88, I should like to give a brief history of the Farm Credit Corporation, outlining the progress made since it was founded, especially since the corporation is 22 years old today. In this brief overview we shall see how the corporation has progressed, how many millions of dollars have been invested in Canada's agriculture and finally, I shall say a few words about how our agricultural sector has evolved and stress the energy and initiative shown by our Canadian farmers. When I say that Canadian farmers have shown energy and initiative during the past few years, Mr. Speaker, I should add that, although it is often said that millions of dollars are poured into Canada's agriculture, I feel that if every dollar spent in Canadian industry had been as productive as the same dollar spent on agriculture, we might not be experiencing as great a recession as we are now. Let me give an example. Only 20 years ago, one farmer was able to feed not more than ten people, while today he is able to feed at least 40. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it must be recognized that investment in the agricultural sector has been very productive. Now, if I may, I shall start my brief history.

The Farm Credit Corporation was founded in 1959 with a capital of $8 million. The purpose was to provide funds for a first mortgage, to purchase a farm, fertilizer, seed, livestock, equipment and buildings and also to improve land and pay off debts. The loan ceiling at the time was $20,000 or 75 per cent of the value of the farm, while loans of up to $26,000 were granted to farmers under 45 with at least five years' experience in farming. A second type of loan consisted in a 40 per cent loan guarantee on livestock and implements. In 1961, the corporation's capital was increased to $12 million.

Regulations were amended to allow for the increase in value of grazing land when part of the land was leased from the Crown. In 1962, capital was increased to $16 million. In 1964, the loan ceiling rose from $20,000 to $40,000 per unit. Loans were authorized to farmers wishing to help a family member get started in farming. More people became eligible for loans which were authorized for a wider variety of reasons. In 1968, capital was increased to $40 million. Loans could go as high as $80,000 when the farm had two owner-operators, and up to $100,000 with three owner-operators. In that same year, it became possible to obtain loans representing 90 per cent of the value of land and livestock, provided one of the owner-operators was under 35 and had proved to be an outstanding administrator. In 1972, capital was increased to $6 million and the loan ceiling raised to $100,000 for first and second category farmers. The minimum age of 21 was abolished. Only Canadian citizens and landed immigrants were eligible for loans. In 1975, the corporation's capital was raised to $100 million. Farmers under 35 became eligible for loans of up to $150,000. The FCC also authorized loans representing 100 per cent of the market value of land, livestock and implements. In 1978, capital was increased to $150 million. The FCC authorized loans of up to $200,000 for a farm enterprise headed by a qualified operator and up to $400,000 for a farm with more than one qualified operator.

Mr. Speaker, when Bill C-88 is passed, the FCC will have a capital of $125 million. It is clear there has been a substantial improvement in procedures and increase in capital of the Farm Credit Corporation. In 1981, 75,000 FCC borrowers were active in the agricultural sector throughout Canada. This was a brief outline of the Farm Credit Corporation, which is 22 years old this year. Of course I had to omit a number of important facts which would have taken too long to enumerate. In any case, from this brief history it is clear that the FCC has continued to progress and to adapt to the growing needs of modern agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on enumerating a number of interesting and useful statistics, but I prefer to discuss the importance of investment in agriculture today and the reasons why the FCC evolved as it has. I would like to stress the importance of our modern farming operations. People say that millions of dollars are spent on agriculture and they wonder why. Let me take a dairy farm as an example. Dairy herds are extremely valuable, and because of the rigours of our winters, farm buildings must meet very high standards, especially barns for dairy herds which are very sensitive to cold temperatures, all of which requires a considerable investment. Farmland has increased tremendously in value, so that prospective farmers are faced with very substantial expenditures if they are to purchase farmland and farm machinery.

A few years ago, a 100 horsepower tractor could be bought for $10,000. Ten years later, the same tractor is worth $35,000. The House will agree that all these investments constitute a considerable burden on the farmer, and it is only fair that we should help farmers by granting them broader credit facilities. Another example is our grain producers in western Canada, with thousands of acres of very valuable, very fertile and very high-yield land. Grain producers need huge silos and storage room to keep seed, fertilizers and farm marchinery, all of which runs into thousands if not millions of dollars per farm unit. I should also like to say a few words about the market gardening sector, which is certainly not negligible and requires far more specialized equipment for its highly specialized operations.

We could talk about commercial production and about large scale potato production in Ontario, in Quebec, in Prince Edward Island, in New Brunswick and elsewhere. We could talk about pieces of land. With respect to commercial producers, especially in southern Ontario where farms are of outstanding quality and very expensive to buy, we could mention the fact that those people must have very well equipped and very modern refrigerated warehouses. We could mention the seeds as well as the huge quantities of fertilizers and pesticides which those producers must use. We could also mention the machinery and the marketing costs to point out once again the need for financing which is even better geared to the requirements of our ever-expanding contemporary agriculture which also has to cope with the rising costs of new machinery, lands and all the inputs required for that production.

We often meet people who still believe that agriculture has not evolved, and that is why we must learn more about the evolution of Canada's agriculture. And of course we must also talk about the risks involved. We know that the farmer has a plant without a roof and he has to protect himself against a great many natural elements. In a plant with a roof it is possible to program the production or the sales, to predict months in advance which way things will go. But on a farm the producer is up against natural elements such as drought, ground humidity and climatic conditions which often are not conducive to plant growth, a whole series of factors which will result in lower yield. There are not just risks in farming, however, there is indeed a very positive side to it. When there are risks, the farmer does have means to protect himself, such as stabilization payments and crop insurance which are funded by the various levels of government, federal and provincial, and the producer as well. We also have marketing boards, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to refer briefly to the establishment of some of them.

Recently, many Canadian organizations have criticized our marketing boards. I admit they might not be the ideal or perfect instrument, but I invite anyone who has a better answer to tell us about it while there is still time, so that our farmers can continue to make a living in agriculture and consumers can continue to pay reasonable prices, because if the farmer cannot have a decent return, the consumer will necessarily have to pay for it. In this regard, I disagree completely with the suggestion of the Economic Council of Canada that we should abolish the marketing boards, in this way Canadian farmers could no longer control their production. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I believe that if anyone is aware of the situation and knows what he wants, it is certainly the Canadian farm producer. As I said at the outset it would be a good thing if the Canadian industry as a whole could be as effective as our Canadian farmers, because if one sector of our economy has remained healthy and prosperous, it is certainly agriculture.

Some sectors obviously have problems. Western beef producers have problems. Eastern pork producers are having difficulties, but these are obviously cyclical productions. Hon. members on both sides of the House who want the Canadian farmer to be successful will find an answer, and I hope that they can do so as soon as possible to avoid a disaster. I said earlier that as recently as 20 years ago, one farm producer could feed ten people and that he now feeds 40. I believe that those who read such statements and who are aware of the dynamic attitude of the Canadian farmer can only urge the Canadian government to make more funds available to the Canadian agricultural industry since we have positive proof of the evolution and dynamic nature of our farm industry. I would like to give an example of what I mean. We have to support our farmers and provide them with necessary mechanisms even though it has often been said in the past that farmers are always subsidized, but that is where all discussions and arguments stop.

As a member who is somewhat aware of the problems of our farm producers, I have argued with people on both sides of the House, that the Canadian government should continue to pay $2.66 a hundredweight for milk exports. There are two schools of thought in this regard. Some people simply want this subsidy to be abolished because they feel the farmer is oversubsidized. However, if this subsidy of $2.66 were abolished tomorrow morning, dairy products, mainly butter, and also cheese, could increase by about 40 cents a pound. This may be called a direct subsidy to the farmer, but I wonder if it is not the consumer who benefits most from it is not the main beneficiary. I could give many similar examples, but I believe that this one is enough and that those who read my statements or hear me now will realize that the farmer needs to be supported and that this is always to the advantage of the consumer.

In the past, every time I have sat on a committee on agriculture and elsewhere, I have always invited those who design or write legislation to treat farmers more and more as businessmen. I have even thought of suggesting regulations which would give farmers an incentive to make advance payments to replenish the Farm Credit Corporation funds, which are often depleted on account of a large number of requests. I reiterate now that proposal because I think it would be an excellent way to have instalments paid ahead of time and the funds of the Farm Credit Corporation replenished.

Last year, I stated in a committee that if a farmer were allowed to make advance payments of $1,000, $2,000, $3,000 and up to $5,000 annually, such instalments would not be considered as income and would be tax free. I can assure you that the more productive farmers would be encouraged to anticipate their payments and that would inspire others to do likewise. The tax-exempt status of such payments would be similar to that of subsidies enjoyed by owners of businesses in the private sector. Once more, I hope the suggestion will be considered and that others will help support the reasoning behind it. I would also be in favour of including an interest rate review as part of the reorganization of the FCC, so that when a farmer contracts a loan, it is not "closed" for the entire duration of the loan, which may be 25 years. A few months ago I wrote to the Minister of Agriculture to suggest this amendment. Nowadays it would be quite feasible. We have 74,000 loans outstanding across Canada. It would be easy to have a kind of automatic computerized update whenever interest rates drop by an average of 2 per cent, at which time all farm credit loans would be adjusted instead of waiting 15 or 20 years, whenever the loans are due.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should all congratulate the present minister, who has constantly been amending the Farm Credit Act, and we should also congratulate him on the birth last week of the new Canagrex corporation, which is to be the umbrella organization for a host of agricultural agencies that can be expected to stimulate Canadian farm production. In the past we have had some serious problems with marketing. That is understandable, because we have many commodities that are now being produced under the quota system. However, with Canagrex, I believe people will begin to understand that we must be aggressive in our approach to export markets, especially since our Canadian products have an excellent reputation worldwide. Once more, I am convinced that with the energy and initiative they are capable of mustering and with all the tools and structures that have been put into place in recent years, Canadian farmers will be satisfactorily equipped to cope with difficult times such as we are now experiencing. As I already pointed out, the fact that equipment, land and in fact any input that is part of agriculture today is tremendously expensive, the availability of additional funds will encourage young people to enter the farming business in this country, and if our farmers remain productive and dynamic, I am sure that all Canadian consumers will benefit. I sincerely hope that Bill C-88 is passed, for the good of all Canadian farmers.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure at this time to address a few remarks to the House on Bill C-88 which is designed to help the agricultural community. Half of the riding of Simcoe North is engaged in the agricultural economy, thus this bill is very important to the people who live there and deal mainly in beef cattle, dairy cattle and cash crops. I should like to address a few remarks to the specifics of the bill—the purpose of allowing the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow supplementary funding, the interest rate rebate provisions of the budget, the increase in the membership of the board of directors, and the removal of the 35-year age limit. But before doing so, I want to deal with some of the problems which we know interface with the provisions of the increase in farm credit funding.

In the budget of November 12, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) promised additional funding to farmers in the amount of $45 million for loans. The House will know that is a drop in the bucket compared with what is needed by the agricultural community in Canada. The Liberal Party, and in particular the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), has made a litany of promises throughout 1980 and 1981 as to what the budget would do for farmers. As farm bankruptcies rose 109 per cent from 1979 to 1981, we on this side of the House called for reasonable assistance to Canadian farmers. This bill goes partly toward providing that assistance, but since the situation has worsened, there has been a need to provide additional long-term funding.

What has happened? We provided $45 million when the Canadian Federation of Agriculture calculated that $1 billion was necessary to do the job for Canadian farmers. The Liberal government provided $50 million, of which approximately $11 million was allocated to Ontario. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture calculated that $11 million would not suffice for even one county in Ontario. Representatives of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture appeared before the Progressive Conservative committee meeting in Toronto. They presented a very well-reasoned brief in which they talked about the needs of the farming community. Its president, Ralph Barrie, a farmer himself, was present in person. There was an excellent exchange of viewpoints. He suggested to us, and provided us with the facts, that the agricultural community is hurting and that the lack of concern of the Liberal Party is criminal.

Funding for farm credit has declined over the past five years. In 1975 the Farm Credit Corporation lent $641 million; in 1980 it lent $509 million. The $45 million suggested in the budget translates into 450 loans of $100,000 each. This is a pittance when compared with the capital requirements of a Canadian farmer today. It pales even further when one considers that during the first ten months of 1980, 230 farmers across Canada went bankrupt. Over 50 per cent of those bankruptcies were in Ontario. While I welcome the fact that there is more funding, I point out to the House that it is a pittance. The hon. member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) indicated that in the 1980-81 year the Farm Credit Corporation had only provided for 17 per cent of the applications which came to it.

In the November budget presented by the Minister of Finance there was a provision of $5 million to be used to reduce interest rates for farmers. This is an insult to Canadian farmers. They are bearing the brunt of the Liberal high interest rate policy. Farm bankruptcies, power of sale proceedings and foreclosures are all a result of the Liberal high interest rate policy. The government will provide $5 million to reduce interest rates for farmers. At the same time it is considering a loan of $198.5 million through the Canada Development Corporation to allow a Canadian company to bid on a pipeline contract in the Soviet Union. In fact, three interested companies are from Montreal. This is a very sad commentary on the priorities of the Liberal Party. It is more concerned about more money going to the Soviet Union by way of loan or to an engineering firm in Montreal than it is about Canadian farmers one end of the country to the other.

I read about the increase from five to seven on the board of directors. For an extra $50 billion it is hard to understand why the board must be increased by 40 per cent. I am sure the House can imagine the desperate search which is being conducted throughout the country to get people to admit they are Liberals so that they can sit on the board of directors. It must be difficult times for one to admit being a Liberal in order to be part of the board of directors of the Farm Credit Corporation. Jim Coutts is a name which comes to mind. He is a very eminent chap who took a run at Spadina. Perhaps he will take a run at Broadview-Greenwood. Perhaps he will take a look at some other ridings. Mr. Coutts has a very distinguished electoral career. Perhaps he would be quick to get on the board of directors of the Farm Credit Corporation. One might think he may even be able to clear his conflict of interests faster than Senator Austin in order to approach that eminent position.

Speaking about the administration of the Farm Credit Corporation, I should like to point out that from my standpoint in Simcoe county, as I indicated to the minister, I find it to be very practical. If the minister could get some of the practical approach of the Farm Credit Corporation people in Simcoe County to be translated to the Federal Business Development Bank, business people would be on his side. The Farm Credit Corporation deals with applications, either approves them or turns them down, whereas the Federal Business Development Bank dances business people around with requests for more and more information, and eventually turns them down. Basically, we in my county are happy with the people who review the loans and make the decisions.

We on this side of the House applaud the removal of the 35-year age limit. Unfortunately it was left in and the government did not remove it before now. At least now it will be possible for every applicant to stand on his or her own merits regardless of age when applying for funds to establish a farming operation. We welcome this step because we do not think anyone should be denied an opportunity to enter the farming community because of age.

While dealing with the financial provisions of the bill, I would like to comment upon the Small Business Development Bond. Much has been made in the House about the extension of the provisions of the Small Business Development Bond to the agricultural community. As it was originally conceived, the extension of the bond to that community would have been a boon, just as it would have been a boon to the business community. But the same provision was put on the bond for farmers as it was for business operations. Now we have a criterion that one must be in desperate or dire straits, or in financial difficulty, before the government comes to the aid of this very important segment of our economy. We can do without widgets, but we cannot do without farm produce or the food which can be grown in our soil. It is about time the government put a priority on the farming community. If it wanted to do something, it could take away financial difficulty. It could expand the financing available for the Farm Credit Corporation. Canadian agriculture deserves a higher priority from the Liberal government than it is getting at the present time.

We welcome the bill. However, we do not think the bill has gone far enough because Canadians are suffering from the impact of high interest rates. The budget did very little for them and, for that matter, for anybody else, but we are pleased to see at least one thing come forward from this government to help the farming community.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to be able to say a few words with respect to Bill C-88, an act respecting loans to farmers. I commend the minister for finally bringing in this bill. As hon. members are aware, the bill will provide additional funds. It has been mentioned by several speakers on our side that this bill will increase the complement on the board of directors from five to seven. However, some of us wonder whether the minister has a couple of defeated Liberal candidates in mind for these lucrative positions in which they will not be overworked.

Mr. Crouse: He will take one himself.

Mr. Whelan: People appointed to the Farm Credit Corporation are not appointed because of political affiliation.

Mr. Darling: I am pleased to hear the minister say that the people will not be appointed because of political affiliation. I have heard it said before that people are not appointed to boards because of political affiliation but because of ability. However, the strange thing is that appointees are always Liberals and not of any other political persuasion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: If you check, you will find that to be incorrect.

Mr. Darling: In any event, we will wait to see what happens when these appointments are made.

The budget approved is $55 million. While that is a substantial amount of money, it is a far cry from what is really needed. We hope the minister will be able to do a job and sell the cabinet the need for additional sums. It will not take long to use up $55 million.

Everyone agrees that the Farm Credit Corporation has been of great assistance to agriculture and to the industry in Canada over the number of years since its institution, which I believe was in 1959, some 22 years ago. However, this bill has been delayed too long, but it is better late than never. I see the minister paying some attention. Better never late; I think he would agree with that statement.

My colleague, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) was minister of agriculture in the Clark administration during 1979. During that brief period, $50 million was provided for additional farm credit lending. The hon. member for Elgin was planning to provide an additional $100 million in 1980, an additional $150 million in 1981, with $200 million to be added in 1982. This was necessary, in his view, just to keep up with inflation and the rising land costs in the country.

I think we are all in agreement that these costs will not decrease but will actually increase. Farmers require credit. It is important that Canadian people understand that about 15 per cent of the costs paid out by the agricultural industry is for interest. Credit is the number one problem facing farmers in Canada today, and the cost of borrowing money is still very high. Let us hope that the minister will see to it that there is no increase in rates but rather a decrease. The rate of 16.75 per cent is quite a bit for a farmer to carry. The minister, although he is not a farmer now, has been a farmer and is, I am sure, sympathetic.

The provision is in there for a reduced rate of five points, I believe, which gives an interest rate of 11.75 per cent for those farmers who are in dire straits. I have had farmers come to me stating that they have applied to the Farm Credit Corporation but have been told they are not on the verge of bankruptcy and, therefore, are not eligible for the 11.75 per cent rate. It would certainly seem that farmers who are reasonably successful and who want to consolidate some high mortgages, which they may have privately, should be able to get that break on the lower rate.

I live in a riding, part of which is eligible for DREE grants. Although with the two new super ministers I do not know whether DREE will be washed out, but the minister responsible did state that DREE grants are still available. Considerable money—and I am talking literally of millions of dollars—is being given to industry to subsidize industries to open up in certain areas. I say to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that subsidized loans or interest rates are just as fair for producers, the people who are feeding Canadians. Our producers feed not only Canadians but a great many other people in the world. Canadian farmers do a great job. I believe a speaker from the government side said that a farmer is now able to produce enough food to feed 40 people. That is a pretty good record and a point I want to emphasize.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has stated that the Farm Credit Corporation provision is disgracefully inadequate and is a sop to the farmers' request for real help. As I mentioned before, the $45 million provided in the budget allows only $100,000 for 450 farmers, yet a farmer needs about $200,000 minimum to start up a farm today. This means only 225 farmers would be eligible for the amount that has been approved.

Many farmers have been looking forward to this legislation hoping that it will be the solution to their various serious financial problems. The government actually made matters worse with this stupid and disastrous budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on November 12, 1981. I am quite sure that we cannot blame the Minister of Agriculture for that.

I assume that the minister is endeavouring to encourage farmers to stay in business and to produce food for the good of Canada, whereas the Minister of Finance has done everything he and his brain trust of bureaucrats could do to make things difficult for farmers to stay in business. In all probability the budget will cause additional farm bankruptcies to the 261 that took place last year.

The budget now penalizes the retirement income of farmers. After having worked all their lives to provide food for Canadians and thousands of others beyond our borders, they are now being penalized when they decide to retire and sell their farms. Farmers were under the impression they could arrange a pension from the proceeds of their farm sale.

Valuation for capital gains is also unrealistic. This valuation should be upgraded. The minister is well aware of this suggestion. It is a long-time election promise of his government. The very idea of calculating capital gains on the basis of values as at December 31, 1971, is absolutely senseless, especially when we consider the rising costs to farmers in this country and the price of farmland per acre. Many farms have doubled in price.

Some have tripled over the past ten years. The price of necessary farm equipment has doubled and tripled as well. This means that a farm that could have been purchased ten years ago for around $100,000 could be worth as much as $300,000 or even $400,000 today. The former Minister of Agriculture, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), suggested a far better solution with respect to capital gains tax on farmers would be a once-in-a-lifetime exemption for a bona fide farmer. Having been a real estate broker for a number of years, Mr. Speaker, I am very familiar with the inflated value of land over the past ten years, and I would therefore emphasize that the very least the government could do would be to index the capital gains.

I would also point out that it is not only the farmer who is hurting with respect to capital gains, but also many other small businessmen who are retiring and want to dispose of their business and assets and are being taxed at exorbitant rates. Prior to the Finance Minister's monstrosity on November 12, farmers and businessmen could dispose of their farms and businesses and place the funds in income-averaging contracts and RRSPs. These assets represent their pension as neither of them have pension schemes with the government or large corporations. This new harsh and restrictive clause, even though it has been amended slightly, is most unfair, and let us hope the minister will recant. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will have a word of prayer with his colleague, the Minister of Finance, or better still take him out to the woodshed and talk to him as a father would to his son with respect to capital gains and capital cost allowances.

There is another item in the budget which is going to hurt farmers; that is, the few who are solvent enough to make a reasonable profit and be eligible for taxation. I refer to the capital cost allowance. That allowance is as important to the farmer as it is to all other businessmen. Farmers purchase machinery and it wears out, or is constantly being improved, and therefore farmers help the economy by purchasing new equipment.

The Department of National Revenue makes it very clear they recognize capital cost allowances. Are they also aware that if this new regulation is put in, it not only hurts the farmers but the equipment dealers and other businesses which provide the needed equipment to keep farms operating as they should? Revenue Canada, in their 1981 farmer's income tax guide, recognize that over a number of years assets wear out or become obsolete. However, in the budget it also states:

> In many cases the capital cost allowance rates are deliberately set in excess of economic depreciation rates in order to provide incentives to certain types of investments in the economy.

Then they came up with this change:

> For assets acquired after November 12, 1981, taxpayers will be permitted to claim only one half of the normal full year's capital cost allowance in the year of acquisition.

This is another backward step by the Minister of Finance's munchkins. They have sold the minister a bill of goods that some equipment and machinery is being depreciated at much faster rates than is warranted. They seem to think that if a farmer or businessman only gets half the depreciation the first year, because he can get the rest later on he is not being hurt.

I am quite certain, Mr. Speaker, that many farmers will, because of this, try to make do a year or two longer, and this will hurt the economy in general. I know one particular farmer—a quite successful one—who, when he read the budget, purchased two very expensive pieces of farm machinery. He would not have done so if the depreciation had remained the same. Now, I will admit that was good for the implement dealer and the farmer, but in all probability there are a great many others who are not in the financial position to run out and purchase new equipment prior to the budget date.

It can be concluded, therefore, that farm machinery manufacturers and dealers will be hurt by this change. The dealers have already pointed out that it has had an adverse effect on farm machinery sales.

The Minister of Agriculture is well aware of the serious situation of farmers. In my own riding there are many successful farmers who have been farming for years and yet are feeling the pinch and having difficulty staying afloat because of high interest rates. The minister visited the town of Powassan in my riding to officiate at the opening of a farm supply business. He was met by many worried and, yes, irate farmers who wanted to know what he was going to do to help them. Every weekend in my constituency office there are many farmers who telephone or come in personally to see what can be done to enable them to borrow money at reasonable interest rates so they can remain in business. The rate proposed by the minister through the corporation to help those in dire straits is excellent. The unfortunate part is that a good many of the farmers not on the verge of bankruptcy but feeling the pinch of high interest rates do not qualify, and to me this is absolutely crazy.

Mention has also been made by previous speakers, in fact by my colleague, the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), of the Small Business Development Bond. This program has now been enlarged to include partnerships and individual entrepreneurs, which had been restricted to limited companies. However, the kicker in this, the bad part about it, is that the only ones now eligible for the bond are those again from that little village in western Ontario, New Dundee, I believe it was, which changed its name to Dire Straits. In other words, you have to prove you are in dire straits, almost on the verge of bankruptcy, but then when your books show that, you are not eligible. To me that bond, as well as the new low rates of the FCC, should be available to progressive farmers to perhaps consolidate a mortgage or purchase equipment to modernize their operations.

Many people have pointed out that there will be more and more farmers leaving agriculture and not finding buyers for their farms. The return is not adequate, the cost of going into farming is astronomical, and a good many of the farmers are saying, "No thanks, include me out." The sale of farms to young people has stopped because of tight money and many of the very negative regulations in the budget. One of the worst regulations has to do with the sale of a farm with a small downpayment, where a farmer may take as little as 10 per cent down and, in ordinary circumstances, would take the balance in effect as a pension for himself and his wife. Even if he were able to get all cash in a sale, the capital gains regulation is very unfair because the government would extract its pound of flesh, often making the deal very, very unattractive.

So a good many farmers who might have been considering retirement are probably going to say, "Well, no, we are going to hang on for awhile. We will work out something, lease the farm or do something so that the government will not be able to get their clutches on all this money." I think they are going to be saying, "Well, we will wait for the next election. We know the present government will be defeated and the government which will succeed it, which of course, as we are all aware, will be a Progressive Conservative government, will certainly amend that stupid regulation."

An hon. Member: Don't be too sure about that. Wait for a couple of months.

• (2100)

Mr. Darling: We will wait for a couple, as the hon. member for the NDP side said, and who knows? One never knows. Stranger things can happen, but I remain to be convinced on that.

Mr. Taylor: We can wait but can the country.

Mr. Darling: That is exactly right. The Farm Credit Corporation has outstanding loans under the Farm Credit Act of March 31, 1980, a considerable number of which may be of interest to many of our listeners. Ontario has $917,487,000. The purpose of the Farm Credit Corporation is to help as many young farmers as possible, and older ones. About 27.9 per cent of those loans approved last year were used to purchase additional land, compared with 29.8 per cent the previous year. Other loans went toward the following: new units, 24.4 per cent; permanent improvements, 16.5 per cent; mortgages, 12.3 per cent; other debts, 12 per cent; equipment, 2.3 per cent; livestock, 2.2 per cent and miscellaneous 2.4 per cent. The repayment record for 1980-81 remained favourable. Out of the $75.2 million due, 89.4 per cent was repaid.

During the year, 91.9 per cent of the $279.1 million in due interest was repaid. At the end of the last fiscal year, 93 per cent of the active accounts of the Farm Credit Corporation were in order, with 93.2 per cent the year before. Real losses amounted to $1,537,000 or 1.4 per cent of the portfolio of the Farm Credit Corporation.

During the fiscal year April, 1981, to January, 1982, the Farm Credit Corporation approved 4,328 loans for nearly $429 million. Estimates reveal that the total budget for this year will reach nearly $455 million. The major purpose of the majority of the loans is to purchase additional land, followed by the purchase of new units. The number of loans for debt consolidation purposes has increased markedly because of the high interest rates, which reached as high as 27.1 per cent in September of 1981.

As I mentioned before, we will certainly support this bill. We think it is long overdue. We hope that the Minister of Agriculture will be able to prevail upon his colleagues in cabinet to get a good deal more than the $55 million, which is a mere drop in the bucket at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) come to the session tonight on this bill, the Farm Credit Act. I think it has been intimated by hon. members who have previously spoken that this is one bit of agricultural legislation which has stood the test of time more than any other. It has not needed serious amendment. At the same time, during the 20-odd years since 1959 that this legislation has been in existence, we have seen a growth rate of productivity in the agricultural sector of about 7 per cent a year compared to a growth rate of about 2 per cent to 3 per cent in the rest of Canada's industrial segments. There is no question but that this first attempt to get a modern farm credit system in Canada has been a success. My remarks tonight will deal almost exclusively with the philosophy of the legislation. I would like to test that philosophy against the amendment we have before us.

The philosophy of the farm credit corporation act of 1959 can be shown by contrasting it against the old farm loans board which was set up in 1934 under the farm loans act of that year. The principles used in the original legislation in 1934 were for the purpose of meeting an existing condition. Many farmers were bankrupt, no one would buy their land and they had no way of paying their debts. Therefore, the government of that time set up the farmers and creditors rearrangement act whereby all a farmer's creditors would come in and calculate how much of a debt would be repaid under the new level of prices, which was very low. All creditors dropped the amounts of their claims and each was repaid a certain proportion of their loan. That act had to be followed by a farm loan act which lent money to the farmers to help repay some of the creditors who were fairly highly secured, getting them off the farmers' backs. The farmers borrowed money from the farm loans board to repay some of these creditors.

That legislation pioneered a new philosophy, but as the act was administered over the succeeding years it became a very conservative type of operation where loans were only made on the basis of a farmer's assets. The potential profit of money put toward new productivity was not considered. It simply acted like a bank. If a man had $10,000 worth of assets, he might take out a loan of $4,000. Very few risks were taken and there was very little development of new technology under that philosophy.

The philosophy of the 1959 legislation was to consider the potential profit if a man were loaned $10,000, $20,000 or $30,000, and if the loan were put to proper use. Therefore, people began working on the Farm Credit Corporation with the farmer, out of the various provincial branches, to get a plan ready. Their philosophy was that if the farmer spent his money, it would increase his income, not only enabling him to pay back his debt but also leaving a nice, handsome net gain for the farmer during the repayment period.

That legislation was conditional on the power of the government of the day to persuade those who worked for the new Farm Credit Corporation to change their philosophy of lending on assets, not caring a hoot what the farmer did with the money so long as he could pay it back, to one of trying to help the farmer increase his growth and productivity, which would benefit the whole country. The Farm Credit Corporation grew and expanded on that basis. However, recently, in the last ten or 12 years, I have noticed a reversal of philosophy by those administering farm credit. Only ten or 15 years ago when I spoke to the Farm Credit Corporation people they were very willing to lend money for cattle, although they had decided there was a need for more livestock in the country. Because of this philosophy, it was very easy to get loans if one wanted to expand one's cattle operation, but it was not so easy to get loans for other purposes. I do not blame the Farm Credit Corporation people for that. Maybe they called the shot right.

As we know now, of course, the cattle industry overexpanded, and we have been suffering pretty well ever since. However, that should not be held against the Farm Credit Corporation because it was doing what it thought would give the greatest potential to that farmer.

I will not go through all the details, but I have now said enough that I must ask the following question: If that was the philosophy of the act which was in existence in 1959, what is the philosophy which is coming through in this bill and amendment? It seems to me that the philosophy coming out now is that the only people who will get money from the Farm Credit Corporation are those who need it the most. If you are doing well today as a farmer and want to do better, you cannot get money from the Farm Credit Corporation. It tells the farmer that he is doing all right and can get his own money. It sounds good politically for the government to say it wants to help the guy who needs it the most.

Under the philosophy of the Farm Credit Corporation there is no use lending money to a farmer if he will not be able to pay back the loan and if he will not be able to increase his income. The philosophy of potential growth must be in there.

We heard the figures from the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) a moment ago. Even in a tough year like 1979-80, all the corporation had was a million dollars worth of losses on one year's lending in a large portfolio across the country. The point I am making is that this tips me off that if you have small losses for your lending on potential, it either means the country is growing so fast that you cannot make a mistake or that the government is changing its philosophy to one of not lending money unless it gets it back.

When I hear this talk about studies for farmers in severe economic circumstances, or dire straits as the phrase goes, I begin to suspect that we have gone right back to the old handout philosophy of the old farm loan board of 1934. In those days, when a farmer went to a farm loan board after his first few years of operation, he went there to get help because he was in trouble. He found it very difficult to receive help when he was in difficulty because the board reviewed his assets. It was concerned, as a Conservative should be, about his ability to pay it back. But the new Conservative government of 1959 changed that philosophy. Its philosophy was to look at a farmer's plans to make money and give him all he needed to increase his income. We did not intend to lose money, but were prepared to lose it if the plan did not work.

I say that the history of the growth rate of agriculture in Canada over the last 20 years demonstrates that the philosophy of 1959 did work with minimal losses. In fact, the Farm Credit Corporation showed a profit over the years.

I detect now that the Farm Credit Corporation is going back to that old civil service concept that all the federal government should do is to look after those people who cannot get money from other sources. The government has become a lender of last resort.

The philosophy that we put in the act, which I helped to draft in 1959, was that we did not care about being a lender of last resort. We wanted the Farm Credit Corporation to advertise across the country that we had money to lend for people with ideas to make more money. That was the philosophy of that day. As minister for three years in charge of that act, my concern was that with this past background of the civil service which would be administering this new act, it would revert back to the old farm loan mentality. I think that my suspicions were right.

For the first number of years its philosophy did change. However, I detected over this last ten or 13 years when I talked to people in my own constituency that the philosophy was changing. Now, budding young farmers and successful middle-aged farmers do not go to the Farm Credit Corporation any more. They know they will be turned down because they are successful. The FCC, under the act now, is not supposed to be a lender of last resort. The philosophy was to back up winners. There are all sorts of winners, poor and rich. I would go further to say that I think the greatest mistake I made as minister was not to have put in clear legislative form that if a man had potential, we did not care what his assets were. A young farmer, if he had a program that would make money, whether he wanted $100,000 or $200,000, could get it even without assets.

Today, however, when the government lends money under the Farm Credit Corporation, it tries to tie down all the borrower's relatives and neighbours. We have a situation today in which a man who tries to get a loan through the Farm Credit Corporation must be backed by his uncle on the next farm for a certain proportion. Now his uncle cannot retire until this young farmer has paid off the debt. All this land is tied up and all the prospects for these farmers to retire are tied up. This is cruel.

Other governments have tried this. There was the young farmers loans legislation in Ontario from 1948 to 1959. Only a few thousand dollars was lost, and money was lent without regard to assets. All a farmer had to have was the approval of the local county board. If the board said he was a good, hardworking person, that was all that was required in assets.

Under the farm legislation of 1932 in the United States, any amount of money could be lent by a bank, guaranteed by the federal government, as long as ten people put down $100 to back up the loan, put their name and reputation on the line that this fellow would succeed. All we have to do is to look at the financial records of that American legislation. They were backing a man's potential, and that is the greatest asset in the world. You cannot imagine ten good farmers putting their names down with a $100 deposit to back a young farmer if they did not think he had potential. For many years, there was not a case of a young farmer going bankrupt because those other ten farmers would make sure he would not go broke. Those young farmers were able to pay back their debt and have money left in the bank.

My question to the House is simple. Having heard this debate and having heard the different views expressed by the minister and other hon. members that these housekeeping reforms are necessary, let hon. members ask themselves the question; in all honesty, has the philosophy changed in the Farm Credit Corporation? It does not matter to me whether there are five members on the board or 15. Has the philosophy stayed the same? I suspect that it has not.

I will use one major example. This is why I am glad the minister is here. He knows that many of us have been concerned about the Farm Credit Corporation. Personally, I have not been concerned about the supply of money as have many others. I am concerned about the philosophy. To make sure there was no question about the lack of money, several members in the Conservative Party got up last year and suggested that we use the principle of the Small Business Development Bond for the Farm Credit Corporation. It was suggested that the act be amended to allow this corporation to accept money from any person but, hopefully, from farmers in particular who would put their spare cash into the Farm Credit Corporation which would receive an interest rate at maybe 8 per cent, knowing that when they got that 8 per cent interest they would not be taxed on it. I alone am not responsible for this idea. I did make it too. But there was the hon. member for Medicine Hat, (Mr. Hargrave), the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton), the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) and many others—if I missed them I am sorry—as well as members on the other side, and the minister himself, who gave their approval to this idea. I remember the minister giving approval to this idea on television and I was hopeful that if it could be used as a principle—as it was used in the Clark-Crosbie budget of 1979—and if it was being renewed again, this principle in Farm Credit with all its machinery here, with all its capital allowance, then let it draw its capital from many sources as well as from the government.

The government has gone out and borrowed money at 19.5 per cent. It rightfully feels that it cannot just turn money over to any industry at much less than that. It is turning it over at a little bit less to the Farm Credit Corporation. But let the public come in, let anybody come in, and lend on a Small Business Development Bond, knowing it is not going to be taxable, and it is quite content to take 8 per cent on non-taxable lending. You can show no one is subsidizing anyone because the farmer who gets his money at half interest rates, such as 9½, loses his right for deductions when he pays that interest. So the government wins on that one. If the government loses, it is not collecting the tax on the 8 per cent of the lending, but looking at it fairly and objectively, no one is subsidizing anyone.

There will be academic arguments that there is a tax expenditure here, but no one but a nitwit would ever use that expression because the reality is that no one is subsidizing anyone. The government is not hurting its balance of ways and means because if the loan is not made, it will not get any money anyway.

The main thing here was that people from all parties were behind the minister on that proposal. I could say similar things to what I understood the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) to say, but a similar suggestion has been made for housing. I was dreadfully disappointed when I heard that budget on November 12. After approval was obtained and the minister stuck his neck out and supported the proposal, I was very disappointed that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) did not bring it forward in his budget.

I wonder what would happen if we in this House moved an amendment to this legislation proposing, in simple layman's form, that this should be done. We are not asking the government for any expenditure of money, so I think it would be acceptable under the rules. If we had the support of the Minister of Agriculture, the government would be very embarrassed if it did not accept the amendment. I would like to get a reaction to that proposal because we do not have much more time to wait. High interest rates are killing everybody, including the farmer, and no farmer in his right mind should ever borrow money, even at 16⅞ per cent. Eight per cent or 9 per cent is cruel, but I think we could show how it could pay if we looked at hypothetical cash flow for the next ten or 15 years if the money were spent wisely.

I suggest to the House that this is good legislation. It has served this country well, and I am sure hon. members in all parties would be willing to support the minister if he could help us out, go to his law officers and draft us a resolution we could move. All parties could support it. It would put the government in a fantastic position. It would not dare say we are costing it any money. We would not have offended the rules of Parliament. We would be carrying out something the people need and want. At the same time we could show that the House of Commons does have a place in the whole administration of government in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis R. Desmarais (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, It is with great pleasure that I take part in this debate on farm loans.

[English]

Not so many years ago credit and mortgages were not subjects easily discussed by farmers. Most of them felt it was a matter of pride to pay cash and not to borrow money. Of course, many of these people had witnessed the ravages of the depression, and they remembered a friend or neighbour who had lost his farm through foreclosure.

When we look back in history, and in particular the history of the Farm Credit Corporation, we find that its predecessor, the Canadian farm loan board, came into existence because farmers did not have access to an adequate source of credit. Agriculture has not changed all that much over the years. Farmers still have to contend with the vagaries of our climate. Even if we have developed better and hardier varieties, insects and weeds continue to be a problem. Adequate returns to ensure a profitable business operation continue to be one of the main concerns of most farmers.

The government is concerned about the difficulties farmers face because their fate is intimately linked to that of every Canadian citizen and many of our foreign buyers. Farmers provide the vital foodstuff to sustain life.

If agriculture has been as successful an industry as it has, it is because of the determination and ingenuity of Canadian farmers. The role government has played and must continue to play, in my opinion, is that of a supporter and facilitator. There are numerous examples of this, from the extensive research programs provided by Agriculture Canada to the stabilization programs and the inspection services offered.

I wish to concentrate my comments on what I consider to be one of the essential tools of today's farm business credit. Credit has been one of the true catalysts in the growth of Canadian agriculture. When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) speaks of the efficiency of the family farm and the Canadian farmer, he is simply reaffirming the facts which are there for all to see.

The credit tool government has created to help farmers is the Farm Credit Corporation. In its 22 years of existence it has assisted some 160,000 borrowers. The minister mentioned in his remarks that 74,000 of these borrowers still have loans outstanding with the FCC.

In terms of the economy it is difficult to measure what the FCC contributes to Canada by financing the development of viable farming operations. Although the nominal benefits to the economy are difficult to assess, some measurements are possible.

Facilitating the transfer from generation to generation of farms and providing capital investment in farming are considered essential to the long-term productivity and stability of the agricultural sector. These are necessary if the agri-food sector is to continue to provide Canadian consumers with an abundant supply of high quality food at a reasonable price, as well as provide for the export market which contributes so significantly to our balance of payments. The corporation strongly supports the family farm as the major means of food production. In 1979-80 and 1980-81, close to 98 per cent of all loans approved were to family farms.

In 1980-81, FCC borrowers increased their farm operating expenditures an estimated $100 million because of farm expansion, capital improvements and other agricultural investment projects. These increased annual expenditures, combined with credit extended by the FCC, contribute considerably to the economic health and growth of rural communities and agricultural service industries.

The success of FCC borrowers reflects their contribution to agricultural productivity levels and therefore to the Canadian economy. In recent years, the FCC has had to turn away a good number of applicants because of its shortage of capital. Data indicates that 65 per cent of those applicants who were declined loans because of their strong financial position had previously received FCC loans. Data on 2,622 borrowers whose loans in 1980-81 were assumed or retired indicates that over 91 per cent were considered successful. In addition, 93 per cent of all 72,663 accounts were in good standing as of March 31, 1981. This proves beyond doubt, in my mind, that farmers have more than lived up to the faith placed in them by the Canadian government.

An analysis of the effectiveness of the Farm Credit Corporation which was conducted last year indicates that the FCC is playing a significant role in facilitating the development of viable farm operations and thus contributing to the Canadian economy. Furthermore, the results of a special FCC survey of farmers which was completed in 1981 show that the corporation is currently lending to a much smaller scale of farm than the average. This substantiates our belief that the role of government in the financing of Canadian farmers is more important than ever, in spite of the greater share which private institutions have taken in the long-term agricultural lending market during the last five years.

The federal government's participation through the FCC has been reduced from over two thirds of this market to less than one quarter, primarily due to limited capital resources. During this period, the chartered banks and credit unions, as well as the provincial government in some provinces, particularly Alberta, Quebec and Nova Scotia, have lent substantial amounts in the long-term lending field. But in times of economic difficulties or when larger returns can be earned elsewhere, many of these institutions direct their funds elsewhere. The stability in supply of credit must be assured for all farmers who are efficient and productive.

The FCC's contribution has been essential to farm stability in many periods of difficulty because it provided mortgages with an attractive rate fixed for a period of up to 30 years, when private institutions could only offer long-term credit with variable interest rates.

Also, the corporation strives to provide loans to those applicants who have viable proposals but who do not meet or who would have difficulty in meeting the security or repayment criteria required by the private sector. The FCC will continue to provide credit for these higher risk borrowers, not for those who have access to commercial sources of financing.

Since FCC was given the authority to make loans up to 100 per cent of the value of the security in 1975, the trend has been to loans with less security. In many situations, additional security is not available, which is typical of young beginning farmers, and the corporation does not hesitate to take higher risks than other lending institutions would. I wish to repeat the percentage which has been quoted: in recent years some 70 per cent of FCC loans has been going to young borrowers under 35 years of age.

Furthermore, FCC authorizes some of its borrowers to defer their payments until other pressures on their cash flow subside, and this probably means survival for these farmers.

In spite of its restricted budget, the corporation has been able to keep in close contact with the Canadian farming community. Farmers, although they know FCC has less money to lend, continue to approach the FCC officers for advice and farm management counselling. This is the kind of strength which is essential to a wise use of credit. The FCC plays a major role in this educational process.

In the 1980-81 fiscal year, 204 credit advisers in 103 field offices gave more than 47,000 interviews in the selection of loan applicants or the administration of loan accounts. A total of 27,409 specific loan requests were received. After assessment of these requests, 4,686 loans for a total of $508.9 million were approved. Some 17 per cent of all loan requests were approved. Of the 23 per cent of the loans declined at the interview stage, 32 per cent were declined because of insufficient repayment potential, 30 per cent had the resources and repayment potential to get credit elsewhere, 16 per cent were not planning to become principally occupied in farming and 22 per cent were declined for other reasons.

Although five out of six loan requests were declined, only 121 of these decisions were appealed by farmers. In most cases, credit advisers were able to provide applicants with alternatives to further their farm development plans.

I could go on for some time expounding the positive role played by the FCC in its lending program, but I wish to conclude by giving credit where it is due, to the farmer. We must remember that the borrower repays the funds borrowed. Farm Credit is an investment for the Canadian government, not a gift or a handout.

Mr. Waddell: Are there farmers in your riding?

Mr. Desmarais: Yes, we do have farmers in the riding. Farmers pay their own way. I trust we will continue to demonstrate our faith in their ability by providing our Canadian farmers with a good supply of the much needed tool that credit is. These amendments provide a starting point for interesting new developments in this field.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, in considering Bill C-88, an act respecting loans to farmers which was introduced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and received first reading in the House on January 27, we see that its purpose is to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow supplemental funding on the private marketplace; to enact the interest rate rebate provision of the budget; to increase the board of directors from five to seven members, to remove the 35-year-old age limitation on Section 33 loans; and to update some of the language of the Farm Credit Act.

For over a year the Minister of Agriculture has stated that such legislation would soon be introduced, so we are delighted to see it finally in front of us. He took his time, of course. We had legislation similar to this in the planning stages in the latter days of our government, some two years ago.

Farm groups have generally been supportive of this legislation, as long as it is supplemental funding and not a replacement of government funding. We basically support this legislation, provided that the government does not intend to cut back on its financial commitment to the Farm Credit Corporation.

For other than patronage reasons we question the need for the board to be expanded to seven members, as has been mentioned by many of my colleagues. We also believe that the Farm Credit Corporation should be provided with an additional $500 million. It is interesting to note that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has called for an additional $1 billion. This legislation will not solve the short-term underfunding problem of the Farm Credit Corporation. This extra $50 million in the budget is not sufficient.

As members on this side of the House who spoke previously have indicated, we support the legislation. What we do not support is the inaction of the Liberal government opposite, especially as it relates to the agricultural sector in Canada. The food producing sector in Canada is not receiving the priority it merits. When we view some of the figures published by Statistics Canada, we find that bankruptcies increased close to 50 per cent this year compared to last. We also find in this disastrous budget which was introduced on November 12—which will have a disastrous effect on the farming population of Canada—that the provisions regarding the income-averaging annuity contracts as they pertain to the agricultural sector are disastrous. The capital gains provisions as announced and consequently amended will also be disastrous for the agricultural sector.

The part of all this that is most detrimental is the lack of any action relating to interest rates. The reduction in the capital cost allowance in the November 12 budget means that farmers buying equipment will now pay substantially more income tax in the first year. This is the view of the Manitoba agriculture farm management specialist, Irwin Wiebe.

The Minister of Agriculture has made a mockery of his portfolio, Mr. Speaker. He has lost credibility throughout the land, and I will share the reason for that with you. On many occasions when he was speaking to farm groups, we have heard the minister indicate that he felt the banks were making far too much profit. He has indicated this repeatedly throughout Canada. He has blamed the banks for the high interest rate situation. Yet on two occasions in the chamber when he had an opportunity to do something about it, he voted against imposing an excess profits tax on the banking industry. On January 26, 1982, a motion proposing that we put an excess profits tax on the banking industry was voted against by the Minister of Agriculture. That action, as well as many of his other actions, shows that the minister is truly making a mockery of his responsibilities.

Because of a lack of action on the part of the national government, the provinces have been required to introduce programs on their own relating to the hog and beef industry. We require in Canada a comprehensive national program as it relates to both the beef and hog industry. Recently the province of Alberta introduced a cattle and sheep program because of the inaction of the minister opposite. Also, it is interesting to note that last year when the minister made his initial announcement pertaining to the hog industry, he was not going to make any payment to Alberta. After a great deal of lobbying by various farm groups, he changed his mind and introduced some fairness into the hog stabilization program.

I travelled throughout my constituency during the Christmas recess, visiting such areas as Newbrook and Westlock. Residents of those areas indicated a deep concern about the survival of the Canadian agricultural sector and about the lack of action on the part of the present Liberal administration. When we were in government, we took specific steps to aid the Canadian agricultural sector. We were in the process of working with various provincial governments to establish national programs, so that each province would not have to initiate its own program to the detriment of all. We had hoped that the Small Business Development Bond would have been of more use to the farm sector in that farmers could use them at reduced interest rates for expansion purposes. We introduced specific capital gains relief for the farming sector to the tune of some $200,000. When one looks at the record of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Manzankowski) when he was minister of transport, one sees that we shipped record amounts of grain as well.

There are few sectors of the economy which are as dependent upon borrowed money as in agriculture. Farmers require money to start their operations and to remain in business. Most of their costs are fixed, which reduces any flexibility in times of financial crisis. When farmers hurt, so does the rural community. Recent figures show that businesses throughout the rural community, business investment and business turnover in terms of cash flow, has dropped in the vicinity of some 50 per cent.

The government should adopt a number of ideas to help Canadian farmers. I should like to share with the minister a number of points which should be adopted that would be of great help to the farming sector. We should introduce a moratorium on farm bankruptcies, foreclosures and forced sales to allow the government time to enact more meaningful assistance for farmers. We should have an infusion of some $500 million into the Farm Credit Corporation to subsidize interest rates and increase loan programs for farmers. We should create a committee, including farm representatives, to monitor the Small Business Development Bond program and to help save unincorporated farmers from bankruptcy. We should allow farmers to use the Small Business Development Bond to build and to expand their operations, rather than it being used by only those in dire straits. There should be the payment of a subsidy to farmers faced with interest rates of over 12 per cent on loans taken out for less than ten years. There should be enactment of the Liberal promise of the 1980 election campaign to change valuation day for capital gains tax on farmland from 1971 to 1974. The minister cannot even live up to that promise he made to the agricultural sector. It is my feeling that the capital gains tax provision should be abolished completely as it relates to the agricultural sector. There should also be a rebate on the price of fuel used in food production. There should be a national price stabilization plan for beef and for hogs, which is a meaningful plan, rather than the ad hoc plan that leaves far too much discretion in the minister's hands.

Mr. Whelan: We offered that in 1977.

Mr. Elzinga: I hope the minister will take the opportunity to respond to a number of concerns we have raised.

Mr. Whelan: Given the opportunity, I will.

Mr. Elzinga: We will give the minister the opportunity as long as he promises to be more credible in his answers than he was when he indicated that the banks should do away with their excess profits. Agriculture could be radically changed in the next three to five years if no action is taken. This is extremely bad news for all Canada, especially Canadian farmers, consumers, businessmen, and labour groups.

Bill C-88 should be an important and worth-while measure in the long-range funding of the Farm Credit Corporation. As I indicated earlier, we will support this legislation, provided the government gives a firm commitment that its direct funding to the FCC will not be cut back. I ask the minister to respond by giving us a commitment that the federal government will not cut back on its funding. Also, we hope that the government will guarantee the bonds floated by the Farm Credit Corporation so that they could be sold more quickly. We all look forward to a more detailed study of this legislation when it is referred to committee.

In closing I should like to put another question to the minister. Are there any plans in regard to the PFRA? There have been a number of suggestions by hon. members on this side of the House that it should be redirected and put under Agriculture Canada rather than under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I hope the minister will give this matter serious consideration, as we did when we examined the possibility when the responsibility fell under the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). Also I suggest that this plan should be expanded upon so as to become a national program rather than a regional one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is a well known fact that the production of food requires proper and modern tools, if we are to maintain the high quality and standards that have been achieved over a number of years in the production of excellent food, not only for Canadians but for consumers all over the world. Also it is a well-known fact that one of those proper tools is proper financing. The fact that the Farm Credit Corporation bill is being debated in the House and will be referred to committee later is very welcome.

I feel somewhat sorry for some of the field workers of the Farm Credit Corporation who, for the last year or 18 months, have had inadequate funds to meet the needs of the areas they represent. Many times loan applications have been refused. Even the refusal to take applications from applicants makes it very difficult for individuals in those offices; they see a need but, because of a lack of financing, loans are not possible at the time, or at any time for that matter.

In July, August or September of last year it appeared that there were no funds left to lend out at a somewhat lesser rate than that of today, that is, in the area of 14 per cent. This was mainly because representatives of the FCC indicated that all funds were being held until the new rate was set. Subsequently, a new rate was established at 16.75 per cent, and since budget time some loans were approved. The budget included a provision wherein there would be a reduction of 5 per cent on farm credit loans to 11.75 per cent. At the present time, some young farmers are starting out, saddled with the 16.75 per cent interest rate tied to the mortgages on their land for the next 29 or 30 years. Suddenly, the next few years are very important for those young people who find it difficult to make a living in agriculture, with the structure of their land base and getting established. It would only be proper if some subsidization were given them, especially those young people who were "fortunate" enough to obtain mortgages even at 16.75 per cent.

In Poland today meat prices have risen some 300 per cent. Pork chops rose from 60 cents a pound to $3 per pound. If we are not careful and do not maintain a good strong agricultural base here in Canada, it is possible that we could be facing the same situation. Consumers will have to pay extremely high prices for food if we do not provide the proper tools to agriculture now. It might be too late now. We know that we will lose many of our small farmers, those young farmers who started farming within the last six or seven years. Many of them started out with very little money. I am a farmer. I started with all borrowed money. I borrowed from my father to make my start. If it had not been for my father, I would not have been able to farm, even though it was very difficult for him to assist me at that time.

The bill we have here today is actually two pieces of legislation, and one wonders why the government has scheduled so much legislation for transmittal to the Standing Committee on Agriculture all at the same time. Certainly this committee has been fumbling around doing almost nothing for most of the past two years, and now suddenly we have debated three measures in a week for reference to it.

I am tempted to ask whether the government is scheduling its agriculture legislation in this way in order to push Canagrex through without much scrutiny, or whether it is shoving farm credit legislation through right behind the Canagrex bill in order to deflect attention away from the severe problems farmers have been facing while waiting and waiting for an improvement to farm credit financing.

There are some measures in the present legislation that will be welcome to our food producers that we on this side of the House will certainly want to support. For example, an increase in the capital of the Farm Credit Corporation is very much needed and will do a great deal to stabilize the financing of land in the Canadian agricultural industry. That is, it will do so once the problems raised by this bill are worked out.

Farm credit has been underfunded for years now, and as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) indicated the other day, he has been relying on the private banks to pick up the slack since 1975. We have all seen in the past two years how poorly they did the job of managing farm financing. In some cases, the banks employed personnel who knew far too little about agriculture to be in the business of agricultural lending. In other cases, the banks used poor judgment in matching the type of loan they were offering to the kind of asset or operation being financed. Much of this sloppiness on the part of the banks might have gone unnoticed if it were not for the monstrous fluctuations in interest rates which have been brought on by this government's policy of high interest rates. The Minister of Agriculture may want to blame the banks for writing lending contracts that allowed them to convert what should have been mortgages into demand loans, but the truth is that the policies of this government are too erratic and arbitrary for the banks to use a straight mortgage instrument to handle all kinds of farm financing.

It is the policy of the government to which the minister belongs that has caused much of the present problem. I hope the minister has now learned a lesson that he can teach to his cabinet colleagues, namely, to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to do what it was set up to do, that is, to finance the long-term assets of land and buildings which make possible family farming in Canada. In particular, I hope the minister is now committed to the idea that the Farm Credit Corporation is the proper vehicle for helping new farmers establish themselves in business.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what this legislation should be all about. I believe legislation to increase the Farm Credit Corporation's capital has been ready for two years. Better late than never, perhaps, but let us note that too late means never, and for many hundreds of Canadians who were and who wanted to be farmers, this legislation has come too late. It is important now that the assistance contained in this legislation be provided as soon as possible. But clearly, the difficulties surrounding this piece of legislation have not yet been worked out. For that reason, the sooner the bill gets to committee and the committee gets down to serious examination of it, the better. I, for one, hope that the Standing Committee on Agriculture has the opportunity to give immediate attention to this bill, and is not delayed and obstructed in its job by red herrings such as a supposed need to get Canagrex operating by the middle of next week.

Let us note how helpful this present bill could be in theory. One of its principal effects would be to raise the capital of the Farm Credit Corporation by $75 million, thereby raising the amount the Farm Credit Corporation could borrow and lend out again by $1.875 billion. This is a very significant amount.

Another principal effect is to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow from private sources some of the money it borrows on the basis of its authorized capital.

The minister the other day, in introducing this legislation, mentioned pension funds as one possible source of such borrowed funds, and then raised the possibility of allowing retiring farmers to provide another source through some plan equivalent to the small business bond plan by which banks can lend money at little more than half the prevailing interest rate. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) had a grasp of what fiscal management means, he might see his way clear to bringing in this kind of measure so it becomes more than a possibility.

At the moment, the Minister of Finance seems to regard money as being of two types. One, the type he has found is a way to take by way of taxes. Second, a type he is still trying to get hold of. If he could grasp that there are ways to put money to work so that both he as the tax grabber and other Canadians as producers could have more to play with, he would have advanced a long way toward helping the economy achieve its potential.

One idea he might well consider is the one his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, has now seen the wisdom of, namely, allowing retiring farmers to invest funds with the Farm Credit Corporation as a way to reduce their tax burden. But this matter is one not for debate at the present time. It deserves full examination, and perhaps now that we on this side of the House have recruited the Minister of Agriculture to adopt it, we can encourage the Minister of Finance to see that it serves his interests too.

At present, the Farm Credit Corporation can borrow up to 25 times its capital out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to lend out. The new bill would authorize the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow 25 times its increased capital, but it would no longer be required to borrow only from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It would now also be able to raise money on the private markets. In theory, the addition of $75 million to the authorized capital of the Farm Credit Corporation should allow the corporation to raise an additional $1.875 billion in private borrowing. Certainly, an additional amount like this of almost $2 billion would be more than enough to meet the present needs of Canadian agriculture. Of course, in practice, things do not work this way. Each year, the Farm Credit Corporation receives a certain portion of its capital from the government and then proceeds to borrow up to 25 times that amount from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member has suggested calling it ten o'clock. I can put the question, but my understanding is that the hon. member seeks to continue the debate tomorrow.

Mr. Cardiff: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—ENTITLEMENT TO RETROACTIVE PENSION PAYMENTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs this afternoon. I pointed out that close to 4,000 veterans receiving less than 5 per cent disability pensions have never been informed that they are eligible for a yearly consumer price index increase on a little known final payment allotment. I understand that some of these veterans are on the computer system and receive this entitlement but we do not know how many have been left off that system. Entitlement of final payment exists for veterans who have been given a disability pension of from 1 per cent to 4 per cent. Four thousand veterans are eligible for yearly consumer price increases on an original payment of $100. The problem is that they must apply for these or they will not receive them. In some cases they may have over $1,000 in back pay coming to them. Why is payment not automatically made? Will all veterans in this category be informed of this and paid retroactively, and what about future payments? To date there appears to be utter confusion in this category.

• (2200)

In addition, veterans will be penalized further under the Liberal budget. Resolution 53 of the budget will cost them thousands of dollars a year. The Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs today in question period misled the House when he stated there are no provisions in the budget which would affect veterans. The budget will make veterans' pensions calculable income, something which has never been done in the past.

A veteran's working spouse may claim a veteran as a dependant only if he makes less than $3,660 in any year. This will most certainly eliminate tens of thousands of currently eligible veterans, thus cancelling the spouse's deduction. It will have the effect of drastically reducing a veteran family's net income, putting them on the tax man's firing line.

We are still having problems with widows' pension applications. Administration is slow. The process was supposed to take place immediately on passage of Bill C-82, but there are still widows who have been waiting for many months. As an example, a constituent of mine, whose husband died December 13, 1980, applied for a widow's pension in January, 1981. The application was never acknowledged by the department. In August, 1981, seven months later, she received a letter telling her to apply if she had not already done so. My office was informed early in January, 1982, that the pension had been granted, and contacted her with the news. She also received a letter from the pension commission dated January 6, 1982, saying that she would be receiving a proportionate pension. The total time from the original application was one year. The total time from the letter asking for the application was five months. So you see the problem we still have there, Mr. Speaker.

Now, there are many problems facing veterans which have been made perfectly clear by the Public Accounts Committee in its tenth report; the Senate committee report "They Served, We Care;" Legion submissions; the Auditor General's report; the Hong Kong Veterans Association; National Indian Veterans Association; and repeated representations from the Conservative Party. The problems are never ending.

We also have the prisoner of war benefit discrepancies which have not been settled, with no statement from the minister. The amount of interest income which can be exempted from federal taxes is now a mere $100 and should be raised to $1,000, but we hear nothing from the department.

There is next to no value in the aging veterans' programs. For example, only 92 vetrans are currently eligible for the home support program across Canada. It is far too restrictive. There are inequities which divorced spouses must face when they receive no entitlement under the pension act and the War Veterans Allowance Act. There are also the inequities in the way veterans are compensated for time spent as prisoners of war. We have these persistent unremedied time delays which were condemned by the Public Accounts Committee when it said they should be replaced by a time limit of 180 days for the entire process. Now we have this cruel budget provision which will in effect tax veterans' families when they cannot even survive on their current levels of income. The question is, Mr. Speaker, when will the minister resolve these mounting problems?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague on the other side of the House raised about 12 different issues. I realize that I have only about three minutes in which to respond, so perhaps I could address only two of those issues. Specifically, I would like to address his question with respect to the final payment types of pensions. Perhaps "final payment" is not the proper description. These are annual payments which are made to veterans who have been awarded assessments of 5 per cent or less.

In 1921, when the legislation was introduced, there was provision that anyone receiving a pension under 5 per cent would receive a single payment versus a monthly payment. Between 1921 and 1971 eight adjustments were made to those single payment pensions. In 1972, the CPI was introduced, and the same thing has applied to pensions of this type as pensions on a monthly basis. The CPI has automatically been applied and has been applied all the way through.

For example, in 1973, there was a 24 per cent increase in the base rate for these types of pensions. The CPI has been applied all the way through. Just to give a classic example, since January 1, 1982, when the 12.3 per cent was announced, there has been an adjustment in the single payment, or "final payment" as it is known, of 1,246 pensions. A further 2,654 will be processed just as quickly as possible. We hope that by the end of February all the single payment pensioners will be receiving the adjustment. They have received this treatment all the way through, and they will continue to do so.

The hon. member is quite correct. Approximately 4,000 have been receiving their cost of living adjustment, as has been the case for the duration of their pensions. However, before I wind up, I want to address a question which I thought the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) resolved the other day with respect to the application of the budget to veterans.

Under resolution 53, there is a provision for prescribed programs. I want to say to the House and to the veterans of Canada that the programs under Veterans Affairs, the disability pensions and the War Veterans Allowance, will continue to be exempted from the application of the budget and, specifically, from the requirement to take these provisions into income in tax calculations. That was made clear the other day, and I want to reinforce that fact. Under resolution 53, which was cited by the hon. member, "prescribed" and "exempted" programs under veterans affairs will continue to enjoy the same decision with respect to the programs of the Government of Canada they have enjoyed in the past.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—(A) EL SALVADOR—HOLDING OF DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS; (B) RECOGNITION OF POLITICAL MOVEMENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question tonight asks for further illumination on a question I directed in the House to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) on November 9, 1981. At that time, I indicated to the minister that I had in my hand a letter the minister had received from the Canadian Council of Churches, requesting a policy change in Canada's relations with El Salvador and Canada's view of El Salvador. At that time, I also had a letter from the Canadian Catholic Bishops which stated that the military and Christian Democratic ruling junta in El Salvador is responsible, before its own nation and before the international community, for extremely grave crimes.

At the same time, I asked a supplementary question of the hon. minister, regarding the UPI meetings in Havana which had proceeded during that summer. The Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, along with a group of parliamentarians from Canada, had voted at those meetings to support the French-Mexican position. At that time, the minister told me that the initiative was largely discredited and that Canada would not change its position regarding elections to be held in El Salvador. These elections have been called, as everyone knows. In light of that fact, I continue my question with this new information.

On December 8 the subcommittee on External Affairs dealing with relations between Canada, Latin America and the Caribbean, of which I am a member, brought its report to this House. In it we indicated that the situation in El Salvador demands a pre-electoral period of political negotiation and stability. I quote:

> While the subcommittee has no illusions about the ease of achieving these conditions, we think they consist of three essential elements: first, serious negotiations between all parties to the conflict; second, an internationally supervised cease-fire; third, and only after the achievement of these conditions an internationally supervised electoral process in El Salvador.

That report of the subcommittee was unanimously voted on by members of all three parties in this House.

During the Christmas recess there were several delegations which went to the area of El Salvador. One delegation, under the auspices of Oxfam Canada, made up of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) and the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) visited refugees from El Salvador in refugee camps in the Honduras.

On their return, they said quite emphatically that the possibility of elections in El Salvador is a myth. They cannot take place. There cannot be a truly democratic election at this time.

This past week I and several members of the subcommittee on Latin American and Caribbean relations were in the Central American area. In company with the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki), I visited a refugee camp of El Salvadoran refugees in Costa Rica near the Honduran border. From that information, and from information received from literally all other sources, during our visit, it appears to us that the report we handed down in December is accurate and that at this time the elections that are called to take place in El Salvador are an impossibility. There are over 600,000 refugees inside and outside the country, most of them naturally being in the opposition.

In the Catholic Register of January 30, there is a story from San Salvador which speaks of the recent position of Bishop Arturo Rivera Damas, the acting apostolic administrator of the diocese of San Salvador. In this article in which he asks the people of El Salvador to reflect on his belief, he states:

> —the conflict of El Salvador is at the heart of the east-west conflict and runs the risk of becoming truly international with no end in sight—
> We address the guerrilla fighters themselves to ponder their actions in light of a national, patriotic outlook and not under alien influence, . . . We ask all political parties, all those responsible for the public administration to look at our situation with a realistic approach, devoid of ideological passions, and find political solutions that can lead to peace.

I do not want to set up a conflict with the government or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in light of this information I have given tonight, in addition to my previous question, I plead that the government take a new and serious look at the situation.

In the trip which the committee completed yesterday to the Caribbean and Central America, we found, and I can state this emphatically, that Canada has a very high and good profile in that whole area. I suggest that profile is far out of proportion to what we have done in that area. Canada does not have an imperialistic past there. People look to us as being just, and of those who will help.

During our trip inside El Salvador, in the past few weeks, we met journalists, including journalists from the Miami Herald, who indicated from their observations that, having talked with the guerrillas and as a result of the escalation of the war which took place last week when military aircraft were destroyed, and also from talking to the government people, much to my surprise they believe the Duarte government will actually lose the election. They will lose the election to extreme forces to the right because anybody who represents the middle, which is practically non-existent, or leftist forces, will not be there to vote.

In the light of this new information, and in the light of what I hope is the true, sincere and just feelings of our government, I would like to further my question by asking if the government is ready to re-evaluate its position on the question of El Salvador; to take positive steps, some of which were suggested in my question of November 9, in opening up our embassy and calling together the forces of various disputing parties; of going out of our way and taking the extra step of using our good profile, that good feeling we have in that part of the world, to call upon those forces to come together in negotiation and not to set up an election which can only lead to more disruptive situations in that very volatile part of the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada's position on El Salvador has been expressed many times, notably in statements in the House of Commons by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan). Canada is opposed to foreign intervention in the domestic affairs of El Salvador and believes that the problem of El Salvador must be resolved by El Salvadorans without foreign interference. Canada has a long-standing policy of not providing arms to areas of tension and deplores the fact that competing forces in El Salvador are receiving supplies from outside sources.

Canada hopes the dialogue on a political solution in El Salvador would encompass all political parties and welcomes the expressed willingness of the government of El Salvador to enter into dialogue on the electoral process with opposition groups willing to lay down their arms.

The Canadian government is not at this time prepared to associate itself with the declaration made on August 28, 1981, by the governments of France and Mexico because it believes that the appropriate political solution is through the electoral process rather than through negotiations. Canada would also be willing to provide technical assistance for the electoral process and to consider participation in international observation of the elections.

We are now discussing with the El Salvador authorities various aspects of the proposed election and observation process so as to determine the nature of the Canadian response. It is not for Canada or Canadians to support or oppose El Salvador's decision to have elections though persons and governments are entitled to their individual views.

It is the government's view that President Duarte should be commended for his efforts to hold democratic elections in very difficult circumstances and we hope that all political parties in that country will respond to his government's invitation to participate.

With regard to the question of human rights in El Salvador, the Secretary of State for External Affairs clearly indicated in his statement in the House on June 16 that the government is very sensitive to and concerned about the human rights situation in El Salvador. Those concerns have been expressed to the government of El Salvador and to representatives of the FLMN/FDR. Like all Canadians, the government deplores the senseless killing which has occurred in El Salvador these past many months, killing which has been perpetrated by both sides in that tragic conflict.

We are particularly disturbed by news reports today of a tragic shooting incident in San Salvador. We immediately called in the Chargé d'Affaires of the Embassy of El Salvador to express our concern and to request him to obtain from his government a clarification as to the exact circumstances of the incident. We also instructed our ambassador to El Salvador, resident in Costa Rica, to obtain similar clarification.

It has been reported that the United States is considering the supply of new helicopters to replace those recently destroyed by insurgent forces in El Salvador. Our position on the supply of arms to various forces in El Salvador by any country has already been stated. We oppose it and we hope that the problems of El Salvador can be solved peacefully by the people of El Salvador without outside interference.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE—EFFECT OF BUDGET ON EMPLOYEES MEETING INCREASED ACCOMMODATION COSTS FOLLOWING TRANSFERS. (B) REQUEST THAT PROVISION AFFECTING MORTGAGES BE POSTPONED

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I welcome this opportunity to deal at some greater length with questions which I raised in the House on January 29 and the replies that I received thereto. Those questions dealt with the intended amendments to section 80.4(1) of the Income Tax Act, referable to—as they now provide—the exemption from the inclusion in income of the alleged benefits to employees of employer-provided mortgages at either no interest or at interest rates which are less than the going rate. I raise these issues because of responses provided to me by the minister. At page 14462 and 14463 of Hansard the minister's responses are to the effect that he takes my questions as representations and notes that they will be considered in due course. That answer underlines, regrettably, the way in which the entire budget was prepared. It was prepared as though a white paper on major tax reform had preceded it, without regard to the fact that there are elements in society very substantially affected by the intended budget proposals. One of those provisions is the one to which I made reference, and if I could just read some of the communications I have received from my constituents with respect to this matter hon. members would get a better grasp of the consequences of the intended amendment to that section of the Income Tax Act. I do not propose to refer to the names of the people who have actually corresponded with me because some of the letters have been marked "personal and confidential", and some of them have disclosed personal financial information which the writers might prefer I not read into the record because that would identify them as the people who have this particular problem. However, one letter dated December 8, 1981 contains the following comment:

• (2220)

> As a direct result of the new provisions in the November 12th, 1981 budget, the tax payable on my interest-free loan will add $320 to my monthly payments. This increase would leave me no alternative but to sell my house, at a direct cost to myself of the 6 per cent sales commission, and moving expenses.

This is just one of the cases, but, as a matter of fact, all the cases to which I refer are cases in which individual taxpayers have been transferred by their employers to new locations under circumstances wherein the cost of acquiring new residences exceeded the cost at former locations.

The gentleman went on to say:

> At the time of my transfer, my decision to relocate was based on the provisions of The Income Tax Act in effect at that time.
> I believe that in the interests of fairness it would be only just and reasonable to withdraw the imposition of this tax on loans already in place at the time of the budget, allowing the new measure to affect only those loans negotiated after that date.

Another gentleman stated in a letter also dated December 8, 1981:

The most disturbing factor is the retroactivity of this legislation which disturbs the agreement reached with my employer at the time of my transfer.

This gentleman also stated:

One of the conditions set by the Foreign Investment Review Agency—

This was at the time his employer acquired the stock of another corporation of which this gentleman is a former employee.

—required the company to ensure that no employees were to be dismissed as a result of the acquisition and in order to comply with this condition it was necessary to move a number of individuals into various locations in Canada. In most cases the transfers were to areas where substantial differentials existed on housing costs.

He gave the example of Montreal as against Toronto.

One of the principal themes of the federal budget introduced on November 12, 1981, was the question of equity and the need to maintain a fundamental sense of fairness in our country. I believe that in the interests of fairness it would be only just and reasonable to withdraw the imposition of this tax on loans already in place—

It is interesting that one of my constituents gave the specific example of having moved from the city of Beaconsfield, Quebec where his monthly payment on his residence at that time totalled $166 per month. He moved to a home of comparable value in terms of what it would provide him compared with what he was provided in Beaconsfield and found that his total costs, even with his interest-free and interest-reduced loans, amounted to $1,199 per month. In the event that these proposals of the budget are to be implemented he will be confronted with an additional cost because the total amount of his loans is now $78,000, and he must pay tax on $10,729 of that. He has not given me his tax rate, but assuming it is 30 per cent, that will total $3,000 more he will have to pay, in addition to his current monthly payment.

All of these moves have been undertaken as a consequence of the requirement of the employer and not the employee, Mr. Speaker. Whatever benefit accrues, will accrue to the employer who now has an employee who has moved to a new location, a move sought by the employer and not the employee.

One of the letters that I received made reference to a specific paragraph on page 21 of the budget papers which reads as follows:

Housing loans mainly provide benefits to mobile, high-income employees and officers of corporations and amount to an indirect subsidy for industries who regularly relocate their employees.

This gentleman is an employee of a firm that has only changed its location once. He has never changed his location and has always been an employee of that same corporation. He denies that he is at an upper income level.

Some time ago this House passed a resolution dealing with the Constitution and under Paragraph 6.(2) granted to every Canadian the right to move to and take up residence in any province in pursuit of a livelihood in any province. That right becomes very shallow when the financial obligation imposed upon these people when they move under the provision of the budget will specifically preclude them from undertaking the steps allegedly granted under this resolution which will become part of the Constitution of Canada.

I submit that in the event that equity and fairness is to prevail, arrangements arrived at between employees and employers with respect to this issue be left until they run their due course. In that way the people of Canada will enjoy fairness and equity.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this motion concerns budget changes to the provision which permitted employers to provide up to $50,000 of interest-free loans to employees who relocated without the resulting benefit being subject to income tax. The budget proposes to eliminate this measure effective for the 1982 taxation year. A transition rule will allow benefits on up to $40,000 of existing loans to be exempt in 1982, and this limit is reduced to $20,000 for 1983. Certainly relocation and labour mobility are desirable. However, this measure was not a particularly effective or fair one. There are a number of reasons why it was terminated.

Housing loans are but one method of remunerating employees for differences in costs of living resulting from a relocation. Others include promotions or increased pay, which generally occur on relocation, cash payments to offset differences in the mortgage interest rate on the new versus the old home, rental cost subsidies and general cost of living wage differences between regions.

Conference board data show that over half of firms do not offer tax subsidized housing loans. Most that do, do not make them available to all employees. Moreover, a significant number of firms offer other types of remuneration for relocation that have always been taxable. These facts raise serious questions of equity in existing housing loans.

As well, housing loans did not assist persons already living in a region with their higher living costs. They had to meet these costs out of taxable wages and salaries. Housing loans could actually reduce labour market mobility as they intended to lock employees into a job with the firm that provided them the loan. Higher income employees were more likely to get a loan, were more likely to get a loan for a higher amount, and derived more tax savings per dollar of loan than did a taxpayer in a lower tax bracket. Lastly, in some regions the measure may have added significantly to upward pressure on home prices. I do not believe that a measure with these sorts of defects can be justified.

The budget does not prohibit the use of housing loans for this purpose and I expect the past practice to continue. Interest-free housing loans continue to be attractive. Employees will not have to pay interest but only tax on the benefit—on the interest-free amount. What ordinary Canadian in a 30 per cent tax bracket can obtain a $50,000 mortgage loan at an annual cost of $2,400, compared to the current market cost of roughly $8,500 to any other Canadian?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

FINANCING OF ENERGY PROJECT IN SOVIET UNION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada has finally found over $600 million to loan to people in dire straits. The Export Development Corporation is entering into an agreement with the Soviet Union to help finance a huge sour gas megaproject at Astrakhan. The EDC is providing loan financing of $637.5 million at the unconscionable rate of 10 per cent. This means that the project will be interest subsidized, by Canadian people, to the amount of $198.5 million. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That at a time when Amoco and Chevron have pulled out of our own Alsands project, and when our major NATO allies have levied trade sanctions against the Soviet Union for its military imperialism, this House recommends an immediate review of this deal with the Communists by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and that the terms of the so-called "Friendship Treaty" signed in the early seventies between Canada and Russia be likewise reviewed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLAND—CONDEMNATION OF MARTIAL LAW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, martial law in Poland is not bringing about the social and economic goals that were set out at the time of the imposition of martial law. On the contrary, Poland's economy remains precarious and such social and democratic progress as was made in 1980 and 1981 has now been annulled. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That this House do now instruct the Prime Minister to set aside academic discussion of this issue and outrightly condemn martial law in Poland and work with our NATO allies to impose meaningful sanctions against the present regime in Poland.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED ISSUANCE OF BULLETIN ON TAXATION OF EMPLOYEE BENEFITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the government's intention to tax, as an employee benefit, supplemental health plan contributions made by employers on behalf of employees is creating a great deal of concern both to employees and employers, in that regulations or detail as to how the benefit is to be taxed and charged as an employee tax deduction from weekly or monthly pay packets has not been estimated. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That the Minister of National Revenue forthwith issue a detailed bulletin indicating to employers how they are to deduct taxes from employees for this alleged benefit so that employees will be able to pay their income tax as income is earned, and not face owing the minister huge amounts of tax when they file their returns for 1982.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

INCREASE IN SALARIES OF CORPORATION HEADS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the heads of nine Crown corporations, including Michael Warren of Canada Post, Claude Taylor of Air Canada, and other top executives have been granted retroactive wage increases by the federal cabinet of up to 12.3 per cent; whereas government officials have been condemning increases of a similar percentage for average Canadians and have been advocating wage controls for public service employees and encouraging similar action for private sector wages; and whereas people earning $100,000 plus can easily afford to go without such large increases while workers at the bottom of the scale are struggling to pay for the high cost of food, shelter and energy costs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the government exercise fiscal responsibility and immediately withdraw the order which increases upper level salaries at the expense of the taxpayer.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

PENSIONS

EFFECT OF BUDGET RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, as a result of a week's questioning by the Conservative Party, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) has finally cleared the air by issuing a press release which retracts the government's previous position on adding veterans pension benefits to calculable level income for tax purposes. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That this House now call on the Minister of Finance to issue immediately a statement outlining which pensions and other social assistance benefits will and will not be exempted from Resolution 53 of this tax-all budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL STABILIZATION PROGRAM FOR BEEF—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, the Canadian beef industry is suffering extremely depressed prices which are causing many farmers to cut back or cease production altogether. Because of the lack of federal involvement all the major beef producing provinces, except Manitoba, are now involved in beef stabilization programs. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That the Minister of Agriculture stop talking about farm leaders being gutless, and show that he is not totally useless himself by announcing a national stabilization program for beef that involves the federal and provincial governments, as well as the producers, in order to prevent the further balkanization of the Canadian beef industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CROWN CORPORATIONS

INCREASE IN SALARIES OF CORPORATION HEADS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, in an interview published yesterday in Le Devoir, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) announced that he had made "heroic efforts" to hold down government spending and that it was now up to Canadian workers to moderate their pay demands. However, it was announced in this morning's Toronto Globe and Mail that the heads of ten Crown corporations as well as four top executives were receiving retroactive pay increases of up to 12.5 per cent. Among those receiving performance-based increases is Michael Warren of Canada Post, even though he has just had the job for five months. In light of this blatant hypocrisy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington):

That the cabinet immediately revoke these increases as a concrete example of government restraint for Canadian workers.

SOUTH AFRICA—REPORTED COMMENTS BY MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG-ASSINIBOINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, whereas in an interview with the Toronto-based newspaper Contrast, a member of this House stated that after a recent trip to South Africa, paid for by that country's racist government, he thought South Africa's blacks were still too primitive for self-rule, uncivilized, lacking in morals, having terrible problems with alcohol and absenteeism and unable to keep up with the whites intellectually; whereas he praised the remarkable job done by the South African government, and whereas he feels that the Canadian government should consider similar measures as those used by the South Africans, for Canadian Indians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That this House establish a scholarship fund for remedial courses in race relations, humanity, morals, Christianity and native studies for the member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine.

SUGGESTION MINISTER BE BANNED FROM COMMONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is now bragging about his attempts to woo investors from Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and France, to invest their oil profits in Canada in order, quoting the minister, "to create jobs and perk up the economy", yet for many months he has encouraged and applauded the flight of investment capital out of Canada, as in the decision of French-owned Elf-Aquitaine to sell their entire Canadian holdings to the Canada Development Corporation because, in their words, "the climate for investment is better in the United States than in Canada", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources be banned from this House for his blatant hypocrisy and scurrilous deceit of the Canadian people by advocating Canadian ownership out of one side of his mouth and foreign investment by France and OPEC nations out of the opposite side.

SUGGESTED OPERATION OF ALSANDS PROJECT AS PUBLIC UTILITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. Whereas Amoco and Chevron, two of the seven partners, have apparently withdrawn from the Alsands megaproject, and Shell, the main partner, is still unsatisfied with the proposed rate of return, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That the Government of Canada not panic into a bad deal, that it should refuse to provide loan guarantees and a 20 per cent rate of return to private companies, and that instead Ottawa and the government of Alberta should together operate the project as a public utility. We do have cheaper alternatives. Therefore, we can either do it ourselves, thus ensuring that all the benefits go to the people of Canada, or we can pursue the alternatives, but we should not be blackmailed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SUGGESTED STATIONING OF SUPER TUG ON EAST COAST—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. Recent marine accidents on the Atlantic coast of Canada underline the need for a special tugboat capable of taking in tow ships like the Euro Princess, supertankers, and other very large vessels, to prevent marine disasters. Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to make available on the Canadian east coast a super tug that can rescue vessels in distress to prevent the loss of human life and environmental damage.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

FUTURE OF ALSANDS PROJECT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises out of the announcement yesterday that Amoco and Chevron are withdrawing from the Alsands consortium. In April of 1980 this project was all ready to go, needing only government approval. Some 20 months later, after a national energy policy promising self-sufficiency by 1990, this project which is so vital to self-sufficiency is falling apart. Yet, according to press reports, the minister is neither surprised nor concerned.

Will the minister explain to the House whether this withdrawal of Amoco and Chevron is part of some grand plan, and can he explain this plan to the House? If not, could he tell the House what he is doing to get this project back on track and under way as soon as possible?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, in the last few weeks there have been discussions between the government of Alberta, the Government of Canada, and the partners in the Alsands project. The two governments have put forward an offer which we find fair and sufficient. However, it was recognized at the time of those discussions that obviously both governments could not necessarily make an offer that would meet the demands of the weakest partner in such a consortium.

We were trying to put forward an offer that would be satisfactory for the whole project. There is a limit to how much the Canadian people should be asked to pay for this particular project. In that sense we are not surprised that those two companies have decided to withdraw from the consortium, and we are confident that the consortium will proceed, either through enlarged participation by the existing partners, or through new partners joining the consortium.

These discussions will carry on. It is my understanding that the consortium is supposed to meet shortly and review the situation among the remaining partners. We will see what they decide.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, this project is not only vital to self-sufficiency, it is absolutely vital to Canada's economic development. Indeed, the Economic Council of Canada described the energy megaprojects as the only good thing the Canadian economy has going for it in the 1980s.

This two-year delay has already cost Canada untold billions of dollars and untold thousands of jobs. Sponsors indicate that unless an affirmative decision to go ahead is given by April they will have lost another construction season, another full year's delay.

In the interests of the billions of dollars that are being lost, and in the interests of the thousands of jobs which could be created by this project, will the Minister not commit to the House his assurance that this project will get under way as soon as possible so that another year is not lost while people walk the unemployment lines?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, both the government of Alberta and the Government of Canada have agreed on a proposal that we found fair.

Mr. Crosbie: It is not good enough.

Mr. Lalonde: It is up to the companies concerned to react, and we are awaiting their reaction at the present time. There is nothing the two governments can do now except to see what the private companies concerned will do.

Once again, I am sure that the hon. member would not be recommending a policy which would imply giving into any demand by those companies. There is a limit to what the taxpayers of Canada will be asked to contribute. It is up to the Government of Canada and the government of Alberta to protect the consumer and the Canadian people.

Mr. Clark: Some protection.

NECESSITY FOR COMMITMENT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, who in the government is concerned about the thousands of Canadians who are unemployed because this project is delayed and held up?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Who in the government is concerned about the billions of dollars being lost? It is all well and good for the minister to stand in his place and say that he has to assure the people of Canada that he is doing the best job possible. The fact of the matter is that the people putting up the money are withdrawing, and this is costing the Canadian economy in general, and manufacturing and construction in particular, a fortune. It is affecting our balance of payments and interest rates.

Will the minister not make a commitment to the House to ensure that this vital project goes ahead? If he does not, we must start examining ways in which we will be able to control the social unrest in this country which will have a million unemployed throughout the entire 1980s?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would repeat that for several months already it had been foreseen that some members of the consortium would not proceed with the project.

Mr. Crosbie: Why did you not act?

Mr. Lalonde: There is a limit to what we will ask the taxpayers of Canada to contribute and the governments of Alberta and Canada have taken a common position in this. We are both confident that the project will proceed. The consortium is to meet again in the next few weeks, and we will see what is the conclusion of those discussions.

As far as we are concerned, we are confident that the project will proceed on the basis of the generous offer which has been made by the two governments. However, there is a limit to what any particular company should be asking from the Canadian taxpayer.

GOVERNMENT TREATMENT OF INVESTORS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister. I suggest that there are also limits to what a government can do to an investing company in Canada.

The minister must surely realize that one of the reasons Amoco and Chevron have withdrawn from the Alsands consortium is the treatment by this government of Syncrude, Suncor, and the oil industry in general, with its national energy policy, broken promises, and retroactivity. He must realize that investor confidence in Canada is at an all-time low.

What assurance has the minister given to the Arabs and the French that this government can be trusted not to treat their investment in Canada any differently from the way it has treated other investment in the energy sector in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as far as Suncor is concerned, it has been extremely happy with arrangements made and the treatment it has received under the National Energy Program and the agreement we arrived at with the government of Alberta last year. I refer my hon. friend to the record of statements made by company officials at the time of the agreement. They were quite happy with the arrangement.

As far as Syncrude is concerned, I am also happy to inform my hon. friend that Syncrude has indicated that it is satisfied with the arrangement contained in the Canada-Alberta agreement in relation to financing and the price for its particular product. Therefore, I fail to see upon what my hon. friend is basing his question when he refers to Suncor or Syncrude. Both those companies are quite happy with their investments in this country. They feel they have made very good investments, and they are proceeding with their projects, so I think the introduction to the hon. member's question is completely without foundation.

POSSIBILITY OF INVESTMENT BY MIDDLE EAST AND FRENCH SOURCES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Yes, Madam Speaker, Syncrude is so happy with its agreement and with the way it is being treated by this government that it has cancelled the second train of its project.

Is the reason the minister seems so unconcerned about the withdrawal of Chevron and Amoco from the Alsands consortium that he has commitments now in his pocket which he brought back from the Middle East? Are the Arabs now going to invest in the development of the oil sands? Are the French going to develop the oil sands? If so, can the minister explain to the House why French and Middle East investment in Canada's energy security is better or more desirable than American investment in our energy sector?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there are clear rules in this country in relation to foreign investment, particularly in the energy field. We have said that between now and the end of this decade we want the oil and gas industry to be at least 50 per cent Canadian owned. We have taken clear steps in that direction. In the last year the result has been a reduction of foreign investment by 6 per cent. However, that being said, there is still room for foreign investment in this country from whatever country is interested in investing here, whether it be the United States, European countries, or other countries, but they will be subject to the rules decided by the people of Canada and the Government of Canada in the interests of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Whether money comes from France, the United States, an OPEC nation or any other nation, provided the investor abides by the rules established by the government of this country for the protection of Canadians and to ensure that the industry will be controlled by Canadians, that investment will be welcome.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—EFFECT OF TERRORISM ON POSSIBILITY OF HOLDING DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the government's stated commitment to the view that democratic elections in El Salvador are now possible. The question arises from news at the weekend that government troops went into a suburb of San Salvador and murdered some 20 youths as a demonstration of terrorist tactics. Amongst the youths were a number of pre-adolescents.

● (1425)

Considering this most recent barbaric act, and considering that all-party delegations from Canada's parliament that have looked into the situation do not believe that democratic elections are possible in this circumstance, is the minister now prepared to change government policy and acknowledge that terrorism is no foundation for democratic elections and that peaceful negotiations, leading to the abolition of violence, are an essential condition at this time, before elections?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, these were terrible events that took place over the weekend in El Salvador. We condemn them, as we have condemned all such events. We have asked the government of El Salvador for an explanation. As the hon. member knows, there was some dispute about the facts. We would like to ascertain who is responsible. The events speak for themselves; they are too horrible to contemplate.

With respect to the question of elections in El Salvador, if we are speaking in the ideal, and we certainly would prefer to do so, as would the hon. member, we would want to see much better conditions for elections in El Salvador. In fact, through our initiative we tried to change the conditions that prevail in that country. We were turned down by the rebel forces very clearly in their response, and somewhat more ambiguously by the government which said the rebels would not accept it so it would not work. In any event, we did not succeed in changing the course of events in that country. We are seriously considering whether, in the circumstances, we should in any way participate in the election campaign in that country through observers or in any other fashion.

SUPPLYING OF ARMS BY THE UNITED STATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister knows and certainly the Presidents of Mexico and France, and most other western European nations which have involved themselves know, that those he describes as rebels are in fact prepared to have a negotiated settlement. It is the junta that is turning down negotiations, not the so-called rebel forces.

I should like to ask a related question. Yesterday we learned that the United States government has made a decision to increase its military involvement in El Salvador rather significantly. This can have no other effect than to further prop up the junta which was responsible for the murders on the weekend. Just the other day I received a copy of a letter from the Prime Minister in which he said, and I quote:

> On the supply of arms to Guatemala and El Salvador . . . we have frequently expressed our opposition and have done so vigorously . . .

On behalf of the vast majority of Canadians who want to see a peaceful solution to the terrible situation in El Salvador, will the minister now implement what the prime minister committed himself to, and condemn the recent increase in the supply of arms by the United States to El Salvador?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member invoked the positions of Mexico and France. I am sure he knows that those positions were very strongly rejected by the Organization of American States by a very heavy vote. We prefer to be guided in our foreign policy by the kind of information we receive from the countries and regions such as Venezuela, which I recently visited.

The hon. member knows that while he claims the rebels may want to negotiate a settlement, the one thing they feel they cannot accept is an election. We wonder why that should be the case, Madam Speaker.

In any event, to come to the heart of the hon. member's question, we will certainly indicate again to the United States our opposition to the supply of arms from any source to either side in El Salvador.

Mr. Crosbie: Don't blink when you are doing it.

McDOUGALL REPORT ON CONDITIONS IN FOREIGN SERVICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Prime Minister appointed Miss McDougall to do a study of our foreign service because of the dissatisfaction prevalent in it. Last December her report was made public. She found a crisis of identity, of confidence, in the ranks of the foreign service that required positive counteraction. She found a profound malaise and a communication gap between posts and headquarters, and a failure of management.

● (1430)

To date neither the Prime Minister nor the Secretary of State for External Affairs have made any statement on the report, even when the Prime Minister announced the reorganization of January 12. What is the response of the government to these startling findings? What action will be taken to carry out the recommendations? Will the foreign service be restored to proper management? Will its personnel be given the conditions under which they can perform to their capabilities? This is the service for which the minister is responsible. What is he doing about this devastating indictment of the management of External Affairs?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the McDougall report was commissioned by the Prime Minister. It will be the Prime Minister who makes any statements in direct response to it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: I can tell the hon. member that the large-scale reorganization announced recently which affects my department is indeed a partial response to those recommendations, and that there is an interdepartmental committee which is working very actively to deal with all details of the report. But it is important to recognize, as I stated in the House before, that Miss McDougall, in presenting her report, said that it was in effect a minority report—it detailed the bad and not the good—and that over-all morale in the department was high and efficiency was very great.

Miss MacDonald: What do you mean by "a minority report"?

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE REFERRED TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister said that there was dissatisfaction in the ranks of the foreign service, and Miss McDougall confirmed it. The minister's department is reported to suffer from a failure of management and these people are characterized as demoralized, mistrustful and frustrated. This is the minister's department, not the Prime Minister's department.

The minister is responsible day by day for this department. When will the minister act to change these findings? Will he agree that this report be referred to the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence as Miss McDougall recommended, so that we can monitor his progress in carrying out the recommendations? Does he agree with that? Will he give our External Affairs people a chance to perform as they have the ability to perform, given proper leadership and management? When will he do that? When will he take this indictment seriously? Never mind the Prime Minister; if he is too busy to do anything, the minister must do it.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, perhaps I may help the hon. member with a simple distinction. The Prime Minister is responsible for the report. I am responsible for the department. I am very happy to answer any questions on the department, but as to referring the report to a parliamentary committee, that would be for the Prime Minister to decide.

The hon. member knows that there are many chances in a parliamentary committee to ask questions about the report, especially about the morale of the department. Nobody denies that there are some problems in the morale of the foreign service. As the hon. member said, that was the point of the report, but the author of the report said that despite the fact there are problems, the over-all morale was good.

EL SALVADOR—REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSIDER COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Oshawa; and it is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am frustrated with the government's position on the El Salvador question. Last week members of the House visited refugee camps in Costa Rica, and our committee recommendations were given in December.

Some hon. Members: Question! Question!

Mr. Ogle: Our recommendations given in December were confirmed by our experience of the last two weeks in that part of the world. I plead with the minister. Will he seriously look at the recommendations which we gave in December and reconsider the Canadian position on that seriously troubled part of the world?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I hope the hon. member knows that we take very seriously his views and the views of other Members of Parliament. We do not have to reconsider our policy because it has been to keep the situation under constant review. We are not pleased about the situation in El Salvador. We are not pleased about the prospects of having the kind of election we would like to see happen. Because of that we are considering whether or not we should give the election which will take place there the moral support we might give by participating in it. If the hon. member was in Latin America last week with the committee, he knows that the foreign minister of the neighbouring democracy, Costa Rica, urged the committee to give all possible support to the election in El Salvador. He is in a pretty good position to give advice to the world as well.

McDOUGALL REPORT—QUERY RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for St. John's West, and it is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I suppose we can assume that the minister has read the McDougall report, in particular Recommendation No. 44. For the benefit of the House, it reads as follows:

> Concrete steps be taken to correct the widely held view that those in positions of power consider the activities and the product of the foreign service as largely irrelevant to federal government or Canadian objectives.

I wonder whether the minister is aware of that. Does he consider that the steps announced by the Prime Minister on January 12 are, in effect, in the Prime Minister's mind or in the minister's mind, an answer to that particular criticism?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I assure the hon. member that indeed that kind of consideration was very much in the government's mind in the reorganization which took place. If there was any doubt about the relevance of External Affairs, it was certainly answered by the change, which had at least two effects. Making External Affairs in its new broad sense an economic department as well as a political department in a direct way, gives it a larger role in the Canadian scene and also enables it to represent a wider range of Canadian interests abroad. Of course the people who represent us in the department are the first to understand the significance of the change.

ROLE OF MINISTER

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, the minister will recall that on January 12 the Prime Minister said that he was creating a triumvirate of equals—himself, the minister who was formerly responsible for DREE, and the minister responsible for international trade—this tricephalous monster. I am not sure whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs understands what role he plays in that hierarchy. Could the minister expand on his particular role in that grouping? The Prime Minister said that he asked the former minister for DREE "specifically to take on as an assignment the development of a strategy of our relations with foreign countries." What role does the Secretary of State for External Affairs play in this particular hierarchy?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should read the whole of what the Prime Minister said or, if he has read it, he should quote the whole of it. I am very pleased to be associated with two outstanding colleagues in this responsibility.

Mr. Crosbie: You need them.

Mr. MacGuigan: I assure the hon. member and the House that the concerns of the Minister of State for External Relations are primarily in the area of francophone, cultural and humanitarian affairs. If the hon. member will read and quote the whole of what the Prime Minister said, I think he will find the answer to his own question.

Mr. Epp: What do you do?

Mr. La Salle: Nothing.

Mr. MacGuigan: I have the same role that I had previously, and it embraces the department.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AGRICULTURE

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON CANADA'S ROLE AS WORLD FOOD SUPPLIER

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I welcome the Minister of Agriculture back from Crowfoot; I hope he appreciates his task. My question directed to him is with respect to a speech he made in Peterborough last Friday wherein he was quoted as saying that "the world's need for food will make Canada a world power by the turn of the century." In view of the fact that we presently import 40 per cent of our winter food dollar, that other than grain Canada is a net importer of food, and that Canada is losing 200,000 acres per decade of good, prime agricultural land, how can the minister, who has taken no initiative in terms of the preservation of agricultural farmland in Canada—and all our land could be gone by the year 2014—make a statement that we will be a world power in food, when the only source of food other than water could be destroyed early in the next century?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I cannot understand how one can be so pessimistic after coming from the first ministers' meeting and listening to the premier of his province being so optimistic about the future of the great province of Alberta.

• (1440)

Land is a resource that belongs to the provinces. They have control of it. We know through our research and technology that land can be preserved and conserved in a manner whereby the productivity of this land can increase three quarters by the year 2000. It must do that. I would suggest to the hon. member that, if he wants to do something, he could go to the station at Lacombe or the substation at Vegreville; he could go to Lethbridge or to Swift Current and talk to some of the people there who are also concerned about the land. We have the technology and the scientific knowledge needed to make the land productive and stay productive as long as we want it to do so.

Mr. Nielsen: The land is strong.

Mr. Whelan: We are optimistic. I do not think there is another country in the world that has the potential for agricultural development that we have here in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LAND CLASSIFICATION MAPPING SYSTEM

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, that answer would turn the minister's hat green. I would like to point out to the minister that the Premier of Alberta is optimistic because he is a Conservative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: Bearing in mind that we are presently losing between 30 and 40 acres of agricultural land in Ontario per hour, and over the last few years the province of Alberta has lost 60,000 acres per year, why is it that for 20 years the minister's department has not come forward with a classification mapping system? The minister's department has embarked on it. Without that mapping system a land-use policy system cannot exist, and the government is dilly-dallying and toying around. That classification is not ready, and it is essential and incumbent if we are to have a land utilization policy across the nation. When will the system be ready?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member talks about the land and how much is being lost. Is the hon. member recommending that the land, as a resource, be turned over to the federal authorities so we can manage it?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Whelan: Is that what he is suggesting?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Whelan: The land is under provincial government management right now, and the hon. member should know that. When the hon. member talks about land use and how much land we are losing through industrial and urban encroachment, that is strictly a provincial responsibility. It is not under federal authority to tell the provinces what to do with the land and what they cannot do. We can recommend. We have done that.

The hon. member talked about the land-use maps and the maps that we have for soils in Canada. Our maps are one of the most complete sets of maps there are. I would ask the hon. member to compare ours with any other nation in the world.

The agri-food policy that we have presented for the next 20 years, to feed six billion people by the year 2000, shows that there is land that we can work and develop with the help of our researchers. In northern Ontario and Quebec there are 24 million acres that will provide forage for livestock, and vegetable oil seed such as canola seeds that will provide protein for Canadians and many other millions of people all over the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NUCLEAR ENERGY

QUERY RESPECTING REACTOR CONTRACT OFFERED TO MEXICO

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. According to recent reports in La Presse and The Globe and Mail, the cabinet's economic development committee has been the green light to yet another massive bailout to Canada's nuclear industry. This bailout involves massive financing subsidies for potential foreign buyers. It will also involve a subsidy program here in Canada designed to entice the provinces into building reactors to export electricity to the United States.

The February 1 deadline for bids on the Mexican reactor deal has now passed, and whatever our offer to the Mexicans happens to be, it must have been tendered. At a time when Canadians are being asked to spend 20 per cent on mortgages, does our sales pitch include concessional financing at or near 7.5 per cent to 8 per cent as our competitors are bidding on the same reactor deal?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, first of all I would like to assure the hon. member that the figures he is mentioning at best are very much hypothetical. We do not know what our competitors are proposing as concessional financing. We do not intend to tell our competitors what our offer is. This is a competition with several other countries in order to get the contract that will create several tens of thousands of jobs and, man-years for Canadians, over the next few years. This is a very important contract. It means jobs for Canadians. We intend to try to meet the competition. The exact financing arrangements will be known if and when Canada gets the contract in question.

As far as the particular concessional financing is concerned, I remind my hon. friend that there is a general rule for exports from Canada of all kinds of products ranging from automobiles to locomotives and various other kinds of manufactured products. In order to ensure that Canadians are going to sell goods abroad and create jobs in this country, we have to make arrangements to meet the competition. There is nothing special with Candu reactors compared to any other product that we are selling abroad. Our job is to sell Canadian goods abroad and we are going to take the means to do it.

JUSTIFICATION FOR DOMESTIC POLICY

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, it is very interesting that every time a question relating to the nuclear industry is raised it is always shrouded in secrecy. The public has a right to know about the billions we have already spent and the billions we intend to give away to foreign competitors on what I call the nuclear-electrical lunacy in which we are involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: I think it is about time people did know about those things. As far as job creation is concerned, the minister knows that it takes $22,000 to create a job in manufacturing. It takes about $173,000, or eight times that much to create one job in the nuclear field or in the electrical utilities area in Canada. Why are we not moving in that direction?

Finally, how can the minister justify a policy to locate Candu reactors throughout Canada with all their attendent risks as well as all of the unsolved problems in the matter of waste disposal, and subsidize the building of these reactors so that Canada takes all the risks with respect to possible accidents and the U.S. gets all the power benefits?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am afraid the lunacy is in the hon. member's mind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mad Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: Whether it is in the sale of cars, the sale of locomotives, the sale of Candu reactors or the sale of any other product manufactured in this country, we are engaged in tough competition on world markets with other countries. Before bids are opened and contracts awarded, it would be stupid to announce what our proposal is. This is the infancy of the art. For my hon. friend to make such statements that this matter is shrouded in secrecy is a lot of nonsense. It is standard business practice around the world, and I suggest the hon. member go back to square one.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES AND MANUFACTURERS CONCERNING DEADLINES

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and concerns urea formaldehyde foam. In view of the program announced by the federal government before the Christmas holidays, I should like to know whether the minister has continued his discussions with the provinces, and more specifically with Quebec, regarding this problem and also whether discussions have continued with the manufacturers. Regarding the extension of the time limit for UFFI victims who want to take legal action against the government or other agencies, has the Government of Canada taken the position that it will extend the time limit for any legal action?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, regarding the first part of the hon. member's question, I am very pleased to be able to confirm that our discussions with the provinces and with the industry itself are continuing. Unfortunately, results are not as good as we would have wished. As for the time limit, I can inform the hon. member that, first of all, any payment made to the owner of a home with UFFI will not deprive that person of legal recourse against the governments in question, and second, as far as the time limit is concerned, I can assure him that the legislation to be passed by the Quebec National Assembly will have the same consequences for both the Canadian and the Quebec governments.

AIRPORTS

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN COMMERCIAL FLIGHTS FROM DORVAL TO MIRABEL

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. For a long time people have been talking about Mirabel, its economic situation and the need for a study in order to transfer certain services from Dorval to Mirabel, and it seems that last week, 33 local mayors met to make a clear recommendation to the minister regarding the transfer of commercial flights from Dorval to Mirabel. After all this time and all these studies, can the minister tell us what answer he is going to give the mayors, after consultation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, first I should like to point out that 33 mayors may be in favour of the action described but there are thirty-three on the other side who are against. This is one of those very local North-South conflicts.

In any case, Madam Speaker, I can inform the hon. member that we are past the study stage, since I am now busy trying to get a consensus among some of my colleagues, and I intend to go before cabinet quite soon in order to obtain an opinion from my colleagues, which will then be discussed with the parties concerned. That is as far as we are right now. I shall try to get this consensus as quickly as possible.

REQUEST FOR DECISION ON NORDAIR CASE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Since the first group of 33 mayors indicated that they wanted to meet him, could the minister tell us whether he intends to invite the 33 others, and so organize a meeting of all the mayors concerned by this development—I suppose the minister would like to see Mirabel more productive than it is now—and, with leave, I would also ask the minister—this will not take much longer—whether he has forgotten or lost the Nordair file?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I shall attempt to explain to the hon. member what I was trying to say. I am now trying to get a consensus among the members of this side of the House, and more specifically, the cabinet members. I feel this is important if I am subsequently to have discussions with the parties concerned. If I do so on the basis of my own personal opinions, I think it would be a waste of time, since I will not necessarily be able to sell my own position to my colleagues. Regarding Nordair, and I have said this often enough, this summer we had an offer that was accepted by the majority of the people who are directly concerned, and at the last minute, the government of Quebec decided to intervene and put up $15 million in order to influence the deal. In other words, we had reached an agreement that was economically sound but was not acceptable politically to the government of Quebec.

PENSIONS

EFFECT OF BUDGET RESOLUTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madame Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last night the Minister of Veterans Affairs stated veterans pensions are to be exempt from Resolution 53 of the budget which makes certain pensions taxable. Can the minister inform the House if she has been as successful as the Minister of Veterans Affairs in having pensions from her department exempted?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, perhaps the hon. member could be more explicit. I am sorry but I quite fail to understand what he means.

[English]

REQUEST THAT INFORMATION BE PROVIDED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, that answer indicates we have a very serious problem. The Minister of Veterans Affairs has informed himself on which pensions will be affected by Resolution 53. Certain pensions payable by her department will now be taxable under this resolution. If the minister is not familiar with this, will she please find out and advise the House which pensions from her department are now going to be taxable?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Madam Speaker.

ENERGY

CONSTRUCTION OF PETROSAR VACUUM DISTILLATION UNIT

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given the announcement this morning by Petrosar that it will attempt to meet both the federal and Alberta governments' requirements to upgrade residual fuel oil by construction of a vacuum distillation unit only, and not the larger units initially indicated, is the minister satisfied that Petrosar can meet their commitments with this unit and, if not, will he agree to meet personally with Petrosar and Polysar officials to help with the ultimate solution?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, extensive discussions took place over a year ago with Petrosar in order to arrive at an arrangement which would very substantially reduce the production of heavy oil at their refinery. They gave a commitment at that time to take certain steps to achieve this objective. My officials are now in touch with them in order to check whether the new approach they are proposing will enable them to meet their commitments.

I want to assure my hon. friend that we are following this case very, very carefully and, if necessary, I will meet with Petrosar officials, but in the meantime consultations are currently taking place and we want to make sure Petrosar will live up to its commitments.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications responsible for freedom of information legislation. Several days ago he was quoted as saying it was no longer a government priority that this long overdue legislation, promised in the Speech from the Throne and essential in a democratic society, be passed in this session of Parliament.

In view of the fact that the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee had nearly completed clause by clause study of the bill when the minister refused to appear further, will he now assure the House that this important bill, substantially amended after strong criticism by many witnesses, will indeed come back to that committee before the end of the current session, or will he allow the bureaucrats to triumph and let the bill die?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): The hon. member knows that I cannot answer his question with a yes or no at this time.

At the unanimous request of the attorneys general of the provinces, Madam Speaker, we have decided to consider the concerns they raised. Following this expression of concern, there was an initial meeting of the officials of the Privy Council, who are helping me with the formulation and preparation of this bill, with officials of the provinces.

Another conference of provincial attorneys general is scheduled shortly—I believe for February 8 and 9 or 9 and 10—and if I understood correctly, a report on the entire question of freedom of information will be made at that conference. Following the conference, I shall be reporting to my cabinet colleagues on the position taken by the provinces, and the decision will be made at that time.

[English]

OBJECTIONS BY PROVINCIAL ATTORNEYS GENERAL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, the minister knows very well that the objections raised by some, not all, of the provincial attorneys general, were first raised over a year ago. They were repeated in a letter signed by Roy McMurtry in June, and again at an attorneys general conference in October.

Why is the minister now all of a sudden deciding that these objections are serious enough possibly to kill the bill? Is it not a fact that this is just a phony excuse to keep the doors of government shut and effectively kill this legislation in this session?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I would just like to remind the hon. member that it is the Attorney General of Saskatchewan, Mr. Romanow, who is of the same political persuasion as the hon. member, who wrote to me on behalf of all the attorneys general of the provinces bringing their concerns to my attention. Following that letter, at their request, I appeared in front of a meeting of the provincial attorneys general, and all those present—

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Not Manitoba.

Mr. Fox: —with the sole exception of the Attorney General of Manitoba—

Mr. Waddell: Why not?

Mr. Fox: —who was not prepared to take a position on the matter at the time because he was only recently appointed. All those present, including Mr. Romanow, asked me to take under consideration a number of their concerns. Obviously, Madam Speaker, if the attorneys general of the provinces, who are responsible for the administration of justice within their provinces, ask us to take into account a number of concerns they have with our bill, any responsible government would wish to do so.

EVALUATION STUDY ON CORE FUNDING PROGRAM

Question No. 2,375—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Core funding program for native associations presently under evaluation and, if so, were a number of consulting firms asked to bid on an evaluation study?

2. Did one consulting firm submit a proposal considered the best by four independent assessors and, if so, was the amount of the bid $95,000 and, if not, what was the amount?

3. Did the Department of the Secretary of State subsequently receive pressure to alter the terms of reference after the bids were received and to award the contract to another firm in the amount of approximately $139,000?

4. Were the terms of reference altered and, if so (a) for what reason were competitive bids called (b) were political considerations involved and, if so, what were they (c) what was the justification for a larger expenditure of taxpayer funds than may have been necessary?

5. Were there irregularities in the bidding process and, if so, were they made known to the Treasury Board or to responsible financial comptrollers in the department and, if not, for what reason?

6. (a) Was a $139,000 bid received from Hickling-Johnson (b) did the government give final approval to the bid and, if not, will the matter be investigated before it proceeds further?

7. What was the name and address of each bidder and the amount involved?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): 1. Yes. Six invitations to bid on an evaluation study were issued.

2. One of the four valid tenders received was recommended as most cost effective during a first review carried out by a team of three independent assessors. See reply to parts 6 and 7.

3. No. An advisory committee to the evaluation study, which included representatives from the three national native organizations, recommended that non-Core funded associations should also be part of the study sample. Although the tender call had not included non-Core funded associations the possibility of an expanded study sample was discussed at the bidders' conference. One firm included non-Core funded associations in their proposed sample. See reply to parts 6 and 7.

4. No. (a), (b) and (c) Not applicable.

5. There were no irregularities in the bidding process. The contractor selection process yielded two incompatible recommendations. One firm, with the lowest dollar bid, was recommended by a technical review committee. Another firm, with a higher bid and an enlarged study sample, was recommended by the advisory committee. The department was not prepared to ignore the advice of the advisory committee; nor could it ignore the technically acceptable lower bid. In view of the situation and the passage of time, the decision was not to proceed with a contract for the full study at this time.

6 and 7. The disclosure of information contained in bids which have not resulted in a contract would prejudice the competitive position of the companies and therefore the requested information regarding name, address and amount involved in each bid is not provided.

RELOCATION OF DVA

Question No. 3,049—Mr. McKenzie:

1. With reference to section 10.6 of the 1980 Report of the Auditor General (a) what is the exact relocation schedule and is the schedule progressing as planned (b) for each phase of the relocation, how many persons are involved?

2. (a) What is the retraining schedule for the 80 per cent of new employees required to fill the positions of those unwilling to relocate to Charlottetown (b) is the Department of Veterans Affairs currently hiring people who are guaranteeing that they will relocate (c) what percentage of those presently being hired are guaranteeing that they will relocate?

3. What is the total updated cost of relocation, including physical construction, relocation of personnel and the aggregate costs of retaining staff?

4. What is the percentage and what is the make-up of the departmental personnel that will remain in Ottawa?

5. (a) Which records will go to Charlottetown (b) is there adequate means of record communication between Charlottetown and Ottawa?

6. (a) What percentage of departmental record-keeping is computerized (b) what percentage of the record computerization is made up by (i) Canadian Pension Commission (ii) Pension Review Board (iii) Entitlement Board (iv) Pension Advocate Bureau records (c) are these computer systems being expanded or reduced in scope and use (d) what are the future plans of the department with respect to computerization (e) is it felt that computerization enhances or detracts from the Department's efficiency and effectiveness?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. (a) and (b) Yes.

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	Total 1979-1983
Department of Veterans Affairs	27	109	164	163	45	508
Canadian Pension Commission	0	0	0	0	210	210
Bureau of Pensions Advocates	0	0	0	0	23	23
Pension Review Board	0	0	0	0	22	22
	27	142	164	163	300	796

2. (a) Training begins upon appointment for a period based on the experience, knowledge, skills and abilities that the successful candidate possesses.

(b) Yes.

(c) 100 per cent—where willingness to relocate is stated as a condition of employment.

3. $35,814,500 (excluding construction—1980 dollars). $16,500,000 (Department of Public Works construction costs—1979 dollars).

4. 4 per cent to 5 per cent consisting of a senior executive in charge of national capital operations which include a secretariat, a correspondence section, a public affairs section, support staff for a deputy minister's NCR office.

5. (a) All active pension case files (veterans), all active subject files as well as the closed volumes which have a high rate of retrieval.

(b) Yes.

6. (a) The preparation of client cheques and related statistics has been completely computerized and operated on behalf of Veterans Affairs by the Department of Supply and Services.

41.3 per cent of these relate to WVA/CWA benefits (93,298 recipients as at October 31, 1981) and 58.7 per cent of these relate to CPC benefits (132,401 clients as at October 31, 1981).

Computerized Client Database Records contain information on 100 per cent of clients.

(b) (i) There are 132,401 pensioners out of a total of 225,699 individuals in the Database.

(ii) Pension Review Board—Nil. However, the Pension Review Board has access to the basic data held on pensioners.

(iii) Entitlement Boards—There are computerized records on all the "current" files which represent client cases under active consideration; computerized records are held on all the current year's completed action file, and on all the previous five years' completed actions. Information reports derived from these records are available for use by the staff of the Canadian Pension Commission.

(iv) Bureau of Pensions Advocates—100 per cent of clients who have approached an advocate or representative for advice, counselling, or preparation of pension applications or modification.

(c) An extensive program is under way to replace and expand the existing computer programs in Veterans Affairs. Up-to-date technology is being applied in this process. The end result will be that Veterans Affairs staff will be able to use computer systems directly through the use of terminals in support of their work.

(d) The plans of the department in the area of computerization include:

Systems that support War Veterans Allowances, Civilian War Allowances established in all district and regional offices of the Veterans Services program.

Systems that support File Registry Operations established in field and head office registries.

An extended system for payment and accounting of disability pensions to replace the existing payment system.

The development of an extended system for the Canadian Pension Commission to assist in the monitoring and control of all its client related activities.

The development of extensions to the Personnel Management Information System to provide access and update capability to Veterans Affairs field units.

(e) Computerization is an essential component of Veterans Affairs' long-range program of management and operational improvement and modernization. It will play a significant role in improving the department's efficiency and effectiveness.

PERFORMANCE INFORMATION IN ANNUAL REPORT

Question No. 3,053—Mr. McKenzie:

With reference to section 10.28 of the 1980 Report of the Auditor General (a) is the Department of Veterans Affairs preparing to include performance and organizational information and more extensive statements describing expenditures and transfer payments for its next annual report (b) what indices is the department considering for use to measure performance other than those it already uses?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): (a) The annual report presents extensive information on the organization. It also includes detailed information (with charts) on transfer payments. Performance information is not presented in the annual report and will not be included in our next annual report.

However, the portfolio is participating in the reform of the main estimates for 1982/83. This document will include extensive information on transfer payments and expenditures in the organization. Information on performance will be integral to that report.

(b) For efficiency indices the department is considering outputs such as War Veterans Allowance applications processed, maintenance of War Veterans Allowance accounts, cases handled by counsellors, and payment of suppliers' invoices for health treatment.

SUMMARY TRIAL AND COURT MARTIAL

Question No. 3,489—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence hold a summary trial of Private Alan Tremblay and, if so, what was the (a) charge (b) sentence?

2. Was Corporal Hoffman tried by the department and, if so (a) was it a summary trial or a court martial (b) what was the (i) charge (ii) sentence?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. Details surrounding a summary trial cannot be made public without the express consent of the party involved, in accordance with subsection 52(2) of the Human Rights Act.

2. Yes.

(a) Corporal WJR Hoffman was tried by court martial on June 1, 1981.

(b) (i) four charges under section 120 of the National Defence Act: "Trafficking in a substance held out by him to be a narcotic, contrary to section 4(1) of the Narcotic Control Act"; and one charge under section 120 of the National Defence Act: "possession of a narcotic contrary to section 3(1) of the Narcotic Control Act".

(ii) he was found guilty on all charges and was sentenced to: two years less one day imprisonment, dismissal from Her Majesty's service and reduction in rank to the rank of private. He appealed the severity of the sentence and as a result of that appeal the punishment of imprisonment was mitigated to 12 months. The punishment of dismissal from Her Majesty's service was approved.

COST TO GOVERNMENT OF TELEPHONE OPERATIONS

Question No. 3,545—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 3,142 which states in part that the cost of government long distance telephone calls during 1980-81 over and above those made on regular government-leased lines was $26,325,000, what was the total cost to the government of all telephone operations for the period of time involved and, of this amount, what figure applies to all lines leased by the government?

2. What are the names of all telephone companies from whom the government leases lines and what was the amount paid to each company for the period of time involved?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. As reported in the Annual Review of Telecommunications in the Government of Canada, 1980/81, total operational telecommunications expenditures for voice intercity and local telephone services for the period of time involved was $117,832,000.

Of this amount, the total federal government expenditure for leased lines is not uniquely identified by the financial coding system and is, therefore, not available. The coding system provides for the identification of this expenditure item at individual departmental levels only.

2. As noted above, this information is not available at the aggregate level for the government. The following information lists the names of telephone companies from which the government telecommunications agency leases lines and the amounts paid to them by the agency for the period of time involved.

Trans-Canada Telephone Systems. GTA receives summary billings from TCTS, for lines leased from the following Companies:

Bell Canada
British Columbia Telephone Company
Maritime Telegraph & Telephone Company Ltd
Manitoba Telephone System
New Brunswick Telephone Co. Ltd
Alberta Government Telephones
Newfoundland Telephone Company Ltd
Island Telephone Company Ltd
Saskatchewan Telecommunications
Terra Nova Telephone Company
Edmonton Telephones
Total TCTS	$40,625.
CNCP Telecommunications	$ 6,130.
Other (Québec-Téléphone; Télébec Ltée; Northern Telephone Limited; AT & T Long Lines; New York Telephone and C & P Telephone)	630.
Total	$47,385.

DIRECTOR OF SECURITY FOR PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

Question No. 3,663—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the government aware that a position as a deputy director of security for the Parliament Buildings has been advertised and that the duties consist in part of "investigation of criminal offences within the House"?

2. Did the Solicitor General or any department make a recommendation to any person connected with the House of Commons for the hiring of such a staff member and, if so, what are the "criminal offences" within the House that are envisaged?

3. Is it government policy that such reflections on Members of Parliament and their staffs be made?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1, 2 and 3. Except for the most senior positions in the House of Commons establishment, all appointments are the responsibility of the Speaker. Any questions about advertising or filling such positions must be directed to the Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the parliamentary secretary has been able to get the answer to a very difficult question, No. 3,489, on my behalf. That question was put on the Order Paper on November 26.

I am curious why I have never received an answer to a very simple question I put on the Order Paper on June 1. It simply asks: "What was the increase in real terms in the Department of National Defence's expenditures, including statutory costs and expressed in percentages, for each fiscal year, 1970-71 to 1979-80?" If we had a more knowledgeable Minister of National Defence I would be prepared to ask it as an oral question. It is so simple that it should be answered in ten minutes. I would like to know why it has taken some seven months.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will make inquiries on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Paproski: How about, 2,214?

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FARM CREDIT ACT
FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Monday, February 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to continue my speech on Bill C-88, which I was not able to conclude when we adjourned at ten o'clock last night, dealing with changes to the Farm Credit Corporation.

Last year, for example, the Farm Credit Corporation received $12 million in capital and could therefore borrow and lend out some $300 million. This present bill would raise the authorized capital of the Farm Credit Corporation by $75 million, but on the basis of past experience, the corporation can expect to get only about $12 million to $15 million of that in the coming year; that is, enough to allow it to borrow and re-lend from $300 million to $375 million. This is far short of what farmers need now and in the coming year, but it is also far short of what this legislation seems in theory to be making available.

It would be a great advantage if the government were to concentrate its efforts on helping the Farm Credit Corporation get ready to borrow privately, so that the government could grant more of the authorized capital in the coming year and do less of the authorized lending. One solution is precisely the plan the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is now toying with, namely, allowing retiring farmers to place their money with the Farm Credit Corporation at low rates and avoid tax of the type introduced in the November budget which is designed in such a way as to cripple the retirement plans which many have been making for the last few years. All of this could and should be discussed in committee. What is important is to see that the Farm Credit Corporation is helped to utilize the new capital authorization now being proposed for it, rather than hindered by the government, as it has been in recent years.

There are other features of this legislation which appear to be of a routine nature and which seem welcome on the surface. One such feature is a loosening of the definition of farming which should allow the corporation more flexibility in dealing with the changing face of Canadian agriculture and husbandry, rather than tying it to models from the past. The dropping of present age restrictions is another feature which seems welcome, and certainly it is in line with the will of the House as expressed in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which we so recently adopted. It is to be hoped that the Farm Credit Corporation will adopt this change, not only in form but also in spirit. There are other changes in this bill which are of a more technical nature, such as changes in the size of the board and its quorum, and turning over some matters to regulations, which should prove worthwhile, but which should certainly receive some scrutiny from the committee as it examines this bill.

One of the main problems which will have to be confronted in effecting this legislation is the problem of ensuring that the Farm Credit Corporation can borrow private funds at a low enough rate to allow it to lend at an acceptable rate. In this connection, it is interesting to note recent press reports indicating that the Farm Credit Corporation has been approached with an offer of private money at rates much lower than the prevailing commercial lending rates in Canada. According to the press reports, however, the Farm Credit Corporation does not know the source of the funds being offered. Speculation, therefore, suggests various possibilities, including the possibility that the funds being offered are from illegal sources, such as the proceeds from the international drug trade or other organized crime activities. Rather than see the Farm Credit Corporation accept money from such anonymous sources, perhaps the Minister of Agriculture will prevail upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to adopt the suggestion he aired last week, that retiring farmers might have their own kind of registered retirement savings plan by lending to the Farm Credit Corporation at reduced rates and with a corresponding tax reduction. This is not any sort of obnoxious tax expenditure on the part of the government, as the Minister of Finance seems to think all money is when other people have it, but, rather, a recognition that the capitalization of agriculture, if we are to see the survival of the family farm in Canada, is a special case, just as the non-taxation of capital gains on a principal residence is a special case associated with the socially desirable goal of seeing people own their own houses.

Certainly there is no advantage in allowing the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow privately if it must borrow at the outrageously high rates caused by the government's high interest rate policy. There must be a means worked out whereby the Farm Credit Corporation is not entirely dependent on the public treasury for its borrowing, yet can borrow at a low enough rate that its clients, Canada's food producers, can afford to reborrow from it at manageable rates. This, it seems to me, is an issue which must be faced and which the committee examination must deal with squarely.

There are other matters which I was hoping to see in this bill, Mr. Speaker, but which are not mentioned at all. For example, up until now there have been many cases where the Farm Credit Corporation has refused to treat the spouses of farmers as they would treat other partners in assessing loan applications, even though in a great many cases both spouses work full time or what many industrial workers would consider to be much more than full time. I asked the head of the Farm Credit Corporation about this last spring, and I would like to remind the House of his response. He said:

> We are preparing right now to send a demand—and this is a decision of the cabinet for regulation—to abolish entirely this regulation we have right now.

In other words, the Farm Credit Corporation seems prepared to treat men and women equally in this matter, as partners. Apparently the government is not, for we find no proposed change here, even though we in all parties supported the granting of equality to both men and women when we recently voted on the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is interesting to recall how slow the cabinet was to accept that principle of equality, and now to see that they have not acted to give it legislative effect in this case now before us.

Another matter which I would have liked to see addressed is foreign takeovers of Canadian farms with Farm Credit Corporation mortgages. We live in a riding in western Ontario, and we know that a large percentage of our prime agricultural lands are being purchased, not only by foreign buyers, but also by absentee buyers. We know that we cannot compete with some of the rates which are being offered for some of the foreign money which is being brought into this country. We know that we are competing against money which has been earned in industrial areas of other countries. We would like to see people come to this country to set up residency, taking their place beside us, if they want to be producers of agricultural products. However, it is a different matter when foreigners buy our prime lands, very often leasing those lands out to the farmers who have farmed those lands for a number of years with as low as a 5 per cent return on their investment. There is simply no possible way that our young farmers, even with the help of the Farm Credit Corporation, can handle such purchases or compete against this type of buyer.

When selling farms, we want to be able to sell to the highest bidder. This is one area that should be addressed. I realize that jurisdiction over property is a provincial matter. However, I would feel bad if we did not include in this bill something to restrict FCC capital being used to facilitate a foreign purchaser who has no intention of residing in this country.

Last spring I asked the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation about this matter. I quote from his answer at that time:

> Right now the act says that we can incorporate in the mortgage a covenant saying that our borrower will not sell his farm without our permission. However, in the act as it is, it does not say that if he does not do that we can call the loan. It seems to be the logical thing to do, but it does not say it in the act.
> When we were contemplating making amendments to our act this is one of the amendments that we wished to bring in, stating that in the case where he does that without our permission we can call in the loan. That would be one correction.
> Right now, we have an internal policy by which we will not accept an assumption if the chap is not a Canadian citizen or a permanent resident. We will also refuse persons related to the business of real estate; we will refuse companies who do not meet our criteria for being principally occupied in agriculture; and finally, examine all cases where the person involved will not use the property for farming purposes.
> This is as far as we have gone recently in the administration of that. We are getting ready to publish an internal policy on this . . . . The trouble with a policy of that sort is that we never know if it will stand up in court. In certain provinces, it would be pretty hard because of provincial legislation. However, so far, all the cases we have refused have not been challenged; so we still do not know.

It is my hope and intention when this bill goes to committee to introduce an amendment to include recognition of the spouse as a partner in a farming operation and to introduce an amendment pertaining to the transfer of Farm Credit Corporation mortgages to non-residents of Canada.

Here is an area where farm credit is expected to see some legislative action. In examining this bill in committee we will want to know how far it goes toward giving adequate legislative backing to the policy. If there is any danger of a challenge to the policy in court, let us be clear in giving a legislative answer so that the courts will have certainty in denying such challenges.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak on Bill C-88 this afternoon. The constituency of Dauphin is a farming community. The farmers are not only involved in livestock and grain, but a very large number are involved in mixed farming. Of course, the family farm is still a reality for many people in my constituency. Farming is carried on in most parts of my constituency, in the north, Swan River Valley, around Dauphin, in the south, and the east in my constituency in the Alonsa, Plumas, or Amaranth area. There is a large area of potential for grain marketing and grain development. Because there is this large number of people in my constituency who are affected by this bill, I am pleased to speak on it this afternoon.

I am interested in the fact that there is mention of changes for Indian bands involved in farming. Of the seven Indian reserves in my constituency, a couple are expanding their farming operations. They are interested in the changes this bill may provide. Unlike many rural areas, I have a couple of Hutterite colonies who have expressed their concern about the Farm Credit Corporation.

I welcome this opportunity to speak. My colleagues, the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) stated that in some ways the bill does not present the solution because it does not look at the real problems farmers face today.

There is no over-all agricultural or transportation policy which the Liberals are following at this time that this FCC bill can fit into. It is interesting to note with regard to transportation that in today's Globe and Mail, it is reported that Saskatchewan Liberals under the leadership of Ralph Goodale are starting to make noises about coming out in favour of the Crowsnest Pass agreement. They know if they stick with what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is trying to abolish, they will not survive a provincial election in Saskatchewan.

The government is not dealing with some of the over-all, basic problems in this FCC bill. One point underlined earlier by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre is so poignant to this issue that I should emphasize it. On January 28, the hon. member stated:

> This particular bill, this move to attempt to free up more funds through the Farm Credit Corporation, will assist; but I hope that the government and the minister will focus more attention on doing something about the real problem, the farm income problem, and will get on with programs for improved marketing and better stabilization which will bring us better net farm incomes.

My constituents involved in farming know that costs have gone up considerably over the past number of years. Input costs have grown. At the same time the amount of money they receive has been decreasing. They are caught in the cost-price squeeze. As a result many are forced to apply to the FCC. They need credit in order to maintain a viable farming operation. If the government was following a food policy and if the farmers were getting a fair return, there would be no need to worry about farm credit.

It is interesting to note from statistics that interest rates have become the number one cost for farmers. According to the projected figures for 1981, farmers will be faced with interest on indebtedness to the tune of $2.168 billion. That is a huge amount that the farmers of Canada are being forced to absorb as part of their operation. In my province, the projected figure spent by farmers on interest for 1981 is $201.9 million. This problem is faced by the farmers in my constituency. I am glad to see that there will be some loosening up on the part of the government with regard to the Farm Credit Corporation.

When we examine the whole matter of credit and how financial institutions are involved in farm credit, it is rather interesting to see how the minister over the years has been singing a different song. As early as October 25, 1977, when the minister was speaking to the Canadian Bankers' Association at the fifth agricultural credit conference at the Chateau Laurier in Ottawa, he was taking off his hat—I suppose it was that green hat the minister wears even when he comes to my constituency—and saying: "I take off my hat to the banks and other interested financial organizations who are starting to get involved in long-term agricultural lending programs, because I welcome progress and this is progress." I see that he has obviously been walking on the road to Damascus, because in his speech on January 28 he does bring in a more realistic view of banks. I am happy to see that he is putting his finger on where part of the problem lies.

Mr. Waddell: He wants it both ways.

Mr. Lewycky: It is interesting to read what he said on January 28 as reported in Hansard at page 14419:

> One need only look at the record of the banks over the last five years as to how they have handled, or maybe I should say mishandled, farm loans to know the answer to that question. I think hon. members from rural constituencies will agree when I say farmers need a supply of long-term credit from an agency which recognizes the needs of farmers and knows how to lend money responsibly in rural Canada, particularly to the agricultural sector.

I would have to say amen to that, because the farmers in my constituency certainly know what that means.

The minister goes on to make a few other very important statements, which I can relate to very much from first-hand experience of farmers who have come to my constituency office. The minister referred to the fact that many lenders, the banks, have shown neither mercy nor consideration to the food suppliers in this country by abruptly foreclosing mortgages and calling in demand notes. I think he has correctly underlined the problem when he says that there are farmers who understood they were getting a long-term mortgage note, and then all of a sudden they get a note from the lending institution indicating to them that this note is not really a long-term loan but has become a demand notice.

Farmers in my area as well as other areas have experienced many problems just getting the credit which is required to operate, especially with the downturn in the economy. For this reason, I would like to underline some of the statements the New Democratic Party has made with regard to interest rates. Last October my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) was relating the fact that the federal government was abdicating its responsibility by allowing the long reach of the banks to extend too far into the farming community, and I know that this is a problem which we are experiencing.

An hon. Member: Who is the minister?

Mr. Lewycky: My colleague asks who the minister is. He is part of the government.

At that time, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood said that he wanted the FCC to become more of a farmers' bank and not simply an institution which picks up the leftovers of the private sector. I would reiterate that statement because I think it is important to emphasize the financial needs of farmers and what their relationship should be to the FCC, rather than having to rely on the banks which charge high interest rates and which quite often turn those mortgages into short-term demand notices.

In the minister's speech, which I read very carefully, he talked about the fact that he had to wait for a long time before this bill was introduced. It is disappointing that he waited five years to introduce this bill because after close examination it is evident that the bill is so general that it could have been brought in five years ago. I know the minister counters by giving a history of all the changes and all the previous bills which he introduced and the different bills which died on the Order Paper. I find it amazing that with all that amount of work, study, preparation and tabling, we should have had to wait so long for so little. There are quite a few clouds that have been promising rain in this bill but we have not had the showers of blessings or the rain that has been promised by the minister.

An hon. Member: Just sleet.

Mr. Lewycky: Something which is quite disturbing about the Farm Credit Corporation is the decline in the amount of credit which the FCC has been providing to farmers. If we examine the figures for 1975, more than 70 per cent of all the long-term credit provided to farmers was provided by the Farm Credit Corporation. By 1980, however, this had dropped to approximately 25 per cent of the long-term credit being provided.

I think this is somewhat inconsistent with the assessment of the banks that the minister made. He indicated that part of the problem which the farmers face today is a result of the way the banks have mishandled the farmers' money. To then give the banks an increased share of long-term credit is very inconsistent to me. It is no wonder that I have been faced by a number of constituents who have complained that they cannot get Farm Credit Corporation loans. This is because the proportion of help that has been given by the FCC has been declining rapidly over the last five years.

If we want to have a stable food supply and ensure that farmers stay in production, they must be provided with the opportunity to borrow money at a rate which allows them to stay in business. As my colleagues have pointed out and as I suggest again to the minister, he should take heed of what organizations such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has said with regard to interest rates. In October of 1981, the executive secretary of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture said in an interview: "It is an undesirable change; no farmer can get a return of 16.75 per cent on their investment". He was referring to the fact that the loans of the Farm Credit Corporation would now be 16.75 per cent because the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) had not been able to convince cabinet to retain the loans at 14 per cent. I wish the minister had been more authoritative and able to do more arm twisting of his cabinet colleagues to impress upon them the importance of our entire agricultural sector.

In the amendments brought about by Bill C-88, the minister mentions new sources of future funding, the fact that this bill would enable the FCC to borrow in the financial markets. He introduces a measure which would enable retiring farmers to contribute to a pool which would have additional funding for the FCC. Again, this bill is not specific and the minister should have talked to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) before he brought down his budget on November 12, so that perhaps the income-averaging annuity contracts could have been replaced by a measure such as this and farmers who were retiring might have been able to contribute toward the self-sufficiency of farming by contributing some of their own retirement savings plans under this proposal that the minister has been underlining.

We welcome some of the loosening up we see in these new amendments because of the higher costs of machinery and the higher costs of building. We welcome the fact that applicants will benefit from the higher upper limits on amounts which can be borrowed. It is interesting that this bill provides maximum amounts of loans which will henceforth be prescribed by regulation rather than statute. It is good that the minister has proposed an increase for people who are single farmer applicants from a maximum limit of $200,000 to $300,000; and for more than one applicant the upward limit on Farm Credit Corporation loans is increased from $400,000 to $500,000. It is good that we are moving in the direction of recognizing the increased costs farmers are forced to pay.

I am also very pleased that under these Farm Credit Corporation amendments there will be some authority to disburse up to 30 per cent of a loan based on acceptable security while registration of a mortgage and other security arrangements are being made. This should prove somewhat helpful to farmers who will be borrowing from the Farm Credit Corporation.

It is also good to see that the age limit for people borrowing money from the Farm Credit Corporation is being deleted. I must commend the work done by my colleague the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake in applying pressure on the government to remove the age limit. The age limit for borrowing was 35 and under. People will now be allowed to work off the land for up to five years before engaging in full-time farming, if that is their situation. I know the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake outlined some of the things he did in relation to appealing to the Human Rights Commission to see that this age discrimination at the Farm Credit Corporation ceased. I am very happy to see this being done. In my constituency there have been people who have wanted to borrow money from the Farm Credit Corporation, but they have not found the Farm Credit Corporation to be as helpful as they would have liked.

When we are dealing with this Farm Credit Corporation bill later on in committee, I hope we will be able to bring in even better amendments which would assist farmers. While we are doing this I hope we will also remember that we must deal with the basic problem farmers are facing in all our rural constituencies, and that is the problem of farm net income. While necessary, in some ways the credit measures we are looking at are not the real solution to the problems farmers are facing. So I urge the government to take a closer look at some of the basic problems of farmers in relation to stabilization and marketing so that the farmer might continue to play a vital role in our Canadian economy and be able to continue farming and provide us with the food supplies we need.

Those are some of my concerns relating to Bill C-88 as it is before us at the present time.

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to speak on a subject as important as Bill C-88, an act respecting loans to farmers, which is now before the House. I feel that the bill constitutes a source of assistance and motivation for our Canadian farmers.

The riding of Lévis, which I have been proudly representing since May 4 of last year, consists largely of farmers, especially in the southern part of the riding which includes farms that are the envy of many farmers in Quebec. I am very pleased to be able to discuss this bill, especially since Canadian and Quebec farmers have been seriously affected by the economic situation during the past months and weeks, just like industry and business. First, I should like to refer to the throne speech of April 14, 1980, and I quote:

> Food and agriculture are going to be increasingly important to the Canadian economy in the 1980s. To further strengthen the industry, my government plans to create a Canadian Agricultural Export Corporation to expand markets for Canadian producers. A meat import act will be introduced to protect both consumers and producers.

The present government has indeed kept the promises made in the throne speech from which I have just quoted. In fact, the legislation on meat imports was passed by the House on December 11, 1981.

As for the Canadian Agricultural Exports Corporation known as Canagrex, the bill is now before the House and it should not take more than a few days before the corporation is established. Canagrex will very substantially serve the interests of Canadian farmers by helping them discover and expand important export markets for Canadian agricultural products. In his budget speech on November 12, 1981, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) announced special measures to help farmers who are unable to keep their business going because of the present interest rates. These farmers will be able to obtain loans at a rate of 11.75 per cent, which is 5 per cent less than the usual rate charged by the Farm Credit Corporation. The minister also announced that $50 million would go to the FCC to finance additional loans and reduce interest rates for our Canadian and Quebec farmers. The minister also said that farmers would now be eligible for the Small Business Development Bond program. However, our farmers need more assistance than these measures are able to provide, and that is why today the House is debating legislation that will make the Farm Credit Corporation more accessible to farmers. Perhaps a few statistics would be useful concerning the Farm Credit Corporation or at least some figures on agriculture in Quebec. Six per cent of Canadian farmland is located in Quebec, and 13.5 per cent of farm income is earned by Quebecers. The fact that 20 per cent to 23 per cent of the total budget of Agriculture Canada, including the Dairy Commission, is spent in Quebec is ample proof of the Canadian presence in Quebec agriculture. This is according to figures published late in 1980. In dollars and cents, it is about $160 million per year. I think it is always useful to have a few figures on hand, because there are always people who claim the Government of Canada, the present Liberal government, is doing absolutely nothing for agriculture in Quebec. Now I think that quite the opposite is true and that those statistics show it beyond doubt.

I also noted that several members opposite have supported the substance of the bill now under consideration. I am, therefore, pleased to agree with them. With respect to this bill, I would like to point out some interesting new provisions, knowing that the Farm Credit Corporation was set up 22 years ago and that it has lent over $5 billion to some 160,000 Canadian farmers including a great majority of Quebecers. Almost 74,000 loans are now in effect, of which 4,328 have been granted during the financial year 1981-82. In mid-January of the current financial year, the total amount lent to farmers reached $426.9 million with average costs largely exceeding $98,000. One of the important amendments proposed is to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to seek other financing sources than strictly government sources. In fact, this means that the Farm Credit Corporation will be able to borrow on independent financial markets instead of always having to beg from the government.

Another very important change proposed in this bill is that the ceiling for loans will now be set by regulation instead of being provided in the act, which prevents the minister from having to introduce a new bill each time the loan limit has to be changed. In view of the lengthy procedure which must be followed to amend legislation, I believe it will be to the advantage of Canadian and Quebec farmers if the act allows our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who is doing an exceptional job, to proceed by regulation instead of waiting weeks and months before being able to introduce a bill.

The loan limits now provided in the act until this bill comes into effect are set at $200,000 for a single applicant and at $400,000 for several eligible applicants, companies or corporations. One would have to be blind not to know that costs are increasing very rapidly today, and that is why the Minister of Agriculture announced in his statement last week that he wished to raise the limit immediately to $300,000 for a single applicant and to $500,000 for several applicants. I think we should commend this change because it will allow our government to act much more quickly in the future.

Another change which will benefit greatly those who borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation is the fact that they will be able to obtain on the provision of satisfactory security an advance of up to 30 per cent on their loan before their mortgage is registered. Having worked for quite some time in a closely related field, I think that anyone who has drawn up mortgage papers knows that because of extended delays, farmers often had to arrange for short-term financing on the private market before obtaining their loan. The bill, therefore, includes a new provision which will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to pay 30 per cent of the amount of a loan on the provision of satisfactory security, even though such security might not be as sound as a mortgage as such.

Of course, the second part of the bill empowers the Corporation to reduce by 5 per cent the interest rates for loans granted under the special farming financial assistance program, which was announced in the budget of last November 12, as everyone will recall. As the Minister of Agriculture has indicated, the Farm Credit Corporation had already granted 89 loans under this special program as of January 28, 1982. All in all, the FCC has made available some $11 billion, each loan with an average value of $124,000. With these amendments, the corporation will remain, as in the past, one of the most significant factors which has made it possible for Canadian farmers to increase their productivity and effectiveness over the past few decades. As a matter of fact, the corporation has made available over 60 per cent—I think this figure is quite important, because we hear so many rumours, at least in the province of Quebec, concerning financial assistance to farmers—the corporation, I mean the Farm Credit Corporation, has made available over 60 per cent of all the long-term farm credit over the past few years. The rest was made available through provincial organizations, banking institutions, credit unions, caisses populaires and private lenders.

Since 1973, the funds available for long-term farm credit have been increasing by as much as 20 per cent every year. It increased from $655 million in 1975 to $1.9 billion in 1980, and it is expected to keep on increasing. It becomes, therefore, more and more urgent to provide the Farm Credit Corporation with an adequate and stable source of funds. The FCC's role has always been to help young farmers and, in fact, the majority of approved loans have gone to farmers under 35, whose share has remained relatively constant at 70 per cent during the last three years. Up to now, loans were mainly used to purchase additional land or new farming units. However, the number of loans granted to consolidate debts has increased significantly because of the spectacular rise in interest rates. The percentage of such loans rose from 24.8 per cent on March 31, 1980, to 27.1 per cent on September 30, 1981. On this subject I should like to quote Mr. Marcel Mailloux of the Farm Producers' Union in an article published in La Terre de chez nous of December 10, 1981. I prefer to quote Mr. Mailloux directly to let him make this point:

> When we met here last year, the bank rate was 12.8 per cent. Six months later, it was over 21 per cent, at a level no one would have believed possible a year ago.
> The extremely high level of interest rates during the past year has had and continues to have a serious impact on many farming operations. In 1980, Quebec farmers paid $154 million in interest to various financial institutions, their second largest expenditure after feed purchases.
> Why do farmers have such large interest payments? The reason is simple and you know it as well as I do: Interest payments reflect the increasing productivity of our agricultural industry.

From Mr. Mailloux's words it is clear that one of the industry's main problems—and it shares this with other sectors—is interest rates. Although we have excellent legislation providing for access to credit, until we make it possible for farmers to repay their loans, they will move steadily closer to bankruptcy. I feel it would be useful to set up a special program to help Canadian farmers by, for instance—and there often have been recommendations to that effect—setting a ceiling of, let us say, 40 per cent on interest rates for Canadian farmers. Naturally, farmers would benefit from any drop in interest rates on the same grounds as people in business or industry.

According to a study made by Mrs. Louise St-Pierre, agricultural producers have taken a different approach to financing, allegedly because many of them were facing new problems created by soaring interest rates which forced them to refinance their debts over longer terms. Mrs. St-Pierre was referring to a recent survey conducted by the Farm Credit Corporation whose statistics revealed that the over-all indebtedness of Canadian farmers now stands at $17.64 billion as compared with an estimated value of $15.10 billion in 1979. However, it would seem that the rising long-term indebtedness over the past year is due mainly to debt consolidation rather than to new investments. This information is contained in a report published by the Farm Credit Corporation Research Division.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that I will gladly support the bill now before the House, assured as I am that this measure is only one step on the part of the Liberal government in its effort to provide further assistance to Canadian farmers. In light of the recent statistics and the results achieved after 15 or 20 consecutive years of Liberal administration, there is no doubt whatsoever that the farming community will be ever better served by this government. I hope that all spokesmen for the agricultural sector, whether they belong to the provincial government, the Agricultural Producers' Union or the farming community, will work hand in hand with the federal government, because I am sure that is the road to success. I would suggest that no one stands to gain anything by attacking, threatening or insulting the various levels of government, and I remain convinced that we can rightfully expect that co-operation will stand the agricultural community in good stead.

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak on second reading of Bill C-88. I suppose it is difficult to object in principle to more money being made available to the Farm Credit Corporation and also to its being given the privilege of going to private sources to raise money. I note that the increased borrowing capacity of some $5.6 billion is good for farmers. There is no doubt that the farming community needs access to this money at the present time. Also there is no doubt as to the importance of agriculture. I am sure we all agree that when everything else is said and done, the bottom line is that any society which ignores its farming community and allows its soil to be depleted, to go to rack and ruin, is headed for trouble.

Tomorrow we will debate the Canagrex bill. It strikes me that this type of bill in a sense deceives Canadians as to the true situation in the country, because the implication is left that Canada is an exporter of food. In actual fact, when we take out western grain exports, Canada is a massive importer of food of all categories. Yet the government is setting up a corporation allegedly to export the various categories of food of which we are a massive importer.

Mr. Whelan: Is it not all one country?

Mr. Thacker: The point is whether Canadians will have enough food to eat. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is setting up an export corporation.

Mr. Whelan: If we took out the dairy, pork and beef industries, just imagine what we would have to import!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has the floor.

Mr. Whelan: What a ridiculous statement! It is similar to the earlier one of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Thacker: The hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde) referred to the great Minister of Agriculture and the great accomplishments of the Liberal government over the past 15 years. He should realize that 15 years ago Canada had a balanced budget and did not have a national debt. He should look at where the Liberals have taken us.

For example, we could look at what has happened in other countries, such as Poland. Once it was a massive exporter of food, and then it became continuously more and more involved with government. The government started to take over the agricultural infrastructure. It started to set up state export and import corporations. Now the people of Poland are lining up for food. We should not think that that cannot happen here. We import $1 billion worth of food per year because of government policies.

Why are we debating an increase in loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation? It is because of massively high interest rates. Why are there massively high interest rates? It is because of the deficit. We did not have a deficit when the government first took office; there were balanced budgets in the country. Then there was the great Liberal deceit of the Canadian people. There were various tremendously popular programs with low capitalist taxes. The government could maintain low taxes because it borrowed the difference. In the first year it was $1 billion, no problem; then it was $5 billion, no problem; then it was $25 billion, and it started to become a problem. Members of the opposition then said to Canadians, "We are getting ourselves into a jam." But the Liberals offered great programs with low taxes and borrowed the difference, until today when the national net debt is some $90 billion.

The interest cost to service this debt is so massive that the government cannot step in and do the things it should. For example, the automotive industry requires help, but the government has no money because 25 cents of every tax dollar goes to service the debt. Not only does the massive debt and the interest on it stop and block government flexibility, but it concentrates wealth into the hands of a very few Canadians, the people with real wealth. In a generation it will be just like Third World countries—massively rich people and massively poor people. This is what governments can do, and this is what the Liberal government can be fairly and honestly criticized for.

What does the Minister of Agriculture say to this? He said that all western nations are suffering inflation and that, therefore, we are no worse than others. This is absolutely incorrect. When the Minister of Agriculture took office, Canada had a standard of living which was second to all other western industrialized nations; now it is No. 13. What kind of a record is that? It is the record of the Minister of Agriculture and of the government. Canada's resources go far beyond those of Germany and Japan, yet those countries have much higher standards of living. The reason is that their governments have been honest. When they propose programs, they propose taxing regimes so that people can genuinely decide.

Mr. Whelan: Their debt loads are bigger than ours, compared with resources.

Mr. Thacker: The minister thinks that if we have resources we can borrow. Within his own life and his own business he would never borrow sufficient to bring his debt load up to his equity load, yet this is exactly what the government thinks Canadians should do. When the minister is dealing with other people's money, trust and responsibility, he is prepared to take them into debt. He would not do it in his own farming operation because he is a good farmer, and he should not do it for Canadians, either.

Mr. Taylor: Right on!

Mr. Whelan: I would not do it any differently for Canadians. We are running a good ship.

Mr. Taylor: There are a lot of leaks in your ship.

Mr. Thacker: The Titanic was a good ship too, but it hit the "rocks".

Mr. Whelan: But we have a good captain on this ship and a good crew, I should add.

Mr. Taylor: Your navigator is blind in both eyes.

Mr. Thacker: The Minister of Agriculture seems to think that the Liberal Party has a good captain. I have the feeling that many people of Polish descent have some questions about that. If he is a good captain, I am certainly worried about some of the first mates.

There are other reasons why Bill C-88 has to be amended. Of course farmers require more money because of government policies. But we should never look at any bill in isolation. We must look at it as broad government policy. What do we find? On the one hand, there is the offer to farmers of a few more dollars by the FCC, which only take them deeper into debt. On the other hand, the government is abolishing via its budget provisions the income-averaging annuity program and the capital gains forward reserve. The government is not changing the valuation date to 1974, as was promised in the government's election campaign.

The effect of those policies will impose a far greater burden on the farming community. This little band-aid affair is giving them a few extra dollars and taking them deeper into debt. Why does the government not abolish capital gains? There is no need to keep that going in view of the very small percentage of Canadian land that is bona fide agricultural land. Food is too important a product to have bona fide agricultural land taxed. Why does the government not abolish the roll-over provisions? Why not let one generation pass it on to the next generation without any capital gains tax at all? The government alludes to that in the roll-over provisions. As I have explained to the Minister of Agriculture in earlier speeches, and I am prepared to sit down with him to show him on paper, the roll-over is an amazing trap, that within one generation, or two at most, we will have all of our agricultural land nationalized. Many farmers believe that is the exact role of the government. I rather doubt it is the intention of the Minister of Agriculture, but I can show him that will be the result because the roll-over provision is merely a trap for future generations.

Why does the government not accept the Canadian Cattlemen's Association's suggestions? They are perfectly well thought out and logical. I refer to the income-averaging trust account. The beauty of that vehicle is that it would allow farmers in the good years to put a little bit of money away in a special agricultural fund, perhaps managed by the Farm Credit Corporation, and in the bad years the farmers could then withdraw that money.

If we look at the country as a whole, when there are bad times in the west the east is probably experiencing good times. The eastern farmers would be pouring money into this fund and the western farmers could be taking it out. And vice versa with good times in the west and bad times in the east. A system like that would do more for national unity than anything else.

Farmers would be more than delighted to put their money into this special fund when they retire and be able to get the average income out of it in the future. The way it is now, if a man or a woman sells his or her farmland, the person is not entitled under the budget provision of the government now to buy an income-averaging annuity. Instead, all of the capital gains tax must be brought into income in the year of sale and in future years the person applies for a tax rebate. That is an incredible situation. In short, the government is saying that when you die everything belongs to the government and you can apply for future tax credits in the event you sell. But what happens to the man who sells this year and then dies next year? Is his estate entitled to apply for some sort of tax rebate, or is that money, all of the tax on the capital gain, lost? That question has never been answered. I wonder why the minister does not face that.

We also have the Minister of Agriculture blaming the banks. He waxes eloquent that the banks have led farmers into a trap. The proper response to that again is that government has led people into a trap. Who would have guessed, even the smartest banker or the smartest farmer, that the combination of government policies would drive interest rates up to 21 per cent? Who would have believed that a government would ever have been so stupid as to get people into that kind of a jam? Yet that is what we face in this country. Again, it goes back to governments getting into deficits, those deficits building up and lack of government flexibility. Ultimately governments have to face reality. Even the Liberal government has to realize that you cannot circle around a $90 billion net debt. You might as well have started at the beginning and used Keynesian economics around a balanced budget. During bad times, of course, the government would borrow to help out certain sectors. But during good times it is incumbent upon governments to pay those debts back, and out of surplus revenues you get back to a balanced budget.

I have many questions to ask when this bill gets to committee. Other members have elaborated on certain sections. I wish to speak only to Section 16.2(2) which requires farmers to file a plan of operations with the Farm Credit Corporation. I am anxious to question witnesses as to how far an amendment of that plan is possible and how often farmers must report.

I note Section 35 provides that loans will not be granted unless the farm is an economic unit. What is an economic unit? Who will make that decision? What type of ministerial authority will there be as to whether there will be any political repercussions one way or the other? What differences will there be in describing a plan for different provinces? What is an economic unit in Alberta as compared to an economic unit in Ontario? More than anything else, I will be looking for some direction as to what is the remedy in the event a farmer does not honour his plan. Will the government then be just like the banks and call the note? Will there be a clause in the mortgage to provide that if one deviates from the plan the government can foreclose on the mortgage? If so, who will make that decision? There are many uncertainties which I hope the Minister of Agriculture will do something about, because they can lead to the grossest of abuse.

I notice under Section 17.1 and Subsection 19(4) that the statutory amounts will now be set by regulation rather than as before, which was by statute. As the minister himself pointed out, we have made many amendments to this legislation in past years, but I wonder why it is now felt that statutory amounts should be governed by regulation? By doing that we, as Members of Parliament, will be giving up our responsibility to look at that bill and make constructive criticism of it. Instead we will be passing off that responsibility to a bureaucracy. Without doubt, individually bureaucrats are well intentioned. But as a collective group they become subject to a system, rules and regulations producing results exactly opposite to those which anyone would say are common sense and reasonable.

The minister will have to answer why this change to regulation is being proposed. In my opinion, this provision should be left in the statute, in order that we as Members of Parliament, who are elected to review these things and with the obligation to do so, will in fact do so. Again, this change is capable of the grossest political subterfuge.

There will be amendments at report stage, I am sure. There will be amendments at third reading and I look forward to that.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak at this stage on Bill C-88. As the member representing Okanagan North, I might say that farming in our community is perhaps more varied than anywhere else in Canada. Everyone knows that the Okanagan produces the best fruit in Canada and that it is the best fruit growing area.

Hon. members may not know that we also have grain farms, forage farms and tree farms. We produce some of the best grapes and make some of the best wine in this country. We even have nut farms. I can assure this House, however, that we are not talking about the kind of nuts produced in other parts of Canada; I am talking about the kind of nuts we eat. This bill is very important to the people of Okanagan North and to all Canadians. I am very glad to see that with this bill and with the Canagrex legislation, which will be discussed tomorrow, the government has finally started something positive. I would be the first to commend the government for doing that. The minister has said in bringing this bill before the House that Canadian agriculture must be assured of a constant and sufficient supply of long-term credit if it is to meet the goals set for its agri-food strategy.

I have looked far and wide for any strategy, and I mean good strategy from this government in the agricultural industry, whether its produce is for home use or export. I will have something more to say about that later on. The bill itself is positive. It seeks to encourage and assist the production of agriculture. Together with Canagrex, this bill will help to rationalize the export of food from this country. It broadens the scope of the Farm Credit Corporation. Capital is increased from $150 million to $225 million, which given the 25 times roll-over, allows for about a $5.6 billion line of credit. Furthermore, it allows the corporation to go to the private market. While it is not perfect, I would endorse the comments of the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff)—and I hope this matter will be brought up again in committee—that there should be a regulation that only resident farmers are entitled to borrow money under the act.

The hon. member mentioned foreigners buying land in Canada. I realize that must be controlled at the provincial level but certainly in the Okanagan it is a big problem. We have foreigners paying very high prices for very good land, because it is a nice place to live. However, they do not live on the land; therefore its productivity is down.

Now, I said earlier that this is the first positive thing this government has done in two years. I have sat here for just over two years and seen nothing but negative and punitive legislation. In fact, there was a time when I thought the government's whole purpose was to savage Canadians. First of all, we had the energy crisis and this government's energy policy. All it succeeded in doing was to ruin what at one time was a very good industry in western Canada, Mr. Speaker. The drilling and associated service industry has virtually disappeared because of this government's policies. That really hurt western Canadians.

The second bit of legislation in another direction was also negative. The government made it impossible for most people to communicate by mail because of the high cost of postage. It stopped most of the rail passenger activity in western Canada, and altogether had a very negative impact on transportation and communications.

The third attack on the country was the too high interest rates. They have affected everyone, and most certainly the farm population. When I was home over the holidays I spent a lot of time talking to farmers and business people, and high interest rates was the main topic of conversation. One farmer in particular said he was in danger of losing his farm. He reminded me of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and asked me to see if it was still in effect. Now, there are perhaps many in this House not old enough to remember the thirties; you might, Mr. Speaker, and I do, but it was a very, very difficult time for farmers, not only because of a lack of markets but because of failed crops, bad weather and dust storms. In fact, we used to call them the dirty thirties.

However, it was the Bennett government at that time, a Conservative government, which brought in an act that made it possible for farmers on the verge of bankruptcy to come to terms with their creditors, and if they could not the courts were empowered to force an agreement on the farmers and their creditors. This farmer said that he saved his land at that time because of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. He has farmed that land for 40 years because of that act; he has been productive, and I am sure his story can be repeated many times in western Canada.

This farmer asked me, why can we not do something like that now? Well, I think that is the kind of forward-looking legislation that this government should be bringing forth. Hopefully they will; hopefully Bill C-88 and the Canagrex bill mark a change in the government's direction. Certainly in the past 15 years it has not shown any real strategy for agriculture. Everyone, Mr. Speaker, who has spoken to this bill has emphasized the need to protect the farming operation because, over the long term, I think most Canadians will agree it is absolutely essential.

I want to talk now about what has happened to Canada in relation to the farming community, agricultural production and exports in general, because both these bills address that question. I read recently an article in the January, 1979 issue of the Chelsea Journal which identified the result of this government's failure to have a national policy of agricultural production and export. It said that as a nation we can produce our own breakfast, but we must send out for lunch and dinner. That is a very apt way of saying we have failed. We can produce only our breakfast; if we want lunch or dinner we have to go outside the country and buy it.

By the year 2000 Canada will be a net importer of every food with the exception of grains, oilseed, milk and eggs. We will be making our breakfast but nothing else. That is a sad commentary on a country which was once a great agricultural producer. The article goes on to say that Canada is an underdeveloped country where agricultural trade is concerned. That was a surprise to me, Mr. Speaker. I had not heard the word "underdeveloped" in relation to Canada for a long, long time.

This article then goes on to prove it. First of all, the pattern of agricultural trade in an underdeveloped country shows certain characteristics. First of all, they specialize only in one or two major exported crops. They mentioned Brazil with coffee at 33 per cent and sugar at 21 per cent of its export trade. Tanzania has 31 per cent of its trade in coffee. The Philippines exports of sugar represent 33 per cent of its total trade. Seventy-eight per cent of the Dominican Republic's trade is in sugar. Does Canada fit this pattern? Of course it does. Forty per cent of our trade is solely in wheat, a raw product.

The article goes on to say that as a result of this fact we are subject to wild fluctuations in export prices. That also marks an underdeveloped country. It points out that Brazil earned $1.1 billion from the sale of sugar in 1975, but only $421 million in 1972. Canada earned $2 billion from the sale of wheat in 1975, but only $687 million in 1970.

Another characteristic of an underdeveloped country is that most of its food is exported in the unprocessed, crude form. As a result, you lose jobs in the processing industry.

Another characteristic is that farmers are forced off the land, mostly by the large agri-business corporations. We have not yet reached Brazil's stage where some 6.3 million farmers have left the land, but we have seen the beginning of the trend. There were 381,000 fewer farmers in Canada in 1976 than in 1951. The farming population is down to 5.1 per cent of the population, compared to 16.8 per cent only a few short years ago.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly aware that you need an economic unit in order to farm. I have lived in Saskatchewan and have seen where a farmer starved on a quarter section. Later on he starved on a half section, and barely made a living on three quarters of a section a few years later. There are now much larger economic units and I agree with that. There had to be some rationalization of the whole system. But it does not mean that you have to rationalize him out of existence. I think it is a well-known fact that farm land is more productive in the hands of a family farm unit than under any other system. Certainly much more so than the large agri-businesses which are now demanding great quantities of land.

I was very glad to see that at least Prince Edward Island is attempting to put a stop to this. Some time ago the Irving Corporation wanted to add another 6,000 acres to their existing holdings, which would have given them about 10,000 acres on that small island. The government there indicated that perhaps they will put a limit of 3,000 acres on what any one person or corporation can own. I agree with that; I think farming is essential to our way of life.

Canada is certainly an underdeveloped country in relation to its food exports and is in great danger of using most of its arable land for cash crops. Again, I do not think we will ever become like some countries, such as Brazil or Mexico. As a result of large corporations taking a great deal of the land and using it for cash crops, the benefit to the citizens of those countries does not match the actual return from the sale of cash crops. An article with which I agree states that today in Brazil the sugar workers are provided with less nutrients than were the slaves back in 1880. That is not a good story.

I think the statistics tell the story in Canada. In 1948 crude food exports amounted to 50 per cent of our total food exports. In 1980 our crude production was four fifths of our total food exports. I think that is unreasonable. In this country we are seeing a greater dependency on processed foods, most of which are imported. As a result, the number of jobs we have lost has become a national scandal. We now have a deficit in 11 of the 12 major fabricated food groups, when as late as 1967 the majority were in a trade surplus position.

In my own constituency we have a good example of what has happened in Canada. At one time we grew and processed tomatoes. Our production of canned tomatoes and ketchup was a very viable business. Today, not one single can of tomatoes or one bit of tomato ketchup is being produced in the Okanagan Valley. That is true of many articles. We are told that if this process continues, the tomato industry in Canada will eventually suffer a loss of some 2,365 jobs. It would not be so bad if the tomatoes imported from these large corporations in the United States and Mexico were any good, but they are designed to be picked up by machinery and not to be eaten. Most of these tomatoes could be used in baseball games and they would not suffer at all.

I think that if the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has a strategy, he had better look to that problem very quickly, because we certainly have the wherewithal and the means in this country to produce the kinds of foods we need. It is entirely up to us, to this government and to future governments, because this government has only a couple of years more in which to do anything. First of all, what the government must do is to ensure a self-reliant food industry. Canadian farmers and workers should grow and process food in Canada which is of the required quantity and quality. That is the first step. Second, we should ensure that our workers and farmers have sufficient incomes to purchase the food and articles they need. We have the technical know-how. All we need is some direction in policy toward which the people of this country can work, and a commitment toward lowering the interest rates.

At the moment, as a result of the high interest rate policy, all the capital formation in farming has gone to the United States. And why should it not? We are told that because of this government's policy, 25 per cent of foreign investment in the United States comes from Canada. I think it is a shame when we have the technical know-how. All we need is some financial encouragement, and I hope that it will be forthcoming from the government. As I said earlier, the government is beginning to show signs of some enlightenment. I hope it will continue with this positive attitude and work toward an ever-increasing and productive farm industry.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, as a Conservative I am glad to be able to enter the debate on Bill C-88.

An hon. Member: You are sure, now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gurbin: At this time, I am particularly pleased that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is in the House so that I can address several important points which I think should be included when we are looking at farm financing. I will come to those points as quickly as I can, while he is still here.

We have all awaited the changes the minister has promised in the Farm Credit Corporation for many months, particularly as the farm situation has deteriorated. The minister said many times, and I can only concur, that the problem is in the red meat industry. One of the things the minister knows well, and I think it is evident to all of us, particularly from comments made by all opposition parties, is that the farm community is now in a cost-price squeeze. It is in a vice which has been grabbing and squeezing it to death. It is something which can be approached from many sides, although there are some critical factors. The financial arrangements through which farmers must work comprise one of those critical factors.

I have recently finished a survey in my constituency. We sent out approximately 1,300 questionnaires at almost the same time the Minister of Agriculture sent out questionnaires. We did this, first of all, to ensure that our area was properly understood in the context of this broader survey, because we face some special problems. I will return to that survey in a few moments, after I refer to the changes which will be made to the Farm Credit Corporation.

I would like to make reference to the capital formation of the Farm Credit Corporation. One of the things which seems unclear among the proposed changes is exactly what will happen within that capital formation part. At this point in time we know that we have a capital limit of $150 million. We know that if the request for an additional $14 million were to be granted this year, we will have gone over that limit. We are now at $143 million, and this bill would change the upper limit of capital to $225 million. The trick is that the Farm Credit Corporation can loan 25 times the amount of its capital. The Farm Credit Corporation is requesting that the government consider giving it $14 million. If one multiplies that by 25, that will mean a $350 million increase in the borrowing capacity of the Farm Credit Corporation this year. That is clearly inadequate to meet the needs of agriculture right now, and it is something which should certainly be expanded by several millions of dollars at the capital side. I know the minister knows that, and that is something we need in a hurry if we are to address the problems presently sitting in the agricultural community.

The other side to that capital formation is that the 25 factor could also be changed, so that instead of only providing another $14 million times 25, equalling $350 million, the factor could be changed, for instance, to 30 times the capital, allowing an expansion of borrowing capacity to the Farm Credit Corporation which would directly address most of the requirements of agriculture. That would work well, and there is no reason why it cannot be done.

We must also consider the source of this borrowed money. The minister has suggested that the Farm Credit Corporation could borrow from sources other than the government in order to satisfy its requirements. One of the dangers, of course, that this bill has presented is that if the total borrowing limits are still the same, we will not really have accomplished a heck of a lot. If the government reduces its commitment and allows the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow from other sources, then the government will be off the hook as far as providing funds is concerned. However, we will really not have done anything to increase the amount of available capital within the Farm Credit Corporation. Therefore, what we really want to ensure is that the government maintains its commitment while allowing expansion of capital from private sources, if possible.

We must ensure that interest rates applying to funds borrowed from private sources are not too high. I read the minister's speech and certainly it is not clear in the bill how this could be accomplished. There was an indication by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff) that people were suggesting that money could be borrowed at very low interest rates. I think this must be seen before we can believe it, because the money which is presently available through private sources will certainly be lent at the best return it can get. I know that the minister, even in private conversations, has discussed the available opportunities for borrowing large amounts of money at lower rates. Before anyone can have any confidence that this will happen, we must have a much clearer indication and the confidence that the Farm Credit Corporation will indeed be able to provide money at interest rates which are much less than the current 16.75 per cent.

From all of the discussions which have taken place lately in the farm community, we know that an acceptable interest rate must fall somewhere around 12 per cent, as agriculture simply cannot bear interest rates at much above that level. I think the minister will agree with that. The question concerns the bottom line for the composite Farm Credit Corporation rate after we are done with this bill.

I will not spend time on the agri-bond concept because I would like to move on the other areas. However, the idea of farmers lending into the Farm Credit Corporation and getting a special tax consideration is not too far removed from the small business bond concept. It is a good idea and should be promoted vigorously. I hope we get a chance to discuss this in committee.

• (1630)

Other important items in this bill include the removal of the 35-year age limit. These are items that could easily be supported. This should have been done a long time ago. The hon. member for Huron-Bruce looked for a guarantee that spouses be considered. That may be accomplished in part by the improvement in the loan limits from $200,000 to $300,000 on up to $500,000 for multiple-person operations. I hope the understanding is there if the wording is not.

The points I want to make go back to the realities of where the financial situation is in agriculture today, particularly in those areas where there are a few options, at least in the short term, for those involved in the red meat industry.

In the survey we have just finished compiling, 1,600 questionnaires were sent out. There were 473 people who responded. We found that 10.1 per cent of all farmers have their farms for sale—and this is dairy and all types of agricultural industries—in the whole of Bruce County. The important point is that in the red meat industry, those who have any type of beef or pork, an additional 30 per cent are considering selling their farms. That says something for the industry.

We have a number of other matters that have been tabulated, including land equities which have fallen, particularly if you include the inflation factor. These things could be expected. There are important matters in terms of marketing boards. I intend to share these with the minister in a written way as soon as I have them all put together.

The critical factor is that the extra $50 million available for farm credit will not solve the problem. It helps in areas where the FCC feels it can make a loan because there is a viable operation. It will obviously only help for a year or two, will be reviewed, and there will again be the same problem. It looks at one area incompletely, but at least it is addressing it.

There is another area which, as the minister knows, has been discussed in a number of forums in the past several months. This is the area where people are now without equity. They could be called technically bankrupt. They are in a situation which continues to deteriorate. There is no answer. Some of these people might be criticized for being poor managers.

In his speech, the minister indicated his understanding of the fact that there needed to be a certain size operation in order to be competitive and productive in a way that the farmer could earn a living. The farm size grew as people were expanding their operation. They were doing things right, but they were caught in a squeeze because of changes in energy prices. A lot of farmers were concerned about that when the Conservative Party was in power. They are caught just as badly now, if not worse. They will have to spend $4.50 an acre more over the next year. All of these things coming together have left these people in a situation which has to be looked at in a serious way.

There have been a number of suggestions. There are three basic solutions to this problem. One is akin to the farmers and creditors act introduced in the thirties. It is something that nobody likes to consider seriously if they do not have to, but it is a humane way of looking at the situation that exists today.

Something else that has been suggested with some historic precedent, as far as ARDA is concerned and what it does, is a kind of land banking. I read some of the comments about what happened in Saskatchewan. In order to address the problem, some answer that includes land banking and government ownership in the land for at least an interim period might be considered.

Finally, what could be considered, and would not be an awful lot different in terms of legislation or the way the minister and his department look at the situation, would be an instance where a farmer was able to negotiate a settlement on his own behalf with a particular financial institution, and that institution writes off some of the amount. I know of one case where the bank is prepared to write off $800,000. In spite of the fact this person has been a good manager and is respected in the community, he is in a situation now where he cannot go anywhere else to raise the money to resolve the situation. He cannot get the kind of support that would give confidence to another financial institution. The same financial institution that would negotiate the settlement is clearly not in the position where it wants to refinance this man. Therefore, that kind of negotiation would serve the purposes of the bank. It would certainly serve the purposes of individual farmers involved in this area. It could be supported by the government either through the Farm Credit Corporation or by government guarantees, either with or without the co-operation of the provincial government. It could answer one of the last problems remaining to be solved.

We are working through some of these matters, including marketing, which the minister knows is important, the longer-term financing of lower rates that he knows is important, and the rationalization of the whole red meat industry and whether that will be a specialty product in the future.

Others have mentioned many other points; I will not go into them. I look forward to speaking at committee stage of this bill in an attempt to understand what the minister has in mind. We know that the regulatory aspects of this bill have been expanded. I find it confusing when I read some of the minister's remarks in years gone by with regard to the amount of discretionary power which civil servants have and now see him giving them more power. I guess there is good news and bad news about that. If it speeds up the process and avoids legislative delay, that is good. However, I wonder whether he is going to change his mind about some of those things we talked about before.

I end my remarks with the hope that the minister will address that one area in agriculture that has been missed, to the detriment of the individual farmer who deserves his integrity and degree of dignity as he is trying to go through a painful readjustment, but one which will serve well the interests of the minister, his department and all Canadians.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in rising to give some views on the bill before us to amend the Farm Credit Corporation legislation, one which would increase the loan capacity by $50 million and increase the borrowing capacity to $5.6 billion, the question that has to be asked very quickly is, can this bill be supported? The answer to that is yes. The second question is, will the bill do the job which the minister says it will? I think the answer to that is, at best, a qualified yes. I say at best.

● (1640)

All of us in the House, especially those of us who come from rural constituencies, believe that this is not only a rural Canadian problem but a Canadian problem. I think it is important that Canadians in urban areas as well understand, at least in part, what is happening on the farm front.

The minister loves to say that we have the best farmers and the best agriculture in the world, and he would like us to believe that this is true for one reason—because he also feels that the best agriculture minister is resident in this country. That is debatable.

I also believe that, as Canadians, we are fortunate to have people who have the potential to be among the best farmers in the world. I believe many of them are. What farmers are facing today is the prospect that as their costs are rising, their farm incomes are projected to go down. When one studies the Canadian economy, it becomes a very frightening projection for the 1982 crop year.

The Outlook conference which was held just before the end of the year is generally a conference that tries to put forward an optimistic view of the agricultural community for the next year. There is realism but, generally speaking, Outlook conferences try to provide an optimistic view. While that stamp of optimism was attempted to be made in the last conference, every participant knew that the farm economy was facing lower returns and higher costs. The question that is before us today is not merely of a $50 million increase in money available to FCC. What is before us is the viability of the farm community.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) knows that while I might be a critical person in the House from time to time, I also attempt to give some views in the hope that we can help Canadians. This is especially true today as we address the farm question. I say to the minister with frankness and honesty that, joking aside, I know he has made serious attempts to improve the condition of the Canadian farmer and the economy in which he has to function. However, I think if he were honest as well—as I know he tends to be—he would have to admit that he is not getting the support he needs within the cabinet. There may be many of his colleagues who give him verbal support, but the fact is—he has almost said so himself in the myriad speeches that flow across our desks—that within the Canadian cabinet, especially this one but generally within the Canadian government structure, the prominence that agriculture once enjoyed has been greatly reduced.

Mr. Cullen: I disagree.

Mr. Epp: It has been largely reduced. All one has to do is to see how the cabinet is made up compared to the cabinets of the thirties, forties and fifties. In those years there was a much higher rural input than today.

Mr. Cullen: We have quality today.

Mr. Epp: I am being interrupted by the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen). He says they have quality today. Yes, they have quality, but I would tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are rejecting that quality day after day. We expect more. My point is that the cabinets of the past had a much larger rural component. Today there is a heavy weighting toward an urban component.

All of us have sat in committees and participated in their deliberations. Some of us have sat in the cabinet room. It is obvious that, no matter what the good intentions are, if the majority of ministers are from one group, the cabinet will tend to make decisions which are in the interests of that group. This will result in the cabinet holding up legislation or not passing it as quickly as possible because of a lack of stress from the majority of cabinet ministers. If the minister were to assess his situation today, he must at least agree in part that this is what is happening in the Canadian governmental structure. This is also true with provincial governments.

I do believe that there is a preponderance of members in the federal government who have an urban mind-set without at least in part understanding what is happening on the rural front.

We see today a deep concern in the farm community about the future in 1982. The first thing that farmers have to face is high input costs. Loans were traditionally made to farmers for one purpose, the purchase of land, buildings and machinery. That was the largest amount, not only in dollar value but in the number of loans that were made. Although this still applies today, there is a new component. It is a feature which we have begun using, and that is line of credit. Today farmers not only have mortgages, they must go to financial institutions to obtain an additional line of credit in order to operate. In other words, they must pay the mortgage and machinery costs as well as pay that line of credit. This line of credit generally runs from year to year and is settled before the next crop year starts. With lower farm incomes and higher interest rates, the ability to pay that line of credit becomes very difficult for farmers.

My hon. friend from Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin), who has just finished speaking, has many constituents engaged in the operation of feed lots and who operate on a yearly basis. They obtain a loan as a line of credit in order to finish cattle for sale at the end of the year. Then they pay back their line of credit with the hope of having some money left over to clothe themselves and pay off their mortgage. That is how farming operates today.

One day during the Christmas break—it was about minus 31 on one of our more balmy days in Manitoba this winter—I was driving down the highway listening to the CBC farm report on the radio. I heard a statement which quoted the FCC as saying that farmers were moving toward becoming millionaires. I looked out at the farms I was passing and, yes, the farmers' equity is higher, but almost invariably their indebtedness has kept pace or even increased with their equity. Statements such as the one I heard bring total misunderstanding between rural and urban Canadians. The urban Canadian automatically says; "There are those farmers who are worth half a million dollars and what am I trying to do? I am trying to pay off my house mortgage." That is a completely erroneous concept of what is happening.

Mr. Whelan: The reporter did not write the whole story or you would have had a better understanding.

Mr. Epp: You also run the CBC.

An hon. Member: We wonder.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should remind the hon. member to address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Epp: I appreciate that admonition and I am sure the Chair did not direct it to the Minister of Agriculture.

• (1650)

Seriously, what I am saying is that there must be more understanding throughout Canada of what is happening on the farm front. There are many farmers in our constituencies today who have loans they had been hoping they would be able to dispose of within a 12-month period. They are now carrying those loans for two and three years. They have not been able to pay them off, and without lower interest rates, no matter how good a farmer might be, no matter how good a manager he might be and no matter how long his farm has been in his family, he will not survive. He cannot survive under the present conditions, and no matter how good a job the Minister of Agriculture might feel he is doing, those are the realities farmers face today.

I am not even referring to young farmers who have mortgages over their ears they are trying to pay. I am talking about farmers who are in good equity positions, who have been farming for a number of years and who thought their equity was building so that they would have something for their retirement. Suddenly they are selling off equity to pay for credit they need for their operations.

Some people will tell those of us who are participating in this debate that if we are in favour of this bill we should send it to the committee; but it is important that we use the opportunity of this debate in the House to show Canadians what is actually happening to farmers. People see on their television screens at night the news that some farmers are irritated. They are going to their banks and taking action farmers are not in the habit of taking. They are not doing this because they enjoy taking those actions. They are taking those actions because they are being driven to it. This is serious. This is very serious in terms of the future of the Canadian farmer, and I suggest none of us would be protected from the whirlwind which would be unleashed if Canadian farmers could not operate any longer.

There might be some in this House who will say that as an opposition member all I am trying to do is create a straw man I can knock down. No, that is not what I am trying to do. I spoke to farmers during the Christmas break. I spoke to people who have been in business for 30 and 40 years. They have two fears. "How can I put my crop in next year and be able to pay for it?" Second, "Will I have enough retirement income at the end of my working life so that somebody else can continue farming and I can live in dignity?" Those are the two questions they are asking.

When we look at the whole question of farm borrowings or the need for cash flow or financial resources, it is not traditional to look only at land, buildings and machinery. We must also look at lines of credit.

On the matter of high interest rates, I attended the federal-provincial conference this morning. Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) felt he did not have too many friends around that table. The premiers have varying political stripes, but what they were saying were the same things people were saying to the Conservative Party's committee on the budget and the economy as it toured the country during the Christmas break. The first issue to which people referred was not the budget. That was second. The first issue to which they referred was the issue of high interest rates. The budget compounded the problem.

What was said this morning? I will not read in detail what was said this morning. The meeting went on for a long time. The Chair would not give me the amount of time I would need to read everything in detail, but the Premier of Alberta said that what we need for a national economic recovery strategy is, first, a made-in-Canada interest rate policy. The Premier of Saskatchewan, obviously of a different political stripe from that of the Premier of Alberta, said that we need the immediate adoption of a made-in-Canada monetary policy of lower and stable interest rates. Just to encourage the Minister of Agriculture further, the Premier of Saskatchewan also said that the introduction of effective national stabilization programs for Canadian beef and hog producers is needed.

Hon. members might think that the Premier of Ontario is the premier of a province which is highly urbanized.

Mr. Whelan: He did not even mention farmers.

Mr. Epp: If the minister wants to speak—although it has been difficult to listen to him in the past—I am sure we would allow him to be heard again. The Premier of Ontario said we cannot follow the narrow pursuit of American interest rates.

What did the Premier of Prince Edward Island say? Oh, we can say that there are only 110,000 people in Prince Edward Island, but those people are Canadians and agriculture is vital to that province. A former premier of that province sits here, and I do not have to convince him of that. The Premier of Prince Edward Island said:

> Farmers, like all businessmen across the country, are facing the real hardship of high interest rates. Most provinces, except ours, have the fiscal flexibility to subsidize interest to the farmer. We suggest as an alternative to varying degrees of provincial support, that the federal government, through the Farm Credit Corporation, alleviate this burden by providing credit at more reasonable interest rates to our primary producers. This policy would allow our farm community a more equitable opportunity to compete.

That is what the Premier of Prince Edward Island said, and that is what is being said across the street. It is being said in this House but, more importantly, it is being said on every main street in rural Canada. It is being said in every coffee shop.

An hon. Member: And in beer parlours.

Mr. Epp: My friend at the back says it is being said in beer parlours as well. Perhaps that is the only solace people are getting these days.

I grant that an easy solution to the high interest rate problem is simply to reduce rates, but that would not be in keeping with reality. The problem is that the Canadian government has been into the international bond market to such a degree and for so long that it is now caught on the horns of a dilemma brought about by itself. How can the government expect interest rates to drop substantially if it is into the international bond market at a rate of 25 per cent annually over its revenues? That is what we have been seeing. Oh, yes, it was very easy for a time to advance all kinds of programs and say to Canadians, "Look, we are doing this for you". However, the government has never reminded the people of who is paying for the programs and how much more they will cost in the future. I am for those programs too, but I want to see them as a natural outgrowth of more economic activity. Today we are looking at our economic pie and cutting it up in such a way that some people get a little more and others a little less. The only way to help Canadians is by allowing Canadians to increase the size of the pie.

On the one hand we are into the international bond market to a large extent, but what did the government do in relation to the new issue of Canada Savings Bonds? The new rate offered Canadians was 19.75 per cent. How can Canadians expect interest rates to drop when any Canadian can go into a bank and buy $15,000 in Canada Savings Bonds, leave them in the bank for one year and get a return of 19.75 per cent? Does anyone in his right mind really believe that is the way to reduce interest rates?

Those are the realities. We can indulge in all kinds of rhetoric and political philosophy, but the fact remains that if we are into the bond market to the extent we have been for the last 15 years and are now trying to finance in Canadian dollars at 19.75 per cent, and if that is what the government is paying for money, we cannot expect the Canadian farmer who is worried about credit to enjoy interest rates which are substantially lower. It cannot be done. That is the tragedy that results from this government's administration in relation to Canadian farmers.

• (1700)

Hon. members and the minister will recall the questions that were asked about the proposed FCC loan rate. I would have liked to be a fly on the wall of the cabinet room when the minister argued for a lower interest rate. But what was it when he announced it? It was 16.75 per cent, Mr. Speaker. Canadian farmers cannot afford a line of credit at 16.75 per cent. Is that supposed to help?

Mr. Whelan: It is 6 per cent below the banks.

Mr. Epp: Yes, and it is 1.75 per cent above my credit union. There are financial institutions—

Mr. Whelan: Yours is one in a hundred.

Farm Loans

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, the minister says that the credit union where I have a mortgage and where farmers have lines of credit is one in a hundred. If that is the case, I suggest that he go to the credit unions, ask them how it is done and then follow their advice.

Mr. Whelan: Don't lecture me on credit unions. I have been a member of them for a long time.

Mr. Epp: The fact remains that 16.75 per cent, no matter what the bank rate is, is too high.

Mr. Whelan: Your minister raised it 2 per cent a year before.

Mr. Epp: That is too high for Canadian farmers. Some might say that we cannot afford to subsidize interest rates for young Canadian farmers at this time, but I do not accept that. I would accept it if this government were consistent, but I have in front of me information on a deal that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has worked out with the Soviet Union for a natural gas project for $637 million. How much money are we dealing with today for Canadian farmers? Just $50 million. Yet we are dealing with a loan of $637 million to be advanced to the Soviet Union. And at what per cent?

Mr. Regan: Why?

Mr. Epp: And at what rate, I ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan), when he asks why? At 10 per cent, Mr. Speaker. And for how many years? For 12 years. I ask the minister, if that is the kind of deal these fellows in this new Department of External Affairs who deal with imports and exports are getting for us, why he was so weak in cabinet that now he has to tell Canadian farmers they have to pay 16.75 per cent, but that the Soviet Union can be advanced money at 10 per cent. How weak is the minister?

Mr. Whelan: That is because we are exporting some financed at much lower rates than that to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Epp: That does not make me feel any better.

Mr. Whelan: I didn't believe it would.

Mr. Epp: If Canada cannot afford to subsidize farming—and by that I mean giving the farmers the loans they need—how can we afford to subsidize the Soviet Union and its citizens for the next 12 years? I wonder how many young farmers would be willing to accept a loan from the FCC today at 10 per cent for the next 12 years! How long do you think the line-up would be? Yet we are saying to the Soviet Union, "Yes, Soviet Union, we will do it for you". We see the Prime Minister going off to this location and to that location, handing out money here and handing out money there.

Mr. Whelan: We gave $3 million to your corn growers in Manitoba interest free. Potato growers get money interest free too.

Mr. Epp: Canadian farmers come to us and ask why they cannot get at least as good a deal from the Canadian government as it is willing to give others. That is all they are asking.

Mr. Regan: You are a demagogue, Jake.

Mr. Epp: I might be a demagogue but this is what farmers are asking and it is my responsibility to tell the government about it, so you had better listen as well.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Epp: What about the budget and its relationship to the Small Business Development Bond? I find it interesting—

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Secretary of State rises to ask the hon. member's permission to put a question. Will the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Epp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will accept a question when I am through.

What about the Small Business Development Bond? The idea of that bond was laughed at by this government yet in the last two years it is the only new idea that it has brought forward. However, it has emasculated it to such a degree that the banks do not want to handle it.

If we did a survey of members of this House on the difficulties they have had with constituents asking for their help to get a Small Business Development Bond, I dare say every one would have had that experience.

As a result of the last budget farmers can now get a Small Business Development Bond but they have to show that they are in trouble, that they are almost broke, that they are in danger of foreclosure. Then they can ask the bank for a Small Business Development Bond. Considering the history of the Small Business Development Bond, how many banks will deliver?

Let us consider the budget provision regarding IAACs and RRSPs. How many members were confronted by farmers during the Christmas break who said, "I have an IAAC", or "I want to buy an IAAC", or "I want to save for my retirement"? The government now says, "Oh, yes, we want agriculture to advance, but we are going to make sure that the government gets the first call on your resources." Many members have had such experiences.

Where was the Minister of Agriculture when the budget was being drafted? Where was he when income-averaging annuity contracts were discussed? What was he doing to protect the Canadian farmer when the budget was being discussed or ideas were being advanced to be included in it?

Mr. Whelan: Where were you when Crosbie did his?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, that budget was not taxation; that budget was confiscation. There is a big difference. We all criticize taxation and argue about the rate because none of us wants to pay tax. There is quite a difference between payment of taxes, however, and the confiscation of property on which taxes have been paid over the years. There is a great difference.

As I remember the constitutional debate, if I feel any chagrin it is about property rights. In one way or another the idea of property rights—that a person may own something after he or she has worked for it—is being eroded. It is being chipped away; it is being chiselled away.

I am sure many other members have had the experience of people coming to them with this question: "Why is it, when I want to retire, the government insists on taxing me first when I have worked all these years in order that I might live in dignity in the sunset years of my life?" That question is not being answered by the Minister of Finance or by the Minister of Agriculture.

I should like to say something about the administration of the FCC. I notice that there are some officials in the gallery who I presume are from FCC, and I think it is important that they understand what we hear about the administration. I must say that in general terms I think it is valuable and that I think the administration is excellent. The officials are often confronted by people who are in difficulty, people who need a loan and obviously the need has to be assessed in a very rational way. But I want to tell them that farmers do not come to them in a master-servant relationship. Perhaps there is a defence mechanism involved on the part of officials of the FCC but we often hear the complaint from farmers that they feel it is due to the good graces of the person across the desk that they receive the loan. That person's job is one of administration, not to make that Canadian farmer feel that if he gets anything he should be very thankful to the person sitting across the desk.

In the whole question of administration the Catch 22 situation arises time after time. A young farmer comes into the FCC looking for a loan. He is told that he can obtain a loan if he has enough equity, and the farmer says, "My dear friend, I would not be here if I had the equity; I could go to a different financial institution." Very often banks are willing to take risks on the potential of a young farmer, on the potential of his land, on the potential of his management ability, or on the potential of his willingness and that of his wife and family to work. Often banks and credit unions are much more willing to take a risk than the FCC.

Another matter of administration was brought to my attention recently. I do not know how it will be resolved, but I have written to the minister in the past few days about it. I am referring to the situation where a farmer obtains a loan and goes into a local place of business, such as a lumberyard or a farm supply dealer, and shows his line of credit. He says that he wants to build a facility or a barn with the proceeds of his loan. He starts building his barn and because there is a line of credit through the FCC, the supplier advances the materials.

But suddenly the barn is not quite complete and FCC demands that it be completed. Now the supplier is in a Catch 22 situation. He either advances more supplies in order to get his money, because FCC will not advance it to the farmer, or he stops the project right there. I know a lumber dealer who advanced materials and $7,000 is outstanding, but the person who received the FCC loan left the province—he walked away, so to speak. Obviously the FCC has the first mortgage, and in order to protect himself, the lumber dealer took a second mortgage on which I do not think he will ever realize any return. Not only does FCC have a responsibility to farmers, it must modernize its administrative system, particularly concerning the manner in which supplies are received and building materials are purchased by some people with FCC loans.

If there is hope in the country, I believe there is hope because of agriculture. I have been somewhat critical of the minister today because the farmers with whom I have spoken have been extremely critical of the minister over the last few months. What they have been saying is: "Would you tell them in the House of Commons that first there must be a recognition, not in words but in action, that agriculture is extremely important for Canada's future." Perhaps that sounds prosaic, that everyone understands and agrees with it, but this is not so.

Today we hear much about an industrial strategy, which is valid and important, but the development of farming and a method of meeting the problems and challenges of farming should be as much a part of the industrial strategy as rebuilding, for instance, industries in central Canada to make them more competitive. When there is a lay-off in farming, it affects a farmer, his wife and his family and their future and dreams. When someone who works for Massey-Ferguson is laid off, we hear about the numbers. Both are tragic, but there must be a recognition that farming is important. We should not only give it lip service. It must become part of the national strategy. Also we must do a better job of selling. Today I often hear the word "marketing". I am not against marketing boards, but I want to see hard-nosed people out in the marketplace selling Canadian agricultural products. We are not doing an adequate job in that regard.

I should like to refer to the example of the first shipments of canola to Japan. Yes, the Canadian government was interested but it did not know what to do. I know a farmer who said, "Look, I will do it". He filled containers and said that he would clean it in Canada. The Japanese had a certain standard, they thought it could only be done in Japan. When the farmer delivered the canola to Japan, cleaned in Canada, it had a lower dockage rate than the best cleaning facilities in Japan. This is what Canadian farmers are capable of doing. We must get out there and sell.

I should like to refer to another example in the time remaining; that is, the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency. Over 50 per cent of all eggs produced in Manitoba are produced by a number of farmers in my riding. Over the last few weeks I have been trying to obtain, through CEMA, permission to purchase eggs through an international contact in excess of 11,000 cases per week. The average farmer produces 100 cases per week, so one can imagine how much I am talking about. I cannot obtain that. I have talked with farmers in British Columbia and in Manitoba, and they have said, "Give us the opportunity and we will produce those eggs." When marketing becomes more important than selling, we run into trouble. This is what has happened.

I am for marketing. We need good marketing, but we also need hard-nosed selling. We also must be able to assure Canadian farmers that they will retain their assets. If we do not assure young Canadians who want to become involved in farming that the assets will be theirs first, that they will be their pension plans, that the Government of Canada will not confiscate through capital gains and change the rules in the middle, as we saw with the budget, we will not attract young Canadians into farming.

Those of us who grew up on farms—and perhaps tragically were not able to continue that life—say that farming has a great future, but we must allow farmers to do what they do best—farm. We should not interfere, but we should encourage.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan)—Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements—Calculation of provincial revenues. (b) Request that Minister review formula; the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer)—Agriculture—Government aid to producers. (b) Application of lower interest rates. (c) Short-term credit; the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby)—The Budget—Provisions affecting pensioners. (b) Taxpayer statistics. (c) Minister's budgetary statements.

FARM CREDIT ACT
FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak today on Bill C-88, respecting the loans of the Farm Credit Corporation to farmers. Improvements in food production in Canada should be our number one priority. I am sure we are all aware that farmers are one of the major pillars of the economy of the country. During this time of economic disparity, inflation and rising costs of production, they need a strengthened role of Farm Credit Corporation. Proper legislation for the corporation is crucial to the farm community and to Canada as a whole. I am pleased to see this legislation brought before the House; I am pleased to see the amendments proposed by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

Although I have many concerns about a number of amendments, in general I feel that they will afford the corporation more flexibility and a greater opportunity to assist agriculture. There have been problems with the Farm Credit Corporation in the past, but those problems are mainly through interpretation of the act and because of a lack of funding for the corporation itself. I hope they can be clarified with these amendments.

One cannot find fault with the individuals in the field. The staff of the corporation is very thorough and helpful, but it is tremendously hindered by not having the necessary funds to do the job. One only has to talk to Farm Credit Corporation staff throughout the country to see that it has a feeling of concern for agriculture. But it just does not have the funds to do something about its concerns. Hopefully we in this chamber can overcome this.

I notice that the amendments are going to increase the board of directors from a complement of five to a complement of seven members. I have mixed feelings about that. I suppose I cannot see anything really wrong with increasing the board of directors to seven because it affords us more heads to think things out. But I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the increase from five members to seven is not used to offer more jobs to political patronage persons within the Liberal Party. I am sure the minister will assure us that this will not take place. I have that faith in the minister and in his concern for agriculture.

I have some concerns about other things like patronage, but I also have a concern about creating corporations that are top heavy. I would sooner see the funds that may be placed in expanding the board of directors put out into the field and provided to the farmers instead of to develop a larger Crown corporation. Something of this nature is one issue that we can thrash out in committee.

Competition is stiffening in the agriculture community, both here in Canada and abroad. It is essential and necessary that farmers receive assistance, be it financial to make major investments in new technology and new machinery, or to assist them in selling their produce not only domestically but on the export market. That is one of the reasons we are also debating the Canagrex legislation this week here in the chamber.

In order to keep abreast of this technology, farmers are going to have to maintain high production. They are going to have to expand to a scale that is going to be able to afford them the opportunity to take advantage of modern agricultural methods. These modern methods, of course, are extremely costly and, therefore, funds must be made available to the agricultural sector.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture stated recently that the Farm Credit Corporation is disgracefully inadequate to the quest of farmers for real help. The $50 million provided in the budget, of which $45 million will be allowed to be loaned to farmers, will in fact provide approximately $100,000 per farm. The average appears to be somewhere between $90,000 to $100,000 in loans. But is $100,000 enough? We see now that we are raising the ceiling to $200,000. I am in agreement with that amendment. A farmer needs at least $200,000 to start a farm operation these days. Consequently that loan will only assist 225 farmers. We had hoped when we were in the government, for that all too short a period, that farm credit would be increased over a period of years by some $500 million. That is a more realistic figure and one we should consider in our deliberations in committee.

We are looking at situations now where some farms are worth in excess of $1 million. How does a young fellow today buy a million dollar farm? We do not have too many young people in Canada with a million dollars floating around in their pockets. Certainly there are some who have possibly worked with their fathers, built up little nest eggs of about $50,000, maybe even a little more. Say a young farmer puts his $50,000 down on his dream and then approaches the Farm Credit Corporation, and hopefully he can obtain the maximum loan of $200,000. That provides him with $250,000 toward that million dollar farm. But there is still that other $750,000 to make up. This young fellow, I suppose, if he has sufficient backing from his parents, could go to another lending institution and borrow that money. Or possibly the person from whom he is buying the farm can take back a second mortgage of some $750,000.

That is an awfully large step for a young fellow to take these days, especially when one considers the interest rates required for second mortgages. But it is also a very large step for the person who is selling that farm. What is that farmer who is selling the farm going to do when he gets $250,000 cash for his farm, then takes back a $750,000 mortgage? If we read the budget of November 12 brought before this House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), we see the answers.

That is just one of the reasons why we have to take a long look at farm credit and farm financing in Canada. As we witness more and more farmers leaving agriculture, either by choice or by bankruptcy, it is evident that there is currently little attraction for new would-be farmers. Even if the funding is available, the rate of interest is phenomenal. My hon. friend who preceded me mentioned that the current interest rate is 16.75 per cent if one qualifies. This rate of interest is not only disheartening to a young farmer wanting to get into agriculture, but also to the successful farmer who may want to expand his operation.

We do not have to look very far to see what the problems are in agriculture or to see what problems there are within the industry. We have a very good barometer on the agricultural industry, namely, the farm implement dealers and the farm equipment manufacturers of this country. If we look at the farm equipment manufacturers and the farm implement dealers of Canada, we can see from that barometer that there is a tremendous problem in the agricultural industry. It is one that this government must address, and address immediately if we are to see agriculture survive and thus prevent more bankruptcies in the agricultural community.

When the Minister of Agriculture tabled the legislation in this House last week, he pointed out that the Farm Credit Corporation will be allowed to obtain additional funds from sources other than the Government of Canada. I feel this is a tremendous move, a move that will add more flexibility to the corporation and a move that has tremendous potential for funding, if addressed in the proper manner. These proposed changes to the act will provide authority to borrow some of the funds from private sources, although this tends to be opposite apparently from what the minister was reported to have said only two years ago, when he indicated that he would not allow farm credit to borrow from private enterprise because he feared the privatization of the Farm Credit Corporation. Nevertheless, I applaud the minister's change of mind. I applaud him for his forward thinking that agriculture should not only be in the public market but also in the private market when it comes to funding of this nature. By utilizing the two, and by having the corporation keep control of the interest rates, I feel that tremendous assistance can be afforded to those looking for financing.

Let us hope that we can look closely at this privatization, and look closely at the bonds and the debenture markets the corporation is going to enter. Possibly we could afford some opportunity in this plan similar to that offered banks in the Small Business Development Bond situation. Possibly we could entice farmers who are selling their farms to invest their money in the Farm Credit Corporation as a retirement fund.

The budget does allow some investment of $10,000 into Crown corporations by farmers with a tax deduction. Possibly we could afford them the opportunity of investment and allow them to write off all, or at least most, of the interest from all investments by agriculture in agriculture. Possibly we could also afford the same opportunity to major corporations or organizations that wish to invest in the Farm Credit Corporation. This could afford our corporation a tremendous influx of funds, Mr. Speaker, which could allow us to lend money in return to the farmers at a much lower interest rate.

It is also interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that as the seasons change so do the promises of the Liberal government. This government during the election campaign said that it, too, would offer a once-in-a-lifetime exemption of capital gains for farmers, and that it would advance "V" day to 1974. What happened instead is history now, Mr. Speaker. Instead of allowing the capital gains exemption for retiring farmers and advancing V-Day to 1974 as promised, the Liberals, with the assistance of the finance minister, brought in a budget which will tax the farmer's retirement stake and give him nothing but a slap in the face for a lifetime of work on the farm. The people of rural Canada need changes, such as the capital gains exemption, Mr. Speaker, if they are going to retire with dignity and pass along their farmland. Surely a farmer who wants to sell his farm on the basis of part payment over a number of years should be allowed to do so. It is sensible; surely it should be permitted.

So often a farmer hands down a working farm to his son or daughter to carry on the family business. We urge the minister to reconsider this once-in-a-lifetime capital gains exemption on the sale of farmland. I am sure this tax has been a major factor in the decline in the number of Canadian farms and farmers because it has increased land prices, Mr. Speaker. They have to add the cost of the tax to the selling price and thus push it out of reach of a lot of people who have the dream of entering farming. It also encourages the centralization of farms into the hands of the wealthy or corporate buyer since they are the ones with the cash available.

This type of action, Mr. Speaker, brings out a whole new concept and concern that I have. The recent budget has made it extremely difficult for a farmer to sell his farm and for a purchaser to buy it. Cash money is required, and the capital gains tax is detrimental. If we think back and consider that this government would not allow the right to property in the bill of rights of our Constitution, and then think of the Canagrex bill which will allow that corporation the right to purchase and hold land, we can only hope we are not seeing a trend toward government-owned farms, Mr. Speaker. We do not need a federal land bank. I hope those in default to the FCC—some 7 per cent at present I understand—will not have their farms picked up by Canagrex and run as government farms. I hope and I trust the Minister of Agriculture will ensure that this government does not move this country toward government-owned and run agricultural enterprises.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bradley: Changes made in this budget regarding income-averaging annuity contracts have, in effect, frozen land sales for this generation. By eliminating the IAACs and the capital gains reserve, this government has forcefully and tragically penalized the Canadian farmer's retirement income. Until there is some change in the capital gains tax, until there is some change in the ability of individuals to use the capital from their farms in a way which will protect them from the exorbitant taxation at the time of sale, this generation will have to maintain control of the land. As a result, agriculture will not prosper as it would if people were allowed to retire from their farms and let the younger people carry on in their place. Why should a farmer be taxed on his farm all his life, Mr. Speaker, and then be dealt a heavier blow when he tries to sell it?

High start-up costs discourage many from entering farming. Therefore, I believe the government should focus attention on incentives to encourage people to start in farming and have the land remain in farming if at all possible. These incentives could be introduced through the Farm Credit Corporation. That corporation brings a strong national influence in the field of credit. In areas that do not have provincial programs, Mr. Speaker, the FCC is almost the only source of funds for young people who wish to get into farming. However, it falls short of providing sufficient help.

No industry is more important than agriculture in Canada, Mr. Speaker. It produces our food, and the family farm has been the major factor in that production. If we do not make sure that production continues, then we can expect to run into even more severe difficulties in future than we are facing today in agriculture.

Credit is important, Mr. Speaker, but net income is more important. We have a situation today where farmers are restricted in the amount they can charge for their produce, and yet there is no restriction on their overhead. There is no restriction on the increased costs of machinery, equipment, labour, energy, fertilizer or seed, Mr. Speaker. All of these have escalated so sharply that a constant depletion of farmers' income has occurred. For the past ten years, farm income has remained relatively the same, but the overhead has moved upward at a tremendous rate. The farmer's cash flow has suffered drastically.

Most certainly we should be looking at the availability of credit to the farmer, but we should be looking further. We should be looking at the squeeze on the farmer because of the tremendous changes in the cost-price situation in agriculture today. Canadian farmers are only looking for a decent return on their investment. Unlike many other business sectors of Canada, agriculture exists almost entirely as small family farm businesses. All the bank lending to agriculture may appear to be long term in the sense that it is done on the security of a mortgage with a long amortization. However, the mortgage is, typically, called for adjustment of interest rates at intervals as frequent as a year, or possibly there may be a floating rate. A farmer cannot plan five years ahead on his cost of production if he has to be continually concerned about interest rates.

However, I do not wish to dwell on this subject, Mr. Speaker. It is well known, I am sure, to all of us here. Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, we will be able to look at this bill as having the potential to do other things. We need clarification not only of the FCC, but also of the Small Business Development Bond. There is a tremendous conflict between the two. We have the FCC being forced to tell farmers that they cannot qualify for a loan until they have been turned down by another lending institution. So they tell them to check with the bank about qualifying for a Small Business Development Bond. The farmer goes to the bank and is told they do not yet have the regulations on the bond, or else he is told he must be turned down by another lending institution before qualifying for the bond. It is a vicious circle, Mr. Speaker. It is time consuming, confusing and, in too many cases, futile. We should put our heads together and make sure the FCC, the Small Business Development Bond program and the banks are in step as to what assistance is to be afforded to the agricultural community in an orderly manner.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-88 and the amendments have come three years too late. There is no short-term relief; funds have run out. Two hundred and sixty-one Canadian farms have been forced into bankruptcy, not to mention the hundreds more forced out through foreclosure and forced sale. Not only is further funding necessary, Mr. Speaker, but an over-all strategy to encourage and support our farmers is required. Bill C-88 is ineffective without proper funding. It cannot solve the immediate problems of underfunding as it stands. Further government action is desperately needed. The bill could be an important and worth-while measure if the government gave a firm commitment that its direct funding to the FCC will not be cut back. The promised $50 million is insufficient; we must ensure immediately that that figure is increased.

I am not opposed to these amendments as presented Mr. Speaker. I am happy to see the age limit of 35 being lifted under which borrowers can phase into farming over a five-year period. I am happy to see the $50 million increase even if I do feel it is a small amount compared to what is required. I am pleased to see the increased flexibility being worked into the corporation. I am very pleased that we are allowing private funding of the corporation, hoping, as I pointed out, the interest paid will not be taxable. I am pleased to see the borrowing ceiling brought up to $200,000, Mr. Speaker. Farms are now in the area of $900,000 to $1 million or more, and the ceiling must be raised.

As I pointed out, I also have suggestions pertaining to the Farm Credit Corporation and agriculture in general. I would suggest that we sit down and clarify the Farm Credit Corporation versus the Small Business Development Bond program and the bank loan issue. I hope that in committee we will investigate the possibility of allowing the private sector to invest in the Farm Credit Corporation and write off the interest, and thus allow the Farm Credit Corporation interest rate to be brought down to a reasonable, low level which would be stimulative to the industry.

I hope we can look at the possibility of increasing the funds given to the Farm Credit Corporation, not by $50 million as proposed but, hopefully, by some $500 million, even if it must be phased in over two or three years. I suggest that we look at an increase in the amounts available for lending when we start looking at farms which are worth $1 million or more. We must keep abreast of inflation in the industry.

I hope the minister will give serious consideration to giving the capital gains exemption, at least once in a lifetime, to a bona fide farmer, which would allow him some dignity in retirement and would help keep the farm costs down.

I hope we can address the energy rebate program and give agriculture some assistance with the energy used in food production. Hopefully, we can look at the interest deductibility possibilities in agriculture and, above all, I suggest we do everything we can to lower interest rates in agriculture.

As I pointed out earlier, farmers are unique. They cannot increase the price of their goods as the price of the production increases because governments and all other institutions do everything in their power to keep the cost of food low to the consumers in this country in order to keep the cost of living and inflation down. However, the farmers are being faced with tremendous increases in cost in order to produce these goods. They do not want a handout. They do not want to become partners with the government, but they do need assistance.

I feel that it is time that we in this House sat down with those farmers or their representatives to figure out the best methods. I feel that it is time the Government of Canada gave farmers a fair shake.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon on the changes to the Farm Credit Corporation. I support the bill, generally, but I am looking forward to the time it is referred to committee so that we in the official opposition can make some constructive recommendations to the bill. I would like to make a few comments on some of the sections contained in the bill.

Clause 3 provides for an increase in the number of members on the board of the Farm Credit Corporation from five to seven. I would certainly like to hear an explanation from the minister as to the reason he finds that increase necessary, other than to give some Liberal in the backwoods an opportunity to sit on the board and feed at the public trough.

Over the years, the Farm Credit Corporation has done an excellent job for the farmer. For this reason, I hope that increasing the board will not result in any real changes in its operation. However, we are certainly entitled to an explanation by the minister.

My party and I support the increase in the capitalization from $150 million to $225 million. This increase in funding is certainly necessary because during the last year or two it has become more and more difficult for borrowers to go to the Farm Credit Corporation and find available funds. In many instances, when an application is made, the people who are administering the fund say to the borrower, "We would like to help you but, unfortunately, we simply do not have the money." If a young farmer, or any farmer for that matter, has a deal pending with respect to the purchase of farmland, he is certainly in need of the money within a reasonable time. If he is told by the Farm Credit Corporation that it will take six weeks, two months, three months or four months before he can get the money, he will not be able to proceed with the deal.

I think one of the real problems today is with respect to the interest rates. One should consider the present interest rate of 16.75 per cent, which is presently charged by the Farm Credit Corporation, along with the current price of land. It is not unusual, in my region at least, for a farm to sell at a minimum of $1,000 an acre. If one relates an interest rate of 16.75 per cent to $1,000 per acre of land, that means that the interest payable annually is approximately $167.50.

As it happens in most instances, farmers nowadays, because of climatic conditions and other factors, farm on a two-year rotation basis. They summer-fallow one year and they crop in the alternate year. Therefore, one has a situation where half of one's land is in crop each year. In other words, one acre of land must support the interest on two acres. If one relates 16.75 per cent interest to two acres of land at $1,000 an acre, one finds that this amounts to some $335 per acre. At $6 per bushel of wheat, it will require a crop of something more than 50 bushels to the acre simply to pay the interest alone, and that is without paying anything on the capital or paying one's taxes or input costs. The input costs have been rising year by year. The prices of fertilizer, sprays and farm machinery go up, but this is really something over which we have no control.

However, I would suggest to Your Honour and to hon. members of the House that interest rates are something we in the House can do something about. I would like to put forward a proposal which I think is important. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has spoken about bringing interest rates down, but he has never brought forward any proposals. It was rather interesting to read an article in The Toronto Sun of January 31, 1982, entitled "Taxpayers Underwrite 10 per cent Loan to Soviets". If one reads that, one finds that the taxpayer of Canada will be subsidizing the Soviet government on a loan that EDC is making to that country. I will read one paragraph which states:

> The Trudeau government has been working on a deal in which the benefits of a $198.5 million—

Mr. Cousineau: Order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Cousineau: I wonder if the hon. member who is now speaking could respect the customs of the House by not referring to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) by his family name but by his title, please.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, he is quoting!

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I was quoting from an article.

Mr. Cousineau: Order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) has the floor.

Mr. Epp: He was quoting.

Mr. Cousineau: Doesn't make any difference, Jake.

Mr. Neil: The article states:

> The Trudeau government has been working on a deal in which the benefits of a $198.5 million Canadian taxpayers' 'subsidy' would go to the Soviet Union.
> The Sun has learned that the federal government's Export Development Corporation has been planning to borrow money for a Soviet project at 16 per cent interest. They would then loan it at only 10 per cent interest to finance Canadian companies who are negotiating to build a $750 million portion of a new natural gas project in the Soviet Union's Astrakhan area, on the delta of the Volga River near the Caspian sea.

The article goes on to state:

The Soviet government would be the main financial benefactor in the EDC loan because the low interest rate would be passed on to it in the form of much lower contract bids by the Canadian companies.

Mr. Speaker, we can lend money to the Soviet Union at 10 per cent, yet we charge our farmers 16.75 per cent.

However, I would say to Your Honour that there is something we can do about interest rates without subsidizing, and it is fairly simple. I note that Clause 8 of the bill with which we are dealing today widens the area in which the Farm Credit Corporation can obtain funds. It reads as follows:

● (1750)

The corporation may, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, borrow money by any means, including issuing and selling bonds, debentures, notes and other evidences of indebtedness of the corporation.

That gives pretty wide powers to the Farm Credit Corporation when it comes to raising funds. In the November 22 budget, certain changes were made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) which make it almost an impossibility for a farmer when selling out to pass the land on to his son or daughter unless he can get cash for the sale. He is faced with the payment of capital gains upfront for the simple reason that the income-averaging certificates have been eliminated. He is faced with a tax on the sale of his inventory and his farm machinery.

Before the November 22 budget, the farmer was in a position where he could buy income-averaging certificates, sell on time and use the reserve system. These benefits enabled him to sell, pass on his land, and yet have sufficient money to enable him to retire. With the November 22 budget, this has been taken away. The retiring farmer is now faced with an almost impossible tax burden.

I suggest there is a way to deal with this act which would enable the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow money at reasonable rates. At the same time it would give relief to those farmers selling their farmland, inventory, machinery and retiring. It can be called an agri-bond, debenture, or farmer's retirement investment fund. I suggest that the Minister of Agriculture bring in an amendment to this bill. If it is not legal for him to do that, he can recommend to the Minister of Finance that he bring in changes to the Income Tax Act which would allow a retiring farmer to take that portion of the sale price which is a capital gain and lend it to the Farm Credit Corporation, either by way of debenture, agri-bond or a retirement fund.

The Farm Credit Corporation would pay to that retiring farmer an interest rate of, for example, 8 per cent. If the retiring farmer allowed those funds to remain in the hands of the corporation for, example, for five years, he would have no capital gains tax to pay. I am sure retiring farmers would welcome such a scheme. I submit it would not cost the Government of Canada any money. The corporation would get money at 8 per cent, which would be taxable in the hands of the farmer. It could lend it at 9 per cent by way of mortgage under the Farm Credit Corporation Act. That 1 per cent should cover administrative costs. The farmer would have 8 per cent investment income which he could use for his retirement.

The same could apply to the sale of inventory for farm machinery. The farmer could invest it in the Farm Credit Corporation in the same manner. The tax would be waived, the Farm Credit Corporation would have money at a low interest rate and so would the farmer. What better system could there be? The farmers would be building a fund to help farmers. It would not cost the taxpayer any money and would enable the family farm to be passed on from generation to generation.

As the situation now stands with the present budget provisions, it will be virtually impossible for a farmer to pass on the family farm to his son or daughter. It will be impossible because of the tax burden on a farmer wishing to sell his land, even for cash, and to retire comfortably. In most cases, the only retirement fund that a farmer has is what he can realize from the sale of his farm, inventory and farm machinery when he reaches retirement age.

I put this proposition to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) several months ago. In response he said that it was an interesting proposition and that he would pass it on to the Minister of Agriculture. I have not heard a thing from the Minister of Agriculture.

There is nothing in the bill or in the speeches of the minister to indicate that he was listening or that he is concerned about the retiring farmer. The procedure I have proposed is a method by which cheap money will be available to the Farm Credit Corporation and to the borrower. I hope when this bill is being considered in committee the Minister of Agriculture will discuss an amendment of this nature. We on this side of the House have been discussing it for some time and will be bringing in a joint amendment of some kind to put forward this proposal.

My time is almost up. In closing I should like to say that, generally speaking, I am supportive of this bill. I hope that when the bill goes to committee the minister will listen and that we can make some constructive amendments in a manner that will be beneficial not only to the farm population but to the Government of Canada in the form of reduced interest rates. If the minister's interests are with the farmers, he will listen to us and give consideration to our recommendations.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, I see there are only a couple of minutes left. I leave it to your discretion as to whether we should call it six o'clock before I get into the meat of my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) had the floor.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-88, I would like to make a few remarks regarding farm credit and some of the problems that I see with capital and credit requirements of farmers today.

During the Christmas recess I had an opportunity, as did most hon. members, to speak with people in our constituencies about the problems that they would like us to deal with in this session. I must say that there is a very pessimistic attitude among farmers in central Alberta. The balance sheet will simply not balance as they sit down to make their calculations for the 1982 crop year. This is particularly true for those involved in the cereal grain, oilseed and red meat industries.

Today, many farmers are borrowing against their assests, their land and machinery, to keep the farm going. They are taking a line of credit, a working capital loan, in order to put the crop in. With these very high interest rates, the amount of money they take in at the end of the year is simply not sufficient to meet the interest and principal payments they have to make. For many farmers today, if they have one crop failure they are bankrupt.

This was not the case when my father was farming. I can recall being on my family farm in 1955 and 1956 when we were hailed out. We did not even have crop insurance at that time. In 1957 we had a crop and then in 1958 we were hailed out again. But the farm did not go under. In those days farmers had sufficient capital on hand, built up in the bank, to meet a crop failure. Of course, there were not the high interest rates and input costs. We did not have to fertilize our crops or spray herbicides. If we did, it was only for spot requirements.

As a result of the advice given to the agriculture industry and the almost mandatory requirement today of enlarging your farm in order to stay in business, the interest rates and huge input costs which must be spent to put in a crop, if there is one crop failure, all that investment and work is for nothing because the farmer cannot obtain another line of credit for working capital for his next crop year to meet the problems of nature which may result in crop failure.

As I travelled through my constituency during the Christmas recess I noticed that the farmers who face serious difficulty fell into two categories. One is the farmer who has recently taken over the family farm or who has started a farming operation and has faced these extraordinarily high interest rates in the last couple of years. The second group—which was surprising to me although maybe it should not have been—was the farmers with very large farming operations. They have very large working capital loans and are now finding the interest rates of 20 per cent are causing them great difficulty if the yields are not what they should be or if they have trouble marketing their crop. These are the two groups of farmers having the most difficulty balancing their budgets today.

Some years ago the advice from the Department of Agriculture and our agriculture representatives to many farmers—and there were many more then than there are today—was that they should get larger operations. This was the coming thing. This was the way to continue in the agri-business, farming. They did that, many because they had no choice. They could not manage any more on 100 acres, 200 acres or 300 acres. In order to continue, they had to have larger operations. They became more efficient, obtained larger equipment and produced more volume.

When that was becoming a problem, the advice then was that they would have to become even more efficient and that the way to become even more efficient was to obtain larger equipment and to make more use of farm research. Researchers in our agriculture stations have great talent and are providing farmers with some excellent opportunities to become more efficient, but we can reach limits in that respect. Farmers were told to use more herbicides and more fertilizers and to use their tractors less. Such things as zero tilling have come into application. This was the way farmers could stay in business. That worked and is still working for some farmers, but with the economic situation as it is now the government has put out a paper to the agricultural community entitled "How to Survive Hard Times". Many farmers would say they have experienced hard times many times in their years of farming, but now there is a paper out on the prairies called "How to Survive Hard Times". I wish I had brought it with me. It contains about seven or eight recommendations which are really something to read. As I remember it, one was to sell some unproductive land. Another was to raise hogs in unused buildings. Another was to work at part-time jobs. The paper went on and on listing these types of things.

Mr. Neil: Get rid of the Liberal government.

Mr. Schellenberger: Yes. As my colleague says, one recommendation might be to get rid of the Liberal government. That might have helped farmers through hard times. Many farmers in my constituency have been forced to get part-time jobs to keep their farms operating. Then the tax man comes along and says they can write off only $2,500 of capital they accrue in off-farm income. They can then write off half of the next $5,000, and that is it. The benefit realized from working hard on an off-farm job to use the capital obtained to keep a farm operating ends at $5,000, and that is simply not enough for many facing high interest costs.

As I see it, at the present time we are facing two very desperate problems which must be dealt with immediately. One problem is high interest rates, and the other—and we have been facing it for some time and perhaps not using our intelligence enough or using the ideas which are coming forward—is how to deal with inadequate prices and markets for the produce we are producing most efficiently. The farm index is rising far, far faster than the consumer price index. This is also true in the United States and, if we were to look at the statistics we have, I am sure we would find that it is true also in Argentina, Australia and all those countries competing with us in the markets for grain sales.

Interest rates were not dealt with in the budget recently presented. They are not being dealt with in this farm credit bill. They are not being dealt with in the Canagrex bill. The first ministers are presently having a conference and, to their credit, they are attempting to bring forward ideas on how we can deal with this economic dilemma.

Every day in the House hon. members rise seeking solutions to this very desperate problem which faces not just the agricultural industry but many other industries. Many members who have spoken in the House about this bill have presented ideas and possible solutions to the credit and interest rate problems we are facing today in agriculture and other industries. It is time the government widened its viewpoint, opened its arms and its glass houses of intelligence and used some of the ideas which are being presented in this House and by many farm organizations across this land. We must seek advice and use it.

Hon. members speak in this House not just to criticize. Of course, sometimes an essential function of members of this House is to criticize legislation, but many times hon. members bring forward not only their own ideas but also the ideas they are able to gather as they travel in their constituencies. Many of us represent hundreds of thousands of people, and there are ideas out there which we bring to the House and into committees. As we face these kinds of dilemmas, it is time the minister and the government opened their arms to these suggestions, looked at them honestly and dealt with them. They should not be thrown aside just because they do not come from the department or the glass houses across the street, from where all intelligent material emanates!

I have been reading Hansard and listening to some of the speeches. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) brought forward an excellent idea yesterday, and it deserves some study. That idea has to do with the use of the Small Business Development Bond whereby individuals could lend to the Farm Credit Corporation and not pay tax on the interest money accruing from such loans. That idea is worth some study.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) made an excellent suggestion just a few hours ago. He suggested that farmers could receive money at rates of about 8 per cent. He referred to a farmers' retirement investment fund which would allow farmers to invest their capital gains in farm credit at 8 per cent for five years; I think that is what he said. They would not pay any capital gains tax if they left their money there for five years, and the government could lend it out at a very reasonable rate. If the government is going to the money market to borrow money for farm credit, I am sure the government will pay prime and perhaps prime plus for the money. Under my colleague's proposal, we would have a pool of capital which could be put to work at a rate much lower than that.

I heard the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley) make some excellent proposals. I made some suggestions back in 1975. I looked them up to see if they still make any sense. I put forward a private member's motion at that time on behalf of young, starting farmers who were having difficulty. I proposed that there be partial non-repayment of loans, where young farmers meet some performance standards, and a maximum 5 per cent interest rate. Things have changed substantially since then, but we all remember the days when interest rates were set, and they could not go above a certain level. Oh, we long for those days again! I proposed that there be deferred interest during an initial period because when a farmer is starting up with a very high loan rate on land and equipment, his greatest difficulties generally are in his first years, and he spends all his money just paying interest and does not get to the principal for some time. I proposed open-ended loans so that if a farmer intends to increase his operation, he need not pay the costs time and time again to set up loans.

Sure, things have changed since 1975, but many ideas are enunciated in this House and in committee every day this House is in session, and very, very few of them are put into legislation. Often a minister brings a bill into the House and says it is at the final stage. He says it is in its final form. Oh, yes, he tells us we will have an opportunity to debate but that he is not looking for any ideas. He just wants to get his legislation through and, as long as he has the support of his party's members, away he goes.

Hon. members have said they will support this bill. It makes some changes that will be beneficial to the agricultural community. But is it good enough? Can we pack our tents and go home saying that with this bill on farm credit and with the bill on Canagrex, we have solved the farming problem? I believe that is not good enough. I say to the minister that the bill provides the opportunity for him to deal with some of the excellent suggestions put forward by the House and by farm organizations.

Clause 8 of the bill which refers to Section 13.(1) of the act reads as follows:

> The Corporation may, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, borrow money by any means—

I suppose the government does not trust the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and that is why provision is made for the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to approve. He is to make sure that the thumb is put on the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure that members from other agricultural areas, as well as this minister, can convince the Minister of Finance that improvements are needed in the area of capital requirements for farmers. This gives him latitude to accept such ideas.

In committee, amendments to clarify this clause in the bill will be put forward and the excellent suggestion offered by farm organizations will be considered and perhaps drafted into amendments. We ought to give such suggestions close study, and in this area we hope to receive the co-operation of the minister.

Clause 3 of the bill deals with the increase in the number of board members. Many hon. members are suspicious of this provision, and I suspect there is some depth to that criticism. If the number of members is to be increased, perhaps the government will seek out individuals who can deal with the dilemma of capital requirements in this country and make suggestions to the minister. As many hon. members have pointed out, the board members do not really operate the day to day affairs of the corporation but are there to advise it. We will wait to see how this provision is used.

Another provision is for an increase in the capital requirement. Anyone who has dealt with the Farm Credit Corporation knows that it generally runs out of funds half way into the fiscal year and that many important loans that should be dealt with are put aside simply because there is not enough money.

Clause 10 of the bill sets the maximum repayment period at 30 years. As many of us who have gone to a bank to take out a line of credit have found, there is not much difference in the payment on a 20-year loan, a 25-year loan or a 30-year loan. It often amounts to only a few hundred dollars. Sometimes, with a borderline operation, there may be the need for an extra five years in the repayment period.

Clause 11 allows the Farm Credit Corporation an advance of up to 30 per cent of the principal amount of the loan immediately. Many farmers find that, even when a loan is approved, it takes weeks to get the cash and, as a result, many pending deals are jeopardized. I think the suggestion is a good one.

Clause 13 provides that money lent to Indian bands be set by regulation. I agree with that.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we are going to support this bill, but I would like to consider some suggestions put forward by people outside the House and outside the farm organizations. Perhaps we should consider what other countries are doing.

In the brief time that I had to prepare this speech, I examined the U.S. credit system and found some very interesting things that I think should be considered in committee.

The United States has a number of systems, one of which is the Federal Land Bank Association. This is farm-owned and its purpose is to provide farmers with long-term credit for land at interest rates of 10.5 per cent to 13 per cent. The interest rate floats with outstanding bonds in the bond market, and the repayment period is 40 years. A similar type of organization would be very attractive in Canada.

In the United States there is an organization called the Production Credit Association. Today it has floating rates of 15 per cent to 17 per cent, with a maximum repayment period of ten years. As well, 5 per cent to 10 per cent of the loan can be withheld to purchase what is called class B stock, with no dividends. If the stock is held for two years with no further borrowing, it becomes class A stock and pays dividends. This can be used for any farm-related expense. I think it is an excellent idea.

There is also something called the Farmer's Home Administration which was established in 1946 for farm and rural housing development. It provides short-term loans of up to $100,000 for seven years, long-term loans of up to $200,000 for 40 years and provides for an emergency loan of $500,000 for from seven to 40 years, in the event of natural disasters. The interest rate on that loan is set at five per cent. I am sure that many hon. members can point to natural disasters in their constituencies where the insurance held by farmers was not adequate to put them back into operation. So this last idea seems like an excellent one and I think we should consider it.

The Americans also have the Commodity Credit Corporation. This is not a major source of funds but it is available for the use of farmers.

I have shown that there are good ideas in other countries, Mr. Speaker, and I think if we examined the situation in still more countries such as Australia, we would find excellent systems that we could study to see if they would help with the very serious economic problems that face the farm industry.

I do not intend to put all the statistics regarding high input costs on the record again, Mr. Speaker, nor do I intend to speak about the low prices that farmers receive for livestock, cereal and oilseed. All these statistics have been placed on the record and are common knowledge.

Farmers need leadership; indeed, they are desperate for leadership that will adopt ideas to assist them in the coming decade. Many agricultural experts feel that there is a bright future for farmers and, indeed, we are optimistic. Each year there are some 80 million more people in the world so there is a need to provide food for them. We are one of the very few countries with the capacity to do that. We must get on with the job, however.

We already have the Western Development Fund. Although the amount of the fund was set at $4 billion in the beginning, it has decreased in the last few months. However, in the next five years the federal government will receive as much as $50 billion from western oil. Surely some of that money could be reinvested to provide transportation systems, proper credit and some of the ingredients that are essential in order to buoy up the very important agricultural sector of this country which brings in many billions of dollars in foreign currency.

If we do not deal with the dilemma of transportation, then within a few years we will find that quotas are imposed on the rail lines to western ports. With the Crow rate in place, it is easy to see which commodity would be at the end of the line! It would be grain. We have to deal with that problem and it is essential that we begin now. Markets which pay the proper price for our agricultural products must be found. This matter was debated when the House dealt with Canagrex. Canada has failed miserably in this area over the last number of years. In my opinion there must be some co-ordination among the various sellers of grain in the world. Canada, United States, Australia and Argentina are competing with one another. We compete so well that we sell our products below the cost of production to farmers. I assume we are not doing farmers any favours. Why can we not get together? Some of us have taken the initiative to meet our colleagues in the parliaments of those nations to talk about this matter, because our ministries and public servants have failed in the past. Farmers want us to get together and not sell products below the cost of production to subsidize our Soviet friends as they build up billions of dollars of arms or to subsidize our Japanese friends who purchase our wheat for $6 and sell it to their people for $12 so that they do not compete with their own farmers. There are countries that require food and can afford to pay. The countries with the capacity to produce should be seeking more of those funds. I am not suggesting that those funds should go strictly to farmers. If there is some surplus or a reasonable profit over the cost of production, we may be able to establish a food bank to assist countries which do not have the capital to pay; perhaps they could buy some of our surpluses.

I do not have time to present my many ideas, but I will have that opportunity in committee. The Farm Credit Corporation has served our farmers admirably over a number of years. It ought to be assisted now so that it can continue to serve them. This bill will begin that process. Hopefully other ideas will be placed in the bill in committee and before third reading debate so that we can better serve Canadian farmers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-88 respecting loans to farmers has been needed for a considerable amount of time. We will discuss it in a fairly detailed manner in committee. We will be discussing matters which are important to farmers, such as basic rates and the availability of funds.

I was most interested in hearing the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) talk about the banks when he introduced the bill on January 28. He was most critical of the banks in his remarks. Also I was most grateful that the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) corrected the minister's remarks by quoting the minister's words of four years earlier. In 1977 the minister was more than willing to do business with banks. On October 25, 1977, he said:

> I take my hat off to banks and other interested financial organizations who are starting to get involved in long-term agricultural lending programs because I welcome progress. And this is progress.

On January 28, 1982, the minister said:

> As I have said outside this House, I am extremely disappointed in the way in which most of the banks, but not all of them, have handled the demand for farm credit.

The minister went from boom to bust with the private sector in less than five years. We should let that be a warning to the messiahs in the House who always find salvation in the private sector.

Some of us have longer memories and are not as trusting. Some of us will always wonder why the minister was so trusting back in 1977. The record of banks respecting long-term financing for agriculture in the 1930s was not one of glory. The experiences of foreclosures and abandonment of farms across the prairies led to a permanent divorce between farmers on the prairies and their banks. Farmers would not go to banks for credit back in the 1930s because they had continuously lost their land as a result of very small loans. One result of the divorce was the growth of credit unions, particularly in my home province of Saskatchewan. Another was the departure of banks from long-term farm financing until 1977.

As I have indicated before, the Minister of Agriculture was quick to welcome back the banks in 1977. Now he must tell the House that because banks were not really providing long-term financing, they have not really returned at all. This matter is worth pursuing in some detail. Most of us are aware of the greatly increased dollar amounts required for farm credit. According to the 1981 annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation, the amount of long-term credit granted in 1979 was $1.75 billion, up from $1.1 billion in 1978. These are the latest figures, but the amount for last year was probably considerably higher. Of that amount of long-term credit in 1979, the banks granted $371.6 million or 21 per cent of the total. This is a substantial amount when it is considered that in years prior to 1977 banks were not in that field at all.

According to the minister, these preliminary figures may require substantial revision. I wonder why. The minister told us that the banks were not in the long-term credit field. Long-term credit is defined as financing for more than a ten-year term. Also, most of us presume that long-term credit means credit at a fixed interest rate, but "not so", the minister told us. Banks have now turned their so-called long-term financing into demand notes. Farmers are faced with a choice of floating rates of financing or no financing at all. It is kind of a Hobson's choice of which most farmers and I want no part. But it is a situation which farmers must confront because, as the Minister of Agriculture admitted in the House, the actions of the banks are perfectly legal under the Bank Act. Instead of having long-term credit at a rate for which they can plan, farmers have been facing extremely variable and high interest rates up to 24 per cent. It is of little value for the minister to rail against the banks publicly when other remedies are at hand.

The government of Saskatchewan made its intentions clear to the banks when it introduced its home owners protection act. That bill was so clear-cut that in the Saskatchewan legislature members of the party to my right reversed their position and supported the bill when it came to a vote. The banks did not like it, but just about everybody else did.

In 1944 the government of Saskatchewan passed the farm protection act, which has stood ever since. I mention that legislation as a reminder to the minister that legislative action is an alternative, and I suggest that he look at it and use it. Failing a legislative alternative, we must look again at the sources of long-term credit. This field has been overwhelmingly dominated by the federal government in the absence of other lending institutions.

In 1978, the federal Farm Credit Corporation accounted for 68.3 per cent of all long-term credit outstanding in Canada. Provincial governments were a distant second at 15.1 per cent and the banks were third at 6.6 per cent. The banks are getting out of this area once again.

As the minister noted in his speech, the growth in demand for credit is increasing at a rate of 20 per cent annually. The minister also said that the Farm Credit Corporation has been held back by federal restraint despite the extremely good repayment record of the farming community.

The minister held out in his speech the possibility of retiring farmers being able to invest in a fund with the Farm Credit Corporation with proceeds from the sale of their farms. He suggested further that tax concessions could be attached to bonds being sold by the Farm Credit Corporation in the future. These are possibilities which the minister raises. But there is nothing in the bill to indicate they will be implemented. Indeed, I would like a suitably unvarnished opinion from the Department of Finance and the Treasury Board on the likelihood that Canada should get into the tax-free bond market.

I would suggest the minister try another area. I think he should ask for provincial investment in the Farm Credit Corporation. Agriculture is a shared jurisdiction. Farmers routinely borrow from federal and provincial sources. Yet the Farm Credit Corporation dominates the long-term credit field. The Farm Credit Corporation has offices and counsellors across Canada. They have an appreciation of long-term capital needs and markets. Provincial investment could avoid duplication in this area.

In this bill we have been asked to address a shortage of capital for the Farm Credit Corporation. There is little indication in this bill that the funds being provided will prove to be adequate for anything but the short term. If the government has already reached $143 million of its $150 million ceiling, then I do not believe it will take long to reach this new ceiling of $225 million.

The minister's own paper on agri-food strategy mentioned long-term financing as a major constraint against the development of food production in Canada. Given the present economic policies being followed by this government, I can see no great hope of stimulating the kind of production which the minister hopes can be sold on world markets.

If the minister seriously believes that the banks which have caused him so much personal grief among his farming constituents in recent months can be counted on as a major participant in the expansion of Canadian agriculture, he should think again.

Bill C-88 is meant to provide long term financing to agriculture. There is a great need for relief of the crisis in agriculture that is upon us. Indeed, one of the provisions of this bill is to include retroactively the $50 million in emergency farm financing which was granted in the budget. All of us know that the $50 million was too little and too late. The amount will help perhaps 300 young and beginning farmers who are in difficulty with the high interest rates. The minister's own figures show an average loan of $124,000. In other words, we can say that $50 million will go to 363 farmers.

That is a start, and we can commend the Farm Credit Corporation staff for moving quickly to help those farmers who are in distress. But other farmers who do not fit the criteria, also in distress, are supposed to use small business bonds as financing. That in itself is a very big issue. We have heard a great deal from people who have been waiting for action on the Small Business Development Bond program since it was introduced in the November budget speech and made a vehicle for farmer relief.

The banks have been waiting for eligibility clarification. The farmers and the fishermen have just been waiting. Now that the eligibility problems have been resolved, there is fear that the rules applied by the banks will be so rigorous that few loans will be made.

While in my constituency last weekend, I was told that not one farmer has received a small business loan since November 12. The fear that the banks will apply such rigorous rules that few loans will be made is also the fear of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Other fears are being expressed as well. Some people in the financial community believe that once a person convinces a bank that his financial situation is dire enough to qualify for the bond, the bank will immediately conclude that the applicant is a poor risk and will refuse to help. I am told that is exactly what is happening. Bankers do not generally believe high interest rates are the root of financial difficulties in Canada. They prefer instead to point to inadequate capital management problems and the present poor economic conditions.

Late last fall I surveyed my constituents concerning the effect of high interest rates. I heard a good deal about the difficulties people are facing in the renewal of mortgages. The average increase was about $280 a month. I also heard from farmers, one of whom told me that his interest payments have increased 100 per cent in the last year. Another one told me his monthly payments have increased $5,000 a month in the last three years. I asked him what he could cut back to keep his farm in operation, and he told me the only thing he could cut was his throat. That is my definition of dire straits, when there is nothing else you can do, and that is why I wonder how the bankers can say with a straight face that high interest rates are not the principal difficulty facing Canadian agriculture at this moment.

With this in mind I would like to dwell for a moment on the income problems facing Canadian farmers. If their expenses continue to rise dramatically, then all of us must give particular attention to raising farm incomes. If I might be allowed to use a current example which was used in a different context by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), it does little good to calculate the abolition of the Crowsnest freight rate, as economist Carl Snavely has done, on the basis of a 50 per cent return on investment to Canadian Pacific. This rate compares most favourably to the 7 per cent return on investment to farmers.

Similarly, we find that a movement of the compensatory rate would absolutely wipe out Manitoba's net farm income. In 1980 Manitoba's farm income would have declined 156 per cent to a net of minus $30 million by the use of compensatory freight rates. That would be the consequences of the policy put forward by this government, a government which is actively encouraging farmers to grow more grain to meet the export targets it has set. No wonder my colleague, the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), called this a plan which could be topped only by one other government, namely, the military government of Poland.

I mention these examples to underline the income problems of farmers. I see little future for farming in Canada, given the lack of direction and concern of this government, if net farm incomes continue to decline. Taking inflation into consideration, a decline from $3.5 billion in 1974 to $3.3 billion in 1980 is a very large one. That is a decline in both relative and absolute terms, one that is fuelled by the monetarist policies of this government. The projected 20 per cent decline in 1982 is a further indication of a deepening crisis in Canadian agriculture. All the borrowing in the world will not be a sufficient answer to those farmers with incomes inadequate to meet their greatly increased obligations. If you cannot show a profit, it does not make sense to continue borrowing to cover your losses.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, in order to underline to the minister that we on this side of the House do not see the amendments to the Farm Credit Act as any kind of solution to the problems in agriculture. Rather, we believe that proper application of economic principles which will support farmers is the only way we can keep them in the business of providing food to the world, which is what they want to do. It is up to us to assist them in every possible way. This bill is a bandaid which will not stop the bleeding. The minister had better come up with more and better plans if he hopes to save the industry for the farmers.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in welcoming this bill. We all know the agricultural community needs something, we do not think this is enough, but we will probably have to accept it for what it is worth in the hope we can get more and better understanding of the farming community in the future.

Now, the government went out and bought money last fall at 19½ per cent. It dried up all the working capital for the business community in Canada. It bribed the people into lending their money, which the banks turned around and loaned out. It was the people's money, that is right, and now we are left with a double dilemma: mismanagement and no money.

There are few things which indicate more clearly that this government has a rather peculiar method of establishing priorities. The federal government's advertising budget last fall got a whopping $225 million, while it can only add a measly $50 million to the woefully inadequate Farm Credit Corporation budget. All of us here from rural ridings know the FCC always runs out of money several months before the end of the year. If the government must advertise, it would have made much more sense to allot the $50 million for that, and the $225 million to the FCC.

Last fall's budget lowered the interest rate of FCC loans to 11¾ per cent, but only for farmers on the verge of bankruptcy. This would allow most if not all marginal farmers across the country to become financially viable, and help them stave off bankruptcy two or three years down the road.

Farmers are by tradition a proud and self-sufficient breed of people. What we have here is a situation where the FCC has money in one pocket for certain farmers and money in another pocket for others. The FCC offers farm loans at 16¾ per cent, and if that proves too great a burden to a farmer, then all he has to do is to go to his FCC office cap in hand and plead for a loan at the lower rate in order to avoid bankruptcy, as I mentioned a moment ago. It is a pretty weird economic policy, and it is cruel and insensitive. We have a similar situation with regard to small business and the Small Business Development Bond. Today it is known as the small business bond. With great fanfare, it was announced last fall that the Small Business Development Bond plan would be extended for another year. However, it was stated in the next paragraph that this would apply only to businesses and farmers in dire straits facing bankruptcy. It is high interest rates which are forcing most bankruptcies in the first place.

We have a Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe), we have a Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), and we have a Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley). Do these ministers have so little clout in cabinet that they cannot convince their cabinet colleagues that farmers and small business people should have access to favourable rates of interest as a matter of right and not as a matter of second choice? Why should farmers and business people be burdened with higher interest rates and be given access to lower rates only if they can prove they are facing imminent bankruptcy? At the same time the Bank of Canada interest rate was coming down, the rate for a Farm Credit Corporation loan was raised from 14 per cent to 16.75 per cent in the budget last fall. If the new interest rates threatened to break the backs of the farmers, the Farm Credit Corporation will grant them loans of 5 per cent. It is no wonder that farmers across the country scratch their heads and wonder what strange and idiotic government policies will emerge tomorrow. The same might be said for thousands of business people across the country.

I think we are all aware that within recent months there was a price war on food commodities which was generated by large chain stores competing with gimmicks for the customers' dollar. According to an article printed in the Farm and Country magazine on January 19, 1982, a recent survey conducted by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture suggests that farmers have borne about 25 per cent of the over-all cost reductions consumers have enjoyed during the recent Ontario supermarket price war. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture food basket survey found that by November 11, three weeks into the price war, average supermarket prices for specific products dropped $2.61 or 6.1 per cent. The farm gate equivalent value for those products in the basket dropped 65 cents. Hence, the results suggest the percentage of savings was taken from farm products, as the Ontario Federation of Agriculture explained in a news release. The largest dip came in the red meat component. Its retail price dropped $1.47 a pound while the farm gate equivalent fell 83 cents.

I also think it should be brought to the attention of the House that in 1979 the cost of fuel to the farmer to work his land, from planting to the elevator, was $7.00 per acre. In 1980, this figure rose to $10 per acre. In 1981, the cost of fuel to the farmer increased to $15.50 per acre.

Diesel fuel in 1979-80 was approximately 40 cents per gallon. Today, it is $1.39 per gallon. Fertilizer costs to the farmer will increase this year from 10 per cent to 12 per cent. Farmers will be forced to cut back on the amount of fertilizer they use. Production will decrease. World food supply increased by only 2 per cent over the past several years, while the world requirements have increased by 3 per cent to 4 per cent. It is interesting to me that in the fall of 1979, the Liberals were worried about high interest rates when they sat in opposition. The present Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Gray) speaking before the Commons Finance Committee on October 30, 1979, had this to say with regard to interest rates at that time:

—your high interest rate policy would slow down the economy: it will mean the loss of thousands of jobs; it will mean increases in the cost of living. It will probably bring the housing and construction industry to a halt, with thousands of jobs being lost in those sectors.

Then he went on to ask the government, "What are you going to do about it?" Then, in the Toronto Star, on February 10, 1980, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was quoted as making the following promise during his election campaign. He said that the government would "manage the economy in such a way that interest rates would in fact come down—because the economy would be administered in a sounder way."

On December 13, the Liberals and New Democratic Party joined forces to defeat the Progressive Conservative budget in the House.

An hon. Member: The people of Canada did.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is hard for you to remember this, but listen.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): I want to read this for the benefit of the two parties sitting side by side, the Liberals and the NDP. The Liberal budget motion, as amended by the NDP, reads:

—this House condemns the government for its budget which will place an unfair and unnecessary burden of higher gasoline prices, higher fuel oil prices, and higher taxes on middle and lower-income Canadians—

An hon. Member: Look ahead, guys!

Mr. Kempling: Same old gang, all socialists under the skin!

Mr. Evans: Don't get upset. They've come as far into the future as 1979. That's big progress!

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): It states further:

—and this House unreservedly condemns the government for its outright betrayal of its election promises to lower interest rates, to cut taxes, and to stimulate the growth of the Canadian economy, without a mandate from the Canadian people for such a reversal.

We came back under a new government, and we had great expectations; but interest rates are higher now than they were at any time then. They have doubled and tripled. I received a letter from one of my farming constituents asking me about this situation. The constituent wrote:

Dear Mr. Scott,

I'm writing to you in desperation, hoping to save our farming business before the bank takes everything we have worked for in the last 20 years. There is no way we can stay in business with the high interest rates and low beef prices, also if we turn to cash crop it's no better. Our only hope for survival is to sell, but there are so many farms for sale it's going to take a while—

It will take a while to sell their farm. He continues:

—while our interest rates keep putting us in debt further. You have probably heard this from many other other beef farmers. I'm hoping you could talk to Mr. Whelan (Agriculture minister). Or what about Lorne Henderson (provincial agriculture)? Even Mr. Trudeau who is responsible for the high bank interest rates—

It is the government which promised us so much. We are all important people, no matter what some would have us believe. The letter goes on to state:

But we are an important part of civilization. Who can live without food? I understand the Quebec farmers are not in dire straits, like the farmers in Ontario (pork and beef). They are subsidized by the Quebec government.

A copy of my constituent's 1980 income tax return was enclosed for my perusal.

An hon. Member: That's a big word, isn't it?

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Yes, it is a big word, that is right. These are some of the things we all faced during our recess from Parliament. We probably should have been here, attending to the nation's business. This is probably why we were not here. People today, not only the farmers, but also all we home owners, are facing conditions which they were never facing before. These conditions have been caused by a government which probably has not faced up to the situations affecting our Canadian people. The Canadian people deserve more than this. The small business community has promised to assist farmers, such as the farmer I just quoted, and I will not divulge the name. He was told to go to his bank manager, which he did. His bank manager in turn took him to the head office in Toronto, but there was no help forthcoming. This man, along with many other people, is supposed to receive help from the Small Business Development Bond. A few moments ago, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) asked who has received help from the Small Business Development Bond. Has the farmer received anything? He has not received anything that I know of.

• (2110)

I have been told that the Farm Credit Corporation encourages the farmer to apply at his bank for a Small Business Development Bond even though it really does not exist. The farmers are being given the runaround by the Department of Agriculture in this slack economy. That is why the people are so unhappy with the present government and make no bones about it. We must do better.

I was interested in the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). He made many helpful suggestions. The government would do well to pay heed to his advice.

There are other ways to help the farmer which this government is neglecting. The government probably does not want to take advice from anyone. It must forget about that and do something for the farmer and the small-business men who today are facing trials and difficulties which they find impossible to surmount on their own.

I plead with the Minister of Agriculture to get more than $50 million for the farmers across Canada. Our farmers need a long-range program. They need to know where to set their sights. They want to be protected from being taken advantage of by the large chains and corporations which peddle their products in order to bring people into the chain stores. We find that in every segment of agriculture today. I beg the minister to approach his colleagues in order to obtain more assistance for the farmer.

Not long ago we heard of an industry being granted $300 million to create 400 jobs in eastern Canada. I am not jealous of that. However, in the last budget only $50 million was allotted to the Farm Credit Corporation when there are 330,000 people employed in farming. Therefore, it does not make much sense to give $300 million to employ 400.

It has been stated that there are probably more federal civil servants today than there are farmers. The farm community is begging for guidance and assistance. I beg the minister to do something for this depressed industry which we depend on so much. If we lose this industry, we may never regain it. This is why we support this bill. It is not that great, but it is something. We look for more before too long.

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to provide us with the name of the person who wrote the letter he just read. If he cannot give his constituent an intelligent answer, perhaps we can.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): I will not provide the name of my constituent. I have it here, but I do not have his permission to give it.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that hon. members opposite have indicated almost to a man that they support Bill C-88 and recognize the significant contribution that the Farm Credit Corporation has made to Canadian agriculture and the Canadian economy during the last 22 years. In total, the Farm Credit Corporation has made some 147,500 loans to farmers, totalling about $5.1 billion. This bill will allow the corporation to assist even more farmers in order to make agriculture a more stable and viable industry.

I know that some members are still concerned with certain aspects of this legislation and the Farm Credit Corporation's operations in general. I will therefore take this opportunity to address some of the concerns that have been expressed throughout this debate.

The hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) mentioned last Thursday that the Farm Credit Corporation's arrears rate is low at 7 per cent. Based on this he suggested that the corporation may not be taking enough risks. Many farmers in my constituency who have had or have sought access to farm credit would take issue with his position. Many who have been turned down, notwithstanding that they are successful farmers who have equity in their land that could be used as well as additional farm credit farms, find that the risks being taken by the corporation are quite high. When you look at the program which gives loans to applicants under 35 years of age, it is difficult to argue that the Farm Credit Corporation is not taking enough risks with these beginning or young farmers.

Statistics show that in 1981 the average total assets of Farm Credit Corporation borrowers after a farm credit loan of about $100,000 were $375,000 compared to a Canadian farm average of $518,700. At the same time, Farm Credit Corporation farm debts averaged $185,000 compared to the national average of $78,000.

Farm Credit Corporation farmers have assets which are 72 per cent of the national average, yet they are carrying about 2.4 times more debt than the national average. Also, farm credit borrowers have a net worth which averaged 50 per cent when compared to a national average of 85 per cent. These statistics undoubtedly indicate that the Farm Credit Corporation is taking risks. In my view and in the view of many of my constituents, the risk factor is already high enough and should not be increased by a substantial amount.

It must also be recognized that the Farm Credit Corporation provides a program of advisory services in addition to credit. Through this program, qualified Farm Credit credit advisers provide financial counselling and assist farmers in monitoring their progress. In this way many problems are detected at early stages of their development and can therefore be more easily resolved. The Farm Credit Corporation must be given credit for keeping its level of arrears at very favourable levels through this program.

The hon. member also suggested that a subsidy for short and intermediate-term credit should be considered as well. I remind the hon. member that when the Farm Improvement Loans Act was last amended, it was indicated that the issues related to intermediate-term credit would be studied by the departmental officials. This study is now in process with consultation taking place with provincial government officials as well as representatives of other financial institutions.

Once the study is completed, the government will be considering its role in the extension of intermediate-term credit in Canada. In the interim, the facilities of the special farm financial assistance program with an interest rebate, as well as those of the Small Business Bond Program, are intended to consolidate debt, including short and intermediate-term debt. Debt consolidation through these facilities will result in lower credit costs to many farmers and will place their debt commitments within their cash flows.

Many members have expressed opinions to the effect that the 1981 November budget did not provide enough funding for the Farm Credit Corporation to help farmers facing bankruptcy. Once again, I must insist that the $50 million provided in the November 12, 1981, budget be assessed in the context of the total budget package. The $50 million must be considered in conjunction with the expansion of the availability of small business bond financing to unincorporated farmers in financial difficulties. The special farm financial assistance program is designed for farmers in financial distress who are unable to obtain adequate assistance through the Small Business Development Bond. The FCC is co-operating with financial institutions which are making small business bond loans to ensure that as many farmers as possible can be assisted through a small business bond, a special FCC loan, or both. When the $50 million is considered in this context, the budget of November 12, 1981, is assisting many more farmers in financial difficulty than the $50 million would, at first glance, suggest. Furthermore, the proposed legislation is intended to enhance the FCC's funding flexibility so that it can more adequately meet the needs of farmers. In this way, the FCC could help to avoid situations such as those which have occurred during the last two years when farmers have faced unusual financial difficulties.

It was suggested by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) that the FCC is a lender of last resort. This is not the case at all. The FCC extends credit mainly to those young, beginning and small expanding farmers who are unable to meet the repayment and security requirements of commercial lending institutions. It is these farmers who, with the favourable terms and conditions of FCC loans, are able to establish units to become the commercial farm operators of tomorrow.

At this point I would digress to indicate that when I first came to the House in 1974, I sat with the agricultural committee and had the privilege of chairing that committee when amendments were being brought forward to the farm credit bills at that time. It was heralded with great glee and great approval that we, in fact, would be proceeding with the kind of legislation that concentrated the efforts of the Farm Credit Corporation on the young farmer so that we could be providing the sort of assistance that would put the risk with the young farmers and induce younger people in Canada to go into farming than was then the case. I think it has been borne out that this has taken place and that there has been rather substantial success enjoyed as a result of the principle embodied in that legislation.

Lenders of last resort would charge these farmers an interest rate that is much higher because they consider these farmers as risky investments. The FCC lends to these farmers at favourable interest rates and has a collection policy which recognizes the cyclical nature of farm incomes and an advisory services program to monitor the farmer's performance. This assists in recognizing problems in early stages of their development, making the probability of success of these borrowers very high.

With the proposed legislative changes, the FCC's flexibility would allow the corporation to assist more farmers to become efficient food producers. This will allow the farming community to continue to provide adequate levels of high quality food at reasonable prices for domestic consumption and export. This thrust is certainly compatible with the thrust of the initial legislation in 1959.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) suggested that the Alberta Heritage Trust Fund could be used as a source of funds for young farmers in Alberta. The proposed amendments enabling the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow on the financial markets does not exclude the Alberta Heritage Trust Fund as a possible source of funding. Indeed, I am advised that FCC officials have had preliminary discussions on this possibility as well as others in the past year.

The hon. member mentioned as well that retiring farmers should be given an incentive to provide financial assistance for beginning farmers. Also, several suggestions were made to establish a system by which retiring farmers could invest the proceeds of their farm sale into FCC.

The possibility of an agri-bond with preferred tax treatment, or a bond similar to the small business bond, was suggested. This is not an idea which comes solely from the hon. member for Bow River. Indeed, I would advise the House that at the most recent meeting in my constituency of our particular party in Ontario, we were successful in having a resolution passed by the party in Ontario suggesting a very similar idea of the agri-bond, affording the opportunity for the diversion of capital gains by means of purchasing an agri-bond which would provide a form of reduced level of income to the person buying the bond. At the same time, it would provide a source of funding for farm credit. I would be most interested if perhaps I myself and the hon. member for Bow River could pursue this issue at the committee stage of this bill to determine whether or not something could be done in that vein.

The proposed legislation would establish the basic authority for the Farm Credit Corporation to do precisely what I have just discussed, and FCC officials are studying possibilities such as farmers' retirement investment plans, income-averaging annuity contracts, agri-bonds, investment certificates, farmers' mortgage guarantees, and others. Other hon. members have requested that the FCC offer loans with interest rates which are renewable with the amortization period, especially during periods when interest rates are fluctuating.

At present, the FCC provides long-term farm credit fixed interest rates for periods of up to 30 years. This has been an important stabilizing factor for farmers with FCC loans. Although farm input costs and incomes have fluctuated greatly in the past, the farmer always knew what the FCC payment would be and thus could make budget projections on this basis.

However, by obtaining funds from the financial markets, the FCC would likely be able to offer loans both at fixed interest rates and at rates which are renewable within the loan amortization period. Although market conditions will prescribe the period for which interest rates can be fixed, it is the FCC's objective to offer loans, I am told, at favourable interest rates fixed for as long a period as possible. This is an important factor in a sector of our economy which is already faced with many unpredictable variables such as weather, disease and the like.

One question often raised by hon. members of the opposition was, "What will the FCC interest rates be with financial market borrowing?" If the FCC borrows funds from the financial markets, it must be recognized that it would be doing so as an agent of Her Majesty. This would allow the FCC to borrow funds at an interest rate comparable to that of the Government of Canada. This favourable cost of funds, combined with the Corporation's variable administrative expenses and its low level of losses, will result in lending rates to farmers which will be below those offered by the commercial institutions.

Furthermore, if a system is established to encourage retiring farmers to invest in the FCC through an agri-bond or other such instrument, and if preferential tax treatment is given to such investors, it would keep the FCC's lending rate at favourable levels.

It must be recognized that funds are often available at reasonable costs in the international markets. When this is the case, the FCC will undoubtedly pursue borrowing from this market to keep its costs of money at a low level.

Also, the FCC will continue to obtain a major portion of its funding from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. All these factors, when considered, will contribute significantly to minimizing FCC's cost of funds and maintaining its lending rate to farmers at reasonable levels.

Several hon. members wondered why the number of members on the FCC Board has been increased from five to seven. Since 1959, the scope and complexity of the Farm Credit Corporation has increased. Lending money to farmers in the current environment requires the development and implementation of accommodating lending policies. With the expansion of the sources of FCC funding, the operation of the Corporation will become more complex. The Corporation could derive many benefits from diverse expertise on its board. Members from the commercial financial sector, the investment community or other areas of expertise would be most useful in providing additional leadership for the Corporation.

Questions have been raised about the level of funding which would come from the CRF and from the financial markets.

In the next few weeks, I am advised that the cabinet will be reviewing issues associated with the total level of funding required by the FCC. It is then that the government will be able to indicate how much assistance can be provided through the farm credit lending program.

It would be unrealistic to incorporate annual levels of funding into any legislation as this would minimize the flexibility that the proposed legislation is to provide to the FCC.

In summary, I wish to emphasize that through the extension of long-term credit, the Farm Credit Corporation has provided a unique and valuable service to Canadian farmers and has ensured that the tradition of the family farm is and shall be maintained. The amendments to the act will allow the corporation to extend even better service to Canadian farmers by providing it with a larger source of funds through the ability to borrow on the financial markets and by increasing its flexibility to make and administer loans more efficiently and effectively.

I am pleased that the members of the opposition are supporting Bill C-88 and I look forward to discussing this bill in detail at the standing committee meetings. I would urge hon. members to take a look at what has been said to date and to consider factors which yet remain to be said, and to consider as well the possibility of advancing this bill to the committee stage so we can consider together approving, amending and pushing forward this bill to answer the demands and concerns that farmers across this nation are expressing to us.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to make a short contribution to this debate. Loans to farmers have been a long-standing debatable point, and I think in the aftermath of the new budget this subject is all the more real and very, very important to the viability of farmers. Perhaps it is the difference between being able to carry on or not. It is a very important topic.

At this point in the debate our official opposition party's support for this bill is quite apparent, and I will not dwell at length on its principal features. Because of the obvious economic situation which is so apparent in our total agricultural economy—particularly because of continued high interest rates and the continuing lack of adequate long-term lending facilities—let me say very simply that there is a recognized need for the Farm Credit Corporation to be permitted to borrow additional funds from public money markets. I do not think there is too much question about that statement. I think we all agree on that.

In addition, I am very pleased to see the provision for the removal of the 35-year age limit for beginning farmer loans under which borrowers can phase in to farming over a five-year period. That is a provision which I think we could have brought in many years ago, and I am glad to see it brought in at this time.

The only other specific aspect about the bill about which I have some concern is proposed Subsection 3(1). It is very short, and I will just read it as follows:

There shall be a corporation to be called the Farm Credit Corporation consisting of seven members, each of whom shall be appointed by the governor in council to hold office during pleasure for a term not exceeding ten years.

Is such stilted phrasing really necessary? I ask that question very sincerely. "During pleasure" to me sounds as if an appropriate or prospective member might be reluctant to perform under such a job description. I single that out because I really question whether the legal advisers of the framers of this bill used appropriate words there. That is why I have singled it out.

I think it was last night that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Ferguson) pointed out, in his contribution to this debate, that the Farm Credit Corporation was originally intended only as a lender of last resort and that the legislation was changed, in his own words, as needed to alter this earlier provision.

I have some personal views on this matter of whether the federal government through any agency, but particularly through the Farm Credit Corporation, should indeed become involved in making loans to farmers in open and public competition with other lending agencies. In other words, I am saying there was some merit—and I think very much merit—in using the original concept of a lender of last resort. Too often I have seen evidence in southern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan of the Farm Credit Corporation's stressing the term "economic unit" too much in assessing an application for funds from the FCC. Too often the FCC has encouraged, especially young farmers, to borrow excessively. If a young farmer wished to borrow to buy a quarter section, the FCC suggested that to make an economic unit, perhaps the young farmer should finance a half section or even more, against, I am sure, the better judgment of that person's father, if he was born and raised on a farm. I have seen evidence of this many times, especially where a young farmer makes application for an FCC loan and is turned down because, in the opinion of a representative of the FCC, he did not have an economic unit and perhaps should borrow for a bigger quantity of land.

I think this has had negative results over the years. Borrowers got into real trouble, especially over the last few years and most especially in 1981 when interest rates were at 20 per cent or, in many cases, considerably higher. I need not draw pictures of that one. Hon. members know what happens to young farmers making annual payments when interest rates get that high. However, perhaps the most serious end result of this program is that there was a definite tendency, as a result of this program of easy money coming from the federal government, toward overinflated land values. There is no doubt in my mind that in western Canada farmland values increased too rapidly. This is easy to say now when, due to a combination of inflation and the current budget, land values have ceased to increase. In fact, in some areas they are beginning to drop back. That is a clear indication of problems associated not only with an overgenerous supply of lending money but also with the current budget.

I must say too that there is a clear association between the fall-off in farm values and the cancellation of income-averaging annuities. Hon. members all know that it was the traditional method adopted by a farmer selling out to his son or to a third party and establishing his own pension for the balance of his life for him and his wife. I think the cancellation of that practice by the budget contributes to a situation in which now over a huge area in the west there are no farm or ranch sales at all. We are going through a difficult period. People who want to retire, and especially those who decide for other reasons to sell their farms or ranches, are so uncertain about the ambiguity of the new budget that they feel that the proper course is to do nothing and to wait for further clarification of some of these provisions.

The one which bothers most of them is the forward-averaging provision in the budget. This one is exceedingly difficult to understand. In spite of the fact that the policy branch of the Department of Finance has come out with a model attempting to explain how that forward averaging will work, there is still a sense of distrust and bitterness because of the abrupt cancellation of the well accepted and traditional method of setting up income-averaging annuities for the retirement of farmers and ranchers.

This leads me to another comment I would like to make which concerns the concept of establishing an income-averaging trust proposal. Some hon. members will remember this idea. It was proposed two or three years ago, or perhaps even earlier, by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association as a means of allowing individual cattle producers to set up their own stabilization program on an individual basis. It was just a common sense proposal which allowed producers to use the good years in the cattle business to pay for the bad years. When producers had a good year and sold their cattle at above average traditional prices, they could invest their money in personal trusts without paying taxes on them until they had a bad year, and then they would withdraw funds and pay their taxes in the year they used those funds. I call this a good, common sense arrangement.

This proposal has been placed before the policy branch of the Department of Finance, so officials are well aware of it as is the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). In view of the problems we are having at present with the forward-averaging concept that was proposed in the budget and the cancellation of the income-averaging annuity, perhaps it is high time that we looked at a concept which would allow the farmer, the rancher, or anyone in any branch of agriculture to set up a private stabilization fund. I propose this in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, and I think we should look into it.

Another concept that has been suggested is the use of the same funds, from the broad area of agriculture, by the Farm Credit Corporation. There would be distinct advantages in this. For every farmer that has to borrow capital, generally speaking there are perhaps three or four or even five times as many older, affluent farmers who have gone through the process of building up their operation and who now have some money to invest. They may put it in a term deposit these days when interest rates are so high, but I think they would be very pleased to see their money go into a special Farm Credit Corporation fund knowing that it would help younger farmers to borrow money at more attractive interest rates. I think that suggestion could be adopted with very good results.

I should like to comment on two meetings of cattlemen which occurred recently, Mr. Speaker, one of which I attended last week and one about which I heard a great deal. The Minister of Agriculture knows about both of them. I was not able to attend the meeting held in Hanna where the minister was the guest speaker at night. This meeting commenced at 8.30 in the morning and approximately 500 people, mostly cattlemen, attended. It was well organized by a couple of district agriculturalists and people in the Hanna community. Able spokesmen from different areas of the cattle industry addressed it. One was my old friend, whom the minister knows, from the University of Saskatchewan, Professor Red Williams. The Minister of Agriculture for Alberta, Dallas Schmidt and a number of other highly qualified people, were also on the program.

Even though the minister did not arrive until toward the end of the meeting, I am sure he knows about it. His able representative Jim Lockhart in Alberta was there and I am sure has given him a full report of the meeting and of the atmosphere that prevailed. The feeling that came through was that the cattle industry in Alberta was not ready for the minister's solution, which is to blame all our troubles on the marketing system. That is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. That message came through the meeting over and over again.

The other meeting, the annual meeting of the Western Stock Growers Association, was held in Red Deer and lasted three days. That association has been meeting in annual convention for well over 80 years. The main subject of debate at that meeting, which did not draw such a big crowd, was stabilization of the industry. The day before the convention started, the board of directors put together a resolution which said rather bluntly that cattlemen in Alberta wanted no part of any stabilization program for the industry that included taxpayers' money from any government. That was a very hard line position to take. I contributed my personal comments to the debate and said that in my opinion, partly because of the very critical situation in Ontario, the federal stabilization legislation that is on the books should be used in the crisis in the cattle industry.

The minister has heard me say in the House that three participants should be involved in this—the federal government using its own legislation, the governments of the cattle provinces which essentially are B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario, and there is even some interest from the maritimes, and the cattle producers themselves. I suggested that it is still possible to make a stabilization pay-out for 1981 under that legislation. Within a week or two we should know what the average market price was for last year. The minister has discretionary powers in this respect. If 90 per cent will not do it, then 95 per cent might. That is what the minister said during an opposition day debate in the House. In fact, he has even gone higher with a precedent for it. I followed that suggestion by saying that the participation of cattlemen would take many months to come about. But surely that is the logical solution.

I appreciate that the minister is here tonight and is listening to my remarks. Once again I would ask him to give some consideration to the larger picture, to the long-range solution of the crisis in the cattle industry today. In my opinion, it is the worst in 30 years. Perhaps a worse situation occurred in February, 1952, when foot and mouth disease broke out around Regina. Overnight, the United States government placed a total embargo on cattle going to the United States. Prices for fed cattle, feeder cattle and everything dropped by half.

That is some of the background of the first go-around on the marketing board debate which only occurred in western Canada. It was promoted in Manitoba by Mr. Jake Schultz, in Saskatchewan by Joe Phelps and in Alberta by Roy Marler and a poultryman called Mr. Kappler. At that time there was a great debate going on because of unsatisfactory cattle prices. It is interesting that the governments of the day, federal or provincial, were not involved.

I remind the minister of this bit of history and ask him to look again at the crisis that exists in the cattle industry today. Let us work to find a different solution than bringing in a board with supply-management powers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a little less than ten minutes in which to close this debate. I should like to begin by saying that I am deeply concerned about the state of agriculture in this country. Most hon. members in the House and most people in my constituency know of my interest in agriculture over the years. I come from the agricultural area of southern Manitoba and I have been actively involved in a farm operation. At the present time agriculture is faced with one of the worst crises and most difficult situations in a long time. We see a great deal of balkanization in the country between provinces, in some places between commodity groups and even between sectors within those commodity groups. We have a system of top-loading in which provinces literally compete with each other in terms of attracting particular parts of the agricultural industry. The effect of top-loading is that income in some cases does not come from the marketplace where it should, but comes from provincial governments which, in most cases, are willing and able to finance and support the various agricultural programs within their own provinces. This is very disconcerting for a country with our potential, not only to supply food for ourselves but to make agriculture the number one export earner. Our transportation system is slowly grinding to a halt, literally, and we are not able to ship the amount of grain to our ports that we should be. To top it all off, the marketing system in a good many cases is controlled. It is very rigid, and too often it does not allow new young farmers with new ideas into the business.

In terms of Canadian agriculture as far as the world is concerned, the main product we export at the present time is grain. We are a net importer of many agricultural commodities. Certainly this demonstrates the difficulty with which agriculture is faced. If it were not for grain and oilseed products, the country would be a net importer of most agricultural products and, in effect, we would end up with a deficit. The danger is that Canadian agriculture will lose its competitive advantage in world markets.

The problem lies in many, many areas, but part of the problem lies with the government and with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who has been the minister for a long time. There is no imagination in terms of attracting new people to the agricultural industry, of devising a food strategy or of providing direction for agriculture. At the present time the only display of imagination is the Minister of Agriculture trotting around the country, attempting to obtain support for a beef marketing board which the majority of Canadian producers do not want. It is the kind of wasted energy we see, wasted energy looking inward at how to solve our problem or how to quarter up the market within the country, without paying any attention to servicing a large export market. It boils down to lost opportunities for Canadian farmers and for the tremendous number of people who service agriculture. Service is by far the largest component of any economy, that is the service sector surrounding agriculture and the food industry. It boils down to lost opportunities for all these particular areas.

We are not aggressive enough. Any of us who have had the opportunity or the privilege of travelling outside the country and talking to people in other lands have heard that Canadians are not aggressive enough. Most often we take a back seat to the United States. There should be no reason for this. Part of the leadership falls on the shoulders of the Minister of Agriculture, and that leadership is not forthcoming.

We should be looking at a new dynamic vision of agriculture in the west, and we are not doing it. There is absolutely no question in most people's minds that the decade of the seventies was the decade of oil. The decade of the eighties, and probably the decade of the nineties, will be decades of agriculture, food and water, but we are not addressing the problems at the present time. Infrastructure must be in place, but it is not in place at the present time to provide a springboard from which to set the direction and the parameters for what must be a new and dynamic direction as far as agriculture is concerned, especially in western Canada.

I say this because I know western Canadian agriculture, but there should be an infrastructure in place for agriculture in the maritimes, Quebec and Ontario. We must be more forward-looking, but obviously we are not. Because of this, we will suffer as a country. We must ensure the movement of agricultural products for the decade of the eighties and into the decade of the nineties. This is something we are not addressing as an industry. Some commodity groups are attempting to address it but the industry is not, primarily because there is no agricultural strategy which allows such an input and provides a structure for that type of direction.

If we are to have dynamic agriculture over the next number of years, there must be less government involvement. The private sector is really the engine which fuels this great industry. It must be allowed the freedom to operate, but that is not the case at the present time. There must be aggressive marketing by private agricultural firms in Canada. This is not happening at the present time because the federal government seems intent on imposing itself in too many areas of the agricultural sector. The private sector must be the main engine or the main driving force behind a new dynamic agriculture.

The amendments concerning the Farm Credit Corporation which we have been debating are strictly band-aid measures. They are really meant to cover up a very serious problem which we are not addressing, the problem of farm income. Rather than addressing it, we are putting band-aids on the particular problem. Until a clear direction is established, we cannot become what we must be, that is, a great agricultural exporting nation which can provide for its farmers and can provide desperately-needed outside money for its gross national product as well as a healthy sector for secondary manufacturing and agriculture. Until we do this, we will not realize the potential of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Adjournment Debate

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS—CALCULATION OF PROVINCIAL REVENUES. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW FORMULA

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, during Oral Question Period on January 29, I put two questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). In my first question I wanted the minister to confirm or deny a front-page, Toronto Star story which reported revised Department of Finance calculations that provincial revenues for health, post-secondary education and other vital services will be slashed on a net basis by $4.5 billion over the next five years. That estimate is twice the size of the reduction projected in the minister's budget of November 12.

In reply to my first question, the minister claimed not to have seen the Toronto Star article to which I had referred and declined to comment on the figures contained in it. But he said that the proposals in his budget would significantly improve the fiscal position of provinces during the course of the next five years. These were the words he more or less used. I am appalled that the minister would hold to the position that his budget will not reduce provincial revenues but will actually increase them. The minister is either deceiving himself or is misleading the people of Canada about the true impact of his proposals. My own assessment conforms with that of syndicated columnist Richard Gwyn who wrote the following in The Ottawa Citizen just before Christmas:

MacEachen doesn't know what he's doing.

Certainly in the area of fiscal transfers, the minister has already admitted to making a multimillion-dollar error in calculating the impact of his budget on provincial revenues.

On budget night, November 12, 1981, the minister stated that the net cutbacks in federal grants for such services as medicare and post-secondary education would be $1.9 billion. The ink had hardly dried on the budget documents when the minister was compelled to confess on November 23, just 11 days later, that the Department of Finance had underestimated the net cutbacks by $660 million. Accordingly, the relevant projection was revised upwards to $2.6 billion. Now we discover after a colossal mistake has already been made and admitted, that the real loss in provincial revenues will be nearly twice that amount, that is twice the revised figure of $2.6 billion. The provinces will receive $4.5 billion less than they would have received under the current formula.

The government's fiscal plans are as fraught with potential catastrophe as they are the product of sheer incompetence. Not in the last half century have we seen a more shoddy exercise in public policymaking in this country.

What we have here is a government hellbent on starving the provinces of revenue badly needed to provide essential services to their people at a time when we have the worst and the deepest recession since the great depression of the 1930s.

If allowed to go unchecked, those cuts will force many parts of Canada to live with a substantially reduced quality of health care and education. The provinces will be strong-armed into compromising the quality the range and the availability of health services, all the way from elective surgery to hospital beds to highly trained medical and nursing staffs. The universities, for their part, will be forced both to cut or truncate important academic and training programs and to hike tuition fees.

As a maritimer, I am shattered by the implications of what the government is intending to do. The large and wealthy provinces, like Alberta and Ontario, may well be able to absorb the extra costs of medicare and higher education. But the smaller and less advantaged provinces, such as my own, Prince Edward Island, would be crippled under the weight of the added burden. The consequence will be a return to the era when the level of essential services varied widely and wildly from province to province depending on the tax resources of the place in question. Gone will be the practice which we in Canada have come to take for granted of providing a basic level of social services all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific, regardless of a province's size or its access to tax revenue.

The November 12 budget may well mark the end of the concept that all Canadians, no matter where they live, should have access to a minimum level of social services funded by both levels of government in a spirit of partnership and co-operation. That a fellow maritimer in the person of the Minister of Finance should be the man to herald the new era brings great sorrow to my heart.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Toronto Star article to which the hon. member's question refers, indicates a $4.5 billion cutback in transfers to the provinces. It is not my intention to engage in debate over these numbers. However, a net reduction in federal transfers to provinces under EPF of about $4.5 billion over the coming five years would be consistent with the long-standing position taken by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

In his October, 1980, budget the minister indicated that the federal government expected to achieve net savings in the social affairs envelope beginning in 1982-83. The budget noted these savings were expected to include reductions in federal transfers to provinces in areas coming under provincial jurisdiction. In response to a question in the House on February 25, 1981, the minister further indicated that he would like to achieve savings of $500 million in 1982-83, and $1 billion in 1983-84 in respect of transfers to provinces within the social affairs envelope.

In terms of the budget, the $1 billion saving in 1983-84 is to be on a continuing basis and therefore represents about $4.5 billion over five years. This reduction was never hidden or obscured in public statements. Indeed, the minister stated this in his November, 1981 budget paper entitled "Fiscal Arrangements in the Eighties—Proposals of the Government of Canada."

However, in actual fact, the reduction in federal transfers under the proposed fiscal arrangements will be significantly less than $4.5 billion. Over five years the elimination of compensation for the 1972 revenue guarantee represents some $5.3 billion. Taken together with the proposal to make EPF contributions equal per capita, the total adjustment is $5.9 billion. However, the budget tax changes will significantly increase provincial income tax revenues, thereby offsetting some of the reduction in these transfers. Provincial revenues would increase by about $2.7 billion due to these tax rate changes, and the net effect of the fiscal arrangements proposals and the budget tax changes will account for only $3.3 billion, Mr. Speaker.

More generally, however, I would draw the House's attention to the increased revenues provinces will receive as a result of the federal government's fiscal arrangements proposals and budget changes. In 1981-82 they are estimated to be $15.2 billion, while in 1986-87 at the end of the five-year period they will be $26.5 billion, an annual rate of growth of about 12 per cent, which provides a stable and generous source of revenues to the provinces in the years ahead.

I should add that under the old arrangement the province of Prince Edward Island received $600 million over the past five years, whereas in the coming five years the province will receive $1.1 billion, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE—GOVERNMENT AID TO PRODUCERS. (B) APPLICATION OF LOWER INTEREST RATES. (C) SHORT-TERM CREDIT

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to refer to a question I raised with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) back on June 18. It related to the problems that farmers were and are still having with interest rates. By way of background I think it needs to be said, and said again so that people understand, that farm finance is a very important part of not only farmers' activities, but the total economy, because without a productive agricultural sector the whole system suffers and we end up spending more of our efforts and disposable income on food.

I tried to point out at the time to the Prime Minister that there were some alternate methods available which could in fact lower the cost of short-term financing to farmers, and I sent a note to him after question period asking him if he would like to see a study done by a Calgary group of consultants pointing out the differences in some of the farm financing that Americans have available to them as opposed to what we have here in Canada.

It is not that we want to ape the Americans or anything like that, but the point is that they are our closest neighbours and therefore our closest competitors, and unless our agriculture remains competitive with them we will find ourselves in a very serious situation very quickly. I pointed out the problem I guess some eight months ago and it has not changed very significantly. We find farmers going out of production because of the uncertainties associated with interest rates and the economy. This is not so much uncertainty arising from market or climatic conditions as uncertainty concerning interest rates.

In many cases, to point out the seriousness of the problem, interest rates are the largest single expense of many farmers today. It is a larger expense than seed, repair, or fuel expenses, and it is larger than wages. In my community today, I am aware of many cases where it is the largest single expense of farmers, so it is a very serious matter. I would again urge the government to take a look at some of the areas available to farmers to help in lowering interest costs. Without this, we will lose production. Many people fail to see, as I fail to see, how raising interest rates and chasing people out of business will help the inflation rate. Inevitably, that leads to a rise in the cost of food and, again, causes a rise in inflation.

I think the government has an obligation, not only to the farming community, but also to the total economy, particularly to consumers, to take a look at some of these suggestions. I would very quickly like to suggest three areas in which the government can do something.

First, the government should attempt to establish a fixed rate of financing for farmers for a production period, whether it be a six-month period for feeding livestock or a six-month to nine-month period for producing a crop. I have spoken to enough bankers and producers to know that it would be useful to have a one-year fixed period on mortgages for houses. Admittedly, this would not do anything toward lowering the cost of interest, but it would at least take away uncertainty. Then, if a producer wanted to go on a budget for a certain production period he would know that his interest rates were pegged. There would not be situations, such as we have had in the past, where people would buy cattle at 12 per cent or 13 per cent but would then be paying 20 per cent or 22 per cent before they were finished feeding those cattle. That kind of budgeting causes very serious problems for people because they do not know what the interest rate will be. Therefore, if we could fix the interest rate for the production period it would be of assistance to the farming community. I think the government could show some leadership in that area.

The second point I would like to make this evening is that the small business bond, as it is now called, has been the cheapest way for the government to create jobs. This has been pointed out to me in conversations I have had with several people from different organizations. It has been cheaper than the cost of creating jobs through programs such as DREE or the Canada Community Development Program. The Small Business Development Bond would greatly assist farmers. We have heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) say that the banks should bleed a little, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has said that the banks are scandalous and should be sued because of their lending practices.

The criteria for qualification under the Small Business Development Bond should be relaxed, and we welcome the relaxation in the budget which will make it available to unincorporated businesses and small farmers. However, we also regret the provision which puts a financial difficulty constraint so that loans are only given to people in financial difficulty. However, that is another concept which could be expanded and would be of great usefulness in farm financing in the short run.

The last suggestion I would like to make to the government is something to which I made reference in my letter to the Prime Minister dated July 6. I received a reply on September 1 from the Minister of Finance. I made these four suggestions in that letter: the establishment of production credit associations, banker acceptance financing, the establishment of local or smaller central banks, and the development of federal land banks.

Specifically, I would like to refer very briefly to what is known in the States as production credit associations. As I understand, they were set up early in the century and were initially established through a certain amount of funding by the federal government. One could not borrow unless one had a share, and agreed to leave in a certain amount of money. Once the loan was repaid, one still had to leave in one's equity for a period of two years with no accrued interest. However, if one did not borrow from the production credit association for a period of two years, one's equity was then changed so that one could earn interest on it.

Over a period of years all the equity has been paid back to the federal government in the United States and those associations now operate on their own. At the time when this study was carried out, in the early part of 1981, financing was available to farmers and cattlemen in Colorado at rates of about 16 per cent, while the comparable interest rate in Canada would have been in the 22 per cent to 23 per cent range.

Perhaps this is something which would not immediately help our farmers. It would be one step the government could take to at least give some hope to producers that something is coming down the road to encourage them to stay in business. They would know the government cared enough about them to look at some of these credit instruments that could make farm short-run or short-term credit available to them at fixed rates, or possibly lower rates, as I suggested through expansion of the small business bond.

The government could look at what the United States government is doing, specifically in the production credit association. Canadian farmers could then enjoy the same interest rates as American farmers. This would make them not only more competitive with American farmers but more productive and more competitive on a world scale. Canadian agriculture would be better able to compete. It would not only add to our exports, help our balance of payments and increase the demand on our Canadian dollar, but would also help interest rates at home.

Those are three suggestions I make to the government. I hope the parliamentary secretary will not merely tell us what is being done in the budget. We know that the only direct assistance in the budget, as far as interest rates are concerned, amounts to $15 per farmer. I hope that is not what he says because the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is quickly becoming known as the "$15 minister."

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the comments just made by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), it is indeed a coincidence, because when he asked for this last minute or so-called late show debate, he could not have known that the Farm Credit Corporation bill would now have been tabled in the House and considered for more than a week. Obviously, the $50 million is supposed to help farmers who are in a very tight situation and not every farmer who happens to contract a loan. I would rather not discuss the figures just mentioned by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette, but I can inform him that we are talking about much more than just $15 per farmer. Of course, it would average at $15 per farmer throughout the country, but in actual fact, when a farmer contracts a $200,000 loan, he will get $28,000, and not $15, over a two-year period, because instead of paying 18.75 per cent interest, he will be paying 11.75 per cent. It is quite true that the number of farmers experiencing serious financial problems is much greater than the number indicated in the bankruptcy statistics, and it should be recognized that this is a minority. In fact, farmers who sell their produce according to structured supply management or marketing plans are better able to cope with rising interest rates.

The manner in which they are paid often helps in reducing their interest payments. The fact that net farm income is expected to increase by 20 per cent makes it fairly obvious that present interest rates do not lead to total losses for all farmers. I may also point out, Mr. Speaker, that net farm income is calculated after deduction of all interest payments. Another important point is that the farmers who are losing their farms usually have a high debt ratio owing to recent purchase of the farm itself or of farmland, buildings or implements. The financial situation of these farmers is very precarious and can very easily lead to defaults on payments, especially if the market is depressed or interest rates increase or are allowed to float, as they are at the present time. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, government assistance to farmers includes more than this particular FCC program. People usually fail to realize that the reduced interest rates on small business bonds which is now 5 per cent below the normal rate for people who are in serious difficulty actually constitutes a loss of revenue for the government. Through the Income Tax Act, the government has ordered that a substantial part of the interest collected by banks and similar lending institutions on small business bonds shall not be considered taxable income. Since normally, chartered banks pay about 50 per cent tax on their net income, they can now afford to reduce their normal interest rates by half in so far as their income from interests is not taxable.

THE BUDGET—PROVISIONS AFFECTING PENSIONERS. (B) TAXPAYER STATISTICS. (C) MINISTER'S BUDGETARY STATEMENTS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to expand upon some remarks I made to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) when addressing a question to him on January 27, 1982 with respect to the tax measures affecting pensioners.

Briefly stated, Mr. Speaker, the budget tax measures proposed to deprive the pension recipient who invests some of that pension money and some of his or her other income in a registered retirement savings plan of the $1,000 deduction now available in respect of pension income. This same deduction would be lost to a taxpayer who provides payments in respect of registered retirement savings plans for his or her spouse.

This tax measure, Mr. Speaker, should be put in the context of the plight of all Canadian taxpayers. There are approximately 14.6 million taxpayers in Canada, according to 1979 statistics. Of that number, 1.1 million were receiving pension income and 1.5 million were over 65 years of age. The Minister of Finance tells us in his statistical analysis for the 1982 and subsequent taxation years that there will be approximately 16.5 million taxpayers. He says that 12 million of those 16.5 million taxpayers will pay less tax than they did in the previous 1980 and 1981 taxation years, and 3.5 million will pay the same tax. He says that only 800,000 people will pay more tax. But we discount those statistics, Mr. Speaker, and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) pointed out in this very House some of the inaccuracies of those statistics.

As I have indicated, we have over a million persons in Canada receiving pension income and they may be affected by this tax measure which I questioned in the House on January 27, 1982. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, what will happen to those taxpayers is that they will be losing the $1,000 deduction that is now available to them because they have contributed to registered retirement savings plans and they will have their incomes increased so that more taxes will result.

What are we talking about with respect to this class of taxpayer, Mr. Speaker? Are we talking about executives who have received tremendous incomes, have now retired and engage in consulting and other work and are receiving large amounts of money in fees and other forms of income? No. For the most part we are talking about approximately one million Canadians who have retired from the Armed Forces, for example, at a very early age on a very modest pension. Perhaps they have retired from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or from the provincial or federal public service or from a variety of other employment which resulted in very modest pension allowances. What they tried to do in most cases was to utilize that very modest pension and whatever other income they could acquire to provide for themselves in their later years, the years in which they would have no income on which to maintain themselves. Then the minister, in the name of equity, has struck out at these kinds of taxpayers and has eliminated an exemption upon which they rely.

What would cause the Minister of Finance to take such action, Mr. Speaker? He said in his documents accompanying the budget that his aim was to introduce tax measures which would improve the fairness and equity of the tax system. He also said that he wished to enhance the general incentives for individuals to work and to save and to invest. Mr. Speaker, to take away from those people who are in their later years and are trying to save funds to take care of their old age when they will be unable to earn money is hardly bringing equity to taxpayers and it is hardly benefiting the people of Canada.

In 1980, when the Minister of Finance introduced his budget in this House, he said that Canada had one of the best tax systems in the world. He said that Canada's individual and corporate taxes are lower than many other industrialized nations, including the United States.

• (2225)

Approximately one year later, in November of 1981, when he introduced the current budget, he said:

> Many Canadians find our tax system unfair, and I agree with them. They realize that taxes are necessary to pay for important government services, but they feel that rates of tax are too high. They sense that others, the well-advised or the wealthy, very often pay less than their fair share.

Surely the Minister of Finance could not have been including in that group of well-advised and wealthy taxpayers those Canadians who are retired on modest pensions and are trying to build up funds to provide for their old age and are using the $1,000 exemption now provided to do that.

Time and time again throughout our examination of this budget we have found that the Minister of Finance was wrong and misleading the people of Canada with his taxation statistics. He said, as I indicated tonight—and as he has said two or three times in the House—that 12 million Canadians will pay less taxes in the ensuing tax years. There are approximately seven million Canadians whose health benefit plans will be taxed under the current proposals. I refer to the seven million Canadians who are now in receipt of benefits from their employers in respect of health benefit plans. There are 45,000 transportation workers who will be taxed on their passes. There will be 60,000 who will receive less in child tax credits than before. When the minister tries to tell us there are 12 million Canadians who will pay less taxes, we do not believe him. We do not believe he is sincere about his tax measures. We do not believe there is equity in this budget, and we want him to admit he is wrong on these matters.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has raised several questions relating to the budget. First, he questions the impact the change in eligibility for the $1,000 pension income deduction will have on retired Canadians. The budget proposed that this $1,000 deduction be denied where the individual is still making contributions to an RRSP. This rule was intended to disallow the deduction in a case where a taxpayer was not really retired. For example, a fairly common practice was for an individual to retire on a pension, take another job, and transfer all but $1,000 of his pension income tax-free into an RRSP. The $1,000 of pension income that was not transferred to his RRSP would then be available tax-free because it would be fully sheltered by the $1,000 pension income deduction. This was an inappropriate use of the pension income deduction.

Of course, the intention of this measure was not to penalize Canadians who are genuinely retired. Thus, as the minister stated in the House last week in reply to the original question, he "will certainly listen to the hon. member's representations very carefully when we have those matters before the committee of the House."

The hon. member went on to raise a second question as to the number of taxpayers who will gain or lose according to the budget proposals. I do not wish to repeat the original answer of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), which was clear and concise. Let me, however, add one further point. It is the case that most individuals are, on balance, better off as a result of the budget, even though specific items may affect them adversely. For example, the ability to claim an extra $200 federal tax cut for one-earner couples will in many cases more than outweigh the impact of, say, $35 tax payable on an extra $100 of taxable income resulting from the taxation of employer contributions to a private health or dental plan. Indeed, it is precisely such over-all calculations that underlie the figures referred to by the minister and tabled as supplementary information to his budget.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CONTENT QUOTAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, Canada's deficit in auto parts trade with the United States is approaching $4.5 billion, a 16½ per cent increase over 1980, which in itself was a previous record year. Already unemployment in the auto parts industry is running at a staggering 34 per cent, with every indication that this rate will become worse. Time is running out for Canada's auto parts industry. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce do now recognize the serious inequitable imbalance inflicted upon the auto parts industry and that he take immediate action to implement Canadian content quotas on all motor vehicles sold in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. The desperate farmers of Canada should quit whatever type of farming they are engaged in and take up poultry farming. The Right Hon. Prime Minister weighs about 160 pounds. Canadians pay him $105,000 per annum. That is $656.25 per pound per year to rent this turkey. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That this House cancel this rental contract immediately.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CROWN CORPORATIONS

REPORTED EXPLOITATION OF FEMALE LABOUR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I also rise under Standing Order 43. Last night the program "Fifth Estate" revealed that some Crown corporations, including Air Canada, are grossly exploiting hundreds of thousands of women workers who are doing piecework in their homes. In one example, a woman who had to weave a drawstring through a plastic bag was paid $4 for every 1,000 bags. She said she usually could complete only 100 bags a day. This is a decadent labour practice which exploits women who are poor, particularly immigrant women. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That the Minister of Labour ensure that these women and all workers in the home receive the same minimum wage as every other Canadian worker who comes under federal jurisdiction.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

DELAY IN REPLACING MISSING PENSION CHEQUES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, it has been reported to me that all too often complete mail bags of Canada Pension Plan cheques go missing. When this happens, it takes Supply and Services 90 days to replace missing cheques, thus working a real hardship on pensioners. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare meet with the Minister of Supply and Services in order to investigate this serious matter and find a more dependable way of preventing the hardship of those pensioners missing their cheques.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STATUS OF WOMEN

MINISTER'S SPEECH ON SELF-HELP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Earlier this week the minister responsible for the status of women commented in a speech that the federal government is not going to help women who won't help themselves. In view of this callous attitude, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That the minister contact the 600,000 elderly women who cannot afford the basic necessities of life due to an inadequate pension system, and personally give them her message.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO GUARANTEE MATERNITY LEAVE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the recent comments by the minister responsible for the status of women that fully paid maternity leave "is not expensive" and that maternity leave should not be limited to women with the protection of a negotiated contract, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House instruct the government to table legislation that will guarantee to women workers fully paid maternity leave, totally funded under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

IMPRISONMENT OF VASYL OVSIYENKO BY SOVIET UNION AUTHORITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, the Soviet Union, having failed to live up to its commitments under the Helsinki Accord to respect the rights of all persons, including those of its national minorities, has recently imprisoned without just cause and deprived of his rights, Vasyl Ovsiyenko, who is one of the Ukrainian Helsinki Observer Group. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That this House condemn the Soviet Union for failing to live up to the terms of the Helsinki Accord respecting the rights of individuals and national minorities and urge the Soviet Union to cease all proceedings against Mr. Vasyl Ovsiyenko and grant his request for permission to emigrate.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

EMPLOYMENT

ENACTMENT OF AFFIRMATIVE ACTION LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the government promised affirmative action legislation in the throne speech given in April of 1980, and given the fact that we have yet to see any concrete action toward affirmative action, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That the government immediately table legislation calling for affirmative action in both the private and public sectors.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RAILWAYS

CONDITION PRECEDENT TO CHANGING OF CROWSNEST PASS RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the suggested change in statutory Crow rates opens the door to change in other economic related acts, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That along with any proposed legislation attempting to change the Crow rate should also be included a clause which removes the mineral rights bestowed on the CPR in 1881.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SECRECY SURROUNDING SALARIES PAID TO SENIOR OFFICERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the government forthwith end the fiction of maintaining secrecy about salaries paid to the senior officers of Crown corporations and that the government adopt the philosophy that, if they are paid with public moneys, the public has a right to know.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENTAL DELAY IN PROCESSING CLAIMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the delays encountered by the veterans of Canada in having their claims for benefit processed by the Department of Veterans Affairs are intolerable. There can be no justification at all for veterans having to wait years while the bureaucracy, which may well be overworked, attempts to struggle with their heavy load. I therefore move on behalf of my absent colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That the Minister of Veterans Affairs immediately take whatever steps are necessary to reduce the waiting period for veterans' claims and to review veterans legislation now to ensure that it adequately responds to the needs of today's society in all of its ramifications.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SOCIAL SCIENCE

FUNDING FOR SOCIAL SCIENCES AND HUMANITIES RESEARCH COUNCIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. A free and independent research community is absolutely essential to Canada's growth. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the recent announcement of the government's five-year plan for the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, which for the first time introduces the concept of government directed strategic themes into the area of funding of research, in other words, under the guise of Canadianization, forces that council to begin to study only those matters which are important to the Liberal Party, that this manipulation of Canadian independent thought be soundly condemned by this House.

That the federal government encourage more co-operation among business, government, unions and educational institutions by establishing industrial training advisory boards in order to achieve more on-the-job training.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

TAXATION OF MINERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue who said in this House the other day, in reference to the province of Newfoundland, that the budget he is defending is "better for Newfoundland than any other part of the country." He went on to say, "By far the majority of the people of Newfoundland will see their incomes improve as a result of the budget."

My question to the Minister of National Revenue is quite precise. I want to ask him whether he includes among those citizens of Newfoundland and Labrador whose position will be improved the nearly 4,000 miners in his own constituency around Labrador City and Wabush who face tax increases on average of $600 in 1982, more than $2,000 in 1983 and nearly $3,000 in 1984. Does he believe these constituents of his are helped by this budget, which will increase their tax bills by those amounts?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the miners in Labrador City and Wabush and other miners north of sixty know exactly what this budget has done for them. The budget continues the remission order which remits taxes on northern benefits. The north is the only part of Canada for which this was done. It was done particularly for the north because this government recognizes the special needs of people who live and work in the north. This is what this budget did for people who live in the north.

Let me put a few other facts on the record for the right hon. member. I told him before that there are about 250,000 people in Newfoundland who will benefit, and that is accurate. There is a total of 19,000 families of four.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Rompkey: Of these families, 12,000 will save—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Rompkey: Hon. members opposite do not want to hear the figures. They do not want to hear the truth. Twelve thousand families will save $2 million, or $164 each. Of those families earning $15,000, 4,600 will not have to pay any tax at all. That is the effect of this budget in Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROJECTION OF TAX PAYMENTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, hidden away behind all that obfuscation is the fact the minister well knows that his colleague, the Minister of Finance, has described the remission order dealing with northern employees, and I quote the budget papers, "hard to justify", and has indicated that he will be ending that remission order by January of next year. I will ask the minister specific questions having to do with figures provided by two major employers employing some 4,000 miners in Labrador City and Wabush in his constituency. Does he accept that the net impact on an average tax-paying miner in Labrador City or Wabush in 1982 with the remission order will be a $603 increase? Does he accept that after the remission order is removed in 1983, there will be a tax increase of $2,043 for each miner there?

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Clark: Does he agree and does he accept that it will cost in the neighbourhood of $2,991 per employee in Wabush and in Labrador City after the government carries through its intention to end this remission order and after it brings through its budget? If he does not believe that, perhaps he will speak to the brother of his colleague, the hon. member for Manicouagan, who is the public relations director for one of the companies whose figures we are quoting here, and perhaps he will report to his constituents and then come back to the House of Commons and tell us just how badly his constituents will be hurt by the budget which he is bringing down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I hope the right hon. member is not getting his figures from another candidate for the leadership of the Conservative Party, because I can tell the right hon. member that that particular man, who is a very major employer in Labrador City, feels very good about this remission order and, indeed, lobbied for it very strongly. The fact is that the remission order is in place. This government has kept faith with people in the north, and that cannot be denied.

As far as obfuscation is concerned, I do not accept the figures cited by the right hon. member today any more than I accepted the way he put forward his figures last week. He told us that there are 200,000 taxpayers in Newfoundland, and that is true. What he neglected to tell the people was the difference between taxpayers and tax filers. The fact is there are more tax filers than there are taxpayers.

• (1420)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: You are making our point.

Mr. Rompkey: The majority of people will benefit. These are the facts, Madam Speaker, and the obfuscation is on that side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT TAX REMISSION ORDER BE CONTINUED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, may I thank the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Chénier: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I am coming to Timmins next. Because the Liberal member elected for Timmins refuses to speak for the people of Timmins—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chénier: You don't speak for anybody!

Mr. Clark: The minister has confirmed—

Mr. Chénier: Stay with it, Joe.

Mr. Clark: —that the statement made by the Minister of Finance in the House proposing to cut taxes by adding to the number of taxpayers some six million Canadians who do not now pay tax, was a misleading statement.

Let me say to the minister, by the way, that if he has better figures, let him present them to the House.

In relation to the interdepartmental committee that has been established to look at the question of the north and whether this government is going to end the remission order, will the Minister of National Revenue or his colleague, the Minister of State for Mines, tell the House whether the government is—

Mr. Chénier: A good speech, Joe.

Mr. Clark: The hon. member for Timmins interrupts again, Madam Speaker. Perhaps he would like to speak for his constituents instead of blindly defending—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. This is going to turn into a shouting match if I do not stop it. I would appreciate it if the hon. Leader of the Opposition would ask his question.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister of National Revenue. First, will he give us a guarantee now that there will not be an end to the remission order in January 1983 and, second, will he tell us whether the interdepartmental committee looking at impacts in northern Canada is considering substituting the payment of a $500 cheque that will be taxable, to the miners affected, while at the same time they have an increase in their taxes ranging from $2,000 to $3,000 per year? Will the minister tell us whether the government is considering slapping a $3,000 tax increase on miners in his constituency and then compensating for that with a $500 cheque that will itself be taxable?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, as far as obfuscation of figures is concerned, Madam Speaker, last week the Leader of the Opposition told us that the taxation of health and dental plans would have heavy impact on veterans. That is clearly false; there is no impact on veterans who receive a disability allowance or the war veterans allowance. There is no effect at all.

Mr. Clark: That is not true.

Mr. Rompkey: The figures and positions that the Leader of the Opposition brought forward last week were clearly not credible. I submit that the figures brought forward this week are equally not credible.

The fact of the matter is—and people in the north know it—that this government has kept faith with them. We continued the remission order and they are money in pocket. The average person in my riding picked up between $1,000 and $1,500 extra this year as a result of the remission order. We have said that we will continue to keep faith with people in the north and that we will put a program in place that will see that they get their due. We intend to do that, Madam Speaker.

TAXATION OF NORTHERN RESIDENTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I should like to continue with a question directed to the Minister of National Revenue. He knows full well that it is the policy of the Liberal government to discontinue the remission order. That was said by the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Chénier: Joe told us that!

Mr. Nickerson: The people of Labrador City will lose $1,000 to $1,500. I submit that this is frightening and will have a horrendous impact on the taxpayers of northern Canada. Will the Minister of National Revenue guarantee to us today that the remission order will not be taken off at the end of this year or, alternatively, will permanent changes to the Income Tax Act be made to take into consideration the fact that people in the north are paying, in proportion, more taxes than those in the south?

• (1425)

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the government has nothing to be ashamed of in terms of its approach to people in the north.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: If they want to take examples from my riding, the first thing that their government did when it assumed power was that it immediately froze capital projects, including two capital projects in Labrador City, denying the people up there jobs. That is the record of that particular government, in Labrador City. I would say to the hon. member that he knows very well my own personal feeling about the remission order and what should be done for people in the north.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: I simply say to him again that the government has kept faith with the people of the north, and it will continue to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, for the second time the Minister of National Revenue has refused to answer that very simple question put to him. In reviewing the budget I saw that there would be more money put into the pockets of deputy ministers and of chairmen of Crown corporations. These people will be receiving an additional $6,000, $8,000 or $10,000 to spend per year—

Mr. Nielsen: After taxes.

Mr. Nickerson: —but the guy who drives an ore truck in Labrador City, Schefferville, Pine Point or Faro will be paying an extra $2,000 or $3,000 per year—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Nickerson: Is that the policy of the Liberal government?

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Nielsen: Answer the question.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Rompkey sits in his seat.

Mr. Nielsen: No answer!

Mr. Epp: No answer!

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

DEFICIT INCURRED IN AUTO PARTS TRADE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. In view of the fact that the auto parts industry in Canada is in very bad shape and once again has suffered a $4.35 billion staggering deficit for 1981, which was even higher than the record for 1980, what immediate steps will the minister take to protect the Canadian auto parts industry, not only in Ontario but in Quebec and, indeed, in British Columbia?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, while recognizing the importance of the question the hon. member posed, I thought he might have given recognition today to the trade figures which were announced for 1981 in which Canada had its second largest trade surplus in history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: Also I would have thought that the hon. member would have congratulated Canadian manufacturers because one half of that export increase was in end products, which is the labour intensive side of the trade figures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: With respect to his specific question concerning auto parts, as I said to his leader in reply to a question in the House on Friday, we are very conscious of the fact that the auto parts industry and the automobile industry in general are in serious trouble. We are working together with the United States of America to improve the North American share of the world market.

UNITED STATES EXAMPLE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I do not know what the minister's answer had to do with the auto parts industry. He did not even refer to it until the last sentence. In view of the fact that there are 50,000 Canadians out of work in the auto industry in general, and that half those lay-offs are permanent, does the minister not anticipate or contemplate doing exactly what the United States is doing, in that it is retrenching its auto parts industry around major auto manufacturers to protect its auto parts industry? When will the minister do the same thing for the Canadian auto parts industry?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is conscious of the fact that the United States auto industry is in the same depressed state as the Canadian industry. As I said to his leader on Friday, one of the major moves we made last year, for example, was to obtain major export markets for the Canadian automobile industry, which includes Canadian parts. We obtained one contract in Iraq for over $100 million for 13,000 cars. The second phase of that order was a 12,000 order option, with the 12,000 cars still sitting on a Halifax dock.

Mr. Blackburn: What does that do for the auto pact?

• (1430)

Mr. Lumley: I hear the hon. member ask what does that have to do with the auto pact. It increases jobs in the auto industry for Canadians and Americans, which the hon. member should know.

Mr. Blackburn: Why the deficit?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: Hon. members are very conscious of the fact that the North American share of the world market is down substantially, and the auto industry obviously has a responsibility to work with the governments to increase our share.

TRADE

INCREASE IN JAPANESE EXPORTS TO CANADA

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, is for the Minister of State for International Trade. Undoubtedly the minister noted the figures released by Statistics Canada today revealing the Japanese exports to this country are up 72 per cent in 1981 compared to 1980. Would the minister explain to the House why this situation has occurred when his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, assured the House there would be no such increase? Was the minister simply duped by the Japanese?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I do not recall my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, making that statement. I am sure that he did not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: I think what the hon. member is referring to is my colleague talking about the Japanese exports of automobiles.

Yes, Madam Speaker, we are concerned that our surplus with Japan has fallen from $2.1 billion in 1979 to approximately $400 million in 1981. I think the hon. member knows that we operate a very free market in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: Exports of consumer products to Canada from Japan have increased substantially. Obviously that creates an opportunity for import substitution for Canadian manufacturers, and we are doing our best to encourage Canadian manufacturers to take advantage of that opportunity.

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED AUTOMOBILES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of State for International Trade. I would refer the minister to Hansard for November 26, 1981, when his colleague assured this House that the Japanese auto quota was right on target and that there was nothing to fear.

Given the fact that the deficit on automotive products has risen over 70 per cent in the period to which I referred earlier, and given the fact that whatever the arrangement was—it runs out at the end of next month—what can the minister tell us has been done to ensure that there will be a continuing quota, or some more satisfactory arrangement, to halt this spiralling increase of Japanese cars coming into this country?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as I said on Friday, we are initiating discussions with the Japanese in Tokyo this week. Our officials will be telling the Japanese that we want to enter into an agreement with them prior to March 31 when our present agreement runs out. We first want to find out what the state of the agreement is between the United States and Japan, as to whether the Japanese will honour the commitments made under the two-year agreement with the Americans. Once we know that position we will be able to negotiate our own.

IMPORTATION OF LIGHT TRUCKS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for International Trade. Our officials will be having negotiations with the Japanese regarding the importation of automobiles and light trucks. The Americans place a duty of 25 per cent on all light trucks that are imported into the United States. Canada levies a duty of 12.8 per cent, an amount that will be reduced to 9.8 per cent. The Americans, however, will retain their rate of duty at 12 per cent. These light trucks were not part of the quota agreement. Can the minister tell us whether these light trucks will be negotiated into a new quota agreement? Can he also tell us what basis will be used? Last year, there was an increase, that is 1980 over 1981, of 122 per cent in light trucks coming into this market.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, since the negotiations will not be initiated until Thursday of this week in Tokyo, it is very difficult for me to tell the hon. member what the final outcome will be.

The possibility of adding a tariff on the trucks will depend on what other things we can negotiate with the Japanese.

As the hon. member for Brant mentioned, and his leader suggested on Friday, one of the things that we will try to encourage the Japanese to do is to source more parts in Canada for the automobiles which the Japanese will be shipping into Canada. There are many component parts to that negotiation of which the hon. member is aware. It would be presumptuous of me to assume what the final result will be.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of State for International Trade. Automotive parts and components that were shipped to Japan are down 20 per cent, according to Statistics Canada figures that were released this morning. The reality is that unless we do something about the light trucks then the new generation of light trucks being manufactured by Ford, Chrysler and General Motors will never get off the ground.

The Big Three are now manufacturing new, light, downsized trucks, and unless we have some firm commitment that there will be light trucks included in the quota and the quota depressed downward, we will never be able to get these light trucks off the ground and out into the marketplace. I am concerned about the guy next door to me working at Ford Motor company who has been laid off indefinitely, and those others working in component parts plants who have been laid off indefinitely. Thirty-eight per cent of them have been laid off. That is what I am concerned about, and I want to hear something more specific from the minister.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, we have the same concerns as the hon. member. We are interested in the people who work in the whole automobile industry, not only those who work with light trucks, or those on assembly lines, or those who work in parts plants, but those who work on big trucks and other things. Consequently, all those elements will be brought into the discussions with the Japanese.

MEDICAL CARE

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL STANDARDS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare for whom I have been patiently waiting. I understand that she is in the lobby. I told her parliamentary secretary that I wanted to ask a question, but he disappeared.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: I would like to know just what is going on. Perhaps someone could bring the minister in from the lobby so I could ask my question on the state of medicare.

An hon. Member: Your question isn't very important.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must address his question to a minister. I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare coming into the House now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is looking more and more every day like Emperor Nero who stood passively by and fiddled while Rome burned before his eyes. The minister seems content to blather on intermittently while our national health care system goes to pieces before our very eyes.

It has been one and a half years since the Hall report was tabled, three years since the medicare crisis first began, and six months since the all-party parliamentary task force tabled its report. The minister is up to her ears in recommendations. We have seen no action but we have had plenty of excuses. Will the minister please tell the House what arrangements she has made with her provincial counterparts to sit down and establish some concrete national standards for Canada's medicare system?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I could, for example, answer the hon. member by asking him whether he knows where the newly elected minister of health for Manitoba stands on medicare. That answer would be very practical for all of us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: It would tell us how much extra billing he thinks will have to take place to erode the system. Is the minister going to take a stand? He is one of the key players. He is a minister of the same party to which the hon. member belongs. Has the hon. member contacted him? I would be very interested, as would many Canadians, to know if there is a change in group dynamics between health ministers as to policy. We have decided to strengthen medicare. That would be one good step he could take.

REMUNERATION OF DOCTORS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON EXTRA BILLING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the position of the Saskatchewan government and the position of the Manitoba government are well known with regard to extra billing. If the minister would show some leadership, we would have some action right away. I do not know how long she thinks she can go on with this cute stuff about Manitoba and Saskatchewan, because it does not wash with anybody but herself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: The minister is on record as favouring a revision of the Medical Care Act to state clearly that extra billing by physicians is against the intention and spirit of medicare. We have doctors extra billing in Alberta. We have doctors asking for a 35 per cent increase in Manitoba. The remuneration of physicians is at the heart of the problem of medicare.

How does the minister plan to address this issue? Never mind what the position is of the minister of health in Manitoba; what is her position? How does she plan to create a national consensus against extra billing and a mechanism to provide adequate compensation for doctors as Dr. Hall recommended? Does the minister have any specific proposals?

Mr. Nielsen: On all four sides of the issue.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I think that the position and the stand taken by the other ministers who are key players in the medicare system matter a great deal. There are ten of them. There is one national government speaking on behalf of Canadians and putting up approximately half of the total amount of money involved. It would be nice to have a few allies when I start the federal-provincial conference I am planning with my counterparts, so the question I raised with the hon. member is very relevant, I would like to underline that.

• (1440)

Other than that, the member should know, because I think I stated it a few times in answers to him, that we are planning the first of a series of conferences on renewing medicare, at which time I will put to my provincial colleagues the new rules of the game to strengthen medicare. He knows this is not a simple black and white matter where we can suddenly withhold payment and slow down services. I do not see how that would help people who have health problems.

Mr. Blaikie: You said that; I did not. Get on with your job.

Miss Bégin: It is true that we are manoeuvring around these various roadblocks in order to strengthen medicare, and I believe in the last two years we have strengthened medicare in Canada.

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that at this very moment her colleague, the Minister of Finance, is trying to negotiate massive reductions in federal funding to the provinces which will have an incredible effect on health care, not to mention post-secondary education. I ask the minister does she intend to sit idly by and let the Minister of Finance carelessly gamble with the future of medicare, or is she trying to persuade him to drop these foolish cutbacks which will be used by provinces like Ontario and Alberta—

Mrs. Mitchell: British Columbia.

Mr. Blaikie: —as an excuse for the further privatization of medicare?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is wrong in his description. Payments from my department to the provinces for medicare will increase yearly on average in the coming five years by 13.4 per cent.

Mr. Blaikie: Not as much as they would if you left them alone.

Miss Bégin: This is more than the rate of inflation. That is the money calculated according to the three programs which are the elements of the EPF agreements: hospitalization, extended health care, and visits to doctors. This is fully protected. The payments are going to increase annually and the provinces know that. They can decide to punish medicare because they, like us, have to—

Mr. Blaikie: You know that is not true.

Miss Bégin: —reorder their priorities according to the economic situation. I hope they do not put that on the back of medicare, because our payments for medicare are increasing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COMMITTEE STUDY OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Surveillance of Russian Bear aircraft, which have been flying through a portion of the Atlantic coastal Canadian identification zone en route to Cuba in increasing numbers during the past eight months, surely must have vital strategic implications, yet the government has announced the closure of the air base best situated to monitor these instrusions, CFB Chatham in New Brunswick.

Besides the military implications the closure will have, one half of the town's work force will be put out of work. The minister has set up an interdepartmental committee to study alternative uses for the air base—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order. The questions today have all been exceptionally long.

Mr. Nielsen: So have the answers.

Madam Speaker: We are coming to the end of question period. I wish to recognize as many questioners as possible, and I would really appreciate members shortening their questions.

Mr. Corbett: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I trust the answers will be short and explicit as well.

The study was to be completed and the report made by the end of January. Will the minister now tell the House what recommendations that committee has made?

An hon. Member: Close the base.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the answer is yes. I think security on the east coast is adequate, and all measures have been taken to make sure that it is adequate, and we are protecting the Canadian people very well on the east coast.

An hon. Member: Provided there is no attack, we are okay.

MINISTER'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I asked for the committee's recommendations and I did not get them, but in view of the fact that over one half of the town's work force is going to become unemployed, and over $33 million in wages and local purchasing will be lost to the town, will the minister tell the House what recommendations he is going to make to his caucus colleagues about what happens to the town of Chatham and those unemployed? If he cannot be specific, will he assure the people of Chatham that something will be done to ensure that these jobs and revenues will be replaced within a reasonable period of time?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I thought the hon. member would have read the most recent speech I made in Chatham stating that we care a lot for the people in this area.

Mr. Epp: That is why you are closing the base.

Mr. Lamontagne: Well, maybe because of economic and strategic factors we have to phase out that base and try to compensate in the best way we can for the loss of jobs and to the effect on the local economy. However, it is much better to do this than to do what the former minister of national defence said in Chatham last week when he told them that they should stick to their demands that the F-18 be stationed at Chatham, and close Bagotville. That is very good for Quebecers—his suggestion to close Bagotville instead of Chatham.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Lamontagne: Madam Speaker, we have an interdepartmental committee working very hard on the future of Chatham. We have been in communication with the premier of the province, with responsible people in the Miramichi area, and with our Member of Parliament for that area, and everyone is working together to see that Chatham is not left without any compensation or any alternatives as they are at the moment.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUSPENSION OF PUBLIC SERVANT FOR OPPOSING METRIC CONVERSION PROGRAM

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Revenue who will perhaps be aware that this week Neil Fraser, an employee of his department in Kingston, was suspended from work for three days because he publicly spoke out against the policy of metric conversion. In fact he was told that if his protests were repeated he would be dismissed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: The minister will know there is no conflict of interest here because it had nothing to do with the Department of National Revenue. I ask the minister if it is his policy, indeed the policy of the government, that if a civil servant speaks out against any aspect of government policy, he will be dismissed?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, it is true that an auditor from the Kingston district office was involved in a public demonstration against the metric system. I gather he also wrote to the newspapers about it. He was called in and given a three-day suspension, according to departmental guidelines. He has since appeared on television criticizing the metric system, the Constitution, and bilingualism.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: In similar cases, Madam Speaker, the right of the employer to discipline the employee for public statements critical of government programs has been upheld by the courts, as I am sure it will be in this case.

Mr. Mazankowski: So much for the charter of rights.

CIVIL RIGHTS OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the issue here is freedom of speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: It is a question of the civil rights a public servant should enjoy, and I would like to direct my supplementary to the President of the Treasury Board, the minister responsible for the public service. I would ask him to give us an assurance that those public service employees who dare speak out against any aspect of government policy, who choose to follow that route, will not be subjected to punitive action by the government, particularly when they speak on a matter not in conflict with their responsibilities in their own departments?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the facts in this particular case which the hon. member raised initially with my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, but in my responsibilities as President of the Treasury Board I will discuss the matter with my officials and my colleague.

MINES AND MINING

LOAN TO PERU FOR COPPER MINING VENTURE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. Last December the minister was crowing quite proudly about the benefits of a $250 million loan at 11 per cent to the government of Peru for a copper mining venture. Since that time about 1,500 Canadian copper mining workers have been laid off. In Stewart, British Columbia, about one fifth of the workers at Granduc will be laid off, as well. Since the Canadian sector is paying roughly double the foreign Liberal rate for capital, does the minister believe that this kind of loan to foreign competitors is in the best interest of the Canadian copper mining industry?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the loan to which the hon. member refers affects a copper mine which will not come into production until roughly four or five years down the road, by which time we hope the copper situation will have improved and that the prices will have risen considerably. The fact is that that loan produces jobs in Canada immediately, within the next year, and that is what is important, given the current economic situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CREATION OF JOBS IN CANADA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I find it passing strange that if the mine will not go into operation for four or five years, it will immediately create jobs in Canada. I contacted the minister's office which informed me that it is opposed to this deal. I wonder whether the minister would comment on that.

Since roughly 4,000 jobs have been lost in the copper industry and supply sector since this December announcement, I wonder if the minister will be making any money available at 11 per cent to the Canadian copper industry. Despite repeated inquiries directed to her office, to the EDC, and to the company S & C in Montreal, I have not been able to find evidence of one job which will be created in Canada. I challenge the minister to stand up in this House to tell us just one job which will be created as a result of the loan of $250 million at 11 per cent.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): I will be very happy to provide the hon. member with all of the facts of this contract the minute the tenders are made public. The confidentiality of the situation insists, of course, that this contract not be made public until it is signed. I will be very happy to provide him with the figures when they come. The fact is that hon. members opposite have been criticizing us for the lack of jobs in the automotive industry, and this particular contract will have a very direct effect on the automotive industry, as trucks will be part of the package.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SHIPBUILDING

SUPPORT FOR CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. In view of the fact that it is very important to maintain a strong domestic capability in the construction and repairing of ships in Canada and to maintain those 45,000 trucks off the ground and out into the marketplace. I am consideration, besides the 9 per cent subsidy, to offset foreign government subsidies, particularly in the area of financing, which give offshore shipbuilders a considerable advantage in contract bidding over our own industry? As well, could the minister explain why, under the multimillion dollar federal Shipbuilding Industry Assistance Program, very little, if any, of these funds will indeed benefit our shipbuilding industry in the Great Lakes?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his question and for his continuing interest in the shipbuilding industry in Canada. I can inform the hon. member, and this has already been pointed out to him in the House, that eleven or twelve months ago, a comprehensive study of our shipbuilding assistance policy was initiated in consultation with the industry, the provincial governments and the unions involved in this sector. The study is just about finished, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is expecting to receive a report within a few days. Once the report has been read and considered by his cabinet colleagues, we shall then be able to either publish the report or announce a new policy in the coming months.

As for the millions of dollars, I can inform the hon. member that $75 million are spent each year on subsidies to the shipbuilding industry at all shipyards throughout Canada, and the hon. member knows perfectly well that the shipyard in his riding has received—and why not—a generous share of this subsidy.

PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT FOR COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have a short supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. At the present time, as the minister knows, ships built by offshore countries which are plying their services completely in Canadian waters are subject to a 25 per cent duty. However, this duty does not apply to ships built in Commonwealth countries. Will the minister take a serious look at this provision in the act, and take the necessary steps to change the Canada Shipping Act and remove this preferential treatment which has proven to be a hardship to our own industry and has been an anachronism for many years?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Yes, Madam Speaker, such a step will be taken in the fall, in the legislation which we hope to introduce at that time. However, to put matters into context, hon. members should know that at the present time 50 per cent to 60 per cent of the coasting trade in Canadian waters is done by Canadian-built ships.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED RADIO SERVICE FOR NORTHERN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications, and involves radio broadcasting by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which has been a matter of concern for northern New Brunswickers for some time. We have had improvements in signal for television programs, but I wonder if the parliamentary secretary can indicate the present status and action which will be taken to bring daily radio broadcast service by the CBC to northern New Brunswick.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I know the hon. member's interest in this particular problem, as he has discussed it with the minister and myself on a number of occasions, and it has been a long-outstanding item. I can only say that it is the policy of the CBC to expand as quickly as possible. I can be encouraging in the sense that an announcement by the minister should be made in the very near future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SECRECY SURROUNDING SALARIES PAID TO SENIOR OFFICERS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, and it concerns the secrecy surrounding salaries paid to heads of Crown corporations. As the minister knows, there have been announcements that some public servants will receive salary increases of some considerable magnitude. Some of these public servants have refused to discuss their salaries publicly and the government has consistently refused to indicate their level of salaries. Would the Acting Prime Minister please indicate to the House the justification in public policy for refusing even to reveal the ranges of salaries for heads of Crown corporations?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have seen that such a practice exists in Canada, and it is not a practice exclusive to chairmen or presidents of Crown corporations. Such a practice exists in the private sector, also.

Mr. Nielsen: That's not right.

Mr. Pepin: I presume, inasmuch as Crown corporations in Canada are somewhat mid-way between public corporations and private ones, that this is the main reason for the existence of the practice. However, this being a prime ministerial prerogative, I will bring the question to the attention of the Prime Minister, and I am sure that he will want to give a more detailed answer to the question raised, in due course.

QUERY RESPECTING THE RANGES OF SALARIES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): When the Acting Prime Minister brings the matter to the head of the government, would he please remind him that the development of this new fiction is of recent vintage and that, in fact, the salary ranges of former heads of Crown corporations were at least announced? At the same time, would the Acting Prime Minister argue the case before the Prime Minister that, since the public is involved, it is inappropriate that at least the ranges of salaries paid to those senior officials have not been made public?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I will bring that to the attention of the Prime Minister. But, needless to say, most of the salaries of most of these gentlemen are now commonly known.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Pepin: The salary of the president of CN is pretty well known.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Pepin: The salary of the president of Air Canada is pretty well known.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Pepin: We all know that they are higher than the salary of the Prime Minister.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

INCLUSION OF NORTHUMBERLAND COUNTY IN DREE AGREEMENT

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of State for External Relations and congratulate him on his new appointment. I ask him this question as a member of the cabinet committee on economic and regional development. Would he advise the House whether he soon expects to be able to announce the entry of the county of Northumberland into the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement, a matter on which he has been working for the past 18 months?

An hon. Member: Come on, somebody!

Mr. Crombie: There he is!

Miss MacDonald: All three together!

Mr. Epp: You're not quite sure, are you, yet?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I think the question should be put to—

Mr. Epp: Somebody else.

Mr. De Bané: —to the minister responsible for DREE, but I am very happy to remind the hon. member that one of my last acts as minister responsible for DREE was to deliver a letter to his office by hand, stating that the draft of that agreement would be ready very soon. I also remind him that at my first meeting with the provincial government of Ontario, with his support, I stated my initiative to do something for the county of Northumberland. I hope that in the very near future that initiative will reach its final conclusion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

FINANCING OF ENERGY PROJECT IN SOVIET UNION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. I wonder how the minister can justify a reported $637 million in subsidized financing to Russia which will cost the Canadian taxpayers a reported $198 million. All we will receive in return is $275 million in Canadian equipment and services.

● (1500)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, first, the negotiations for this contract were initiated in 1977. If Canada is successful in obtaining a contract, it will involve 16,500 man-years of work in Quebec, Ontario and western Canada. The figures which the hon. member read in one of the local papers, unfortunately, are erroneous. The EDC does not have a financial offer outstanding at the present time. It expired as of December 31. Consequently I cannot verify the figures to which the hon. member alludes.

TIMING OF CONTRACT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the minister think it appropriate to lend subsidized dollars at a 10 per cent interest rate to Russia at a time when our allies are implementing sanctions against Russia as a result of the Russian atrocities in Poland and Afghanistan?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, there is no question of our lending money to the Soviet Union. I think what the hon. member is mistakenly trying to express is a loan by the EDC to a Canadian corporation which, if successful, would create 16,500 jobs in Ontario Quebec, Alberta and British Columbia. We regard this as being in keeping with the policy of NATO at this time. If the NATO policy changes, our policy will change as well.

Madam Speaker: I see the Leader of the Opposition is rising, but question period is over. I have to recognize the hon. member for Victoria on a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKINNON—COMMENTS BY MR. LAMONTAGNE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from some of the remarks made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) a few minutes ago. He said that I had recommended to the good people of Chatham that the Canadian Forces base at Bagotville should be closed. It is correct that I advised the people of Chatham that they should put all the pressure they possibly can on the government to retain their base, which is absolutely vital to their economy. I suggested that the decision that possibly the minister has made to close Chatham and keep Bagotville open must have been made for reasons other than strategic reasons. I pointed out to the people of Chatham that the Chatham base is much closer to the east coast and the flight of the Russian Bear bombers down to the east coast than is the base at Bagotville. There are really two questions involved in this. The first is whether either base should be closed.

Madam Speaker: Order. It seems the hon. member is entering into debate. I will let him continue for another little while, but I ask him to tell me what his question of privilege is. From his note it seemed that he wanted to correct a statement made by the minister. That might be a point of order rather than a question of privilege.

Point of Order—Mr. Clark

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I will not require more than another moment or so. The other question is whether he has decided to close the right base, if indeed they must close one base. For reasons of the mileage that is involved, the minister and the government have to make a decision as to whether the main threat is manned bombers coming over the North Pole or whether they want to do surveillance of the Russian planes flying up and down the east coast.

If it is the first one, which is a rather unlikely scenario, that is uppermost in the minister's mind, he has a reason for closing that base, I suppose. However, if it is the second one, which seems more likely, he has no reason and he has misled the people.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is debating the question. This is not a question of privilege.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—CLARIFICATION SOUGHT OF COMMENTS MADE BY MISS BÉGIN

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is still within range of my voice and will perhaps resume her seat. I rise on a point of order that would allow her to confirm or clarify a remark I believe I heard her make during the question period. I believe I heard the minister indicate that her estimates in the blue book for payments to the provinces will increase next year by 13.5 per cent. If the minister did not say that, I would like to have the record set straight. If she did, I would like to have it confirmed.

Madam Speaker: Order. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) will recognize that that is distinctly a question further to some of the questions asked in the House. If the minister wants to correct a statement she has made, she is perfectly free to do that using the means at her disposal, either by stating it in the House or, if it is not substantial, she can make some corrections to the "blues". If there is an error in the figure, she can make a statement in the House to correct that. It is up to the minister to determine whether she wants to make a correction to her statement.

Mr. Clark: Exactly, Madam Speaker. The only reason I raised the point of order was that the minister was out of the House and may well have not understood what she said when she said it. Indeed, she may have intended that. I wanted to extend to her the opportunity to correct the record.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that one member cannot force another member to correct a statement which that member has made in the House. It is up to the member to do that. The right hon. member has made his point. The minister is free to do what she wants.

MR. PINARD—TYPE OF QUESTIONS TO BE AVOIDED DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that during Oral Question Period, a question was directed to a minister which did not involve his departmental responsibilities but those he has as a member of a cabinet committee. With due respect, that is against the procedures of this House, and I should not like to see this practice continue in the future. Today we did not interrupt Oral Question Period to raise a point of order, so as to allow the opposition to continue with their questions, but in future, I should appreciate it if members were not allowed to direct questions to a minister in his capacity as a member of a cabinet committee. According to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Chapter 359(b), fifth edition, a minister may only be questioned on his responsibilities in his present portfolio.

Madam Speaker: I have taken note of the minister's point of order. I apologize for what happened, but in listening to the question, I thought part of it concerned international trade, and I noticed the minister replied with some hesitation, without realizing why. In any case, the President of the Privy Council is absolutely right.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,714, 3,020, 3,446, 3,457, 3,492, 3,525, and 3,538.

INTERCEPTION OF MAIL IN UNITED STATES

Question No. 2,714—Mr. Beatty:

Since March 1, 1980, were requests made to American authorities by the government for the interception of mail in the United States and, if so, how many and, in each case (a) what was the reason (b) by whom was it made (c) what was the response?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Yes, on one occasion. A request was made by the Drug Enforcement Branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on August 31, 1981. The request arose from a joint investigation with the United States Drug Enforcement Agency concerning the importation of illicit drugs into the United States and Canada. The interception involved a parcel being sent through the mail to the United States which was believed to contain heroin. The American agency has assumed responsibility for that aspect of the investigation and is pursuing the matter under their law. The investigation is still under way.

CARGO TONNAGE OF NEWFOUNDLAND STEAMSHIPS LTD.

Question No. 3,020—Mr. Crosby:

1. What was the total amount of cargo tonnage moved by Newfoundland Steamships Ltd. between the port of Montreal and (a) Corner Brook (b) St. John's in (i) 1978 (ii) 1979 (iii) 1980?

2. What was the amount of direct water subsidy applied to the tonnage in part 1 in (a) 1978 (b) 1979 (c) 1980?

3. What commodities, by tonnage and unit value and classified by Statistics Canada SIC codes, were shipped by the company between Montreal and (a) Corner Brook (b) St. John's in (i) 1978 (ii) 1979 (iii) 1980?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The total amount of general freight moved by Newfoundland Steamships Ltd. between the port of Montreal and Newfoundland was:

(a) 1978—246,535 tons

(b) 1979—257,657 tons

(c) 1980—260,560 tons

Owing to competitive reasons, the amount of cargo shipped by Newfoundland Steamships Ltd. to St. John's and Corner Brook is considered confidential company information.

2. The amount of subsidy payable to Newfoundland Steamships was:

(a) 1978—$3,855,809.12

(b) 1979—$4,029,749.68

(c) 1980—$4,075,163.23

3. Commodities, by tonnage, unit value and classified by SIC numbers is considered confidential company information. In any event, this form of information is unavailable from departmental files.

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM

Question No. 3,446—Mr. Roy:

1. Since the Assisted Home Ownership Program (AHOP) was established, how many houses were bought under the program in (a) the city of Laval (b) Quebec (c) Ontario and what was the total cost in each case?

2. For the same period (a) how many houses were taken back by the government (b) how many home owners (i) signed waiver documents (ii) gave up their housing unit to the mortgage holder (iii) abandoned their investment and what was the total value in each case?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. (a), (b) and (c) See table below.

2. (a) Between 1975 and December 31, 1981, the total number of AHOP units acquired under the Mortgage Insurance Fund in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario was, 1,836 units and 8,581 units, respectively.

(b) (i), (ii) and (iii) See table below.

Number of units sold and total sale price of dwellings under the Assisted Home Ownership Program 1973-1981

SPECIAL BENEFITS FOR OFFICIALS OF CMHC

Question No. 3,457—Miss Carney:

1. Does the (a) chairman (b) president of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation receive a special car allowance and/or reduced mortgage allowances?

2. Do (a) the board of directors (b) all vice-presidents at CMHC receive the allowances indicated in part 1?

3. Do the officials receive other special benefits by virtue of their employment with CMHC and, if so, what are the benefits and what is their cost?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. (a) and (b) No.

2. (a) One member only of the board of directors has a corporation owned automobile at his disposal. (b) The vice-presidents do not receive a special car allowance but those who request it are provided with a corporation leased automobile. This is a benefit taxable to the employee under the terms and conditions of the income tax law and the Revenue Canada regulations. One vice-president received preferred rate second mortgage financing on his home when transferred.

3. The corporation provides life insurance coverage for all the members of its board of directors at an annual cost of less than $400. This policy is only in effect when the members are on corporation business. Vice-presidents, as well as the chairman and president may request to have their business club memberships paid by the corporation. Five officials are in receipt of this benefit for a total cost of $3,300 in 1981. Senior officials who are employees of the corporation can voluntarily participate in a deferred compensation plan. This is more of a service at the disposal of the officials than a benefit per se. The corporation does not contribute to this plan and, except for a minimal amount of bookkeeping, no costs are incurred.

ACCREDITATION OF MATSQUI PRISON

Question No. 3,492—Mr. Friesen:

1. Did the Matsqui Prison apply for accreditation with the Commission on Accreditation for Corrections?

2. Did an auditing team visit the prison before a riot took place to determine whether standards, as expressed in the Manual of Standards for Adult Correctional Institutions, were being met by prison authorities and, if not, what was the purpose of the visit and on what date did it take place?

3. Was a report prepared by the auditing team as to whether the standards expressed in a manual distributed by the Commission on Accreditation for Corrections were being met and, if so (a) was it made available to the Correctional Service of Canada (b) is it the policy of the Solicitor General to make it public?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. A three-member consultant auditing team from the Commission on Accreditation for Corrections made a three-day visit to Matsqui Institution from April 6-8, 1981, to determine whether standards, as expressed in the Manual of Standards for Adult Correctional Institutions, were being met by Matsqui Institution.

3. (a) Yes, a draft report was prepared by the consultant auditing team expressing their opinion of the levels of compliance, non-compliance and non-applicability of the Matsqui Institution with the Manual of Standards for Adult Correctional Institutions. The draft report was received by the Correctional Service of Canada on April 29, 1981. Matsqui Institution met compliance levels necessary to achieve accreditation and would probably have appeared before a panel hearing for this purpose in late August, 1981.

At that hearing the draft report would have been reviewed and appeals made by the Correctional Service of Canada in certain cases judged to be in non-compliance by the consultant auditors. Commission panel rulings are final and a final level of compliance/non-compliance/non-applicability is then rendered. Because the riot occurred on June 2, the entire accreditation process has been suspended until the institution is returned to normal operation, at which time the situation will be reassessed.

(b) No. It is neither the practice nor the policy of the Commission on Accreditation for Corrections or its client to release details of reports as they deal with all procedural aspects including security and crisis response.

MARKETING ACTIVITIES OF ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

Question No. 3,525—Mr. Cossitt:

Were the marketing activities of the Royal Canadian Mint and of Mr. Robert Huot, vice-president of the Mint, under any form of investigation and, if so (a) what were all the details (b) was the investigation ordered by the Minister of Supply and Services and, if so, for what purpose?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): I am informed by the Royal Canadian Mint as follows: No.

LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CHARGES

Question No. 3,538—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,142 which states in part that the government spent $26,325,000 in 1980-81 in long distance telephone charges for calls made on other than government leased telephone circuits, what is a breakdown of this figure in so far as amounts spent by individual departments, offices, etc?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,142 which stated the total amount billed directly to the departments by the carriers, the individual amounts reported by those departments are as follows:

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 3,327 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO AMATEUR SPORT

Question No. 3,327—Mr. Herbert:

Since the preparation of the answer to question No. 723 of the third session of the Thirtieth Parliament, what amount was contributed by the Ministry of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport to each sport-governing body and sport and recreation association?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I would not want to be hasty about this and I do not want to appear impatient given that I only put the question on the Order Paper recently, however, question No. 3,698 that I placed on the order paper has some extreme importance attached to it.

It has no political value to me or anyone else, but it is of significant value to the business community of Canada to have the answer to that question.

I think it is a simple question and there should be a ready answer. I wonder if I might stress to the parliamentary secretary the absolute urgency of obtaining the answer to that question now, before the consequences which may well flow from the actions by the government and its representatives begin.

I am extremely concerned that we find out, if we can, what the legal authority is for the actions taken by the government with regard to the imposition of the recently-announced but not yet approved changes to the Income Tax Act and other acts.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I have taken due note of that representation and I will discuss it with the appropriate minister.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary exactly what is happening with my question, No. 2,214. Is there any progress on it?

Mr. Smith: I believe so, Madam Speaker, but I will make inquiries.

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary when we can expect answers to my questions Nos. 3,380 through to 3,438 to be tabled. I recently noticed that some ministers have been circulating answers to those questions to members of the House and have not been answering those questions on the Order Paper, in spite of assurances by the parliamentary secretary that he would try to expedite answers to those significant questions in response to the obstacles report. Could the parliamentary secretary tell me when we can expect to have those answers properly tabled in the House rather than simply having them circulated to members of the House?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be pursuing that matter on behalf of the hon. member.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 71 in the name of the hon. member for Skeena?

Madam Speaker: The member is not in the House at the present time. I did call him.

Mr. Smith: I would ask all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall notices of motions for the production of papers stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANAGREX ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed, from Friday, January 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-85, an act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to continue my representations on Bill C-85. My previous comments on this bill lead me back to the issue of corporations versus department, and whether this dream of the minister should be realized through a new Crown corporation of the government or whether it should be a wing of the Department of Agriculture.

It also leads me to the question of the utilization of embassies and their staffs and whether the goals can even be achieved with the present number of staff members allotted to the corporation and with the funding that has been promised to that corporation.

I have great respect for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I honestly believe that he is hard-working, sincere and concerned about agriculture in Canada. However, I am worried about how effective he is with that bunch over on that side of the House. The minister has undoubtedly been trying for a considerable length of time to get cabinet approval of this bill. Earlier in his announcement about Canagrex he stated that he would need a budget of $62.3 million and a staff of approximately 150 people. It is obvious that he had problems with the cabinet and difficulty in convincing them to meet these standards which he established because cabinet did not approve the $62.3 million or the staff of approximately 150. Instead, they approved an amount of $12.3 million and a staff of 12. That starts Canagrex out of the blocks with $50 million less than the minister thought was necessary and some 138 people short of the number he thought should be able to do the job. This puts a tremendous problem in front of Canagrex in terms of effectiveness.

Another concern which deeply disturbs me is why we are not using the embassies and the consulates around the world to enhance sales of our agricultural products. I thought that the government would have jumped at the ideas put forward by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) pertaining to the export sales of agricultural goods. One of his proposals was to make use of the embassies, trade offices or consulates throughout the world for the promotion of sales of agricultural products. There are approximately 115 of these offices throughout the world and we only have agricultural representation on the staff of about 10 per cent of them. Even those are not in the areas where agricultural exports have the greatest potential, in my estimation. I believe that there is only one agricultural representative stationed at one of our embassies or consulates in the Third World where approximately 23 per cent of our agricultural products go.

I would like to repeat my concern about the possible conflict of this new corporation with the Department of Agriculture and national marketing boards, along with other exporting firms. I am concerned that one board, with which I am closely related, the Tobacco Marketing Board, a board which the minister knows could teach his staff a great deal, could come into conflict with Canagrex.

It will take considerable time in committee and considerable debate in the House in order to convince us that a Crown corporation is the best route to take and that its operations are best for agriculture in Canada. Nevertheless, I wish the minister well and I assure him that we on this side of the House will do everything we can to assist him and the government to help agriculture in Canada.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-85, an act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada.

I congratulate the minister and the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ostiguy), the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) and all members from all three parties who have lent their support to this bill.

I am pleased I am following the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley). I know he speaks with wisdom because he does represent quite a large rural agricultural area there. You may wonder, Mr. Speaker, what interest a member from an urban riding like Parkdale-High Park has in legislation on agriculture. Well, Mr. Speaker, the production of food should interest every member in the House. It should be of interest to every Canadian, to every person in the world, because if we have no food there will be no world. If we have no food, there will be no Canadians. If we have no food, there will be no members in the House. Canada is the breadbasket of the world and I think we have an obligation to feed people in other parts of the world. There are areas on this globe where people are starving, dying of malnutrition. When we have the land mass that we do, the technology that we possess and the educated population that we have, we should be the leaders in food production and should be able to increase our exports in this sector of our economy.

The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) made an irresponsible statement in the House yesterday when he said that the Canagrex bill:

> —deceives Canadians . . . because the implication is left that Canada is an exporter of food. In actual fact . . . Canada is a massive importer of food of all categories.

He went on to say:

> The point is whether Canadians will have enough food to eat.

It is that kind of fixation on one's navel and that kind of inwardness which has caused Canada to lose a fair share of world trade.

My interest in this legislation stems from two sources. My background is farming. I spent 18 years on a family farm in Saskatchewan which produced milk, meat and grain. When I moved to Ontario, I worked on many Ontario farms and still keep in touch with farmers in the west and in the east. Therefore, I believe I have some appreciation of the problems, concerns and aspirations of farmers in Canada.

My second interest stems from my role as chairman of the all-party Special Committee on the National Trading Corporation, the report of which, "Canada's Trade Challenge", was tabled in the House just seven months ago. Through this committee I learned that world competition for exports has indeed become a battle for economic survival.

The committee made a close examination of Canada's export performance over the last ten years. Our findings revealed that while world trading activity has accelerated, Canada has not kept pace. The specific concerns of the committee included, first, Canada's declining share of world trade; second, a continuing dependence on trade with the United States; and third, our underdeveloped presence in the growth areas of the world economy.

The establishment of Canagrex as a Crown corporation could be a milestone in the development of the food and agricultural industry of this nation. Canada's economic future is in trade and now is the time to take the necessary steps, such as the formation of Canagrex, to ensure a rosy future ahead.

Canagrex will not be working on its own. Its working relationships and links with private firms, co-operatives, marketing boards, farmers and small producers and other private agencies in Canada will determine its success.

I would like now to outline for hon. members some of the proposed links which may be expected to exist between Canagrex and other federal and provincial departments and agencies, farm organizations and business and trade associations.

Canagrex will have a close relationship with Agriculture Canada. It will report directly to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), and the department will have senior representatives on the board of directors and the policy advisory committee. Canagrex will rely on Agriculture Canada for assistance in identifying markets, opportunities and constraints for Canadian exporters. Many of the most accessible markets for Canadian agricultural products have been found. Canagrex will be expected to work closely with our agricultural research and other institutions to identify and develop food and agricultural products which can be used as a catalyst to gain new markets—and I emphasize "new markets".

Those agencies reporting to the Minister of Agriculture which are involved in some way with agricultural exports, such as the Agricultural Products Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission, will work closely with Canagrex. Canagrex will not duplicate the export marketing activities of the Canadian Dairy Commission, but the two could, where feasible, join in joint marketing efforts and share market information.

Other federal departments and agencies are involved closely in international trade and will necessarily have to establish close links with Canagrex. The new Ministry of State for International Trade of the Department of External Affairs will be a close working partner with Canagrex. The details of the cabinet reorganization are being worked out at departmental levels; nevertheless, there will be a close exchange of information and advice.

Canagrex will be able to draw on the services and market intelligence of Canadian trade commissioners to identify trade opportunities for agricultural products and pass these back to Canagrex for support and follow-up work with Canadian producers to meet the demands.

Just as an aside let me say that when our Committee on the National Trading Corporation heard testimony from coast to coast, we heard high praise for our trade commissioners in foreign posts around the world, and I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate them for the excellent work they are doing.

Canagrex could co-operate with the Canadian Wheat Board on market development but will not work in areas already serviced by the board.

The Export Development Corporation has expertise in providing insurance and loans. Canagrex will use the insurance services of the EDC and draw on the EDC's depth of expertise in financial matters.

The Canadian International Development Agency could use Canagrex assistance in evaluating proposals for international agricultural projects.

There is a number of other federal agencies which would benefit from the assistance of Canagrex and the sharing of expertise.

The provincial governments and Canagrex should also develop a close working relationship. It is important for both to encourage sustained domestic agricultural production. Such a relationship will co-ordinate existing and potential national and provincial export market activities. Each province will be represented on the Canagrex policy advisory committee. I think the provinces have been waiting for the federal government to show leadership in forming such a corporation, and the federal government has done just that.

Canagrex will have strong links with the farm sector. This is a vital requirement, as it is necessary for the farm community to support the activities of the new corporation, if it is to be a success. There will be active farmers on the board of directors and the policy advisory committe. When Canagrex is firmly established, producer co-operatives and marketing boards should respond positively to the new market opportunities presented.

Business and trade associations in Canada will also benefit from links with Canagrex. Many Canadian companies are already dealing in agricultural products with other countries. Canagrex will in no way interfere with or hinder existing or future contracts reached by Canadian businesses. This was a concern of some hon. members opposite.

Canadian processors will be able to come to Canagrex to use its grants, loans and joint venture mandate. This will enable them to transform further Canadian agricultural products for foreign markets.

Most Canagrex activities will be in market development and high risk areas rather than in established markets. This will make its activities very compatible with those of trading corporations already operating in foreign markets. Canagrex will be in a position to counsel small firms which wish to enter export markets. These small food processors do not have the human resources or financial resources to do their own market intelligence. Canagrex personnel could do this for them.

Canadian banks and Canagrex should be in a position to assist each other. Canagrex could make loan guarantees to help banks expand their lending activities. The banks would be encouraged to expand their services for Canadian agricultural exports.

These are only the most obvious agencies and organizations which would have close dealings with Canagrex. As I have pointed out, the advantages are innumerable. The effects Canagrex will have on the entire Canadian economy will many times repay the efforts and money needed to establish it.

I was interested in the comment made about this bill by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff) as recorded in Hansard for January 29 at page 14482. He said:

> There cannot be any significant objection in Canada, and certainly not among food producers, to the goal of increasing our agricultural products.

I wish more hon. members on his side of the House had that same kind of vision for the future of Canada. On the next page he is recorded as saying:

> On the face of it I believe there are grounds for hoping that Canagrex can work to the advantage of Canada's trade performance over all and to the benefit of the food-producing sector, which should be the primary beneficiary.

Yet the hon. member for Huron-Bruce, together with the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), sat on the Special Committee on the National Trading Corporation, the mandate of which was to explore how such a corporation could help small and medium-sized businesses enter the export market. Seventy-five per cent of the witnesses representing small and medium-sized businesses stated that a national trading corporation funded by the government and the private sector would help them to get into the export business, and they all gave the same reasons why, this should be so. They just do not have the human resources and the financial resources to go out and conduct market intelligence in various parts of the world.

The two Conservative members turned down the recommendation to form a Canada trading corporation which would promote general trade, increase employment, reduce the national deficit and thus help fight high inflation. The sad things is that they had no alternatives to present to the committee. Five of the seven members, who were from the NDP and the Liberal side, agreed to major recommendations, but two Conservative members disagreed. That is how interested they are in helping farmers and small business and indeed in helping to build Canada. They would rather listen to the multinationals who say there is no need for this corporation. They will not listen to people who operate small or medium-sized businesses.

How can the Conservatives reconcile the fact that they support Canagrex which will promote the export of agricultural products in which we already have a good track record, and oppose a Canada trading corporation which would promote exports of manufactured products, a sector of trade in which there is a deficit of about $17 billion annually? I wish the Conservatives would get their act together and let Canadians know exactly what they stand for.

Mr. Lewis: As you have on Poland.

Mr. Flis: I should like to share with hon. members the views of some farmers on this bill. I will quote from a letter I received from a Mr. E. W. B. Evans which reads in part as follows:

I am indeed grateful to you to have raised the matter of Canagrex in the House of Commons and I and other members of our agricultural committee and, indeed, the farm organization in Canada, would appreciate it if you could continue to apply pressure in the right quarters to hasten the implementation of Canagrex.

Certainly it is well known that the Canadian farmers, given the necessary incentives, can easily produce enough food to feed 55 million people. The export markets, on a long-term contractual basis, would not only raise the economic level of Canada agriculture, but also the other 30 per cent of the work force that are directly or indirectly tied in to the primary producer.

At a time when financial restraints in the community are affecting especially farmers and small business, and increasing the number of bankruptcies, it seems a shortsighted policy to not have already implemented Canagrex and the benefits that this would entail to our communities, and I believe, in some measure help to eliminate a lot of antagonism that exists between East and West. The problems of agriculture are common across the country and if agriculture prospers, so do the majority of Canadians in direct proportion.

Food producers have been requesting a corporation such as Canagrex for some time. If they believe that such a corporation will help export more of their products and bring greater stability to the food-producing industry, then let us put aside our partisan politics and let us all support this bill with one united voice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure this afternoon to speak to Bill C-85, an act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada.

I certainly welcome any opportunity to speak out on behalf of Canada's food producers and to play my part on behalf of the NDP in encouraging the government to take whatever action is necessary to develop a sound agricultural sector in Canada.

Some hon. members may inquire how my background qualifies me to speak on this particular topic. Mr. Speaker, as a youngster I grew up in southern Alberta and spent a great deal of time working on large dairy operations and on some of the largest cattle spreads in western Canada. Members of my extended family farm today in southern and central Saskatchewan and northern Alberta. The constituency that I represent in central British Columbia is the home of the largest cattle operations in Canada and indeed, according to some people, in the Commonwealth. There is a very diversified and important agricultural base with strong and innovative leadership coming from both the federal and provincial departments of agriculture which are represented in the constituency.

Statistics for 1980 indicate that Canada exported approximately $8 billion worth of agricultural products and imported approximately $5 billion worth. In positive terms, this provided us with an agricultural surplus for that year. While that is good news, generally speaking when one considers the commodities involved, it will be seen that by and large they were exports of bulk commodities such as grains and that the imports tended to be the more specialized products that are used for immediate consumption. Therein lies the difficulty and one of the major challenges that face us. Of the $5 billion worth of foodstuffs that were imported, experts say that $3 billion worth could be grown here. Apples and fresh fruits could be produced in at least three areas of the country, as could soybeans, oats and a variety of vegetables if the proper support systems were in place.

If one reads the agricultural history books it will be seen that not many years ago in the constituency of Kamloops-Shuswap large acreages were planted in tomatoes, watermelons, cucumbers, hops, corn, potatoes, asparagus and apples, yet today virtually none of these food crops are under cultivation. A great deal of agricultural potential obviously exists in this country and it should be put to good use.

Many livestock producers in my riding ask why Canada is such a major beef and lamb importer when beef and lamb producers find themselves in difficulty. We have an opportunity now to create jobs not only for Canadian farmers but for Canadian processors.

I recently had an opportunity to co-chair a task force on the economy that toured Canada, Mr. Speaker. Time after time, when food producers appeared before that task force, they said that the productive capacity of their farms was in the range of 40, 50 or 60 per cent and that if new markets were available they could easily expand that by working in new varieties of crops and livestock into their operation.

It is with some hesitancy, Mr. Speaker, that I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture for finally bringing this bill before the House. I note with interest that since our return from the Christmas recess the first two bills presented are agriculturally oriented—the Farm Credit Corporation bill and the Canagrex bill. While I recognize that the minister often works hard on behalf of the agricultural community, I think he lacks the support of his caucus and of his party.

When one looks at the state of agriculture today, one finds an atmosphere in which encouragement and support is wanting, Mr. Speaker. At some hearings on the subject of job creation which were held in Kamloops recently, a young farmer said, "If you plant a seed today where the climatic and soil conditions are right, it will grow naturally with little if any support at all." But he went on to say that in Canada today, in terms of the agriculture and business community, the climate and conditions are not right and that it is very difficult to become an enthusiastic food producer under these conditions. Why did it take the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) ten months to bring the bill before us? It was introduced last February. Presumably it took ten months to draft it. Or did it take that long for him finally to talk his cabinet colleagues into letting him bring it forth?

As we have seen with the first ministers' conference on the economy, the government intends to hold tough with the high interest rate policies which it has had in place for a number of months. Surely this is a clear signal to the agricultural community that the members of the Liberal Party of Canada are not particularly interested in the plight they face. Yes, we might say that changes were made to the Farm Credit Corporation, but when we look at the $50 million in the budget of November 12, we realize that it will provide very little, if any, relief to farmers in financial difficulty. When we look at the interest rates the Farm Credit Corporation charges on its loans, again the signal is sent out very clearly to Canadian food producers that they are not a high priority in the government's mind. The government is prepared to lend money at half the rate of the Farm Credit Corporation to firms doing business overseas. This is the type of confusing information the farm community receives.

What is the agricultural strategy for Canada? What is the government trying to do to assist the agricultural community to expand and develop? I suspect, if we asked farmers anywhere in Canada that question, the response would be one of confusion, and certainly it would be varied from area to area because there is no over-all industrial or agricultural strategy for Canada.

As previous speakers have indicated, when we consider the 115 Canadian embassies, trade offices and consulates around the country, only ten have agricultural specialists on staff. What does that tell people who represent Canada overseas? What does it tell people who live in those countries about our commitment to agriculture and food production?

We appreciate the fact that the Minister of Agriculture used his influence to have the Small Business Development Bond open to the farm community. However, his cabinet colleagues pulled the rug out from under him. They changed the terms of reference of the Small Business Development Bond, called it the small business bond and made it available to only those people going bankrupt. This was not the type of encouragement the farm community was seeking in the November 12 budget. We notice that farm bankruptcies are up 18 per cent over last year, an especially high year for farm and business failures. Also we notice that with the energy pricing agreement, the cost of agricultural fuel, fertilizers and sprays will increase dramatically. Is the government offering any relief in these particular areas? Again the answer is no.

When the minister introduced the concept of Canagrex back in February, 1981, he said that it was an opportunity for Canada and for the farm community which had never been witnessed before. He was to set up a staff for Canagrex of between 100 and 175 people, with a budget of $62 million. It looked quite attractive. We in the New Democratic Party thought that finally a major step was being taken in an area where discussion had occurred for years and years. Indeed, it was looking very positive. However, when we saw the fine print in the bill before us, we noticed that the staff would be closer to 12 persons and that the budget would be closer to $4 million annually. Obviously the Minister of Agriculture failed to obtain the support of his cabinet colleagues for the concept of Canagrex.

I read with interest the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture the other day when he spoke in southern Ontario. He said that because of the fact that Canada was a food exporter and, as the previous speaker indicated, because we are one of the world's breadbaskets, Canada will be a world power in the very near future. I agree in part with those comments, but I suspect that it will not make us a particular power in terms of the traditional meaning of the word. When we consider that there are only half a dozen countries in the world with significant food to export, we realize that we will be placed in a very strategic position in terms of to whom we are able to sell our food and which countries we decide will be fed from the Canadian food basket.

I support in theory the concept of Canagrex, but before continuing my remarks I should like to refer to a clause in the bill which outlines what Canagrex is? Clause 14(1) reads in part:

> Canagrex is established for the purposes of promoting, facilitating and engaging in the export of agricultural products and services and food products and services from Canada to other countries by means of the financial and other powers provided in this act, and for such purposes Canagrex may > purchase agricultural products and food products and package, process, store, ship, insure, import, export or sell or otherwise dispose of products purchased by it;
> undertake and assist in promotion of the use of Canadian agricultural products and food products, in improvement of the quality and variety thereof and in publication of information in relation to those activities;
> enter into contracts with Canadian companies, co-operatives, marketing boards, associations or other Canadian enterprises or with individuals carrying on business in Canada to act as their marketing representative in marketing agricultural products and food products or to provide managerial technological, marketing or other counselling and consulting services to them; enter into contracts with foreign governments to provide agricultural products and food products and services related to agriculture and food—

purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold real and personal property for actual use by Canagrex in the operation and management of its business—

When we look at the terms of reference provided for the Canagrex Crown corporation in Bill C-85 we see that indeed the possibilities are endless, but they raise some concerns. I think it is important to say from the outset that Canagrex as proposed, and taken alone, will be of little help. When we look at the Canadian agricultural community, it is somewhat like an orchestra. It is comprised of a number of very important components, but the whole is greater than the sum of its parts. To improve only one part of the orchestra will do little for the over-all symphony. While the Minister of Agriculture appears to be taking some major and important steps with the formation of Canagrex, it must be seen within the over-all context of an agricultural strategy.

For example, alongside Canagrex it will be important to identify key sectors of the agricultural economic community. For example, what are the possibilities with fruits and berries, high-grade beef cuts, soya beans, grass seed, seed potatoes, maple syrup, select, frozen, dried or canned vegetables? It is important to target key areas of the agricultural sector of our economy to develop. What about transportation and storage facilities which must complement a sound and productive agricultural sector?

Mrs. Mitchell: What about market gardens and greenhouse operations?

Mr. Riis: Yes, the whole matter of market gardening and greenhouse operations. What about research and development into new strains of crop and new approaches to production? What about providing low interest, long-term capital loans for food producers, rather than leaving them at the mercy of a weekly change in interest rates which they presently face? What about the provision of techniques to provide price stabilization in order that those in the food production industry can make some long-term plans? What about land preservation policies where the federal government, provincial and municipal governments must work in co-operation to ensure that the best agricultural land in Canada remains for agriculture? What about the possibility of improved domestic processing? Surely these are all components of an agricultural strategy that must be brought into place to complement such a corporation as Canagrex?

I have concerns about the 11-member board of directors. Surely when we look at the creation and formation of Crown corporations today we see that some work exceptionally well and some do not work that well at all. As a matter of fact, I do not suppose it would be difficult for many of us to identify a Crown corporation about which we are less than enthusiastic in terms of its productivity and in terms of its service level.

One of the reasons for the best or better Crown corporations is the kind of board of directors assigned to it. I hope that Canagrex does not have a board of political hacks appointed to it primarily from the Liberal Party. I hope too that Canagrex will not be staffed with a group of burnt-out civil servants, people who have lost their enthusiasm, their drive and their commitment to the Crown corporation.

We in the New Democratic Party are also concerned about the level of funding which this new Crown corporation will receive. The amount is $4 million. But by the time you set up your main office, pay your directors and set up the chief executive officers, there will not be much of a budget left to make a significant dint into providing the valuable service that is promised.

I support what the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said a few days ago when speaking about the board of directors of Canagrex. He suggested we ought to amend Clause 3 in order to guarantee that people on the board of directors are people with practical experience in the field of agriculture, that they are people with expertise, with commitment and creative energy that will ensure the success of this Crown corporation.

One of the elements that will be required if Canagrex is to be successful is that it must promote a co-operative model between a variety of groups and levels of governments. That type of thing has not been witnessed for many years. It is imperative that Canagrex encourage co-operation between private firms, provincial governments, local governments and indeed, the federal government.

If we look at the track record of this particular government when it comes to co-operation, we are reminded of the lack of co-operation that existed when the Constitution was being discussed for months and months on end; and the element of confrontation that existed between levels of government. We are reminded of the way the VIA Rail cutbacks were introduced, how the community service financing was financed, and now the federal-provincial fiscal agreements discussions that are going on, and we see anything but an element of co-operation in those relationships. But when you consider what Canagrex will have to do to succeed and the incredible job it will have pulling together so many individual groups in a harmonious way, you realize it will be nothing short of amazing. It will require a change of mood and heart from those opposite. For example, here are a number of groups who will have to be active participants alongside Canagrex: the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Dairy Commission; CIDA; the Federal Business Development Bank; the Farm Credit Corporation; EDC; External Affairs; Agriculture Canada; the chartered banks; other financial institutions; credit unions; co-operatives; the various trade offices; commercial advisers and embassies; and various government marketing agencies and private marketing agencies. The list could go on and on.

We hear from the B.C. Tree Fruit Marketing Board that it has a concern that Canagrex will not serve it well. The B.C. Tree Fruit Marketing Board has successfully developed export markets around the world. That board wonders what Canagrex will do for it. As a matter of fact, when you talk to individual farmers or food producers generally, they ask "What will Canagrex do for me?" I think the assumption we are making is that it will do a great deal for the individual food producer. The challenge the government will have will be to indicate clearly how Canagrex will benefit the individual food producers of Canada. What is in it for them? What is in it for the average farmer? The advantage must be made very clear if we are to get their support and encouragement with this particular project.

The Crown corporation of Canagrex must be made accountable. Too often we see Crown corporations designed to serve the people of Canada yet become parasitic monsters within themselves. In my own province, I think the best example is a Crown corporation called B.C. Hydro. It has lost touch with reality. It has lost touch with the people of British Columbia. It has become a corporate monster. While we can also identify Crown corporations that are indeed sensitive to serving Canadians, we must ensure that Canagrex, because of its requirement to serve hundreds of thousands of Canadians and because essentially it will be indirectly linked with millions of Canadians, be accountable. Therefore, I suggest, along with others who have spoken before me, that some consideration be given to making Canagrex accountable to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, or perhaps to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, but certainly in some way better than the existing procedure which at best I think is rather weak. During discussions in various committees, particularly during time spent on estimates, when the head of a particular Crown corporation appears for an hour or two, that is hardly the accountability that Canagrex will require.

I like the concept and the idea of Canagrex. I think it is a good example of an investment which the government can make in the future of Canada. If not, what some would like to term government spending therefore must be curtailed and must not be supported. We in this particular corner of the House feel that this is an example of good government investment. With proper investment, the returns will flow back to the people of Canada, both the food producers and Canadians generally. What is lacking, however, is detail at this point. While we enthusiastically support the corporation on the one hand, we have a number of concerns on the other that must be dealt with in committee.

I have a word of caution, Mr. Speaker. As Canagrex looks for new opportunities, perhaps in the Pacific Rim areas the eastern bloc countries of Europe or the Arab nations, we must be particularly sensitive to our operations in the developing countries. With 23 per cent of our exports going into Third World countries, we must be particularly sensitive because we have made some disastrous errors in the past. I recall two incidents. The first happened when we sent powdered milk into New Guinea. We were dropping powdered milk from aircraft into the jungles of New Guinea only to have the people there think it was some new kind of whitewash to be used for painting their homes, fences and courtyards. The second was when we attempted to introduce skim milk and milk powder into some of the Third World countries whose populations were not milk drinkers. After being weaned, in childhood, the people never drank milk. Their stomach enzymes, therefore, were unable to digest that type of food.

It is imperative, Mr. Speaker, that our policies complement the food-producing activities of the Third World, that they be developed in co-operation and harmony with their needs and abilities. While we sometimes look at Canadian agriculture as being extremely efficient, indeed in one respect it is, I suppose, where we are able to produce food better and better each year, but we must recognize that the production methods in developing countries are much more energy efficient than our own. Their return in calories of food versus calories of energy is much better than ours. As energy prices here increase, the cost of foodstuffs will increase and our ability to market them will become more problematical. Therefore, I think our enthusiasm for introducing our methods into the Third World must be developed with that point in mind.

Canada certainly has a role to play, Mr. Speaker, in feeding the people of the world, particularly those experiencing shortfalls. We also must be concerned with the fact that the family farm is being threatened. Many, many times in our task force hearings we heard family farm operators saying it was getting more difficult for them all the time, more difficult for their sons and daughters to take over the operation.

When you looked at it, the average age of farmers on the prairies was going up and up, and the corporate farm was becoming more and more of a reality. When you look at the size of farming operations in Canada over the last 30 years you will notice the size of farms has increased and the number of farms has been halved. Again, we are looking at a new kind of farming and food production.

I would caution the Minister of Agriculture that we have now heard from the agriculture marketing officials from eight provinces who say that they oppose Canagrex, they have some concerns. I look forward to hearing these various representatives in committee voice their concerns.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to recognize that one third of our food processing is done by foreigners. The fact that one third of that very strategic industry is controlled by foreigners is something that we as Canadians ought to be sensitive to. The cost of food will inevitably skyrocket and the serious loss of agricultural land is something we must not overlook.

I read with interest the point made by a previous speaker that 36 acres of good agricultural land is disappearing every day in Ontario. I am not certain of the accuracy of that figure, but it certainly indicates a trend that all of us are very concerned about.

The minister wants speedy passage of this legislation. While I agree that we ought to move with as much speed as possible, we must also take our time because this is too important to rush through the House. It certainly needs fine tuning. There are many questions to be raised and answered before we enthusiastically support this bill. I am looking forward to its getting to committee where we can call on special witnesses to clarify some of the questions raised over the last number of days during this debate.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, we are poised at a very opportune time. We can set the stage for Canadian agriculture to take off and to move into a period of sustained growth. This might be just the kind of catalyst that Canadians and Canadian food producers have been waiting for for some time. Mr. Speaker, this could be Canada's finest hour when it comes to food production.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that I am very glad to enter this debate today because Bill C-85 is of particular importance to the farming industry, given the severe economic problems which exist in some sections of the economy. I know our farmers and producers will be looking closely at this, and for that reason we should look very carefully at the bill and its provisions for relief in a depressed industry. Coming from a riding which predominantly raises beef and hogs, two very depressed industries, Mr. Speaker, anything that would help them would be very welcome indeed.

I am sure all members of the House support the general principle of this bill which establishes a corporation called Canagrex to promote and develop export markets for our agricultural products. It is a long overdue proposal because anything that helps the production and marketing of the industry's products is more than welcome. However, Mr. Speaker, although there are several positive aspects of Bill C-85, and I will go into those in a moment, I believe, as many of my colleagues have said before me, that this bill should be more closely examined in committee. This is necessary because there are a few points which need clarification and there are others which, quite simply, could be changed to better serve our farming industry and its needs.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, one area which needs further scrutiny is the limited size of the budget and staff of the corporation. To put it quite simply, with funds and manpower down to roughly one tenth of the original projections, we have to ask ourselves how or if the corporation will be able to perform the tasks as set out in the bill. The budget was originally set at $62.3 million, with a staff of anywhere from 125 to 175. Now, after the final stamp of cabinet approval, we are faced with a mere skeleton of the original corporation: A budget of $4.1 million with a staff of 12. We have to ask ourselves just how effective this drastically scaled down corporation will be, given the tasks it is expected to undertake.

A brief look at what Canagrex is expected to do will illustrate my point, because it says in the bill that Canagrex can:

(a) purchase agricultural products and food products and package, process, store, ship, insure, import, export or sell or otherwise dispose of products purchased by it;

(b) undertake and assist in promotion of the use of Canadian agricultural products and food products, in improvement of the quality and variety thereof and in publication of information in relation to those activities;

(c) enter into contracts with Canadian companies, co-operatives, marketing boards, associations or other Canadian enterprises or with individuals carrying on business in Canada to act as their marketing representative in marketing agricultural products and food products or to provide managerial, technological, marketing or other counselling and consulting services to them;

(d) enter into contracts with foreign governments to provide agricultural products and food products and services related to agriculture and food and into subcontracts with Canadian enterprises or individuals referred to in paragraph (c) for the provision to foreign governments of any of the products and services that Canagrex has itself contracted to provide;

(e) enter into joint ventures with governments, individuals, corporations or enterprises other than corporations;

(f) make, on the recommendation of the minister and subject to conditions of general application, grants and contributions for the purposes for which it is established;

(g) purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold real and personal property—

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think members will agree these are very wide-ranging powers and we have to wonder how a corporation, like the one proposed, could realistically perform all these activities on an annual budget of $4 million while being administered by only a dozen people. How could a company so small be reasonably expected to compete for international markets?

At a time of so-called economic restraint, we should not be paying lip service to such an important proposal as the one before us today. By slicing the budget and personnel of the proposed corporation, all in the name of austerity, we may not be doing a valued service to the agricultural industry. In its proposed form, Canagrex may simply be too weak and ineffective to stand on its own. By possibly integrating the agency into the Department of Agriculture, perhaps the idea of promoting our exports will be better served. I think it is fair to say that this aspect of the bill needs further attention in committee.

Another question concerning Bill C-85 which needs to be answered is whether this proposed Crown corporation will aid and assist existing Canadian agricultural exporting corporations, or whether it will compete directly with them for foreign markets. How Canagrex fits into the market in this respect is not clear from its terms of reference.

Further problems pop up when we look at how negotiated contracts are supposedly filled by Canadian suppliers. How will it be decided what farmer or group of farmers will supply the needed agricultural products? In times of surplus, will Canagrex buy the excess and then arrange for its export? Can all of this be done with only a $4 million budget?

There are other questions to be answered concerning how Canagrex fits into the new rearrangement of the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The reporting relationship with these departments, along with Agriculture Canada, is not clear and could cause problems of inefficiency and overlapping authority.

There were also questions raised earlier as to whether there should be a separate Crown corporation at all to oversee and handle exports of our agricultural products, or whether this agency may do a better job if, as I just mentioned, it were a division of the Department of Agriculture. I believe this approach has merit, given the fact that Canagrex will be a much smaller body than was first anticipated. By being an agency of Agriculture Canada, Canagrex could have direct access to the resources, expertise and personnel of the department. A Crown corporation may not be necessary or be the best way to export our agricultural products.

Regardless of the form Canagrex takes, there is no question in my mind—and I know the minister is well aware of the fact—that we have some top men with the Department of Agriculture who have the drive and ability to give guidance and leadership to this new agency. If they are given the opportunity by the minister, I personally would have no difficulty in stating that this new body would have no real problems in overcoming those first difficult hurdles.

Other areas of concern centre around how this new proposed corporation, Canagrex, will be kept responsible to Parliament. This is an important concern. We know that a report will be submitted to Parliament each year through the Minister of Agriculture; and this is fine, but is this link strong enough to ensure adequate accountability? Perhaps it is, but if we create another Crown corporation, we must ensure it does not run away on us.

Perhaps one way to keep strict tabs on Canagrex would be to submit its yearly report to committee. We might also provide a sunset clause, which would mean that after five years its mandate would have to be renewed and its progress justified. To have its books open to the Auditor General each year would be another way of keeping control over the corporation.

As I have said before, the concept or principle of Bill C-85 is acceptable to most members. There is no problem with this aspect. Beyond accepting the general principle of promoting our exports, there are a number of provisions within the bill that deserve a passing note. As I said before, any bill that intends to help our agriculture industry and our farmers is always welcome. I believe it is time we entered the international market in a systematic and aggressive way. Recognizing that many of our small farms and farm industries lack any real expertise, knowledge and the financial resources to become effective exporters, the creation of Canagrex is a positive step in the right direction. Canagrex supposedly would enter into joint ventures with agricultural exporters by providing guarantees and loans. Co-ordination of the agriculture industry's exports is highly desirable and long overdue.

This umbrella corporation would also offer another service to our farmers. It would seek out and secure export contracts, long-term contracts, which hopefully would bring about stability of prices, increased production, and a ready-made and expanded market, all of which would hopefully do wonders to bring the industry out of its severe economic recession.

This aspect would be especially helpful to beef producers, given the fact that the prices in this industry are way down, as is the demand for beef itself. Hopefully, with access to new international markets, beef prices would rise to better reflect the cost of production, yet remain competitive internationally. This aspect of C-85 is welcome, as long as the corporation ends up doing efficiently what it is designed to do.

Also, whether we care to admit it or not, the idea of state-to-state negotiated contracts is becoming the fashion these days. More and more countries prefer to handle trade through central agencies because of growing suspicion toward private organizations. Therefore, if we want to be competitive and aggressive in the marketing of our agricultural products abroad, then we must recognize the importance of this new form of marketing.

The idea of going for long-term contracts also warrants support, especially because of the clear benefits of stability of price for our producers as well as a secure market for our products. Also, it is clear that prospective customers are looking for long-term contracts as well so that their problem of supply will be minimized. Thus, a recognition of this aspect of exporting is important and positive.

I have briefly outlined some of the strengths and weaknesses of Bill C-85. I can only say that clause by clause examination in committee will hopefully make a good bill in principle and a better bill in detail.

In this respect, there is no question but that I find myself in agreement with the remarks of my hon. friend and colleague, the hon. member from Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) when he said earlier in this debate that the top priority of Canagrex should be, above everything else, concerned with the promotion and sale of our agricultural products to foreign countries and to fill a gap to make those sales which otherwise would not be made.

The committee stage and the clause by clause study will be most important to the passage of this bill, given some of the very worth-while proposals that have been mentioned during the course of this debate. During the committee hearings, it is very important that we have input, not only from Members of Parliament, but also input from industry, provincial representatives, people from other facets of agriculture, agriculture-related businesses, and other individuals or interested groups. I believe that this kind of input is most important and indeed imperative to make this a truly good bill. It would only remain then for the minister to be prepared to accept constructive changes and amendments, completely setting aside partisan politics. Political biases and decisions made for the sake of politics, and politics alone, would do a great disservice to our farmers who have enough on their minds trying to break even and stay solvent without having to put up with the added frustrations of self-serving politicians. Hopefully, this indeed will be the case during the committee meetings on this important bill, and I look forward to being in attendance at these meetings.

As I have said before, on many occasions, and I will say again, as one who made his living for many years serving the farmers and producers in my profession as a rural veterinarian, and knowing their problems first hand, if we want farmers to keep producing food for us we must ensure they make a buck.

They have to have a profit to survive. Increased export sales of their products would be one way of accomplishing this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to congratulate the member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) on his speech. Indeed, the main objective of this legislation is to promote exports of our agricultural products. It is therefore clear that we are not going to discuss other priorities until we have dealt with the main purpose of the bill. Second, the hon. member referred to the matter of the Crown corporation. I agree that a study is essential. I do not see why he is against the principle of Crown corporations, because in the agricultural sector, the most effective tool we have at the present time is the Canadian Wheat Board.

[English]

The Canadian Wheat Board, as the hon. gentleman knows, is one of the most efficient operations in the international marketplace in terms of marketing grain. I commend to the hon. gentleman a book which was published last year entitled, if I recall correctly, "The Merchants of Grain", which does a pretty good job of describing the international grain market. The only institution not in the private sector which is mentioned as being an efficacious one and a very profitable one is the Canadian Wheat Board. In effect, Canagrex is coming in with a good Canadian history of the use of Crown corporations in terms of marketing effort.

Mr. Thacker: Do you believe that? If you do, you believe in Santa Claus.

● (1620)

Mr. Blais: I believe in that. I have the proof. We can look at Canadian history in terms of the profitable use of Crown corporations in order to fill huge gaps that the private sector has ignored. If there is one gap it has ignored, it is the marketing of agricultural products for exports.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) identified this bill as being one of the major pieces of legislation to be introduced. I fully agree with him. For that I commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). When we were dealing with the initial stages of this bill last week, one member of the opposition had the temerity to state that this Minister of Agriculture had not been very active. I asked for a review of the highlights of this minister's career. I identified 50 major policy issues and initiatives taken by this minister. This measure is one of the most important he has brought forward. It is not only important for today but will be crowned with satisfaction and glory because of the benefits it will provide to Canadian farmers.

I commend and congratulate the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) on his participation in this debate. I can understand his interest. He was chairman of the Special Committee on the National Trading Corporation. That committee recommended the establishment of a national trading corporation. It does not yet exist. However, Canagrex is directly in accordance with the recommendations of that task force. I am pleased that Canagrex is now going to assume an aggressive role in the international marketplace in order to market Canadian products.

There is a tendency is some commercial circles to feel that because we are Canadian, somehow those who need our products will come here to place their orders because we have these wonderful products to sell. Nothing could be further from the truth. The major trading nations today are the most aggressive, most profitable and have the most viable economies.

Japan is always given as an example. The reason for its economic state today is that the Japanese go into the international marketplace and peddle very efficiently. Before introducing a product, they conduct a market analysis to see what requirement there is for the product being contemplated. Once a demand for the product is identified, they encourage its production.

Taiwan is another example. I spoke with a member of the opposition who had made a recent trip to Taiwan. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) indicated quite candidly that he was impressed with the marketing efforts of the Taiwanese. I, too, made a trip to the Middle East and southeast Asia. In Hong Kong, Taiwan and Malaysia the major activity was marketing. Without marketing, you do not liquidate your inventory. If you do not liquidate your inventory, you do not manufacture. Without manufacturing, there is no employment. Without employment there is unemployment.

This sector of the economy is essential. Canada has been an agricultural country since its very beginning. When my ancestors came here in the late seventeenth century, they did not trade furs. They began farming on Isle d'Orleans. Subsequent generations also engaged in farming. The family of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) have occupied the same farm for nine generations. Therefore, we have been an agricultural-based country since our inception, and it shows. As the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap said, we are a net exporter. In 1980 we had a $4.3 billion surplus in agricultural products. As he indicated, without grain there would be a net deficit of close to $300 million in agricultural products. We have a surplus in that area of agricultural production in our international trade stimulated by a very strong Crown agency, the Canadian Wheat Board.

We have a deficit in the other sector because we are not marketing our agricultural products in the way we should. Most international dealings with regard to agricultural products are government to government and are handled through the export supply centre acting on behalf of the Canadian Commercial Corporation. Last year I signed a contract on behalf of the CCC with Algeria for the sale of $66 million worth of canola oil. That was a marketing effort made by Industry, Trade and Commerce. They identified the market and filled the requirement.

Our record in terms of marketing agricultural products has been very aggressive. Canola oil is a typically Canadian product. It is a research and development effort of the Department of Agriculture. Rapeseed, as hon. members know, has a very high acid content. As a result, its marketability was not superior in terms of cereals. The Canadian research and development effort was led by the Department of Agriculture. It reduced the acid content from approximately 40 per cent to about 2 per cent, making that product immensely attractive to the international community. I am advised that to date, in terms of our investment in canola oil research, we have a $100 return for every one dollar invested. In 1961 we received $12 million from canola. In 1981 we received $600 million gross farm cash receipts from canola. In 1943 we only had a few hundred hectares of canola. In 1980, we have over two million hectares of land under canola cultivation.

• (1630)

I am interested in this because I recognize that because of the pride we have in canola, we go out and peddle it. We ought to be doing that and will now do that in other areas. There will be substantial advancement toward the development of new, marketable products in Canada.

I had the good fortune of being in Lethbridge, Alberta last week.

Mr. Thacker: It is a great place.

Mr. Blais: It is a lovely place. It is very similar to North Bay. It has approximately the same population, the same racial mix—not as many French-Canadians, but we might work on that. That particular community is farm-oriented, as you know, because it is in southwestern Alberta, an area most affected by the chinook winds, making it relatively dry and very prone to the growth of winter wheat.

During my visit to Lethbridge I was briefed by the director-general of the western region, Dr. Andrews, about the research and development effort being carried on in Lethbridge. I was subsequently taken through the station by the scientists responsible for various sections. Can you believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is only one of 15 research and development stations? There is $50 million spent in western Canada on research and development every year. I do not know how much the building cost, but I would wager that if you had to replace the research and development station in Lethbridge, it would cost $50 million or $60 million.

At that station they are doing research on basic soil conditions. Of course, their efforts are concentrated on the particular soils found in southwestern Alberta and the conditions affecting that soil. They are studying the adaptability of that soil to new products with regard to the atmospheric conditions in that area.

Of course, they are doing basic research on cereals and the blights, spores and various weaknesses that affect those particular cereals in order to develop resistant varieties. They are doing this with specific application to southwestern Alberta.

They are also involved in a science which I had not heard of before, although I have been bugged by them a lot. The science is called parasitology, which is the study of parasites which affect cattle. I was very interested in this with relation to northern Ontario, because the blackfly is one of the parasites which is undergoing study, especially at Lake Talon, which is infested with blackfly during the summer. It may be possible to control them. I say that lightly because the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) has a cottage on Lake Talon. It is only infested when he is there and it clears up when he leaves.

Mr. Jarvis: Somebody has to speak for the blackflies.

Mr. Blais: The fact is, the blackfly is now being studied to see how we can effectively control it as a pest to the milk-producing cow and other cattle.

In Lethbridge they are also conducting a very serious study in genetic engineering and have had tremendous success in that particular area. Another endeavour which is already providing some profit is the study on raising bees which can pollenate alfalfa.

It was an amazing experience and I invite every member of the House to visit a research station if there is one in their vicinity, to see the kind of Canadian superiority there is in agricultural research and development. As I said, that was only one station out of 15. That one was in western Canada. Sometimes there is a tendency to neglect the federal presence in western Canada—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No way; we cannot get over it.

Mr. Blais: I can say that there is immense progress being made in research and development.

Mr. Thacker: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I presume the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) will support the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) when his estimates come up and he asks for more money for research and development.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you quite candidly that the Minister of Agriculture can count on me as an ally on most issues. I can tell the hon. member that I also sit on the Treasury Board and I am very sensitive to agricultural issues. I can also tell him that I am very impressed by the government's preparation of the agricultural estimates and, of course, the ability of the Minister of Agriculture to defend his departmental estimates.

I should emphasize my own interest in this because there are many farmers in my riding who are all very productive and progressive and wish to be even more successful than they are. Since you also come from northwestern Quebec, Mr. Speaker, you will know that I have ministerial responsibility over an area which combines with your area constituting 24 million acres of arable agricultural land. That massive clay belt which covers northwestern Quebec and northeastern Ontario will provide us with foodstuffs, not only for our domestic market but for the international market, for some time to come.

I am not only interested in the international market for agricultural products, but I am concerned about all our marketing. Canada is a major trading nation but it is not exploiting what it should be exploiting with respect to international trade. The reason for this is that we have not been sufficiently aggressive or had the required interest to seek out those international markets. I say this with all sincerity and honesty.

If one looks at our competitors and the instruments made available to them, one would see how weak and ineffective we are in creating our own instruments. I decry the absence of a national trading corporation which would have the aggressive stance that Canagrex will have. As the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) candidly indicated, this will be a corporation which will be actively engaged in the marketing, promotion and sale of our products as a corporation or through joint ventures or through whatever marketing arrangements it deems fit to make. But it will be in the field of promoting agriculture. Without a stable market the producer will not be encouraged to make the enormous investments now required in agriculture.

In my view, the Minister of Agriculture is one of the best we have ever had in Canada and I know at least one other man who would believe that. I say to the minister that this is a bill which is essential, not only in terms of agriculture but one which is following in the tradition of the Canadian Wheat Board, and will undoubtedly be emulated by the creation of similar instruments to enable Canada to market all of its vast variety of products, goods and services that the Canadian brain has been able to develop.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Blais: Of course.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, the minister said that he was interested, as a member of cabinet, in the problems that exist for farmers. Has the minister looked into the very serious situation which exists for the farmer in relation to the continuation of the family farm within the budget provisions relating to annuities and so on?

Mr. Blais: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, would the minister entertain a further question?

Mr. Blais: Of course, if it is as easy as the last one.

Mr. Oberle: I do not know if it is as easy as the last one, but the minister spoke very eloquently about the Canadian Wheat Board. He said that it is a very effective agency and an exemplary one which other nations should copy. If this agency is so effective, can the minister tell us why it is selling wheat to the European Economic Community, coarse grain, for less than half the price it is resold at, and why it is selling wheat and other coarse grains to Japan, for instance, for less than the price of production in our own country?

• (1640)

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased if the hon. member would provide me with the figures he has. One of the abilities of the Canadian Wheat Board is that it has knowledge of the marketplace in which it is operating, and it is able to liquidate its stock at the best possible price by being very, very secretive about the prices it obtains for its commodities from various sources. I would not want the hon. gentleman thinking that even if I had information—which I do not—concerning how much was obtained in which market by the Canadian Wheat Board for the Canadian farmer, I would let him know, because what I look at is the bottom line—how much the farmer who produces the wheat gets at the end of the year for the wheat he has entrusted to the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Oberle: It is below the cost of production.

Mr. Blais: It is not lower than the cost of production.

Mr. Oberle: Try farming some day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tousignant): Order, please. This is not the question period, and I am afraid we cannot entertain any more questions.

Mr. Blais: Go ahead. I am never asked any in the question period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tousignant): I think the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) should now be given the floor.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is useful to remind ourselves every once in a while of the purpose of second reading debate. A number of speakers have addressed themselves to that without defining the purpose of second reading debate but, as I say, it is useful to remind ourselves of just what we are doing here at this time.

To my way of thinking we are highlighting and underlining some of the peculiarities of the bill before us, some special features it might contain, and drawing them to the attention of those upon whom this bill will have an impact so that they will know what that impact will be.

The consequence of this underlining and highlighting will render the treatment of the bill, when it reaches committee, much more effective, because at that time, because of our underlining and highlighting these features, those upon whom the bill will have an impact will be able to come to the committee and present their particular cases.

One of the first peculiarities which comes to my attention when I examine this bill is in Clause 2, which provides definitions. I will come back to the acronym "Canagrex" in a minute, but according to the definition contained in Clause 2—Canagrex is to be concerned with agricultural products—agricultural products are defined in the following manner:

—"agricultural product" includes animals and every other natural or processed product or byproduct of agriculture, but does not include any product or byproduct that is wholly or mainly a fish or forestry product or byproduct;

By my reading of that, an agricultural product could very well be wheat or flour. Therefore, the question which immediately arises in my mind is why we are to have an instrument of government to do what is already being done by the Canadian Wheat Board. I find that rather peculiar. Or is this to be an instrument by which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) can achieve the purpose he has long been known to hold, of capturing from the person presently responsible in Parliament for the Canadian Wheat Board, Senator Argue, responsibility for the Canadian Wheat Board and including it within Canagrex?

If that is not the case, I am still obliged to ask myself why we should have another agricultural export sales organization. We already have the Canadian Wheat Board. People have been extolling its virtues. Those virtues speak for themselves. They are extollable, and I am glad they are being extolled. But why, if we have the Canadian Wheat Board in place and doing a good job, are we superimposing another organization? Perhaps, as I suggest, the Minister of Agriculture is anxious to get under his umbrella through this legislation something he has wanted to have within his control for a long time, namely, the Canadian Wheat Board. That is the first matter related to this legislation which I think is worthy of being brought to the attention of those who will be affected by Canagrex. I do not think there is any question but that with the majority here, either in its present form or in an amended form this bill will in due course become law.

I note that this bill was brought forward on December 8. That is noted on the front page. This bill was read the first time on December 8, 1981. On January 12, 1982, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went to the theatre in the press building and announced a complete reorganization of the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He created within the Department of External Affairs a branch to be under the general direction of a minister of state for international trade, who previously was in another ministry as a minister of state for international trade under the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray).

Two questions come to my mind as the result of this. On December 8 this bill was brought before us. On January 12 there was a reorganization respecting international trade. Why is the minister responsible for international trade not to be responsible for the Canagrex operation? It relates to international trade. The "ex" in "Canagrex" presumably means export. It might mean exploitation; I am not sure. It might mean exploitation, or does it have some other significance? Could it be exchange? Perhaps it is exchange. There is talk of the possibility of our returning to the barter business.

There is one other niggling matter at the back of my mind. In view of the great concern of the Canadian people about the budget, inflation, unemployment and so forth, why, soon after our return from the Christmas break, are we not dealing with those matters instead of this? Are we just treading water while the government tries to come to grips with the problems of inflation, high interest rates and so forth and until the government brings legislation to the House? I suppose when that is done this matter will be shifted, perhaps, to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley). Perhaps it will be shifted to the Canadian Wheat Board, because it is a matter of selling abroad, and we will have been debating here to no purpose. I wonder if there was consultation. There must have been. I am at a loss to understand how the minister can sit there and smile when there is the threat of someone else taking responsibility for agricultural products being sold outside the country, namely, the Minister of State for International Trade. I believe those two features deserve underlining right away.

There has been an extraordinary reorganization of the Department of External Affairs. The Minister of State for International Trade has moved to another organization and presumably will take over responsibility in Canada missions abroad for agricultural attachés. Admittedly, there are not enough of them. However, I assure the minister that there are a good many foreign service officers who, being generalists, are able to turn their hands to anything along that line.

I have personal experience having been an agent, if you like, for the sale of live beef in Central America. I had to go out to the plane on a Sunday morning in order to make sure that the cattle were offloaded. We managed to get them up to a fair in Liberia in northern Costa Rica. This is a commission that all well-trained foreign service officers are capable of carrying out if anyone were to give them the direction to do it. This was a private enterprise, if I remember correctly, and was sponsored to some extent by the province of Ontario. Ontario beef cattle were sent to Central America for breeding purposes and they were fine animals. I was proud to be able to go to the cattle fair in Costa Rica and tell the farmers that they were from Canada.

I do not believe this government has really tried to make use of the facilities that are available abroad. I hope the minister who is now in charge of international trade will do so. Perhaps he could borrow some of the specialists from the Department of Agriculture. This was one of the aspects of this great melting pot process which took place on January 12 when so much was incorporated into the Department of External Affairs.

If this organization is not going to be incorporated into the Canadian Wheat Board or absorbed by the Canadian Wheat Board, then I think the minister has to explain, either here when he winds up debate, or in committee, the relationship in his own mind between it and the reorganization of the Department of External Affairs. I think that is only fair, because when there are two separate entities bent on accomplishing the same purpose there is bound to be conflict. I do not think we need conflict in this matter and I hope the minister will be able to explain this particular aspect of the bill. Will Canagrex operate on its own abroad or through the missions abroad? Is there an element of jealousy or a feeling that the Department of External Affairs or the trade commissioner service has not been doing its job properly? I think we deserve an explanation from the minister.

There is one other feature of this bill which deserves to be underlined and indeed I have underlined it very clearly in my copy of the bill. We must remember that Canagrex presumably means "Canadian agricultural exports".

The other suggestion I made was somewhat facetious. Export is its main purpose. That being so, I wonder why we should have the following provision in Clause 14(1)(g):

purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold real and personal property for actual use by Canagrex in the operation and management of its business and

Clause 14(1)(i) reads:

as additional security for any loan made or guarantee given under this act, take, hold and sell mortgages on real and personal property and any other security;

Is Canagrex going to take on the mortgages of farmers? Is it going to deal with real estate mortgages in the urban centres? Is it going to assume some of the mortgage lending needs of our supermarket areas? Why is it dealing in mortgages in this country when its purpose is to promote the export of agricultural products?

Clause 14(1)(j) reads:

acquire, by foreclosure or other proceedings or in any other manner, and hold any real and personal property mortgaged to Canagrex . . .

What is Canagrex getting involved in, Mr. Speaker? Is it the export of agricultural products or the demolition of some of Canada's farms? I think we are entitled to ask that question about these outrageous powers. I am entitled to ask but I am not sure I am going to get an answer. I hope the minister will get around to it.

Mr. Whelan: You will get a satisfactory answer if you give me time.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is one reason why I am underlining these particular features of the bill. I think they require some clarification so that those who may be affected or feel that they could be affected will present their objections or support at committee stage.

More than one speaker on this side of the House has mentioned the depressed state of our agricultural industry. I come from a rural and urban riding, Mr. Speaker. I should like to remind you that the name Saanich is an Indian name meaning rich soil. It could be related to the riding in the province of Quebec called Terrebonne or Terreriche. Saanich means rich soil, and when it was originally in the hands of the Indians it was a food-producing area. A lot of it is being black-topped now and some of it is being taken out of production, as the minister knows. From the smile on his face I think he was expecting this part of my speech.

The minister and his officials say that it has to be taken out of production because of the presence in some soil of a parasite known as the golden nematode.

Mr. Whelan: Out of production for certain products only.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is correct. Potatoes are a host crop and I believe tomatoes are also a host crop. The minister and his officials know a great deal more about the golden nematode than anyone else in Canada, I suppose. If it is as dangerous as the minister claims, perhaps he should organize a meeting of those people in the riding of Esquimalt-Saanich who are affected and explain the danger that he foresees. He could do that in a variety of ways. He could get in the jet and go out there. It is a great place to be at this time of year, particularly in view of the weather outside here tonight.

If he cannot go out there I suggest that he could use the conference call technique. This is a sample procedure and requires just a little bit of organization. There is an experimental station very near the area of the riding where the adulterated soil is. This station is very highly lauded by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais).

The minister should organize in the experimental stations in Saanich a meeting during which he could talk with farmers. This would enable farmers to raise their questions, and he could explain exactly why this particular soil was removed from potato production. Also he could explain to them that he is attempting to organize some form of compensation, not for removing that soil from production for all time, but possible compensation for some of the machinery farmers have purchased for potato production, or assistance, if they require it, to purchase machinery for other products such as the crops which are being suggested by his officials. He could also explain the dangers which he and his officials foresee.

First, how dangerous is golden nematode? Is it as dangerous as some people maintain? Farmers in that riding say that there is no place in the world where it has been exterminated and that there are a number of places in the world where potatoes are still being grown in nematode-infected soil for export. If these stories are not correct, the minister has an obligation to explain it to them. If it is as dangerous as he insists, could he explain some of the consequences of golden nematode spreading in the immediate area or to the mainland? These are some of the matters which the minister should take up with farmers in that area by means of a conference call.

I have heard it said that if the soil reached the mainland, the agricultural area of the Lower Fraser Valley—and heaven forbid—there would be a danger that all motor traffic through the area to the American border would be stopped at the border and would either be disinfected or sterilized by some kind of steam treatment. This would be very harmful to the tourist industry of British Columbia and to the free movement of people back and forth across the border. Will the minister give an undertaking to explain these dangers, if they exist, to the farmers of the area by one means or another? He could explain them fully on a face-to-face basis or on a telephone-to-telephone basis; he could use some of the available modern techniques to do it. What about the movement of people from the two ferry terminals within the riding, the one to Anacortese from Sidney and the one from Swartz Bay to Tsawwassen? Would those two terminals suffer from such treatment if golden nematode got out of hand?

All farmers—and the ones in my area are no exception—are reasonable people. If they are convinced that what they are doing or what they might do will be harmful to other people, they would see the reasoning behind the restrictions placed upon their planting. There is an element of urgency which I think is worth drawing to the attention of the minister. About the first of March is when the potato crop is planted. If farmers are not convinced by that time of the various dangers that have been alleged, about which they hear and should learn in a convincing manner or by the means I have suggested, the risk is that they will again be planting crops which might have harmful effects. I would not like to see harmful effects spread into other areas, if indeed they are as harmful as the minister and his officials suggest.

There is potential within that riding, by the very nature of its soil richness, for Saanich to be an exporter of small vegetables and fruits as it used to be. Not only because of the tarmacking and the blacktopping but because of the quarantine imposed in the area, it is no longer able to expand as it should. I would like to see it expand as it should. I am sure the minister would manage, with officials at his elbow, by some telephonic means of consultation and back and forth discussion, to persuade farmers, if these dangers exist. This area could become as important an exporter of small fruit and vegetables as it once was.

That area has the good fortune of a mild climate. It is not mild all through the winter, but it is mild to the extent that gas-heated greenhouses, for example, could increase the amount of vegetables in the area for export. Why should there not be some encouragement of that particular form of industry? The greenhouse industry used to be very important. One sees all over the peninsula greenhouses with just frames and broken glass because the government has not taken the lead which the Minister of Supply and Services suggested is the hallmark of this particular minister—the leader of the agricultural community of Canada. Unfortunately, some areas of Canada have not seen that leadership.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member would not want to misinform the House. I have talked with representatives of the agricultural society in Saanich. I have met with this group of farmers in public meetings to discuss the golden nematode problem. I was on the telephone just about an hour ago; that is why I was smiling when the hon. member raised this subject. There is nothing on which we have spent more money. We have spent a minimum of $5 million on this one area. I made a decision last fall—and I am perfectly willing to try to explain it even further—so that farmers could plant different crops for production in that area this year.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I hardly think that was a point of order, but I am glad for the clarification. This would be a good time to question the minister. I am delighted the minister assured me that these conversations have taken place.

Mr. Whelan: The conference call has not taken place.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Perhaps we are getting somewhere. Maybe I am getting through to the minister and perhaps by this means I am also getting through to farmers. If I could bring together those two elements, chances are the minister would find that Saanich could be restored to the traditional role it played in the south of Vancouver Island as a place of rich agricultural production.

With that message and with particular underlinings of some of the oddities in the bill, I hope I have not offended the minister, particularly by suggesting that he wanted to take the Canadian Wheat Board within his ample embrace through Canagrex or to have Canagrex attached to the Wheat Board. I am still puzzled, given the fact that there is a Wheat Board which deals with the export market of wheat products, why we require a new agricultural export agency in the form described here which will be buying and selling mortgages, dealing with foreclosures and various other things. I do not think that is really the role of an agricultural export agency. I do no think the Wheat Board gets involved in those things. If the Wheat Board is taken into the Canagrex agency, I hope that it does not go into the foreclosure business. The foreclosure business has no business in the export of agricultural products.

Mr. Al MacBain (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank all members who have spoken in support of Canagrex, Bill C-85, and in doing so have raised various questions and issues which I shall try to clarify.

Let me briefly recap. Canagrex will be an organization exclusively devoted to searching out and helping to achieve the realization of new agricultural and food export opportunities. As outlined in Bill C-85, it is to be an operational body providing loan and equity funds, undertaking co-ordination and facilitation functions, providing project acceleration grants, and where necessary undertaking normal trading house operations.

The whole nation benefits to the extent that Canada's balance of trade and employment is improved. Groups of farmers will benefit from its ability to assist in the assembly, transport and sale of products. As assured, food and agricultural export markets can be demonstrated to producers and processors, they will produce on a commercial basis to meet this increased demand.

Canagrex will be a highly flexible tool, rounding out the various instruments and measures which the government has put in place in recent years to achieve security of supply and incomes for farmers.

Canagrex will work with existing firms and institutions to expand exports by promoting commercially viable projects and entering into joint ventures.

As indicated, the purpose of Canagrex is to increase the volume and variety of agricultural and food exports from Canada on a sustained basis. In some instances this may mean guaranteeing a loan; providing a grant or contribution; developing new facilities; providing a training program; or bringing together existing expertise in Canada. For example, Canagrex will in no way interfere in or interrupt the progress which has been accomplished in the area of pork exports by private industry and the provincial hog marketing boards. The objectives of Canagrex will be to work with the exporters to investigate the potential for Canadian pork in new markets, in developing the infrastructure necessary to enter a new market, and to provide needed follow-up and back-to-back contracts if required. There is often a need to meet increased competition from our competitors, particularly as related to credit. Canagrex could provide a long-term contract together with supporting credit arrangements.

Members have asked how independent Canagrex will be from the government. The responsibility of the board of directors is clearly noted on page 3 of the bill in Clause 6, which provides that the board——shall direct and manage the affairs of Canagrex.

Canagrex will, of course, be expected to operate within the framework of Canada's international agreements and policies. It will be responsible to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and provision is made for directive powers as noted on page 8, Clause 14(3), of Bill C-85. It will be accountable to Parliament and its audit by the Auditor General of Canada will also be included, together with a summary of the capital budget of Canagrex which must be tabled in Parliament as noted in Clause 36(5), on page 16.

Some members have been concerned with the size of the staff of Canagrex. It will not be a big bureaucracy. In addition to the 11-man board of directors, there will be a small full-time staff of whom the president will be the chief executive officer, supported by two vice-presidents and the necessary professional and technical staff.

The annual corporate plan of Canagrex will be a key planning and accounting mechanism. This rolling three-year plan will be updated annually, although it is not foreseen that there should be radical changes from year to year. The annual plan will outline the cost, timing and financing of proposed projects in order to achieve commodity and country objectives of Canagrex.

To assist Canagrex in formulating its corporate plan, the minister will be able to draw upon the expert advice provided through the policy advisory committee, which is an expert committee representing all the provincial governments, the farm and food organizations and the business community.

I should note, Mr. Speaker, that in 1980 Canadian exports of agricultural products other than grains or dairy products to the Third World and countries with centrally planned economics totalled only $650 million. Canagrex, working with individual farms, boards and co-operatives, should be able to expand this trade significantly by negotiating directly with the state trading enterprises in many of these countries.

Some of my colleagues expressed concern that the initial funding of $12.3 million earmarked for Canagrex may be insufficient to allow it to play an effective role. I do not think this is the case. Canagrex will proceed step by step and prove itself as it goes along. Once it has done so, it will be up to Parliament to provide it with the resources required to do the job.

Finally, it can be said that the Canagrex bill is innovative and visionary. It proposes a new direction for Canadian agriculture. The bill invites all sectors of Canadian agriculture into the arena of world trade. In the past, world trade in agriculture was basically in the domain of grain farmers. As a result, Canadian agriculture has not experienced its full potential. This potential is now within its reach.

In my riding of Niagara Falls, the tender fruit belt of Canada, the new bill will be welcome. I am sure that the grape growers' action committee in my area, the grape juice producers and the wine industry will take full advantage of Canagrex to expand their markets worldwide. I hope that the tender fruits and wines of the Niagara peninsula will soon be well known products around the world.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak on second reading debate of Bill C-85. Yesterday I spoke on second reading of Bill C-88 concerning the Farm Credit Corporation. Today's bill concerns Canagrex.

Before I start my major address, I want to respond to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) who praised the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) so generously for over 50 major policy areas, many of which we agreed have been beneficial for agriculture and for which he has had the support of this party. But the Minister of Supply and Services left the very clear impression that the agricultural community was strong, buoyant and forging ahead in Canada because of the Minister of Agriculture.

If that is so, is the Minister of Agriculture prepared to take responsibility for the high interest rate policy of the government, for the high deficit in excess of $90 billion and for the rate of inflation? Is the Minister of Agriculture, or perhaps even the Minister of Supply and Services, prepared to take responsibility for the fact that, while inflation is affecting all of the western industrialized countries, Canada's place in the standard of living hierarchy has, since the commencement of this Liberal administration, dropped from second place to thirteenth place?

So while all countries are suffering inflation and high interest rates, Canada has suffered even more. That seems strange, Mr. Speaker, when you realize that we are a small country of some 23 million people sitting on the assets of half a continent, with resources of unlimited scope, while the 114 million people of Japan sit on a rock in the middle of the ocean and beat us on every count. Perhaps, Sir, it has something to do with the policies of this government, and not as the Minister of Supply and Services claimed.

I wonder if the minister would agree that, while the family of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr.

Lalonde) have been on their farm for some nine generations, they will not be there nine generations from now because of Crown corporations and the capital gains tax. I would be prepared to place a bet with the Minister of Supply and Services to put money into a trust account which would be released in as little as three generations. Because I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that with the capital gains tax that farm will not be in their family three generations from now. The Minister of Supply and Services should give some thought to that, because had there been a capital gains tax throughout the nine generations, it would not be in that family today. It is there because there was no tax on capital or the land.

Canada does not need a tax on capital, Mr. Speaker. We are a young and developing nation and we should still be charging up the hill rather than following the socialist policies of the Liberals and NDP. They have made us old before our time. We are slipping downhill to oblivion as a result of those policies, not climbing up and building so that the young people coming along can genuinely turn this country into a great nation.

Sir, the Minister of Supply and Services spoke very glowingly of the Canadian Wheat Board. That has to be the greatest hogwash I have ever heard. It is again an example of a minister—

Mr. Blais: It is a Tory creation.

Mr. Thacker: —speaking fondly of something they have never experienced.

Why does he not come out and live on a farm for a while? I will take him to a number of farmers who are hurting because the Canadian Wheat Board, stressing the export of wheat, has hurt production of barley, oats, canola—his beloved canola that we have done so well on in our research and development. The very fact of the Wheat Board controlling the railways, the allocation of cars and quotas has hurt farmers who produce other crops. It has led to enourmous inequities between farmers who produce on the dry land where I come from, where we produce 20 bushels per acre every second year as compared to the irrigated farmer who can produce 75 bushels an acre every year. Yet that great Crown corporation, the Canadian Wheat Board, applies the same quota. It might be two bushels an acre, even if you are producing 75 as compared to 20.

That is a fundamental inequity which has hampered the development of agriculture in the west. Yet the minister stands in this House and waxes eloquent. It is a bit like people who have never experienced socialism, Mr. Speaker. I invite members who challenge this to come out to my riding and meet with new Canadians from Hungary, Poland, from nations that have lived under socialism, because I can tell them that people are trying to get out of even that great country the United Kingdom en masse because of the growing influence of the government and socialism.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, does the hon. gentleman who critizes the Wheat Board recognize that for the five months ending December 31, 1981, it managed to increase exports of grain by one million tons, so that the reading now is 10.83 million tons?

Mr. Taylor: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Thacker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is very true, but it could have been even better than that.

Mr. Blais: Oh, come on.

Mr. Thacker: And it would have been better than that had the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) still been Minister of Transport.

The only sensible thing the Minister of Supply and Services said, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly want him to have this feather in his cap, is that the government should be spending more money on research and development. That is absolutely correct. The government's record is atrocious, and it is not because of the Minister of Agriculture.

An hon. Member: They spend the money on advertising.

Mr. Thacker: Yes. They should give up spending all this money on advertising, these plucked geese flying across the screen all the time, and put it into research.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Remember that.

Mr. Thacker: He gave an example of canola research returning some $100 per dollar invested. In fact, in other areas of agriculture the return on investment is 482 to one. That is the benefit of research on new grains and varieties. So the minister really needs to go back to school.

Well, Sir, we are discussing the principle of Canagrex, and I think when we do that we need to ask: why is this bill needed? By creating another Crown corporation, we create more government in our lives. In fairness and openness let us discuss it. Do we need another Crown corporation and more government in our lives?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Altogether—no!

Mr. Thacker: It is clear from this bill that the Liberals believe we do. It is also absolutely clear as a matter of ideology that the NDP believes we need more government in our lives. I suppose it is a question of balance. Where do we draw the line between the way most of our western nations were 100 years ago when there was no government control? They were all private corporations. If that is the capitalism of the seventeenth century, none of us wants to go back to that. We are not talking about that. However, on the other side, we need to realize that in places like the United Kingdom, France increasingly so, Poland and Russia, they are all, in effect, Crown corporations; there is no private enterprise. None of us would want to live in either of those extremes. So it is a question of balance.

I must say that I thought the Liberals, up to about ten or 15 years ago, were always able to strike a reasonable balance. Now, clearly, they have made a quantum leap to the left where they genuinely believe a centrally planned government can handle everything concerned with our way of life. With that we disagree. We need to ask the question, Mr. Speaker, is Canada really better for having over 400 Crown corporations? Before we had those 400 Crown corporations, the vast bulk of which have come into existence in the last 15 years, Canada was clearly on a rising curve. We were a growing nation, one that achieved the second highest standard of living in the entire world under that system. However, in the last 15 years we notice chinks in the armour and Canada's relative position is dropping when we compare ourselves with the other western industrialized nations. Is that because of Crown corporations? Maybe it is. I think it is a factor.

Mr. Anguish: Suncor, TWA.

Mr. Thacker: Is it because of other policies? We know that at least 25 per cent of new private enterprise will fail within the first year. That is a natural thinning out process caused by inefficiency or bad management. We have 400 Crown corporations, and under that rule you would think that perhaps 100 would have failed. But they never fail when they are involved with government. No matter how inefficient, they go on and on and we pour in more taxpayers' dollars. Look at the figures, Mr. Speaker. This House wrote off over $600 million in order to balance the books of Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited, and the same amount for the St. Lawrence Seaway. Over $800 million every few years for the CNR has to be written off. That is taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker. That is money taken from the hides of Canadians, from the miners who have black lung disease and have to give over 50 per cent of their income to others who decide how it is spent—that is, we here in Parliament. To my way of thinking, that is a very heavy onus. I dislike the fact that we are taking other people's money. They are shortening their lives to pay us tax dollars, and we are deciding how to spend it. I believe that the Liberal government does not apply proper judgment or exercise control and self-restraint in the expenditure of this money.

• (1730)

Another reason Crown corporations are so dangerous is that they really erode the tax base so that there is not a fair sharing of the tax load in this country. We have over 400 Crown corporations, the vast bulk of which have very special tax rules and do not pay any income tax. That throws an extra burden on those truly productive people in our society, such as the miners who are digging up new coal for export to bring money into the country, the grain farmers, and the grape growers in the Niagara peninsula. Those are people who are genuinely producing something new which we sell to other countries. We take their money and, as a result, we have a higher standard of living. These Crown corporations erode that tax base and we should be very concerned about that. Unfortunately, the government is aided and abetted in that lack of concern to a tremendous degree by the NDP.

I want to deal with the situation facing agriculture because the government has led the Canadian people to believe that Canagrex will really solve the farmers' problems and will somehow put more money into their pockets. We know, and I am sure Your Honour realizes as a producer, that the only way to put more money in farmers' pockets is to give them a better price for their products. The reality is that we have been selling our western grain at less than the cost of production. I know that for a fact, as a past producer. I am sure it is true with grapes and other agricultural products.

For example, the fertility of the western great plains has dropped by 50 per cent over the last 75 years. In short, when we first turned over that sod, it had much grass in it, as the grass had been fallowing for a long period of time it was very fertile soil. We have been producing grain from that soil and exporting that grain at a price; but the export price has never given us enough money to put enough return back into the land by way of proper rotation of green crops which would keep that fertility up. As a result, our western plains are now 50 per cent less fertile than they were 75 years ago. In another 15, 20 or maybe 50 years, our plains will clearly become a great, huge dustbowl. It must be stopped, and the only way it can be stopped is by increasing export prices. The government should be stressing that idea rather than the idea of an export corporation, because to produce more grain for export will simply mean a faster depletion of our soil.

We need more money, and that is where the government should be directing its attention, but it will not do so. It will not even officially talk to the United States, to Argentina and to Australia, the other major exporters of grain, concerning the situation. It has been left to hon. members on our side, such as the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). He singlehandedly raised the concept with these grain exporting nations which at least agreed to charge a sufficient price to ensure that the land is returned to its former level of fertility. I would rather see our Minister of Agriculture directing his attention to that.

I would also like to see him directing his attention to providing more money for research and development. We would all be prepared to help him in any way possible. The Minister of Supply and Services has noted that we have a great research facility in my riding of Lethbridge which has made a tremendous contribution to Canada. Governments of all stripes and all parliamentarians should be proud that they have allocated money for that purpose. However, there is no doubt but that the plant is becoming more obsolete, the equipment is becoming more obsolete, and we simply need more money. We have an animal disease research centre where scientists are working under conditions which are rapidly becoming intolerable. The Minister of Agriculture wants to have a new building there, I certainly do, and so do all of the scientists.

Mr. Whelan: J. J. is going to help us.

Mr. Thacker: I suspect that "J. J.", as the Minister of Agriculture says, will help us. I will certainly write a letter to solicit his help. However, we need to allocate more money, and I am not sure that an allocation for an export corporation is a good idea at this time when I compare it to the needs of research and development in our country. We cannot get around this fact.

Mr. Whelan: I rise on a point of order. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, again, that this hon. member would not want to misinform the House. However, we are very much aware that agricultural extension is a provincial responsibility, although we do get involved federally sometimes. However, if we were to use all the scientific knowledge we have right now concerning soil conservation, proper cultivation and seeds, as well as all our available technology, we could increase grain production on the presently cultivated land in western Canada by 30 per cent in two years. Some farmers are using all of that technology, but it is not getting through to every farmer. Therefore, when we speak about research, there is a tremendous potential for increasing productivity which is not being developed to its fullest because the technology and scientific knowledge is not being used by all.

Mr. Thacker: Yes, that is true. This is the type of exchange of information we should have more frequently between government and opposition members. However, what the minister has not said, although I know he knows it to be true, is that while that technology is not being used, the main handicap in western Canada for the export of the grain is the transportation system. For years and years we have not been able to get an allocation of public moneys federally, or provincially for that matter, to expand the railway system. During past election campaigns the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has promised doubletracking, but it has never led to a doubletrack.

Mr. Huntington: What are we going to do about the Crow rate?

Mr. Thacker: The real question I wanted to address concerns the setting up of this export corporation. I am not at all convinced in my mind that it is necessary, because Canada is really an importer of foods. I am not saying this for any ulterior motive; Western grain brings in foreign exchange, but considering all the other agricultural products, Canada is not an exporter of food at all, it is an importer. There are many other things we could be doing in the nation to make ourselves self-sufficient before we even begin to discuss exporting.

For example, there are many natural gas lines going out of Alberta and within Alberta, and every few miles there is a compressor station which has as a byproduct the enormous release of energy and heat. Presently that byproduct is simply vented into the air; but at every one of those stations across this whole country, and now reaching into the Atlantic region, we could have three or four acres of tomatoes or cucumbers. That would be something the government and the department could do to recapture energy to produce food.

Mr. Whelan: Flowers.

Mr. Thacker: Every tomato that we produce here rather than importing them from California or Mexico would generate money to circulate in Canada. The multiplier effect is four or five times, and we could generally get going back up the hill again rather than down the other side, which is where we are now.

Again, rather than putting this money into an export corporation, why could we not allocate our resources to making the farm more efficient? Why have farmers abandoned the tradition of turning their land over to the next generation? I keep repeating this again and again; I am sure the Minister of Agriculture is as tired of hearing it as I am tired of having to say it. However, by doing away with income-averaging annuities and the capital gains reserve, government has genuinely interfered with a very traditional way for farmers to take the land from one generation and give it to the next.

A farmer always cherishes his land. He may be sitting on half a million to $1 million worth of land, but he does not see himself as being a millionaire. He genuinely sees himself as being a steward of that land. Farmers have this peculiar attitude, which is not generally held, that they want their land to go to the next generation. They get a genuine feeling for the land. I guess that feeling comes from having spent so many years on the land, having dust blown into their eyes. Oftentimes their fathers and grandfathers are lying out in the back corner of the rear forty. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources probably has nine generations buried on the land. That gives the farmer a special feeling for the land. By first of all imposing capital gains tax, and then by doing away with these traditional ways of transferring land, we are interfering with that feeling. I believe we will be worse off as a nation when we get down the road and there is nothing left but corporations. Many will probably be Crown corporations. We will not have the same feeling of productivity.

The other day when I said we should not think that we will always be a food exporter, I was very serious. The hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) thought I was being facetious and extreme. I was not at all. He should know that his homeland, Poland, was once an enormous exporter of food. It had private ownership of land and the infrastructure for providing farm input, fuel and the grain delivery system.

Poland exported food until the state came in with centrally planned policies. They do not have the land. Over 90 per cent of the land in Poland is still privately owned. However, once the produce leaves the land, it gets into a centrally planned bureaucracy. Poland is now a massive food importer. I am naive enough to believe the reason for that is because of the centrally planned aspect. The bureaucrats are undoubtedly well-intentioned and intelligent. They tend to make decisions about climatic factors and problems. There are so many variables it really makes that impossible. If that were left to a million farmers, they would individually make decisions within the context of their own farms which would lead to a wiser result than the decision made by the central bureaucracy.

We see this every year in Russia. The people there are hard working. On the 2 per cent or 3 per cent of the land they are entitled to, one-acre plots, they produce more than the massive state communal farms. This is because the farms are theirs.

They can make decisions when to plant and when to harvest. The bureaucracy in Moscow decides when the state farms will do that. They decide that there will be so many million hectares of wheat and so many of barley. It does not matter if there is too much rain for wheat and the farmers cannot get it seeded until July. They do not have the capacity to switch from wheat to barley. The individual farmers can do that. That is why the state systems fail.

This is why we have such a great need in Canada. We have to defend to the last person in this House when we see governments intruding in that field. I am sure that hon. members opposite do not want to see our agricultural heritage hurt.

When I look at the situation as a relatively new member, I see too many Crown corporations and too many decisions being taken by central bureaucracies. It does not matter whether a government is Liberal, NDP or Conservative. In some provinces with Conservative governments, there is too much government interference with the efficient production of food and its distribution.

When this bill gets to committee, I will want to ask questions about that. Do we really need an export corporation in view of the fact the world population is going to increase so massively? Other countries are becoming more and more centrally planned and are losing their food production capacity.

We will not need to go into the world markets in order to export. They will be beating down our doors. We should be spending our efforts planning and organizing within our nation to become self-sufficient and to produce exports. We will not have to hit the streets to sell. Other countries will bang our doors down; there is no doubt about it.

How will this corporation operate? Will it buy outright for cash? If so, what type of mark-up will it have? Will the corporation pay tax or will another Crown corporation be established which will knock out one, two or six private corporations which presently export food? If it knocks them out, we will lose the tax revenue from those export corporations and their employees.

Will this new replacement corporation pay income tax? If so, how will it be calculated? If it does not pay tax, that will create an unfair burden on the private export corporations which pay tax as well as individual Canadians. We will all have to kick in extra money to keep the corporation going.

The remuneration for new officers will be set by the governor in council. Many on this side, and I am sure many government members, believe that publicly-paid salaries should be public information. Possibly the minister could include that in this bill. We should try that. I am sure that no one from the agricultural community working in this Crown corporation would object to their salary being disclosed, just as the salaries of members of Parliament are. Let us put that in as an amendment.

The powers under Clause 14 are wide enough to permit Canagrex to take over processing and wholesaling plants and industries. That will take it beyond being an export corporation. That clause should be looked at very carefully. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture can tell us whether it is the intention of the government to have Canagrex expand into the producing and processing plants.

Will Canagrex go one step further, become vertically integrated, buy land and produce food? Clause 14 gives it that type of scope if future directors and future governments of whatever stripe want it to go that way. If we do not want that to happen, let us cut back on that clause so that Canagrex will be a genuine export corporation. We will leave it to future generations and future governments to debate in this House whether they want to take over the production of food.

There are many other matters I could speak about. I would like the minister to refer to an article in the January 27 Globe and Mail headlined "Public misled on Export Plan, Agriculture officials tell Ottawa." We will follow up on that in order to find out the response of the minister. In many ways it is a genuine criticism.

Maybe we should have a sunset law for this corporation so that after four or five years Parliament could take a genuine look at this corporation, rather than the existing situation where the 400 and some corporations can just go and on and on. Why not break with tradition? The agriculture committee has a special relationship that often supersedes politics. Let us be innovative in this area and see how it works. Let those who do not understand agriculture follow us. The minister nods his head yes. I hope he will follow up on that. That is all I will say at this time.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to speak in Parliament on a bill related to agriculture. Agriculture is probably the backbone and mainstay of the economy in my constituency. I take particular pleasure in having the opportunity to talk on Bill C-85 which creates Canagrex. The purpose of the bill is to promote the export of agricultural production.

Many people would say this is a concept that is long overdue. We can agree that we are in a position and time frame where we need a more aggressive world marketing system. We need to be aggressively marketing our Canadian agriculture products. We hope this will help the ailing commodity prices Canadian farmers receive. We know that low farm produce prices do not help our farmers, they help the consumers. How long can subsidization by the farmers last?

In the past little while the beef farmers have been severely hurt. Of course, there are a number of factors. One has been the increased demand for beef in our country. This will probably continue. We have now realized that we cannot depend solely on domestic markets, but must get involved in an aggressive world farm marketing program.

• (1750)

Last summer I had the opportunity to visit Taiwan. It was quite an experience. This country actually comprises fewer square miles than my entire riding. In that small country they have a population of over 65 million people, but what intrigued me was that with a population of that size, I am sure they would have great requirements for a lot of the products we produce in Canada. Yet I found, when talking to Taiwanese trade officials, that in the last decade there has not been a Canadian trade official in that country. What was equally astounding was that the Americans had just been there and had completed setting up a trade office, one that was becoming increasingly busy and promoting American agricultural products, thus creating an opportunity for American farmers to make sales. At the same time as I was there, the Australians were there. What were they doing? They were working on setting up an Australian trade office in Taiwan.

Where were the Canadians? They are not even in the picture yet. Taiwan is a country of 65 million people, a country which I am sure could generate a great demand for our products, yet we Canadians are not even there. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill does emphasize the importance of circumstances such as that and just how important it is for us to get out there and aggressively start marketing our grain products, which in turn will assist farmers in this country. That has not been happening in the past, I suggest, as much as it should have. It is my hope that this kind of legislation will spur that sort of activity, which will in turn benefit all of our farmers.

One of my concerns is that I remain unconvinced that our agricultural problems in Canada have been given the kind of priority that they need. We know that this particular aspect of the problem in agriculture has been promised for at least two elections. It was given cabinet approval, I believe, last February. That is almost a year ago. So we can see that the action on it has not come very quickly.

I have a few concerns about the bill which I would like to address. I see that the time for adjournment is running quite close, so I will get into this area quite quickly. One of my concerns relates to increasing government intervention in agriculture. My colleague from Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) discussed this and talked about some of the problems and concerns he has in this connection. I, too, share such areas of concern.

For example, I wonder why Canagrex is being set up as a Crown corporation. Something that has become apparent to me, as a new member of this House, is that a Crown corporation is not subject to the same scrutiny, to the same questioning, that a Member of Parliament can exercise with respect to a regular government department. Once you have a Crown corporation involved, you cannot ask the same kinds of questions and you cannot get the same type of information.

Another matter of concern to me is that instruments which regulate our farmers are becoming more and more pervasive in our country. What we have to recognize is that the regulations that are placed upon our farmers, or any other sector of our economy, as they become outdated are seldom revoked or replaced. They are left in place and more and more are added to them, until we end up with such a broad base of regulations governing our various agencies and farmers that the massive bureaucracy people are forced to constantly confront constitutes an intrusion into their farming methods and farm planning.

Some regulations, of course, do help the farmers and provide them with a few things, such as greater bargaining power, some income security and so on. But what becomes primary and very focal, and is something we often tend to forget, is that our farmers must remain the focal point of our legislation. In other words, all of our agricultural legislation should be designed to meet the needs of the farmers rather than assist the government and the bureaucracy which are behind those regulations. Too often we have seen that happening, where the bureaucracy grows and begins to function for its own benefit and streamlines its own systems at the expense of the very people it was first designed to help.

It is my hope, of course, that Canagrex will be of benefit to our farmers, and I think that is something all of us will want to consider very closely as we go into committee stage and examine the legislation in much more detail.

My colleague from Lethbridge-Foothills also touched on a very significant area, the exporting of our agricultural products. In western Canada the fundamental concern we have to address before we can even talk about exports beyond our borders is getting our products from our farms to the port. The grain transportation system in western Canada has long been inadequate. It has long been less than satisfactory. Recently we have heard talk of $3 billion being set aside for western transportation, but as yet we have seen no evidence of it. So far we have not seen any of that money being spent to improve the western grain transportation system.

My riding is a prime example of some of the difficulties people are having in the area of grain transportation. In my constituency we have three communities in which farmers are facing hauls, to take their wheat or barley from the farm to the elevator, involving a distance of 120 kilometres. Of course, that is all done at their expense. And it is not only expense which comes with the cost of fuel, truck depreciation costs, maintenance and so on, but also expense in terms of his time. Often the farmer is in a position where he has to ship his grain at a time when he is very busy on his farm. So you see a farmer having to travel 120 kilometres and leave his farm idle while he does so. The average distance from farm to terminal in Canada is only 20 kilometres, so we can see that the transportation aspect becomes very serious to these people who are trying to get their grain out to the ports before Canagrex can even begin to consider exporting it.

There have been many studies done about this very problem. There was the Hall commission report which talked about off-line elevators and how they might be designed to assist our farmers. But again, nothing came of it. So the farmers who have this transportation problem have experienced it now for several years. They still have it and it looks as though they will continue to have it for a long period of time. In the meantime the government is saving millions of dollars by reason of not having to spend money on infrastructure in those areas; the railways are saving a lot of money because they are not required to make any capital expenditures; and the elevator companies as well are saving money because the farmers are absorbing the full cost of travelling those distances. So the only ones that are paying are the farmers, those people in these times who can least afford it.

Those costs become extremely important, Mr. Speaker. I received a letter recently from someone in my riding which, I think, demonstrates very clearly what I have been saying. One of my constituents wrote to me and talked about the cost of producing his crops. His input costs per acre included fertilizer at around $26, herbicides were about $12, certified seed was around $9, fuel and oil was about $12. Added to that are machinery repairs, utilities, taxes and so on. His total costs came to $102 per acre.

That became very significant lately when there were crop failures in the area because of drought conditions. I wrote to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and asked for some assistance, but he suggested that they buy crop insurance. Crop insurance, Mr. Speaker, would have come to about $50 an acre less than half the direct expenses those farmers face in producing those crops.

The other thing affecting the farmers badly is, of course, interest rates. As we look at these problems we can see that if we want to consider exporting our products we have to take a very close look at the domestic problems we experience in order to get our crops out.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I take it that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) is simply recognizing that it is six o'clock; he is not terminating his remarks?

Mr. Cooper: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, and pursuant to Standing Order 2(1), I do now leave the chair until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

LOCATION OF PROPOSED VETERINARY COLLEGE IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that, because of the limited space available in our three veterinary colleges in Canada, less than 15 per cent of the eligible applicants to the veterinary course can be accepted, resulting in an undesirable shortage of veterinarians in all phases of the profession, including the civil services, and in view of the fact that the Atlantic provinces have been procrastinating for several years now as to where the fourth veterinary college will be located in the maritimes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Minister of Agriculture, whose department would be allocating some 50 per cent of the capital cost toward a new college, take the bull by the horns and come up with a suitable location and let us get on with this much-needed facility, or use the money to expand existing facilities and increase enrolment.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NEGOTIATION OF SALARY INCREASES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the only sizeable group of people who are assisted by the budget are senior civil servants and senior officials in Crown corporations who received a very significant increase in net pay as a result of the reduction of the over-all tax rate from 63 per cent to 50 per cent. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the President of the Treasury Board, in negotiating salary increases for senior officials in the government, take into account the enormous benefit they have already received as a result of the change in tax policy and that any indexing be reduced by the effect of the income tax changes on their take-home pay.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

WORLD ALPINE SKI CHAMPIONSHIPS

CONGRATULATIONS TO CANADIAN WOMEN'S DOWNHILL SKI TEAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 should have no difficulty in receiving the unanimous consent of the House.

Yesterday Canadians received the great news that Gerry Sorensen of Kimberley, B.C., won the gold medal in the women's downhill race at the World Alpine Ski Championships in Austria—Canada's first gold medal since Nancy Greene won it in 1968.

Fellow Canadians Laurie Graham and Dianne Lehodey finished third and fifth respectively, giving Canada a total of three of the top five placings.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member who represents Gerry's home riding, the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker):

That this House congratulate Ms. Sorensen and other members of our national women's downhill ski team for their outstanding performance in this world championship race, and extend our best wishes to our national men's downhill team for equal success in their championship race next Saturday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Members want to show their appreciation with their applause. Thank you, very much.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ACTION AGAINST OIL COMPANIES FOR ALLEGED PRICE FIXING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, in view of an announcement at this hour in Montreal that the Automobile Protection Association is launching, on behalf of all motorists in the province of Quebec, a $3 billion class action suit against the major oil companies for alleged price fixing, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

S.O. 43

That this House applauds the initiative taken by the Automobile Protection Association and, further, that the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs take the oil companies to court to clear the air on behalf of all Canadian consumers with respect to price fixing.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, the government's mismanagement of the economy, causing inflation and high interest rates, has placed the farming community of Canada in a disastrous situation. Many have been forced off their land and many, many more are on the brink of bankruptcy. We face a similar situation to that which we experienced in the dirty thirties. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That, recognizing it is in the national interest to retain farmers on the land as efficient producers, this government make the necessary amendments to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act to make it an effective instrument to be used by farmers to prevent bankruptcy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

REGULATIONS AND LICENCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) has made many unnecessary and unreasonable changes with respect to the licensing of and the conduct of licensees engaged in the fishing industry. In many instances these regulations have been extremely expensive and have not conserved a species, nor have they improved the health standard of the product. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

● (1410)

A. That no changes in regulations pertaining to the fishing and fish processing industry be put in force until there is full consultation with the participants in the industry so that the full impact and benefit or penalty of the change may be thoroughly understood by officials of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and by the fishermen themselves.

B. That an immediate review of existing regulations and licensing be undertaken to remove some of the obstacles to efficient and viable practices in the industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

THREAT BY NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION TO CUT SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Northern Canada Power Commission has threatened to cut off the power for residents of Field, British Columbia, because the people have been withholding payments as a protest, in view of the fact that these people are protesting the fact that their power rates are four times higher than in comparable communities in British Columbia, and in view of the fact that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) has promised to negotiate a rate reduction for the community of Field, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That this House instruct the Department of the Environment and the Northern Canada Power Commission to negotiate rate cuts for the community of Field and guarantee those residents that their power will not be cut off.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

PROVISION AFFECTING RETIREMENT INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, thousands of pensioners of moderate means have chosen to forgo income in the early years of their retirement in order, through RRSPs, either to provide spousal incomes or to protect against future inflation. For this government, itself the chief cause of that inflation, to take away from these self-reliant Canadians the $1,000 pension income deduction is disgusting. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That this viciously inhumane proposal in the budget be immediately abandoned.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR REJECTION OF TAX CHANGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to intercede on behalf of Canada's 12 million taxpayers—16 million, if we have the inflationary tendencies of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen)—who are completely and utterly confused by the changes, flip-flops, withdrawals, retreats, amendments, grandfather provisions, exclusions, deductions and tax credits. I understand that the tax guides presently in the hands of taxpayers are incorrect but that the tax tables are accurate. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the status quo be in effect in every respect for the 1981 tax year and that changes proposed in the ill-fated MacEachen budget be not considered and given the hoist permanently.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

NECESSITY FOR TWO-WAY FLOW OF INFORMATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, whereas I and others on the Progressive Conservative fisheries committee heard repeated complaints from fishermen in New Brunswick last week that department officials are not communicating with fishermen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That the terms of reference of the Kirby task force be broadened to include specific means by which the communication of policy and the effect of regulations can be improved so that fishermen are not excluded from essential information and, also, that procedures be established to hear and implement proposals from fishermen prior to making policy decisions.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fraser: Roméo said no.

SMALL BUSINESS

SHORTAGE OF SKILLED LABOUR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that both the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Federal Business Development Bank have stated that a lack of skilled labour is the number one problem facing many members of the small business community, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the federal government encourage more participation by women in apprenticeship programs and industrial training in order to deal with the increased skilled labour shortages which will face this country in the future.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent fot this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. While all members of the House recently applauded the outstanding performance of our distinguished athletes in their downhill ski races in Europe, we are just appalled at the dismal performance of our Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) as he attempts to snow the Canadian people and take our economy downhill with record high inflation, unemployment, and interest rates. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish):

● (1415)

That the Prime Minister disqualify the Minister of Finance and eliminate him from competing in any further races, leadership or otherwise.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

PROJECTED RATES OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who will know that a study for his department by Data Resources of Canada estimated 1,030,000 Canadians will be out of work this year. That is an unemployment rate of 8.7 per cent. Also the minister will know that the budget was based on an estimate of an unemployment rate of 7.8 per cent this year. Will the minister tell us which figure is correct—the lower figure on which the budget is based, or the higher figure prepared for his department?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, what my hon. friend is talking about refers to already published material by Data Resources which is available for anyone to check. I like to think that nobody on either side of the House needs to look at studies of that sort to recognize that we are in a serious situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: We are working to deal with this through programs such as the program in support of technology and enhanced productivity, involving $93 million of expenditure, and in support of microelectronics and advanced production machinery projects, and the programs we announced last week which were in support of auto parts and major appliances sectors. It is important for us to work to deal with the situation, not argue about figures.

FIGURES USED IN DETERMINING BUDGET PROVISIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the government, in defence of its budget based on figures, tells Canadians not to worry about figures. The point is that the problem is known to all Canadians, the problem of Canadians being menaced with the loss of their jobs. The fact that the budget figures are wrong is known to Canadians. I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether his figures or the figures on which the budget was based are wrong. He declined to answer that question. I should like him to tell us whether the budget was based on the assumption of 8.7 per cent unemployment which was forecast by his own department. If it was not, will there be changes in the budget to take account of the fact that it was based on an unemployment projection which was wrong?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the assumptions of the budget are set forth in the material published with it, involving forecasts by the Department of Finance with respect to various elements of the economy. My right hon. friend is not referring to a forecast carried out by my department, but to one carried out by Data Resources, something which is public and has already been published. I am sure one could find a range of other forecasts which point in various directions. That is not uncommon with respect to the work of economists. But at the same time there is no doubt we are in a very serious situation with respect to the economy and unemployment. We are working to take tangible action in the area of job creation, and that is the important thing.

VARIATION IN FIGURES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, what is important when we are dealing with the budget, which will affect the future of millions of Canadians, is whether the budget was based on accurate figures. My question to the minister is very simple. He avoided answering it twice. Is the figure prepared by the consultants for his department wrong, or is the figure prepared as the basis of the budget wrong? Which figure is wrong?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the projections on which the budget was based were set forth in documents tabled with the budget at the time the budget speech was presented last November.

Mr. Nielsen: Which figure is wrong?

Mr. Gray: The analysis of Data Resources was done more recently. It was already made public prior to the press report on which he bases his question. If the hon. member wants to do it and is capable of doing it, he can take the two analyses and reach his own conclusions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROPOSE BUDGET CHANGES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we now have come as close as possible to the government making a clear policy statement. The minister admitted that the budget figures were out of date and that the Data Resources figures are more recent and, consequently, more accurate. An official of his own department, Mr. Thomas McCormack, director of the economic intelligence directorate, said "The worst is yet to come." He also said that "the economy is sliding faster than anyone anticipated." In other words, his own officials not only challenge the figures on which the budget was based but they challenge the government's view of economic consequences in 1982. The minister has admitted the budget is wrong. Will he tell us whether he is proposing changes in this budget to help those 1,030,000 Canadians who are faced with the prospect of losing their jobs this year? Will the minister be proposing changes in a budget that he has admitted is based on out of date figures?

• (1420)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I have not admitted that the budget is based on out of date figures. We are dealing with forecasts, and we can find a range of forecasts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: The important thing is that this government recognizes there is a serious economic situation, a serious situation connected with unemployment—

Mr. Stevens: Who caused it?

Mr. Gray: —and we are taking tangible action, important steps announced by myself just in the past week or so aimed at creating jobs, aimed at dealing with the situation in a tangible and meaningful way. That is the important thing, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: This is a recorded announcement.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN LAY-OFFS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He will know that there is an internal government document which points out that by March of this year 175,000 more Canadians will be out of work. The minister will also know that the major areas from which those lay-offs are coming are found in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Would the minister at least meet with representatives from industry and labour to see if he can find alternatives to these massive lay-offs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I have been meeting with representatives of industry and labour. I am certainly prepared to do so again to exchange ideas on steps to be taken. But just in the past week we have already taken a number of steps aimed at dealing with the difficult situation in sectors that are very important to the economies of Ontario and Quebec, namely, auto parts and the major appliances sectors. Certainly these announcements were very favourably received by representatives of industry and labour.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST THAT SOCIAL ASSISTANCE FUNDING BE INCREASED

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the minister responsible for social policy I will direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She will know that the government has been talking recently about cutting back social assistance to the provinces. The minister will also know that the parliamentary task force on fiscal federalism unanimously recommended that the federal government should increase its share of social assistance funds to the provinces at a time of economic downturn. Given the fact that we will now have 175,000 more people looking for work by March, will the minister recommend to the government that it accept the recommendation which was endorsed by all parties in this House so that these people can be guaranteed some relief?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me the opportunity to correct a very serious mistake made twice to my knowledge in recent weeks by the Toronto Star. I could send the hon. member a copy of the telex that I sent immediately to the Toronto Star which, unfortunately, has not yet been published. I do not know the origin of the mistake.

All social assistance payments in Canada are made under CAP, as my colleague knows. These payments encompass all welfare moneys and all the social services to which the federal government contributes 50 per cent, that is 50 cents on every dollar. These payments have not only been completely protected but in this current year have increased by 19 per cent to date, and we have not yet finished the year. We pay 50 cents on the dollar automatically on all social assistance expenditures. Therefore, I can give the assurance, not only of maintaining the program, but of increasing it tremendously.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR NEW MEASURES TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He has tried to imply in his answers today that the study done for his department is just one of many and that there are different figures arrived at by different economists. The fact is that his own director of economic intelligence has substantiated the figures by saying it is likely we will have another 175,000 unemployed by March.

Now, Madam Speaker, the minister knows that if anyone can estimate the effect of the government's announced programs, which the minister has spoken of, and how much they will do to create employment, it is the people in his own department. If his own department suggests we are going to have 1,250,000 unemployed by March, obviously they do not have much confidence in his programs.

However, given the fact that yesterday or the day before the ten provincial premiers unanimously urged that his government take immediate steps to reduce interest rates to get the economy moving, I ask the minister whether he or the government have any new announcements to make to deal with this very serious problem of unemployment?

Mr. Fraser: Yes or no.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the comments reported in the press were based on forecasts made by private sector forecasting bodies, which are available to anyone to read, analyse, and think about. With respect to this difficult situation, just before the first ministers' conference we announced some very important new programs focused over the next two years to support the creation of jobs, for example, $25 million over the next two years in the auto parts sector; a program focused on creation of jobs in the major appliances sector, $15 million over the next two years; the extension of designation of communities under the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program, to cover a number of communities in serious difficulty. We also announced a new program with a total budget of $93 million aimed at improving the level of efficiency and productivity of all sectors of the economy, to encourage them to adopt new production processes—

Mr. Rose: Oh, that is nonsense.

Mr. Gray: —and machinery, with positive implications for employment. So, we have just taken some tangible and important steps, and I anticipate we will be developing and announcing some further steps in the coming weeks.

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATES BE REDUCED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): The minister has learned a great deal from that former great minister from Windsor, the Hon. Paul Martin. He learned the worst examples of how to try to baffle people.

In that short period of the Conservative government the minister was the financial critic for the Liberal Party and he made a number of speeches criticizing high interest rates. Just today, Madam Speaker, the Bank of Canada announced an increase in the bank rate so it is obvious we are going into a period of rising, not declining, interest rates. That is going to do just what the minister said, increase inflation.

I would ask the minister when the government is going to take steps to reduce interest rates rather than let them go up, as the Governor of the Bank of Canada has done.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Interest rates have come down substantially since—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: —since their high point last August, a decline of some six points.

Mr. McDermid: Not as low as when you said you would resign.

Mr. Gray: The over-all thrust of the budget is to create a climate aimed at reducing inflation and the upward pressure on interest rates, to continue this over-all movement we have seen since last August.

Miss MacDonald: Nobody believes you.

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that all the programs which he and the Minister of Employment and Immigration have announced, if they work as the government claims, will only employ a few thousand people. Just today in The Globe and Mail we had announcements of lay-offs by Union Carbide, Cochrane Dunlop, Jarvis Clark—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. This is the third question where I feel the hon. member is really taking too much time with lengthy preambles. Would he go straight to his question?

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I ask the minister once more whether the government has any programs which will really turn the economy around with a reduction in unemployment, or are we going to continue each month for the next year to have more unemployment as we have had almost every month for the last year or more?

• (1430)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the programs that I have been talking about, including the program announced just before Christmas by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and intended to have a real and substantial effect on unemployment and create very substantial numbers of new jobs. We are also looking at other types of programs to have additional effects in reducing unemployment and creating more jobs.

At the same time we have to recognize that a major reason for the kinds of lay-offs mentioned by the hon. member is the weakness in the U.S. economy and in the economies of other major trading partners. It is something that, no matter how we would like to do so, we cannot escape completely, even though we have to work to deal with the needs and requirements of our own economy. Certainly the over-all approach of the budget is to create a basis for job creation and economic renewal, reducing upward pressures on interest rates and inflationary pressures. Our over-all purpose is to get these objectives in place, job creation and reducing unemployment. Let us work together to achieve those objectives.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

RENEGOTIATION OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who knows that one of the industries hardest hit with unemployment is the auto industry. The minister also knows that the U.S.-Canada auto pact was designed 17 years ago with the intention of giving Canada its fair share in the automotive industry. Today we have a record $4.35 billion auto parts trade deficit with the United States. So much for fair play.

In view of the fact that the minister has failed in his efforts to improve the situation, will he now take the only step available to him regarding the auto pact, that is, to terminate this obsolete, inadequate and unfair agreement as soon as possible and, at the same time, begin negotiations on a new deal which would be more equitable to this country? Surely we cannot continue to live in the auto industry with that auto pact, losing over $4 billion a year.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the record for the period since the auto pact was signed shows very substantial increases in employment over the employment levels at the time the pact was signed, and very substantial increases in investment and production, both in finished vehicles and parts, including very substantial increases in production. The general consensus of those observing the pact has been that, although there are problem areas that have to be addressed, on balance it has worked well for Canada. Because we recognize the various problems that have been identified, we have begun consultations with the United States about improvements in areas that are of concern to us. My colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, and myself intend to pursue these consultations over the coming months.

INCREASE IN IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, this is incredible. Is the minister trying to tell us that he is satisfied with the results of the Canada-U.S. auto pact? I would like to have him tell that to the million unemployed Canadians, the unions, the industry, the auto parts manufacturers who are suffering as a result of the inaction by the minister. I have a supplementary question.

Figures also released today by Statistics Canada indicate a 25 per cent decrease in Canadian-made auto parts sold to Japan. Last year the minister said there would be an increase. It is down to $6.6 million, while Japanese automotive imports skyrocketed by 75 per cent to $1.5 billion in 1981. Will the minister now seriously stop fiddling around with consultations and so on and make two major demands of the Japanese if they want to continue with their bonanza sales in Canada. First, increase substantially the Canadian content in Japanese vehicles as many other western industrialized countries have done. Second, encourage Japanese investment in Canada along the lines of the Volkswagen situation. That is not too much to ask.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I have said before in this House that I like to think the arrangement we negotiated with Volkswagen, calling for a very substantial level of Canadian content, much higher than that required for motor vehicle assemblers, as well as very substantial purchases from independent parts suppliers, will be a harbinger of similar arrangements with other companies in future.

At the same time I want to tell the hon. member that, in the discussions with Japan on arrangements with respect to restraint of exports which have just begun, the Minister of State for International Trade and myself will ensure that our officials bring very clearly to the Japanese the fact that our economy continues to be in a difficult situation and that the recovery of the North American market for automotive vehicles has not taken place to the extent foreseen prior to this year, and that the kinds of concerns I have mentioned, and which have been echoed by my hon. friend, are very much the kinds of concerns we expect to be taken into account in the response by the Japanese.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RCMP ASSISTANCE TO WIFE OF CONVICTED MURDERER, CLIFFORD OLSON

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, last week in the House the Solicitor General was very definite in his reply to me that no other benefits or considerations had been given by the RCMP in respect of the Olson matter. I would therefore like to ask the Solicitor General if he was misleading the House, or did he simply not know that the RCMP have offered Mrs. Olson false identity papers, that the RCMP have offered Mrs. Olson full transportation and relocation expenses anywhere in Canada and, in fact, the RCMP drive Mrs. Olson in an RCMP car with an RCMP driver when she visits Okalla prison to see her husband, wait for her, and then drive her home. Are these matters referred to in the agreement which the minister so far has refused to table in the House?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I want to repeat what I said to the House before on this subject and what I said outside.

Mr. Fraser: Which version?

Mr. Kaplan: There is a sensitive criminal investigation which is ongoing right now, today. I do not think it would be in the public interest for me at this time to give any answers to those questions or any details of arrangements that are being discussed and possible arrangements and allegations of arrangements between the attorney general of British Columbia and his people and "E" Division of the RCMP involving other possible criminal activities of Clifford Olson.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, before I ask my supplementary, I feel obliged to point out to the Solicitor General that these matters are not involved in any ongoing criminal investigation with respect to Olson or any other accomplice.

Oral Questions

INVESTIGATION OF MURDERER'S INCOME

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the seatmate of the Solicitor General, the Minister of National Revenue. Can he confirm or deny that an investigation is taking place to ascertain if a good portion of the income of Clifford Robert Olson, a convicted killer, over the last six years was moneys received from police in regard to information, that a further investigation is taking place to see if the $90,000 already paid to a trust fund can be construed as income and, finally, whether this is being done in spite of a clause in the agreement which protected Olson and his dependants from any tax investigations or any claim of return of any portion of those funds to the Crown?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will know that it is improper for me to discuss the affairs of any taxpayer in Canada in this House or publicly.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF MINISTER'S PRESS CONFERENCE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport about press reports, which I suspect were carefully planted, that he will be holding a press conference in Winnipeg at 10 a.m. Monday to announce the strategy for proposed changes in the Crowsnest Pass rate. If that is correct, since the Premier of Saskatchewan has called for a grain summit meeting later this month to which the four western provinces, the Canadian Wheat Board and the Prime Minister have been invited and which, in all probability, the minister will attend, will he at least have the courtesy, and avoid deliberately bypassing the provinces, to delay any announcements until such time as that grain summit has been held? It will include discussions of the Crow rates, so the minister could take into consideration the consultation and discussions at that summit meeting.

• (1440)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, on the subject of courtesy, I do not think we have a lesson to learn from the government of Saskatchewan. The Premier of Saskatchewan called that summit conference on grain without consulting with the Prime Minister or with any member of his cabinet. Perhaps the criticism should be directed a different way, at least concerning this particular item.

The Prime Minister, in answer to a question by the Premier of Saskatchewan concerning that subject, said that the discussion on marketing and other aspects of grain could very well take place at the conference which is now taking place, and that a decision would be taken then as to the federal participation in the so-called summit conference.

Concerning the subject of an early announcement which the newspapers have reported that I would be making, I can only quote that the Prime Minister is purported to have said, according to press reports: "I can tell you today that we are very close to a final decision on how we plan to proceed on western transportation. Within a few weeks, the federal government will propose a set of principles, a more precise allocation of funds, and a process of consultation with those concerned, particularly western Canadians."

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is called bringing western Canada to its knees.

FUTURE FREIGHT RATES TO BE PAID BY FARMERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that there is no way that all aspects of grain, such as grain transportation and grain marketing, could be raised at the first ministers' conference. He knows that perfectly well.

The minister has claimed that there is a consensus for changing the Crow rate when two provinces oppose it. The Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities and cow-calf operators also oppose changing the Crow. Therefore the minister's version of the consensus is about the same as that between a bank manager and John Dillinger.

An hon. Member: Will the real John Dillinger stand up?

Mr. Benjamin: I would like to ask the minister if his bargaining position is that the grain freight rates paid by farmers will double by the end of 1982, triple by the end of 1984 and quadruple by the end of 1986?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am obviously not in a position to reveal the contents of the announcement which the Prime Minister said would be made sometime in February. However, any sort of prediction based on what is not known would not be of great value.

Mr. Epp: Give him a bodyguard.

Mr. Pepin: This is what my friend, the hon. member, has done for the last week. He has been drawing conclusions from an announcement which has not been made. He speaks about 50,000 jobs which would be lost, without any reference to reality whatsoever. It is just a figure that he picked from the mirror while shaving one morning.

However, concerning the consensus business, I think that in order to contribute to the debate my friend should make a number of distinctions. There is a consensus in western Canada on a change which must take place in order to remedy the coming situation in western grain transportation. There is unanimity in western Canada on that subject, and he knows that very well. Therefore, one will have different degrees of consensus depending on the subject which is debated at any particular time.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO HYDRO SULPHUR DIOXIDE EMISSIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that the thermal power plants of Ontario Hydro, which currently has an application before the National Energy Board, already emit 410,000 tonnes of sulphur dioxide a year, can the minister tell the House what assurances Ontario Hydro has provided to him that future expansion will include adequate emission controls?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, Ontario Hydro has made commitments over the next ten years to reduce its sulphur dioxide emissions by well over 40 per cent of present levels. However, I have to say to the hon. member, in all frankness, that the recent efforts of Ontario Hydro to increase electricity exports to the United States in ways which will accentuate and exaggerate the sulphur dioxide problems, and its recent announcement that it would increase nitrous oxide emissions while reducing sulphur dioxide emissions, are statements which cause me very great concern. I think they are reprehensible and regrettable.

Mr. Epp: Gerry Regan didn't like that.

FISHERIES

TASK FORCE DECISION NOT TO HOLD PUBLIC HEARINGS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The head of the government task force on Atlantic fisheries, Mr. Kirby, recently stated that he would not hold public hearings. He also, of course, said that members of provincial governments were not the people to judge what is best for their constituents. But in any event he said that in his inquiries there would be no public hearings.

Is that a decision which has been approved by the government, and, if so, why? What has happened to the Liberal theme that it believed in open government and involving the people in a matter which concerns their very lifestyles and their incomes?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the problem that Mr. Kirby has been asked to address basically, deals with the question of marketing and the question of processing capacity, whether or not there is excess capacity, and also fleet utilization, particularly the offshore fleet. Mr. Kirby was asked to bring in recommendations in sufficient time to arrive at some decisions, preferably before the summer break. He arrived at the conclusion, which I support, that this could be best done by a working group which would meet those who were principally interested in this area and that there should be as widespread consultation as possible. He will not turn what is a very clearly defined task into a royal commission hearing.

FISHERMEN'S REPRESENTATION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I am very intrigued by the minister's reply that Mr. Kirby is to come back with some answers by this summer. As the minister well knows, a cabinet document was supposedly to be completed in January so that the cabinet could make some decisions. However, in any event, the minister has confirmed that there will be no public hearings.

The object of Mr. Kirby's task force is to deal with the fisheries on the Atlantic coast. However, there is no one acting as a co-chairman who represents the fishermen, whether they be offshore or inshore. I would ask the minister whether he would explain to this House why the only other representative who serves as a co-chairman with Mr. Kirby is someone who comes from the management side of the fisheries industry. There is nothing wrong with that, but why are the people who do the fishing, making their livelihood and income from this industry, completely excluded from this commission?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, perhaps the hon. member would benefit by asking some questions before he repeats a canard which has been expressed in the media. To my knowledge Mr. Nicholson is not the vice-chairman of the task force. Second, I note that Mr. Kirby has approached a very senior representative of a fishermen's organization. I have not been told if Mr. Kirby has been successful in enlisting the participation of this individual or another one from that same organization. However, I know that one major fishermen's organization has been approached, and we are waiting for an answer.

BARRIER TO SCALLOP TRADE WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question, but I am not certain whether I should direct it to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or to the Minister of State for International Trade. Perhaps, when they both hear the question, the proper minister will respond.

It is reported that the New England Fisheries Management Council has recommended a possession limit for scallops which would permit only exports across the United States border from Canada of scallops weighing 40 meats to the pound. I therefore ask the responsible minister, since this is an obvious attempt to limit trade, has any action been taken by the United States to establish this type of non-tariff trade barrier; if so, what action does he plan to take to "assist"—I guess that is the best word—Canada's $60 million-plus scallop industry? Has he held any consultations with his counterpart in the United States State Department, and what will he do to help the Canadian fishermen retain their share of the U.S. market?

● (1450)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, this question is the subject of consultation between Canadian officials and the fishermen involved. There were also contacts at the political level.

When the American trade ambassador, Mr. Brock, was here, both my colleague, the minister responsible for international trade, and myself did raise this question with the American delegation and pointed out very clearly that while we accepted conservation measures, conservation measures which would become trade barriers were not acceptable. This will be the subject of further discussion.

SUGGESTED STAFFING OF HIGH COMMISSIONS WITH FISHERIES EXPERTS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I believe should go to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence perhaps the Minister of Fisheries would also endeavour to answer.

In view of the fact that there are very few people in our foreign embassies with a background of fisheries experience, I would ask if the government would give consideration to staffing more of our High Commissions in strategic fish buying countries with fisheries experts, in the hope that they may assist in expanding markets for this particularly troubled industry which is presently facing serious marketing and economic problems?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform the hon. member that during the past year we have made substantial efforts with respect to the export of fish products all around the world. As a matter of fact, if my memory serves me correctly, to the end of the first 11 months, up to November 30, our exports to the United States increased by approximately 23 per cent, and exports to other countries were up approximately 19 per cent, excluding the United States. We have undertaken a special program of up to $750,000 with respect to the export of mackerel from Newfoundland to Nigeria.

I also initiated two or three trade shows in the United States of America and we will have four or five trade shows around the world during the next four or five months to try to promote Canadian fish products.

Mr. MacKay: And not a single guaranteed sale.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CUTBACKS IN STUDENT PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since the minister's department has authorized a cutback in payments of $10 per month to registered Indians who live and attend schools off reserves as regional budgets are cut, and since lawyers in his department are now saying that the department never had the necessary authority to make the payments in the first place, would the minister clarify for the House why the cutbacks are taking place, and why this useful program is being cut back?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question today through my department.

The department only has authority for the payment of allowances of this kind on-reserve. It is my information, and I am checking into it now as a result of the hon. member's inquiries, that these Indian students are off-reserve, as well as their parents.

The reason for this is the federal responsibility for Indians on-reserve. We want to utilize the moneys we have available for educational purposes to the maximum extent for Indians on reserve. We think that parents of Indians and Indian children who have moved off the reserve are paying taxes to the provinces, and the provinces should be prepared to afford them the same educational opportunities they do every other resident in the provinces. As you know, the federal government does share significantly in the educational expenses of the provinces. That has been acceptable to many provinces.

At any rate, the short answer is that we just do not have the authority for payment off-reserve.

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE CONTINUED

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, since department policies and department economic development policies in general have helped encourage Indians to leave the reserve, and since the education of Indians is generally a federal responsibility, as I understand it, and since these Indian students have enough difficulty in completing their high school education as a result of being faced with social, cultural and economic pressures, will the minister undertake to obtain the necessary authority to continue the program that was carried out so that these students will again be encouraged to work toward the completion of their high school education? Only a very few ever make it through high school as it is.

An hon. Member: It will not cost you much.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I cannot agree with the premise of the hon. member that the policies we are designing are encouraging Indians to leave the reserve. It is quite the opposite. In the last two years, since I have been minister of this department, we have doubled the total expenditures on Indian housing throughout Canada, and I would anticipate that next year we may even triple it in an all-out attack on the question of inadequate housing for Indians.

I would also indicate that in the last budget native economic development was one of the two prime concerns listed for massive expenditures by this government, to the tune of $346 million starting next year. This is to encourage Indians to maintain their culture, to allow them to make their reserves economically viable so they will not have to leave them. Certainly with these breakthroughs, Madam Speaker, I would indicate to the hon. member that yes, this should free up additional moneys to afford even greater initiatives in the educational sphere for the Indian people.

FISHERIES

KIRBY TASK FORCE—INSHORE FISHERY REPRESENTATION

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the answer given by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to the hon. member for Vancouver South.

If Mr. Kirby is considering representation from a big organization on the east coast, what about the representatives of the large inshore fishery being on that task force as advisers? I would suggest that perhaps this would be an advisory committee which would be set up with the five Atlantic provinces involved. If there is representation from a big organization, I suggest that there has to be someone there from the inshore fishery.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, perhaps the hon. member did not understand, or hear—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: It is sometimes difficult.

Mr. LeBlanc: The Leader of the Opposition should listen occasionally.

Mr. Clark: If I can find someone worth listening to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Maybe you are not quite clear enough.

Mr. LeBlanc: Maybe I did not express myself clearly enough. I did make the point very simply that Mr. Nicholson was not there as a representative of a large organization. In fact he resigned in order to work for the task force. I said very clearly that Mr. Kirby had made some efforts to enlist the participation of representatives of the fishermen. I think the hon. member's idea of an advisory committee is a perfectly valid one.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TERMINATION OF JOBS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the story on the wire services attributed to Mr. Lawless, President of CN Rail, who has just confirmed that 1,800 railway jobs will be terminated, which will have a disastrous effect generally throughout the CN Railway, but in particular the Atlantic area where it will hit very hard? If he is not aware of it, will he study it and, if he is aware of it, what does he intend to do?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, indeed I am not pleased about it at all. I am aware of these reductions in employment. This is due, of course, to a reduction in traffic which was 8 per cent in the second half of last year compared to the first half.

In making his announcement today, Mr. Lawless made the observation that because of early retirement and relocation benefits the number of people affected will be significantly less than the number of positions being abolished.

Miss MacDonald: It is still 1,800 people out of work.

Mr. Pepin: This should be borne in mind. Another point Mr. Lawless makes is that these people are entitled to supplemental employment benefits which amount to 80 per cent of their salaries. This is not by way of compensation for the jobs which will be lost, but these are two important qualifying factors in the announcement.

RAILWAY PROFITS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the minister is aware of the story. I would like to point out two other factors which I hope he would discuss with Mr. Lawless, to see if he could rationalize how a Crown corporation, at a time when all Canadians are experiencing dire straits in one form or another—the loss of a job or job opportunity is about as dire as you can get—how a Crown corporation can eliminate jobs, and announce in the same story a profit of $180 million for the year. At the same time, its competitor, CP, which is experiencing the same economic decline as is affecting this country, is not laying off one person.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not know all of the comparative details between CP and CN on that subject. CN obviously is not in the business of losing money. It is not in the business of declaring a deficit every year. This Parliament has asked CN to be run in an efficient manner, so it occasionally declares a profit. If it followed the principles implied in the hon. member's question, it would not be in a position to do that.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, might I ask the government House leader the usual Thursday question relating to the business for tomorrow and for as much of next week as he is able to indicate.

While he is dealing with that, would he give me some indication when Bill C-60 will receive royal proclamation? The minister will recall that bill deals with further protection for farmers and other land holders in the west over whose property the Alaska gas pipeline will be routed. Is proclamation of that bill awaiting the disposition of Bill C-87, which is the legislation to expand the membership of the NEB?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, on the last question, I will look into the matter and try to report to my colleague as early as possible.

In so far as the business of the House is concerned, tomorrow the first items of business will be some motions to concur in Notices of Ways and Means Motions regarding borrowing authority, excise tax amendments and petroleum and gas revenue tax amendments. All these relate to budget measures. We all know that those motions to concur are not debatable, and they will be brought in on orders of the day tomorrow. Following that we will continue debate at the second reading stage of the Canagrex bill, Bill C-85. We certainly hope that bill can be read the second time by the end of the day tomorrow.

[Translation]

Regarding the business of the House for next week, Madam Speaker, I would say that provided we have finished second reading of the bill to promote exports of Canadian agricultural and food products tomorrow, on Monday we can start considering Bill C-89, an act to amend the National Housing Act, which is also a budgetary measure. Tuesday and Wednesday we should be able to consider the borrowing authority bill which includes the other budgetary measures I mentioned earlier and which are all connected with a bill that is likely to be tabled Monday. On Thursday we shall resume debate on Bill C-89, an act to amend the National Housing Act, and next Friday is hereby designated as an opposition day. That is more or less the agenda we can look forward to next week.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Can the government House leader give us any indication whatsoever when the ways and means motion with respect to amending the Income Tax Act will be brought in?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Unless I am mistaken, Notice of Motion No. 40 is already on the Order Paper, and concerns a Notice of Ways and Means Motion to amend the Income Tax Act. It is appended to the Votes and Proceedings of Monday, February 1, 1982. Whether there will be further notices of motions—I shall have to consult the Minister of Finance on the subject, and in any case, I can assure the hon. member that as soon as the notices of motions are ready they will be published in the Order Paper.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DESIGNATION OF MINISTERIAL PORTFOLIOS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I had intended to raise this point of order immediately after question period, but it was not clear to me whether Your Honour wished to deal with my point of order at that time.

My point of order arises out of a reply given by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray) in answer to a question from this side of the House. According to my memory the minister used the term "Minister of State for International Trade". Having consulted page 17 of the appendix to Hansard for Wednesday of last week, which was January 27, I had believed that the title of that particular minister, who was involved in the recent reshuffle, was "Minister for International Trade". According to page 17 of that appendix, one of the new ministers is the "Minister for External Relations" and the other is the "Minister for International Trade". Now they appear as "Minister of State (External Relations)" and "Minister of State (International Trade)".

I am not sure whether the government is entirely sure which terminology it wishes to use. If indeed the terminology used in yesterday's Hansard at page 17 of the appendix is the correct one, I suggest there ought to be some indication that this is an amendment or a correction and that those are the proper designations for those ministers.

Madam Speaker: That, of course, is not really a point of order. The hon. member is referring to lists which appear every Wednesday in Hansard. We have to assume that the designations of the various ministers printed in Hansard are correct. However, I believe the designation in Hansard quoted by the hon. member was indeed a mistake, if that list is to be the official one. However, this is not a point of order; this information could be obtained in another way.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) raises a very interesting point with respect to House business. All the recent changes which were announced by the government will, of course, have to be sanctioned by the legislative process in this place. There probably will be a motion to amend the Government Organization Act or some such motion. Could the government House leader give us some indication when Parliament will be asked to approve the announcements with respect to the several changes which have been made by the government in the various ministries?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, it will not be the kind of motion to which my colleague has referred. He well knows that because of the nature of the changes a bill is required. If he meant a motion such as a motion at first reading or second reading of such a bill, that is fine. There will be several motions, all dealing with a bill. We are working on the drafting of the bill now, and I hope we will be in a position to give notice and introduce the bill within the next weeks.

Miss MacDonald: Can you define what those ministers do?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, can the government House leader assure us that the government is certain that the present designations of the new ministers of state are in accord with the law?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, all I can assure the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is that an announcement of changes in government organization was made. The right hon. member knows about those changes. We will be bringing in legislation to put that in order, and I think that should be sufficient to respond to his concerns.

Mr. Clark: No, Madam Speaker. This raises a very fundamental question about legality on the one hand, and the reporting relationship of ministers to the House of Commons on the other. The response of the government House leader leaves open the possibility that there may be ministers who bear particular designations in this House illegally and who are not in a position, legally, to report to the House of Commons upon those responsibilities which have been assigned to them by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The minister knows, as I do, that there are certain designations which can be made by order in council alone. There are others which require the sanction of law.

My question was quite straightforward. Is the government House leader satisfied that all the ministers bearing designations now as a result of the change announced outside this House by the Prime Minister bear those designations in accordance with the law?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if the law to which my colleague refers is the one I have in mind, obviously that has not been adopted by this Parliament yet; but I said at the beginning that I did not share his concerns. This does not mean I am not willing to look deeper into the concerns he has expressed. I am willing to do that later on today and to come back to him or his House leader and give him more precision on the subject.

• (1510)

So far as we are concerned, we are saying that those changes have been made and that they will be legalized when we introduce a bill, not next year but in the near future. If in the meantime my hon. colleague wonders to whom he should direct questions and whether ministers are allowed to bear their new titles, pending the laws adopted by Parliament and all those matters—

Mr. Nielsen: That is the whole point.

Mr. Pinard: —I am willing to look deeper into it and report to my hon. colleague, not next week but as soon as later today or tomorrow.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I am sorry to extend this discussion, but obviously it is a matter of great importance. The minister has admitted that he is not sure of the legality of the appointments, but could he tell us whether these Ministers of State are drawing ministerial salaries?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we will look at all those concerns at the same time. Also we will look at the manner in which the hon. member acted when he was Prime Minister and appointed different ministers to new departments, and I will be glad to discuss the matter with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition during the next day.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the point is that we have the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. De Bané), the Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières), the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe), the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley), the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), and others, who are now performing functions assigned to them in these various fields with no legislative authority to do so. They are obviously spending taxpayers' money with no legislative authority from Parliament to do so.

Surely we should not be legalizing something ex post facto, something retroactive. Surely the legislative authority should have been sought from Parliament at the earliest possible moment before any of these funds were expended or before any of these responsibilities were authorized. Otherwise, what are we doing here? The place is meaningless. Surely the authority of Parliament should be sought now to authorize this matter; indeed it should have been sought as soon as the changes were made in order to ratify them.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, part of the announcements at the time of the reorganization involved the realignment of some senior public servants. Also there was an announcement with respect to new responsibilities for senior public servants. I share some reservations about the propriety of the practice. When the government House leader reports later today on that point, I wonder whether he would consider the question of legality, the scope of functions, and whether there is an ability to function freely within those responsibilities, given the state of limbo in which the ministry would appear to be at the moment.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I do not intend to go into any detail with regard to the points raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the House leader of the official opposition, but it speaks to a fundamental problem which confronts the House of Commons, a problem which goes beyond the appointment of ministers of the Crown and the legal authority within which they may or may not be operating. It speaks to a growing practice of the government going ahead with measures in advance of seeking or receiving approval from the House of Commons.

I want to ask the government House leader a question concerning a matter which I raised last week and on which the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader indicated a willingness to seek an answer. It concerns the practice which has grown up in the country of the government taxing people in advance of seeking and obtaining approval from the House of Commons. I have asked both by way of a verbal question and a written question—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We are in a position where I recognized a certain number of hon. members to ask questions concerning government business, and of course it led into the question which was discussed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and others. It seems to me that we must be very careful not to enter into debate on this question. The hon. minister offered to procure some information which he will transmit to those members who have been seeking clarification. I think we should leave it at that for the time being. I recognized the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain for the purpose of discussing government business. If he has any questions on government business, I will give him the floor.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, as I was about to say, since the government House leader indicated that the ways and means motion with regard to the Income Tax Act is not about to be called, although it sits on the Order Paper, since it is apparent that there is not yet any legislation which has gone through government channels with regard to the Income Tax Act changes suggested in the budget, and since there is no legislative approval for the taxes which are already in place, when can we expect to see legislation dealing with the specific changes that are currently being enacted illegally by employers from coast to coast as a result of the direction given by the government?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, according to my hon. colleague's last comments, he wants to discuss in Parliament a case that should be discussed before the courts. Continuing the debate, he wants to know whether we have the legal right to collect in advance the taxes proposed by a budget. That is a very interesting legal point, and I should be most interested to discuss it with him. We could even consider going to court together on this case, but I think the hon. member has many times before tried to raise this subject as a matter of privilege, as a point of order and as a question on the business of the House. I agree it is a very interesting point, but I do not think it is up to this parliamentary institution to determine the legality of the procedure. To get back to the question raised by the member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—like the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and his leader, he too seems to be in a state of limbo. Let me reassure my hon. colleagues. I told them I would consider their comments on the government's reorganization, and that if I were able to provide any further clarification, I would do so very shortly, possibly today or tomorrow or within the next few days. Meanwhile, I can inform the members of the opposition that there is absolutely nothing illegal about the procedure in question. I advise them to read very carefully the Government Organization Act, 1970, and they will realize that the ministries of State to which they referred are perfectly legal. Meanwhile, while I am trying to understand exactly what it is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) wants to know and what is upsetting him, I should like to repeat that there is absolutely nothing illegal about this procedure. The Leader of the Opposition could perhaps take this opportunity to read and understand the Government Organization Act, 1970, and ask for clarification if necessary.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have one final question. Since the government House leader is so able to inform the Leader of the Opposition that there is nothing illegal with regard to the appointment of new ministers and their new responsibilities, why can he not give the same assurances with respect to the imposition of taxes?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, my hon. colleague wants to know my personal opinion. He himself referred earlier to parliamentary practice. It is obvious that in this case, the legality of the measure would be based on parliamentary practice and not on legislation, since there is none.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PARKER—HYDRO RATES FOR RESIDENTS OF FIELD, B.C.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given notice relating to today's proceedings on the matter of the unacceptably high hydro rates faced by Field residents. In a letter addressed to me on October 26, 1981, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) indicated that Parks Canada was preparing to negotiate with the Northern Canada Power Commission a hydro rate reduction for residents of Field, British Columbia, who now face the threat of having their hydro service cut off.

My question of privilege concerns the fact that when a minister makes a written commitment I expect him to carry it out. I should like to supply Madam Speaker with the information, and if you find that I have a question of privilege, I would like it brought before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Madam Speaker: I do not think that will be necessary because the question raised by the hon. member does not constitute a matter of privilege. It is perhaps a grievance which the hon. member might have against the minister's actions, but it is certainly not a question of privilege.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,213, 3,232, 3,333, 3,519 and 3,534.

RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE

Question No. 3,213—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did VIA Rail Canada Inc. announce that turbo railway equipment would be used on passenger runs on the basis of one run a day between Toronto and Montreal with stops at Guildwood, Cobourg, Belleville, Kingston and Cornwall?

2. Was Brockville left off this list and, if so (a) for what reason (b) what were the names and job designations of all the persons in VIA Rail or in the government who had any part in leaving Brockville off the list?

3. What is the population of (a) Cobourg (b) Brockville?

4. Will the government take immediate steps to order Via Rail to have the train stop in Brockville and, if not, for what reason?

5. Is it government policy to permit VIA Rail to downgrade railway passenger service for the city of Brockville in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so, on what date will this policy be changed to one that will provide more adequate service?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of VIA Rail Canada Inc. and Transport Canada advise as follows:

1. It is VIA's intention to substitute turbo equipment for conventional equipment on trains 64-65 as soon as the availability of new LRC cars makes this possible. It had been intended that this would occur on October 25 but unavailability of LRCs means that turbos will remain on trains 66-67 for the time being. There has been no change in the stops scheduled for trains 64-65 as a result of this change in equipment. The pattern of stops on this train west of Kingston was determined by previous service offered prior to June 1 by local trains 652-655. On June 1 this train was extended through to Montreal from Toronto with additional stops at Cornwall and Dorval.

2. (a) and (b) Trains 64 and 65 when instituted on June 1, 1981, were designed as a Rapido service with the intention of developing substantially increased business between Toronto and Montreal as part of VIA's longer-range corridor program. There was no service reduction involved at Brockville. The decision with respect to the operation of this train was taken by VIA management as a whole.

3. (a) Cobourg 11,379; (b) Brockville 19,700.

4. Consistent with the minimum service specifications set by the Canadian Transport Commission (CTC) and by the government in its contractual agreements with VIA, decisions concerning the level and kind of service provided by VIA are within the corporation's purview as manager of the rail passenger system.

In light of this mandate and the fact that the level of the rail passenger service to Brockville is not diminished by the choice of equipment to be used by trains 64 and 65, intervention by the federal government to increase the frequency of service to Brockville as suggested is not justified.

It should be noted as well that, if a community considers its rail passenger service is inadequate, an application for increased service can be made to the CTC.

5. Parts 2 and 4 of this answer have emphasized that there has been no downgrading of railway passenger service for the city of Brockville.

ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Question No. 3,232—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In the fall of 1980, did the government announce the expenditure of approximately $1,000,000 for an advertising campaign in the province of Quebec promoting the Prime Minister's views on the constitutional resolutions within the province of Quebec and, if so, what are the names and job designations of all persons who played any part in the decision and what are all the reasons justifying a government policy of using public funds to promote Liberal Party policies not passed at the time by Parliament?

2. Will the government seek reimbursement from the Liberal Party of Canada for any public funds spent in this manner and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): 1. No. However, during the fall of 1981, the government did run an advertising campaign in the province of Quebec which was designed to inform the population of Quebec on the proposed resolution which was before Parliament at that time. The amount of money spent was $982,000. The campaign was authorized by the Minister of Justice, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, and developed by the Canadian Unity Information Office.

In a speech on November 25, 1981, the Hon. Gerald Regan, Secretary of State, restated the federal government's policy on advertising: "In addition to explaining programs and legislation which have been approved by Parliament, the government has a duty to inform the public of its proposals before they have been decided by Parliament. This principle recognizes that without factual information about the government's proposals, and the issues being addressed, the public does not have the opportunity to make its views fully known to the legislators, based on good information."

2. No. See part 1 above.

UNIDENTIFIED MISSING AIRCRAFT

Question No. 3,333—Mr. Skelly:

Did searchers locate an unidentified missing aircraft at the bottom of Nowich Inlet on the central coast of British Columbia last summer while searching for an aircraft missing on a flight from Klemtu to Bella Bella and, if so, has the Department of Transport taken action to recover and identify the aircraft and its occupants at Nowich Inlet and what was such action?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows:

A search and rescue report received from the Rescue and Co-ordination Centre Maritime Forces Pacific makes no mention of locating an unidentified aircraft at the bottom of Nowich Inlet, B.C. The report does state "sonar scan indicated an angular metallic object about 25 feet long protruding 13 feet from the floor of Nowich Inlet in the vicinity of an oil slick."

Since no aircraft has been reported missing, Transport Canada has no mandate to pursue this matter further.

PURCHASE OF CARS

Question No. 3,519—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Department of Supply and Services recently award a contract for the purchase of automobiles for the Department of Transport to an automobile dealer in Brockville in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville in the amount of $24,642 and, if so, on what date were tenders called?

2. (a) Were the tenders called by public advertisement and, if so, what were the names of those who tendered and the amount of each bid (b) were the tenders invited and, if so, what were the names of those invited, the names of those who submitted tenders and what was the amount of each bid?

3. What were the complete details of the vehicles required and what was the breakdown of all tenders for each vehicle?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes, DSS awarded a contract in the amount of $24,642 for the Department of Transport to Ford on behalf of Braden Ford Sales, Brockville, Ontario.

2. (a) No.

(b) In conformity to standard procedure, bids were requested from American Motors Canada Inc., Chrysler Canada Ltd., Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. and General Motors Products of Canada Ltd., each of whom are responsible for obtaining prices from their local dealers and submitting an offer to the Department of Supply and Services. These offers are assessed and the contract is awarded to the lowest responsive bidder. For this requirement Ford submitted the lowest bid on behalf of Braden Ford Sales, Brockville, Ont. in the amount of $8,214 each. General Motors submitted the only other bid of $8,468.45 each on behalf of Bob Crawford Chevrolet and Oldsmobile Ltd.

3. The requirement was for three intermediate size six cylinder, four-door stationwagons, with heavy duty battery, AM radio, full size spare tire and rim and Class I trailer towing package.

NUMISMATIC COIN SALES OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 3,534—Mr. Cossitt:

At any time in recent years, did the Royal Canadian Mint sell numismatic coins outside Canada at lower prices than the prices paid for the same items inside Canada and, if so (a) what were all the details, including the names of the agents acting for the Mint (b) what time periods were involved (c) what were all the reasons for such action (d) who authorized the practice and was Mr. Yvon Gariepy, former Master of the Mint, involved in any way (e) did this practice cease and, if so, on what date?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): I am informed by the Royal Canadian Mint as follows: No.

4. What is the current population of each band and reserves affected by the trust accounts listed in Part 2?

5. Does the government intend to audit the trust accounts of the 75 bands which submitted Band Council Resolutions requesting this action?

Return tabled.

Employment

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, I refer to question No. 2,214, which has been on the Order Paper since March 10, 1981. I have asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) about getting an answer to my question, which reads as follows:

1. During the period January 1, 1980, to January 31, 1981, what amount was allocated by the government to each ethnic group in Canada and, in each case (a) what was the group's origin and mailing address (b) on what date (c) for what purpose (d) under which program (e) what was the amount originally requested?

2. For the same period, what amount was allocated by the government to each ethnic publication and/or newspaper in Canada and, in each case (a) what was the publication's and/or newspaper's ethnic origin and mailing address (b) on what date (c) for what purpose (d) under which program (e) what was the amount originally requested (f) was it a grant or an advertising fee and, if an advertising fee, what was the text of the advertisement?

Surely, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Fleming) should know what is going on in his department. If he cannot answer those simple questions, why does he not resign?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, needless to say I will pursue with all diligence the representations on behalf of the hon. member.

Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR CANADIANS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its deliberate failure to create job opportunities for Canadians.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a brief point of order. At our House leaders' meeting this morning, we agreed that in this debate all speeches would be limited to 20 minutes in accordance with a submitted schedule which has been approved by the government House leader and the House leader of the New Democratic Party. I will get a copy of that schedule and provide it to the Chair.

Madam Speaker: The Chair will see that the agreement is implemented. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, like most Members of Parliament who go back to their constituencies from time to time, or travel across the country attending public meetings, or are involved in task forces or other things, I have been struck by what people have had to say about the economy, what is happening to their part of the country, indeed even their neighbourhood. Most people know what is happening best by what happens to them directly. Most people can speak to Members of Parliament with a clear understanding of what it is that is bothering them. If I can use an old-fashioned phrase, they know what they know.

People know that our problems are not unique. They do not spend all of the time talking about how bad the government is; they have a broader perspective of what is happening in the world than official spokesmen give them credit for. People know that throughout the world, particularly the industrialized western world, we are going through a time of incredible fundamental change. People are aware that the economic difficulties are worldwide; they know those difficulties are related somehow to new energy prices. People are aware that these difficulties are related to technological change which will significantly change the workplace over the next generation.

People know that others are suffering from unemployment. They know that others are suffering from a loss of productivity. People know that in other parts of the world there has been a head-on crash between economic realities and social expectations. They know that most countries in the world are trying to come up with solutions, are trying experiments to deal with what they know to be a worldwide problem. People are aware that if the wood-producing industry in Canada is in grave difficulty, it is also experiencing difficulty in Japan. They know that West Germany is experimenting with early retirment at the age of 45, that there are experiments in France with massive public sector employment opportunities. They know that the United States is experimenting with so-called supply side economics or Reaganomics. People know that throughout the world there is a tremendous number of experiments and attempts to cope with what is considered to be a world problem.

People also know when they look at the record of this country's ability to deal with that worldwide problem that that record is awful. They get their information from television, radio, newspapers and from talking to one another. People know that although there is a worldwide problem and the forces that beset us are also outside the borders of this country, they know in their hearts that this country is not doing the job. Even if people do not know the figures, they know that Canada has slipped further and further behind in its world standing.

For instance, in 1968 this country's standard of living was the third highest in the world. It was second to Sweden and the United States. In 1980, Canada was no longer in third place but had dropped to thirteenth. Canada is now behind Switzerland, Norway, Denmark, Luxembourg, Belgium, The Netherlands and Finland—I could go on and on. But people know that Canada's standard of living has dropped and that our world standing is that of thirteenth place.

People know that our industrial productivity is second worst in the whole industrialized world. Between 1977 and 1980, Mr. Speaker, our productivity rose by only 2.3 per cent. The countries of Italy, Sweden, France, Germany and the United Kingdom were far ahead of us in industrial productivity. They also know that the reason for the loss of industrial productivity is because the government opposite, for well over a decade, has refused to do anything of any practical value to have a long-term effect in the field of research and development.

They also know this country has a cost of borrowing higher than any other industrialized country. We are now in the neighbourhood of an 18 per cent prime. Germany is at 15.4, France is 14 and the United Kingdom is at 15. They know this country's record on the cost of borrowing for the things they need is the worst in the industrialized world. They know—and this is a most telling statistic—that in terms of economic growth and performance we are now the twenty-first out of 24 nations in the industrialized western world.

They do not carry those figures around in their heads, Mr. Speaker, but they know that our attempt to cope with the worldwide problem has been an utter failure. That is why the motion before you is one which says that it is not merely job opportunities that is the problem; it is the government's deliberate policy which has created the difficulty for which we now have rising unemployment, the worst since the depression of the 1930s. They also know that that deliberate and fundamental policy of the government is one that says that in order to fight inflation interest rates have to go up, and therefore unemployment must be created.

Unemployment in this country, Mr. Speaker, is not a happenstance; it is not something which happened on the way to doing something else. The incredibly high levels of unemployment in Canada are a consequence of the deliberate policy of the government. That they know. If they required any further understanding of that, it was clear to them when they read the budget and it was brought home to them that, as we looked and peeled away at it, it was animated by the same philosophy which said the only way this government can deal with the future of this country, as they see it, is to create more unemployment. That is how simply they understand it, and that of course is the simple truth.

Now, Mr. Speaker, people I have talked to, not only in Toronto but in other parts of the country, are not looking around for easy or slick solutions. They know we have to protect the dollar. They know that if it goes down to the seventies it will create further inflation and therefore further unemployment. They worry about the dollar. They do not want it to go down because they know its bad effects in practical terms. What they are opposed to is the way in which the government has proceeded to deal with inflation, because they are unwilling to accept that the price of the government's policy should be a continuation of deliberately increasing unemployment in Canada.

We are no longer talking about words in an economist's manual. We are not talking, Mr. Speaker, about some figures the advisers of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) can offer him for speeches. They know we have over a million unemployed and we just found out there will be another 175,000 unemployed by March. They know that this morning the CNR laid off 1,800 people. When those things happen they ask the government, they ask all of us, Mr. Speaker, not to look at the figures but to look at what the true face of unemployment really is.

If you have ever been without a job and without much hope of getting one, Mr. Speaker, it affects everything in the whole of your world. To every person the whole world is themselves. That is what they understand best about it. Employment means they can do things they dream about doing for their own futures; unemployment means the opposite. It is the frustration, the despair, the sense of lost opportunity and self-esteem, and the increasing loss of confidence in oneself. That is what affects them. That is why the anger in people begins at a low level and gets higher and higher. Unemployment, and the government's deliberate policy of creating it, is something they are no longer willing to accept because it means their own destruction.

The reason I dwell on it, Mr. Speaker, is that when we are in an economic downturn, historically it is like going to war: most people think it is the other guy who is going to get shot and that is what keeps them going. However, if it increasingly hits your neighbours who have been doing pretty well and all of a sudden are not, then it comes home to them more and more. It is the cost to them in human terms which is the reason the government's policy is bound to fail, Mr. Speaker, because it will not be accepted any longer by the people of this country.

People want that policy improved and made more fair. Canadians have a great instinct for being fair. They want that policy to be fair. If we need to have interest rates at such high levels in order to protect the dollar, if that is the reason—and that is the reason given by the Bank of Canada—then there should at least be some shield or protection for those segments of our society who cannot protect themselves. That is why people were angry at the budget. They understand the part about protecting the dollar. What they do not understand is why the government insists that they need not provide protection for those who cannot help themselves.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, in our budget two years ago we included tax credits for people who were going to be hurt by energy prices, and for those who have mortgages.

There are certain things the government is able to do to protect those segments of society who cannot protect themselves from a policy which acts like a meat cleaver. People want a little more sophistication from the government and not the single, brutal reliance on the regressive aspects of high interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Not only do they want protection for certain segments of our society, but they also want to begin the process of recovery. I need to repeat that word, because I listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the other day, I listened to other people at the federal-provincial conference, and what struck me was that no one was really talking about the necessity of recovery. It seems that we have accepted the idea that the whole matter is some kind of sub-zero game, that we have nothing more to expand, that we have nowhere else to go, and that we can do nothing but cut the pie up into a lot of pieces and give less and less to everybody. That is the sickness that people see.

• (1540)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: That is what they are worried about. That is why all working people, whether they are organized or non-organized, know that it is important to have investment, and that the only way we will have recovery is through investment in the private sector. However, the budget went ahead and struck out the major, fundamental incentives for people to invest so that people could have jobs. That was when they understood that the government was not intent on recovery. We need protection concerning this interest rate policy, we need investment for recovery, and we also need job training.

I notice that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is in the House. People understand that a new economic world is being born and that an old one is withering away. Times change. It has happened before. Generations of Canadians have had to cope with that change. What they do not understand is a federal government which is unwilling or unable, or both, to create a co-operative environment whereby job training can occur between the federal-provincial governments and between labour and business. They do not consider a policy of confrontation and divisiveness to be one which will put them on the road to recovery. It is not good enough for the minister simply to shoot from the hip and say, "This is where I want to go." The minister and the government cannot create jobs in this country through job retraining, so they can be ready for the recovery as it comes, without the active participation of the provinces, the municipalities and the private sector.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: The minister and his government have spent most of their time making sure that we do not have that co-operative environment, because they think it is probably good for their politics. Canadians understand co-operation. They understand it in their Constitution. They certainly understand the importance of investment and co-operation between the private and public sectors and between levels of government.

Let me conclude by stating what I consider to be the major problem. Because of the government's inability in job creation, the government's inability to create an environment for private sector investment, the government's inability to protect people who cannot help themselves against the high interest rates, the major victims have been the Canadian people who have lost their sense of faith and hope in the country. People sum it up best, I guess, when they ask, "Hey, what is happening to this country?" That is what they ask, and Liberal members opposite are asked the same question. "What is happening to the country?" There has been a feeling of a loss of faith and hope which the government is instilling in people's minds. That is the ultimate sin which the government is creating through its economic policies.

The tragedy of the government's policies with respect to deliberately creating unemployment is that the one thing upon which people have always been able to rely in hard times will be removed; that is, their confidence that the government will be there to help them and not to hurt them. So far, the only news people have been hearing from this government is that it will hurt them some more.

Mr. Kelly: What was your campaign motto in '80, David?

Mr. Crombie: There is the hon. member from Ottawa again—

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Mr. Crombie: He is the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly), I am sorry.

Mr. Nielsen: The yappy one.

Mr. Crombie: The hon. member might want to spend a little more time—

Mr. Kelly: I do.

Mr. Crombie: —in that riding, because I know that area extremely well; in fact, I will be speaking there next week. That hon. member will not be coming back because those people know that he supports those policies and why they harm them. I hope he will at least go to see those constituents rather than stand in the back and yell at other people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but there was an agreement earlier in this House that each hon. member would speak for only 20 minutes. If he wishes to continue, it will have to be with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is that agreed? It is so ordered. The hon. member for Rosedale.

Mr. Crombie: I just wanted to say that that was as good an example as any I know of why people are angry with the government's policy. It is because they do not have any faith that the government will do anything other than attempt to shift the blame on to someone else. It is time the government changed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that we welcome this opportunity to be able to exchange views and debate this issue which is one of great concern and significance in this country.

I was very pleased to note that the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) admitted at the beginning of his speech, contrary to the statements made by many of his colleagues, that this is not an isolated event which is happening only in Canada, but that it is part of a malaise which is affecting the entire industrial world. Unemployment rates in the United States are higher than ours; they are higher in Great Britain, they are higher in France, they are higher in Italy and they are higher in Belgium. Simply, all it points out is the ability of the industrial world to adjust to many of the economic shocks which have gone through our system in the last several years.

As we well know, we are in need of new approaches and of serious re-examination of many of our basic principles. That is why I think it is probably time that hon. members opposite also examined their basic principles, because if the Canadian people know that it is not only a matter of a made-in-Canada problem but that it is a worldwide problem, they also know that hon. members of the opposition have been offering very contradictory advice as to what to do about it. The kind of advice we hear from the hon. member for Rosedale is quite contrary to what we hear from the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), who says, "Cut back and restrain, do not stimulate and do not spend;" while the hon. member for Rosedale says quite the opposite.

Mr. Crombie: I got it from him.

Mr. Axworthy: What we are really faced with is a basic illogicality.

Miss MacDonald: An illogicality of government.

Mr. Axworthy: Because both the hon. member for Rosedale and the Conservative Party are saying it is a worldwide problem, and then all of a sudden it comes around to being our fault as a government. I think it is a fault which is shared by many in our society.

Miss MacDonald: Step aside if you can't take it on as minister.

Mr. Axworthy: I would like to ask the hon. lady, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), how she will explain her party's stand on new foreign policy in South Africa. It would be very interesting to hear what they have to say about that.

Miss MacDonald: Explain yours on El Salvador!

Mr. Axworthy: The fact is that it is a serious problem, but I think what is important to recognize is that many things are being done to solve it. I think the basic flaw in the statement of the hon. member for Rosedale is that he is not prepared to acknowledge that the efforts we are making are having an effect. He can argue whether they are right or wrong, but to say that nothing is being done is simply a speech based upon ignorance. He knows that many initiatives have been taken in the area of job-creation and that many initiatives are targeted to meet the needs of those who are experiencing the problem most severely.

Right now this government has created 100,000 direct employment jobs for 1981-82. I would remind members of this House that it was the Conservative Party, when it was in government, which cancelled direct employment programs. Therefore, if the Conservative Party were in power, there would be nothing at all available to help those communities which need assistance in direct employment programs. That happens to be the truth. That is a fact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: What a bunch of garbage!

Mr. Axworthy: The budget of the Conservative Party cancelled any money or any resources for direct employment programs, programs under which its Members of Parliament are now calling daily, saying, "Can we have more money for the fisheries in British Columbia," or for the natives up in Athabasca, or for the people in the maritimes. It was their government which cancelled the programs, and we are creating 100,000 direct employment jobs.

Mr. McDermid: That's a lie!

Mr. Axworthy: If it is a lie, I would ask the hon. member to go back and check his figures, because it is not a lie. The Conservative Party cancelled these programs and we brought them back into effect. We are now creating over 100,000 jobs this year.

Mr. McDermid: Your own staff says it is a fallacy!

Mr. Axworthy: One hundred thousand jobs are being created through direct investment by this government in direct employment programs, the LEAP program, the CCDP and the CCSP programs.

Mr. Kempling: Tell us about the $150 million you blew on manpower training.

Mr. Axworthy: The hon. member for Rosedale wants new experience? Those programs are providing 7,000 jobs for the physically handicapped in this country, programs which were not available under his government.

Mr. McDermid: For ten months, and then you cast them off.

Mr. Axworthy: We are providing jobs for those working in the social service areas, in the daycare centres and the crisis centres. They are providing work for women and young people. The LEAP program provides a high degree of employment for native people in this country. We are providing direct employment because we feel we can target those resources most effectively where it hurts most.

● (1550)

In the meantime, beyond that particular orbit, we have allocated as part of our economic strategy $60 billion of investment in economic development programs in this country over the next five years, $60 billion to create jobs in the regions of this country. We have put in money to create 2,000 jobs in New Brunswick through the Mitel Corporation, the St. John's dry dock, and the F-18 fighter which is creating a lot of jobs in the territory of the hon. member for Rosedale, metropolitan Toronto. Money is going into the northeast coal projects and into Petro-Canada. In other words, there is a direct investment program.

A program was announced last week by the minister of DREE, $93 million in the microtechnology area. We believe we must provide assistance in those areas of the economy in which there is a growth potential. We believe we must provide an incentive in those areas.

The hon. member for Rosedale talked about the budget. He said the budget is anti-incentive. Those are strange words coming from the mouth of the member of a party which prides itself on its commitment to free enterprise. Now they are claiming special privileges for incentives. Basically what we did was to reduce the marginal tax rate for the risk-takers and entrepreneurs so that they would have more capital and could decide for themselves how to use it. They would not have the cost-sharing that may go into films or oil development. We place a better trust in the judgment of the entrepreneur, putting more capital into their hands to invest in job creation rather than using specially constructed cost incentives.

That is the party of free enterprise and it is now saying, please do not do that, please do not cut taxes for risk-takers, don't cut back the marginal rate, don't provide across-the-board incentives. They want us to provide special privilege incentives for their friends. We believe the best way to ensure a general incentive for the business community is to reduce their taxes, bring the rates down so that they can have more capital in their hands to invest back into the business community.

It is about time the business community recognizes that they should not be spoon-fed. We are putting money in their hands so they can make judgments about the investment opportunities that they think are the best allocations of their own funds. The problem with members opposite is that they are illogical and inconsistent in their advice. On the one hand they say we should eliminate free enterprise within the market system. On the other hand they say we should not rely on the market system but give special privileges.

As the third part of that strategy they have recognized that we are going through major probems of adjustment in this country. There are technological changes. There are major changes in the industrial structure of Canada. The people must be protected and given security in those kinds of changes. As a result, we have brought in a number of special programs to deal with that.

Just before Chritsmas we brought in special programs dealing with work sharing and job sharing under the unemployment insurance program. Right now there are several hundred applications on our desk. We have already signed over ten work-sharing concepts which have saved hundreds of jobs in Canada by working out with the unions, private employers and the federal government a way of extending the work week of the workers of British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario and the maritimes.

The hon. member for Rosedale says nothing is going on. I ask him to look at the work-sharing concept introduced before Christmas. It is being received with a great deal of acceptance by a number of governments and private employers. The hon. member cannot have it both ways. He cannot say we are not doing anything and totally ignore the initiative we took on work sharing and job creation under the unemployment insurance program.

We have applied in those communities that are hard hit a number of special job placement measures, mobility measures and training measures. The people of Canada know those programs. They are at our offices every day asking to be included in them. It is only the members of the opposition who do not seem to know they exist. If they would read their mail more frequently, they could provide better information to their constituents about what is available. Rather than coming to the House of Commons, raising false alarms, ringing the bell and saying there is fire everywhere, they would be doing a much better service to this country if they simply provided the information to the businessmen and labour unions in their constituency to ensure they know what is available.

At the same time we have introduced the ILAP program to help communities particularly hard-hit by giving them a range of assistance in industrial investment, labour adjustments, mobility grants and training assistance. Contrary to what the hon. member from Hamilton indicated in the press two weeks ago, in those four communities since last fall the figures show that we have helped over 17,000 workers to get training, new placements or direct jobs. In those four communities designated under the ILAP program, in that short period we have provided assistance to 17,000 workers. That is not a total absence of policy. It is an experimental initiative to target in on those communities particularly hard hit by industrial change, dislocation and lay-offs.

We have just added to those communities four additional communities, making a total of eight. In addition we have designated the industrial areas of appliances and auto parts for special assistance. Therefore, we are attempting to provide those basic supports for the workers and businesses in those communities and provide alternative employment and job-creation efforts.

I deny categorically the comments and statements made by the hon. member for Rosedale that nothing is being done. There is a basic, unreasoning flaw in his resolution to this House because it does not happen to be true. If the hon. member had come forward and said we should be looking at other alternatives, presenting new ideas, different kinds of initiatives that we might examine, we in this House would have been more than willing to listen and accept.

We do not pretend we have all the answers. We do not pretend that there are magic solutions. We hope that all members on both sides of this House will put their creative minds to work to develop answers to the job situation, because it is serious. We must respond to it. The hon. member simply comes to this House with blanket condemnations, wholesale denunciation, great appeals to the empathy of people, saying we must do more. We want to do more.

There is a certain presumptuousness on the part of hon. members opposite. They say they are the only ones who care. That is absolute nonsense. Members on this side of the House, backbenchers and ministers, spend a lot of hours each day working on programs.

An hon. Member: Where are they?

Mr. Axworthy: We are working on programs that we are delivering to their communities. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) came to my office three weeks ago asking that Brantford receive an ILAP designation, which it did. That Member of Parliament was doing his job, not like some of the big mouths in that corner who simply cry, howl and yell with all kinds of rhetorical alarms. The NDP member for Brant did his job as a Member of Parliament. He said there were problems in his community and he wanted some assistance. As a result of the representations he made, as well as those made by members of that community, the municipal council and the member of the legislature for that area, we were able to designate Brantford for special treatment. That is the kind of effort we must make and we must provide far more co-operation.

• (1600)

When the hon. member for Rosedale talks about confrontation in training programs, I would say that he is simply reading his own press releases. He is not looking at what in fact happened. The fact of the matter is that we consider the provision of a new training program essential to the economic growth of Canada to improve the productivity of workers.

The fact of the matter is that the government spends close to $900 million to train Canadians. Unfortunately, large amounts of that money are spent on training people for jobs which no longer exist, jobs for surplus occupations. Consequently, we thought it absolutely essential that we begin to change our training programs.

The hon. member talks about confrontation, and I would like to tell him how much confrontation there was. First, we put out a report for public consultation, consulted with the provincial governments last fall, then we had discussions with close to 200 organizations across Canada. We then had a federal-provincial meeting which resulted in an agreement.

I am amazed that a member of the House of Commons, one whom I respect, one of the finest mayors in Canada, would stand up and play a political posturing game and say that it was based upon confrontation. The fact is that we now have in place proposals for a new national training program which would allocate money for training in areas with job potential. We will offer to the provinces major capital investments to modernize their training institutions. We will develop a new forecasting system for training so that we can operate with the private sector and provincial governments to develop more accurate projections as to where the shortfall in skilled workers will be so we can provide remedies for those shortfalls.

Right now, provincial government officials are meeting with our officials to discuss those proposals and work out joint projects. We will be meeting again. Is this an example of confrontation, when we are working toward an agreement for new training programs? The only confrontation is that which exists in the minds of members opposite. The only conflict is in the mind of the hon. member for Rosedale, because that is what he wants to see. He wants to conjure up this scenario of the federal government being at war with the provinces. We are not at war with the provinces over training, Mr. Speaker. What we do have to say to the provinces and to many institutions is that too many regions of our country are training people for jobs that do not exist. Four out of nine people in our training programs are being trained for jobs which do not exist. Of our people being trained, 30 per cent are ending up on unemployment.

We have to change our priorities. As one of my colleagues said, certain provinces were training more hairdressers and barbers than there were heads to cut. Surely a federal government which is spending $900 million must have a sense of priority as to where the money is to be spent. I am thankful that the provinces are now accepting those priorities. We took the leadership in establishing those priorities. I believe it is the responsibility of the federal government to take leadership in those areas, but to work completely with the provincial governments and the private sector in the reallocation of moneys and those training programs.

So, Mr. Speaker, this could be a useful debate today. I think it is an important debate and that Canadians are looking forward to it. But it should be a debate based upon facts and realities, not upon fiction and rhetoric, which is what we unfortunately heard from the hon. member for Rosedale. He did not do himself or his party much of a service by simply getting up and again repeating the same old song, singing the same tune, instead of coming forward with constructive solutions, with a positive approach and suggesting that we work together to solve these problems.

We are presently examining our employment programs. We are trying to find answers and are looking at the problem of the employment of young people and special groups in this country. We want to develop new measures which can be used more effectively, to get a much better and more efficient use of the moneys we have. We are in the process of doing that and have been in this process for several months. The training program was the first instalment of a major change in our labour market programs. But it is based upon the co-operation of all sectors. We certainly wish for the collaboration of members opposite in coming up with ideas because many of them have worked in this field and may have good ideas based upon their experiences. We will not get those ideas if all we get from them is conflict and confrontation, if what we receive from them is not a willingness to work together but to work apart.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians do expect their Members of Parliament to try to find better answers, good answers to the problem of unemployment. I would offer to members opposite the chance to use this debate to come forward with those kinds of ideas. I, for one, will listen to them and make sure that cabinet hears them. But if we simply hear again the old song that nothing is being done, that all is going to wrack and ruin, then this debate will go for nought, Mr. Speaker, and Canadians will be the poorer for it.

Miss Carney: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If the minister still has some time, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if he would answer a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): That can only be done with unanimous consent since the hon. minister's time has just expired.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a good deal of interest to the speech just completed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). There was really only one thing he said with which I could agree and that was his wish that today's debate could be useful. Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, I had to wonder whether the minister was talking about the country we both live in. It seemed to me that he was talking about another country, and maybe even another planet.

But I must keep in mind that, with that exception of the short-lived nine months of Conservative government, we have had a Liberal government continuously since 1963—almost 20 years. We have more unemployment now than we have ever had, and for the first time in our history we have more than a million people unemployed on a seasonally adjusted basis. We have the highest rate of inflation that we have ever experienced in our history. I must ask myself, why is this so? Where were all these wonderful programs which the minister told us about? Why did they not work? Since they did not work, how can the minister tell us that everything is fine?

Let us examine the record. For the last month for which figures are available, there were more than a million unemployed on a seasonally adjusted basis. This is despite the fact that the labour force declined and that there were 122,000 fewer jobs in December than September and 57,000 fewer jobs between November and December alone. There is the report about which questions were asked today which indicates that there will be another 175,000 people unemployed by March. I found the answers given by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) to the questions unbelievable. Mr. McCormack, who is the director of economic intelligence in the minister's own department, pointed out in his comments on the report which was released that Quebec and Ontario will continue to bear the brunt of economic recession, that there were 312,000 unemployed people in Ontario in December, up 17 per cent from a year earlier. It is the autoworkers represented in Parliament by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who are feeling the brunt of the recession. It is workers represented by Liberal members from Ontario and Quebec who are bearing the brunt in a recession caused by the policies of the government.

In his opening remarks to the economic conference, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, as quoted in The Globe and Mail:

—Ottawa has "little choice but to let our interest rates keep pace with—indeed, sometimes exceed—those set in the United States."

And short-term stimulative policies "would unacceptably risk our chances of reducing inflation and lowering our interest rates in the longer run, while achieving only marginal and temporary employment gains."

The Liberal government has abdicated its responsibility to manage the affairs of the country. It has turned these responsibilities over to the Governor of the Bank of Canada. We have been following his advice to show restraint for the last five or six years. He has told us that we must have high interest rates. The result of those policies which were initiated by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, agreed to by the senior bureaucrats in the Department of Finance and accepted by the government, has been higher inflation and higher unemployment.

Let us review the situation. When the government implemented wage and price controls in 1975, the reason it gave was that the inflation rate was unacceptable. At that time inflation was running at 10.5 per cent. It is now running at over 12 per cent. In the last five years unemployment has risen by about 400,000, despite the restraints the government has imposed on the economy.

The premiers of all ten provinces are now in Ottawa meeting with the federal government, and what are they saying? They are united. All of them have unanimously issued a plea to the government to cut interest rates and to concentrate on the creation of jobs. The government has again said it cannot do it. Are the premiers wrong? The Prime Minister says they are wrong. In that short period in 1979-80 when we had a Conservative government the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who at that time was the financial critic for the Liberal opposition, made a speech here in Parliament on November 6, 1979, at a time when the Conservative government was taking the same advice from the Governor of the Bank of Canada as the Liberals had before and as they are again. I remind Members of Parliament that it was the Conservative government which reappointed the Governor of the Bank of Canada to a further term. This is what the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said at that time about high interest rates:

These high interest rates cut back the ability of factories and businesses generally to expand, to create more production and jobs. These high interest rates limit the ability of business, especially small business, simply to operate at basic non-inflationary levels. Therefore these high interest rates mean losses of production and jobs now and over the coming winter months.

The minister was dead right back then. We wish the government would listen to the advice the minister gave the then Conservative government when the Liberals were in opposition.

In answer to questions today, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said interest rates are lower now than they were some months ago, and that is true. It is significant that the rate announced today is up from what it was last week, and it is likely that interest rates will increase in the coming months.

In answers to questions over the last couple of weeks and in defending the policies and programs of the government the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has suggested that things will be all right because at some time later on this year—in the summer or the fall—the American economy will pick up and that, of course, if the American economy picks up, the Canadian economy will keep in step with it. The only people who believe the American economy will pick up in the latter part of 1982 are those few people around President Reagan in the United States, the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the senior bureaucrats in the Department of Finance.

Mr. Blaikie: All of whom belong in the loony bin.

Mr. Orlikow: One need only look at what is happening on the stock market in the United States to realize that the business community in the United States knows that Reaganomics will not work, because stock prices are continuing to plummet rather than rise. Americans are looking at a budget deficit because of tax cuts, particularly for those in the high income brackets, which President Reagan instituted and because of the sharp increases in defence expenditures he is proposing to implement. Americans are looking at a deficit of somewhere between $75 billion and $100 billion this year. That means that the United States government will go to the market to borrow that money. That will drive interest rates up rather than down.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada, supported by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance—and supported by the former Conservative minister of finance when he was in office—has committed us to keeping our interest rates close to and somewhat higher than American interest rates. The result must be that interest rates will go up rather than down in the latter part of 1982, and the result will be more inflation, a business slowdown and more unemployment. That is what the policies of the government will mean.

I listened to the Minister of Employment and Immigration give us a quick rundown of new government programs as he sees them. Now is not the time to analyse them in detail, but the minister told us about new programs for training, work sharing and job creation. He told us about IRAP. He gave the impression that these programs were developed in co-operation with the provinces, and in co-operation and after consultation with labour and industry. The minister might believe that, but it is not true. If he talks to labour people—unions representing steelworkers in Sept-Îles and Schefferville appeared before a parliamentary committee—he will learn that the IRAP is not working, despite what he says. I say to the minister that all these programs were developed unilaterally by the minister and his department, as has always been the case since that department was formed. There have been no real consultations or discussions with labour, management or the provinces. That is why the new programs he has announced will be failures, just as were earlier programs developed by his department under him or other ministers in the bureaucratic, centralist way they always operate.

We cannot isolate this country from the world. The world is in an economic slowdown. The world is suffering in a recession. We cannot isolate ourselves from that. But there is no reason why the people of this country should suffer more than the people of almost every other industrialized country in the world.

The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) pointed out that the standard of living in Canada, which used to be the third highest in the world, has dropped to thirteenth. It has dropped because we have not developed the resources we have. It has dropped because we have adopted the wrong kinds of economic and fiscal policies. As the premiers have indicated, we need a lower interest rate policy. We need a Canadian interest rate policy. Again I say that the Governor of the Bank of Canada is dead wrong, but even if a Canadian interest rate policy means that the Canadian dollar will drop a couple of cents in relation to the American dollar, and even if it means we have to put some controls on the movement of capital, we need a government which is really prepared to play an activist role. We need a government which is prepared to sit down with industry, labour and the provinces and plan the things we need to do to get this country moving again.

Surely even this government, as remiss as it has been, must realize that there are no shortages of tasks which need to be done and can be done. We have the necessary manpower and raw materials to do the things which need to be done. It is obvious that our transportation system is not able to move enough of the grain, potash and minerals we could sell. We need a major restructuring of our rail system. What did we hear today? The CNR has announced the lay-off of 1,800 people in the very near future. What could be more stupid than that? When we need to modernize our rail system and, therefore, to hire more people to do this work, the CNR is laying off 1,800 people. We need to plan to use our tremendous undeveloped energy resources such as oil, gas and hydro. In Quebec, Manitoba and British Columbia, just to mention three cases, there are tremendous hydro resources which could be harnessed and used to meet our energy needs rather than using oil and gas which, when depleted, are gone forever. The provinces cannot move in that direction at this time because they cannot afford it. These are examples of cases where the federal government should be prepared to move in and co-operate financially with the provinces to get things going.

We require a major push to clean up the environment. I have seen figures which indicate that in countries such as Sweden the pulp and paper industries obtain 70 per cent of their energy from the waste products which our companies in most cases just dump into our rivers and lakes.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration knows that there are thousands of homes in Winnipeg, as there are in many other older cities, which are 100 or more years old and require major renovations, yet the construction industry is faced with perhaps a 20 per cent unemployment rate.

Canada has the worst record of any industrialized country in the western world in terms of our efforts and expenditures on scientific research and development. In the last year we allocated nine tenths of 1 per cent of the gross national product to research and development. Every other country in the western world, as well as Japan, spent anywhere from 1.5 per cent to 2.5 per cent of the gross national product on research and development. Therefore, it is not surprising that new products, processes and techniques are being developed in other countries and not in Canada. One major reason we spend so little money and put so little effort into research and development is that our major manufacturing industries are largely branch plants of multinational corporations. They are not interested in doing research in Canada, particularly in a time of recession. One cannot blame them for doing their research and development at their head offices which are usually located in the United States. What has the Liberal government done to encourage major corporations to conduct more research in Canada? Virtually nothing.

A couple of years ago we saw figures which indicated that the Ford Motor Company did several billion dollars worth of business in Canada but did not have a single Ph.D. graduate doing research work here. There must be a major increase in our effort if we are to turn around our manufacturing industries. The bulk of manufacturing in Canada is concentrated in Ontario and Quebec. Our manufacturing industries are losing 2,000 to 3,000 jobs per day. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, certainly no radical organization, predicted that in the next short while another 100,000 jobs will be lost.

Mr. Nielsen: The figure is 175,000.

Mr. Orlikow: The report today indicated 175,000, but in a brief which it submitted several weeks ago the figure was 100,000. Whichever figure one uses, it indicates a disaster in the coming months. Everyone in the country, whether involved in labour, industry or the educational system, with the exception of hon. members on the government side of the House, knows that the country is in deep trouble. Instead of facing up to the trouble, rethinking what it has done and realizing that most of what the government has done in recent years has failed, we hear the type of direction suggested today by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. According to House order, I now recognize the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Kelly).

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I participated in this debate in a rather unofficial manner when I shouted a few remarks across the way to the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie).

Mr. Nielsen: Are you now apologizing?

Mr. Kelly: I am not apologizing because I have discovered that heckling is an honourable tradition of the House. It has been my experience that hon. members of the official opposition probably give better than they receive. Under those circumstances I do not think official apologies are warranted.

Mr. Blaikie: Because the government is so richly deserving of everything it receives.

Mr. Kelly: No. I think it is a function of opposition. After a party has been in opposition for 18 years, it has refined the art of heckling.

Mr. Roberts: They do not have much else to do.

Mr. Kelly: I interrupted the hon. member for a few short seconds by asking him what was the motto of his party in the 1980 election campaign. Since I knew it, I found that his presentation this afternoon was perhaps one of his most dishonest and intellectually backward speeches in the House since I have been here.

Mr. Nielsen: The land is strong!

Mr. Kelly: He flayed the government because in his eyes it was doing things which hurt Canadians. This was intolerable, if not evil, in his eyes.

Mr. McDermid: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelly: What was the motto of his party in the 1980 election campaign? He did not inform the House, so it is my privilege to redress his error. The motto of his party was: "Short-term pain for long-term gain".

Mr. Epp: What was your party's motto?

Mr. Kelly: For any member of that party opposite to stand up in the House and say that his party—

Mr. McDermid: Your party's motto is: "Long-term pain for no gain".

Mr. Kelly: — would not have inflicted those horrible results upon the Canadian electorate, when they know it was quite prepared to do it—

Mr. Nielsen: I am standing, I am standing.

Mr. Kelly: —could be nothing else but dishonest. I do not blame hon. members opposite for trying glibly to slide around the policy position they took two years ago. They knew then that some tough decisions had to be taken—

Mr. McDermid: And you defeated our budget.

Mr. Kelly: —and now in their mock rhetoric they insist that decisions do not have to be tough.

Mr. McDermid: We are not saying that.

Mr. Kelly: In the interests of honesty, if they believed that tough decisions had to be made then, surely they believe that some tough decisions have to be made now.

Mr. McDermid: We made tough decisions but we helped those people who needed it most.

Mr. Kelly: If I may respond to the comment of the hon. member, I think the government has a fine record of helping those who need help the most.

Mr. McDermid: Tell us about the energy tax.

Mr. Kelly: Of course, the important thing is not to make tough decisions; the important thing is to make wise decisions. Some of these wise decisions may have to be tough or they may have an element of toughness to them, but if they are perceived as being wise and fair—

• (1630)

Mr. McDermid: There isn't a Canadian who thinks you wise.

Mr. Kelly: —then those decisions will have to be recognized by all members of this House as being the right decisions.

The two preceding speakers brought to the attention of the House that Canada's position in the hierarchy of the nation's standard of living has declined precipitously. I agree with him. Our relative position has declined. But Canada's standard of living has not fallen. Canada's standard of living has not risen as rapidly as other countries.

Mr. Nielsen: You are trying to catch up?

Mr. Kelly: The basic explanation for that does not lie primarily in domestic political policies. The explanation for that, as hon. gentlemen opposite know quite well, lies outside of this country with the economies of other areas and other regions.

The European economies, as everyone across the way knows, were devastated during the Second World War. It took them over two decades to recuperate.

Mr. McDermid: Are you saying we need a war?

Mr. Kelly: By the 1970s those European economies were producing on a level that surpassed their productivity of pre-war days. In other words, the answer to hon. gentlemen opposite is that we were number three in an age when competing industrial societies or countries of this world were picking themselves up economically and had yet to begin to compete effectively with us with the modern industrial plants which they had constructed in the post-war decades. Now, because those countries have rebuilt their economies and rebuilt them in a more efficient way, they are competing more effectively than we are. We have lost ground, relatively speaking, to those economies.

I am not ashamed of that loss of ground. I want hon. members to understand why that occurred. What hon. gentlemen opposite also always ignore is the fact that there has emerged into the world economy a number of extraordinarily super-rich oil states in the Middle East. These countries have so much oil and so few people that their standards of living are extraordinarily high. Their emergence has helped to push Canada down the scale.

I do not want to belabour the point but I do want to introduce into this debate, so that people will understand, the fact that our competitive position in the world, our standard of living and our rating has been affected by forces that are outside our boundaries and beyond our control.

What I want to do now is to take a look at our employment record. That is the issue for debate this afternoon. One of the strange aspects of our employment record is that while Canada has the best employment record of any western industrialized country during the 1970s and into the 1980s, we have at the same time one of the worst unemployment records. This is a curious anomaly. How can a country proportionately create more jobs than any other country in the world while at the same time suffer from one of the worst unemployment records? It hardly seems feasible.

Mr. Blaikie: It is called Liberalism.

Mr. Kelly: In the time I have remaining I want to suggest a number of explanations that lie beyond government policy and government control.

Mr. Blaikie: Say something, then.

Mr. McDermid: Do they buy this in Scarborough?

Mr. Kelly: Yes, they do. They know it is delivered both with insight and sincerity.

One of the reasons we have an unemployment level that is higher than any of us would like to see, higher than any of us find comfortable, is the fact that we have a branch plant economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: Have you figured that out?

Mr. Kelly: In an age when labour costs are becoming an increasingly more important component of the cost of a product, head offices of many multinational companies are closing their expensive Canadian plants and moving operations elsewhere.

One of the members on this side of the House was talking to a manufacturing delegation the other day. One gentleman in that delegation decried the fact that in the city in which his plant was located they have to pay their labour $10 per hour and were therefore looking forward to moving to one of the states in the American south—

Mr. Ogle: Slave country, obviously.

Mr. Kelly: —because labour rates in the American south were $5 per hour. As the conversation was reported to me, it looked as though that company was on the verge of closing its plant in one city in Ontario and moving its operations to the southern United States. I do not know how many hundreds of people would be laid off in those plants or how many thousands of people have been laid off across Canada because of decisions like that, but people have lost jobs for those reasons. Those reasons have absolutely nothing to do with the policies of this government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelly: This government has not set wage rates. This government has not insisted on high levels of payment. It is a natural functioning of the economy as it develops in the latter part of the twentieth century. It is cheaper for businesses to move plants elsewhere. Regrettably, Canadians have to pay the price.

Mr. McDermid: It is the Canadian plants that are moving which frighten us.

Mr. Kelly: The government response to that, of course, should not be that of hon. gentlemen opposite, to rent our clothing, to tear out our hair or to fumble for all the worst case scenarios that we can project in this debate. The important thing for a government to do in a situation like this is to make sure that in the months and years ahead this government creates nationwide retraining programs so that any worker who loses his or her job can look forward to immediate and effective retraining for a future career.

If hon. members look carefully at the policies that have been introduced recently by the hon. minister, they will find that is exactly what this government is doing. It has made a commitment to those workers that their interests and their concerns will be addressed as quickly and as effectively as possible.

I would hope in future debate concerning the provinces and retraining that instead of having critics on the other side of the House we will have allies. If hon. members are honest in their positions, that is exactly what they should be, allies and not critics of the policies of the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelly: One of the most important influences on unemployment levels in Canada has been the slump in our foreign markets. There is not a member in this House who does not realize, or should realize by now, that we export roughly 25 per cent to 30 per cent of all the goods we can produce.

Mr. Ogle: You just said that Canada had the largest surplus ever the other day.

Mr. Kelly: Because we export so much of what we produce, we are the greatest per capita trading nation in the world. We trade more than the Americans, the Germans, the French and the Japanese.

Because we trade so much, any rise or fall in demand in foreign markets, will help or hurt us severely. The latter is what has happened in the last few years. A drop in demand in the United States, western Europe and Japan because of recession—and the Japanese are not immune to these forces, as hon. members opposite should know and tell the Canadian people—has meant that we are not selling as much as we used to, and because of that we have lost a lot of jobs. That is obvious, Mr. Speaker, and there is nothing in there that I see of government policy.

• (1640)

Government policy did not create a recession in these other countries. We did not tell them to stop buying goods or cut back. We have to understand that, Mr. Speaker. We cannot rant and rail against this government because of that.

Mr. Blaikie: I know you can't.

Mr. Kelly: This government faces the same problems that other governments and countries face—a simple lack of international demand. The key, Mr. Speaker, in a situation like that is again not to yell and hurl insults at each other. The key is to figure out what kind of policies we can introduce as quickly as possible that will find alternate employment for Canadians who have lost their jobs in those industries affected by a slump in our export markets.

I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tabled a document at the first ministers' conference two days ago which addressed that situation directly and candidly. Over $400 billion will be invested in resource megaprojects in this decade alone. If we add to that the revitalization of our economic base, close to $1 trillion will be invested in Canadian industry in the 1980s. That is a fantastic amount of money. The Prime Minister has stated, boldly I think and so far without credit in the press, that he is prepared substantially and materially to assist in the funding of those projects. But I hear nothing from the hon. members opposite. Not that I am expecting praise, frankly—

Mr. Nielsen: For what?

Mr. Kelly: —but I would expect some recognition of those policies, an indication that they are prepared to promote them in the interests of the unemployed workers on whose behalf they are posturing this afternoon.

There is another reason Mr. Speaker, why we are regrettably experiencing more unemployment than we had anticipated. Over the last few years, in consultation and in agreement with the member states with whom we do business, we have been lowering our tariffs. Now, I cannot remember too many voices raised in this House by spokesmen of the opposition parties deploring that lowering of trade barriers. Regrettably, one of the results of that lowering of trade barriers has been that certain parts of our industrial sector have proved to be uncompetitive with the foreign industries now selling their goods in Canada.

One alternative to a situation like that, frankly, is to reintroduce the tariffs. However, I have not heard anyone on the other side insist that we go back to the high tariff days that marked Canada in the nineteenth and most of the twentieth century. This is because we know there are benefits to lower tariffs. We know they give us in the long run cheaper goods for our consumers, and we know that competition will ultimately produce a leaner, more efficient and more productive industrial base in Canada.

Now, the hon. gentleman opposite was shaking his head in total disbelief. He just could not believe I would advance these arguments in explanation of the unemployment levels we are experiencing today. Mr. Speaker, I would ask him, if he is participating in this debate, to prove me wrong.

Mr. Nielsen: Your time is up.

Mr. Kelly: I would ask any member opposite to prove me wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro)—External Affairs—McDougall report—Query respecting departmental reorganization (b) Role of Minister; the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Industry—Effect of high interest rates. (b) Canadian Admiral Corporation in receivership. (c) Importation of foreign manufactured appliances.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR CANADIANS

The House resumed debate on the motion of Mr. Crombie:

That this House condemns the government for its deliberate failure to create job opportunities for Canadians.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, since I also come from a province where unemployment is pretty high, I should like to take advantage of this opposition day to speak to the motion by my colleague, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), a motion that, I feel, is very apt, considering the incredible size and impact of unemployment in Canada. I was absolutely flabbergasted when I heard government members say we had failed to come up with satisfactory proposals to turn around the present situation. I was also surprised and disappointed when I heard the last two speeches. First, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Kelly) told us that he needed allies, not critics. Well, the New Democratic Party was his ally for quite some time. However, the alliance did not turn out to their advantage, and I hope the NDP will never again make the mistake of supporting a government that betrayed us for so long. I also heard him repeat, as did the minister earlier, that it was not the government's fault. The situation is so complex that it all depends on what our neighbours do, and the government has no responsibility for the present situation! Now that is what I would call government by irresponsibility and incompetence.

Today, with the track record this government has had for 15 years, I do not think their wishy-washy defence of the present situation will go down well with Canadians. The previous speaker mentioned that budgets for the next four or five years were estimated to run into billions and billions of dollars. Fifteen years ago, I think the budget was about $10 billion. We have one now that is worth $60 billion, and what have we got, Mr. Speaker: 300,000 workers unemployed in 1968 and more than a million in 1982. So I really wonder how much unemployment the projected $60 billion will get us, assuming that the government and its philosophy remain the same.

I also heard the minister say he had proposed a large number of programs. Since he is in the House today, I should like to tell him that he has not made the slightest dent in the philosophy followed by his predecessors. He is merely upholding the policies of a government that circumstances oblige him to defend. He really cannot be anxious to face the Canadian people today, considering the results of this government's policies. He has merely continued to defend a philosophy that is leading this country into bankruptcy. I am not saying the minister did not try to do something about the economy, but his programs are woefully inadequate to cope with the present situation. They cannot prevent the loss of 175,000 jobs in the next few months. When the minister tells us about occupational training, he should realize that it is because there were not enough of these programs five or ten years ago that we have this problem today. People say this country has the best job-creation record, compared to other industrialized countries, but at the same time it has the highest unemployment rate. And the previous speaker fails to understand how this is possible.

If we had developped training programs, if we had done more research to modernize our traditional plants ten years ago, we would not be in this situation of losing two jobs every time one job is created. This is something that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) should understand, and instead of asking us to excuse the Minister, as the hon. member did earlier, we should be asked to forgive this incompetence. The Canadian people should be told: as the Liberals alone know the truth you must understand that they did not purposely create this unfortunate situation from which Canadians are now suffering. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker! I believe that we, in the opposition, have the duty day after day to tell Canadians about this disaster and this gigantic economic failure.

We have succeeded for a while in putting aside the constitutional debate. Let us now talk of bread and butter issues. Every day, television, radio and newspapers give us bad news, and the public is concerned and uncertain. As recently as 12 or 18 months ago, thousands of unemployed hoped to find a job, but now there are thousands of employed workers who are terribly worried that they might lose their jobs. This insecurity cannot continue, Mr. Speaker! The Minister and the members of the government will ask us to help them but they have been incompetent and we certainly have the duty to condemn them and denounce them to the public. They no longer deserve the confidence of the Canadian people. Their type of administration and their abilities no longer meet the needs of Canada.

This week, there is a federal-provincial conference, which may not yet be over. Ten premiers got together to denounce the economic policy of the federal government. The Minister of Employment and Immigration will try to tell us that what he is doing is right, but ten premiers representing ten provinces, not members of the official opposition, are now denouncing the government and asking for an emergency plan. Of course, members opposite will tell us once again about their good will, about their good intentions, about programs worth millions! What should be done immediately, Mr. Speaker, is to develop an emergency plan to stop plants from closing all over Canada. Quebec is greatly affected by this problem.

Mr. Speaker, nothing in the budget gives us any hope that the problem will be solved in the short term. Some will say that we are asking for investments as well as cuts in spending. Of course, because in politics you have to make choices Mr.

Speaker. We will have to do so. Canada cannot afford to again lose some 100,000 or 200,000 jobs under the present circumstances. This is the question which the government, after consideration, will have to answer. The Minister of Employment and Immigration cannot assure us that because of his programs, factories will not shut down, which hurts us as it does thousands of Canadians, but government members remain indifferent to those who are now suffering. I say again that such behaviour is typical of a callous government. I cannot overemphasize that the Canadian people be acquainted with and denounce such inaction on the part of the government in such tragic circumstances. Last year, there were over 8,000 bankruptcies in Canada of which 40 per cent were in Quebec. In June, 1981, there were some 300,000 unemployed in Quebec.

In the month of December, 347,000 Quebecers were unemployed. Naturally some Quebec members will hold the provincial government responsible for that because there is no love lost between them. Here in Ottawa, they blame the United States or they say our plants are not quite as technologically advanced as are some others. Indeed, that is precisely what the previous speaker illustrated earlier when he said that certain countries did manage to upgrade their industry while we fell somewhat short of the mark. He showed that the government has failed to act and provide enough funds to spur research with a view to protecting our traditional sectors. The fact remains that if they had been more perceptive, they would have used those funds to revamp and modernize the industrial sector. The minister said that nobody had come up with constructive suggestions. To enlighten the minister, I would say that yesterday Quebec proposed a $200 million plan and urged the federal government to assume 75 per cent of the costs. This was to launch an immediate revival so as to avoid—I am not too sure how I should put this—asking this government to take this opportunity to help one of the Canadian provinces which is more seriously affected because of its unemployment rate and to put an end to the series of plant closures. A $200 million plan. That is what we are asking the government, and we have shown that if they had taken our advice and offered preferential interest rates to home owners the construction industry would be booming. The government did not want to have anything to do with that and we can see the results today. Thousands of housing units are not being built, so thousands of kitchen and bedroom sets as well as TV sets and refrigerators remain unsold throughout Canada.

The death of the construction industry has been costly in terms of unemployment and destructive at the economic level. Those are measures we had been advocating for quite some time. The minister just does not know which way to turn because the government has lost all its initiative. It does have a few programs which are nothing more than camouflaged unemployment insurance schemes. The government is finding out that our neighbours are putting up such a fierce competition that we have fallen behind and that we have a long way to go before we can catch up and provide the funds and implement the policies which will keep our industry afloat. Today, we would like to hold out our hand to those hon. members and tell them that we forgive them their incompetence and failure. Canadians need a government that is clearsighted enough to help them solve their problems. Canadians want to work. The fact is that 40 per cent of all the unemployed today are 18 to 25 years old, and this is a serious threat to our social climate, for indeed those young people were in a sense betrayed after having been promised a bright future provided they carry on with their studies, and now they find themselves without jobs.

Under those circumstances, there is no doubt that it is our duty as the official opposition to call for emergency measures, to blame a government that has failed so completely in that respect. I could not miss this opportunity of reminding this government that an emergency plan is a must, that we can no longer tolerate plant closures at the rate which prevailed in 1981; besides, none of the programs introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration nor any of the budget proposals will ever bring about a solution to the problem in the near future. I am sure all hon. members opposite are fully aware of it. I have no doubt that those programs were well-meant, but I say that they will not solve, certainly not in the short run, our present difficulties. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I join the hon. members on this side of the House in trying to stir up a sense of responsibility in the government members. I trust we will also manage to prompt the responsible ministers into taking positive action in order to meet the requests of the provinces. There has been talk of greater consultation with the unions, with businessmen and with the provinces and that it is a necessity. Of course the minister has replied that they were willing to have discussions with the provinces.

• (1700)

Again yesterday, at the federal-provincial conference, the provinces asked for and insisted on that type of negotiation, of co-operation with the federal government, in connection with the serious situation which now prevails. But once again the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has turned a deaf ear. We know full well, as all Canadians must also, that this government has now proven that during the forthcoming six months it will not budge an inch with regard to the philosophy which has led it and is now leading the country to bankruptcy. We hope that by speaking on behalf of so many Canadians who have had more than their fair share of worry and suffering, we shall be able to convince the Minister of Finance that he should formulate far more practical proposals and develop an economic philosophy that recognizes the needs of the Canadian people whom we all represent here in this House. In view of the gravity of the situation, I hope that today the government members will be shamed into taking some kind of action. It is useless to work on their sense of pride, since they have no pride.

If I were the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I should have been ashamed to rise in this House today, to try to convince the Canadian people that I was able to provide a solution, while I was in fact only continuing the policies of my predecessors who put Canada in the mess it is in today. I should have been ashamed to say like other members that it was not the government's fault, that we had to understand the situation and that nothing could be done. Mr. Speaker, I feel that these people on the opposite side should be put to the test and asked if they are willing to eat crow and try to find an answer to the questions and needs of Canadians today. It is incredible, Mr. Speaker. So many people are anxious about the future, so many people are suffering, thousands of unemployed workers can no longer support themselves, thousands of workers are expecting to be laid off within the next few weeks or months, while this government has failed to come up with anything more positive and more effective than these medium and long-term programs and projections that should be questioned from the outset, considering the fact that for 15 years, the projections presented by the ministers of finance have never been realized.

Yesterday, on television, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) tried to reassure Canadians. It is too late for your programs to do any good. This government has shown a serious lack of foresight and does not deserve the trust of the Canadian people. Obviously, I do not expect him to resign. They don't even have the guts to resign when they have betrayed the trust of the Canadian people. However, and it cannot be said too often, Canadians will pass judgement on this government. They will indeed, but meanwhile, we as members of the opposition have a duty to challenge this government, to get these members and ministers to bring in satisfactory measures. The Minister of Employment and Immigration had better not come back with his excuse that they do not have any proposals or short-term emergency plans. We need an emergency plan today so that tomorrow our factories stop shutting down at the same rate they have been for the last few years, especially in 1982. I am sure the minister knows perfectly well what I mean. Will he be able to convince the Minister of Finance and his cabinet colleagues that what this country needs today is action? This government has demonstrated that it lacks every kind of initiative, and I feel very sorry for the Canadian people.

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased at this opportunity to speak today after the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). Incidentally, a little over two years ago I also happened to speak after the hon. member in a debate in the House initiated by the opposition—we were the opposition at the time—concerning the job-creation programs of the Progressive Conservative government of which my hon. colleague was a member when he was sitting on this side of the House. That same government abolished direct job-creation programs, as the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) pointed out earlier. It had succeeded in doing away with tax credit programs for job creation and in nine months managed to create an economic situation that led Quebecers and Canadians to put them back where they belonged, in the opposition.

When listening to the hon. member for Joliette, we hear the same rhetoric and the same turn of phrase often used by Parti Québécois ministers and also heard this week at the federal-provincial conference, where the Premier of Quebec spoke more or less in the same terms. They probably share the services of the same speech writers on economic subjects, and they also share the notion that an emergency plan is supposed to solve all our problems. What they are saying, in substance, is that we have to spend money to try to find some kind of solution. The Canadian government is expected to give the government of Quebec hundreds of millions of dollars so it can make propaganda and conduct advertising campaigns, and subsidize the salaries it pays its employees. I am sorry to have to tell the hon. member for Joliette that the Canadian government has no intention of doing so.

I should like to set the record straight as far as job-creation programs are concerned and tell the House what the Canadian government has done recently in this area. Mr. Speaker, without going into a lengthy introduction, I should like to give some facts and figures to demonstrate the role played by the federal government in job creation, especially in Quebec. In two years, in 1981-82, the federal government's direct job-creation policy created 150,600 jobs in Canada, of which 44,850 were created in the province of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, these actions speak louder than words. Not like the Parti Québécois, which last week cancelled the OSE program. They said that everything was all right, that there were no problems involved in abolishing the OSE program. It only meant that directors of information would go back to their departments. In other words, the OSE was a propaganda and information program which, for all practical purposes, was not doing anything. That is not the kind of action we are taking. We are creating programs that produce results and I shall give a few more examples.

The hon. member for Joliette knows full well that even in his riding, hundreds of thousands of dollars are poured each year into direct employment programs; those programs are meant, with his co-operation, to create jobs and help the people of his riding. The same goes for the whole province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker. Now, speaking of the employment tax credit program launched a few years ago, had it not been cancelled by the Progressive Conservative government, 43,400 jobs would have been created during the current fiscal year, of which again 15,770 in the province of Quebec alone; that is, the fair share Quebec is entitled to in terms of a federal presence and activity.

I feel that we of the Quebec caucus on this side of the House have no reason to be ashamed of the presence and activities of the federal government in Quebec. On the other hand, of the 6,000 Canadians who will benefit from the federal job program intended for the underprivileged, 2,500 will be created in the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker. There is also the Local Employment Assistance Program—LEAP—through which 954 Quebecers will find fulfilling employment. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. It may be exasperating somewhat for opposition members to be given this information and the statistics may be boring, but still, it is important for members of the government to quote the true figures and inform the people.

• (1710)

Mr. Speaker, several job-creation programs for students set up by the Department of Employment and Immigration and the Department of National Defence will provide this year 10,412 jobs to young Quebecers. It is, once again, a very practical step Mr. Speaker. Next summer, the number of young Canadians taking advantage of this opportunity will be over 43,000 for the entire country and 10,000 jobs will be earmarked for Quebec. I could also mention several other programs but I will only refer to the employment program in the field of new technology which will create this year 800 jobs in Canada, almost 300 of which will be in Quebec. This is action Mr. Speaker. I will mention as well the crucial role played on behalf of Canadians, especially our young people, by job-training programs for which this year alone the federal government will spend over $880 million. In Quebec, those programs sponsored by Ottawa will be available this year to a total of 66,000 workers of whom 45,154 will be attending classes in institutions and 19,791 will learn on the job, to mention only the main sectors.

I could also refer to the training program and I see that my colleague, the hon. member of Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais), is citing Iron Ore as an example. One can mention the Iron Ore Co. as well as Sorel and now Montmagny-l'Islet. I think that those were practical steps taken by the government through the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Department of Trade and Commerce as well as all other intermediates. These are very interesting figures, Mr. Speaker. Incidentally, those figures cleary show that the Department of Employment and Immigration was justified in advocating that its new program which aims at providing Canadian workers with a better training for the eighties, include such courses which will qualify them in areas where employment opportunities are more easily available and salaries more attractive.

I mentioned a while ago the 44,850 jobs available in Quebec through the federal government but of course it happens sometimes that those jobs are filled in turn by several employees. This year 52,400 Quebecers will benefit. Now if we add to that figure the 66,000 others who have registered for training courses, we get a total of 118,400 Quebecers who benefit directly from the various programs designed for either job training or subsidized training which will enable workers to seek better jobs. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that those figures lay to rest the pessimistic comments we heard earlier from hon. members opposite. And that is not all. The federal programs were especially geared to help women, native people, the handicapped and, generally speaking, all people who require special assistance to find a job and hang on to it. With respect to training, 620 women in Quebec this year took advantage of courses in trades which by tradition have been so far the preserve of men. Some 513 Quebec native people took special training courses, including a good many in the North Shore and Abitibi regions.

All told, 333,638 Canadians took those training courses, including, I repeat, 60,000-odd residents of the province of Quebec. Incidentally, I would like to point out again that the federal government is making a generous contribution to training programs through the unemployment insurance fund. For instance, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has just revived the shared work program. As the hon. member for Joliette noted earlier, the minister has probably maintained some features of the programs launched by his predecessors, but certainly none of those promoted by the former employment and immigration minister when the hon. member for Joliette was responsible for supply and services. The present minister never misses an opportunity within cabinet or before the House to emphasize the active participation of the Government of Canada in the training and job-creation programs. I am confident that within the coming weeks and months, the minister will announce new measures which will prove to be as worth while as those which have been implemented over the past two years.

I have had the honour of being parliamentary secretary to the minister for two years. I can say that his dedication when it comes to job creation and job training is definitely not reflected in the speeches we hear from members opposite. The minister is deeply committed because he knows that the labour market is going through hard times right now, and that is why the government is doing something about it instead of laying low and making empty speeches. During the current fiscal year, $200 million in unemployment insurance benefits are earmarked for training programs, including $41,800 for the province of Quebec. With respect to the allocation of funds, I would point out also that the federal government will spend $1,074,400 for various labour-related programs in 1981-82, and Quebec's share will be close to $300 million, including $185.2 million for job-training programs in that province.

It can therefore be seen, without denying the existence of economic problems which are not for that matter peculiar to Canada, since unemployment, for instance, is much more severe in other countries, that there are important and effective programs designed to improve the lot of our workers which benefit Quebec enormously. Also, Mr. Speaker, I must remind the House that we live in an ever-changing world and that technological advance causes disruptions which require that our training programs be completely updated. That is the type of activity in which task forces were involved last year from the Employment and Immigration Commission as well as the parliamentary group which included members of the opposition—the Allmand group—whose findings prompted the Minister of Employment and Immigration to prepare the new training program he recently introduced to the provinces at the Vancouver conference.

All I want to add is that I hope the province of Quebec, which has always received its fair share, as I have just shown, will continue to benefit from its participation in the Canadian endeavour, because in the next decade Canada will have more challenges and more new problems to face as well as more encouraging prospects than any other country in the world. This comes directly under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I should like to go on for a while giving examples of concrete projects implemented over the past 18 months by the Canadian government and which were mentioned by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during a fund-raising dinner last December. For instance, there is the shipbuilding industry, whose activities are centered in the Sorel-Tracy area, the pulp and paper and primary industries in the Schefferville, Port-Cartier and Sept-Iles regions, and now there is the program in the Montmagny-L'Islet area for those unable to adapt to the ever-changing world situation and whom the federal government has decided to help financially.

We have seen that the Canadian government has come up with an Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program to which it has allocated $350 million over a five-year period. By 1985, we will have spent $476 million on the completion of the Canadian space program. The megaprojects affected include the manufacturing of the handling arm for the U.S. space shuttles, of satellites, antennae and ground-station equipment. Most of that equipment will be manufactured in Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue, Quebec, by the Sport Company, and out of the $132 million committed, Quebec will get some $50 million. Also, 500 of the 1,000 jobs in that high technology sector will be created in Quebec. The government will also commit more than $32 million by 1982 for the development and the use of the Telidon Videotex system.

In the Montreal and Quebec City areas, cable subscribers can now view the pages of La Presse's telecomputerized newspaper. There are a number of other programs, Mr. Speaker. For instance, a special $170 million fund to promote the development and use of microelectronic equipment was instrumental in the opening of an important Mitel plant in Bromont. Six microelectronic centres will be set up in Canada, including one at the University of Sherbrooke, again in the eastern townships area, again in the province of Quebec. Moreover, the Canadian government will also grant $50 million in financial help to the Pratt & Whitney Corporation in Longueuil for the Development of Dash-8 engines, and the spin-offs of the F-18 fighter contract are already estimated at more than $835 million for Quebec.

Also worth mentioning is the salvaging of the Canadair Corporation, which was bought by the Canadian government, and whose Challenger aircraft is meeting with unprecedented success. And, Mr. Speaker, who invested $90 million in Bombardier for the manufacture of 50 railways cars and 21 LRC engines for the VIA Rail Corporation? Was it the Quebec government which buys its buses in the United States? No, Mr. Speaker, it was the Canadian government. And who gave them financial and political support to land a $150 million contract for 230 rail cars for the Mexico City subway? Once again it was the Canadian government, Mr. Speaker. And who invested $150 million in the Bombardier plant in Valcourt, to help in the manufacturing of 2,762 army trucks Mr. Speaker? Was it the Quebec government? Was it the government whose rhetoric the hon. member is using to suggest we are doing nothing for the province of Quebec? No, Mr. Speaker, it was the Canadian government. Finally, Mr. Speaker, who helped Bombardier secure from Volkswagen the technology transfer for the design and manufacturing of its Iltis jeep? Who else but the ministers, Members of Parliament and officials of the Canadian government, which the hon. member calls the silent group in the Quebec caucus. That group, Mr. Speaker, may appear to be silent to the hon. member for Joliette, but it is a group who knows how to deliver the goods, Mr. Speaker.

We also allocated $135 million to modernize the Quebec pulp and paper industry, that is in greater Quebec City. We did the same for the shipbuilding industry, which will receive an additional $225 million over the next three years to update its production equipment. We have therefore done our job in this area as well. The interests of Quebec have been defended by Members of Parliament in caucus, in cabinet, by the people from Quebec, and not only by the rhetoric of the present provincial government.

Under the National Energy Program, the Trans-Quebec and Maritimes Gas Pipeline Company is now completing work on a pipeline which will soon supply gas to Eastern Canada. This project alone will create $1.5 billion in investments over the next five years. This is a further positive action, in my opinion. The Canadian company Dome Petroleum has also purchased Davie Shipbuilding of Lauzon to manufacture the equipment it will need for its prospecting and development activities in the north. As everyone knows, this is another priority of the National Energy Program.

This week, we announced the new ports policy for Canada which will give local authorities more input in decision-making and help the ports of Quebec City, Montreal, Sept-Îles and others to take concrete action and to co-operate with local industries in developing Quebec ports. In the last five years, we have spent over $12 million to develop the port at Gros-Cacouna, and I see here the hon. member for Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Gendron) who was very active in this regard. He delivered the goods and did something positive for the people of Rivière-du-Loup and all Quebecers, instead of being satisfied with rhetoric like the hon. member for Joliette. When the Progressive Conservative Party was in power, the hon. member for Joliette did not say that this project had been under discussion for 15 years, but rather that it was a concrete measure taken by the Progressive Conservative government. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I believe that the people in Quebec and the residents of Rivière-du-Loup did not believe what the hon. member for Joliette was saying, and that is why his party was defeated on February 18, 1980, an anniversary we shall probably celebrate in two weeks.

The Progressive Conservative Party had not even invited the hon. member for Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup who had been the moving spirit and promoter of this project, Mr. Speaker. In the Quebec region, we also provided a $5.5 million subsidy to the Quebec Inter-Port Company to strengthen the industrial base in the Quebec area by improving port facilities. What about the old port project in greater Quebec City? What about the infrastructures developed by the Canadian government in our area? Indeed, we know that $80 million has been allocated to modernize the commuter train system in the Montreal area. I can see how the Progressive Conservative members can find these comments irritating. Of course, they would not like us to broadcast that this money is being spent, that jobs are being created, and that we do not just discuss projects, but carry them out. Additional funds amounting to $42.8 million will be allocated to promote tourism in Quebec, despite the fact that the Quebec Minister of Tourism has refused to attend the federal-provincial conferences on tourism. This same Minister of Tourism then comes to Ottawa and tells the federal government that it is not doing enough for Quebec's economic development. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette may want to associate himself with these people, but the Quebecers, the Quebec members of the Liberal caucus in Ottawa are certainly not interested in being associated with them.

There is still more, Mr. Speaker. We shall be spending $15 million a year toward the capital costs of trade and convention centres in seven major cities in Canada, including, of course, the one in Montreal, even though, once again, the provincial minister does not want to attend federal-provincial conferences where these matters are discussed. They say that they will only attend conferences dealing with the economy. Yet, Mr. Speaker, for the people of the Gaspé peninsula, for the people of the Quebec City metropolitan area, for the people of Lac Saint-Jean, for the people of the entire province of Quebec, tourism is a major industry and the Quebec government is responsible for promoting it in co-operation with the federal government, and not by way of confrontation.

This is a very incomplete picture, but all this action has been taken because of the pressures and the vigilant co-operation of the Quebec Liberal caucus in Ottawa, a group of Members of Parliament who have decided no longer to give way to the requirements of the rhetoric of the Quebec government, but to take action in their own areas of jurisdiction. I do not think that we have any lesson to learn from the hon. member for Joliette. Where was he when this action was being taken? He was with Biron, Parizeau and Lévesque. He was dealing in rhetoric and propaganda while we were creating jobs, Mr. Speaker.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we are allotted a mere 20 minutes. It is regrettable that I had to speak right after the hon. member for Joliette, because perhaps it might have been interesting to see his kind of reaction to the explanations that he was given concerning job creation and investments by the federal government in the province of Quebec.

[English]

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I could not begin to compete with the kind of rhetoric we have just heard, so I will stick to my own text.

I am grateful for the opportunity to speak in this debate because I wish to share with hon. members my concern about the most important industry in our country—in terms of employment, at least—the forest industry. In doing so I wish to remind the government of the consequences of a deliberate policy of neglect, consequences which are particularly serious at this time.

I will also try to make some positive suggestions, as is my style. I am glad the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is here. I know the minister responsible for forestry was here a minute ago. I hope those ministers will have their ears pricked so they can learn what is new.

First let me put up a backdrop for the ugly scene of neglect for which this government is at least partially responsible. Officially there are some 1,030,000 people unemployed in Canada today. Unofficially some say that number is closer to 1.5 million. Incredibly, half of those people are under the age of 24. The youth component of our unemployment rate is the biggest. Young people in our country today are starting their lives with feelings of uncertainty and even fear. Their hopes are dashed. Their aspirations are disappointed. Instead of confidence and enthusiasm they have doubt and mistrust in the system from which they have just graduated and of which they are the product.

It is said that our economy is in a serious state of crisis, but the worst crisis is the crisis of unemployment and the crisis of confidence which unemployment has created. It is a crisis of loss of esteem and loss of confidence. We have lost the confidence of our young people. There is a lack of confidence in our ability to function as a nation. People lack confidence in their government. They have been deceived and betrayed. People tell me they feel they have been lied to and, as several of my colleagues have already said, I have the feeling people have had that done to them once too often. As I said earlier, we have even lost confidence in ourselves. That is a very serious matter because we cannot begin to rebuild a nation if people do not have confidence in themselves and in their own ability to produce and share in the task of producing.

As hon. members know, I recently published the results of a study I carried out in my office dealing with the problem of youth unemployment. I discovered that despite all the efforts the government claims to have made over the last 15 years, the situation of young people in the labour force and statistics relating to unemployed young people have worsened. For instance, in 1966 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 made up 24.2 per cent of the total labour force, but they made up 40.6 per cent of the unemployed. In 1980, 26.8 per cent of the labour force were people between the ages of 15 and 24—a small increase—but that group made up 47.1 per cent of the unemployed. No wonder people are frustrated with our educational system and are demanding change. Even if we were to come to terms with the backlog of training required to get our young people into the work force and, to help them make the transition from school to work, our economy could not, at least in present circumstances, absorb our young people.

As hon. members know, I represent an area in Canada which has a disproportionate number of young people in it. It is a young man's country. It is pioneering country. It is also a producing area of our country. Most Canadians look at north-eastern British Columbia as an area that holds out greater promise than the rest of Canada, particularly in view of the planned megaprojects, and the richness of resources that we have, particularly hydrocarbons and lumber. In fact, many Canadians from right across Canada, in particular Newfoundlanders and Quebecers, have moved to my area to find work, to start raising families and building their lives. Most of them are young Canadians. They have brought with them many school-aged children and many who have just left school who have had to join the unemployment rolls recently.

Some of these people are now worse off than they were before. In northeastern British Columbia and in areas that are heavily industrialized, we have above-average unemployment rates. In Prince George, there is an 11.5 per cent unemployment rate, which is almost 3 per cent above the national average. Living costs are, of course, much higher than in most other parts of the country. That is why I say that people who have come from Newfoundland or Quebec are worse off now living in British Columbia than they were in Newfoundland or Quebec because the cost of living is higher but the unemployment insurance cheque is the same right across the country.

The reason for the slump in the economy in that area is partially the National Energy Program. It has literally closed down the energy sector. For instance, in the northern part of my constituency, in the Peace River country and up to the Yukon border, there were last year 120 oil rigs and exploration drilling activities going on. Right now there are 18 such rigs in operation. The service industry is, of course, affected and has also shut down.

Some cities are practically bankrupt. Large and small businesses and hotels which are only two and three years old are in receivership in some parts. The minister does not believe these statistics. He says that he is doing the best he can for Canada to help us regain energy self-sufficiency. If that is the way to do it, I would like to know what other ways there are to gain energy self-sufficiency.

What is being done is having a devastating effect on the economy in my area. In the main, the economy of central B.C. is based on the harvest of our forests. The lumber and forest industry is finding itself in dire straits. The lumber and forest industry used to be known as the goose that laid the golden egg. One out of every ten Canadians found work in the forest industry and earned a living from the harvest of trees. Our wood converting industries generate more export dollars than agriculture, fisheries, mining and hydrocarbons—oil and gas combined. Mainly because of the rich endowment of our natural virgin forests and the excellent qualities of our products, the industry has always been self-sufficient. Very seldom has it come to government for any kind of help. In fact, the government has always been a parasite on the industry. This industry is probably the oldest one in our country. Even though warning signals were sounded years ago, this government felt it had no responsibility to reinvest in the resource, to reinvest in the industry to help it maintain its vibrancy and its efficiency, even though on an annual basis the federal government collects $8 billion in taxes and royalties from the wood-converting industry. Business leaders and professionals alerted us to the fact that our resource base was depleting at a much faste rate than it was being renewed. But this government started to tear down what was once a proud agency of this government, the national forestry service.

About 15 years ago, we had twice as many people working as professionals and servants in the Canadian Forest Service. The government was told but it ignored the warnings that our markets were limited, that we should diversify and go into other areas, to Europe, to the Pacific Rim countries to sell our products. The industry needed to retain more of its profits to do research into new products and develop products that would be required in the more diversified markets. The industry needed to retain more profits to modernize plants and to improve productivity as well as to replenish the resource base, although resources have always been looked at as provincial responsibilities because provincial governments are the owners of the resources. Warning signals were sounded. Governments were told that there had to be more intensive forest management. There needed to be a greater protection of the resource base which was being ravaged by fire, by insects and by other natural elements.

Ken Grave, president of the Ontario Forest Industry Association, said that spending on forest management in Ontario must increase at least fivefold to ensure that the country's existing forest resource can play its proper role in Canada's economic future.

What have we done instead? Instead we have allowed the federal manpower strength to be decreased by 50 per cent over the last ten years. This strength comprised the scientists who could have helped us with the task. All of these things have been neglected and that is why we are in such difficulty. We did not help the industry develop new products. The efforts that were made were usually too little and too late. Now we are reaping the harvest of this deliberate policy of neglect. The industry is particularly hard hit, and it is hard hit because of a very serious international economic situation. There are very uncongenial market conditions, particularly in the United States. Because we did not develop any new markets, most of our products are still sold in the United States. As we all know, not many houses are being built in the United States right now, and because we failed to move into other markets, Canada is now almost wholly dependent on economic conditions in the United States to restore the health of this industry.

Our plants in eastern Canada are antiquated. Some efforts to help modernize the industry have occurred, but again too little too late. The cost of raw materials, such as logs, has dramatically increased because we have neglected the prime growth areas close to our sawmills. We have left it to nature alone to regenerate these areas. As we all know, nature takes time and time is running out.

The effects of this neglect are now painfully apparent and reflect themselves in massive unemployment, temporary layoffs and other distorted labour conditions.

• (1740)

Various industrial associations throughout the country have reported that of the 300,000 Canadians who are directly employed in wood-converting industries, between 105,000 and 115,000, or almost one third, have either been laid off or are involved in programs under which the unions have agreed to share the work among members rather than cash in on some of the unemployment insurance programs. The minister likes to take credit for the work-sharing program, but it is really a sharing of poverty and misery. I give credit to the companies and unions which were able to negotiate deals whereby workers share the available work. Some work two days per week others work three days per week, and in so doing they stay off the unemployment insurance roll.

I should like to break down the statistics I have just mentioned with respect to total unemployment in the forest sector. As I said, there are 300,000 people directly involved in the forest industry. Roughly 40 per cent of its total industrial capacity is located in the maritimes, Ontario and Quebec. The industry is operating at 57 per cent below normal. I would calculate from that percentage that roughly 68,000 people are laid off in the maritime provinces and in the Quebec and Ontario regions. The prairies, including the province of Alberta, share roughly 10 per cent of the industrial capacity of the forest sector. They are working at roughly 32 per cent capacity, which means that approximately 9,000 people are out of work. In British Columbia the problem is much more dramatic because the province produces 50 per cent of our wood products. There are about 150,000 people directly employed in the British Columbia forest industry. Close to the end of January that industry was operating at 75 per cent capacity. This means that approximately 37,500 people are laid off or are involved in some work-sharing program.

Of course, these figures do not include the industrial sectors which service the forest industry. It is said that up to 700,000 Canadians indirectly rely on wood-converting industries for their livelihood. If one projects these figures throughout the industry, one arrives at the staggering number of 380,000 people who are presently in some way affected, either laid off or operating in reduced circumstances. This is very dramatic, particularly since the industry reported to me that, at least in the short term, there will likely be a worsening of the situation. As we all know, interest rates in the United States are turning around and rising. Canadian interest rates are sure to follow because the government is totally devoid of any new ideas. We will see our interest rates following those of the United States. This is bad news for the lumber and construction industries. Even the most optimistic estimates for 1982 indicate that we should not expect a turnaround until late in the second or third quarter of the year. Of course this means that lay-offs will continue to accelerate and the statistics will be even more devastating by spring. The potential is real and in the short term it is disastrous.

Unfortunately there is very little the government can do now in terms of direct intervention. The industry is not one which lends itself to becoming involved in a partnership with the government such as other industries do. A patchwork solution would be to supplement the wages of workers who have enrolled in work-sharing programs with some unemployment insurance benefits. It would be a band-aid solution, a patchwork program, but nevertheless it might save the unemployment insurance fund more money. At least it would allow people to keep their jobs, do some work and remain in their communities so that when the turnaround comes—and of course there is a pent-up demand—they would be ready to return to work. Of course we know that there are hundreds of small one-industry communities throughout the country in the forest industry. It would allow people to remain in those communities, to be ready to return to work and to take part in the future of their industry which indeed is bright.

In talking with the forecasters I was told that the world demand for wood products would increase dramatically, in fact by 50 per cent to 60 per cent, over the next 20 years. In the next 60 years it is expected that the demand for wood products throughout the world will triple. Canada should capture a lion's share of the new markets and fill these demands. The world supply of wood fibres is in a very precarious situation. We read in the newspapers every day that while we have neglected our forest base, other countries are doing even a worse job, particularly in the south, and that Canada will be looked upon as a major supplier of future requirements in wood fibres. The government's forest strategy committee predicts a doubling of our output of forest products by the year 2000. To achieve this we will have to cut 50 per cent more trees by that time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the subject of our debate today is extremely important to Canadians of all groups and ages across Canada. The government realized this some time ago, and after it was returned to power, it proposed a number of measures to create jobs, using various formulas such as community development projects, to name only one. There have been other measures aimed at providing better training and especially practical training for all Canadian workers. In fact, it is this particular aspect of the employment situation which I would like to discuss in the House. First of all, I may remind my hon. colleagues that a few weeks ago, at the federal-provincial conference in Vancouver, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) introduced a national training program designed to meet the requirements of this decade, which was very well received by the Canadian people. Incidentally, it is high time that Canadians became aware that the federal government spends about $860 million annually on manpower training.

It is also clear, as the Minister of Employment and Immigration very appropriately stressed, that we shall have to change our teaching methods without delay and start to offer courses that are better adapted to filling our manpower requirements, especially in areas requiring very specialized skills. Editorial writers, among them Keith Spicer in Vancouver, expressed their surprise that at the conference provincial spokesmen had shown considerable concern, for control over their jurisdictions, of course, but none at all for jobs or adequate training. Many people in my own riding have told me: Stop this federal-provincial nit-picking. We want the money to which we in the province of Quebec are entitled to come to us, and we want our provincial governments to meet you in Ottawa about these job-creation programs. Another analyst, Mr. Orland French of the Ottawa Citizen, was saying more or less the same thing on January 11, when he wondered whether the Ontario minister of education, Mrs. Bette Stephenson, was opposed to the federal program because it suggested that investments were inadequate or inappropriate, courses did not meet the needs of industry, and so forth. In each instance, Mr. French noted that this was not so and that Mrs. Stephenson was concerned only about her own jurisdiction in educational matters.

It is obvious that the provinces will have to acknowledge, for the sake of workers throughout Canada, that too much money has already been spent for programs aimed at training people for disciplines already overcrowded or seriously declining and that, in the future, we shall have to provide training which will be better suited to the needs of our economy, especially as we shall no longer be able to rely as much on immigration as we did in the past, a fact the Minister of Employment and Immigration has often indicated, while the number of new Canadian entrants on the labour market will decline. This problem has been especially well described in an editorial in Le Droit by Mr. Pierre Bergeron, who first noted that Ottawa and the provinces should both feel responsible for the present situation, but then added that they must all be part of the answer which will depend, and I quote:

—essentially on the ability of Ottawa to provide leadership and co-ordination.

This same courage is reflected in the proposal made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration in Vancouver, together with an acknowledgement of the need in such a vast country as ours, with its regional disparities, to provide this essential role of co-ordination mentioned by Mr. Bergeron, who also added:

—this will not occur painlessly. The provinces will have to forget their pride and realize that the program will fail if they insist on doing things independently.

The editorialist concluded with these words:

—the seriousness and the urgency of the problem must prevail over parochial disputes.

Mr. Speaker, we constantly hear the same thing in our constituencies, where people tell us of the need to stop arguing and to provide the money and the mechanisms needed to create employment, and of the need for the various levels of government to come to an agreement and to intercommunicate.

Mr. Speaker, the issue of job training is of major importance when we are discussing unemployment and job creation, as we are now doing in this House. Even today with massive unemployment in Canada, there are still thousands of jobs for which no qualified applicant has been found. And, on the basis of the research done by Employment and Immigration Board task forces, as well as the Allmand parliamentary committee, this problem will get worse unless our training programs are redirected as advocated by the Minister of Employment and Immigration at the recent Vancouver conference. He mentioned that the substantial economic growth anticipated during the next decade, will give rise to tremendous challenges and wonderful opportunities. However, he added that we will only be successful if we replace the Adult Occupational Training Act, now 15 years old, by new legislation which would meet the needs of the eighties as far as abilities are concerned and which at the same time would increase job opportunities for many Canadians. And with your permission Mr. Speaker I should like now to mention some of the main proposals contained in the Axworthy formula introduced in Vancouver which is undoubtedly consistent under any jurisdiction, either federal or provincial.

First, designated national occupations would be granted special financing and accelerated training. On that point, the Minister gave the following explanation and I quote:

—we need a national training program because we are dealing with a real national labour market. Priority will be given to filling gaps in skilled jobs of national importance, namely, those where existing and future gaps at the national level, cannot be filled without that kind of measure.

Second Mr. Speaker, an adjustment and skill-training fund which will help finance capital assets and operating costs of training institutions. In co-operation with the provinces, if they so wish, the federal government will use this fund to finance investment expenditures and initial operating costs with a view to setting up, expanding or modernizing institutions and provide equipment for technical training.

Those institutions can be managed by the provinces, by industrial firms or non-profit organizations. Mr. Speaker, I repeat, by the provinces. Then, if the latter want to co-operate, they will have no excuse to claim they have no input, as sometimes does a certain Quebec government that is always asking for money to spend as it pleases without saying, of course, where it came from. Because no doubt this is top secret, people should not be told the money comes from the federal government. It may not be a sin, but it is something one must not mention in the province of Quebec. Therefore, concerning the manpower adjustment and improvement fund, we say that the institutions involved could be managed by the provinces, by industrial firms or non-profit organizations.

Third, I would like to comment on the reallocation of resources to critical trade-skills training and the retraining of workers affected by technological change. Because the requirements of economic growth and the changes that will come about in the eighties require a significant increase in the proportion of resources allocated to critical trade-skills training. Consequently, it is essential to expand considerably critical trade-skills training and to update the general industrial training program so that our efforts are mainly focused on critical trade skills, the retraining of workers affected by new technologies and the training of unemployed men and women.

Mr. Speaker, concerning unemployed men and women, quite recently in my constituency a plant unfortunately had to lay off a great number of workers. Thanks to the training program, it was possible to redirect those workers to other fields and train them as an extension of the unemployed insurance program. In this way they can take courses in toolmaking, welding and other similar courses. I believe that in such circumstances a solution is vocational training so that people in temporary difficulty may acquire skills. The Allmand report suggested there would be a dearth of people to fill those specialized jobs. Of necessity, those people must meet the requirements of employers.

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention a new remedial classes program designed to teach skills for which job opportunities exist on the labour market. Common sense has no jurisdiction, whether provincial or federal, Mr. Speaker, and everyone knows that greater efforts will be required to integrate successfully in the economy the so-called dropouts who, if given a special opportunity to which they are entitled by reason of their special problems, can finally play a useful and honourable role in a society that has a duty to help those in need of such special help in order to become self-reliant in their own and in the state's interest.

By the way, such a program has been in existence for years and is very successful, thanks in particular to the co-operation of businesses—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois) had the floor.

Mr. Dubois: When the House rose at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was saying that professional training does indeed create new jobs. I had reached my fourth item and I was showing how this result is achieved. This program has been going on for years and is meeting with tremendous success, thanks in part to the support of such corporations as the Bank of Montreal, Consolidated-Bathurst, Bell Canada and Canadair. For it goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that programs such as this could not be successful through the efforts of the governments alone, for our economic system is based mainly on private enterprise.

Private enterprise must, therefore, help assess and identify its needs for skilled workers before the labour force can be trained. It should also monitor the relevancy and quality of the information we have on the labour market situation. Fifth, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with equal opportunities for women and other people with special needs, such as the Indians whose involvement in the labour force will increase considerably over the next decade, especially in western Canada. We must see to it that the handicapped and other disadvantaged people acquire or develop the new skills they need to have access to the good jobs of the future. Concerning the assistance which handicapped people need, the Government of Canada, through its Department of Employment and Immigration, has implemented a program to encourage corporations to hire them.

Now that 1981, a special year for the handicapped persons, is over, I think we can honestly say that this program has been tremendously successful in Canada and has helped these people join the labour force. Sixth, there are new programs which will make it possible for voluntary and non-profit organizations to take part in the training of our labour force. Seventh, a manpower mobility program will help our workers, especially those living in the province of Quebec, to participate in the great projects under way in other regions and from which all provinces should benefit. It is not by raising walls around our towns, regions and provinces that we will help our workers, especially if we deprive them of the opportunity—I should say the right—to get a job on which they could easily support their families.

Something which appears to have upset the provinces recently is the desire of the federal government, which contributes financially to a very large extent to the training of workers, to have its involvement known to the public. I feel this is just as reasonable as wanting the public to believe that because this is connected with eduation, all the money is coming from the provinces. I feel it is really important for the Quebec people to know that this program is financed largely by the Canadian government, which has been allocating funds to it for many years. To my mind, a national training program must be flexible and readily adaptable to the needs of changing situations. That is why a bill has already been introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration providing for the extension of the training period beyond the present 52 weeks, greater access to training, simpler and improved administration of the training program as well as greater involvement of the private sector and other groups concerned with on-the-job training.

As I mentioned earlier, the private sector must become increasingly involved in the program, in order to assess and define the needs of specialized workers with a view to providing such training as will meet their needs. It is also to be hoped that the provinces, without overlooking their jurisdictions or financial needs, will show a greater interest in the real needs of the workers with regard to training, especially in terms of future requirements, while remembering, however, that when they lend a helping hand professionally, they cannot take all the credit for complete and absolute success. This, indeed, is what Mrs. Lise Bissonnette, in the newspaper Le Devoir for January 16, after the Vancouver conference, reminded the Quebec minister of education, Mr. Camille Laurin, and Mr. Robert Dean, parliamentary secretary to the minister of labour, Mr. Marois, saying that in Quebec alone, the trade schools system is a minor scandal: it offers training in 90 super-specialized fields to the young of 14 to 17 years of age.

Mr. Speaker, everyone agrees that the Adult Occupational Training Act, now 15 years old, no longer meets present needs adequately, and even less those of the future when the highest degree of specialized training will be imperative. All levels of government and the private sector must work together to get professional training that is adapted to the new and changing needs of our economy and industry. This sensible and practical approach will also be required of unions and their members. Training in areas with an existing or potential manpower surplus should be stopped or at least substantially reduced.

If we succeed in alleviating manpower shortages, especially in highly skilled jobs, we will then be able to stimulate the economy, improve our competitive position on international markets, reduce inflationary pressures and provide Canadians with training and retraining opportunities that will help them get interesting and well-paid jobs generated by our country's economic recovery. I should like to point out that the regions will also benefit by this policy. I am saying this because some unwitting proponents of "balkanization" would actually deny some of their fellow citizens' higher education because they are afraid they would then move to one of the other provinces to work.

The long night of the Duplessis year is history, but in 1982 there are still people who are saying, substantially, that training is okay, but not too much, if they are going to use that training somewhere else. Are we going to prevent Quebec workers from retraining for another job, just because they might get a better job in another town or province? And what if Quebec's own requirements may soon oblige us to seek elsewhere the workers we failed to train in this province?

Mr. Speaker, I feel that with respect to occupational training, the financial incentives given employers under the training in industry program should be modified in order to simplify the assistance framework, accelerate training in occupations where there is a shortage of skilled manpower and encourage training and retraining of women in occupations traditionally held by men and also training and retraining of special needs clients, such as native peoples and the handicapped. I believe that such developments will be very important in the years to come.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter we are dealing with in today's debate is the federal government's deliberate failure to create job opportunities for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians now looking for work and, in addition to them, the thousands who will be entering the work force in the coming months and years. Nothing could be more pertinent to the responsibilities we hold as Members of Parliament than that we should do something to alleviate the terrible suffering and the waste of human potential that unemployment is inflicting upon the Canadian society today.

Seldom in our history have we seen such devastating circumstances as those that confront us now. When we look at the figures, they tell a very difficult story. As of January 8, the last date for which the figures were available, the seasonally adjusted unemployment level in Canada was estimated at 1,026,000 persons, or over one million Canadians out of work.

That figure does not include hidden unemployed, the many people who have given up in despair and are no longer in the labour force. After months and years of looking for work, some of them have just had to give up. It does not include those who have abandoned hope, who have given in to despair that they will not be able to find jobs. If this figure of the hidden unemployed were to be included, it would make the figure much higher than the one million that we have in public knowledge today. It could, it has been estimated, raise that figure tragically to something like one and a half million Canadians unemployed.

Today when we turned on our radios and read our newspapers, we were advised of a report that had been done for the federal Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which predicts that another 175,000 Canadians will be out of work by March, and that many more in the next two months. It will primarily affect the manufacturing sectors of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

If you turned on your radio or read your paper and saw that in this morning's news and you happen to be a person employed in the manufacturing sector of these two provinces, what would your reaction be? I am sure it would be the same for people all across this country as it is for those who work in the manufacturing sector of these two provinces.

They know their security is threatened, their future shadowed by uncertainty. The anxiety and gloom which accompanies that must be present in all of their thinking. Thousands are probably asking themselves whether they will be the next to be laid off. They wonder, if it happens to them, how they will go about meeting their mortgage payments and providing a decent living for their family, and where they will find another job. This is what thousands of Canadians are asking themselves tonight because they live in uncertainty and insecurity in the job market in Canada today.

Faced with this kind of uncertainty, who can blame them if in the weeks and months ahead their productivity drops or they pay less attention than they normally do to detail? Tomorrow the unemployment figures will come out again. It does not take much insight and it certainly does not give anyone any joy to know that those figures will show an increase in the unemployment rate.

Speculation has it that the official number of unemployed between now and the summer months will probably rise to one and a half million Canadians. That will be one and a half million unemployed in a population of 24 million with a labour force of some 12 million. In other words, that is one eighth of Canada's labour force that will be without jobs.

Just think of the consequences economically and socially that that has for Canada today. Even if we were to think of it in the narrowest dollar terms, the consequences are considerable. When I checked these figures, I was told that each Canadian worker contributes an average of $20,000 a year to the gross national product. For one million workers who are now unemployed, it could mean an additional $20 billion to our gross national product. If this contribution were to be made, think of how it would reduce our deficit. I ask myself why the government cannot see this. Why does it not choose to go the route of building up job opportunities, of getting the unemployed back into the labour force? Why does it not choose to go that route?

Mr. Kelly: Spend more, higher deficit.

Miss MacDonald: There is another of the backbenchers from the Liberal Party who is willing to put all of the punishment on Canada's labour force and make more and more of them unemployed. What kind of heartlessness is that?

Mr. Kelly: Would you raise taxes? Would you spend more?

Mr. McDermid: We would spend smarter.

Miss MacDonald: Why does the government not realize that the money it wastes or spends on so many useless projects could go into job-creation which would give jobs to Canadians, giving them back something they do not have at the present time? It would give them back their confidence and self-respect.

• (2020)

Mr. Kelly: Give us an example.

Miss MacDonald: No, the Liberal Party does not want that. They want to see workers without jobs.

Mr. Kelly: Tell me how many millions would be saved. What would you spend it on?

Miss MacDonald: This government spends over $100 million a year on advertising.

Mr. McDermid: Propaganda.

Miss MacDonald: That is exactly what it is. It is useless advertising by the government which is trying to embellish its reputation with the Canadian public. That $100 million could be spent in additional job-creation programs to help many workers in Canada.

Mr. McDermid: That is just one example.

Miss MacDonald: Why can the government not follow a course which would make an effort to help the unemployed of Canada re-enter the job market so they can contribute to the gross national product?

Mr. Kelly: How will you spend the money?

Miss MacDonald: But no, the Liberal Party and the member who is raising his voice obviously do not feel their government has any responsibility to provide for the unemployed in this country. This is a severe indictment of those people opposite who are content to see the number of jobless rise.

What is more disturbing about the loss to the economy because of this unemployment is the added social costs to Canada. We are losing our potential for the development of our great human resource. If the economic costs of unemployment are high, I would suggest that the social costs are probably higher. These costs are impossible to calculate in dollar figures but they contribute directly to the demoralization of our society. When hope gives way to despair, and despair is what the government is creating—

Mr. Kelly: What do you do?

Miss MacDonald: When jobs disappear into oblivion, people find other avenues in which to express their frustration.

Mr. Kelly: Stop clucking and tell us what you would do.

Miss MacDonald: This frustration becomes evident through higher rates of crime, juvenile delinquency, family breakdown and suicide. These are the consequences of joblessness. How can anyone put a dollar figure on these very real results of unemployment? How do you calculate despair and loss of hope for one million unemployed in Canada? The most precious asset a person has is self-respect, and so often when someone loses a job, his or her self-respect and confidence is lost along with his feeling of contributing to the economy.

Mr. Kelly: That does not tell me a thing.

Miss MacDonald: Studies have shown that a prolonged loss of work can change a person's whole personality. The pressure of losing one's job produces not only depression and frustration but anger and violence. Many studies have been made which show how interconnected these two are.

Mr. Kelly: Tell us what you are prepared to do.

Miss MacDonald: Studies in Toronto, Windsor and Oshawa, where massive lay-offs have occurred, show that the demands for social services have escalated beyond belief. A special committee which was set up to deal with the needs of the unemployed in Windsor showed that there has been a 400 per cent increase in case loads. The public relations officer of the United Auto Workers said that there is a definite increase in the incidence of alcoholism and family problems, among the unemployed autoworkers. This is what happens when unemployment occurs.

Mr. Kelly: What are your policies, Flora?

Miss MacDonald: A recent report in the Ottawa Citizen stated that one in every 20 Canadian adult drinkers is alcohol-addicted, and this number can be expected to go up as the economy goes down. The report quotes a counsellor who has worked with alcoholics for 20 years as saying there is a direct correlation between unemployment and alcoholism because of the pressures unemployment puts on family life.

A Toronto study indicates that a widespread incidence of wife-battering and child abuse are tragic consequences of prolonged unemployment. The director of a family services bureau in Toronto said that he found, in dealing with clients who have been unemployed for some time, that many have been on edge and that any stress or difficulties tend to push them over the edge. Frustrations are sometimes taken out on the children, who are defenceless.

As well, there has been a distressing increase in the number of suicides over the past few years. For example, the Ottawa distress centre received over 900 calls threatening suicide in 1981, while two or three years ago, many fewer calls were received. The centre's director is concerned that as the unemployment situation becomes more severe and as the economy slips into deeper recession, the number of suicides will increase drastically.

Mr. Kelly: That is a distortion of the facts.

Miss MacDonald: Family breakdown, suicide, wife-battering and alcoholism are tragic companions of unemployment.

Mr. McDermid: Why were those facts not in your speech?

Miss MacDonald: It was my hope to hear the minister and other members of the Liberal Party outline this afternoon what the government proposes to do to start coping with the tremendous problem that all of us want to see remedied. I had hoped he would bring forward some proposals and follow the lead taken by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) in recognizing what is truly a monumental problem, and would recognize the fundamental shifts which we are going through in the economy, shifts which require the minister and his government to come up with imaginative new methods of job creation in order to alleviate today's terrible situation. What we need from the minister is a new sense of direction and a new spirit of co-operation. Instead, we had an exhibition from a person who was unable to cope with the magnitude of the problem which confronts him. Instead, he falls back on the defensive and lashes out at anyone and everyone in a desperate attempt to shift the blame. The minister blamed the other industrialized countries, he blamed the opposition, he blamed South Africa, he blamed foreign policy—whoever he could. But he gave us very little of a positive nature to show that the government is seriously trying to reverse the increasing unemployment.

I ask: what comfort, what consolation or hope does this kind of diatribe offer to the more than one million unemployed? It would be much better if the minister would face up to the hard facts about the economy. The basic fact is this: high interest rates drive up unemployment.

We heard all the provincial premiers saying the same thing this week; only the federal government was out of step. The fact that high interest rates drive up unemployment is particularly true in the manufacturing sector. When the economy is tight, people do not have the money to spend on commodities, and when these commodities are not being purchased, the manufacturing plants cut back on production. This is certainly apparent in my riding of Kingston and the Islands where over 850 workers have been laid off in six different manufacturing plants since October of last year. The number of unemployment insurance claims for the week of January 29 had increased by some 18 per cent over the same period last year. Between January 1 and January 18 there was an increase of 10 per cent in welfare claims in my constituency. That is only one constituency, but it is happening all across Canada.

Figures do not tell the whole story. In fact, all too often statistics try to smooth out what is a much more tragic situation. We are inclined to forget the faces behind those figures, the thousands who are forced to accept handouts, when what they really want is jobs.

• (2030)

A woman called from my constituency today and told me of the difficulties she and her husband are facing. Both of them had been in good jobs and had looked forward to a secure future. They were buying a home, and then suddenly both of them were laid off because of circumstances well beyond their control; and their mortgage payments were increased. She said: "How can we get ourselves out of this situation? We didn't ask for it. We had been conscientious, hard-working people, and suddenly we face this calamity."

What can we tell people like that at this critical period of their lives? Are we to tell them there will be many job-creation projects for them when, indeed, there are so few? In fact, the money currently being spent on job-creation projects is about $143 million, when the unemployment figure is 8.6 per cent. Do hon. members know that back in 1971 when the unemployment rate was much lower, at 6 per cent, the government spent $339 million on direct job creation? But now when the situation is much worse, the government cuts back.

I want to say just a few words about the unemployment situation as it applies to women in particular because there is great uncertainty for women in the labour force at the present time, but looking down the road it appears that the situation may be much worse. Some 50 per cent of all Canadian women now work, but by the year 2000 some 75 per cent of Canadian women are expected to be working, and that means five out of every ten workers will be women.

In the last number of years, as women entered the labour force, they went primarily into the service sectors where the economy had expanded to allow that kind of entry into the work force, but that tertiary sector of the economy is now saturated and women who will be entering the labour force will not have that opportunity. The question is whether they will be trained for other jobs. Will they have the opportunity to train for jobs which have normally been classified as "men's jobs"? We see very little of this at the present time. Yes, there are a few programs the government has undertaken, and I am glad to see that, but they are minimal compared with the number of retraining and job-creation projects needed to accommodate the great number of women who will be entering the labour force throughout the 1980s. They will be needed to retrain those women who are in secretarial and clerical positions but who will not be able to remain in those positions as they become more and more automated. The government should be making tremendous efforts to enrol these people in new job-creation projects or retraining projects.

I urge the government to realize there is still a much bigger challenge facing it. There is a much bigger problem awaiting us as we go through the 1980s as far as women in the work force are concerned. I plead with the minister that he do far more now to prepare for that eventuality than the government is doing at the present time.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak about what is really the number one political issue in Canada today. In the last few weeks I have talked to people in my constituency and in the area, and time and again I have been told this is the issue they see as being crucial. The leader of my party, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), has just finished completing a tour of a number of centres across Canada. On that tour he highlighted this and pointed to the fact that our party will be working to make this the number one political issue in Canada. I am pleased to see that the party to my right has also begun to see the light.

For anyone who has listened to what New Democrats have been saying over the past few months—indeed, the past few years—the current crisis should not be any surprise because time and again we have warned the government and the Canadian people that our present policies have been leading to disaster.

Unemployment is a basic and number one issue for two main reasons. First, there is the personal dimension of suffering by those who are directly involved. Second, we must recognize the drain unemployment imposes on local, regional and national economies.

If I could talk for just a moment about the personal dimension, when we recognize that every day—from last August right through to today and, according to government predictions, right on to at least March—3,000 more people are thrown into the ranks of the unemployed, we need to realize the difficulty each one of those 3,000 people faces in trying to keep afloat in the flood of inflation with only unemployment insurance or welfare to help them. We need to recognize the feeling parents have as they see lost opportunities for their children and forgo the things they simply cannot afford but a few weeks ago would have considered absolutely essential. We need to look at the big question mark which hangs over the heads of middle-aged and older employees who have been terminated from jobs to which there seems to be no call-back, and they wonder where they can go to get any kind of job again. These are people who all their lives have been productive employees and contributors to our society, and they are now being tossed to one side.

When we talk to these people, we often find that somehow the callous attitude of society which often blames the victim has got through to them so that they have a personal sense of failure. We need to convey very clearly to them and to all Canadians that it is not the victims of unemployment who are at fault but rather this government that has refused to take any action because that does not fit in with its narrow priorities.

Second, we need to recognize that when some one million Canadians are listed as officially unemployed and another 648,000 are rather euphemistically called "discouraged workers", making a total of 1,635,000 people who are out of work, that is not simply a number of small personal tragedies but has become a national disaster. "Discouraged workers" is the phrase Statistics Canada uses for those people who are no longer actively seeking employment because they have given up looking because they realize there are simply no jobs to be had.

When we consider the money paid out in unemployment insurance and in welfare, when we consider the loss of tax revenue and the loss of production of goods and services and when we look at the depressing effect on business, we have to say that unemployment is not just a series of personal tragedies but, in fact, a national disaster. At the very time when small businesses face killing high interest rates, they are also hit with reduced demand because people who do not have money coming in as wages do not have money to spend in stores and restaurants.

It might seem I am merely restating the obvious, but unfortunately the government cannot, or will not, see the obvious. Some of the Liberal backbenchers almost got the message during this past winter break when they returned to their constituencies and began to understand some of the ramifications of the budget policies of this government, but then they came back to Ottawa and got another message. It was a very simple message.

Mr. Blaikie: "Do as you are told."

Mr. Manly: "Get in line." I noticed last week at the time of the vote they were all in line. They were all present and accounted for. It seems that all the members on the opposite side share the vision of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Instead of seeing the obvious, they share a vision that denies the everyday reality of 1,600,000 Canadians.

• (2040)

I want to speak briefly about the extent of the problem. Although I will concentrate on British Columbia, that part of Canada I know best; other provinces and other communities suffer in the same way.

Before Christmas I took part in a tour arranged by our caucus during which we visited communities across Canada. At that time we discovered that the problems of the fish plant workers in Newfoundland were very much the same as the problems of the fish plant workers in Victoria or Prince Rupert. Factory workers in Nova Scotia face the same personal problems as the unemployed mill workers in British Columbia or the auto workers in Ontario.

Across Canada there were 122,000 fewer jobs in December of 1981 than in September of that year; there were 57,000 fewer jobs in December than there had been in November. In 1980, on the other hand, jobs actually increased from September to November by 64,000. This past year the number of jobs declined by 122,000.

When we look at the projections in the budget we see that we will continue to be faced with unemployment rates of 8 per cent, or above, right through until 1985, and by 1986 the government hopes we might get that down to just slightly below 8 per cent. Today we saw that leaked document which said that by the end of March there will be 175,000 more unemployed than now. In British Columbia we have 115,000 people officially unemployed—an all-time high. We have another 50,000 so called discouraged workers who are not on the official rolls, making a total of 165,000 British Columbians who should be working but cannot find jobs.

In Victoria the regional rate rose from 8 per cent in November to 8.7 per cent in December. On other parts of Vancouver Island it rose from 10.2 per cent in November to 11.5 per cent in December, and that compares with 7.1 per cent in December of 1980. The number of people who were actually employed in British Columbia dropped by 34,000 between September and December of 1981.

Over the past year, 18 industries in Victoria have closed, throwing people out of work; 40 people in one industry, 120 in another and 200 in yet another. I would like to talk about a couple of those industries.

First let me refer to the Oakland fish plant where 250 jobs are on the line. This is a plant owned and controlled by Japanese interests. It is a modern facility only seven years old. It has been making a profit, but the multinational corporations which control it feel they can make even more of a profit if they rationalize, as they say, their operations on the lower mainland. With no consideration for the communities or the people involved this plant is to be shut down and the industry will be rationalized on the lower mainland.

This is the same sort of thing that happened with the Nelson Brothers cannery after B.C. Packers took over. It is now in the process of rationalizing its production and shutting down the Nelson Brothers plant at Port Edward, concentrating everything at the new Oceanside plant in the city of Prince Rupert.

On the Saanich peninsula there has been an active potato growing industry for many years, but because there has been a problem with what is called golden nematodes, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has put a ban on the export of those potatoes. The local producers feel they have a reasonable proposal which will help them to save their industry and thereby save 180 jobs. They have asked for a meeting with the minister, but so far he has not even responded to their request. In a community like Victoria where you have 18 industries closing down over a period of a year, you reach a point where there is a critical mass loss, and other industries follow suit.

Again in my riding we have the example of Honeymoon Bay where 356 permanent jobs were lost. The reasons for the closure were fairly obvious. There was an antiquated mill, a shortage of timber supplies and a downturn in markets. Some 40 years ago that was a new mill in a beautiful new stand of timber. I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, and through you the other members of this House, if the workers at Honeymoon Bay had had the responsibility for planning the future of their community would they have managed things in this way? Would they have ripped off tremendous profits and sent them down to Vancouver and other metropolitan centres in the United States; creaming the profits and allowing that plant to become antiquated? Would they have followed logging methods which did not take any account of tomorrow? Would they have followed the export policy of sending out huge amounts of timber to be further processed in Japan or Australia rather than demanding that every possible bit of processing be done in British Columbia?

I believe if workers had the opportunity to do some of the planning for their own jobs they would do a darn sight better than the multinational corporations have done so far. They come in, grab the profits, move out and leave the communities bankrupt and the people unemployed.

As a result of this kind of unemployment in major industries, stores, car lots and many secondary parts of our society also suffer. In a modern society such as Canada's, unemployment simply does not happen like the weather but rather is caused by human decisions. Those human decisions are the result of the policies of that government over there.

First of all, at the present time we have high interest rates and we have experienced a fall-off in housing demand in Canada. A decrease in housing demand has a direct effect on plywood and construction workers. High interest rates mean decreased consumer demand, and certainly high interest rates represent a stated, and continually stated, policy of the government opposite.

Second, we have an economy that is dependent on the export of raw or semi-processed resources—a branch plant manufacturing economy. I was interested to hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Kelly) say this afternoon that one of the reasons for unemployment is that we have a branch plant manufacturing sector. That sounded almost like something we have been saying for the last several years. Then he went on to say that this had nothing whatever to do with government policy.

Mr. Kelly: I was not saying that for your benefit; I was saying it for theirs.

Mr. Manly: When the hon. member tries to maintain that this had nothing whatever to do with government policy, when, since the Second World War, the Liberal government has been trying to take a short cut to industrialization by inviting branch plants into Canada instead of developing our own manufacturing sector, he completely ignores the reality of the situation. The export of raw resources and the branch plant manufacturing sector depend completely on decisions made outside Canada. Thus our economy becomes completely dependent upon forces over which we have no control. In the face of the crisis of today, the government stands idle and says that there is nothing it can do about it and that it is not really what it wanted.

• (2050)

The third reason for the unemployment crisis is government failure and bungling. I should like to refer to some small examples of this. Turning to the fishing industry in British Columbia, because of the pressure on stocks the government decided that there would be area licensing. This means a fishing boat can be licensed either for the north or south portion of the coast. However, in order to accommodate people who own fishing vessels, a person with a licence for the north can transfer it to another boat owner who is fishing in the south. This means that one boat owner can have a licence for fishing both in the north and south if he co-operates with the owner of another vessel. Perhaps this policy looks after the problem with fish stocks. I do not know, but it certainly puts more fishermen out of work. Effectively it cuts in half the number of fishermen.

Yesterday the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) referred to the problem in the Canadian copper industry. In the time remaining I should like to refer to some steps which must be taken. First, the government should lower interest rates and make money available for housing, which we desperately need in Canada today. It should require performance guarantees for large corporations that are coming into Canada to deal with our resources. The government can do simple things to help individuals, such as amending its unemployment insurance regulations to allow high-seniority employees to take temporary lay-offs instead of younger low-seniority employees who are just getting started and are more in need of their jobs.

Last autumn the government of British Columbia had an abortive session at which absolutely nothing was done. The Social Credit government of British Columbia is a coalition of Liberals and Conservatives. The effect of the coalition is that when the government faces hard times, it has two responses. The first one is to cut back on social services and the second is to increase the giveaway of resources, in the hope of making a fast buck in order to obtain money for election goodies. The New Democratic Party presented a total of 19 practical and reasonable proposals which it wanted to see the government adopt. Not one has been adopted. I should like to refer to some of its proposals which would help to alleviate the housing, unemployment and interest rate crisis. One was a crash program to supply Crown land for senior citizens' co-operatives and non-profit housing. Another was to initiate an intensive program of silviculture. Another was the development of the Salmonid Enhancement Program. The federal government could also be involved in some of these areas.

In conclusion, Canadians are doing badly. They deserve better. They are beginning to work and to organize in an attempt to obtain a better government, one which will lead to a decent society and a just economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter into this debate to talk about an important aspect of employment—federal government efforts with regard to direct job creation. The present high rates of unemployment affect different regions in different ways. They also affect different groups in the labour force in different ways. Some groups are harder hit than others, some regions are harder hit than others. For this reason the government has had a specific policy in an attempt to target direct job-creation programs to those areas and regions of the country in greatest need. I think it is worth looking at what the government has done. If one listened to the nonsense we have heard from the other side of the House tonight, one would think that the government was doing nothing. In fact, we are doing a lot about which I should like to talk tonight.

The government is not just creating or sustaining jobs through its direct job-creation programs. It should be pointed out that there were 104,000 of them in this fiscal year alone. It is targeting those jobs toward those parts of the country and those groups of people who are in greatest need.

Mr. McDermid: Like CN employees?

Mr. Smith: Hon. members opposite should listen and learn. For example, 45,000 of these jobs have been developed through the Canada employment program by Canada community development projects and Canada community services projects.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: Hon. members opposite should listen. These programs, with a combined expenditure of almost $136 million, have targeted job creation into those regions where unemployment has been highest. For example, 38 per cent of the jobs have been created in the Atlantic provinces. We all know of the problems down there. I am sure hon. members from that region will be glad to hear about that 38 per cent. A further 33 per cent of the jobs were created in Quebec. Also the programs were targeted to those groups in society who face greater difficulty during a period such as the one we are in.

The programs which are in existence contain special measures to encourage project sponsors to hire young people, women, native people and handicapped workers. These measures have not only been well received, they have been successful. Through these programs, jobs have been created for more than 22,000 young people in various parts of the country where otherwise they would have faced many more problems in entering or staying in the labour market.

Mr. McDermid: Tell that to the 500,000 young people who are unemployed.

Mr. Smith: Are we hearing from the red or the blue Tories now? In Canada community development projects, almost 30 per cent of the participants are women, and in the Canada community services projects women participants comprise 70 per cent of those for whom jobs have been created. The statistics are really amazing when one takes a close look at them. For example, in Canada community development projects, 15 per cent of the jobs which have been created in construction-related activity are being filled by women, whereas in society as a whole, there is only 1.1 per cent female employment in the construction industry. It is a real achievement and a successful indication of targeting.

Now I should like to talk about entry and re-entry. In the case of Canada community services projects where a high proportion of the participants are women, the program provides a means of entry or, in many cases, re-entry into the labour market and so addresses a particular need of women at this point in time.

I should like to talk for a minute about handicapped persons. In addition to creating facilities and services for the handicapped, such as making various buldings accessible to those who are handicapped, direct job-creation programs have provided employment to more than 1,600 people with some form of physical disability. I see the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) here tonight. He was a very helpful member of the committee which travelled across the country and listened to many handicapped people. There is no doubt that this group requires special attention, which is exactly what these programs have been endeavouring to do and have been doing successfully.

Direct job-creation programs are also targeted toward the employment needs of the country's native people. For example, in the western provinces 45 per cent of the funds of Canada community development projects have been directed toward the creation of native employment. Native job-creation proposals have first claim on a portion of the program allocation. This year the government introduced a special $6 million component of Canada community development projects which is being used in urban centres across the western provinces, to facilitate the entry and adjustment of native people into urban labour markets and the opportunities for employment which these afford.

In non-urban areas, job-creation funds have been used in conjunction with the on-reserve housing program of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to address the serious problems of native housing. Anyone who has spent any time on reserves is very familiar with the high priority that social need presents. It has also been used by the bands across the country to meet other community infrastructure needs. It is important to know that these jobs are not make-work activity. They are legitimate jobs. It is not just a question of jobs for the sake of jobs.

● (2100)

I read an article in Time magazine on the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Franklin D. Roosevelt. It mentioned some of the types of job-creation programs that were spawned by Harry Hopkins in the early days of the New Deal. There were such things as the hiring of 100 people to go around Washington with balloons filled with helium to scare the starlings away from public buildings. He hired guys to chase tumbleweeds across the prairies. He hired artists to paint pictures, and then he hired other artists to paint pictures of the artists painting pictures.

There is none of that in what this government is doing. Every single one of these jobs is a legitimate job and it is not just jobs for the sake of jobs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: If you want some examples of what we are doing, listen and learn. It is always good to learn something.

We are doing such things as retrofitting, municipal energy conservation and other energy conservation projects. We have fish storage sheds, wharf improvements, harbour construction to support the fisheries sector, as we have just heard from the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). These are some of the things we are doing in terms of that industry. There is also the development of tourist facilities and services to increase the cash flow into communities. There is restoration and development of community facilities, including main street restoration projects. Then there is environmental conservation and reclamation activities, such as clearing fish spawning grounds and forest stand improvement. There are feasibility studies on the potential for the commercial development of local resources, such as community pasture, blueberry production and maple sugaring.

About 60 per cent of the projects carried out under the Canada community development projects are in the area of light construction.

In addition to leaving assets of value in communities and creating downstream economic possibilities in certain sectors, these projects have a multiplier effect in the creation of jobs in the supply industries.

To give you an indication of how quickly the government is responding, it should be pointed out that because these programs are an effective means of providing quick, targeted direct action, the government increased its expenditures on this form of job creation by 20 per cent last December, which created jobs for over 6,000 more people.

Direct job-creation programs are also used in special cases where there is a rapid or unexpected deterioration or unemployment through the special response feature which, in December, was increased from $4 million to $8 million over this year and next. The programs can create jobs quickly in situations where immediate employment is needed while more long-term responses are brought to bear.

I want to talk a little bit about young people. In all of its job-creation activities, the government has been particularly sensitive to the needs of young people. In addition to the special methods employed in the general job-creation programs, the particular needs of students for employment experience, career development and earning with which to continue further education has also been recognized. These are being addressed by a $100 million job-creation program this summer which will create jobs for more than 51,000 young people. Let that figure sink in, hon. members. Think of it, it will help 51,000 young people this summer. It will assist in placing 296,000 more in private sector employment. Have you got that, hon. members? These jobs, whether they are internships in the public service, in the voluntary sector, or jobs on projects operated by the federal, municipal and community sectors across the country, will provide real work experience and earnings for these young people. They say we are not doing anything. What nonsense! I hope those figures have sunk in.

Permanent employment is also something that must always be kept in mind. The government is also aware of the need in certain sectors to work toward the creation of permanent employment. Under the Canada community service project, the funds provided to community agencies are provided for up to three years, with a decreasing amount being provided in the second and third years. This enables agencies to build the activity into their ongoing budget. Many of the jobs created in this program will then be continuing beyond the period of funding.

The long-term Local Employment Assistance Program continues successfully to establish permanent jobs in small community-based commercial enterprises for people who are chronically unemployed. Many of the projects which create jobs for people on this program go on to become independent of program funding and to offer continuing employment prospects for people who would have remained at the margins of the labour force and of the economy.

The government has also recognized that in some parts of the country it is now necessary to move beyond the project by project approach and to provide support through a process of local economic and employment development. I would say this thinking was also reflected in the government's recent reorganization whereby the functions of DREE and ITC were basically merged.

In 13 communities across the country, the concept of local economic development corporations is being tested with encouraging results. Through funding provided by the local economic development assistance program, locally established corporations will be able to bring local support and entrepreneurial talent—and I know the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) loves to hear that sort of thing because he, like I, believes in incentive and initiative to bear on the problems and challenges of developing a more secure employment base.

Mr. Beatty: He is a Conservative and you are a Liberal.

Mr. Huntington: You don't understand the budget.

Mr. Smith: These autonomous local bodies are beginning to develop plans and industrial strategies to assist local employment to create business projects and to increase the flow of investment into the community.

The total direct job-creation expenditure of more than $304 million represents a significant and carefully targeted use of tight resources to increase the stock of jobs and to direct these new jobs toward those who would otherwise, in this situation, face even greater disparity and disadvantage.

I think it is important for these figures to be raised here in the House. If hon. members listened to the debate today and the remarks made by the members on the other side, they would think that nothing was happening on this side of the House. Of course, when you deal with the Tories, it depends which brand you have. If you have a red Tory, he says spend, spend, spend, and more jobs, more jobs. If you have a blue Tory speaking, you hear such things as hold the line on the deficit and let us have less spending. Where are they? I do not know. It depends on whom you listen to. But it is like a revolving door.

But at least in the case of the NDP, we just hear them say spend, spend, spend. What we are trying to do is to spend a reasonable amount in targeted areas, both in terms of different groups in society where there are particular needs, such as women, young people, the handicapped and the native people, and also with particular emphasis in those regions of the country where there is a greater need than the others.

I think that any objective person who looks at their figures will come to the conclusion that this government is making serious and reasonable efforts to come to grips with the job situation in the country at this time.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in a debate of this nature that is so relevant and so starkly underlined not only by the conditions in our country but the important conference that is going on at this time between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the premiers.

One of the great writers of this country, either Hugh MacLennan or Bruce Hutchison once wrote about the two solitudes, the twin solitudes in Canada. By that, he meant the French and English. But I think some of our economic difficulties that are causing the problems with unemployment and other economic vicissitudes in this country are caused by a third solitude, a solitude created by the kind of mandarin mentality that seems to be permeating through the upper echelons of our governmental process, whether they are technocrats, bureaucrats, aristocrats, or whatever, and there seems to be an air of unreality about them. They speak a language which only they can understand. To use a dreadful bureaucratic word, I guess they do not interface with the real world any more. I think Allan Fotheringham, a contemporary writer of style, substance and wit, had something very definitive to say about this budget, which is the cause of much of the economic difficulties in Canada. He said that those dead-eyed guys in finance more or less blackjacked the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who is essentially a creature of academia in the House of Commons, without the street smarts that some of his predecessors had as ministers of finance who recognized the difference between the way things are and the way they ought to be. I think there is something in that. It is also very clear that this government opposite is facing a very severe dilemma. When the Liberals were in opposition for that all too brief a period in 1979, they made some very unctuous and sanctimonious predictions of what was going to happen if we as a government did not do something with interest rates. I remember well the Prime Minister's statement when he was campaigning, about two years ago in Toronto, when he promised that he would manage the economy in such a way that interest rates would in fact come down because the economy would be administered in a sounder way.

• (2110)

We all remember the famous pronouncement on national TV by the present Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray) when he promised to resign if something was not done about rising interest rates. Now this evening I look across at my colleagues and I am reminded of that bit of doggerel published many years ago when the country had a problem and the Liberals were in power. I think it went something like this:

Look upon the Grits, the grimy, grizzly Grits
What a woebegone expression across their faces flits;
For they're thinking, thinking deeply how to run the country cheaply,
And they wonder how in thunder it is going to be done.

Well, we as a government faced some of the same dilemmas they do now, Mr. Speaker. We perhaps were fortunate, while admittedly following a policy on interest rates similar to that which is being followed today, that the interest rates did not go through what I would refer to as a threshold of stability. They did not go up to the astronomical heights which measure the difference between something you can bear and something that is intolerable.

There was another thing that we as a government were about to do and which I would heartily recommend to this government, that is to give relief to those suffering from high interest rates, not only for the purpose of helping in their personal lives, but to induce the business sector to create jobs. Let us not forget that while Americans are at present suffering from high interest rates, they are much more able to cope with them than we are because they have possibilities for deductions that we do not. They can deduct some interest charges that we cannot. Whereas we were prepared to give the taxpayer a break with respect to their mortgage interest costs and their tax costs, and were prepared to give relief to people suffering from high energy prices, this government is not.

Therefore, because of the various circumstances it becomes apparent that we can no longer afford to tie ourselves absolutely to the American financial and interest patterns. Many of the provincial premiers are making this same case and in a much more learned and effective way than I am. I am like the Minister of Finance, neither an economist nor the son of an economist. I only have a passing acquaintance with the great economists of the day, such as Arthur Laffer and Milton Friedman. Once I heard the Prime Minister speak about Schumpter at Harvard. However, I have never heard the Minister of Finance speak about any economist. As a matter of fact, I understand he resolutely shuns places where economists are. He has never written anything about economics and does not really wish to learn. I am sorry about that, and so is the country, but those appear to be the facts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not being entirely responsible to criticize the government without offering alternatives. I really believe it would be feasible for the Bank of Canada and this government to get together on a lower interest rate policy, even if the dollar were to fall to the 75-cent level. I say this because it seems to me obvious that some changes should be made in our taxation policy and some of the incentives should be put back that the Liberal government began to choke off when it imposed capital gains taxes, and left them on even though we are now being taxed on inflation since 1971 and are suffering absolute confiscation by the state in the sense that any person who tries to build up a business is not only being taxed, but taxed on inflation. If that atmosphere were removed and something were done to stimulate the economy and put back some incentive for people to create jobs, the fact that the dollar would fall temporarily would not necessarily mean a flight of capital—of that I am sure. There would be Swiss, German and American money lured into Canada by the fact they could make 30 per cent or 40 per cent on the front end, as they say. And then, as the economy strengthened and the resource sectors were put back to work, our currency would firm up as our productivity and economy expanded, and they would make money again, on the rise.

However, leaving that for a moment, I would like to talk about job creation and things that could be done to help some of our industries. First of all, I would like to talk about my own region. We know, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessarily being responsible to urge unrestricted spending to help an industry when sometimes a change in policy will do the trick. We have a couple of very relevant industries in Nova Scotia which seem to fall squarely within the purview of the new ministry of regional, international, or whatever it is called, economic development. I still do not have the title quite straight in my own mind; all I know is that DREE is gone and there is nothing so far to replace it. All of the former agreements involving forestry and agriculture are hanging in limbo, and the economy is suffering.

However, there are two industries which concern me and I wish to make a pitch, as it were, to the minister responsible, as I already have today in a letter. I am talking about Sydney Steel Corporation in Sydney, Nova Scotia, and Hawker Siddeley in Trenton, Nova Scotia. These two industries together employ 5,000 people when things are going well. They both have a very high potential for export as well as domestic production.

Sydney Steel desperately needs more rail orders from the CNR. At the present time they are getting about 88,000 tons per year. They should be getting double that amount because only in this way can they stabilize their production and advance their technology. They make a very good product; the city of Sydney is very heavily dependent on the company, and it would not require any great amount of money to carry out this policy option, just a directive. Hawker Siddeley, which is close, economically and geographically, is to some extent dependent on Sydney Steel. It has a virtual monopoly on the production of railway axles in this country. This particular industry requires upgrading and there has to be some sort of incentive or assistance given to secure its future. Again, it employs nearly 2,000 people and makes Trenton, Nova Scotia, practically a one-industry town. The government can very easily assure the future of these jobs, not by spending a lot of money but by offering incentives and changing its industrial strategy.

Another industry in Nova Scotia, one which represents the opposite extreme, a new and modern industry which has placed Nova Scotia at the forefront of rubber technology, is Michelin Tire. This industry is suffering from the existing import duties and is being hit by countervailing duties on the other hand, Mr. Speaker. Again, this is something that the government can change and which will not require spending nor much loss of revenue, because this tire company has made it very clear that, in the process of rationalizing the Canadian rubber industry, they are prepared to take on all comers and perhaps encourage a healthy competitive expansion of some of their competitors if they want to take advantage of the more advantageous conditions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the absence of job-creation programs that really count is one of the problems that we as politicians have to face. The minister responsible for these programs certainly means well. He is putting together programs, but they have no real significance in the long term, and he knows that. The term band-aid has been used ad nauseam, but there is some truth to it when it comes to lasting worth and real production gains. It is really a temporary solution. There is something to be said, I think, for looking at management techniques that we find in the industries in which government participates.

Now let me talk about transportation for a moment. Politicians have said from time to time, various ministers of regional economic expansion and other politicians, including the Prime Minister, that, yes indeed, transportation is certainly a key component in regional development and the creation of jobs, obviously. Well, we have seen recently in Atlantic Canada that our transportation rail network has been curtailed. There is no doubt about that. But I am looking right now at the executive structure of the CNR. When Air Canada had very capable financial and aeronautical expertise, it did well as a Crown corporation. Then, as we know, a few years ago we had a corporation lawyer, Yves Pratt, put in a key executive position, and the airline did very badly. The management and the act were changed and Air Canada is doing very well today.

CN is now going through a similar phase which could be key to the success of jobs and industry. Mr. Bandeen has gone. Some say that he did not leave but was pushed. Some say that he was fired because of some of the deals he had proposed, such as the acquisition of Cast, which was rejected by the board; and the bus company that he purchased in Quebec without bothering to tell some of his directors did not go over too well. Perhaps his previous threats of resignation for a better job in the United States did not wash. Anyway, he is gone, for whatever reason.

Therefore, I am getting a sense of déjà vu. I am wondering if we will get one of our former colleagues, Jack Horner or Otto Lang in CN either as chairman or president.

An hon. Member: Heaven forbid!

Mr. MacKay: Maybe we will see Dr. Leclaire, a former mandarin, put into the post that Pratt, occupied in Air Canada! Maybe we will be reading "Horner for Mackasey". I recall now the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) was put in at one point to look after Air Canada, or maybe we will be reading "Leclaire for Pratt". I hope not, because this Crown corporation is too important to be managed by failed politicians. Surely the welfare of the CN and of our great transport network, which, in turn, is so important to our economy, will be held more important than to be used as a repository for people who, while they may be very capable in their own right, have no business running a large, complex corporation which requires special expertise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: Let us then look at some of the key industries which this government has manipulated or tried to help. We will give the government the benefit of the doubt. Maybe it meant well however. Let us look at de Havilland and Canadair. Let us look at the debacle which is shaping up there. I have had questions on the Order Paper since last November asking some very simple questions about Canadair, such as, "How many planes have been delivered? What was the cost? What are the projections? When will we ever have a break-even point?"

The situation is very bad, and everyone knows that, but no one wants to talk about it. Massey-Ferguson is another great Canadian multinational. However, the problem is that despite all the money put in to create jobs, very few of the jobs, comparatively speaking, are in Canada and, as a matter of interest, since we have been discussing economic nationalism from time to time, and have been justifying our national energy policy with it, to the detriment of our whole economy in jobs. The United States does not take kindly to what this government is doing, and they are going one way and we are going another, and we have also thrown metrication in to further commplicate it. I used to think that freedom to measure was a measure of freedom, but now we are being prosecuted for using imperial measurements.

However, to come back to the situation with Massey-Ferguson, and the fact that very few of its jobs, comparatively speaking, are in Canada, it is interesting that even its chief executive officers have a very international flavour, too. I mean, the head of engineering, Mr. Ramsey, hails from South Africa; Mr. Porter, head of finance, from the United Kingdom; and Mr. Laurenzo, who hails from the United States, is supposedly the president and runs the company. But what has he ever run before? Where is the management expertise that we need to protect the interest of the people of Canada and the Government of Canada's interest in this great corporation? Victor Rice, the chief ex-officer also hails from the U.K.

We would be very foolish, and it would be fallacious, to say that because people are not Canadians, they are not capable of running a corporation. But surely we have Canadian executive talent here, and if we are going shopping for a good operations officer, do we get a man like Mr. Laurenzo, who has never run anything and whose background is as a comptroller? Would it not be advisable to get a good operations officer from John Deere or someone who has run a successful company, to protect the interest and market and ensure the viability of this corporation? I would think so.

Then we see another area of our technology which creates a lot of jobs. We are looking at Northern Telecom and Bell. Again, we are going the other way. The United States justice department had sense enough to indirectly make AT&T divest itself of part of its integrated operation to open up industry and to create jobs. Here again we are going the opposite way. We are paying 25 cents for phone calls in parts of Canada which cost 10 cents in the United States. Northern Telecom makes money in Canada and spends it in the United States. The whole concept is wrong. All we have to do is to look across the border to see what the Americans are doing. However, again we never learn.

All of these matters are relevant to jobs and employment, I suggest, because we cannot have a healthy and expanding economy in this country until we get our economic act together. We should not persist in manipulating and intervening in the marketplace, and we should not persist in imposing bureaucratic structures or our primary industries. Why, in Nova Scotia, right now, despite the well meaning approach of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc), I know of fishermen who have not filled their quotas, who would like to catch fish and who have markets for them in the United States, and truckers who are anxious to put their vehicles to work and create jobs by hauling these fish to the United States, but cannot do it because of the bureaucratic regulations. I am told that, while the situation is serious and they recognize the problems, the regulations cannot be changed for several months. Another instance, which is very important to some of the fishermen involved, is that one cannot even pass certain kinds of fishing licences from father to son, which had become a tradition in the family for lifetimes, because of bureaucratic regulations.

We must make up our minds as to what kind of an economy we will have in this country. Will we have an economy which makes sense, which gives people incentives to do things, to save money and to create jobs, or will we move toward a state-owned economy, such as we see in some of the eastern European bloc countries where the governments, their mandarins, their technocrats and their apparatchiks intervene in all the fabrics of their industrial, social and economic life? If that is the kind of economy that we want, well, that is certainly the kind of economy that we are creating today. It has not come overnight and it has not come by stealth. It is the end result of a deliberate economic theory which has been propounded by the Prime Minister and his government ever since he came into office. We have seen it in the various interventionist methods he has chosen to follow.

We have now seen the results with our greatest friend and trading partner, the United States. We have seen that the United States has refrained, for the time being, from passing retaliatory legislation about our access to its oil and gas industry. However, we hear with disgust that it will pass legislation restricting Canadian initiatives in acquiring U.S. cable TV licences, which is another field of expertise in which we were once world leaders, but because of the fuzzy interventionist and contradictory policies of the CRTC, now we are lagging behind. Many Canadians cannot understand why there are 60 channels up there on a satellite which they could have for almost nothing but, because of the CRTC, they have to do without them. Some people who would like to have some of these channels must pay very large fees in order to receive them.

These kinds of things do not make sense, and the end result is that they cost people jobs and they cause people frustration. As some hon. members have said, when unemployment is a result, there is a very, very heavy social cost. There is nothing more heartbreaking than for a man or woman not to be able to have a productive job and to do something which is worth while for their country.

I will close by saying this: if we could instil in our people the kind of patriotism, pride in their work and the incentive to do well that the Japanese have instilled in their work force, we would have the Americans backed up against the Mexican border and our economy would be booming. The only suggestion I can make is that if we take some of these dead-eyed guys in finance to whom Allan Fotheringham referred, and some of them in other departments as well, and send them on an exchange program to Japan, maybe then they might come back with a slightly different slant on things.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to the motion this evening, I would first like to say that I, like the hon. member who spoke previously, represent a riding in Atlantic Canada, in Prince Edward Island. My riding, like most Atlantic Canadian ridings, is heavily dependent on Canada Employment and Immigration for job creation and job-creation programs. The base industries of my riding are agriculture, fisheries and tourism. The secondary industries and small businesses are those which could be classed as the service industries to the primary industries. I am thinking mainly of service outlets for farm equipment and fishing supplies, welding shops, and everything which is of importance to the agriculture and fishing industries of my area. Therefore, we probably have and will continue to have, simply because of climatic conditions and the seasonal aspect of those industries, certain times of the year when there are high rates of unemployment, especially during the winter months.

• (2130)

We have been fortunate both this year and last year because the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has used my riding very well. This year we received $1.6 million toward the Canada community development program for projects to be implemented in the riding over the winter and coming spring. These community-based projects will have a significant impact on the future of many of our small villages and communities.

There are projects such as providing assistance to community pastures which will help our farmers and the agricultural industry. There will be projects such as repairs to fishing wharves, supplemented by material supplied by the small craft harbours branch of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. These projects will help improve the infrastructure of the wharves and ports for our fishermen. There are projects such as clearing scrubland for the development of crops such as blueberries. As well, there will be surveys of historical sites, identifying potential new businesses for these areas and so on. All these projects will help the local community organizations plan for the future.

This government has been contributing in a very meaningful way toward the creation of jobs. There are other interesting statistics on the magnitude of that contribution made in the Atlantic provinces by this government through the Department of Employment and Immigration.

In the fiscal year 1981-82, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission contributed $187.4 million to the four Atlantic provinces for job training, job creation and economic development through the use of unemployment insurance funds. This money has supported the participation of 80,826 Canadians in a wide variety of programs, 32,908 of them in jobs. To break these figures down by provinces, the $54.9 million which went for training and direct job creation has created 10,749 jobs and supported 12,234 participants in training courses in Newfoundland. Over all, the number of participants in training and job-creation jobs is 25,043. The total number of participants in job-creation programs is higher than the total number of jobs because more than one person may hold that job before the project is completed.

In Nova Scotia, the comparable figures are $48.6 million for training and direct job creation, 6,997 jobs, 16,832 participants in training programs, and an over-all total of 24,887 in training and job-creation programs.

For New Brunswick, the totals are $46.3 million for training and job creation, 8,391 jobs, 15,576 participants in training, and an over-all total of 25,335 participants in training and job-creation programs.

Prince Edward Island has received $12.4 million which produced 2,016 jobs, 3,276 participants in training and an over-all total of 5,561 participants in training and job-creation programs.

Each province shares $25.2 million for the developmental use of unemployment insurance funds; $7.3 million for Newfoundland, $8.2 million for Nova Scotia, $7.6 million for New Brunswick and $2.1 million for Prince Edward Island.

Individual job-creation programs and their effectiveness in creating jobs are: the Local Employment Assistance Program—LEAP—which has created 256 jobs in Newfoundland in the fiscal year, 169 in Nova Scotia, 247 in New Brunswick and 222 in Prince Edward Island.

I might add that in my riding there are a number of LEAP projects which have been very beneficial to the area and the people involved in them.

Summer Canada, Canada employment centres for students and native internship have created 1,924 jobs in Newfoundland, 2,052 in Nova Scotia, 1,988 in New Brunswick and 334 in Prince Edward Island. Round one of Canada community development projects, including the special response feature, created 4,070 jobs in Newfoundland, 1,808 in Nova Scotia, 2,434 in New Brunswick and 579 in Prince Edward Island.

I might add that this project was put together in Newfoundland very quickly to meet the declining fish-processing industry and the inshore fishery of Newfoundland. I am sure all the people of Newfoundland welcome this program and project and will show their appreciation in the years to come.

Round two of Canada community development projects, which have just begun, has to date produced 3,676 jobs in Newfoundland, 1,823 in Nova Scotia, 2,322 in New Brunswick and 617 in Prince Edward Island.

Canada community services projects, which furthers the objectives of non-profit organizations operating under severe financial restraints, has created jobs for unemployed native people, youth, women and disabled persons; 92 in Newfoundland, 80 in Nova Scotia, 80 in New Brunswick and 37 in Prince Edward Island.

The direct job-creation element of the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program—ILAP—has created 114 jobs in Nova Scotia, and as the number of designated communities for this $350 million initiative of the federal government increases, its effect will be felt in the other Atlantic provinces.

The new technology employment program designed to create jobs for highly educated graduates in scientific and technical fields who are unable to find employment in their disciplines, has placed 28 in Newfoundland, 38 in Nova Scotia, 16 in New Brunswick and 9 in Prince Edward Island.

The Local Employment Assistance Program is operating in four Atlantic communities, and while it will be some time before the full effect of this pilot program may be known, it has already created 16 jobs in Newfoundland, 14 in Nova Scotia, 18 in New Brunswick and 14 in Prince Edward Island.

I thank the minister and his department for designating my area as the area in Prince Edward Island for a LEDA project. I have talked with the people involved in setting up and administering the program. They seem to be quite confident and are enthusiastic about its future. We look forward to greater things in the years ahead through programs such as these.

The program for the employment disadvantaged, which is an employment incentives program rather than direct job creation, has placed 515 physically and mentally handicapped and other seriously employment disadvantaged in continuing private sector jobs; 240 people have been placed in Newfoundland, 135 in Nova Scotia, 110 in New Brunswick and 30 in Prince Edward Island. All members will agree that anything we can do for our disadvantaged and handicapped should be supported wholeheartedly.

In the fiscal year, the employment tax credit program placed 447 in subsidized jobs in Newfoundland, 764 in Nova Scotia, 1,176 in New Brunswick and 174 in Prince Edward Island. Although this program was terminated March 31, 1981, contracts with employers were signed right up to the last minute and the jobs can last for up to 52 weeks, many of them continuing beyond the period of subsidy.

● (2140)

The total sum for training program participants by provinces are as follows: Newfoundland, regular institutional training, 8,216; industrial training, 3,988; critical trade skills, 30. Included in these totals are 19 native Canadians in institutional training and two in industrial training. A total of 86 women receiving training in non-traditional occupations, and this is also included.

Nova Scotia, regular institutional training, 11,695; industrial, 4,957; critical trade skills, 180. There are 76 native Canadians in institutional training and 26 in industrial. Training in non-traditional occupations was provided to 53 women.

New Brunswick totals show 9,474 in regular institutional training, 6,012 in industrial training and 90 in critical trade skills. There are four native Canadians in industrial training and 112 women in training for non-traditional occupations.

Prince Edward Island has a total of 2,069 in institutional training, 1,177 in industrial training and 30 in critical trade skills. Three native Canadians were placed in industrial training and 44 women took part in training for non-traditioanl occupations.

In all instances, institutional training data reflects full-time trainees. The government recognizes the necessity for rendering all possible aid to the Atlantic provinces in job creation, training and economic development. The figures quoted for the fiscal year 1981-82 are comparable to expenditures for previous years and undoubtedly will be compatible for those of future years.

This evening I have listened to the speeches by members of the opposition. I found that many of their comments were rather pessimistic, to say the least. I believe that our government has made a good start toward job-creation programs. Not only are we in difficult economic times in this country, but in all the western world. I think all members should recognize this fact.

Almost daily, during question period and in debates such as this, we hear innuendoes from those members opposite about how disastrous things are. We do not hear many proposals for answers to the problems they seem to identify.

An hon. Member: You do not listen.

Mr. McDermid: You do not hear, either.

Mr. Henderson: We do not hear many solutions. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) in his speech mentioned the number of Canadian executive offices being staffed with foreigners. Well, those boys over there had nine months—it took them five to call the House into session—and did nothing about that.

Mr. McDermid: We got rid of Mackasey, though.

Mr. Henderson: The first thing the Conservatives did when they got into my area—the people have never forgotten them and never will—was to freeze everything that moved. That seemed to be their motto: freeze it if it moves, and if it does not move, pension it.

They had plenty of time when they formed the government to take action on some of the things they are mentioning now. Fortunately for the Canadian people, they were turfed out of office.

There is no question that we are in difficult times, but I think that Canadians are satisfied that they would sooner have the group which is here now than the group they got rid of on February 18, 1980.

An hon. Member: That's not what the polls say.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to wind up the debate on the consideration of the motion introduced by my hon. friend from Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and seconded by my hon. friend from Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I think that it is worth while to remind the House of that motion. It reads:

That this House condemns the government for its deliberate failure to create job opportunities for Canadians.

I have been sitting here all day listening to the debate and I think I can sum up what the government has said in three points. First, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) said, "I am right. I am doing the proper thing, trust me. Support me, we will get the job done." That was the first point made by the government. Second, the point which came through loud and clear from those on the government side was, "It is not our fault. It is the other guy's fault, the provinces' fault, the municipalities' fault. It is the United States' fault. It is Europe's fault. It is somebody else's fault, but not ours. Please do not blame us. We are struggling along but we have to do what is dictated to us by somebody else", that is to say, whoever that somebody might be. The third point which came across loud and clear was, "If we were not here, it would be a lot worse." That is probably the most unbelievable explanation the government has tried to give all day.

We should review some of the statements made by some hon. members. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) stated that he deplores the complete inaction of the government with respect to the creation of jobs. He regrets the cutbacks in Canadian work programs which eliminated hundreds of communities across Canada which have been suffering from high levels of unemployment, and condemns the government for its failure to date to bring forward a comprehensive employment strategy for the coming year. That statement was made after we were in the House for about four weeks.

This particular government has been in power for two years now. We have not seen an employment strategy. As a matter of fact, we have not seen any strategy. Earlier today we listened to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), or whatever he may have been demoted to now—I am not sure what he is. That may have been part of his resignation program which he promised if interest rates rose. This may be a way of easing him out. We have heard members on the back benches tell us today how much money they take out of their pockets to throw around. They spend $15 million here, $20 million there.

The hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson) spent 15 of his 20 minutes reading off a list of industries that the government helped in Quebec. If we asked him for a list for Ontario, it would take him approximately 30 seconds to read it. It is not there.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if the government gave me a bank guarantee of $5 million, I could create 200 high technology jobs in my community tomorrow. Would the government listen? No. It is going to give a small business development bail-out bond to help people in dire straits. But it will not give a hand to production in Ontario. That is where the government should be looking to create jobs. Certainly there should be help for those in financial trouble, but those who are productive now and have high technology operations going should also be receiving money. They are ready to proceed with viable programs and the government does not see fit to help them.

● (2150)

There was another statement, this time by the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier), who, I believe, is still Quebec caucus chairman. He said: "In an affluent society such as this, suggestions that a 7 per cent or 8 per cent unemployment rate is acceptable are simply shameful." He is absolutely right, but where is he? Where is that great defender now that we have an unemployment rate of 7 per cent or 8 per cent? We have not heard from him since he got back into office. We have not heard a word from him.

Then we hear about the creation of many jobs. Hon. members opposite can tell the unemployed of this country about those creative jobs. I can tell hon. members about those 100,000 creative jobs about which the minister brags. How long do those jobs last? They last eight months or ten months, and then the people are out. Then the minister brings in another batch, spreads a few more dollars around and perhaps pleases a few more people. In my constituency of 168,000 people, eight jobs were provided for 40 weeks, and that is all. I will give hon. members statistics respecting how many in my community are collecting unemployment insurance right now. The number was 8,724 as of January 31. In January, 1981, there were 5,500. There has been an increase of over 3,000. That is what is going on, and these programs are nothing but a facade to try to fool the people into thinking the government is doing something. The minister knows this. Members of his own staff say the same thing. They say they are slowly working out of these programs and getting into more meaningful ones. I say it is about time. God bless the minister if that is what he is doing, but I have not seen any signs of it yet.

Hon. members opposite always like to stand up and talk about the programs the Tories cancelled, but they never talk about the programs we brought in to take their place. Those were programs which created meaningful, full-time jobs and not jobs which lasted ten months, eight months or six months. We created permanent jobs which gave individuals opportunities to develop careers for themselves. We created jobs in the volunteer sector, which needed help very desperately. There were all kinds of programs. We would have created twice the number of jobs in the private sector with the same amount of money, with some help, as the number the minister brags about being created in the public sector.

That is the story of this government. Every government member likes to stand up and say, "This is what has been dealt out in my riding", but how many of those jobs are permanent? How many of those jobs the government creates in those ridings will be there ten months from now? There will be very, very few.

I can say to the minister that some of the permanent jobs created for the handicapped are welcome. I think such programs are good and are working to a limited extent. I congratulate the minister for that, but he should not hand us all this malarkey about all the other jobs he is creating, because the statistics he is using are phony, and he knows it. The people are not buying them any more.

As of December, the unemployment rate in Ontario was 7 per cent, up half a percentage point from November, and rising. Lay-offs and closures have put 21,565 people out of work permanently. Those statistics relate only to firms with 50 or more employees. They do not relate to employers with fewer than 50 employees. Those statistics are not gathered unless they are volunteered. They reflect a sad state of affairs. The highest concentration of lay-offs has been in the transportation industry and in industries which produce equipment involved in transportation such as aircraft and auto parts. Fifty-seven establishments have been affected, and 8,846 employees have been laid off. There have been complete closures. The doors have just been locked. Employees have been told, "Forget it; that's it". That has affected 569 employees. That is a very sad, sad commentary on the economy today.

I hear the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) at it again, Mr. Speaker. How many individuals has his brother's firm laid off? The hon. member should not say "none" because I know otherwise. The hon. member sits there and thinks this is a great joke, but it is not. It is a very serious situation.

Mr. Kelly: For a person who heckles a lot, you are pretty thin skinned.

Mr. McDermid: I can hand it out, and I can take it.

Mr. Kelly: I doubt the latter part of your statement.

Mr. McDermid: There are a couple of things of great concern to me which I want to bring to the attention of the minister in the very few minutes I have left. He has talked about a new training program for the money he spends on manpower training.

An hon. Member: He is always talking.

Mr. McDermid: That is right, but I welcome this initiative because he has followed many of the recommendations in the report of the parliamentary task force on Employment Opportunities for the '80s, with one significant exception. As usual, like a banty rooster the minister stood and announced the great programs he plans to introduce and threatened the provinces, just as hon. members opposite threaten everyone else. They are always threatening the provinces with something. If the provinces do not agree with their programs, they will get them anyway, and tough luck! That is what the minister said. In chapter 12 of the report of the parliamentary task force on Employment Opportunities for the '80s entitled "Federal-provincial relations" I remind the minister that one of the most important recommendations contained in this report was that there must be better co-operation and co-ordination with provincial programs. The report said that to this end there should be a national council of employment and training ministers with a secretariat; that the national council should develop a national employment and training plan to be implemented at both the federal and provincial levels and that, where possible, the national council of ministers should work to avoid unnecessary duplication between the federal and provincial levels of jurisdiction. But what happens? The minister says, "Here it is, boys; take it. If you don't like it, tough; it is coming in anyway." That is not the Canadian way. Perhaps it is the way the minister likes to operate, but I do not think he will get anywhere with that.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): That is the way his leader operates.

Mr. McDermid: My colleague says that is the way his leader operates. Perhaps it is rubbing off on him a little bit. The provincial manpower ministers with whom I spoke—and I spoke with most of them—and the ministers of education with whom I spoke certainly are prepared to co-operate. They are prepared to co-operate; they are not prepared to be dictated to. This is probably one of the most important things to come down the pipe in a very long time. It can mean the future of Canada. There are over one million unemployed, people are screaming for skilled labour and the provincial ministers want that, but they want the method to be proper. They do not want to be dictated to from on high. They want a blended proposal, and I beg the minister to co-operate with the provinces. I ask him not to dictate and wield a big club.

I will close by asking the government to listen to the people who sent it here. I ask hon. members opposite to listen to what is being said. Not once today in this debate have I heard hon. members opposite talk about what they are hearing back in their constituencies. All I have heard from them is that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is right, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is right and the Minister of Employment and Immigration is right. Hon. members opposite seem to be saying, "To heck with what the people say, because they are all wrong." That will be the downfall of this government. We are prepared to form a new one right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being ten o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—McDOUGALL REPORT—QUERY RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION. (B) ROLE OF MINISTER

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question of February 2 to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), which can be found at page 14555 of Hansard for that date, to which I received an unsatisfactory answer about the reorganization of his department, was set against a background of a decade and more of rapid and often purposeless organizational and functional change within that department. I was thinking, for example, of the redrawing of the lines of reporting responsibility and the consequent redesignation of all positions in the Department of External Affairs to conform, presumably, with an organizational chart that must have been found in a Harvard business school text. The changes were of such moment as changing individuals from divisional heads to directors general. But, in addition, the conventional line arrangements were superimposed upon the geographic line arrangements.

I was thinking also of the imposition, for example, of collective bargaining and of the program "budgeting", which has since been replaced by some other kind of budgeting, and the imposition of bilingualism on a department which, I venture to guess, was more bilingual than any other department of government as far back as the 1950s and 1960s, as well as of the requirement to absorb first the foreign support staff and then the entire body of personnel serving abroad, except CIDA officers who staunchly refused, for as long as I was in the department, to report through the ambassador; and finally, only a year ago, the move to consolidate the foreign service—whatever that means—a move which was followed immediately by the establishment of a royal commission to inquire into the conditions of the foreign service. That is an admission, I suggest, of there being something wrong with the conditions in that foreign service.

Each of these remouldings or investigations of external affairs was imposed from above with the minimum of consultation with those immediately affected, and each was imposed, which was perhaps worse, before the preceding one had had a chance to be properly absorbed and put through its paces.

These successive and overlapping waves of organizational and functional change took their toll on the morale of serving officers and staff. They were traumatic years; few will forget them, and all, I suppose, because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has never really had any use for the foreign service, as he admitted as far back as 1959.

Now we hear of even further changes. On January 12 of this year the Prime Minister announced the creation of what he called a "triumvirate" of equals as ministers for the department. I describe them as a tricephalous monster; an outrageous creature with three heads.

From his comments to the press the Prime Minister on that day provided little indication of how to determine who is to wear what hat, at least as between two of the heads, or which among the equals is to be the most equal or more equal than the others. We do not even know whether they are ministers or ministers of state. We have both versions in Hansard, one on January 27 and the second on February 3. Even the organizational chart accompanying the press release of January 12 now seems to have used improper designations.

Not only are designations in doubt, Mr. Speaker, so also are duties. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, the press was told, "will be . . . responsible for Canada's external relations". That appears at pages 2 and 3 of the press conference transcript. We find on page 3 that the same responsibility is laid upon the new minister or minister of state, whichever it may be, for external affairs. Furthermore, the new minister or minister of state has been assigned a task by the Prime Minister, at page 11 of the transcript, for "the development of a strategy of our relations with foreign countries and the role of Canada in francophonie, in Africa in particular, and so on". Where does that leave the Secretary of State for External Affairs? What is he supposed to be doing? If you think you are confused, Mr. Speaker, when trying to distinguish between ministers, ministers of state and secretaries of state, I leave you to imagine the state of confusion which must affect those three hon. gentlemen themselves. What about officials in the Department of External Affairs; to whom do they report and on what?

In addition to all these changes, we find that the Department of External Affairs has been endowed with a second tricephalous monster, a second triumvirate of deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers. Not one of them has had any experience whatever in the diplomatic service of Canada overseas. I suggest that in these circumstances it is small wonder the Department of External Affairs is in a state of utter confusion, not knowing where it is going, to whom it is reporting, or whether it is really wanted at all.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) has a deep and sincere interest in Canada's foreign service. Therefore, I understand his interest in the McDougall report and in the recent reorganization of the government, particularly as it affects the foreign service.

The hon. member knows that the McDougall royal commission was established by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as head of the government. As such, the eventual disposition of the report lies in his hands and to the present time he has not taken any final action in this respect, nor has he yet delegated to any minister responsibility for follow-up on Miss McDougall's report. I assure the hon. member that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) is very interested in the report and that the report is being analysed and studied with a positive spirit. The government and the Secretary of State for External Affairs is determined that the report and its recommendations will be given the earliest possible and closest attention.

I should like to remind the hon. member that Canada has a very fine foreign service where generally morale is high and efficiency is good, considering that many members of the foreign service are called upon to serve in very difficult circumstances. The hon. member may remember that Miss McDougall herself said both in the report and in her press conference that the over-all morale in the department was high and efficiency was very great.

Turning to the question of the reorganization of the government, I assure the hon. member that reorganization is intended to improve the efficiency of government in dealing with economic problems which face Canadians. It has, as one of its consequences, increased the relevance of the Department of External Affairs by making it, in its new broad sense, an economic department as well as a political one. This change means that the department will be able to represent a wider range of Canadian interests abroad.

I do not believe there can be much doubt about the reorganizational structure and function of the Department of External Affairs. It is comprised of a Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. De Bané), whose primary concerns are in the area of the francophonie, cultural and humanitarian affairs and other responsibilities he will be asked to take on by the Secretary of State for External Affairs; the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) whose primary concerns are in the area of trade relations and trade promotion; and the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is responsible for the entire range of Canadian foreign relations abroad and who embraces the entire department.

INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES. (B) CANADIAN ADMIRAL CORPORATION IN RECEIVERSHIP. (C) IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN MANUFACTURED APPLIANCES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, approximately three months ago, on November 6, I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray)—I do not know what he now calls himself; he is certainly a gasbag minister in the House—about problems in connection with the Canadian Admiral Corporation which earlier in that week was placed into receivership. The company's basic reason for going into receivership was the inordinately high interest policy of the government, and this minister said on television in the 1980 election that if interest rates went up he would resign. Of course they went up and, of course, he stayed on. There is not a thing this minister says that has any sense of credibility at all.

• (2210)

For example, in answer to my particular series of questions to the minister he said with respect to the Admiral Corporation that they had been in touch with various companies which are developing proposals that could well lead to the resumption of operations of Canadian Admiral. That was three months ago. The minister gassed along, but he did nothing. This is a do-nothing minister who really owes an apology to the people of Canada for ineptness.

Canadian Admiral is probably the most efficient producer of refrigerators in this country. Indeed, its share of the home refrigeration market was increasing dramatically. However, it had difficulty because of high interest rates. Because of the interest rate policy of the government, home purchases declined dramatically. People could not afford to finance the purchase of new appliances. The government refused to do anything about foreign import competition, particularly in the microwave line, which the company was producing, the television line, which the company once produced, or in the washer and dryer line.

The company could not make it for two reasons: First, because of interest rates, and second, because of foreign competition. Regarding foreign competition, I asked the minister what he was going to do. I asked him if he believed it was proper to fight inflation on the backs of Canadians out in the street walking and collecting UIC. The minister said he would not do anything. He said if there was dumping of appliances by the Japanese, the Taiwanese and so on, he did not care. He would not do anything unless somebody applied to the anti-dumping tribunal, and then maybe the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) would do something about it. He was not going to be, like the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, there to protect Canadian jobs. He was there to gas on behalf of the government. He said he was there to be in touch with various companies that are developing proposals.

Three months have passed and 2400 productive people, people who were doing solid industrial work in Canada producing a very good product, have been put out on the streets with a couple of hours notice of lay-off. They received no separation pay and no termination pay. Some of them worked for as many as 27 years for the company learning the skills and doing the things that have made Canada a nation that can produce first-class appliances.

What is the minister's attitude? Well, he gasses on and gasses on. He does not give an answer. The previous questioner, my colleague, the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), was given the answer that it was the minister's hope that the budget would add thrust to job creation. This minister stands indicted as a minister of trade and commerce who has lost more jobs in Canada on a permanent basis than any other minister in our history since the beginning of the Great Depression.

• (2215)

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In relation to the hon. member's comments on November 6 regarding the dumping of mircrowave ovens, an anti-dumping investigation was started in April, 1981, and a decision to proceed to an anti-dumping tribunal hearing was recently made by the Department of National Revenue.

As far as a receiver operating a mass rapid disposal of the assets of Admiral, let me advise this House that the banks' agent has assured ITC officials that he is endeavouring to sell the inventory in a manner as close to normal as possible. However, because warranty cannot be assured, the sales conditions are being renegotiated. No fire sale disposal of inventory has occurred as yet.

In the long run, attempts to save the company have to recognize that the Canadian appliance industry has to become more internationally competitive because of the scheduled decline in tariffs starting in 1983—the present 20 per cent tariff is scheduled to decline to 12.5 per cent by 1987—and the increasing automation occurring in Japan and the United States. Bearing that in mind, Mr. Speaker, a takeover by another Canadian appliance company would appear to be the best solution since this would lead to an increased production scale that would justify investment in more efficient capital equipment. I am aware that Inglis has been negotiating with the receivers of Admiral since November, 1981. Officials in my department have monitored the progress of these negotiations. I am concerned that as many of the former Admiral employees as possible be re-employed and certainly the Inglis interest could be one of the quickest solutions to this problem.

Every reasonable effort is being made to avoid liquidation of the company which would result in a total loss of employment, and the dumping of $50 million worth of inventory on the appliance market at fire sale prices. This would be highly disruptive for the rest of the appliance industry. Government action has to be taken into account in relation to its impact on the rest of the appliance industry which is also in trouble at the moment and experiencing large lay-offs.

On January 28 the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) announced a $15 million aid program for the major appliance and parts industry under the industry specific restructuring program, part of the industrial and labour adjustment program. We are exploring ways of using this program to assist this particular situation as well as, more generally, to assist major appliance companies to restructure as necessary and ensure the ongoing viability and strength of the industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.19 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING FARMS AND SMALL BUSINESSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The budget has only confused the matter of capital gains tax for farmers and small-business men, complicating it with drastic changes in annuities, forward-averaging reductions and RRSPs, to the point where it challenges the very survival of the family farm or business. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the government take immediate steps to make fair and equitable changes dealing with valuation day and capital gains taxes on farms and small businesses.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

QUESTIONNAIRE CIRCULATED TO BEEF AND DAIRY PRODUCERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, the national beef marketing questionnaire produced by the Department of Agriculture late last year was sent only to those beef and dairy producers listed in the 1976 Statistics Canada census. There are now 267,000 questionnaires in circulation to 193,000 beef and dairy producers, and yet some producers are still not in receipt of them. Recognizing the need for a clear distinction between beef and dairy producers and the need for an accurate analysis, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That the Minister of Agriculture immediately consult with beef producer organizations to ensure that all farmers who sold cattle in the past year receive this questionnaire and that the results clearly differentiate between dairy and beef producers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, more than one million Canadians are out of work. Additional thousands fear the loss of their jobs, homes and security. These Canadians were entitled to see leadership from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) based on compassion and concern during the first ministers' conference on the economy, but were subjected to a federal government whose position was based on stubbornness and intransigence. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Prime Minister and his colleagues be condemned for their bad faith bargaining, their political selfishness and stubbornness; that this House urges the Prime Minister and his colleagues to put an end to policies which have removed incentives from the private sector; and, further, that this House encourages the Minister of Finance to withdraw his ill-conceived budget and introduce a new economic package based on incentives, job creation and development of the potential to which Canada and its citizens are entitled.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR REINTRODUCTION OF COMMUNITY SERVICES CONTRIBUTION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the record high level of over one million unemployed and the failure of the government to take adequate measures to recompense municipalities for the loss of the Community Services Contribution Program, which allowed $1.5 billion for construction each year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

S.O. 43

That the government take immediate action to reintroduce this essential program.

If the minister will wake up!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

EXPLANATION SOUGHT FOR LAY-OFFS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, Canadian National's decision yesterday to eliminate 1,800 jobs on the heels of mass lay-offs in CN Express and VIA Rail demonstrates that the federal government supports the dismantling of Canada's railway system at the very time when soaring energy costs render this energy-efficient mode of transport more relevant than ever. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That this House demands that the Minister of Transport explain to the House and to the Canadian people how he can justify such a massive body blow to Canada's rail network in the name of austerity after Canadian National has reported a total net profit of some $400 million over the last two years.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

ADVERTISEMENT FOR WORKERS PLACED IN OVERSEAS NEWSPAPERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I have in my hand an advertisement demonstrating that Petro-Canada is now going to Great Britain to look for workers to fill Canadian jobs. At the same time that this ad has been running in London, England, the number of young people seeking jobs in Canada has increased by 142,000 this past year. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the Government of Canada and its Crown corporations do their part in providing opportunities for Canadian young people who are desperately seeking jobs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INCOME TAX

DEPARTMENTAL DELAY IN MAILING REFUNDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I also rise on an urgent matter regarding the mailing of pension and child tax credits, and I would ask for unanimous consent in the presentation of my motion.

Thousands of pensioners and low-income families who urgently need their income tax refunds and child tax credit allowances will suffer from delays in the mailing of cheques because Revenue Canada has instituted a freeze on the hiring of casual labour to help process income tax forms. In order to avoid this unnecessary hardship on people who are suffering severely from economic conditions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That this House instruct the government to begin hiring adequate staff to process income tax forms as expeditiously as possible.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

DEMAND FOR RESIGNATION OF GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the economy of Canada is sick unto death. Close to 2,000 businesses have gone bankrupt since the budget was read on November 12; millions of dollars of capital have left the country, together with expertise and equipment; over one million people are unemployed, and this figure is growing daily; the failing beef industry is sent a questionnaire; farmers and businessmen who want to expand are threatened with capital gains that would ruin them; even the elderly are refused the chance to invest in IAACs; and the budget has killed confidence and initiative. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That this House reflect the thinking of the people and demand that the government resign before Canada is completely in ruins. The Prime Minister has no mandate to reign over the dissolution of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, it is increasingly apparent that the government is using high interest rates, higher taxes, and, soon, wage and price controls as part of a plan to push our economy into a deflationary period, otherwise known as a depression, and that this is part of an organized conspiracy to destroy individual initiative and the free market system. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Prime Minister be required to come clean with Canadians by admitting to the Canadian people that he and his troika are using high interest rates, increased taxation, mass unemployment and, ultimately, wage and exchange controls, as tools designed to force Canada into the status of a state-controlled society.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

CONGRATULATIONS TO UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES ON ELIMINATION OF INDIGENOUS RED MEASLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In response to the announcement of the United States' success in eliminating indigenous red measles in that country under its compulsory immunization program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain):

That this House congratulate the American authorities on this notable achievement and urge the provincial and federal health officials, as recommended by the Canadian Medical Association and the Canadian Pediatric Association, to commit this country to a similar goal of elimination of indigenous red measles.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO STOP LOSS OF JOBS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who will know that Statistics Canada reports today that more than a million Canadians, 1,096,000 Canadians, are out of work. That is the highest number since the Great Depression. The minister will also know that the seasonally-adjusted rate would be up a third of a per cent except that 68,000 Canadians grew so hopeless last month that they gave up even looking for jobs. Despite that suffering, the government remains committed to a doctrinaire budget based on figures it has admitted are false and that everyone in the country knows will make things worse.

This January 117,000 fewer Canadians were working full-time than a year ago. It was the first time we have had a year-over-year drop in employment in 34 years. Will the minister put aside his stubbornness, this pride of his which is throwing Canadians out of work, and propose changes in the budget which will stop this massive loss of jobs for Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Have you no shame?

Miss MacDonald: Ask John Evans what he thinks of the budget.

Mr. MacEachen: —the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asked me to put aside what he considers to be personal pride and to change the budget provisions in order, as he said, to improve the unemployment situation in the country. I assure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that my concern for the unemployed is as great as his. The reason I have established the stance which I have adopted in the budget is to ensure that we can do something to reduce inflationary pressures in the economy which, in my view, are the main cause of unemployment.

It would be tempting, but I think foolhardy, to undertake short-term palliatives or quick fixes which might give the appearance of action but which, down the road, would add further to the unemployment situation. I assure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that any proposal which can be brought forward that would be compatible with that basic objective would be very seriously considered by the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

EFFECT OF PROVISIONS ON FEDERAL DEFICIT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the minister just indicated that he intends to propose nothing, nothing at all, to help Canadians who are out of work or who face the prospects of going out of work.

Mr. Cousineau: What do you propose, Joe?

Mr. Clark: We heard Liberal backbenchers obediently applauding him. I can say that the 1,096,000 Canadians who are out of work were not applauding, and that the millions of others who face the prospect of having their families and their security interfered with by unemployment were not applauding. We have had experience on this continent with other governments that, for reasons of stubbornness and pride, pursued a policy which they knew was wrong. The House will not stand for the government leading Canada into an economic Vietnam.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Clark: The minister claimed that his policy is designed to reduce inflationary pressures. Yesterday his own colleague admitted that the unemployment figures on which the budget was based were wrong and that unemployment this year will be 100,000 above the budget projection. Since that means much lower tax receipts and much higher unemployment insurance payments, will the minister admit that the consequences of his budget may, in fact, reduce the revenues of the Government of Canada—that deepening the recession as his policy is doing may well lead to an increase in the federal deficit rather than a reduction in that deficit which he claims to be a keystone of his policy?

● (1120)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is self-evident, at least to most people, that if there is a weakening in economic activity there is bound to be a decline in governmental revenues and there is also expected to be an increase in governmental expenditures. These are the automatic stabilizers that we have built into our system to respond to a decline in economic activity. There is nothing unusual about that. If it is the case, as I believe it to be the case, that the downturn is deeper than was projected in the budget, then obviously our revenues will decline and our expenditures will increase, and that will influence the budgetary situation. The underlying thrust of the budget still remains intact because these stabilizers adjust themselves with an upturn in economic activity.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER WITHDRAW BUDGET

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, what we had yesterday was an admission by the Government of Canada that its estimate of unemployment on which it based its budget was wrong. What we have had now from the lips of the minister is an admission by him that the deficit forecast in the budget is likely to be wrong. What we have here is a budget that is proven wrong on every count. The premiers indicated their unanimous view that it is wrong. Every Canadian you talk to, whether they have already lost a job or are going to lose a job, and knows that prospect hangs over their families and their futures, knows that this budget is wrong. Why does the minister continue stubbornly to impose this budget simply to protect and preserve his personal pride, when he knows the harm and the damage it is doing to hundreds of thousands of Canadians across this country? Why does he not put his country first?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: The minister laughs.

An hon. Member: The minister smiles.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I must say, as the hon. member said, that the minister smiles.

Mr. Paproski: He laughs.

Mr. MacEachen: I can only smile at the rather contrived indignation and histrionics of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Mazankowski: You had all the answers two years ago.

Mr. MacEachen: If he thinks in his mind that if he can come on strong like that he is going to make an impression, he is very much mistaken.

Once again the Leader of the Opposition has talked about economic projections. It is absolutely clear, as I have said so often in the House of Commons, that one of the most difficult things to do in an uncertain economy is to project events with any certainty. Public forecasters and private forecasters have been wrong on many occasions. That is one of the disadvantages of projecting for a long term down the road. I would ask the Leader of the Opposition to take a look at the projections on unemployment, on the exchange rate and on inflation that were put in the short-lived budget of his government, to look at them now and see how many of those projections, which were honestly made, proved to be far from reality.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: What kind of a turkey answer is that?

Mr. MacEachen: That is the case very often. I ask the Leader of the Opposition not to create these artificial issues because they are much too trivial in the face of the real economic difficulties we have in the country.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Trivial?

• (1125)

EVIDENCE NEEDED TO FORCE CHANGES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister of Finance is now saying that 1,096,000 Canadians out of work is trivial. Trivial, that is what he is saying.

An hon. Member: He did not say that.

Mr. Clark: He is saying he will not believe me, he will not believe the premiers, he will not believe the Economic Council of Canada or any of the literally thousands of people who have pointed out what is bad about this budget, and how destructive it is to this country.

Let me ask has the minister talked to the 1,800 employees of CN being thrown out of work? Has he talked to the 50 workers in Timmins-Chapleau thrown out of work just the other day? Has he talked to any of these people affected by this budget?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid I have to ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to keep to questions.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He was putting a very good question.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I apologize for letting—

Mr. Cousineau: Apologize to Canadians.

Mr. Clark: Yes, I apologize to Canadians for this government. I apologize to Canadians that we have not been able so far to force this government to change its policies.

Let me ask the minister one simple question. Just how much evidence of the disaster he is causing does he need before he will change this budget?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has now asked four questions on the economy—

Mr. Huntington: And you have not answered one of them.

Mr. MacEachen: —and I would draw to your attention, and to the attention of the House, that in all of these questions he has not put forward one single constructive proposal—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —in order to deal with the economic situation. He is treating this subject as an occasion for rhetorical outbursts without any relevance whatsoever to the seriousness of the situation.

Mr. Beatty: You have no ideas. Resign, MacEachen.

Mr. MacEachen: I ask the Leader of the Opposition, if he has sound ideas, if he has alternatives, to bring them forward, and we will examine them.

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. MacEachen: He has asked four questions and we have had nothing but indignation and rhetoric.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

REASON FOR INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, let me put a very precise question to the Minister of Finance. The first ministers this past week have been demanding a made-in-Canada interest rate policy. Well, Madam Speaker, we have had a made-in-Canada interest rate policy for the past six months. During this period the target range set by the Bank of Canada for M1 in its monetary policy to fight inflation has been far higher than the actual results, and normally you would expect the bank to reduce interest rates to force the level of money supply back into the target range. For some reason the bank has not done so and the result is that, while we have had some drop in interest rates, they have been about two percentage points higher than they need be.

My question to the minister is very simple. Would he explain why we have had interest rates 2 per cent higher than they should have been?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): First of all, Madam Speaker, I do not accept the validity of the hon. member's observations—

Mr. Epp: You never do.

Mr. MacEachen: —that we have interest rates higher than we should because of the monetary aggregates. It is true that M1 has been below the target range because of obvious lags. During that period of very high interest rates the M1 decreased; it will increase as a result of the lower interest rates which have prevailed in the last number of months. That is the major reason, the question of lags, and it is not a desire on the part of the central bank's management to stray away from that basic guide. It is merely a question of lags.

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I do not think the minister understands what has happened. I suggest to him the main reason for this shortfall is because the dollar has been under pressure as a result of Canadian and foreign investors' total lack of confidence in the government's policies, the energy, foreign investment and budget policies. It is for this reason the dollar has been under pressure and the Bank of Canada has been forced to keep interest rates much higher than they should be just to maintain the level of the Canadian dollar. I say to the minister that that has probably cost about 100,000 of the jobs lost this past year.

Again, my question is very simple. Will he consider changing these policies, and will he explain to the home owners, businessmen and farmers who have lost their businesses, and the people who have lost their jobs as a result of this, why he is continuing these policies?

• (1130)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, once again the hon. member is very vague when he speaks of continuation of these policies. He asked a question about the monetary aggregates.

Mr. Beatty: You are making a fool of yourself, Allan. Sit down!

Mr. MacEachen: I gave an answer to that question, and the hon. member dropped it and began to talk about the Canadian dollar and the impact of that on interest rates.

Mr. Wilson: That's one you want to sidestep.

Mr. MacEachen: He drew in the National Energy Program, he drew in the Foreign Investment Review Agency, and he then drew in the budget. One has attempted to give an answer to this melange of ill-assorted economic nostrums that the hon. member has mentioned.

BURDEN CARRIED BY UNEMPLOYED—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I also have questions for the Minister of Finance. It is becoming more clear every single day that one cannot bring about economic recovery on the backs of unemployed people in Canada and that it is fundamentally wrong to ask 1.5 million unemployed Canadians, or whatever the actual figure may be in numbers of millions, to carry the burden of this social and economic exercise that the Liberal government of the country is pursuing.

I simply ask the minister, given that unemployment figures today are now in excess of one million, as Statistics Canada defines them, and given that there is hidden unemployment which now ranges upwards to 745,000 Canadians who have given up looking for work and who do not appear in the statistics, and given that that is now 15 per cent of the work force of Canada, how much longer will those people carry the burden of this exercise of government? At what point in time will the Minister of Finance be prepared to admit that it is fundamentally wrong to ask those people to carry the burden? When will he change, and bring a policy into the House of Commons which will begin to put this country back on the road to prosperity?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): The hon. member has asked a serious question. Let me tell him that the unemployment rate, which is seasonally adjusted, has dropped this month from 8.6 per cent to 8.3 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: It is still a very high level, but I should remind the hon. member that in the United States the unemployment level is 8.9 per cent, and that every one of our industrial partners—

An hon. Member: It's their fault.

Mr. MacEachen: —is experiencing abnormally high levels of unemployment.

Mr. Nielsen: Stop trying to catch up!

Mr. MacEachen: The reason is that we are in the midst of an international recession. The hon. member is now asking me, in order to overcome an international recession, to undertake in Canada a major stimulus and to spend $5 billion to $10 billion now, in order to have a short-term effect. I think that if that were done it would take about six or seven months to work through the economy, at a time when we expect an international recovery. At that time we would be able to participate in the international recovery and have more jobs and more growth than if we took action at the present time, which would add to our difficulties and make it impossible for us to share, as a country, in the recovery which is bound to come.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Allan, you are all by yourself.

Mr. Nielsen: Don't you feel lonely?

MEASURES TO MEET NEEDS OF CANADIANS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I want to say to the minister, through Your Honour, that he cannot seasonally adjust the hardship that unemployment is creating for those people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I suggest to the minister that if there is an international economic recovery then we will benefit from it, in any event. However, the fact is that within the confines of this country there are any number of projects which could be undertaken now which will ultimately have to be undertaken, anyway.

I ask the minister, given the housing shortage, given the real problems in the farm implement industry, given the difficulties in the forest industry, and given the difficulties from coast to coast in areas which affect the domestic economy of Canada, is there no measure at all that the government can promote which can meet both the need of Canadians, on the one hand, for those services and products, and meet the need of Canadians, on the other hand, for jobs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked another question.

Mr. Nielsen: Glad you noticed it!

Mr. MacEachen: In his question, he has not even mentioned the fact that Canada has a very high inflation rate at the present time. Our inflation rate is higher than the United States. Our wage settlements are higher than the United States; they are increasing while wage settlements in the United States are decreasing. In all his questions the hon. member has not yet realized that the main reason we have high unemployment in this country today, and the reason the world has high unemployment, is because we have been unable to bring down inflation. Every item he has put forward at the present time—

Mr. Huntington: Tell us how you would bring it down, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: —and every proposal is intended to add to inflation and to make our unemployment problem more difficult.

Miss MacDonald: That's what you are doing.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the result of the hon. member's proposal today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Your policies are doing the same thing, Allan.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RECONSIDER DIRECTION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I want to suggest to the minister that the results we are seeing today are the results of the dogmatic attitude of the minister. It is not a matter of whether it adds to inflation. How, in heaven's name, does building a house, that people need and that they can afford to buy, add to inflation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I suggest to the minister that the inflationary policy and direction that he is pursuing have not brought down inflation. All they have done is to make it impossible for Canadians to buy the products that Canadians manufacture.

There is now a wide range of political opinion, from all of the premiers, to the opposition parties in the House of Commons, and the commentators who watch politics, that the policy which the minister is now pursuing almost relentlessly, without any concern for the effects on individual Canadians, is not an appropriate policy. Given that fact, I simply ask the minister that he reconsider the direction he is taking in this country. I ask that he consider the effects on those 1.8 million Canadians. I ask that he no longer pursue his policy and that he find, in our domestic economy, the necessary tools to create the kind of employment that people want, in order to get this country moving again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked me to reconsider the policy. What I am constantly doing—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —is listening to viewpoints, as I have done for the past three days at the first ministers' conference.

Mr. Wilson: Sure showed it!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member is asking me to consider the plight of the currently unemployed. I really am doing that. However, what he is asking me to do now is to adopt policies which would not reduce unemployment; rather, he is asking me to introduce policies which would add to the unemployment list.

Mr. Deans: No, no!

Mr. MacEachen: That is precisely what the hon. member is doing.

Mr. Deans: Not so!

MINES AND MINING

WITHDRAWAL OF SPECIAL RESOURCE ALLOWANCE

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my questions, as well, are directed to the Minister of Finance. Investment capital is flooding out of this country from the resource of exploration sectors of the mineral industry. The major mining giants of Canada are declaring record losses. Lay-offs and pending lay-offs in the mining sector will amount to hundreds and even thousands if corrective action is not taken soon. We now see that the withdrawal of the northern living allowance will cost mining personnel thousands of additional dollars in cities, like Labrador City, in coming years.

An hon. Member: It's not withdrawn.

Mr. Siddon: Why has the government proposed to withdraw the 25 per cent special resource allowance, which would discourage Canadian mining companies from upgrading iron ore to the pig iron stage, iron ore which is heavily used and consumed in Canadian industries? This will lead to an additional excalation of the cost of steel to the automotive industry and every other Canadian manufacturing industry, because that 25 per cent resource allowance induced Canadian iron industries to supply our domestic demand for iron. Why has that been included in the budget? Does the minister not realize the tremendous increase in unemployment which that will create?

• (1140)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker. If the hon. member is referring to the steel industry, as I think he is, if the steel industries continue, as I expect it to do, to invest in the industry, the changes in the resource allowance will not for quite some time in any way affect their taxable situation.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, the minister is totally wrong. The Canadian Mining Association has made that point quite clear. The inflationary pressure on the steel industry is going to be of tremendous magnitude and will lead to additional unemployment in the automotive industry. The minister knows that.

RETRAINING OF DISPLACED MINERS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why is there no immediate strategic program to begin to retrain young people being displaced from the mining sector, when the mining association and others are predicting that within three years we will need some 3,000 to 5,000 additional trained and skilled people in that sector, and these young people are presently contemplating going on UIC and welfare? Why does the government not come forward with a program at the mine sites where they are presently employed in so that they can learn new skills and be prepared when that demand comes within two years time?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is obviously mistaken when he says there are no proposals to do that. If he had been watching more carefully he would have recognized that in the early part of January we put forward a very extensive set of proposals for a new national training program that will allocate our training funds to those areas of the economy where the jobs are. We met with the provincial governments. We received agreement from those governments to begin studying how we can revise that program. We hope to have a new program by this spring. Therefore, those proposals are well in hand and are proceeding very well. In the meantime, we have introduced a number of supplementary measures, particularly as they relate to the mining community, to provide for alternative employment and for additional training places. I will be glad to provide the hon. member with that information so that he can bring himself up to date.

Madam Speaker: I ask hon. members to try to be shorter in their questions. We are a little over ten minutes late in the usual progress of our question period. I would like to get more members in. That is the choice for members to make.

Mr. Nielsen: And the answers, too.

AGRICULTURE

QUERY RESPECTING STATE OWNERSHIP OF LAND

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, Communist leaders boast that they can take over a capitalist country without firing a shot. May I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether there is a policy within his department by which he encourages state ownership of land?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No.

ADVICE GIVEN TO FARMERS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Why then is an official in the Farm Credit office in Prince Albert telling farmers who are appealing to them for cash, after the $50 million being offered to them, to sell their land to the land bank?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the land bank is a provincial land bank. I have no knowledge of any Farm Credit official giving that advice. If he is doing that, he must have good evidence that it is probably the best way for them to recoup some money for the land. I cannot imagine that happening in Saskatchewan. When one looks at land values, how they have increased and how valuable land is becoming in Saskatchewan, why would anyone turn it over to the land bank in Saskatchewan to sell it? I cannot imagine that because purchases of land there are higher than they have ever been. There is a demand by other farmers for land in Saskatchewan.

THE ECONOMY

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—PROPOSAL TO INTRODUCE WAGE CONTROLS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the prime minister. It concerns the first ministers' conference this week. This week the provinces rejected the Prime Minister's proposal for wage controls to be placed on public servants. I would ask whether he would be prepared at this time to give this House an assurance that neither now, nor in the months ahead, will he impose wage controls on federal public servants, or on anybody else unilaterally, as he did once before.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Lumley and Axworthy didn't applaud.

Mr. Trudeau: Only two? I think it is important to set the record straight. When the hon. member says I imposed wage and price controls unilaterally, that of course is not the way it happened. He will recall that in the summers of 1974 and 1975 the ten premiers had assembled. They lamented the inflationary state of the economy and begged the federal government to take action. The action we took was only possible because it was judged by common opinion in Canada, notably that of the premiers, that we were in a crisis situation. The hon. member knows enough about the Constitution to know that we cannot control wages and prices nationally unless there is a crisis. That crisis, as it was defined by the courts, was accepted as a crisis because the provinces had, generally speaking, supported our action. Indeed, they co-operated with the federal government in applying wage and price controls. So much for the record.

I want to point out to the hon. member that the objective of our proposal yesterday was to show collective leadership in Canada, hoping that the ten premiers and the federal government would take some action collectively to come to grips with the danger of a wage explosion, and to do it in such a way that we would not penalize those at the low end of the wage scale, since we offered that they would have compensation in line with the increase in the cost of living, but those at the top end, those who, I believe, have caused some complaint in the House, would be absolutely frozen. We were hoping at this time of economic leadership that we would also have the support of the opposition parties, since it would have the effect of tackling the cause of our economic malaise. It would have the effect of—

Mr. Nielsen: How about the length of the answers?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member for Yukon is distressed with the length of the answers. He would prefer the histrionic shouting of his leader, I guess, when it comes to having exchanges in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: My answers are answers to questions. The histrionics of his leader are speeches that should not be made during the question period.

QUERY RESPECTING PROFIT AND INTEREST CONTROLS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister's response was notable for its omissions. I would point out that he did not reject the unilateral imposition of wage controls on federal public servants. I would also point out, as he implied that wages were the cause of inflation, that workers' wages have fallen behind inflation for four years in a row. So much for that argument.

Since the Minister of Finance talked about a principle of equity in his budget, can the Prime Minister explain where is the fairness in the concept of imposing wage controls on public servants but no price control or excess profit controls on the banks, or any corresponding controls on interest rates which are killing the home owners of this country?

• (1150)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is right, of course. I did not answer his question about controlling the federal public service. I was told by members opposite that my answers were too long, and that is why I interrupted my answer.

If the House will hear me out, I would like to deal with that question. It is not the intention of the federal government—that is the reassurance the hon. member is asking for—to freeze or impose wage controls on its public service. The intention for which we asked the co-operation of the provinces was to give a collective sign that we wanted to keep the wage pressures down.

Now, the reason we, as the federal government, talked about that aspect was that it had been raised by three premiers in their opening statements. I repeat to the hon member, that is why my setting the record straight was important, that in normal circumstances we do not have jurisdiction over the control of prices, wages and profits. That is under provincial jurisdiction. That is the law of contract that comes under Section 92, property and civil rights. We do not have that jurisdiction.

The only way that prices and profits could be controlled, and I pointed this out to the Premier of Saskatchewan who raised the same objection as the hon. member, is if he would decide in his province to keep prices and profits down. He is not doing it in areas of his jurisdiction, nor is the Premier of Manitoba. They are both socialist premiers and they seem to disagree with the approach suggested by the hon. member. They are more apt, as are members on the opposite side of the House, to blame the federal government because it is not doing something about interest rates. However, they are not prepared to undertake the control of the cause of inflation in their own provinces. That is the point I want to make.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NUCLEAR ENERGY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In recent months it has been clear that decisions have been made by cabinet which would indicate the government's nuclear policy and its position as far as the Candu system is concerned. There have been decisions such as the agreement on uranium with Europe, the Mexican tender, and the dialogue about electricity exports to the United States. What is of concern is that this is a back door technique taken by the government.

Would the minister explain to the House, and to those of us who understand the importance of the Candu system and recognize the failing high technology Canadian industry, what his nuclear policy is, or will he tell us why he is afraid to expose that for public review?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, at the first opportunity I would be happy to make the statement for which the hon. member is asking. As a matter of fact I appeared before the parliamentary committee a few weeks ago and there was not one question on the issue. I will find opportunities to give the hon. member any information he requires. Question period may be an appropriate opportunity to do so if he wishes to ask a specific question.

INTEREST RATES APPLICABLE TO EXPORTS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. In the spring of 1981 he indicated in a public forum that he was not prepared to consider specifically lowering interest rates in deals for nuclear exports. In the past few months it has become very clear that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has encouraged and convinced him to reconsider that position. He is now offering a Mexican deal which could cost Canadian taxpayers $300 million a year.

If the Minister of Finance was able to reconsider this and understand the need for support of that Mexican deal, why will he not recognize and reconsider the needs of 350,000 Canadian farmers, hundreds of thousands of Canadian home owners, and thousands of Canadian businessmen who are being crushed by the weight of his high interest rate policy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, with regard to the particular business transaction to which the hon. member referred in his introduction, he should address that question to the Minister of Trade.

I would say to the hon. member that I did attempt in the budget to provide relief to farmers in financial difficulty through the Farm Credit Corporation. I attempted to provide relief to home owners who were in a very difficult situation as a result of high interest rates, and I attempted to provide relief to small-business men in financial difficulty through the Small Business Development Bond. These were serious efforts to meet the problem which the hon. member has mentioned.

Indeed, if I recall clearly, he was one of the members of the House of Commons who urged me some time ago to apply the Small Business Development Bond to farmers and unincorporated businesses. I took his representations to heart and included those provisions in the budget.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON NATIONAL TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Petro-Canada is now trying to fill Canadian jobs with workers from England while at the same time 142,000 desperate young Canadians have been trying to find employment during this past year. When can we expect some detailed information, and I emphasize "detailed", about the new National Training Program?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as I explained to the hon. member's colleague earlier, we have already put forward a very detailed set of proposals which were issued on January 6. We have had very extensive discussions and consultation with the provinces which deliver many of those programs through their training institutions, and with industry, as the hon. member knows.

We are now awaiting the response from the provinces so we can proceed with the introduction of a bill and the signing of new agreements under the training program.

We do have very clear guidelines for oil companies in Canada. They must give preference to Canadian workers when they are available, when they have the appropriate skills. We have been particularly stringent in ensuring that the major resource companies which are developing the big projects give that sort of preference. However, we cannot stand in the way of progress if we do not have the skills here. We must allow them to import workers from abroad. That is why we feel it is important to convince the provinces, and I would ask the hon. member to aid in that respect, to urge his provincial members to work with us in developing a revised training program so that we can ensure that young Canadians will have the necessary skills for existing jobs and so that we do not spend money on training for jobs which do not exist.

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING PROGRAMS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I have looked at the detailed information which has come from the minister's office. I have looked at the proposals which were sent to the provinces. There is not the detail necessary to determine how effective the program will be.

Information which I have received from Statistics Canada indicates that from 1971 to 1980 unemployment insurance benefits increased by almost 500 per cent. Over that same period adult occupational training programs decreased by 75 per cent. How does the minister justify that?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I do not justify it because I do not believe that those statistics are correct. The fact is that we have been adding a substantial number of positions under the occupational training program. This year alone we will be spending close to $860 million and training close to 300,000

Canadians under the support of the federal government, which makes us the largest supporter of training than anyone in the country, including the provinces. I do not think the hon. member's figures are accurate.

TRADE

ACCESS TO UNITED STATES MARKET FOR TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Last year Canadian telephone equipment manufacturers sold approximately $800 million worth of telephones and related equipment to the United States. Is the minister aware that at the present time there are two bills before the U.S. Congress which could have the effect of severely restricting, or closing down, the American market to Canadian sellers? What is he doing to protect Canadian interests?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, officials of both External Affairs and my own department, under the direction of the Minister of State for International Trade and myself, are keeping closely in touch with the situation. We are prepared to see that appropriate representations are made to protect Canadian interests.

PROTECTION FOR CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, what assurances can the minister give to Canadian workers and telecommunications manufacturers that their interests will be protected and that there is no possibility of their losing several hundreds of millions of dollars of sales per year?

• (1200)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, at any one time in the United States Congress there are hundreds, if not thousands, of bills, and I think that to say that any one of them will actually become law is carrying things somewhat too far.

I want again to give the assurance to the House, and to the workers in question, that the Minister of State for Trade and I have instructed our officials to be in close touch with the situation and to make all necessary representations.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, yesterday the CNR announced it was laying off some 1,800 people across the system, including over 200 in the Transcona shops, as a result of a downturn in revenues, a downturn which can be attributed to the slowdown in the economy brought on by the high interest rate policy of this government.

My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. What does the Minister of Transport have to say to all those young people in my riding who are losing their jobs just at a point when their mortgages have either come due or are coming due and when things would have been difficult anyway? Are they to be lectured by a cynical, burned out Prime Minister in the same way the premiers were last night, and is it the policy of this government to allow Crown corporations which are making profits to lay workers off and leave undone the considerable amount of work waiting for willing hands to do?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the first thing I would tell them would be to read what I said yesterday on this same subject, which was a bit more nuance than what the hon. member is saying now.

The other thing I would tell them—

Mr. Clark: Let them eat nuance.

Mr. Pepin: —is that we are on the verge of a major railway main line development in western Canada. I would tell them that there is $1.35 billion in the budget for that, so my message would be extremely encouraging, and I am sure it would be very well received.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DESIGNATION OF MINISTERIAL PORTFOLIOS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), his House leader and his former House leader—the three of them—raised a point of order and expressed concerns. I told them I would look into their concerns, which I did not share and still do not share, and come back to them with some answers.

I am prepared today very briefly to tell those hon. members what the situation is. I suppose the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition followed my recommendation—

Mr. Clark: On motions.

Mr. Pinard: Would the right hon. member prefer to hear this on motions? It is a point of order, Madam Speaker. I prefer to speak now.

Mr. Clark: No, no. It is a statement on motions.

Mr. Pinard: I suggested to the Leader of the Opposition yesterday that he look at the statute and have someone explain it to him. I am sure he has done his homework, but nevertheless—

Mr. Clark: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I cannot hear two points of order at the same time.

Mr. Clark: You don't have one now.

Madam Speaker: The minister rose on a point of order, and I am listening to his point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Having risen on this point of order, I believe it is necessary to provide some clarification and allay the ill-founded fears of the Leader of the Opposition, his House leader and his former House leader.

He implied that the new ministers of state were acting more or less illegally, and I immediately referred him to the Government Organization Act, 1970, and related matters. I invited him to look at the relevant provisions, to read them very carefully and to have them explained if necessary. I shall, if I may, add further clarification. I am referring to Chapter 14, Sections 13 to 24, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, 2nd Supplement. Two things are regulated under this act. First we have the creation of ministries of state, usually followed by formal appointment of ministers responsible for the new ministries. Such decisions require the approval of Parliament. In order to properly interpret an act, we must read all its provisions, and reading further, we find that Section 23 is concerned with the second type of action, namely, the appointment of ministers of state with the responsibility of assisting other ministers. Thus, we have here two distinct types of decisions: 1. the creation of new ministries of state, which requires the approval of Parliament; 2. the appointment of ministers of state with the responsibility of assisting other ministers, which does not require parliamentary approval.

As a result of the latest reorganization announced by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), two cases were raised by my colleagues opposite, concerning Mr. Lapointe and Mr. De Bané. Mr. Lapointe was appointed Minister of State under Section 23, with responsibility for assisting the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in matters relating to tourism. There is also the case of Mr. Lumley, who was appointed Minister of State under Section 23 with responsibility for assisting the Minister of State for Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), and we had Mr. De Bané, who was appointed Minister of State under Section 23 of the same act, with responsibility for assisting the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan). However, it has become regular practice, a practice that was in fact followed by the Leader of the Opposition when he was Prime Minister—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! I am very much tempted to interrupt the minister. He rose on a point of order to provide clarification that was requested yesterday. That is fine. If there is a brief exchange and it takes place in a normal fashion on both sides of the House, I think I can allow it to continue. But if the minister intends to discuss the subject at length, I am sorry, but I feel a fairly short statement would settle the matter quite satisfactorily. If the minister intends to be brief, I shall allow him to go on. Otherwise, I shall have to ask him to find some other procedure for providing the information he wants to give to the House.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I speak to that point, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker—

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I submit to the Chair that it has always been the practice that when extensive changes, or even minor changes, are made in the ministry the Prime Minister makes a statement on motions which then can be responded to by opposition parties. I suggest to the government House leader in all sincerity, and in a spirit of co-operation, that this kind of thing should have been done in this instance, and could still be done, on motions, and that would be the proper way.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I was recognized on a point of order. I intend to be brief and to finish my statement in a few moments. I am merely answering a request for clarification of a matter that was raised yesterday. In concluding, I simply want to say that the procedures criticized by my colleagues opposite were in accordance with Section 23 of the act I just mentioned. The procedure consisting in creating new ministers of state will be subject to parliamentary approval, but meanwhile, the situation is as follows: Mr. Gray is Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, as shown on the list appended to Hansard, and Mr. Lumley and Mr. De Bané are Ministers of State, each with specific duties designated as is customary and as the Leader of the Opposition did himself when he was Prime Minister.

Finally, Madam Speaker, until legislation is passed to ratify the creation of new ministries of state, the ministers are designated as they appear in Hansard, to which reference was made yesterday during the debate on this subject. I should like to say once and for all that there is nothing illegal about all this. The procedure is based on the legislation in question, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, Chapter 14, Sections 13 to 24, and in the case of ministers of state with responsibility for assisting other ministers, they were appointed under Section 23. The latter procedure does not require parliamentary approval, and I hope I have succeeded in taking away any lingering doubts among my colleagues opposite.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I had no idea the government House leader would raise this matter today.

Mr. Cousineau: You asked questions yesterday.

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad the hon. member who interjected is awake and alive—for a change—to the fact that these questions are being put.

The government House leader has given a rather lengthy and, I must say, complex reply, including the citation of numbered sections of the Government Organization Act. I would like to read what he has said in Hansard, and I trust I will be allowed the liberty on Monday to respond, should I choose to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I object. Yesterday, these people got upset, they raised a point of order claiming that they were aware of the situation, and now they want time to look into it—

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

PETITION

MISS MACDONALD—POLAND—IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, which is signed by 125 concerned Canadians primarily of the Polish community in Kingston and the Islands, is to protest in the strongest way possible the statements made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) regarding the imposition of martial law in Poland, statements which they feel give aid and comfort to the enemies of democracy in Poland.

• (1210)

The nature of this petition is to demand a retraction of these statements and to urge that the Prime Minister join with other western leaders to denounce the imposition of martial law and the influence being exerted by the Soviet Union to suppress the fundamental rights of Polish citizens.

It is my hope that the Prime Minister will be attentive to these pleadings and that he will carry out the proposals put forward by the petitioners.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGES TO WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, contrary to what I announced yesterday concerning the order of business in the House, today we shall proceed immediately with consideration of the Canagrex bill. The bill was on the agenda for today, but I had indicated that before considering this bill, we would be bringing in Ways and Means motions. I had also promised my fellow House leaders to give them a copy of the bill so they would be able to look into it during the weekend. However, I am unfortunately unable to meet this very legitimate request. Therefore, as a courtesy to the House, we shall not bring in the Ways and Means motion today. We shall be doing so next week, and consideration of the borrowing authority bill will be postponed at least one day to enable my opposition colleagues to examine it. The order of business is therefore as follows: today, we shall be considering the Canagrex bill; Monday, as announced, the House will be considering a bill to amend the National Housing Act; Tuesday, we shall continue consideration of the National Housing Act, and if the borrowing authority bill has been tabled and the Ways and Means motions approved, we shall probably be starting consideration of the borrowing authority bill on Wednesday. Thursday, as I just said, we shall be resuming debate on the National Housing Act. Actually, the only change is that today we shall not be bringing in Ways and Means motions, and instead of considering the borrowing authority bill on Tuesday and Wednesday, it will probably be only Wednesday.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): On the point of order, Madam Speaker; now that we are on House business, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman could tell me if it is the intention of the government to introduce the new Crown corporation act before the end of February or, if not by that date, when?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I shall consult the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) and my other cabinet colleagues, and I hope to be able to provide further clarification within the next few weeks.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,700, 2,989, 2,990, 3,004 and 3,548.

Order Paper Questions

UPDATING OF SNAVELY REPORT

Question No. 2,700—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is the government updating the study originally commissioned by the government to Mr. Carl Snavely into the actual costs of moving grain and, if so (a) what is the name of the person or firm hired to conduct the study (b) on what date did it commence and what is the expected completion date (c) what is the anticipated or final cost (d) in which year does the update apply?

2. Did the Prime Minister on February 13, 1981 state "We have made a decision not to deal with the Crowsnest Pass freight rates until there is a very strong demand from the representatives of western farm groups and other groups to touch the Crowsnest rates" and, if so, in light of the statement and in light of the government's current fiscal restraint program, for what reason is the government proceeding to contract out a study to update the actual costs of moving grain, which will touch upon the Crowsnest Pass freight rate?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

(a) Snavely, King, Harris and Associates, Inc.

(b) May 1, 1981—started; December 31, 1981—completion.

(c) $155,500 (final cost).

(d) 1980.

2. Yes. In relation to western railway capacity and the railway financial situation it is important to have accurate, up-to-date figures on losses related to statutory grain rates. The current study will maintain the three-year update interval and will be directly comparable to the two previous studies. The study will also identify changes in railway system efficiencies that have occurred since 1977 update.

POST OFFICE IN MALLORYTOWN, ONT.

Question No. 2,989—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a Post Office constructed in the village of Mallorytown in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so (a) on what date (b) what was the name and address of the contractor and the amount of the contract?

2. Were tenders advertised publicly and, if so, what were the names of all those who tendered and the amount of each tender?

3. Were tenders invited rather than publicly advertised and (a) if so (i) who decided the identity of those invited (ii) who submitted tenders and in what amount (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

(a) Contract was awarded February 23, 1968.

(b) Contractor: A.L. Strigley Construction, Ontario Street, Gananoque, Ontario

Contract amount: $29,300.

2. Tenders were advertised publicly, and following is a list of tenders received in an answer to public advertisement:

Alfred Louis Strigley (A.L. Strigley Construction, Gananoque, Ontario, $29,300; I.H. Bradley Construction Ltd., Prescott, Ont., $35,915; Fort Construction & Equipment Ltd., Prescott, Ontario, $37,500; Raymond Riis Construction, Brockville, Ontario, $37,618; Baldock Engineering & Construction Ltd., Ottawa, $39,747; D.C. Snelling Limited, Prescott, Ontario, $40,178.

3. Not applicable—See part 2 above.

POST OFFICE IN DELTA, ONT.

Question No. 2,990—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a Post Office constructed in the village of Delta in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville and, if so (a) on what date (b) what was the name and address of the contractor and the amount of the contract?

2. Were tenders advertised publicly and, if so, what were the names of all those who tendered and the amount of each tender?

3. Were tenders invited rather than publicly advertised and (a) if so (i) who decided the identity of those invited (ii) who submitted tenders and in what amount (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) Yes, a building was constructed as a built-lease project during fiscal year 1970-71.

(b) Kigiak Management & Development Company Limited, 88 Metcalfe Street, Suite 605, Ottawa, Ontario. $6,060.60 rental per annum with a 15-year lease commencing June 1, 1971, with two five-year options.

2. Public tender call—date of opening: 1970-09-10. Only one offeror: Kigiak Management and Development Company Limited—$6,060.60 rental per annum.

3. Not applicable—See part 2 above.

LOCK BOXES IN POST OFFICES

Question No. 3,004—Mr. Cossitt:

Does the government intend to extend the leases for box holders who had boxes in locked box lobbies closed during the 1981 postal strike for the same number of days as the length of the strike in order to compensate the box holders for money paid to the government for a service not available to them and (a) if so, on what date will this be announced (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Instructions were issued by Canada Post that leases for boxes in lock box lobbies closed during the 1981 postal strike were to be extended in accordance with the Manual of Financial Procedures, Part III, Chapter 19, paragraph 16 (2) (a) and (b), which are as follows:

16. "(2) In such cases the rental period may be extended

(a) by one month if the elapsed time is from 15 to 30 days' duration only; or

(b) by one month for each 30 days of elapsed time and an additional month for the remaining elapsed time, provided it exceeds 15 days."

(a) No announcement was necessary because all customers who qualified were given the above-mentioned extension.

(b) Not applicable.

MORTGAGE INTEREST COMPONENT IN CPI

Question No. 3,548—Mr. McGrath:

1. Is the mortgage interest component of the consumer price index based on a five-year moving average of mortgage interest rates?

2. Is Statistics Canada aware that a significant number of mortgages that have been taken out or renewed in the past five years have terms of less than five years?

3. To the knowledge of Statistics Canada, what is the current average term to renewal of a typical mortgage?

4. In the opinion of Statistics Canada, does the mortgage interest component of the Consumer Price Index adequately reflect movements in mortgage interest costs?

5. What would be the impact on the (a) mortgage interest component (b) consumer price index, of using a (i) one (ii) two (iii) three (iv) four year moving average?

6. Will changes be made to the mortgage interest component in the near future and (a) if so, what will be the nature of the changes (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. The mortgage interest component of the consumer price index is based on a model which uses a five-year moving average for calculating changes in mortgage interest costs. These costs are affected by changes in both mortgage interest rates and dwelling prices during the 60 months which precede the current month.

2. Statistics Canada is fully aware that in recent years there has been a growing incidence of mortgages being renewed with terms which are shorter than five years. Such mortgages, on the other hand, would constitute only a small proportion of mortgages used in the CPI because the CPI is supposed to reflect changes in all mortgages. (Refer to part 4 of question.)

3. There are no complete current statistics on mortgage contracts which would allow for computation of the average term of new (or renewed) mortgages. According to our knowledge, the most recent information available is that which is compiled by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation which is presented as a table below. This information does not yet include 1981 data and covers only loans approved in conformity with the National Housing Act (i.e. excludes conventional mortgages). Please note that changes in the distribution of new or renewed mortgages, according to terms, are not representative of changes in the distribution of all mortgages currently existing, even though they affect the latter (Refer to parts 2 and 4.)

4. The treatment of owned accommodation is likely to be the most complex and controversial problem in the field of consumer price indexes. There is not and likely never will be, an ideal and universally satisfactory solution to this problem. Particular statistical offices apply various approaches and some even entirely exclude the owned accommodation component from their CPI.

The Canadian approach is based on the assumption that the CPI should reflect, as well as possible, the price-induced changes in the purchasing power of urban consumers. The purchasing power of home owners changes when, among other things, the mortgage interest costs which they assumed change, which are in turn determined by price changes in mortgage credit (i.e. interest rates) and for mortgaged dwellings. These are affected, however, not only by current prices but also by former prices and their mix depends on the distribution by age of all mortgage contracts currently in force.

According to Canadian practice, the above mix is approximated by a 60-month moving average of interest rates and dwelling prices, with inter-month proportions being kept constant from one CPI weight update to another (presently, four years). Mortgages older than five years are not taken into account, because they amount only to about 25 per cent of the total outstanding mortgage debt (according to both the 1974 and 1978 family expenditure surveys). On the other hand, a shorter moving average would eliminate a substantial proportion of mortgage contracts in force and could result in quite volatile price indexes.

Therefore, while it is true that the share of mortgages having shorter renewal periods is increasing, the impact of this not being reflected in the current CPI is to an unknown extent offset by the fact that the CPI does not include mortgages assumed more than five years ago, some of which have fixed rates for the entire life of the mortgage.

The approximation technique used for calculating changes in the mortgage interest is certainly not perfect, this being mainly attributable to the unavailability of appropriate and timely data. Statistics Canada is confident that this approximation technique is nonetheless adequate for measuring a very complex phenomenon.

5. Because of the complexities and enormity of the task associated with recalculating the mortgage interest component of the CPI as stipulated in part 5 of the question, the answer will only become available in two or three months.

6. As part of its continuing effort to incorporate refinements to the CPI, Statistics Canada has and will continue to review new alternatives to the treatment of home ownership in the CPI. With specific respect to the mortgage interest component, the feasibility of using average mortgage interest rates which would vary according to the current mix of mortgages, by age, is in fact currently being studied.

Because of the extremely complex nature of the problem it is not possible at this point in time to specify the exact nature of the changes which will be brought about, nor their implementation date.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 2,511 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 2,511 be deemed to be made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PERMANENT FISHERIES PROTECTION OFFICERS

Question No. 2,511—Mr. Crouse:

1. What is the number of permanent fisheries protection officers for (a) Yarmouth (b) Shelburne (c) Queens (d) Lunenburg (e) Halifax County and, in each case, what is the number of additional personnel required by season?

2. What is the total (a) yearly budget for salaries (b) yearly budget for expenses (c) figure for fresh and salt water surveillance for each County?

3. What was the number of trout stocked in each County for each year 1975 to 1981?

4. Are proposals being considered for the relocation of staff or for the jurisdiction of duties from one office to another in each County and, if so, what are the proposals?

5. (a) Has an amount been budgeted to make improvements to the Mersey River fishways and, if so, what amount (b) are there plans for improvements in the number of fish provided to stock the Mersey River and, if so, what are they?

6. Are studies being set up to monitor the Ph levels of rivers, brooks and other tributaries in Queens County?

7. Is the Department of Fisheries and Oceans considering plans to place limestone in any water on the Mersey system other than the Lower Great Brook and, if so, what are the plans?

8. (a) Is the Department planning an expansion to the Mersey Fish Culture Station (b) is trout-rearing to be re-established at the Station?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. MacKay: Very briefly, Madam Speaker, I should like to inquire through you of the parliamentary secretary the reason for the long delay in answering my question which was put on the Order Paper on November 23. It is question No. 3,461 with respect to Canadair. I am informed and have reason to believe it is correct that these answers have, in effect, been prepared but are being held back because of the situation at Canadair, which is rather embarrassing to the government.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will make inquiries into that matter.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANAGREX ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed, from Wednesday, February 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-85, to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to participate in this debate on a bill to establish a corporation called Canagrex which is aimed at promoting, facilitating and engaging in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, because it does give us an opportunity to discuss agriculture and the direction in which this industry is heading, the importance of agriculture, and particularly the approach of this minister and government with respect to addressing the various important issues that affect agriculture at this point in time.

Let me say at the outset that I have read the minister's opening remarks and I agree with him when he says that food and agriculture will be increasingly important in the 1980s. He also made reference to the fact that the opportunity and the objective to increase production by two thirds in Canada is clearly within our grasp. That challenge and the desire to meet it is something shared by all Canadians, particularly those within the agricultural industry.

We have looked at the minister's document, which has been distributed, entitled "Challenge for Growth: An Agri-food Strategy for Canada". It does contain some very lofty challenges and proposals. We have considered the potential of annual farm cash receipts growing to $35 billion in today's dollars by the year 2000 from the current level of $15 billion. The minister talks about the thousands of jobs, not only directly related to agriculture but, indeed, in relation to the processing, distribution and transportation of agricultural products, which can be created, and the importance of the agricultural industry to Canada's balance of payments position.

I think we all agree that we have the potential and clearly the desire, as well as the people who are engaged in this industry who can put their shoulders to the wheel to produce, providing we have the right climate the right set of fiscal and monetary policies and the kind of incentives and markets necessary to ensure a continuity of supply.

I agree with the minister when he stresses the importance of trade in agricultural products, and to the extent that the creation of this organization will assist in promoting agricultural trade, to the extent it will strengthen the welfare of the production segment of agriculture, to the extent that this organization can strengthen our penetration abroad, we are naturally encouraged and will support the concept. To the extent it will provide greater opportunities for our farmers and to the extent it will provide greater equity, strength, stability and a better return for our farmers, we will support the objective.

We know at this particular time that the outlook for the agricultural industry is not very promising. Commodity prices have levelled off, in fact have decreased, while input costs are continuing to rise. We note that in the recent reviews of the agricultural industry it is predicted that net agricultural farm incomes will fall by 15 per cent in the next year. That is not a very healthy prospect. I note that the minister does not argue with that figure. I am sure and know he is concerned about this, but one has to change the agricultural policy in relation to that backdrop.

Many question the need for the creation of another Crown corporation, particularly when we already have a myriad of Crown corporations, government agencies and departments. If any criticism can be levelled at the export of agricultural products, it is the fact that they have not utilized these various agencies in an effective and co-ordinated fashion. Many Canadian farmers are becoming increasingly concerned about the creation of Crown corporations, government boards, task forces and advisory boards in order to create vacancies which can be filled by political appointments.

● (1220)

In last week's edition of Agriweek, notice was given to the effect that provincial marketing directors criticized the creation of Canagrex. They claimed that the food export agency will duplicate what private firms and federal departments are already doing. A critique said that the agency is bitterly opposed by many private exporters and not supported by most Canadians. I am not sure whether the case has been made for the need. Certainly we are not arguing about the desired objective with respect to agricultural exporting, but we should seriously question whether the mechanisms are in place now and whether we lack leadership and co-ordination.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has voiced some fears about the creation of this Crown corporation. It has commenced a campaign extolling the virtues of the work the department has done and is able to do to facilitate the export of food and agricultural products. While the objectives may be lofty and desirable, we really wonder whether the creation of another bureaucratic monster will serve the ultimate purpose for which it is intended.

A very distinguished Canadian who has spent his lifetime in agriculture had something to say about the continual encroachment of government within the production, marketing, distribution and transportation of agricultural products. I suppose these comments could apply to all industry in Canada, but Mr. Mac Runciman who led the United Grain Growers for many years spoke bluntly and openly. He suggested that the continual encroachment upon the lives of farmers, and indeed upon the lives of all people in the agricultural industry, will have grave and serious consequences with regard to their economic freedom in the future. He has signalled a warning which I think we should all heed.

The government seems committed to downplaying the worth and need of the private sector. I detected in the minister's remarks that in many respects the government is giving up on the private sector and that its major thrust is directed toward centralized government control. This was clearly evident in the opening remarks of the minister when he said, as reported on page 14288 of Hansard:

> —I am convinced we will not be able to open up the necessary markets for food which Canada is ideally situated to supply unless we have a Crown corporation such as Canagrex to represent Canada in the world marketplace.

This statement is somewhat strong. He is really saying that we have been an absolute failure in the past and that without this bureaucratic monster we will never be able to achieve our place in the sun. I think that statement can be challenged, particularly when one looks at the remarks to which I referred wherein provincial marketing directors take issue with this corporation and make reference to the fact that many private exporters are bitterly opposed to it. This is a clear indication that they will be very seriously and directly affected by the role of the organization in the export of agricultural products.

We almost heard the same when the government brought in the bill to establish Petro-Canada. Members of the government said that we could never achieve oil self-sufficiency in Canada without Petro-Canada. This creature has cost Canadians approximately $4 billion, and today we are more reliant upon imported oil than we were last year. Last year we were more reliant upon imported oil than we were the year before, and next year we will be even more reliant. Now we find that Petro-Canada is increasing its imports by 25,000 barrels per day and paying $41 Canadian per barrel when it could purchase oil from Alberta for $23.50.

Mr. Epp: But it is Alberta oil.

Mr. Mazankowski: I suppose that has something to do with it, but probably it has something to do with mismanagement of a bureacratic monster. Petro-Canada has not acquired one additional barrel of oil which we would not have otherwise had. What is Petro-Canada doing? I checked with representatives of the corporation yesterday and asked about their international operations. They said: "We are looking at feasibility studies to become engaged in international operations". I asked: "What countries?" They said; "We cannot tell you". I said: "Is it Tanzania?" They said: "Yes". I asked: "Is it Senegal?" They said: "Yes". I said; "What other countries?" They replied: "Countries such as Kenya, Jamaica, Bangladesh, Pakistan and many others".

Mr. Epp: What about Canada?

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, what about Canada? The Crown corporation was established to be the answer to Canada's energy needs—self-sufficiency, reasonable prices, security of supply, ensuring that everything would be run in a smooth fashion. What do we have? The National Energy Program, Petro-Canada and the government's economic policy have resulted in the destruction of one of the most dynamic growth sectors of the oil industry in the history of the country, and that is the drilling and servicing industry. We are all aware of the rigs which were forced to move to the United States, as well as the exodus of capital, men, equipment, machines and expertise. What benefit has this massive federal government intervention provided? It has caused dislocation of Canadian workers. It is interesting to note that this sector of the oil industry is almost totally Canadian-owned. Canadian workers have been driven south of the border, 235 rigs are now drilling in the United States and over 100 service rigs are now operating there. Certainly it has caused disruption and dislocation. Families have been uprooted and, most of all, investor confidence in the country has been destroyed and megaprojects delayed. Alsands is now delayed further, two companies have now pulled out and perhaps another one will do so in the not too distant future. It has had a negative ripple effect upon businesses associated with and dependent upon the oil industry. It has caused fuel prices to rise beyond reason and created a massive government rip-off, resulting in fuel prices being the major component of the massive increase in the cost of farm inputs, about which I will have more to say later.

Let us look at the government policy paper entitled, "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s". Its major pivot is the concept of massive government intervention. Obviously the major thrust of the document is to de-emphasize incentives to the private sector, de-emphasize profits, and de-emphasize the worth and necessity of the private sector. These are substituted by the philosophy of massive revenue grab; in other words, more revenue in the form of taxation flowing into the central coffers of the federal government, so that it can increase regulations and provide selective grants and subsidies to industries located in certain areas. All of these programs and gimmicks will be authored by the government and administered by the bureaucrats.

If we look at the $350 million three-year program that has been announced, we see that this money will be spent on designated industries, such as auto parts and others. That is a clear example of what is going to happen. There is the creation of more government task forces, advisory boards, councils and Crown corporations. We are going to have a massive proliferation of governmental, bureaucratic mechanisms that will not all be centred in Ottawa; that is the difference. They will be situated throughout the whole country.

By looking at that document I can see at least six new little government bodies that will be created. For instance, the industrial opportunities program, the office of industrial and regional benefits, the Canadian industrial renewal board which will comprise 16 members and the export trade development board. We have trade and export development boards, but here we are creating another one. The Canadian industrial renewal board has 16 members. They are to look at a program to adjust the textile industry. There is only one person appointed to that board who has any experience in the textile industry.

Canagrex will have 11 directors and a support staff. We do not know how many salesmen will be hired. We really do not know what its sales strategy will be. It will be very interesting to know that. There is mention of a national trading corporation. A committee toured the country. This committee heard many people's views. The majority report of that committee recommended the establishment of a national trading corporation. How many trading corporations do we need in this country?

An hon. Member: None.

Mr. Pepin: One good one.

Mr. Mazankowski: I hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) say one good one. Perhaps he has the right answer; that is a very thoughtful interjection. I said earlier that if there is a problem, as I see it, it is a lack of co-ordination and leadership. We have many bodies and mechanisms which can be harnessed to do this job. But there has been a sad lack of co-ordination and leadership.

The Canagrex organization will have a committee of 26 members. It will be filled by loyal Grits. I do not know how many people will be selected from western Canada because the Liberals have some difficulty out there. But if they cannot find one, they will buy one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: This whole approach seems to be aimed at nothing more than a massive bureaucracy-building program to reward friends of the Liberal Party of Canada, to create more obstacles, more interference and more frustration. What is disappointing, if you stop and think about it, is that for more than a decade now government intervention has been increasing in the production and marketing sectors of the Canadian economy. It has been increasing in the name of equity and in the name of efficiency, but without any noticeable success. The direction which this government has taken has not helped things, it has made things worse. We are heading further and further in the wrong direction.

What troubles many Canadians is the fact that the government will be deciding who will be the winners and who will be the losers. If you are in an industry friendly with the government and situated in an area which is friends with the government, you might be all right. But if you are not, it is just tough luck.

I submit that this approach will clearly suppress the spirit of creativity. It will suppress innovation and will damage productivity. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this philosophy is a recipe for further economic stagnation. It will discourage initiative. It will penalize thrift and it will smother the entrepreneurial spirit of Canadians, which is still alive and well but requires a hospitable environment within which it can function.

My submission to you, Sir, is that the route that we are on will clearly accelerate the demise of the private sector in this country, the major engine and thrust of job-creation activity in this country, particularly the small enterprisers. I am told studies reveal that in North America more than two thirds of all jobs created over the last ten years have been created by small business. It is also interesting to note that 80 per cent of those jobs have been created by small businesses that have been in business for less than five years.

This budget and this approach is killing the incentive for new business and for new small business to start up.

Mr. Fennell: They are all starting up in the United States, not here.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is happening is that we are replacing the private enterprise economy with a controlled economy which will be steered by an army of bureaucrats and political manipulators.

It was interesting to note that Mr. Blakeney and the new socialist Premier of Manitoba liked the document very much because it conforms to their belief that the more government intervention the better, the more control the better. It really is a product of a government that has some very deep socialistic convictions.

It is within this context that we do have some very legitimate concerns about this piece of legislation. It provides for a number of things that we will have to examine very closely when we get into committee. It raises the point of who will be in and who will be out, who will be a winner and who will be a loser.

If you take a look at the food sector in the communist countries and their centrally controlled economies, their dictates are run by the bureaucracy in the capital cities of their countries. But that system does not work. There is only one country that produces more food than it consumes domestically, and that is Hungary because it has moved away from that centrally controlled approach. Hungary seems to be attempting to move away from a centrally controlled thrust, but Canada is moving toward it.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has travelled a great deal. I am sure he has seen what has happened in those countries. But he must be on the same road as these socialistic tendencies that are not working in other countries, and I find that very sad.

Mr. Whelan: It is wrong.

Mr. Mazankowski: He says it is very wrong. But look at the powers. Look at the bill.

Mr. Wilson: Tighten up the powers.

Mr. Mazankowski: The bill permits Canagrex to make contracts, enter into joint ventures, provide grants and contributions, give loans, make loan guarantees, charge for services; also to hold property, purchase, package, process, store, insure, import and export agricultural products.

The bill in Clause 14(c) allows Canagrex to enter into contracts with Canadian individuals, with firms and marketing boards. It permits Canagrex again to enter into joint ventures. Here is the clincher. With respect to grants and contributions, the bill states again in Clause 14:

—subject to conditions of general application prescribed by the governor in council—

In other words, grants and contributions will be provided at the political whim of the cabinet. That is how grants and contributions will be handed out. Canagrex will be able to buy and lease property, warehouses and containers. We had a briefing yesterday. The minister's officials were very keen on building warehouses under joint ventures in Third World countries. That is certainly very interesting.

Now we come to loans and guarantees. Here again, subject to conditions of general application Canagrex will make loans and guarantees. Here is another one. This bill gives the governor in council directive powers over Canagrex and will ensure that the operations of Canagrex will be consistent with Canada's over-all trade and foreign policy objectives. My God, here again is a very fundamental point: Canagrex can be directed specifically at the political whim of the cabinet. Given this government's foreign policy, and especially with the attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) toward Poland, you really wonder just where that might lead us.

There are some serious questions, Mr. Speaker, about this particular piece of legislation. Rather than standing alone, it has to be viewed in the context of the government's over-all approach to manipulating and managing the economy. There is no question that we need to export more. Agriculture accounts for, I believe, roughly 13 per cent of our total exports.

However, we also need to import less, particularly in the area of fruit and vegetables. It is inexcusable that we spend as much on imported food as we do, something like $5.8 billion or $6 billion, I believe. It has been suggested that we have the potential for producing probably $3 billion of that right here, and I would be much happier if the Minister of Agriculture came before this House with a program to encourage Canadian producers to produce more of that food right here in Canada.

Mr. Whelan: We have got it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, bring it on. It would strengthen the total agricultural sector and help our balance of payments situation.

Mr. Whelan: If trade was doing such a good job, why do we have to export—

Mr. Mazankowski: If it were not for the sale of grain and oilseed, our agricultural trade picture would be very dismal. As a matter of fact, it has been worsening since this minister came in.

Mr. Whelan: Not at all.

Mr. Mazankowski: Not at all? Well, facts and figures will bear me out.

Mr. Whelan: Horticultural products exports are up 32 per cent in two years.

Mr. Mazankowski: I have read many of the minister's speeches where he was crying about the fact that we were spending 25 cents of our food dollar on imported food, and it is probably up to 30 cents now. That is really a sad commentary on a country like Canada which has such a tremendous and significant agricultural potential. I reiterate that we need to export more, yes, but we also have to address this situation by importing less. To the extent this bill helps in that regard, I would certainly support it; but I must tell you, Sir, in all sincerity, that I am not sold on the fact it will do that.

As I said, this bill will require full committee consideration. I mentioned the joint ventures and the potential of integrating them into the production sector. While it may not be intended, I submit they can be included. The minister has great faith in this corporation. He suggests it will be the major catalyst in establishing Canada as a major trading nation. I hope he is right. He says it will expand food production and processing. He said it will mean increased income for farmers. In short, he says it will be a major shot in the arm for the economy. Well, I hope that is true because, as I said earlier, this industry is in serious trouble.

This measure may help us in the long term, but I will have to withhold judgment on that until we have further committee study. If it does help, it will be simply in the long term. What we need is some short-term assistance.

I hate to repeat this again, Mr. Speaker, but it is true and the minister knows it; the budget was a cop-out. Farmers are hurting. They are caught in a squeeze of high interest rates, high inflation, high input costs and low commodity returns. We know farmers cannot pass on the effect of these increased costs to the consumer because a good portion of agricultural production is exported and we have to compete in international markets.

I have a letter that was sent to the minister from Peter Brown and family of Tofield. Now, the minister may not have seen it but I think it pretty well crystallizes the difficulties facing farmers in my riding. It reads as follows:

> Perhaps the government could investigate the feasibility of providing long term financing for farmers at a more reasonable rate than banks, who seem to care little for the fact that farmers are the backbone of this country and that our loans are more than secured by the land and sweat that goes into it.
> Surely the time has come to pay attention to the industry responsible for feeding this country but as time progresses we become more and more aware that government has put the agricultural industry on the back burner. Indeed farming in all its meaning has taken a back seat to urban development. Far too much prime land is being buried under a sea of concrete, a sea that can never be harvested again for anything productive.
> Year after year farmers lose money and as in any business how long can it continue to be a losing proposition before everyone bales out and if you have no farmers you have no sustenance.
> We think that Liberal government taxing policies create more and more jobs and positions for Liberals with high wages and benefits, adding new meaning to the old adage, "the rich get richer and the poor, poorer". Surely this has contributed to the poor and tarnished image of the Liberal Party.

This person recognizes what will happen with Canagrex. It will just mean more jobs for Liberals. He goes on:

> We would prefer no government intervention in the beef industry. The government's track record indicates that their meddling breeds disaster with cost and inefficiency hitting all time hazard levels.

Mr. Whelan: I would think this man is a Liberal. He wrote me a letter that he wanted to be appointed.

Mr. Mazankowski: He goes on:

> We fail to comprehend the Liberal views of high interest, high fuel costs, high fertilizer costs and high taxation and their apparent blindness to the chaos it is causing the average Canadian. These policies have brought the country to her knees. How can you expect us to believe that you fully comprehend a situation when it is obvious that politicians, in their salary range, have never had to worry about financial stability. If they don't know how we live how do they hope to understand and correct it?
> Agriculture is a prime industry in this country and here is a farmer's view of 1981. Our beef prices dropped from $84 per hundredweight to $64 per hundred, our grain prices have varied little in almost ten years, our expenses have changed dramatically. Fuel used to cost us $400 to $500 to fill our tanks, now the same tanks cost $1600 to $2000 to fill. Our fertilizer and spray bills are now close to $25,000 to $30,000 or more in some cases. Our land taxes have doubled, repairs on machinery or the cost of replacing machinery will soon put us in the poor house. New tractors used to cost $8,000 to $12,000, now it is common to have to pay $40,000 to $120,000. Interest at the bank for operating costs have risen from 8 per cent or 10 per cent to 17 per cent and 23 per cent.

He then goes on to the Minister of Agriculture's questionnaire where he says:

> In your questionnaire you ask if we'd like reduced imports of beef and beef animals and we answer that with a firm no, but when you consider that beef is imported from Australia, New Zealand and Argentina at very reduced prices compared to ours, how can we compete. Their beef is raised primarily on cheap grass with cheaper labour and when our beef is forced to compete with theirs it is chaotic and unfair. This must be changed. The farmer of Canada must receive at least as much consideration as a foreigner.

Agriculture is my life, the life and breath of my family, it is our passion. If you eat you should be concerned about our future, because our future determines the very existence of yours.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that really summarizes the plight of the agricultural industry.

Mr. Whelan: A lot of inaccuracies, too.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, the minister says there are many inaccuracies. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) says there are many inaccuracies. However, he has not proven that his position is correct. The minister suggests there are many inaccuracies; I say prove it. The fact of the matter is that farmers are not accustomed to writing letters. They write only when they are in difficult circumstances and dire straits.

You and I know, Mr. Speaker, what has happened to grain prices over the last year. I just picked out one grain and oilseed price. On January 19, 1981, export wheat was $270 per ton. In December it went down to $218 per ton.

Mr. Evans: That is the government's fault?

Mr. Mazankowski: No, I simply point that out. I am not suggesting it is the government's fault. The government has some control over input costs; it does not have control over the international marketplace. But I will get to some specifics and offer some suggestions, if the parliamentary secretary will simply wait.

• (1250)

I am simply trying to put this matter into perspective. Barley sold for $187 a ton in January of 1981, and $120 a ton in December. I could go on. The same thing is true with pork prices.

While we are discussing the beef industry, a beef producer in my riding has been losing an average of $80 per head on the raising and feeding of his animals. He lost $80 per head in 1981, with a loss of about $67 per head in 1980. In 1969 he showed a profit of about $68 per head. It is very difficult for producers to face those types of consequences.

We know there are bankruptcies. There have been over 260 registered bankruptcies. The formula is that for every one who goes bankrupt, there are probably ten who voluntarily liquidate or go out of business.

This budget has been a complete cop-out as far as agriculture is concerned. The government has gutted the Small Business Development Bond. It is of absolutely no value to the small businessman and the farmer. I do not know of one individual who has applied for a Small Business Development Bond who is not in dire straits, who is not in financial difficulty. If the government cannot make it effective, it should withdraw the darn thing, because it has raised false expectations. It is a measure which this party, when we were in government, brought in to provide some relief to the farmers and the small business sector of this country.

Capital cost allowance is another concern. It is rather ironic, and I am saddened by the fact, that the Minister of Agriculture allowed a measure like that to go through, because the capital cost allowance has a direct reflection upon the industrial heartland of Ontario, the automobile and machinery manufacturing industry. Walter Tilden, the president of Tilden Rent-A-Car Co., says that it will cost some 40,000 car sales in the car rental companies.

This government has not provided any assistance for the farmer. It has pulled out any modicum of relief which was contained in the last budget. As suggested by my colleague, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), the Farm Credit Corporation is simply an illusion of action. There is no immediate relief contained in that measure.

Mr. Whelan: Don't you want the private sector?

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, we do. The farmers—

Mr. Whelan: They have certainly looked after the banks.

Mr. Mazankowski: The farmers need help now.

Mr. Epp: Which government controls the banks?

Mr. Whelan: Pardon?

Mr. Epp: Which government controls the banks?

Mr. Whelan: They loaned the money, and they loaned it in a phoney way.

Mr. Mazankowski: This minister talks about the high interest rates of the banks. What about the Farm Credit Corporation? Its rate is around 16.75 per cent, which is pretty high. Why does the minister not bring it down to a reasonable and tolerable level? The minister has some control over it.

Mr. Whelan: Six per cent below the regular lending rate.

Mr. Mazankowski: Fine. But that is still too high for the farmers who are in need.

Mr. Whelan: You want government intervention.

Mr. Mazankowski: I want to bring in the Small Business Development Bond.

Mr. Whelan: You want government intervention.

Mr. Mazankowski: I want the government to bring in the Small Business Development Bond to help the farmers.

Mr. Whelan: That is the job of the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Mazankowski: The government set the interest rate. The herd maintenance assistance program is another program which raised false expectations. The Small Business Development Bond would provide the kind of relief which is necessary to bring farmers out of their current financial difficulties. Three hundred and fifty million dollars is being allocated for industries in certain selected areas. What is wrong with the agricultural industry?

Mr. Whelan: It is healthy.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister has no clout in the cabinet.

Mr. Epp: It's healthy?

Mr. Fennell: He is a pussycat in cabinet.

Mr. Mazankowski: A pussycat in cabinet, that is right. The minister could do something, if he had any clout and if he were concerned about the agriculture industry, but he is almost talking the same line as the Minister of Finance.

Fuel prices to the farmer have risen by 41.8 per cent from 1980 to 1981, and 21.6 per cent—

Mr. Evans: How much did they rise to everyone else?

Mr. Mazankowski: Oh, that buffoon over there says that ours would have been more. We provided relief for the farmers.

Mr. Evans: I said: "How much did you provide for everyone else?"

Mr. Mazankowski: We provided relief to the farmers. We provided an energy tax credit to the home owners. During the last two years, fuel prices have increased by 63 per cent.

Mr. Nielsen: Economic Vietnam!

Mr. Mazankowski: The bulk of that is in the form of federal government tax of about 57 cents. If the minister wants to bring some relief to the producers of Canada, he can petition the Minister of Finance to reduce the level of that federal government tax, which is nothing more than a massive rip-off at the expense of the producers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I can call it one o'clock.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Wilson: No, five minutes!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): I am prepared to speak, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the hon. member who previously spoke, I wish to state that our party supports this bill.

Mr. Huntington: Of course! You are socialists!

Mr. Ittinuar: I am glad you noticed!

Mr. de Jong: It is indeed ironic—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Regina East has the floor.

Mr. de Jong: Indeed it is ironic, Mr. Speaker, that the members of the Conservative Party, on the one hand, ask for increased government assistance and involvement in the field of agriculture, yet, on the other hand, when things do not work out, they always blame the government. In part, I agree with them when they blame things on this particular government. If anything, what the Liberal Party does is to give government a bad name.

I appreciate some of the concerns of my colleagues in the House. However, it is irresponsible for them to draw the conclusion that there is no role for a public body in the field of agriculture in this country. I think it is very naive for them to suggest that the free enterprise system alone will ensure that sufficient food is on the table of the Canadian consumer at a proper price and that Canadian farmers will be able to get a decent return for their labour and investment. There must be some government involvement.

I do not know of one country in the world, including the United States, which does not have active government involvement in its agricultural sector. Agriculture is simply too important to be placed in the hands of increasingly fewer and larger corporations. Indeed, over the past number of years we have seen this trend toward fewer farms and larger corporations, such as food producers and distributors. It is a trend which we in this party quite honestly view with great alarm. Any country, including our own, puts itself in a bad position if it allows a small group of multinational corporations to form a monopoly over such a necessity as food, so that it can control payments to farmers and the price to consumers.

A cliché, but one which bears repeating, is that this country is a truly gifted nation. We have the gifts and the resources which God has given us, such as vast tracts of land, very fertile fields and a very experienced farming population. Our farmers have a desire to produce good food at reasonable prices. Surely these are things we have going for us. Yet as, I will mention in my continuing remarks—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When the House rose at one o'clock, the hon. member for Regina East had the floor.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, before the luncheon adjournment I was discussing the role that governments can and should play in the agricultural sector, something my Conservative friends to my right at times have difficulty accepting. Agriculture in this country has always been a mix of public, private and co-operative involvement.

In my part of the country, the Regina plains, there has always been an important role for co-operation, from the early days when settlers came and helped each other build their farms to the present day of marketing their produce through the largest producer co-op in the world, the wheat pool.

The government has always played an important role. It helped settlers establish themselves on the prairies, guaranteeing transportation and marketing systems, all the way through to developing better strains of wheat and other crops. Of course, there is the private initiative of the farmers, taking the risks, adapting different crops to varying soil conditions and so forth. In short, the individual farmer makes the types of individual decisions that no large organization, whether it be a large, central state-planning bureau or the boardroom of a multinational firm, can ever make.

For my Conservative friends to suggest, as they often seem to do, that we can get along without the involvement of the public sector is sheer madness. Surely we cannot do without public support and involvement, orderly marketing, co-operative and collective action by our farmers. To suggest that we can is foolishness and madness.

The whole trend towards privatization and what I feel is overplaying the importance of the private sector was driven home to me last week when I had the opportunity of looking at the American space program. In the present atmosphere in Washington, there is a strong desire to have the data collected from the remote-sensing satellites turned over to the private sector. The data available from the pictures taken by the satellites tells what crop conditions will be like, the maturing process of the crops and how much crop can be expected at harvest time. For this type of information to be turned over to the private sector for its exclusive use is a frightening indication that the public sector is no longer considered to be important. I am sure an outfit like Cargill Corporation woulds love to have monopoly control over such data so that it can corner and control the commodity market. This I mention as an indication of the inappropriateness of having the entire agricultural sector turned over to private industry.

In my view, Bill C-85 is a way for government to make an important contribution in supporting our agricultural community. Of course, it has to be done in a co-operative manner. For the government to set something up and attempt to jam it down the throats of individual farmers is unacceptable to those in this party, as it would be unacceptable to members of the Conservative party and the farmers of this country. The key, of course, is co-operation. We need co-operation between the public sector, the private sector and the operators, in mutual assistance with each other. Whatever role the three sectors play, only through co-operation with each other can agriculture remain a healthy industry in our economy. Only through that co-operation can our farmers be assured that what they produce will be sold at decent prices.

There are a number of fears which we have about this bill. One of those fears has to do with the composition of the board. I suggest to the government that this co-operative principle is essential if this new organization which will be created by Bill C-85 is to flourish and do the proper job for which it was envisioned. Canagrex must co-operate with the farmers, those growing the crops, along with the workers in the industry. Therefore, we suggest strongly that the producers, farmers and workers should have an input as to who sits on the board.

We are concerned about the fact that the budget for Canagrex is only $12.3 million and not the $60 million which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) earlier promised. Is this an indication that what is really before us is a window-dressing attempt by the government to make it appear that it is actively trying to export our farm produce? Is a budget of $12.3 million adequate for this new corporation to do its job properly? These are some of our doubts. In time, I am sure that the track record of this new corporation will show whether it is just window dressing or whether it is the real intention of the government to become active in this area.

We are also concerned about the capabilities of Canagrex. We believe that Canagrex should become a promotional body and a source of specialized information about the trading of agricultural products. In this way it can be of assistance to the farmers. All too often, farmers cannot wade through the various regulations, departments and agencies which exist. If Canagrex is able to offer these various services to farmers in a simplified manner, it will be performing a useful function.

Another disturbing factor about government involvement in programs such as these is the fact that time and again public money is used to develop new markets or new products, and when profits are finally realized the government turns around and offers them to the private sector. Very often this is the larger component of the private sector. If Canagrex becomes profitable in the future, we suggest that those profits be returned to the farmers and not turned over to some multinational corporation. This is something which we will be watching very closely in the years to come. If Canagrex in fact turns out to be a handmaiden for the large food distributors in the agri-business that has been created, the government will hear more criticism from us about Canagrex.

It is our hope that Canagrex will provide service and assistance to farmers for their benefit. At this point I would like to point out the importance of developing new markets within Canada. Other members have mentioned the eroding state of food self-sufficiency in which Canada finds itself. Indeed, we are importing more produce every year. For example, in 1970, 83 per cent of all the vegetables consumed in Canada were produced here. By 1977 it had dropped to 74 per cent. That is a decline of 9 per cent.

This same fact is true for fruit. In the period 1967 to 1971, 32 per cent of the fruit consumed in Canada was grown here. In 1977, that had dropped to 24 per cent. An example of this is canned peaches. Only 18 per cent of the canned peaches which are consumed in Canada are produced here. I think that the ideal of Canadian self-sufficiency in food is important. It is an ideal that I hope Canagrex will address itself to.

I would like to expand further on the subject of imports. Up to the end of October, 1981, we imported approximately $77 million worth of fresh tomatoes as well as $43 million in tomato products. This represents a very big loss in foreign exchange to our country as well as a loss of many jobs.

The same is true for many other products. As of the end of October, 1981, we imported $42 million worth of potatoes, $2.6 million worth of frozen broccoli, $21 million worth of onions and $9.5 million worth of green onions. We had a surplus of onions last year in Canada yet we imported $9.5 million worth of them. We imported $14 million in carrots, $23 million in green peppers, $12.5 million in cauliflower. The list goes on, Mr. Speaker.

The government should be encouraging the Canadian consumer to purchase frozen vegetables which were grown in Canada. The Department of Agriculture should be involved in consumer education, perhaps through displaying special labels and posters. DREE, or whatever the program is now, should be working with the Department of Agriculture in the establishment of processing plants in Canada. The Department of Agriculture should be twisting the arms of the food chains to promote the sale of Canadian produce.

In Moose Jaw, not far from my riding, there is a very successful little greenhouse. It started out by employing people who were on social assistance. In its own little way, it has been able to provide employment for these 12 people who were previously on social assistance. They made use of their waste heaps. It has helped to make the city of Moose Jaw and the surrounding area self-sufficient in food. This greenhouse is an example of the great possibilities which exist for Canadian agriculture. I would encourage the government to consider further research and development in this area so that the fresh produce which we need can be grown in Canada.

As a result of new discoveries from investment in research and technology, many more of these greenhouses could be established in rural areas to enable self-sufficiency in green produce, even during winter. The trap that agriculture in Canada is now in—although it is a cliché—is that producers' costs of fuel, fertilizer, land, machinery and the cost of borrowing money are going up while the return on their investment and labour is reversing. As a result of these increased costs, the farmers' actual return on their investment has declined during the last number of years. The small producers in particular are being squeezed out. We are becoming more dependent on the large multinationals and foreign producers and farmers.

We must explore new directions for self-sufficiency in food if we are to cease being totally hooked into the international agricultural network which makes us dependent on those over whom we have no control.

It is my hope that this corporation which we are helping to establish today will play a role in exploring new ways to grow agricultural products in Canada. I hope Canagrex will play a role in making Canada self-sufficient in the food products we need for Canadians to survive.

At some stage we truly must begin to see how absurd our situation is. For example, we are buying tomatoes which are grown in Mexico and shipped up to Canada in huge semi-transports. They are then stored in huge warehouses with large cooler and freezer compartments. They are sold in huge supermarkets on some of the most expensive real estate that exists. It is a wasteful way of getting tomatoes on our table. It is not energy efficient. It is not capital efficient, and it does not provide employment to Canadian producers.

Surely the capital which is now put into buying that semi-trailer and buying huge warehouses and huge shopping centres, if redirected to such operations as local greenhouses, could provide employment for Canadians and make us more energy and food self-sufficient. I suggest it would also produce more nutritious food. That is a new direction which must be explored.

I hope the government, and particularly Canagrex, can play an important role in developing this alternative system of agriculture, turn away from huge multinationals and from highly capital intensive forms of agriculture and toward a form of agriculture which is based on local conditions and needs. Such a form of agriculture would not be so energy and capital intensive and would produce the food that is immediately needed in and about communities. Such a system, as I mentioned before, could make small towns in Saskatchewan self-sufficient in produce during the winter.

I and other members of my party will say more about this line of thinking in various other debates to come. On the whole, we welcome the legislation before us. We hope it will do what it is hoped it will do. We will, however, be paying attention to make certain it will indeed be of benefit to the farmers and consumers of Canada and not just to some multinational corporation.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased I am able to speak in the debate on this bill brought forward by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I have been reading about this in his speeches for about a year and a half now. The minister was even so kind as to come to the great constituency of Wetaskiwin and tell the good people there about some of his plans. I think he even mentioned Canagrex there.

Mr. Whelan: I missed you. You didn't show up.

Mr. Schellenberger: I thought I would leave the good citizens of Wetaskiwin to deal with the minister in such a way as not to need my help.

The speaker who just sat down mentioned that it is sheer madness—I think that is the term he used—to turn over much of the marketing and other operations which are now run by government to the private sector. I think many farmers on the prairies would question that term. They also would question whether we should be heading in the direction we are now with much of the legislation being proposed and some of the propositions the Minister of Agriculture is constantly making as a solution. I refer to supply management marketing boards, Canagrex and so forth which the minister thinks are solutions to farm problems. These methods are not dealing adequately with the very serious problems farmers and small businesses are facing today. They are not a panacea. We are saying to farmers, "Boy, are we ever acting here in the House of Commons to solve your problems"; but their problems are more economic than anything else, and they need some real help.

What we are talking about here today is a philosophy. Farmers have been traders for centuries. They have traded the produce they have grown on the land for other items they have needed. However, as they became more efficient, they found they could grow more than they could trade and, as a result, we have had to send envoys into other parts of the world to try to move their produce. Today farmers, particularly in this nation, are again attempting to trade their produce for some of the things they need. This is being done because of high costs. Farmers trade grain or concentrate. They trade beef for electrical work and so forth. Part of the reason for this is the tax system under which they are living. However, external trade becomes a very important factor when we take into account the capacity and the capability of the farms of this nation.

Farmers have two options. They can simply produce for the Canadian market or produce more than the market of this nation needs and get into export markets. For as long as I have known this minister, he has felt that because much of our export trade is failing, supply management marketing boards are what are needed. The minister goes to Alberta and the prairies and talks about the beef industry being in difficulty, and his solution is control of the market. But he always forgets to talk about protein substitution. It is very easy to control the supply of milk because there is no substitute for it. It is easy to control the production of eggs. People like eggs in the morning, and there is no substitute. When it comes to protein, if we control the supply of beef in an attempt to increase the price, the consumer will buy pork. If we control the supply of pork, the consumer might buy poultry, which is already controlled. There is also fish. In addition, we are now capable of producing protein from soybeans and other plants of that nature. That is another substitute, and many people in restaurants cannot tell the difference. The solution offered by the minister to the difficulties our red meat industry on the prairies is facing is much too simplistic, and producers on the prairies ought to be questioning the minister about this type of solution.

The other and more interesting solution, as far as the farmers of western and eastern Canada are concerned, is the export solution. Farmers are accustomed to using technology and their own initiative and abilities to produce more and more off the land year after year, and they want us and both private and public corporations to go out into the world markets where people are hungry and sell their produce—at a profit, wherever possible. I have said before that as our world population increases by 1.8 per cent per year, some 80 million people, there is a growing need for food. There are markets for what we can produce, and there are very few nations in the world which have the capacity to produce more than their own needs.

Agricultural exports have proved to be very good for Canada. Some 40 per cent of our farm cash receipts come from exports. That is one of the highest ratios in the world, and this industry needs encouragement. We in the cereal production areas of Canada find that we have the capacity to produce a tremendous crop, but we have not the rail capacity or the necessary capacity at ports to satisfy the demand there is in the world. In 1980 we exported $4.9 billion worth of grain, and the value of our total agricultural produce exported was $7.8 billion. That represented some 10 per cent of our total exports, our second largest single export. We exported some 120 million pounds of dressed beef—mainly to the United States—and $140 million worth of live cattle. We exported some 282 million pounds of pork to the United States and Japan. I could go on and tell of the many crops and livestock we are presently exporting. We need to expand the markets we have. The minister says that is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. Whelan: But at a fair price, Stan.

Mr. Schellenberger: At a fair price, and there are many countries which can afford to pay more, and would, if we had co-operation between exporting nations.

As hon. members who have spoken before me have said, we also have a food trade deficit. If we discount our grain sales we have a very large trade deficit. Members here are saying to the Minister of Agriculture that there is room for improvement in that picture. Members have described the possibility of expanding our greenhouse operations and our frozen food capacity. We have a capacity in this nation that is unbelievable because of our cold climate, in that there is a lot of waste heat being blown off into the cold air which does not even help to warm up this country. If you had lived in Alberta for the past four weeks you would hope that we had some capacity to use this waste because it has been 40 degrees below.

● (1430)

We need the direction and the encouragement of this government because of the cost factors involved in researching the ability to use waste heat from nuclear power plants, coal-generated electrical plants and pumps which move natural gas and oil across this country. There is a tremendous capacity there and it is also a very labour intensive industry. If we were putting some of the funds we are proposing for this purpose into that sort of thing, we might in the long run find this more beneficial to the nation.

This brings me to the Canagrex budget. The minister wanted to create a large corporation. He was asking for some $60 million and a staff of 175. What he got was $4.1 million and a staff of 12.

Mr. Mazankowski: He lost another battle in cabinet.

Mr. Schellenberger: Is this small amount of money to be used in setting up Canagrex going to be well spent? The director will probably need two or three secretaries and he will only have a staff of 12. If we consider the 115 world trading missions we have, we will find that in those missions we only have ten agricultural specialists, and we only have one in the Third World where a quarter of our food and grain exports are presently going.

Mr. Whelan: We do not have one in Russia yet and that is our biggest buyer.

Mr. Schellenberger: The world trade missions Canada had around the world in the 1950s and 1960s were the envy of the world. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) is in his seat and I would ask him what has happened to this envy of the world we enjoyed in the 1950s.

Mr. MacGuigan: It is still there.

Mr. Schellenberger: No, it is not, and part of the reason is that the Department of External Affairs has been reorganized and reorganized and we do not have specialists in trade missions around the world with the capacity to sell the produce of this nation.

Mr. MacGuigan: Indeed we do, and we are selling more.

Mr. Schellenberger: The Secretary of State for External Affairs should be asking the Minister of Agriculture to give up this budget of $4 million in order to place some agricultural specialists in those trade missions with the capacity to sell our products. Then that money might be better spent. That is the way to spend money in a manner which will help the farmers of this nation.

Mr. Whelan: That is not what the United States is doing.

Mr. Mazankowski: You do not follow the States in other policies; why are you suggesting it here?

Mr. Whelan: They followed us on this one. We suggested this one and Bergland put it into practice.

Mr. Schellenberger: The Minister of Agriculture constantly makes speeches, even though he does not rise in his place to defend his department as often as he ought to.

If we look around the world at many of our competitors, we see that they are moving more and more to the use of private export traders in attempting to sell the surplus products their farmers are producing. The same is the case in Australia, which used automatically to purchase all its grain through the Autralian Wheat Board. They are now putting into place commission sellers, and if you look at their record you will find they are taking over more and more of what used to be the traditional Canadian market for export sales.

I think we ought to look at this very seriously in committee. We are setting aside only this amount of money to set up a corporation which will attempt to sell the surplus products of this nation. Perhaps we would be far better off to put that money into the better operation of our trade missions around the world with more expertise to in fact sell our products.

I believe the Minister of Agriculture is losing his grip.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Come on over here.

Mr. Schellenberger: It is not just from age either, Mr. Speaker. He wants to have control of the export markets, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has set up this new triumvirate or troika under the control of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister for international trade has been given some responsibility, and I think also the minister for external relations, although none of us really knows what his responsibility involves, is within this triumvirate. I wonder just how long the Minister of Agriculture can hold on to Canagrex before the minister for international trade states that it should really be under his control. Many of us in this House would possibly recommend that, because if he had responsibility for international trading around the world, perhaps he should also have control of whoever Canagrex will be able to hire with its small budget.

I have a little article by Richard Gibbons from The Manitoba Co-operator which states in part:

> —with a lean budget, Canagrex will be forced to use existing government personnel both in Canada and abroad whenever possible to promote Canadian farm goods.

It is becoming obvious already that it will be impossible to set up any decent kind of trading corporation with this size of budget. All the minister is really doing is setting up a corporation that will be reaching into the department of international trade for personnel. It would make more sense, to repeat myself, to hire personnel directly under the auspices of the minister for international trade in the agriculture field and place them in those nations where we have the greatest potential for export markets. It would make a lot more sense to spend that money in that manner.

The article continues by stating that the minister's job will be:

> —to shake up external affairs to ensure Canadian embassies and diplomatic personnel give top priority to seeking out possible new markets for Canadian goods in future. That's good news for Canadian farmers who are depending on new foreign markets to sell their agricultural produce.

It seems to me if that is the case perhaps we will have a conflict of interest here. The Minister of Agriculture wants his little trading group under his auspices and control. The minister for international trade will have a little group under his control. Perhaps he will lend a few people to the Minister of Agriculture. If we consider the Department of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, (Mr. Gray) we might find there are people in that area who are running around the world attempting to sell some of our products. Perhaps there is a need, as this gentleman mentions in his article, to put this all under one minister and give him a decent budget so he can get out and do the job, rather than creating a new Crown corporation which is to be controlled by different ministers.

We have a need to promote Canadian agricultural knowledge, expertise and food production. If we send the proper people into the markets of the world, many more markets could probably be found for various Canadian products than is presently the case. The department of agriculture of the United States sent some experts to the Middle East who found there a tremendous potential market for food products, and by creating the proper industrial capacity for processing they were able to open up a tremendous market for the farmers. They provided loans in order that these countries could purchase these food products on a long-term basis.

Until we begin to follow the example of some countries in the world, as we did in the 1950s when we were leaders in finding new markets, we may find that once Canagrex is operating it will not be able to compete with those countries who are now doing the job properly and competing with us.

There are very many capable farm commodity groups and agricultural exporters in the nation which are operating under very restrictive budgets at the present time. For example, the Alberta pork marketing board has had some success under a very restrictive budget.

Mr. Whelan: A pork marketing board in Alberta?

Mr. Schellenberger: It is a true marketing board, not a supply management board. It has been able to obtain contracts with Japan for the sale of hogs. It has sent a representative to New Zealand who found a market for a shipload of pork. We have been importing substantial amounts of lamb from New Zealand for years, but there has been no quid pro quo in terms of Canadian products such as pork going into that market.

Mr. Whelan: We have always sold pork to New Zealand.

Mr. Schellenberger: If we funnelled some funds into the management of these boards that have experienced some success under the direction of our better private exporters, they could expand their operations and assist Canada's trade embassies around the world in finding additional markets for our products.

We ought to question very thoroughly the amount of funds which are being set aside under this bill, as to whether they can be better spent for the benefit of farmers. I am somewhat concerned when I read Clause 14, which sets out the various purposes and powers of Canada. They seem far more than what is necessary for a trading corporation. If Canagrex does not like the produce of farmers, under these regulations it could become involved in the business. For example, Saskatchewan now has 165,000 quarters in the land bank. If Canagrex felt that the products of farmers of that province could not be sold, under the bill presumably it could take over the land and farm it. Clause 14(1) provides that Canagrex may:

(a) purchase agricultural products and food products and package, process, store, ship, insure, import, export or sell or otherwise dispose of products purchased by it;

Under the philosophy that centrally controlled is best Canagrex could become competitive with private co-operatives, crushers, processors and packers. I do not know whether we as a government should allow it such latitude. The clause continues by providing that Canagrex may:

(g) purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold real and personal property for actual use by Canagrex in the operation and management of its business—

"Otherwise acquire" obviously means expropriate. Approximately 20 opportunities have been provided in the bill for Canagrex. They have included everything but the kitchen sink, so that the corporation can do almost anything if, in its wisdom, it feels it will better operate as an export agency. All parties should take a close look at the various latitudes being offered this corporation.

In conclusion, we require some long-term leadership in the direction of our agricultural industry. There are serious difficulties facing farmers in being able to balance their budgets at present. Farmers are required to produce more and their costs are rising faster then their receipts. If we do not have the leadership faster than their receipts. If we do not have the leadership we require in transportation, even if farmers are capable of producing they will not be able to ship their products to port. We are importing more and more food into Canada, but we have the capacity and research capability to produce most of it in the nation. We require leadership, but we are not obtaining it from the Minister of Agriculture or the government. I hope a viable industry will be in place when we take over and provide leadership in the next few years.

Farmers realize the need for export capacity. They know it is in their best interests to increase exports, but as has been the case over the last number of years, if we allow our capacity to decrease to only eight or nine representatives in the world, undoubtedly farm groups will say that we should give Canagrex a try. This is why the minister has been able to raise some support for the bill. We in this party will study this piece of legislation very thoroughly in committee and attempt to amend it where necessary.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address two particular aspects of Bill C-85 to establish a corporation called Canagrex, in particular, the role of Canagrex, its wide powers, its impact on the entire Canadian food producing industry and its relationship to consumers.

We in this party have never opposed Crown corporations just for the sake of opposing them. On many occasions in the past we have supported the incorporation of Crown corporations and in fact were instrumental in the creation of the Bank of Canada, the CBC, CNR and so on. It is essential that there be a very clear role for a Crown corporation before being subjected to the expense and potential disruption which can be caused by its creation.

Within that context I should like to look at the role of Canagrex, particularly in relation to existing export mechanisms and facilities. What can Canagrex do that the private sector is not doing or cannot do, if the correct policy environment is in place? Carrying it a step further, how can Canagrex complement and build upon the successful operations of the private sector in the export of food products at the present time?

I do not think there is any question in anyone's mind that Canada should export more Food. When we look at Canada with its vast geography and compare it with other countries in the world, we see that we should produce and export more food and back-out more imports. But the question we must ask ourselves is whether the creation of a Crown corporation like Canagrex is the correct way in which to address this problem, or whether there are better ways of doing it without the disruption of introducing a new and possibly very powerful entity that would be competitive with existing mechanisms.

● (1450)

I have to question whether the right way of building the export business in this country is through the supply management method of which the minister has been very much in support over the years, or whether we should not be looking at what a marketing board is. We should look at the words "marketing board" and ask ourselves whether we should be emphasizing the marketing element as opposed to the supply management element of a marketing board. In many instances we have seen that if industry has the capacity to produce the products at the other end, that markets will open up, not only within our own country but within other countries, provided the wherewithal and the incentives are there for them to expand.

Obviously, if the industry is capable and is encouraged to produce to a greater extent than is the case today, all Canadians will benefit—not just the producers, not just the exporters, but the consumers as well. We will be spreading those costs over a much broader volume of production and, therefore, lowering the cost of food to Canadian consumers.

But the minister has not justified the reasons for creating this new organization. The minister has said that there are deals being missed. I am sure there are deals being missed. Deals are always being missed. I think even the minister would have to say that Canagrex will miss a few deals even if it is the best organization in the world. Nevertheless, taking that into account, the minister has not made a case for stating that there is a significant amount of business being lost that could be won by an organization like Canagrex.

I ask him whether the type of deal he thinks has been missed is the deal which the Canadian Dairy Commission had with Mexico in which it lost $2.1 million. Is that the sort of deal which Canagrex would not miss? Is that the sort of deal Canagrex would win and win regularly? If that is the case, who would pay for it? Would it be a different arrangement than under CDC at the present time? Would that loss be borne by all taxpayers in this country?

If a private sector exporter lost $2.1 million on a deal, that exporter would not be there now. He would be out of business. That kind of loss cannot be handled by the private sector. What concerns me as a taxpayer and speaking on behalf of my constituents is whether a number of those sorts of deals will be made by Canagrex under the guise of expanding exports, but in effect making mistakes that should not be made and passing on the cost to the taxpayer.

Where has the private sector fallen down in the course of the last five, ten or twenty years in the development of food exports in Canada? The minister has spoken about the success of expanding our export sales in this country. Where has the private sector fallen down? What markets are we missing? What countries are we not selling to as effectively as we could be?

It is sometimes argued that the private sector is unwilling to accept the upfront market costs in developing these export markets. I wonder whether that statement is entirely accurate. I know of a number of companies in this business that have spent a lot of money developing the markets which they enjoy right now. These same companies are concerned about losing those markets through unfair competition from an organization such as Canagrex and they will lose the benefit of their investment. Whether these companies will just back out of the marketplace and leave a much greater proportion of the export business to be handled by Canagrex, by one company, one major vehicle in the industry, is a concern. It will have monopolistic tendencies and as a result the cost to the consumer will be greater.

The minister would have to agree that the development of export trade does not happen from matching an existing product in Canada with the demand for products in another country, whether Brazil, Taiwan, Hong Kong, or whatever. The market has to be developed and developed very carefully over time. It is nurtured carefully by individual relationships that sometimes take five or ten years to develop. These long-standing relationships that depend on personal friendships are sometimes a lot harder to develop when there is not the rapport from two organizations working and understanding the importance of developing markets or understanding the importance of profits, as well as the necessity of having profit to develop further already existing markets.

These are the things that concern me. I wonder what the government has been doing. A constituent of mine in this business told me that he gets 20 leads from the U.S. department of agriculture for every one lead that he gets from the minister's own department, from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) or from the embassies. This occurrence was related to me directly. I would be happy to have the person get in touch with the minister if the minister would like to discuss it further. I am sure the individual will wish to present his views to the committee.

There are other areas which government can support in the development of the export business. Some of this type of thing has already begun. For example, the expansion of export insurance for food. I believe that could be expanded even further. But the importance of creating an environment for increased food production cannot be denied. This past year this particular aspect of the export business has been severely damaged, because of the very high interest rates that people have had to endure in the agricultural production community, and, to top it off, by the total inadequacies and disincentives introduced by the budget brought down on November 12, 1981.

I have to be a little cynical when I see the minister under pressure from the agricultural community. The minister has been unable to convince his colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to do anything of substance for the agricultural community, either in the budget or with interest rates. I have to ask myself whether the minister is introducing this bill today so that he can be seen to be doing something when, in fact, he is doing nothing. Is that the reason this bill is here today? Is that the reason we are debating this bill now, to take the heat off the minister for his other shortcomings?

Both the minister and his colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have said that Canagrex will work with the private sector. It is clear that neither he nor his colleague has been able to give any assurance that the Crown corporation will not duplicate existing services, and activities in areas of business that have already been developed and are being provided to the industry today. I ask him whether he cannot confine Canagrex's powers in order to protect existing businesses so that there is not a large Crown corporation, with the vast amounts of money that are available to it, which can smother those very effective businesses already in place. I ask him whether he can restrict this corporation from squeezing out the private sector because, while I am not an expert on this, I think he will acknowledge that the Canadian Dairy Commission in some areas has squeezed out private entrepreneurs who had developed a market in certain countries. Because of its power and its willingness to take a $2.1 million loss, it has squeezed out existing viable businesses. That is the concern.

• (1500)

I asked the minister during the luncheon break why it was that, while the bill does provide for joint ventures, the whole organization could not be established as a joint venture with the private sector. I draw to his attention "Canada's Trade Challenge"; the work of the Special Committee on the National Trading Corporation: which was completed last June. The committee concluded that the Canadian trading corporation should take the form of a shared enterprise, drawing financial strength and support from the public sector and a commitment to sound financial practices from the private sector. They went on to say that the Canadian trading corporation would be up to 50 per cent owned by the federal government, with the other half of the equity held perhaps by ten private sector investors.

Now I ask why that sort of approach could not be considered for Canagrex to ensure that it would be governed by the same private sector discipline as is any other organization. That, I believe, is the way Crown corporations should be established if possible.

I would draw your attention to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Canadians are very well aware of the problems there, that this year we will take the final loss on the Argentine contract which was commenced about eight years ago and which will amount to a loss in excess of $250 million. I feel a company like AECL should sell off the international project marketing and management elements of its business to a joint public and private sector organization so that the public sector can draw on the expertise of the private sector in those areas.

I do not know where Canagrex is going to draw its expertise from. Where is it going to get its staff? Will it be able to get the right people, because, again drawing from this trading corporation report, they made the very critical observation that performance and expertise are essential to the success of any venture in international markets because it is tough business out there. It is very competitive because we are competing with the best in the world, and you need the best people. Can the corporation attract the right people in order to compete head-on without losing the taxpayers' or producers' money as was the case with the Canadian Dairy Commission?

In looking further at the role of Canagrex in relation to the private sector, I asked myself about its powers and the abilities of the Crown corporation to do certain things. The minister has argued that these will be carefully controlled, but I ask myself why that cannot be done now rather than by future management. I hate to remind the minister of this, but ministers do come and go and he might not be around to control the operations of Canagrex in the way he now envisages. Bureaucrats in the future may have a minister whom they can influence into doing things in a way that would increase the power of the bureaucracy in what should be a very important private sector element of the economy. So I believe we should constrain the powers of Canagrex to a greater extent than we are because those powers are wide open, and I will come back to that in a minute.

Canagrex must also operate using private sector facilities to the maximum extent, and I am thinking here of the ancillary organizations such as shipping, banking, trading houses, consultants, distributors and others. However, with the broad powers that Canagrex has, I wonder whether in time all of these facilities will be drawn into that organization to make it the bureaucratic monster that the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) referred to before lunch. That is the concern anyone must have in watching what happens to the development of government in any country.

Coming back to the Canadian Dairy Commission, I believe that last year it lost $5.4 million on its marketing operations. We have not yet seen the 1981 results. How can the minister come before this House and introduce an operation like Canagrex in the face of that sort of loss in an organization which has existed for about ten years? At a time when we are seeing tax revenues increase by 31 per cent as a result of the current budget, how can he propose this organization when he cannot prove to his shareholders, the taxpayers, that he can manage the operations already in place? In this case its operations are paid for by the producer, but this could well be changed and, I believe, with Canagrex the loss would be borne by the taxpayer? A loss similar to that of the Dairy Commission in 1980 could occur in Canagrex as well, and I believe the minister owes us an explanation on that.

Let me move now to the powers of this corporation, which I believe are very broad. Canagrex is established:

—for the purpose of promoting, facilitating and engaging in the export of agricultural products and services—

However, let us go to some of the other powers of Canagrex. The bill says Canagrex may:

—purchase agricultural products and food products and package, process, store, ship, insure, import, export or sell or otherwise dispose of products purchased by it;

I do not know what that "otherwise dispose of products" means. We have had good examples of eggs and milk powder being disposed of. I hope the operations of Canagrex do not extend that far.

What does the bill mean by "process"? This is an exporting organization, why does it need the ability to process products? Why does it need the ability to store products? What does the minister have in mind when he says "store"? Will we see this as a complement to the supply management so that when that supply management fails, this will be a means whereby we can hive off some of that excess product into storage facilities in other countries so that we do not have eggs and milk powder all over the streets?

Mr. Whelan: So we can assist the entrepreneur, Michael.

● (1510)

Mr. Wilson: I think that the minister is saying one thing, but is opening up a broad range of things on which he has not come clean with us today.

Let us look at another one of the powers under this bill. It provides for entering into contracts with foreign governments. I wonder whether the minister has considered why foreign governments like to operate directly with other foreign governments in this country to country trade. I think there is a very good reason. It is because the people who are buying know that if they have only one place to go, they can deal in one place, that there is no competition and that the government will come to them with the total story of the supply available from that country. They learn much more about the marketplace when they have only one organization with which to deal. I think that that is a shortcoming that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and, I believe, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) have not sufficiently considered in the development of the powers of Canagrex.

Finally, what scares me is Clause 14(f), which states:

—make . . . grants and contributions for the purposes for which it is established;

Does that mean grants and contributions to build a silo in Brazil, and grants and contributions to help export? Does that mean subsidies? I know that in parts of the bill, on the surface, it states that there will be no subsidies. However, are there other ways of making subsidies which are not called subsidies and which can, again, cost the taxpayers money?

There is one other major omission in this bill which I think the minister should very carefully consider, that is, the question of profitability. Nowhere in this bill is there any mention that Canagrex should operate at a profit and that this is an objective of the company. There are some good reasons I believe for which that objective should be in the bill. The first is that the taxpayer, the producer, or whoever is to foot the bill in the event of losses, should be protected in that employees of the organization should start off by thinking that they are in business to make a profit. This is also of importance to the private sector businesses already in place which will be competing with Canagrex. If this corporation is set up without any intention of making a profit and if it only comes into existence for the purpose of trading, it will obviously be very unfair competition for those companies which have spent considerable amounts of money in building up trade which is already in place today. That must be a part of the objectives of this bill, and I hope that it will be put in at the committee stage.

While I am making this wide range of comments, I would ask the minister to reflect. When these measures are proposed in committee, will he be prepared to put his own money on the line in Canagrex? Will he have enough confidence in the corporation, considering the way the bill is established? I would ask him to consider whether the corporation will have sufficient potential to attract the right people and to exist in the marketplace in competition with other organizations so that he would be prepared to put his own money on the line. I think that is the bottom line question he must ask himself.

I may be wrong, and if the minister feels that I am wrong perhaps he can correct me, but, as I understand it, this corporation is not meant to subsidize. It is not meant to do business at a loss. I therefore ask why that should not be an objective. It should not be a bail-out place for the inadequate management and performance of the people working in that organization.

Another aspect of the bill on which I would like to comment is the part relating to the corporate plan. In Clause 31 of the bill, there is provision for placing the capital budget before the House after it is approved by the board of directors. I believe that the corporate plan should also be placed before the House because it will be a very significant element with regard to the impact that this organization will have on other participants in the business today. If there are ways in which the private sector can work with Canagrex, that is all well and good. However, in the event that Canagrex desires to do things which are contrary to the objectives which the minister has set out verbally, and not only those objectives contained in the bill, then I think that should be known prior to Canagrex moving in that direction. In addition, I would like to say to the minister that these powers under clause 14 of the bill are very broad and will probably continue to be broad in spite of amendments which I hope will be introduced and accepted in the committee stage. However, what is necessary, not only for Canagrex but also for a broad array of Crown corporations in this country, is that the operating objectives of the Crown corporations be in the mind of the government in place and in power today. Governments change and ministers change. Therefore, the operating objectives will change as those governments and ministers change, all within the operating powers of those corporations. However, each change will have some impact, or a significant impact on peole who are affected by the industry.

I ask the minister if he might consider taking a positive step which will lay to rest the concerns of a number of people in the private sector who see the Canagrex Corporation as a threat to businesses which are already in place. Will he allow them the opportunity to comment on the objectives of the government in power today? I think that that would be open government. It would give them the ability to respond in the event that the corporation damages their businesses.

A broader consideration here is the entire question of intrusion of government into the private sector, doing things that private enterprise cannot do. I would like to stand back for a minute and consider what is happening, not only in the agricultural area but also in a number of areas in government. I would like to consider whether, in view of the financial strains placed on governments across Canada and in many of the countries of the world today, it is right for governments to continue to move into the private sector. I do not think there is any question but that, in the broad range of matters, the government cannot do as good a job. I am saying that in a pragmatic way. I firmly believe it in a philosophical way. However, in a pragmatic way, governments cannot respond as quickly to changing market circumstances as those in the private sector who have their money on the line and will be hurt if they make a mistake. We have seen many such instances. I guess the CDC is a partial example of someone being hurt by a $2.1 million loss. One hundred and twenty-four million dollars were lost resulting from the ineptness of a series of ministers and bureaucrats who were following this corporation for ten years, I believe. The government finally wrote the corporation off this year at a cost to the taxpayers of $125 million. I asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray), who was responsible for that loss. I asked him about four or five times, in different ways. Each time he said he would not tell me. I said that that was fine, and that I would not ask him to name the names. But I did ask him whether he had asked who was responsible. Did the minister find out the names of the individuals who were responsible so that he could take action? I asked that question four times. Each time I got a waffling answer. Each time it became clearer and clearer that the minister had not asked who was responsible. That is why I say it is important in a broader sense that we avoid this intrusion of government into things the private sector should be doing.

Politicians, like the minister of industry and regional development and others, including myself, do not know enough about what is going on in the market in a particular area of activity as do those who earn their livelihood in that area.

I guess what is most important is the response when money is lost. The response of the minister of industry and regional development was the best example. He did not care about the money being lost. The only thing to go through his mind was how to sweep this one under the carpet without a lot of publicity and press activity. That was the main concern of that minister. That is the concern that I, not as a member of Parliament but as a taxpayer, have about my tax payments being spent in that way.

This bill must go to committee. There is no question that a lot of work must be done in committee to constrain the activities of that corporation.

My final point is on the impact of an organization like Canagrex on the consumer. Every consumer in this country is concerned about the high cost of food, the large bite that the cost of food takes from his or her budget compared to five or ten years ago.

I had the fortunate or unfortunate experience this past summer of doing some shopping for my wife. I bought some staples such as ketchup, margarine, and other such items which we were going to take with us on a family trip to the west. I did not buy anything substantial, but by the end of that shopping expedition I had spent $162.50. I was floored. For years my wife had been telling me "I need more money for food. I need more money for food". I kept saying, "No, no, no". Now I understand. It is important that members of Parliament consider the impact on the housewife or the husband learning more of what housewives do.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Learning the trade.

Mr. Wilson: As my colleague says, learning the trade. What concerns me about this bill is the broad power to store food, to export and import it, as well as the control of the government over the whole food process, production, sale and marketing.

The minister is dedicated to extending supply management through a broad range of production in this country. When I look at the connection between that and this bill, I say to myself, the government can control supply. If it makes a mistake, it can put that supply, as I said earlier, in a silo in Brazil. We can import, we can export. The net result of this is a loss of competition in the whole food processing mechanism. While the immediate impact of that may be higher costs for the consumer, it will result in damage done to the production side of the industry as well.

If we lose the discipline of competition on the production side, we have a less effective, less productive sector in that part of our economy. For that reason if for no other, we should provide a very careful delineation between what Canagrex can do and what the private sector can do so that there is ample opportunity for competition in the food industry.

In conclusion, I do not think there is any question that this bill requires a lot of work in committee. We need exports of food and fewer imports of food into this country. The objective of this bill is very clear. I do not think anyone in this House could quarrel with that. However, we must be careful to ensure that the concerns I have expressed today are not embodied and fixed in the legislation in a way that they cannot be changed.

I again stress the importance of being careful to ensure the minister is not doing this just to be seen to be doing something in order to take the limelight away from the shortcomings of the government in the budget and the interest rate policy, which has done such tremendous damage to the agricultural community. Let us try to make this a good bill. When doing that, let us protect the consumer, because the consumer is very important.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to make some comments regarding the bill to form a Crown corporation known as Canagrex. The minister will recall a speech I made earlier on the Farm Credit Corporation. I made the statement at that time that one of the components of agriculture that has to be stressed and modernized is the question of selling.

I believe I made the statement at that time that I wanted to see some hard-nose selling. To put it another way, that is also what I am going to say in part today about the Canagrex bill. We need hard-nosed selling, not only in the domestic market but in the export market, which I understand Canagrex will deal with.

I will not be lengthy. I want to cover some of the reasons the minister gave in the cabinet documents as to why he wanted Canagrex established. I think the minister was being straightforward in what he said. The up-front reason was that he wanted to create a Crown corporation in order that it could be a trading corporation, and an export corporation for the sale and export of food.

He said that Canadians were losing markets, and Canagrex could fill a need in that area. I believe that accurately portrays what the minister said he had in mind with regard to the Canagrex Crown corporation.

I have some questions about that. They will have to be discussed in committee. My colleague who just spoke, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), put forward some of the problems Canagrex could face in terms of organizational make-up. When one looks at the reasons the minister used to sell the Canagrex idea to his skeptical cabinet colleagues, it is important to understand what arguments the minister was using to try to convince his colleagues as to the establishment of Canagrex.

In their speeches, my colleagues, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) mentioned that if one takes out the grain component of our exports, the food picture is not as bright as one might be led to believe when looking at the figures. I was looking at the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and every time that was mentioned he appeared to chuckle. He remarked, "Look, fellows, that is not fair, putting it that way."

● (1530)

Let us use the minister's own arguments. What he is supposed to have said in cabinet is that in the late 1970s, for instance, food exports fell to less than 10 per cent of total Canadian exports, even though the 1979 food trade surplus of $1.4 billion was a record. If one takes that further, one finds, by the minister's own figures, that if grain sales were taken out—and I am not for one minute saying that grain sales should not be considered—by Agriculture Canada calculations, Canada's deficit in other food trades is in fact rising. It is rising from an average of $549 million between 1970 and 1972 to a deficit of $1.889 billion in 1979.

Mr. Mazankowski: What a sad indictment.

Mr. Epp: That was for the general period of time that this minister was the Minister of Agriculture.

What we are seeing, and I think this is the minister's own admission, is that our export record could be much better than it is. I think we agree on that.

Although this matter is not before us today, when a member gets up in the House and states that there are changes needed in the Canadian Wheat Board, there is an immediate knee-jerk reaction from some parts of the House. The question is asked, "Why is that member saying this? Does he want to dismantle the Canadian Wheat Board?" That is not the point. Many farmers are saying that they want to preserve the Canadian Wheat Board but they want it to become a better selling agency and they want to have more influence on its decisions. This reaction by the government is happening time after time, and I think it will happen with Canagrex as well. If we are not careful, it will become a corporation which is an entity unto itself and a corporation in which farmers will have very little input.

For example, I noted that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture endorses the concept of Canagrex as a general principle. However, when you read their statement, you find that while they do support it, they are deeply concerned about the amount of influence the producer will have in its operations.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister agrees with that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He is nodding his head.

Mr. Epp: I think he would agree with the position I have stated. Therefore, the one point was that we want a Canagrex corporation for exports. Second, we know that the minister had to admit to his cabinet colleagues that our food exports were falling behind. I think the minister would admit, as would those of us who come from rural communities, that we can improve our own production to give Canadian consumers a wide variety of foodstuffs which can be produced in Canada.

One example is the greenhouse trade. Those of us who have travelled through Europe would have noticed that in almost every European country greenhouses could be seen for miles. The hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) would agree that at one time we had agricultural products in the Arctic. One does not have to travel far to see some of the products in the Northwest Territories, which at this time can only be grown during the long summer days. There is far more production possible in the Arctic, but what have we done? We have discouraged it. People cannot buy land and therefore will not invest money and labour in land which they can only rent.

If they do not have the prospect of eventually holding title to the land, they will not make the effort to have the kind of production which a person who holds title would make. For example, as an experiment, why can we not place greenhouses in the north next to hydrogenerating stations? We are burning diesel fuel by the minute up there most of the year, and there is a lot of excess heat. Some of it has been used for heating purposes. So this would be one possible avenue for the production of food in the north. We should consider some of these methods of agricultural production north of 60°. But what do we do? Some companies send their trucks over 5,000 miles to haul foodstuffs north of 60°. And they are competitive. Why? Because there is no competition. Northerners have to pay whatever price they are asked for these products. I am not saying that all foodstuffs can be produced in the north. However, I know we can do a better job and have, in fact, done a better job in the past.

There is a third reason why Canagrex should be established. This reason concerns me because this minister, who has been in the cabinet for a long time, had to use an argument which he knew would sell his cabinet colleagues on the need for Canagrex. What we have seen with members of this government, ever since they were elected, is a number of themes. One of their themes concerns the whole matter of foreign investment. Whether you see it in the National Energy Program or not, whenever one of them gets up and says they are buying back the economy, again there is almost a knee-jerk reaction. They all bow to that Holy Grail and say that is what they want to do. That was the argument used by the Minister of Agriculture for the establishment of Canagrex, pointing out that Canada's food processing plants, for example, have their output 40 per cent under foreign influence. I take that to mean foreign investment. I agree that the international food processing industry is a highly integrated industry, but I suggest that it has not been all bad. For example, one of the big giants out of Minneapolis—Cargill—has not been all bad for Canada. In fact, some of the best investments we have had in the prairies during the last few years have been from companies like that. They have put in some high put-through elevators in. Would we have had them without that influence? Would we have had the same movement of specialty crops without investments like these such as oilseeds, for example?

These are questions which need to be answered. And what I want to point out to the minister is that foreign investment is having damaging effects on our ability to sell internationally. For instance, I understand that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) who, incidentally, has a new name—Lalonde of Arabia—says that as he travels he finds that 70 per cent of our trade is with the United States, and that we have to change it. He comes back and says that we will get more petro-dollars from the Middle East. I ask the minister: is his government, of which he is a member, concerned about reducing foreign investment, or it is more concerned about diverting foreign investment?

An hon. Member: Nationalization.

Mr. Epp: If they are diverting from American investment, to let us say, Middle Eastern investment, I do not see how this fits in with a nationalization process or a Canadianization program.

One of the arguments the minister has been using to his cabinet colleagues is that not only do we need an export corporation but that we have to reduce foreign investment in the Canadian food industry. If that is the case—and I agree with him—then why do we not allow Canadian processors to get into that food industry? Why do we not do that? Why does it have to be government?

Let me offer the hon. gentleman an example. The previous administration in Manitoba—and by previous, I must now specify that it was the administration from 1969 to 1977—set up a number of corporations. One was known as Modern Fine Foods, a small vegetable-canning operation in the Pembina valley. It lost money, lost money and lost money. Between 1977 and 1981 the former government sold that company. I am not talking about the fact that the Manitoba taxpayers gave up that company. We sold it at a loss. The person who bought that company is a friend of mine. I know him. He is a small business entrepreneur in a small rural community in Manitoba. Do you know what he did with that company? He turned it around. He got contracts with the local farmers, and last year the production was higher than at any other time in the history of that company. More jobs were created, more sales were made and, more important, there was viability and stability. That is the kind of process I want to see.

I will give hon. members another example. There is a federal Crown corporation now operating in the food business known as the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, or FFMC. The stories about the FFMC and its lack of efficiency are legend.

Mr. Miller: Talk to the fishermen about it.

Mr. Epp: I did. I will tell hon. members what they think about it, if I could be given half a minute. What did the government do first? It built a huge building. Where was it built? The Member of Parliament for St. Boniface at that time has now gone to his reward in the other place, but the government built that plant right in the middle of the prairies so that the fish could be hauled the longest distance possible. That was the first thing the government did. There was a surplus.

Mr. Whelan: Why did they build it there?

Mr. Epp: Let me finish.

Mr. Whelan: Because the railways, highways and airports were closer.

Mr. Epp: That is right. That is the only airport on the prairies—

Mr. Whelan: The only one that size.

Mr. Epp: What is happening with the FFMC today? Does the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) know what the fishermen have experienced this year? The FFMC has made money this year.

Mr. Miller: Good.

Mr. Epp: Does the hon. member know what was done with the money? It was withheld from the fishermen. The amount was $2.8 million. Why was it withheld? The fishermen have to get geared up for 1982. The corporation withheld $2.8 million. In the past it held back $350,000 for the next year's operation, but this time the corporation held back $2.8 million and is now telling fishermen it needs it because it does not know what the market will be. That is devastating to those fishermen.

Mr. Miller: Tell us about the Nickersons and the $15 million the government had to bail them out with.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Go back to sleep.

Mr. Miller: I am telling you it failed.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman wants to speak, would you arrange with his House leader that he be given time?

The point I am making is that Crown corporations can have a function, but there must be constant vigilance because they do not have the bottom line, which was mentioned earlier, of losing their own money. When they start losing their own money, that is when it starts hurting.

I have spoken to a number of provincial people about the marketing of Canada's agricultural products, and I think among the provinces there is a general feeling that we need a co-ordinating body. There has been much work done on this, but what is happening now is that we are sending mixed signals internationally. A province will market pork, for instance, in Japan at a certain price, but the buyers know what the situation is in Canada. They know that another provincial representative will come and offer another price. Pork producers are competing against each other within Canada, so co-ordination is needed. I suggest to the minister that there must be more agreement. Agriculture is a shared responsibility. There must be very close co-operation between his department and provincial agriculture departments.

When the minister announced Canagrex, a constituent of mine who is active in the cow-calf producers' association in Manitoba came to me and we talked about Canagrex. We did not know what is was. It had not been put into legislative form. He told me that contacts had already been made. Small farmers in Manitoba have joined together simply for survival. He pointed out—this was back in May of 1981—that through his association with the cow-calf operators he had had contact with a person in Winnipeg who was in the export business. He was told there was a market for 300 metric tons of kosher beef, which the State of Israel was getting from Ireland. That is a market we could get. The product is grass fed beef. It was calculated that this amount of beef would result in the raising of approximately 240,000 head per year, which is a tremendous number. That market was not necessarily open to Canadian producers only, but we could get into that market, and that is the important thing. My constituent and his farm colleagues, local people, were trying to find some vehicle to get into that market. They wanted to know how they could move their beef and get back into a cash position. We all know what the cash flow position of beef producers is today.

I say to the minister that Canagrex should be in a position to deal with matters of this kind. Canagrex should not take over the operation because "We know what is best for you", but it should give advice and help and facilitate sales rather than take them over. I think it is important that that be considered carefully when we are setting up Canagrex.

I said I would be brief today. When the minister brings this Canagrex bill to the committee, I suggest he looks at our suggestions. If they can improve the bill and the operation of Canagrex, let him accept them rather than go through the turmoil we went through, for instance, in relation to the FFMC. We went through a lot of turmoil. Many people were disappointed until the corporation was shaken down into place. Even today there are problems, but I suggest we should learn from experience. We should learn from the expertise in the private market and also help the private market sell Canada's agricultural products, rather than look at Canagrex as the vehicle which is to do all things for all people in the agricultural field.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to wind up the debate for the official opposition—

Mr. Miller: And it was just getting good too.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —in the hope that this matter can go to committee because there are a number of matters which must be examined.

I listened in the House when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) made his speech introducing this bill. I listened to him very carefully. He expressed great optimism about Canagrex and about what it would do in the market. I do not mean to be unkind to the minister.

Mr. Whelan: Not you, Walter.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The minister knows that. My mother-in-law thinks the world of the minister—but she is not a farmer!

I listened to the minister's words of optimism about Canagrex. Afterwards I went to my office, and I received a call from a constituent of mine who had also listened to the minister's speech. This constituent is a farmer, and a good one. He is having some difficulty, but he believes he will weather the storm. That is not the case for a number of people at the producing end of agriculture. My constituent asked, "Will that boat really float?" He asked why we are doing this and taking this step. I had to say to him that I was concerned about it too. Heretofore, governments have thrown money at problems, but now this government is not throwing money at this problem. The figures my colleagues have cited have set that straight. The government is throwing another Crown corporation at a problem at a time when the government is in the course of reorganizing the external relations aspect of government to commercialize it and to develop the commercial side of it so that the government can reach out for the products of Canadians, whether farmers, business people or otherwise, and sell them to the purchasers of the world.

It has occurred to me that what is happening here is that we are following the usual practice of creating another agency, the salaries of the officers of which will never be published. Responsibility for this agency will not be with the external relations department of government. We are getting a panacea of doubtful validity. It is a bone thrown to the Minister of Agriculture. We will not be utilizing the newly reorganized external trade relations department of government. Why are we doing this? Why is it necessary to create a special agency for agriculture? Why do we dissipate our resources in the export market in the way we do?

• (1550)

Mr. Whelan: Are you suggesting we are just supposed to produce without selling?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why have we established a program with one of the best deputy ministers in government, Gordon Osbaldeston, in charge of exports?

Mr. Whelan: He supports it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He supports it because he is going to get it in his department. That is why he supports it, and that indicates the futility of the exercise we have been going through in the last little while. Of course he is going to get it in his department.

Mr. Whelan: No way.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The Minister of Agriculture says, "No way," even if that is good for agriculture. The point is that once again, instead of dealing with the problem directly, the government is throwing a Crown corporation—not money this time—at the problem.

I have never been one to argue about the efficacy, importance and the place for Crown corporations in the economic scheme of things. I think they have a place. The St. Lawrence Seaway Corporation was a Crown corporation established to carry out and manage a project because that followed in the tradition of partnership which had developed in our history. We developed this country from a wilderness, and it is not unusual that, as it developed with populations separated it was necessary for government to intervene. But it is a wise government that takes a look at the point of intervention.

The first question to be asked is whether such intervention is necessary, or are there devices which the government, if properly motivated, could in partnership with the private sector, use to do the job? I suspect there are, and I do not think the minister can sit at the cabinet table and approve the reshuffling of the ministry for trade purposes and at the same time argue that we need the corporation Canagrex to deal with one part of that. Think of that for a moment.

This is what my farmer constituent meant when he phoned me and asked, will this ship really float, and what is going on? I tell the minister in the last few minutes of this debate that this constituent said to me he was selling his products for less while his inputs for agriculture, including feed grain and fertilizer, are increasing in cost. He said he was gradually but inexorably getting less each year for his family and himself. What does he need? He needs cash. He does not need Crown corporations. What else does he need? He needs sales; not domestic sales but export sales. This man pointed out to me that a week ago the Government of Canada reorganized its export sales capacity. We will debate that at some stage, I gather, from what the government House leader has said. Obviously the government thought this out. Quite frankly, I think the Government of Canada did the right thing in bringing that export sales capacity into one place. It ought to examine other areas where that can be done. The government put in charge the best sales oriented public servant in Canada, Gordon Osbaldeston. Why do we bother setting up another organization which must be absorbed under that function? That should not be done if we are really intent on concentrating our exports. What is the difference, if there is expertise in the agricultural area for selling purposes in that government department?

You cannot fool farmers. The reason the Minister of Agriculture says the federation is in favour of this is that the federation, to a large extent, represents people in agriculture who are desperate. I think the government is throwing out a crumb in response to a problem, the solution to which requires a full loaf. If the Minister of Agriculture will put his milking hand down, perhaps I could finish my speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The solution to this problem will require the concentrated efforts of the government, if we are to salvage some parts of agriculture, and the minister knows that.

The farmers of the country like the Minister of Agriculture. They think he is a great fellow. I too think he is a great fellow, but there is no one who thinks he is a great fellow more than the Minister of Agriculture himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He has got that milking hand going again. Great fellow that he is, the farmers and those people who work in the food chain whom he is supposed to serve are wondering what has happened to the Minister of Agriculture in the cabinet. They are wondering where that great voice in agriculture is, because, in spite of all the rhetoric, sales are falling, agricultural incomes are decreasing, and the net is decreasing as well. This is what counts to the farmers.

I want to say this to the government. We are going to look at this bill from the point of view of the operation of Crown corporations. I do not like to see what I see happening all the time under this government. It is creating a parallel super bureaucracy of Crown agencies which is less responsible to Parliament and to the people than to present departments. It will override those separate departments. These agencies from time to time have become havens for political appointment. I hope the Minister of Agriculture does not follow the route of Jack Pickersgill with the CTC. I hope he does not do that.

An hon. Member: I didn't think of that.

Mr. Whelan: I intend to stay here for a long time.

An hon. Member: Maybe the Minister of Agriculture does have a future.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Maybe he does have a future. I hope that does not happen because I think there has to be a strong voice for agriculture in the House of Commons. But what is most important is that there has to be a strong voice for agriculture that can sway the cabinet. I am afraid that is what we do not have.

I think the government is once again establishing a corporation when there should be a direct approach to agricultural problems. The government has given us an approach. Surely to goodness the government was serious when it shuffled the sales aspect of external affairs to give us that approach. Why must we have an approach that in terms of a size of the problem can be likened to a pimple?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on the motion in the name of the Minister of Agriculture. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall all orders preceding No. 58 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HERBERT—PRINTING OF BILLS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Prior to proceeding with Order No. 58, hon. members will recall that a point of order was raised by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on December 3 last concerning those private members' bills that remain listed on the order paper with the notation "text received" in parenthesis and remain unprinted.

• (1600)

Hon. members will recall that earlier this session, on February 19, 1981, as a result of representations made in the House by the hon. member for Vaudreuil those hon. members who had submitted only the title of a bill in the draw were advised by the Chair that they would have to submit to the House within 30 days, or by a day to be fixed, a text of their bill, otherwise their bill, that is the order for second reading of their bill, would lose the precedence given it in the draw. As I said at the time, it was impossible to stand a bill when the bill did not exist. To put it another way, the House had been put in the position of requiring to stand many of its orders for the second reading of a bill where there was no bill to debate, only a title.

Pursuant to the decision of the Chair of February 19, the Speaker subsequently wrote to all hon. members notifying them that those who had yet to submit a text of their bill should do so by April 3, otherwise the order for second reading of their bill would lose its precedence on the Order Paper. After April 3, 1981, the Order Paper reflected the decision of the House, and accordingly the order for second reading of 164 bills, for which no instructions were given, was shown to have lost the precedence that had been accorded them in the draw.

It should be noted that the term "text" adopted by members during the discussion of this matter was required to be given a liberal interpretation because of the fact that members had, for some years, been permitted to include only a title of a bill in the draw, and also because hon. members had been accustomed to giving instructions in various forms to the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel whose duty under the provisions of Standing Order 84 is to assist hon. members of the House in drafting legislation. If a text of a bill is submitted by an hon. member, this would of course also constitute the instructions to draft a bill.

Accordingly, the bills presently shown to have a "text received" include, as a "text", instructions ranging from a short paragraph of instructions for which a draft has yet to be prepared, to the text of a draft bill. It seems to me that this fulfils the requirements of the order of the House adopted with unanimous consent on April 3, 1981.

Hon. members will appreciate that the process of drafting a bill includes research, the extent of which varies a great deal from one bill to another, and that the bill may run through many drafts before it is approved by the member for printing and distribution. Furthermore, after all the research is completed and material is compiled, the actual drafting time will vary depending on the complexity of the subject matter. Accordingly, the stage at which these bills with the notation are in the drafting of process ranges from the research stage and, in respect of nearly one half of those bills, to the stage of a first or a second draft of the bill which has been sent to the member for his approval or further comment.

Finally, hon. members will also appreciate that many bills are also introduced after the draw, and these bills have undergone, or are going through, the process just described concurrently with the bills which were in the draw.

The point of order of the hon. member for Vaudreuil in effect directs our attention to the present practice in respect of the draw for precedence in debate for bills at the beginning of the session. Of the 392 bills in the draw this session, over 200 were not drafted and thus contravened Standing Order 69 which reads:

> No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

While it is too late for this session to conform to Standing Order 69, members are now put on notice that in the next session only those bills which have been drafted will be permitted in the draw. For the moment, however, the hon. member may be assured that there has been compliance with the decision of the Chair of February 19 and with the order of the House of April 3, 1981, and that drafting and the printing of these bills is taking its normal course.

IMMIGRATION

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John Gamble (York North) moved that Bill C-258, to amend the Immigration Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-258 is designed to amend the Immigration Act in a number of specific technical ways. Prior to dealing with the sections of the act sought to be amended, I wish to address in a general fashion the motives and intentions underlying the preparation of the bill. We in Canada, by the grace of God and the hard work, sacrifice and enterprise of our ancestors, are among the most fortunate people on earth. While it is true that today matters might be improved over what we currently feel and find in society, Canada is still a haven of freedom and liberty in a world of autocratic and dictatorial regimes where individual liberties are subjected to regular denial. Our land mass is rich in resources and, assuming they can be extracted and harvested in a manner beneficial to our population, all Canadians should prosper.

Our most precious resource, however, remains the people of Canada, numbering slightly in excess of 24 million, who have an abiding respect for law and order and are not given to violence. The vast majority of Canadians believe that they should earn their own living, should not depend upon the state for handouts, but should support their families, build their homes and communities, and attend to the needs of our senior citizens and others who through no fault of their own are unable to care for themselves.

Who are the people who are to enjoy this land and the company of Canadians? They are Canadians themselves and those whom we as Canadians choose to welcome into our midst. Canada is our home, and we will invite into our home those whom we choose and reject those whom we find objectionable for one reason or another. Those reasons are to be determined by us. In determining what those guidelines might be, I should think we would have regard to some of the remarks I made earlier.

This Parliament, as a repository of the public will, has passed the Immigration Act to codify the rules for admission, and Bill C-258 is designed to eliminate some of the abuses which we have seen recently inflicted upon Canadians by those who choose, against our will, to enter Canada. Some of the serious problems relating to entry into Canada against our wishes cannot be legislated but can only be remedied through a more alert scrutiny of visitors and immigrants by immigration officials. I find it repugnant to my sense of national pride that a member of the Baader-Meinhof gang of German terrorists should be apprehended in North America, not while entering Canada but by United States immigration officials while leaving Canada and endeavouring to gain entry into the United States. Our passports are reputed to be easily forged, and visas obtained abroad in some cases are acquired with the same difficulty that would attend the purchase of an airline ticket. I would hope that administrative practices within the immigration branch of the Department of Employment and Immigration might be improved to prevent Canadians from being confronted with international terrorists and others who fall into the category of objectionable aliens who have chosen, without our consent, to enter our country.

Finally, I should like to deal specifically with the bill itself. Its main thrust is to expedite deportation of illegal immigrants and to eliminate certain practices which have developed to circumvent the provisions of the act. Specifically, Clause 2 of the bill would amend Subsection 32(6) of the act by adding the following categories of persons to whom a deportation order might apply. In this case I point out that it is simply a matter of adding categories rather than specifically changing the meaning of Subsection 32(6). In the first instance, those persons who, if they were applying for entry into Canada, would be denied entry under the present provisions of the act. I find it very strange that while we provide a class of prohibited persons who cannot enter Canada, we reward those whom we find in our midst who have circumvented the very provisions of the Immigration Act designed to keep them out. The second category includes those persons who have been convicted of a criminal offence in Canada. Criminals are not among those who are entitled to entry. Surely they must be included among those who are available for immediate deportation.

Next are those persons who have entered Canada as visitors and continue to remain here after their visitor status has expired. In this case, immigration files are filled with cases of aliens who, in defiance of our law, have entered Canada and continue to remain here. It is general public knowledge that persons coming to Canada under an alleged visitor category intend not to be a visitor at all but come simply to gain entry to Canada and thereafter remain, contrary to the provisions of the Immigration Act.

Another category includes those persons who come to Canada with forged or fraudulent documents of entry to Canada. I cannot imagine not taking the swiftest action with respect to people who have entered Canada in that fashion. It is well known that the member of the Baader-Meinhof gang, to which I referred, did in fact obtain documents of that kind at our Paris embassy.

We welcome to Canada those people who are prepared to contribute to the welfare of Canada. I submit to you that we do not welcome those who come to Canada to draw on the welfare of Canada. There is an obligation imposed on parents legally in Canada to support their dependants. People who come to Canada and fail to accept that general principle of Canadian law while not citizens of our country ought not to enjoy the other benefits of remaining within the boundaries of our nation.

A practice has regrettably grown up for multiple adjudications by officials of the department. These numerous adjudications of cases have the effect of delaying a final determination and add immeasurably to the cost of the taxpayers of Canada of administering the Immigration Act.

Clause 3 amending Section 35 endeavours to eliminate several adjudications on the same matter after a deportation order has been issued. Further adjudications have been used for the purpose of stalling or unreasonably delaying the process intended to be established by the act, and the passage of this bill with Clause 3 intact would have the effect of eliminating that general abuse. There is no intention to destroy the basic rights of appeal which continue to exist and in respect of which there is no proposed amendment.

The third substantive amendment would eliminate a practice which has grown and expanded and is now so widespread that it has been given a name. It is called the "Buffalo shuffle." Ministerial permits have been issued to permit otherwise unauthorized persons to enter Canada so long as they follow the practice in complying with the current provisions of Section 37 of departing from Canada and immediately re-entering our country.

One of the recent best known beneficiaries of the "Buffalo shuffle" was a certain gentleman named Calamusa. His name has been mentioned in the House. We will recall that Mr. Calamusa was first deported from Canada in 1972 because of his criminal record in his own country. After re-entering Canada illegally in 1976, he was incarcerated for three months for possession of counterfeit money. He has struck out on three counts with respect to whether or not he should remain in Canada. Despite all of that, armed with a minister's permits, Mr. Calamusa was chauffeur-driven by officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration to the American border in July, 1980, permitted to re-enter Canada, and was then chauffeur-driven back to Winnipeg, all with the consent and under the instruction of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy).

Clause 4 amending Subsections 37(1) and 37(2) would end that practice. Persons outside Canada who had been deported would no longer be entitled to a minister's permit. We will recall that Mr. Calamusa was a gentleman who had in fact been deported from Canada. He is not the most outlandish example of people who have been deported and who have gained re-entry into Canada and stay here, some of whom are ultimately incarcerated for the commission of some heinous offence.

The second amendment contained in Clause 4 would relate to circumstances where persons were in Canada, and in those cases they would be entitled to a minister's permit only under very restricted circumstances. Those circumstances are set forth under Paragraph 27(2)(b). They are not the kind of offences one would find particularly reprehensible. If I might just refer to them, they include those who have engaged in continuous employment in Canada, contrary to the rules, and with respect to Paragraph (i) have not left Canada on or before a date specified in their departure.

Clause 5 provides for the execution of deportation orders within fixed periods of time changing the current provisions of the act which permit execution of deportation orders to refer specifically to the words of the act: "As soon as reasonably practicable."

This clause fixed two time periods. One as it relates to landed immigrants who were inadmissible at the time they came to Canada and should never have entered; criminals convicted of criminal offences in Canada or those who had entered using forged or fraudulent entry documents. In this case, these people would be subject to deportation within a period of five days. All others who were inadmissible under the present provisions of the act, who had engaged in subversive activities, who were convicted of criminal offences, were alleged visitors, but who, in fact, remained in Canada beyond the time permitted, would be deported within a period of 48 hours.

I am reminded of Mr. McCarthy's case, Mr. Speaker. You may recall that he was apprehended in Vancouver on a minor jaywalking offence. At the cost to the taxpayers of Canada, the authorities endeavoured to deport him on three occasions. The total cost of that little manoeuvre was $10,490. Yet all of this was as a result of the delays in the process involved in deportations. While he was originally apprehended on a jaywalking charge, this gentleman, as hon. members may recall, was a member of the IRA and other terrorist organizations.

• (1620)

Clause 6 would reduce the grounds of appeal, Mr. Speaker, to errors of fact and law. Clause 7, which adds certain classes of illegal immigrants to those already listed in Section 104(2) of the act, is designed to permit law enforcement officers to apprehend additional classes of illegal immigrants, specifically those referred to in Section 27(2)(a) and Section 27(2)(k) of the act's present provisions.

This bill is designed, Mr. Speaker, to put some backbone in the Immigration Act's provisions. At the same time it is designed to eliminate a well-known abuse, which, as I have indicated, has been employed by the department itself for the purpose of circumventing the intention of Parliament. I submit that the provisions of this bill bring about a necessary remedial change to the immigration laws of Canada and I recommend them to hon. members of the House.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate and I am pleased that a number of members of the House on this side feel so strongly about this issue that I am swamped with prospective speakers. I refer to such champions of justice as the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), and the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen). They all want to speak so I will try to be brief and, hopefully, they will all have an opportunity.

Canada's Immigration Act, Mr. Speaker, sets forth in very clear terms the objectives of Canada's immigration policy. It enshrines such fundamental principles as non-discrimination, respect for the family, concern for refugees and the promotion of our social, economic and demographic goals. The inclusion of these objectives right in the act serves one very important purpose. The intent of the law is sometimes open to interpretation. By having these objectives in the act itself, it clearly states not only the law but its intent.

The act begins with a clear statement of specific objectives from which flow all of its provisions, regulations and administration. The powers and authority it confers are precisely delineated. The procedures to which immigrants and visitors are subject are clearly set out. Both the public interest and civil rights of immigrants and visitors are protected. It retains that which was valid and useful, and provides enough flexibility to be adaptable to our changing needs. It establishes firm criteria which may be interpreted in regulations as the need arises, but it does not list rigid prohibitions which prevent the use of common sense. I know the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) is a firm believer in common sense in government, and that is what we are trying to demonstrate in this act.

The act also provides a means to determine the size and distribution of the immigration movement, which is very necessary in a land of increasing unbanization whose resources are now recognized to be more limited than we once believed.

However, at the same time, it leaves the determination of the actual size and distribution of the movement to be set after consultation, and does not establish rigid figures cast in stone. For the first time, demography and immigration are linked in a statute that provides for the views of provincial governments to be taken into consideration, establishing a system whereby the level of immigration to Canada is a matter of open decision-making by the federal government in consultation with the provinces.

We all know how anxious the hon. members opposite are for the federal government to consult with the provinces on issues of concern to them, and this is in the act. These levels, publicly announced on an annual basis, estimate the number of immigrants the government expects to admit over a specified period of time. Furthermore, it links immigration to Canada's labour market needs and population objectives. While Canadians are being trained, immigration will continue to be one of the routes used to ensure the economy is provided with the workers needed for its expansion. However, immigration is only a partial solution to alleviating the constraints on economic growth. It must go hand in hand with improved training for Canadians, careful manpower planning and the migration of workers from other parts of the country.

In the years to come, Mr. Speaker, we will probably have to increase the number of skilled and professional workers brought in from overseas. Given the length of time required to train Canadians, even if we markedly increased our training efforts it is unlikely we could meet the demands projected for 1985. Just today you will remember that a Conservative member was asking us about PetroCan seeking skilled workers from outside the country simply because enough of them were not available here. Of course, that again, I think, demonstrates the wisdom of the recent program announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to try to meet those needs in Canada.

At the same time we have to ensure that immigration forms only a temporary bridge between labour demand and supply, nothing more. The future development of Canadian industry demands that employers and governments make commitments now which will provide skilled workers for the future. Our training systems must continue to develop and employers must live up to their responsibilities. For these reasons we have built an important safeguard into our immigration policy. Before skilled labour can be recruited from abroad, employers must demonstrate that no Canadians are available to fill vacancies and they must train Canadians to qualify for future openings. I am sure all of us are familiar with the fact that this is pretty well enforced. I am sure very few if any of us have not had employers come to our office and tell us how they had a specific person in mind, but in fact they were obliged to go through the requirements of trying to find a Canadian to fill the job.

The act also allows us to reunite people in this country with their families living abroad. That is an important thing, and this is a humanitarian government which believes in family reunification. Close relatives of Canadian residents receive processing preference as members of the family class.

The act's humanitarian aspects are also reflected in the provisions relating to refugees. They are an admissible class, based on the UN definition of a Convention refugee, and the legislation confirms in law our international obligations towards refugees within our borders. Further, the legislation is flexible enough so that, when warranted, we can admit people on compassionate grounds even when they do not precisely fit the UN refugee definition.

While this law expresses our concern for families and refugees, it also reinforces our responsibility to protect ourselves from those whose admission would pose a threat to the health or safety of Canadians, or whose purpose in entering the country is not legitimate. For example, to discourage people from coming to Canada as visitors with the intention of staying or working illegally, the act requires every visitor wishing to work or study here to obtain the required authorization from a visa officer abroad before seeking admission. And anyone who wants to come to Canada permanently must apply from outside the country and receive an immigrant visa before arriving here. I know the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble) is familiar with that because he was talking about the "Buffalo shuffle".

Protecting Canadian society from criminal activity goes hand in hand with controlling illegal immigration. Aliens who pose a threat to public safety, order and national security are refused admission to Canada, and there are provisions to deal with the threats presented by international terrorism, kidnapping and organized crime. People who are asked to leave Canada have a guarantee of fair treatment through the inquiry process which ensures that the civil rights of those subject to immigration hearings are protected.

Anyone refused entry or asked to leave the country has the right to be heard at an impartial immigration inquiry presided over by an adjudicator. Adjudicators are officers specially trained in immigration law and the relevant parts of civil and criminal law. The adjudicator is there to render an objective decision after carefully weighing evidence presented by both the federal government and the person concerned. That is what I was referring to earlier when I talked about common sense.

If the adjudicator rules in favour of the subject of the inquiry, that person will be allowed to enter or remain in Canada. On the other hand, a ruling in favour of the government will result in the issuance of a deportation order, exclusion order or departure notice.

The act provides for two less drastic alternatives to deportation. Instead of deporting a person at the border for some minor offence like not having all the proper documentation, we can now issue an exclusion order entitling that person to re-apply for admission at a later date. The other alternative is the departure notice, which may be issued to a visitor in Canada who has committed a minor infraction of immigration law and is required to leave. Once the terms of the departure notice have been fulfilled, the person may re-apply for entry at any time.

● (1630)

Despite the act's humane approach, visitors or permanent residents, that is landed immigrants, who deliberately commit serious crimes or major violations of Canadian law are, of course, deported.

The social and demographic realities of a modern world would require an immigration act which recognizes the increasing incidence of threats to our wellbeing, threats such as international terrorism.

However, immigration is a two-way street. Canada's act illustrates how immigration policy can work in the interests of both those who live here and those who wish to do so. There is a balance to be struck, a system which allows reasonable expression in the appropriate circumstances, and allows common sense to be applied. I believe we can do this with the legislation we now have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Good reading, David!

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): I am pleased to speak to Bill C-258 because it also gives me a chance to comment on the Immigration Act and the immigration policies of this country, many of which cause me serious concern.

The proposal to amend the Immigration Act by closing off legal manoeuvers, removing the discriminatory powers of adjudicators and enforcing immediate deportation causes me some concern, and in that respect, our party does not support this bill. We completely agree, of course, that persons who have committed serious criminal acts should not be admitted to Canada and should be immediately dealt with under the law. However, I think the very rigid changes which have been proposed by the hon. member for York North (Mr. Gamble) would have the effect of dealing in a very rigid and punitive way with people who are not criminals in that sense. I would like to say that we do not condone breaking of the law. One may feel humanitarian sympathy for persons who have broken the law, but they must still be dealt with under the law. What I am saying is that it is absolutely essential that the adjudicators exercise flexibility and discretion when dealing with individual cases.

I would like to give some specific examples from my experience as a Member of Parliament. In my riding we frequently deal with immigration cases. Often there are humanitarian considerations which must be taken into account. People must have a chance to be heard, must have a right to due process of appeal and must have a chance to have legal advice and help as well. There may be a situation where the minister might consider a departure notice rather than a deportation decision.

This is very important in a case where there has not been a deliberate criminal act but, rather, an inadvertent mistake. Some people might be allowed to return to Canada at some future date or at least to apply to bring about family unification.

I would like to refer to several cases to illustrate this point. In my riding, an east Indian woman, 22 years of age, overstayed her visit in Canada on a visitor's visa. She overstayed because she had no place else to go. Her family had applied some years ago to come to Canada, and at that time she was a minor. Because of the lack of immigration officers and the inaccessibility to an immigration office in India, there were long delays, and it took some years before the family was able to come to Canada. During this period, of course, she became an adult. She was no longer allowed to come with her family as a minor, and she was unable to come as an individual adult. In this case, it seemed important to me that there be some discretion shown and that she be allowed time to find an alternate place to go or to perhaps re-apply as a landed immigrant. There was some discretion shown in this case.

The second example I recall is the rather famous case of a Chilean, Galindo Madrid, who applied to stay as a political refugee as his life would have been endangered if he returned to Chile. In this case, the minister did extend his permit to stay in Canada. I might say that, to my knowledge, he has been steadily employed and has been a contributing citizen of our country. I might also say that there are many Chilean patriots who have serious concerns and fears with regard to the Immigration Act. This is because some of the sections define people who advocate changes or the overthrow of governments in homelands as undesirable.

Another case involves crew members of a Greek ship which came into Vancouver harbour last year. The ship's master owed back pay to these men. The master had not sent money to the families, as had been promised. The ship later went into receivership. The captain claimed that these men had deserted. The union actually proved that the men had been locked off the ship. In this case, deportation was delayed. Eventually the ship's master and owners were required to pay the return passage of these men back to Greece. However, a real injustice would have been done here if the case had not been processed.

I would like to refer to domestic workers. I recall one woman from Jamaica who overstayed her working visa. She had worked in Ontario, I believe, and eventually came out to British Columbia. She claimed that she did not understand some of the regulations concerning reapplication for an extension of her visa. However, it would perhaps be more valid to look at the situation from a humanitarian point of view. This woman was supporting elderly parents and several children in Jamaica. There was no chance to gain employment at home and her country was in turmoil at that time. Her skills, on the other hand, were needed here. She had many references stating that she was a very productive worker. As it turned out, she was deported; but present legislation would allow her to apply as a landed immigrant here.

Another case concerns a domestic worker from the United Kingdom. She came to Ontario with confirmation of a job. This job fell through, through no fault of her own. She had relatives in Vancouver, so she came to Vancouver. In this case, it seemed much wiser to give her an extension of her visa so that she could get a job in B.C. as a domestic worker. There was no reason to deport her at that point.

I would like to mention the injustice in the history of immigration law in Canada. This was brought to my mind at a recent meeting with the Chinese community of Vancouver. We know that we have a sad history of prejudice and discrimination against Asian immigrants. This was particularly true in the early parts of the century. Indeed, Asians were not allowed to vote in Canada until 1947, I believe. During this period, many people went underground. I think the country was right to acknowledge amnesty years ago and to allow these people to be recognized and to apply for citizenship at that time. I really illustrate this to show that we must have some flexibility. Of course, we must have enforcement of the law as well.

I would like to conclude with a quick summary of some other points in our Immigration Act and the immigration policy of the Liberal government which should have been included in the revisions. I would like to ask that the government give serious consideration to changes.

The Immigration Act itself discriminates against women. The very language of this bill is "he, he, he", all the way through. Women are not treated as individuals. Many women come in family groups, but they are treated as spouses. They do not have rights in their own names. They are in danger of being deported if they happen to separate from their husbands or if they must go on welfare, for example. Domestics are solicited to come to Canada and jobs are made available, but they have no protection. Even so, changes are needed. Women from other countries, whether they are heads of families or single, do not have the same chance to come to Canada as do men, even though they may have training, education, and speak English, and really should meet the point system. If the same woman marries, she is much more likely to come under her husband's qualifications, but not in her own name.

As I mentioned, there are serious questions with regard to the Chileans and the discretionary powers of immigration agents allowing them to decide who should be allowed to come to Canada and who should not. We know how personal judgments can enter into that kind of decision. A person who is not in Canada has no right of appeal, no chance to have an objective reconsideration of his case.

We talk about people who may be judged to be involved in militant activities. Would unions organizers from another country be judged undesirable? How would FBI agents who have tried to overthrow governments of other countries be treated under this act?

Something else that is very sad in dealing with the many persons trying hard to sponsor relatives who have been separated for a long time is that they are not given any reason why the relative is refused admission. The person applying is not given any reason. Why not? Surely that is common justice. Quite frequently they are not allowed to show the documents they have, work permits and so on, when coming from Asia, and there is no chance to appeal.

There are repeated examples of people in Hong Kong and India having to pay for medicals and other services in order to ensure that they will receive proper consideration. They offer to pay so that there will not be a long delay.

I have dealt with many cases affecting Asian immigrants. There is no question but that there is still discrimination against Asian women and those from Third World countries, not in law but in fact. This happens because there is only one immigration centre in India, for example. Those in Hong Kong find it difficult to make application. The people of Tonga cannot afford to fly to a distant country to make application. Those in the Pacific region do not have fair access.

I am proud to say that our party is on record as objecting to the visa requirements for Indian visitors. Indian people arriving at Vancouver airport are often forced to stay there for many hours until their relatives come and pay almost a head tax before they are allowed into this country as visitors. People from Europe are not treated in that way.

There are many other points I would like to make about immigration offices such as the long line-ups in order to obtain an appointment. Often people have to take two days off work just to make a routine application. Immigrants and their relatives are exploited by consultants and lawyers, often paying thousands of dollars for information that could be obtained from immigration services or Members of Parliament.

The refugee situation of the past two or three years has shown that there must be much more government planning in the settlement of people, especially when they come in large groups. It is very important that there be enough housing, especially for people who will settle where there is a shortage of housing and jobs. We do not want Canadians to suffer. We want them to welcome people from other countries, not feel tense about immigrants coming here. There should be a revision of the settlement service and the fee for that service. I have raised this a number of times in the House, but the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) refuses to deal with this in a realistic way.

There should be more services for immigrant women, such as English classes, daycare and job training. However, the minister is cutting off funds for these kinds of programs.

The public media, such as the National Film Board and the CBC should produce more constructive programs opposing racism and promoting cultural relationships. The CTV "W-5" program and the National Film Board film "Bamboo Lions and Dragons" were both a disgrace. I am glad to report that a recent CBC documentary "Golden Mountain" was much more sympathetic toward the plight of the early Chinese when settling in this country.

In conclusion, from our point of view this bill is not worth supporting. However, there are many other changes to the Immigration Act that are vitally needed.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, normally when a government member stands up with 15 minutes remaining in private members' hour, he talks out a bill. This is one bill I would like to talk out. It is not well thought out. However, in this case there are a couple of other government members who want to take this golden opportunity to tell the author of the bill what a bad job he has done. The hon. member says he wants to put some backbone into the Immigration Act. I suggest he should have used the head sitting on top of his backbone before he went to work on this.

Let me point out one or two phrases in the explanatory notes which concern me. I quote directly from the bill:

The Bill would close off certain legal manoeuvres currently available—

What legal manoeuvres? In Clause 2 the hon. member would remove the existing discretion of adjudicators. He would make a deportation order mandatory. Under Clause 3 he would prevent the reopening of an inquiry. Under Clause 4 he would prevent the issuing of ministers' permits. Under Clause 6 he would limit the grounds of appeal, and under Clause 7 he would extend the powers of peace officers and immigration officials to apprehend suspected illegal immigrants without a warrant.

That is why we should not pay very much attention to this kind of legislation. It is a collection of scare tactics. I often run into these kind of scare tactics in my riding. That is why I asked for the opportunity to speak.

In Mississauga we get immigrants from all over the world, and we are pleased to have them. They enrich our community. We get people from India, the Philippines, the West Indies, people who have problems with the Soviet attitude to Jewry, refugees from some Middle East regimes, such as Poland, people from Latin America, as well as the boat people, refugees from Vietnam. How does this kind of legislation appeal to those people? It must terrify them. Thousands of people every year are screened very carefully by our officials. In the vast majority of cases they do a very good job.

What the hon. member has raised are the glaring exceptions, exceptions which he is trying to build up into a house of cards to play on the distorted fears of ordinary people. Let it be clear that thousands of people are handled and treated honestly by our officials, efficiently and carefully, and they are in this country properly.

The kind of fears aroused by the hon. member should not be allowed to go by unchallenged. We need to ask, to what extent do we want to distort our democratic principles for the sake of a few glaring examples. Those glaring examples themselves are entitled under our great democratic tradition to be given the due process of law.

● (1650)

Let me give you just one example from my own riding. In the past year, about 1500 people arrived in Toronto airport and claimed refugee status. These people were Sikhs and they claimed that they wanted to set up their own homeland and that the government of India was politically mistreating them. Now my community was divided by that. There was one congregation, one Sikh temple, that asked the government to treat these people leniently. They were the people taking the middle ground. Then another group, the East-Asian Workers Association, strongly supported the claims of these people, the potential refugees. And many other people—the very parents of the first group—in the Malton Asian Senior Citizens Association—objected to the idea that there could even possibly be any kind of refugee from India at all. They were insulted by the claim. As I say, my community was split by this issue. If the people in the community could not figure it out, how could we ask one of our officials right at the scene at the airport to do so? There is a crush of people arriving. Many times there were 50 or 100 people on an airplane at one time. They have terrible language or cultural difficulties. They do not realize what they are being asked by our officials. And our officials cannot assess the information they are being given.

We do not want those people to be given some kind of a rubber stamp and thrown out of the country arbitrarily. We want to be sure that we treat these people fairly because we are a democratic and civilized country. We want to be absolutely sure. So some were detained because they did not have the money to prove that they would come back. They could not put up a bond. Their relatives would not put up a bond. Less than 10 per cent were detained because financially they were unable to put up a bond. But the rest, over 90 per cent, were let loose into the city of Toronto. Now, one by one, they are being brought back quite properly, quite honestly. They are coming back, facing appeal hearings and talking to our officials in a calm, deliberate, legal fashion and making their case. Some are not winning those cases but they have the right for further appeal. Why do they have that right? Because this is a civilized, democratic country and we do not throw out our proper, democratic, civilized processes in the name of some efficiency that the member from York North might invent.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that in a democracy we have to realize the importance of due process. We cannot let some guy come along and convince us that these shortcuts are worth while. We have to admit that there is room for error in our procedures, and that to be just we have to double-check the way we do things, through proper appeals. We have to allow people to state their case. We must remember, in other words, the very moving reminder that Winston Churchill gave us—and I will paraphrase it—that democracy is an inefficient form of government, but we are going to keep it because we cannot think of anything any better.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be able to comment on this particular bill because I want to say to the Canadian public that it is a bill which is put out in the name of a private member and I know that it does not have the support of the Progressive Conservative Party. I am sure the former member from Egmont and the former member from Hamilton West, who were opposition critics for immigration when I had the honour to bring forward the bill which this one amends, would be appalled at the terms and conditions which are in this particular bill.

Mr. Gamble: Get specific.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member says "Get specific". He mentioned the name of McCarthy, the individual who was thought to be a member of the IRA and was in Vancouver where it cost something like $10,000 to handle that case. Well, he was not picked up because he was here illegally. He was picked up for some minor offence and there was a suggestion that he might be the individual that the RCMP was looking for. He denied that. Let us suppose for a moment that he had not actually been Mr. McCarthy. Let us suppose that he had been someone else. Do you not think that we would have been in a ridiculous situation if we had said, "The Mounties say that this individual is Mr. McCarthy and as far as we are concerned that is good enough for us."? It would not have looked good if we had thrown him out and said he was in here illegally. No, he had what every Canadian has the right to expect and what every person within our borders has the right to expect—due process of law. It cost $10,000, but for the sake of Canadian justice it was worth it. Imagine us picking up this individual and shipping him out of the country. We sure as hell would have done that under the terms of this particular bill. It would not have mattered that perhaps he was the wrong person. We would have had more than egg on our face, Mr. Speaker.

I cannot for the life of me understand how, into the twentieth century, when we try to bring some humanity in an immigration bill, a brand new immigration bill, something like this would be proferred some two or three years later as an improvement. It is a disgrace and thank heaven it is presented by an individual member and not by the opposition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the previous speakers for saving me at least a few minutes and giving me a chance to say that I entirely disagree with the bill presented by my colleague from the Toronto area, the member for York North (Mr. Gamble). I would like to draw his attention to a historical fact.

[English]

I would like to draw his attention at this moment to February 5, 1963, when his party was defeated in the House. It was February 5, 1963. His party was defeated by a vote of 142 to 111. If there is some lesson that we should draw from that—there is a lesson that my colleague, a member on the Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs and National Defence who, I agree, is very active, should draw from that. The lesson is that the kind of views he has expressed in the bill he is introducing today are narrow. I do not say he is narrow-minded, but he is narrow in his approach as to what Canada's immigration policies should be and as to what Canada's immigration policies should be and as to what Canada is all about.

Canada is a land for everybody. Of course, it should be under some responsible direction, there is no doubt about that. But when I hear the statement as it was expressed by the the hon. members, when I hear the other statement as expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) who has just entered the House, I wonder what kind of Canada they want. Is it a Canada for the kind of Canadians they say are best for Canada? These are the words of the hon. member: "We are the kind of people who should enjoy Canada. We should know who are the kind of people we should receive in this country, who should enjoy what we enjoy." But what kind of Canada would we have had we held those views many years ago? Would we have granted in operation "My Country" the famous amnesty which allowed over 60,000 Canadians to regularize their situation in Canada, Canadians who today are extraordinarily good Canadians, contributing to the good of this country by their taxes and by their work? If we were to accept this bill and allow it to become our law, we would not have a good country.

The hon. member knows what my approach is to him and to all hon. members. Instead of arriving and blasting the hon. member, I would only like to have more time to exchange with him some views of what is good policy for immigration. I had the honour to be a member of the joint Senate and House of Commons committee on the green paper and, if I may say to my friends, nothing has been more scrutinized than this act. I was not even happy about it because I believe it is still too narrow in its approach. I wish that we had a more liberal immigration policy. This immigration policy is probably the most scrutinized piece of legislation we have ever had in four years.

There was a committee called the Joint Senate and House of Commons Special Committee on Immigration which studied the green paper. It travelled all across Canada. That was a parliamentary committee that looked into this question. There were also hours and hours of work done by all members from all parties, the hon. member's included, to see if we could not, through give and take, arrive at the kind of law we have today.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, before I am called to order because of the time, I would like to ask my hon. friend kindly to reflect and consider all the implications of what he is trying to propose. This is about the most sensitive issue we talk about, when we talk about immigration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. It being five o'clock the House stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(4).

At 5.02 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HEALTH

STUDY URGED OF RADIATION EXPOSURE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Twenty-five hundred Canadians were exposed to atomic radiation while employed in federal government projects, such as the conducting of nuclear weapons tests in Nevada and the accident cleanup at Chalk River in 1958. The cancer rate in this group has been determined at six times the national average.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That this House instruct the Minister of National Health and Welfare to authorize immediately an impartial, in-depth study, to determine if this exceptionally high rate of cancer is attributable to radiation exposure, and that, since many of the victims are veterans, the results of that study, including the question of compensation, be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs for report and recommendation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO STIMULATE HOUSING CONSTRUCTION AND CREATE EMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to extend our congratulations to the two ministers and the eight members of east central Montreal who had the courage to write to their leader and urge him to admit that the economic situation, which they created themselves, is disastrous, and that the time has come to cope with the alarming problem of unemployment. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That if those ten Liberal members fail to convince the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that he ought to establish immediately a genuine program to stimulate housing construction, and a genuine job-creation program for youths under age 25 rather than a mere snow job on unemployment, I therefore suggest that if those ministers and members are not heard they should resign and thus prove that they are more concerned over the interests of their voters than those of their party.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

STATEMENT MADE BY MEMBER FOR BROADVIEW-GREENWOOD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, in a blatant attempt to portray the Progressive Conservative Party as a party of white Anglo-Saxons, the member from Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), on Friday last made the following statement:

"You won't see a black or hear the French language... or the Italian language in Toryland".

Whereas Tories such as the Berniers, Pianes, Yaremkos, La Salles, Baetz, Alexanders, Grossmans, Brunelles, Yakabuskis, Colbacchins, Shymkos, Leluks, Mazankowskis, Villeneuves, Paproskis, just a few proud members of the PC party, whose support is a primary cause of the demise of the New Democratic Party in Ontario, take great exception to that statement, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House condemns the newly anointed Ontario leader of the NDP for his obvious racist remarks against members and supporters of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR NEW BUDGET DESIGNED TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning an urgent and important matter. Over the weekend, ten Liberal members of the Montreal area urged the federal government to drop its restrictive fiscal policies with a view to adopting measures aimed at fighting unemployment. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the House commend those ten Liberal members for their courage and request that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), the new R.B. Bennett, table a new budget designed to reduce unemployment in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REPORTED STATEMENT MADE BY MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG-ASSINIBOINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, all the more urgent and pressing in view of the motion under Standing Order 43 that was introduced here this afternoon. Last week the hon. member from Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) was quoted in Contrast, a Toronto black community publication, that he condones many of the racial policies of the government of South Africa. It seems the hon. member came to this incredible conclusion following a free three-and-a-half week vacation in South Africa, paid for by the government of South Africa.

Considering that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) last week dissociated himself and his caucus from the remarks of the member, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni):

That in view of the lack of support of his caucus for his repugnant stand, the hon. member from Winnipeg-Assiniboine retract his statements; failing this, that this House urge the caucus of the Progressive Conservative Party to expel the member from their ranks, forthwith.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR CHANGING CROWSNEST PASS RATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, in spite of the recent promise to develop an economic strategy for the 1980s, today we had an announcement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on the Crow rate, which merely transfers the costs from the government to the wheat producer. Therefore I move:

That this House urge the government to assume its responsibility for future inflation, which it itself induces, on the movement of grain, which cost had been guaranteed under the Crow rate up until now.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED RETURN TO CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the zero growth policy espoused by both the Liberal and New Democratic parties has proved to be such a miserable failure, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That Canada now return to the progressive policies of the Clark government which were designed to increase employment, reduce interest rates, restore the stability of the Canadian dollar and stop the drain of money and jobs out of the country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

CONSULTATION URGED PRIOR TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. During these times of depression level investor confidence, increasing business bankruptcies and government indecision, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) recently indicated that he may again alter the terms of the small business bond. It was altered first on November 12, changed again on December 18, clarified in the latter part of January, and now is likely to be further altered. Canadians will not invest if the government continues to change the investment rules. Therefore, in an effort to establish stability and investor confidence, I move, seconded by the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish):

That this House urge the government to consult with parties involved in proposed legislation prior to its introduction, so that the government can avoid the embarrassment of continually having to change the rules of the game, which fuels the present climate of government indecision, instability and incompetence.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CALL FOR REPUDIATION OF CANADA-U.S.S.R. FRIENDSHIP PROTOCOL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, in light of the announced intention of the United States and the United Kingdom, two of Canada's partners in NATO, to apply sanctions against the U.S.S.R. for the role that country is playing in strengthening the hand of the military junta in Poland, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That this House instructs the Prime Minister to repudiate forthwith the Canada-U.S.S.R. Friendship Protocol which he and Mr. Kosygin signed in Moscow in May, 1971, under the terms of which the two countries indicated their determination "to go on developing political and economic co-operation" and to expand "ties and exchanges in the fields of economy, trade, science, technology, culture and northern development".

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

DEMAND FOR REINSTATEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Liberal Party is full of bleeding hearts, and lawlessness is running rampant throughout Canada. We pay Olson, who murdered 11 innocent young people, $90,000 and make a newspaper hero of him. A young boy was murdered in Ontario, and two young women were brutally murdered in the High River-Okotoks area, their bodies soaked in gasoline and burnt beyond recognition. A majority of Canadians want capital punishment reinstated, but the Liberals say "No". How many more have to be murdered before the government wakes up? Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That the House demands that the government bring in a bill to reinstate capital punishment at once, instituting punishment commensurate with the crime.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

VOTING RECORD OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that both the Liberal and Conservative parties are now on record in support of continued high interest rates, and that Canadian workers, consumers and small businesses are suffering serious harm at the hands of the "Clark-Trudeau" coalition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: They are getting jumpy; they do not like the facts. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That the leader of the Tory party explain its dismal voting record, in voting 20 times with the Liberals since October, while the NDP has voted 22 times with the Tories and only 13 times with the government.

Perhaps the Tories wish to purge "Joe Who" to make room for "Pierre" as the leader of the party in Canada with a room temperature IQ.

COMPENSATION FOR GROCERS REVERTING TO IMPERIAL MEASUREMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Metric Commission has finally seen fit to set up $300,000 in Supplementary Estimates (C) of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to reimburse the retail grocers of Peterborough for their total costs of converting back to imperial measurement in weigh scales from the metric weigh scale measurement. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That this government also set up sufficient funds to assist retail grocers from British Columbia to Newfoundland in their conversion back to imperial measurement, if they should experience the same difficulties with metric as grocers did in Peterborough.

THE ECONOMY

ADVICE GIVEN BY QUEBEC MINISTERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who will know that two of his cabinet colleagues, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of State from Quebec, have broken cabinet solidarity and have publicly joined the demand for action to start fighting unemployment now and for changes in the government's budget. Is the Prime Minister going to heed their advice or is he going to ask for their resignations?

● (1415)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has a curious definition of breaking cabinet solidarity. The ministers in question, and I believe a few backbenchers, signed a letter just taking up the Minister of Finance on a proposal that he had made in Toronto in suggesting that he consider certain remedial actions. If I can quote from the address of the Minister of Finance made in Toronto on January 25, he said this:

> This is not to minimize the importance of the very considerable resources which the government is devoting to job creation within the existing fiscal framework. Fiscal restraint does not and will not prohibit the government from taking targeted and specific measures to improve growth, productivity, and investment.

That some members of our caucus should have decided to suggest what some of those targets and specific measures should be, does not seem to me, Madam Speaker, a breach of cabinet solidarity, or indeed, of caucus solidarity.

Mr. Crosbie: Juvenility.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR BUDGETARY POLICY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister referred to two ministers, one of them a very senior minister, both of whom are absent from the House today, and what he referred to disparagingly as just "a few backbenchers"—those few backbenchers number eight—which makes a total of ten at least who have taken issue with the government's policy and broken the support which governments usually find on budgetary matters.

The question which the Prime Minister has raised is whether or not members who have broken solidarity, and ministers who have broken it, are acting within the context of cabinet solidarity. The Prime Minister will know that there have been two statements on the budget made by senior ministers, one by the Minister of Finance in this House on Friday who said:

> It would be tempting, but I think foolhardy, to undertake short-term palliatives or quick fixes which might give the appearance of action but which, down the road, would add further to the unemployment situation.

That is the view of the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of State, and at least eight colleagues—we do not know how many more are with them and against the minister in the Liberal caucus—said that they are convinced that measures to alleviate unemployment in the home construction industry and to alleviate the youth unemployment problem must be adopted right now, as such moves cannot wait for the results of a long-term economic policy. Those are two absolutely different views on the budget. May I ask the Prime Minister who speaks for the Government of Canada on budgetary matters?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe I dealt with the matter of cabinet solidarity. The Leader of the Opposition does not care to refer to the quotation I just gave of what the Minister of Finance said on January 25, followed up, as I say, by this request for specific action. I think the Leader of the Opposition is engaging in some somewhat byzantine attempts to find fissures in this caucus as a distraction to looking behind him and seeing his split caucus behind him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: That is a Mickey Mouse explanation.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Look behind and around you, Allan.

STATEMENT MADE BY PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, then let me ask the Prime Minister whether the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, that beleaguered gentleman from whom we hear more than he would like, because his minister does not have the courage to stand in the firing line himself, was speaking for the government when he said, in response to these specific proposals put forward by two cabinet ministers and eight other Liberal Members of Parliament, that the programs they were proposing would create worse problems in future. Is that a position of the Government of Canada? Was the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance speaking for the government when he rejected categorically the proposal by two cabinet ministers and eight Liberal Members of Parliament?

Mr. Crosbie: What about that, Pierre?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is another example of the exiguousness in which the Leader of the Opposition is engaging, that is, a comparison of texts. He can continue this game.

● (1420)

I can assure him that the position of the Minister of Finance is supported in the very letter to which he refers, a letter which indicates the government is on the right macroeconomic course, and which suggests certain specific actions of which the Minister of Finance spoke.

The parliamentary secretary is perfectly justified in suggesting there should be no departure from the macroeconomic stance and there should be no massive injection of public printed dollars into the economy at this time. I am happy to continue this examination of the text, Madam Speaker, but it is the reality on this side which is more important to me, the fact that this cabinet and caucus are very much united.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What is the reality?

Mr. Nielsen: You would not recognize reality if you fell over it.

REQUESTS FOR CHANGES IN BUDGET

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Speaking of reality, I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell us how many—we know of ten—of his cabinet colleagues and caucus members not in cabinet have been in touch with him asking for changes in the budget. Could he give us a figure?

Mr. Crosbie: That is macroeconomics for you.

Mr. Nowlan: It is macaroni economics, not macroeconomics.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition continues to insist that the letter asks for a change in the budget. Let me read from the third paragraph of that letter dated February 3.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Table it. It is an historic document.

Mr. Trudeau: The letter has been made public, Madam Speaker. The members themselves indicate that they are—Madam Speaker, the letter says:

[Translation]

As members for central and eastern Montreal, we realize that any real and durable but long-term improvement of the employment situation can only be achieved by controlling inflation.

[English]

That is exactly the position of the Minister of Finance and of this government, Madam Speaker. I would ask the Leader of the Opposition and his party to realize, once and for all, that if inflation is high the first thing we must do is bring it down.

Mr. Crosbie: Bring down the government is the thing to do.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, the hon. member for St. John's West is now waxing nostalgic and talking about bringing down governments.

Mr. Crosbie: Look where it got us.

Mr. Trudeau: From his lofty perch in External Affairs I would hope he would reflect a little more on what he said about the people of Gabon last year—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and study the subject a little more.

EMPLOYMENT

PROGRAM PUT FORWARD BY QUEBEC—PROPOSAL THAT MINISTERS HOLD DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I shall, if I may, continue reading the extract from the third paragraph read to us by the Right Hon. Prime Minister after he acknowledged that his policy depended on controlling inflation. The ten members, two of them ministers, also said:

However, we believe that it is possible, without overstimulating the economy, to create jobs now in certain critical sectors.

The sectors are specified in the letter. Also considering, Madam Speaker, that last week, the Right Hon. Prime Minister received proof that the ten premiers had completely lost faith in his basic philosophy regarding the economy, and that the province of Quebec proposed a program that would prevent and put a stop to the rash of factory shutdowns—a $200 million program to which Quebec is prepared to contribute $50 million—is the Right Hon. Prime Minister willing, in the circumstances and following representations made by his own members and ministers, to at least send one of these two ministers to discuss the program with Quebec, keeping in mind the best interests of Quebec as well?

● (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, every week the government has been announcing job-creation measures. Last week, the minister responsible for advanced technology was investing something like $90 million in the development of technology-based industries. Today, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced a program to create jobs in the forestry industry. The Minister of Finance, in speeches to which I referred earlier, pointed out that something like $60 billion would be spent over the next five years to create employment. The minister invited the members of our caucus, who accepted the invitation, to indicate the critical sectors where they would like to see some action. And I shall repeat once again what the minister said on January 25: "Fiscal restraint does not and will not prohibit the government from taking targeted and specific measures to improve growth, productivity and investment."

So once again, if the official opposition wishes to make concrete proposals, we shall welcome them. Such proposals are even more welcome when they come from this side of the House, and I hope that our Liberal members will continue to propose constructive measures for job creation, unlike the endless nitpicking and unrealistic arguing indulged in by those on the opposite side.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have the distinct impression that the Prime Minister does not realize that Canada is going to lose another 175,000 jobs by next month, according to a study by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. I do not think the Prime Minister realizes that 40 per cent of the jobs lost will be in Quebec.

In the circumstances, I would ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister whether he is ready to discuss, or at least to send a member of his cabinet to discuss, the program being proposed by Quebec, which has the support of other provincial premiers. It is clear that the present government's policy is a failure, as Yvon Guay said today in the newspaper La Presse, and only the Prime Minister still thinks he is the sole repository of the truth in this respect.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, this is another little speech, not a question, by the member opposite, but since he mentioned Quebec, I should take this opportunity of giving another example, this very minute, of a statement by the Ministers of Energy, Mines and Resources and National Defence, who, with the hon. member for Bellechasse, announced a further contribution of $5 million to a gasification plant program at St-Just-de-Bretenières in the province of Quebec.

Every day, and sometimes several times a day, we have been announcing new projects. The members opposite would rather discuss their concept of the budget and their concept of reality instead of looking at what is being done by the government and encouraging its efforts.

RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ABANDONMENT OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Beatty: Ed for leader!

Mr. Broadbent: A crucial part of the bargain of confederation for our prairie provinces has been the maintenance of the historic Crow rate. The Prime Minister has said in this House that this rate would not be changed unless there were a substantial consensus for so doing. In light of this I would like to ask the Prime Minister how the government can justify the announcement in Winnipeg today that the Crow rate is to be abandoned without at least having formal meetings with the prairie-provincial governments, at least two of which are on record as opposing changes in the Crow rate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is correct in suggesting that there is no unanimity concerning what should be done about the Crow. However, in all parties there is a difference of view between some people and other people. We do not have unanimity, but we have a large consensus which indicates that it is time to cease backing these reactionary ideas put forward by the New Democratic Party and to look to the future and to look to progress.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: These people are willing to engage with the government in the examination of some positive steps, not to get rid of the Crow, but, rather, to improve—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —the situation in the west so that the grain movement in the west, as well as the movement of potash and other commodities, will be made possible by a modernization of the rail system and of the whole transportation system in the west.

The hon. member quotes two premiers who do not agree with two other western premiers. If he had been talking a month ago, it would have been three premiers in favour of reopening the Crow. Now it is two. I remind the Leader of the New Democratic Party that last week, at the public session of the first ministers' conference, I asked the western premiers whether they could agree among themselves and whether they were attempting to agree among themselves on what should be done to the Crow. There was no answer.

● (1430)

There is no intention among them to reach an agreement because they are divided on this matter. That is why the federal government, since it is responsible for railways and many aspects of grain transportation, must take the initiative a bit more courageously than the NDP would do, show some leadership and indicate ways in which this whole matter, after some 80 or 90 years, can be looked at again so that transportation in the west can be brought into the twentieth century, rather than once again taking the reactionary view of the NDP and hanging on to the past as though it will be our master for all time.

INVITATION TO GOVERNMENT TO ATTEND MEETING IN REGINA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in the Prime Minister's answer he clearly revealed why the Liberal Party in this country has only two seats in all of western Canada.

Considering that his government was invited to a meeting that is taking place next week in Regina, in which all the western governments will be participating, and the Government of Canada has been invited to participate to discuss grain handling, including the Crow, why is it that this government, which has talked about the need for consensus, turned down the invitation to this meeting in which it would have a thorough opportunity to meet with the premiers and discuss why, at least from their perspective as western Canadians, it is absolutely essential to maintain the Crow rate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the answer to that is very simply that for years I have been attempting to get the western premiers to discuss this matter and to reach a consensus on it. Since the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in the early 1970s, we have been trying to come to grips with this. As the hon. member just said, the western premiers cannot agree among themselves in this area, which is largely under federal jurisdiction. That is why we decided to move.

As to the suggestion by Premier Blakeney to have a meeting in Regina on this subject, I think it is a little late in the day. He knows that for years we have been trying to get this matter discussed with them. He prefers to have a meeting on an area essentially under federal jurisdiction which he convenes, and to which he summons us to attend, and for which he no doubt thinks he will get a lot of electoral support in the west. Maybe that is possible. However, we have not made this an electoral matter. The proof is that the hon. member reminds us that we do not have many members in the west.

We are trying to find in the west a solution to a 90-year-old problem, a solution which will bring the transportation system into the end of the twentieth century, rather than once again thinking that there can be no possible change to something that was agreed to in the late 1890s without incurring the wrath of the reactionary sitting NDP.

REASONS FOR DECLINING INVITATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister may think that his smart-aleck rhetoric about reactionary or any other equivalent term will carry weight among his backbenchers. I can assure him it means nothing to the people of Canada. Since the Prime Minister said there should be an attempt for consensus, and since the Conservative government of Alberta will be attending the conference, as well as the Social Credit government of British Columbia, and the two NDP governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, why is the federal Liberal Party of Canada so arrogant and indifferent that it is turning down an offer to sit down and discuss this seriously with the representatives of western Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is showing an interest in this matter very late in the day. I have told him that for years we have been attempting to discuss this matter and to create a consensus among the premiers. We have not managed to move Premier Blakeney from his stand that nothing must be done to the Crow. Therefore, the purpose of this meeting is one which I can only suspect has been based on crass electoralism.

Mr. Broadbent: Find out!

Mr. Trudeau: We are finding out, but not in this context. I believe it is next Monday that the members of the western affairs committee will be sitting down with the Manitoba cabinet to discuss this very matter. We are willing to discuss it, but we do not think it should be an occasion for grandstanding. That is why we are continuing to discuss it in this way.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROTECT WESTERN GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The statement of the Minister of Transport this morning in Winnipeg ostensibly freezes the federal government's contribution to the railways with respect to the shortfall between the Crow rate and the compensatory rate at the 1981-82 level. This places the burden of future increases in rates on the producers which, by 1987, will be in the neighbourhood of half a billion dollars. The minister is aware that, because of the high input costs, the high interest rates and low prices for grain, the western grain producers are in serious financial difficulty.

The minister is responsible for the welfare of the western farmer. I would ask him what guarantees he is prepared to give to protect the interests of the western grain producer. Has he discussed with his cabinet colleagues the disastrous effect that this government policy, of throwing the burden on the grain producers, will have on the financial future of the grain producers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I disagree with the hon. member's statement that we have decided to throw the burden on the grain producer. That is not factual. We are asking the grain producer to share part of the burden of the cost of transportation. If we continue with the same old program, which will be 85 years old this year, and a lot of the other programs in agriculture that we used 85 years ago, I am sure the hon. member realizes as well as I do that we would not be producing anything like as much as we are producing in Canada today.

This has to be changed. By the year 1985 we would not even be paying 20 per cent of the cost of grain transportation. By the year 1990 we would only be paying 7 per cent of the cost of grain transportation. I met with many hundreds of farmers in western Canada and discussed this issue with them. I found a consensus there that they are willing to talk, negotiate, and accept some change.

Yes, I was in cabinet when we discussed this. I have been a proponent of adjusting the Crow rate for many months, actually several years. I proposed that an adjustment in the Crow rate take place. We are not saying that we are going to abandon the farmers under this program. When the hon.

member studies it, he will realize that it is a pretty fair program.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OFFER TO RESIGN ON ISSUE

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would like to continue this questioning with the Minister of Agriculture. I introduce my question by saying that this morning the Prime Minister announced a pretty wide-ranging power to ministers to disagree with cabinet colleagues without being kicked out of the government. In view of that, will the minister take a hard look at the statement made by the Minister of Transport today in Winnipeg and accept my word, and I am sure the word of any person who looks at it objectively, that the Minister of Transport's statement this morning is a complete betrayal of the recommendations of the Hall commission report? Whether he likes it or not, and no matter how many farmers he may talk to, it is the Magna Carta of western Canada, and he should not forget that.

Second, the statement by the minister betrays what this Parliament decreed in the National Transportation Act of 1967.

● (1440)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry that the hon. member must be called back to order, but he is really making a speech and not asking a question.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, I apologize to the House for taking longer than my usual 20 seconds. However, as the minister knows, this is a very important matter.

Would the minister accept my question with all fairness and honesty and consider what he has just said in answer to the hon. member for Moose Jaw, because the farmers have only one person to look to, and that is the Minister of Agriculture. They do not trust any other western minister. Would the minister stand and say that he will consider this again, that if this is a betrayal, as the conclusion will be, he is willing to offer his resignation as a sign of championship on the part of the farmers of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I have been involved in practically every discussion we have had in government, and many discussions outside of government, about the Crowsnest Pass rates. I do not feel that it is a betrayal when one studies the complete program. I do not feel it is a betrayal when one studies the need for the diversification of agriculture in the west, the things needed to encourage that kind of processing to take place in the west, the kind of development that is needed in the west, and the kind of improvement needed for the railroads.

I cannot accept what the hon. member has said—at one stage, maybe several years ago, it might have been a betrayal, but I think that it would be a betrayal not to do anything about the Crowsnest Pass rate, to accept and go along with the old program, the old agreement of 1897 and not move ahead. If we did all things like that in our country we would not be the envy of the world for our agricultural industry.

I say that we have to move ahead with this program. I have said that from the very beginning in all the discussions in which we have been involved. It will be a fair program. It must be that kind so that our grain producers are not put at a disadvantage with any other grain producers in any part of the world with whom we are competing. I am satisfied that this program is that.

HALL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION TO ESTABLISH PRAIRIE RAIL AUTHORITY

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, the minister has made a direct challenge to me on this point, and I am going to put it right to him. Will he recommend to the government that the recommendation of the Hall commission be accepted, that there be a prairie rail authority set up by the federal government—this is a federal issue, not a provincial issue—to take over those 2,000 miles of lines on which there are losses, run them by the federal government through this authority and show the railways how to make money out of them?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, of course, the intent is that all parts of our society, whether they be railways, farmers, business people or miners, make money. That is the idea. Profit is not a bad word in our party as far as we are concerned.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: We want the railways to make a profit. I am willing to wait for the negotiator to finish his discussions and bring back the recommendations to us on what he thinks should be done. He will hold discussions across the prairies. The negotiations will take place with this person, whom, I am sure, the hon. member also knows and highly respects. He will be the main person involved in the negotiations. I am willing to wait, because we want it as quick as we can. I wanted those rates adjusted last year but we were not successful in getting it before the people early enough. So, we had further and longer discussions to make sure more people understood what we were trying to do, and also to make sure that we understood what more people wanted us to do. I think we are making that kind of proposition now. The negotiator will tell us better later.

THE ECONOMY

INQUIRY WHETHER MEASURES TO STIMULATE HOUSING CONSTRUCTION AND CREATE JOBS WILL BE PROPOSED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and it concerns the letter sent to him by the ten members for central and eastern Montreal. No, I can assure you, Madam Speaker, I am not going to play petty politics like the Leader of the Opposition tried to do when he quoted only certain parts of our letter, thus glossing over our support for the government's policy. I should like to know what results can be expected following this request which stresses incentives for housing construction and job creation for young people. I should therefore like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will give this letter the attention it deserves?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, in fact I referred to it earlier when I indicated that the Minister of Finance, in his statement on January 25 in Toronto, had pointed out that a number of concrete programs would have to be considered, and the letter referred to by the hon. member provides an example of those programs. I can assure him that the Minister of Finance and the government will consider the letter's recommendations with an open mind.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

EX-SERVICEMEN'S EXPOSURE TO NUCLEAR RADIATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that two independent studies which were released indicate that veterans who were involved in nuclear exercises are showing 500 per cent to 600 per cent increased incidence of cancer over the normal population, and as a result of Allan Solomon, former chairman of the pension commission, asking two years ago that a thousand members of the armed forces be told the amount of radiation to which they were exposed, recognizing that early detection of cancer might preserve their lives, would the minister indicate and make a commitment to the House that he is prepared to notify quickly those members of the Armed Forces who were exposed to radiation, of the amount of radiation to which they were exposed, and advise them that close consultation with their family physicians would be advisable?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, in answer to the question by the hon. member, I would say that any individual can receive through his physician the radiation levels to which he was exposed during his activity, specifically in relation to the two occasions in the Chalk River cleanups and for those individuals who were involved in the Nevada testing. Their family physicians can request and receive the radiation levels as recorded by Atomic Energy of Canada in both occasions.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT MEDICAL STUDY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, the chairman of the pension commission had asked the government to move quickly in notifying these people. I ask the minister to make a commitment to notify those individuals in order that they can identify causes of degenerative disease.

Many of those records were destroyed. Many were inaccurate, and we even learned on the news today that they were falsified in the United States.

Many of the diseases are also of a degenerative nature, circulatory and others, not just cancer. Since we are dealing with a very unique group of individuals, would the minister make a commitment that he will support an independent and comprehensive study of those former members of the Armed Forces and their families?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, a study which was commissioned by AECL is presently taking place on approximately 10,000 of their employees involved in activities such as the Chalk River clean-up and the Nevada testing. Approximately 300 of the Royal Canadian Air Force Anti-Nuclear Defence Group are also involved in that test group. I can also indicate to the hon. member that the study is progressing quite favourably and we anticipate the preliminary findings will be available sometime in early April.

I am more than happy to pursue with my colleagues, the Minister of Defence and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the question as to what further steps should be taken in this matter.

CRITERIA APPLIED TO COMPENSATION APPLICATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. How can the minister refuse compensation to veterans such as Bjarnie Paulson and the members of the Association of Veterans of the RCAF Nuclear Defence Group when, at the same time, Lieutenant Colonel O.R. Browne, of Victoria, B.C. has been receiving a disability pension since 1971 for cancer which he contracted by handling radioactive cobalt during his service? Will the minister now agree to apply the same criteria to the many other veterans in their struggle for compensation for cancer they contracted as a result of atomic radiation, as were applied to Colonel Browne's case?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I was not aware that different criteria have been applied by the Canadian Pension Commission in assessing all of those cases. As the hon. member can appreciate, the criteria being applied as to whether or not the present condition is associated with military service, and the rules, are applied consistently to all members who make application.

DISTRIBUTION OF INFORMATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if he would supply these veterans who are having this cancer problem with information about the same routine Colonel Browne used when he was able to obtain his pension because he contracted cancer 12 years ago? Will the minister distribute that information to those veterans immediately?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, we are more than happy to assist any veteran in making his application to the commission. I am not completely familiar with the process used by the gentleman in question, but I am certainly prepared to advise our pension advocates and the various organizations which support veterans' applications to the commission, of the specific details.

AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY

INCREASE IN IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. With 18,000 Canadian auto workers laid off, in addition to another 38 per cent of those who at one time were employed in the auto parts business in Canada, is the Prime Minister aware that last year Japanese truck imports were up 106 per cent compared with the year before, that car imports from that country were up 26 per cent, and that that compares with Japanese truck imports into the United States which fell 8 per cent and car imports which fell 3 per cent? If the Prime Minister is aware of that rather startling difference between Canada and the United States, would he agree that the two agreements, the one between Japan and the United States and the one between Canada and Japan, have not worked to the advantage of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must confess that I do not know the details of those statistics, but it does not seem to me that the conclusion stated by the hon. member follows from the premise. There are many other circumstances which could explain Canada's difficult economic situation, and the main one I can think of is the high rate of inflation and the fact that we are no longer competitive with many of our competitors. That is why we believe it is the first task of this government to bring the inflation rate down. That is why we made a concrete suggestion in that direction to the first ministers' meeting last week. It is a suggestion which I also put to members of the opposition, and I wish they would give it their considered thinking.

NEGOTIATION OF IMPORT QUOTA LIMITATIONS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, undoubtedly the Prime Minister is aware that representatives of his government are now in Japan negotiating a new arrangement with respect to auto imports from Japan into this country, and bearing in mind that last year 23 per cent of the auto sales in Canada were Japanese cars, would the Prime Minister indicate whether his delegation intends to have trucks included for the first time in any import limitations? Second, may we anticipate a lower quota than the 174,000 which was supposed to be the limit under the existing contract?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I was aware of this meeting in Tokyo. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce referred to it at last week's conference. I am not aware of the details of the negotiations, nor whether trucks are being discussed at that meeting. I will be happy to take notice on behalf of the minister, but I must repeat to the hon. member that, over the longer run, the salvation of the economy will not come by reducing international trade or by increasing protectionism one against the other.

Mr. Stevens: Tell that to the unemployed.

Mr. Trudeau: Canada's future as an exporting nation must essentially be in the direction of remaining competitive, and I repeat my previous statement to the hon. member that unless we agree amongst ourselves in this country to fight together the evil of inflation rather than looking at short-term painlessness, we will not be successful in breaking into international markets on a larger scale than we have.

FORESTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER PROGRAM OF ASSISTANCE WILL BE OFFERED TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the joint announcement which he made today with the Ontario Minister of Natural Resources concerning a program to help Ontario forestry workers, would the minister tell the House whether this program could apply to other regions, and more specifically, whether there have been any discussions with the government of New Brunswick, where this industry is also facing very serious problems?

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I was very pleased today to be able to announce an agreement with the province of Ontario in relation to the provision of joint assistance that will bring several thousand forestry workers in that province back to employment in the very important areas of reforestation and development of the forest industries. I can tell the hon.

member for Gloucester that the same proposal is available to any other provincial government across Canada. If they have proposals by which we could engage in using funds under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act along with provincial contributions, we could put a number of workers in the forest industry back to work in local projects. We are also prepared to look at other work-creation projects of a similar kind which could be funded under the criteria of that program. We can use that fund as a way of enabling a number of workers in many of our key natural resource sectors to go back to work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

APPLICATION BY ONTARIO HYDRO TO INCREASE EXPORT OF ELECTRICITY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment, and it has to do with proposals Ontario Hydro has had before the National Energy Board for seven, eight or ten days. First, I would like to ask the minister why the federal argument was so pitifully weak in opposing Ontario Hydro's application to increase the sale of electricity to New Jersey—which, indeed, will increase acid precipitation in Ontario and in the United States—when Ontario Hydro's submission was so strong?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I question the assumption in the hon. gentleman's question. The original presentation by Environment Canada to the National Energy Board was indeed brief, but that representation was supplemented the following week by very considerable depositions of both material and expert testimony, which were very full and, I believe, effective.

INSTALLATION OF ANTI-POLLUTION DEVICES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, if the deal goes through, the result will be an increase in acid precipitation coming out of such plants as Nanticoke, and that will go directly into Pennsylvania and upstate New York. In view of the fact that that will destroy completely the credibility of the acid rain subcommittee, which spent several hundred thousand dollars of taxpayers' money to produce an excellent report a few months ago, as well as destroy our credibility in the United States, what measures will the minister take now at the cabinet level to make sure Ontario Hydro does not increase exports of power to the United States before the federal government has assurances that scrubbers will be placed on Nanticoke or any other thermal generating power plant in Ontario, and that acid rain precipitation will not increase but in fact decrease, which would be in keeping with the acid rain report?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, we have made it very clear on several occasions that we are entirely opposed to this application because of the consequences the hon. member has described. Indeed, we made that abundantly clear last week in reply to questions in the House of Commons. I suspect the hon. member would be one of the first to complain if I were to attempt to pre-empt procedures which are already established for the hearing of these questions before the National Energy Board. We have made the case there as effectively as we could. I am confident of the validity of that case. We must now await the decision of the National Energy Board and, if necessary, we will then consider whether further actions need to be taken.

THE JUDICIARY

REQUEST THAT WOMAN BE APPOINTED TO SUPREME COURT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In our 114 years of history there never has been a woman appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada. This week a vacancy will be created by the resignation of Mr. Justice Martland. Given that women have served with distinction in the superior and supreme courts of the provinces since 1969, will the Prime Minister now take this opportunity available to him to appoint a qualified woman, of whom there are a number, to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is, of course, right in referring to the distinguished role many women have played in the superior and appeal courts of our provinces, and she will recall that just about every one of them was appointed by this government, so she can be assured that in the consideration of the upcoming vacancy in the Supreme Court of Canada we will be as objective and openminded as regards the sexes as we were in relation to those previous appointments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMBALANCE IN APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, there are some 666 federally appointed judges throughout Canada, of whom only 26 are women, even though the number of qualified women in the legal profession has increased significantly in the last number of years. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps now to rectify the imbalance in these appointments. At the present time 96 per cent of the appointments are men, while only 4 per cent are women. He now has a very real opportunity to begin to redress this imbalance, because there are 23 vacancies in judicial appointments at the present time.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I believe that we are making a major effort in this area, and I am pleased to be able to say to the hon. member that, in the last 22 months, we have appointed more women judges than during any other period and under any other government since Confederation. We always consider women for appointment to the bench and we are always very happy to appoint them. However, as I have stated several times in committee, the problem is that most women lawyers were called to the Bar not so long ago. I believe that there has been a substantial increase in the number of women judges in the last few years. As I have pointed out, we have appointed more women judges in the last 20 months than during the mandate of any other Minister of Justice. We always try to find qualified candidates for the bench, and we are even more pleased when a woman is appointed.

MISS MACDONALD—POLAND—IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid on the Table the one hundred and seventy-fourth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), on Friday, February 5, 1982, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DESIGNATION OF MINISTERIAL PORTFOLIOS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, you will recall that on Friday I flagged the possibility of responding to the remarks of the government House leader in connection with past practices and procedure involved in making statements or announcements with respect to changes in the ministry.

While I can accept Madam Speaker, that it is up to ministers to make statements if they wish, there are certain circumstances, in my submission, where by custom and by precedent, which I have to cite, that out of respect to the House a statement on motions is clearly required.

The practice of making cabinet shuffles of importance without a statement was raised last Friday. In fact, there is a Beauchesne's fourth edition citation which clarifies precedent here. I would like to refer the Chair to page 83 of that fourth edition of Beauchesne's, where it becomes apparent in Subparagraph (2) of Paragraph 89 that this practice has extended all the way back to 1889, when Parliament first dealt with the matter.

I quote Subparagraph (3) of the fourth edition:

> When changes of portfolio between ministers do not involve any question of principle, it does not seem that the Prime Minister is bound to explain them in the House.

It goes on to quote Todd:

> Todd, in the chapter dealing with the ministers' responsibility to Parliament, in the 2nd volume of his work, "Parliamentary Government in England", page 487, says: "But the House has no right to ask for more than a general exposition of the main principles on which a government is formed.

There is no doubt, in my submission, Madam Speaker, that in this instance a major reorganization did take place. External affairs is now subject to a whole new philosophy and has three ministers instead of one. There is a new approach to the departments of industry and regional expansion. Indeed, there were 21 order in council changes to implement the shuffle. Clearly, in my submission, Madam Speaker, the well established practice and precedent should have been followed, where there was a statement or an explanation given on motions.

I would like to cite briefly four separate extracts from Hansard where this practice has been acknowledged, carrying on from my Beauchesne's citation, and bring it up to date. In Hansard for May 5, 1969, at page 8292, it will be seen under the heading "The Ministry, Announcement of Changes", the Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister), said:

> I should like to inform the House of certain changes in the ministry which shall take effect as of today.
> It has been my pleasure to recommend to His Excellency the Governor General the appointment of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Jamieson) as Minister of Transport.

He continued:

> May I carry on, Mr. Speaker? The portfolio of Minister of Supply and Services has been assumed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Richardson).

Then there are other and further changes as will appear from that precedent.

I might say, Madam Speaker, that that precedent dealt with changes that were effective that day, as compared with the changes in subparagraph (2) of Paragraph 89 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which dealt with changes which were made during recess. Then, on the first available occasion when the House returned, the Prime Minister of the day rose to make an announcement of those changes. That is the nature of the second precedent that I cite for consideration.

At page 8929 of Hansard for May 22, 1969, again under the heading "The Ministry, Readjustment of Ministerial Functions", the Prime Minister, having dealt with the matter of the return to the House, after a prolonged illness, of the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, went on to say that that minister would bear full executive responsibility for the broad subject area of mines and geosciences, which included several other functions. Then he went on, in the second column, to list other changes that he was making in the ministry. Those changes occurred as a result of the shifting of responsibilities because of the illness of the minister.

My third citation is from Hansard for October 5, 1970, page 8706, again under the heading "The Ministry, Announcement of Changes—Appointment of Parliamentary Secretaries." Here I would ask the Chair to pay particular attention to the words used by the Prime Minister on that occasion. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, as is customary, I should like to inform the House of certain changes in the ministry since the House recessed on June 26, 1970.

Then he listed some rather extensive changes that he had made in the ministry during the recess. He took the first opportunity to make the explanation of those changes in the House.

I might say that in all of these citations, the previous three and this last one which I am about to quote, there was an opportunity to respond, as Beauchesne's sets forth there is, but the opportunity that was taken resulted in a very brief response by the leaders of the opposition parties of that day.

The last citation that I submit for consideration by the Chair is set forth in Hansard for Friday, February 18, 1972 at page 15. Again it is under the heading "The Ministry, Announcement of Changes—Tributes and Best Wishes to Member for Niagara Falls on Recovery from Illness". Here again I draw these particular words to the attention of the Chair, the words of the Prime Minister on that occasion. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, as is customary, I should like to inform the House of certain changes made in the ministry since the recess began on January 12, 1972.

Then by far the most extensive changes in the ministry which up until that time had taken place were announced by the minister, wherein the minister of national defence, the minister of finance, the minister for manpower and immigration, the minister of energy, mines and resources, the minister of public works, the minister of state for urban affairs, and so on, were shifted.

It was customary on these four occasions at the very least—and on two of them when Parliament returned from recess—for the government, through the Prime Minister, to announce changes in its ministry. On two of those occasions where changes were extensive, as I submit that they certainly were here, the Prime Minister acknowledged the fact in the citations which I have quoted that that practice was customary; he used that very phrase.

Now we have the even more serious failure to make a statement in the House regarding the government's policy on the Crow rate. It might be regarded as a peripheral point of order, having nothing to do with the ministry. I think there is a much stronger case which I believe I have made for the Chair to consider in the case of our previous practice concerning the announcement of major changes in the ministry. But with respect to the Crow rate, we have just completed months of debate in the House over very important changes which were made to the Constitution. The Crow rate was an important element of that debate, since one important element was the agreement to finance the CPR as approved in the House. The CPR was a vital part of the confederation bargain. Now it would appear that elements of this bargain are being dismantled or tampered with without the slightest reference to the House. If this statement were made in the House, as it should have been, western members would be able properly to represent their constituents by asking important questions, and the public would be quickly informed both because of the activity of members and the broad publicity which television gives the House.

In my submission, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) as soon as he returns should be required to rise and make a full statement in the House, as has been customary practice in the past, so that the matter might be fully discussed, involving as it does a major change in the policy of government.

When Madam Speaker considers these matters, I would ask that you consider them separately, even though they are closely relevant to each other. In the former one, the question of changes in the ministry, in my submission past practices are rather compelling and we should return to the traditions of the House which are clearly established back to 1889, right up until 1972 where such statements were made as a matter of course. The government need not justify anything beyond explanation, and there is a good reason for it. Shortly after we returned, there was not one but several questions asked by hon. members on this side in an attempt to elicit information as to which ministry their questions should be directed as a result of over 21 changes by order in council. There was confusion simply because a full explanation was not given.

I ask for that first question to be determined. I also ask for a ruling on the obligation of the government when it departs in such a radical way from its commitment to a policy which has existed since well prior to 1900 and now goes about dismantling a major policy without some kind of announcement. It is an affront, indeed a contempt, of the House and its members when the government, through its minister, goes to Winnipeg to make such an announcement rather than giving western members here an opportunity to question the minister on a statement which, properly, should have been made on motions.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is quite simple. Was the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) obliged to make a statement in the House following the departmental changes mentioned a few days or rather a few weeks ago? I submit that the answer is also very simple. My learned colleague has referred to precedents, the first one going back more than a century. However, I must point out that precedents apply only when there are no rules or when the rules are obscure. In this case, before referring to precedents, we should look at the Standing Orders of the House of Commons and find out whether they include a provision that deals specifically with the problem or the question raised. In fact, Standing Order 15(3) offers a very clear answer. I quote:

(3) On statements by ministers, as listed in Section (2) of this Standing Order, a Minister of the Crown may make a short factual announcement or statement of government policy.

Under this provision, a minister of the Crown is not obliged to make a statement in the House. The minister has the option of doing so, and may, if he considers it desirable or appropriate, make a statement on a matter of government policy. In the cases raised by my colleague, the ministers of the Crown may, for very specific reasons, have decided to use their discretion to make a statement. But the question is: Were they obliged to do so? And the answer we find in the Standing Orders is that they are not, they have the option of doing so but they are not obliged to do so. Madam Speaker, with due respect, I submit that this is your answer. I would add that, to my knowledge, you yourself and your predecessor have often had cause to refer to this provision of Standing Order 15(3) to deal with points of order raised by the members opposite when they expressed their indignation that a policy had been announced outside the House instead of in the House, and without wishing to judge the reasons for my colleague's indignation—I will come back to this shortly and very briefly—strictly as a matter of law and according to parliamentary procedure, there is absolutely no obligation on the Prime Minister or a minister of the Crown to make a statement on a change in policy, whatever it may be.

Now, I should like to point out to the hon. member that I have often had occasion to provide clarification on the subject he has raised and brought to our attention when he himself, his leader and his predecessor as House leader for the official opposition questioned the legality of the procedure. I am not getting a reaction, and assume they were convinced by the relevant legislation I quoted last week, in which a distinction is made, and I shall not go into this again, between creating a new ministry of state and appointing ministers of state responsible for assisting other ministers. So, the entire procedure is perfectly legal. In fact, I explained this in the House last week, during a debate on procedure. Finally, Parliament will still have a chance to discuss the changes since two new ministries of State have been created and under the legislation I mentioned last week, the government must submit its decision to create the two ministries of State to Parliament for approval.

For all practical purposes, the points raised by the hon. member for Yukon are dealt with not only in the Standing Orders but also in the Statutes, and Parliament will have a chance to debate the changes. Therefore, I submit that the hon. member's point of order was not supported by the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, nor by parliamentary practice or legislation.

Finally, the hon. member also referred to the statement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) earlier today, and complained that once again he was deprived of his right to make a statement in the House under Standing Order 15. His objection is again dismissed by the same legal arguments, and here again, I would remind the hon. member that there are still a number of opposition days between now and March 26, and that between March 26 and June 30 there will be thirteen additional opposition days, so that the opposition will have plenty of time to raise the subject mentioned in the statement made by the Minister of Transport in western Canada today. In any case, I do not see why a Canadian minister should not announce important policies to the people who are going to be directly affected by them, and in this case, the people in the west.

Here again, both parliamentary practice and the Standing Orders have been observed by the Minister of Transport, and Parliament will, if the opposition wishes, have a chance to debate the subject of the statement made by the Minister of Transport earlier today. Therefore, for all these reasons, Madam Speaker, I submit that we should proceed without further delay with the debate on a major bill aimed at assisting certain home owners in Canada, and tabled by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove).

● (1520)

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, we are not questioning the matter of legality. The politics might suggest that the shifts we are talking about in the ministry was another infusion of tired blood into the ministry.

Mr. Nielsen: Changing the pallbearers.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And in any other way one might describe it. I am going to argue that because I do not believe the government House leader is quite correct in his interpretation of the rules respecting statements by ministers. In this connection I am looking at our rules, specifically Standing Order 15(3), dealing with statements by ministers. At the top of page 10 it deals with a factual announcement or a statement of government policy. It is in that sense that the rule reads:

—a minister of the Crown may make a short factual announcement or statement of government policy.

It may apply to many things ministers announce. Frankly, I do not like these major announcements being made outside of the House, but it could be argued that the rule may apply there too. But we are talking about much more than that when we talk about a major shift in the ministry. That is not a factual announcement or a statement of government policy in the sense of Subsection (3) of Standing Order 15, particularly having regard to a precedent on February 18, 1972, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made an announcement in the House of Commons. At that time there were no new ministers drawn into the ministry; rather, there was a shift in responsibility of the ministry. On that occasion, there was something beyond a mere factual announcement or beyond a statement of government policy; there was an announcement under statements made by a minister. It was a very extensive announcement.

The practice seems to be that Standing Order 15(3) has a limited application. In that limited application it appears that the word "may" allows for some discretion on the part of the government. But parliamentary practice, parliamentary tradition and other things are not to be turned aside lightly. We regard any shift in the ministry, perhaps we regard a change in the ministry to be more important than some members of the government do—as an important change requiring a statement here in the House, not a press release. We believe that custom, tradition and indeed the precedents and practices of the House of Commons, as we found out during the constitutional debate, are just as important as the Standing Orders and demand being observed.

I say to you, Madam Speaker, with respect, that the government, and the Prime Minister in particular—I am surprised at the government House leader, with his knowledge of parliamentary practice, supporting the Prime Minister in this; I am sure he never advised him with respect to this matter—ought to have made this announcement in the House. This change was significant enough that, within the framework and parameters of those practices which are the Chair's duty to protect for Parliament's sake, the announcement ought to have been made in this House of Commons. It can still be made in this House of Commons so that members can address themselves to it.

I am not going to argue the question of the Crow rate because I have not looked into that. I respectfully suggest that there is an argument that precedent, custom and practice, which are just as much a part of the rules of this House as are the Standing Orders, demand that appropriate action be taken by the government and that a statement be made here in the House, notwithstanding the fact that there has to be a debate on a bill later on. That latter point is peripheral and I suggest does not apply. But the government is bound by law to bring in a bill. This is what the government House leader says and I do not argue with him there. That only provides an opportunity for debate on the bill. What we are talking about is the observance of the rules with respect to statements by ministers, particularly statements by the Prime Minister, announcing changes that are rather substantial in the ministry. These do involve traditions and precedents of this House, which have to be looked after or they will wither away.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I should like give a ruling on this matter, to resolve the debate we have just had, but to do so I would have to be able to refer to a very clear-cut rule of procedure that would indicate exactly how I should direct my decision. However, the provision in our Standing Orders that deals with statements by ministers is permissive, as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) said, and not mandatory. It says very clearly that a minister may, when motions are called, make a statement on a matter of policy or any other subject he may find appropriate.

The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has said repeatedly that it was customary for ministers to make statements in the instances we are dealing with today. I have looked at some of the precedents, and precedents exist for both procedures. My reference is the Standing Order which clearly indicates that the minister has the option of making or not making a statement. Custom has supported decisions by ministers either way. The hon. member is aware that the Speaker of the House cannot oblige ministers to make a statement in the House. It is up to the minister to decide whether he wants to make a statement in the House or prefers to make an announcement outside the House. Hon. members may abhor this custom, but the rules are clear: it is up to the ministers, and if hon. members do not appreciate the manner in which the government announces its policies or its activities, they may keep on questioning the government inside the House until a minister finally gives in, but it is certainly not the role of the Speaker to oblige a minister to make a statement. Finally, I believe the problem can be resolved by the following Citation 264, page 87, Beauchesne's fifth edition, which I shall quote in English, since I have the English version here:

[English]

The option of a minister to make a statement either in the House or outside it may be the subject of comment, but is not the subject of a question of privilege.

[Translation]

I believe that was the case just now. We have had two comments on the subject, and I think the hon. member has had ample time to make his comments before the House and criticize the minister for not having made a statement on the matter in question. I should like to quote a precedent, a decision handed down by one of my predecessors:

[English]

Just to keep the record straight, since the hon. member has made reference to it, it reads:

The practice of making a statement is a practice which is within the authority of the minister to choose whether to do so here or not.

[Translation]

Hon. members have expressed their views on the government's decision to publicly announce changes in a department. Hon. members are free to disagree with this procedure. They can voice their complaints before the House and they have done so. I have listened to them because I felt they had something to say, and I am sure hon. members will understand that I cannot make a ruling obliging the minister to make a statement.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, while I appreciate it is the custom for the three House leaders to raise matters of House business, in the absence of the acting House leader of the New Democratic Party I would like to put a question to the government House leader.

Last week we were led to believe that the borrowing authority bill would be tabled in the House today and debated on Tuesday or Wednesday, I believe. Is that the present plan?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, last Friday I indicated that, because I promised to provide my colleagues with a draft of the bill so they could look at it before we started to debate it, I had to postpone introduction of the borrowing authority bill. I will be in a position to give a draft bill to my colleagues later tonight or perhaps tomorrow; therefore, the bill will not be introduced before tomorrow and the motion to concur on the Ways and Means will be moved tomorrow.

Mr. Nielsen: That, of course, raises the question when the borrowing bill will be proceeded with. I assume it will not be on Wednesday now in order to provide the necessary time. Does the government House leader have any idea what he is going to be doing on Wednesday and when the borrowing bill will be brought in?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if we introduce the bill tomorrow we could start debating it on Wednesday, but I will not, because of the requested delay, call it unless my colleagues are ready to proceed. Therefore, if they are not ready to proceed on Wednesday and I wanted to call it, then I would, depending on the housing bill debate, call the customs tariff bill. This will be done on the next Wednesday unless we come to an agreement to deal with the borrowing authority bill if it is introduced tomorrow, as I plan to do. It all depends on the length of debate on the bill to amend the Canada Housing Act.

PETITION

MR. NYSTROM—SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I have a very pleasant task to perform this afternoon, one that is often done by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who is unable to be with us today. I would table for all hon. members to study and, hopefully, take action upon a petition, containing the signatures of over 5,000 senior citizens, which was organized by the Saskatchewan Senior Citizens Action Now Association.

As you know, under the rules I cannot read the six suggestions they have made to us, but I want to recommend to the House that it take seriously the request of over 5,000 people in my province to, among other things, increase pensions and establish a department of senior citizens' affairs in Canada.

MR. ISODORE POLLACK

Question No. 2,491—Mr. Crosby:

Is Mr. Zig Pollack retained or employed by the government and, if so (a) in which department (b) in what capacity (c) for what purpose (d) what amount did he receive for expenses, fees or other remuneration in 1980?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Employment and Immigration Canada and Transport Canada as follows:

(a) No.

(b) and (c) Not applicable.

(d) Mr. Isodore C. Pollack as Chairman of the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council (April 18, 1978-April 18, 1981) was entitled to an honorarium of $325 per day with an annual limit of $25,000, plus travel and living expenses. In 1980, Mr. Pollack received $21,700 for 71 days plus $5,216.90 for travel and living expenses.

(a) Yes, National Harbours Board.

(b) Consultant.

(c) Appointed on April 4, 1978 as a government observer on the Board of Maritime Employers Association.

(d) Mr. Isodore C. Pollack is entitled to an honorarium of $350 per day to a maximum of 15 days, plus travel and living expenses. In 1980, Mr. Pollack received $3,100 for 11 days. No claim was submitted for travel and living expenses.

RURAL AND NATIVE HOUSING PROGRAM IN DESERONTO, ONT.

Question No. 3,244—Mr. Ellis:

1. Were homes purchased under the Rural and Native Housing program in Deseronto, Ontario and, if so (a) how many and how many were resold (b) what amount did they cost, including repairs and what amount is being charged for each (c) were there defaults and, if so, how many and what were the extra costs after the defaults?

2. Was there a net loss on the program in Deseronto and, if so, in what amount?

3. What is the total loss of the program?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation that as of the date this question was asked the response is as follows:

1. Yes. (a) 21 existing units. All have been resold to Rural and Native Housing (RNH) clients. (b) See table below. (c) Yes, six.

	Additional Costs	Recovered in Sales Price	Write Off
Phase 1	2,673.08	Yes	Nil
	430.40	No	430.40
	6,902.30	No	6,902.30
Phase 2	Not yet available—Unit being recycled
Phase 3	3,014.20	Yes	Nil
Phase 4	Nil	Yes	Nil
Total	$13,019.98		$7,332.70

2. Assuming net loss as amount not recovered by resale of unit to RNH clients, unrecovered costs are $7,969.92 ($7,332.70 + $637.22), of which $6,902.30 was for one recycled unit.

3. From the inception of the program in March, 1974 to September, 1981, the total losses charged to the minister resulting from RNH account close-outs amounted to $849,720.76.

Note: An explanation of the amounts in the "write-off" and "mortgage to be reduced" columns is as follows. Under Section 40 Rural and Native Housing Program in Ontario the sale price of a unit is established in a signed offer to purchase prior to the determination of the exact final unit costs. An amount shown to be written off indicates that the final unit cost exceeded the previously established sale price in the offer to purchase. An amount shown in the mortgage to be reduced column indicates the final cost of the unit was less than the amount indicated in the offer to purchase. Thus the client pays the amount shown in the offer to purchase or the actual unit cost, whichever is less.

ACCOMMODATION OF IMMIGRATION OFFICE IN HALIFAX

Question No. 3,563—Mr. Crosby:

1. Is the Department of Employment and Immigration moving the immigration office from the Halifax Insurance Building on Spring Garden Road, Halifax to the Quinpool Road Shopping Centre on Quinpool Road, Halifax?

2. What was the lease arrangement at the (a) Halifax Insurance Building (b) Quinpool Road Shopping Centre and, in each case, what amount was paid for what amount of space?

3. Who negotiated the lease arrangement at the Quinpool Road Shopping Centre?

4. Were offers or proposals to provide equal office space requested and, if so, what was the response?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. No. The immigration office in Halifax is accommodated on the Terminal Road and the commission/department is not planning to move this office. The office that is accommodated in the Halifax Insurance Building on Spring Garden Road is a Canada Employment Centre.

2. (a) The lease for the office of 187.8 square metres at an annual rental of $23,285 in the Halifax Insurance Building is due to expire on November 30, 1985. The Immigration Office on the Terminal Road occupies 222.4 square metres of a total commission/department rental of 985 square metres at a total annual rental of $145,484.50. This lease is due to expire in November, 1985, and there is a two-year option on its renewal.

(b) Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

4. Not applicable.

ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

Question No. 3,713—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is there a government policy to answer Order Paper questions as often as possible without giving specific information?

2. Did the government adopt a policy of answering Order Paper questions with answers containing no information and, if so, what are all the reasons justifying such a policy?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1. and 2. The government answers questions in accordance with the relevant sections of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, editions 1 through 5.

CHANGE IN PARLIAMENTARY RULES AND PROCEDURES

Question No. 3,714—Mr. Cossitt:

Is the government giving consideration to recommending a change in parliamentary rules and procedures that would bring about abolition of the rights of members to place questions on the Order Paper and, if so, are the grounds for such policy based on (a) its opinion that it is seldom "in the national interest" to answer questions (b) "it has not been customary to answer questions of a certain nature" (c) the government attempting to limit the rights of members of Parliament to ask questions and particularly their right to have access to information as elected representatives?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): (a), (b) and (c) No.

[English]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 3,522 could be made on order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 3,522 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works) moved that Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

He said: Madam Speaker, the bill before the House for second reading is a response to the serious difficulty which many Canadians are now facing in finding and maintaining good housing at affordable cost. The bill responds to these problems in two ways. In the first instance it provides the necessary legislative authority to put into effect the Canada mortgage renewal plan. Second, it enables the government to act more effectively in stimulating production of rental housing, and makes possible new kinds of assistance for young families who are buying for the first time.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, the urgency in dealing with the amendments regarding the Canada mortgage renewal plan. I know hon. members on all sides have been receiving letters and telephone calls from people having difficulty renewing their mortgages and in danger of losing their homes. They are asked how they can get help under the Canada mortgage renewal plan first announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on November 12.

The House will recall that the plan provides interest deferral guarantees for those who have some equity in their homes and are obliged to renew their mortgages at a higher interest rate. Those who have the same problem but have substantially no equity to use as collateral in deferring interest payments the government will assist by providing grants of up to $3,000.

It is very interesting to note that the government of Manitoba announced last week a similar plan which adopts most of the requirements introduced here on November 12. For example, it follows the common sense approach of this government in asking that we use the 30 per cent rule of income. That is, those who are asked to pay a disproportionate amount of their income are to be assisted. It is a short-term plan designed to meet the immediate problem, which we hope will not be repeated.

It is interesting as well, Mr. Speaker, to note that the newly elected leader of the provincial New Democratic Party has said that he will lead that party toward a more middle of the road, common sense approach in his policies. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that he did not really have to go into provincial politics to do that; he had only to step across the floor—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: —and support the Liberal Party in its common sense approach to housing problems, approaches such as the Canada mortgage renewal plan. People who call about that plan, Mr. Speaker, are directed to see their mortgage lenders, who have application forms and can help fill them out and return them to CMHC. Many people have already done that. Applications have been received and can be acted upon once the legislation has been given approval by this House. I sincerely hope that approval will not be unnecessarily delayed by prolonged debate. The plan was very thoroughly discussed by many hon. members on both sides of the House during the budget debate and has been the subject of a good deal of public comment in the news media.

● (1540)

I think my views on the plan are well known. I believe, given all of the circumstances, that it is the only sensible and sensitive action the government could have taken to assist those people who are in serious danger of losing their homes because of high interest rates. I observed that when one is sensible and sensitive, one is usually acting with a sense of common sense. That is what we believe the plan responds to.

Mr. McDermid: Doesn't give two cents.

Mr. Cosgrove: I suggest to hon. members opposite that many Canadian householders who have now had a chance to study the plan believe it would be helpful in solving their problems. Meetings have been held with representatives of the mortgage financing institutions, and they are prepared to do their part as well in putting the plan into effect. In view of the pressing necessity, I urge all hon. members to act as expeditiously as possible on this bill and on this plan.

At the same time the mortgage renewal plan was announced, the government declared its intention to take some action on behalf of people who rent their homes. The Minister of Finance included approximately $350 million for housing for the next two years, part of which is in his budget to finance the Canada rental supply plan, a rental construction stimulus program which would make available interest-free loans of up to $7,500 per year to stimulate the construction of 15,000 units of affordable rental accommodation in parts of the country where it is scarce. These loans, of course, would be in addition to the assistance provided under the regular non-profit and co-operative housing programs.

[Translation]

I then stated I would meet with the provincial ministers responsible for housing in order to discuss the details of implementing the new program. This has been done and I am generally satisfied with the way this initiative has been accepted.

In the course of these discussions, I emphasized that housing is a responsibility that should be shared by all levels of government in Canada. Each province, in co-operation with the Canadian government, must make housing more accessible and, above all, ensure that local requirements and priorities are taken into consideration.

It is my pleasure, to mention that a number of provinces acted on the federal initiative and are now developing programs that can complement the Canada Rental Supply Plan.

[English]

The federal government's initiative, combined with ongoing social housing programs, has been welcomed as a contribution to a very serious problem. I have given the assurance that the available resources may be reallocated during the year if it is found that one region is not taking up all of the assistance which was designated for its use and that there is an urgent need in other areas.

The fact is that, without government support, the construction of rental accommodation in this country is simply not a viable business. In many cases, the rents that can be charged do not allow for a marginal profit. Sooner or later the market will have to be allowed to adjust and to find its normal balance. Our policy with regard to rental accommodation has been to help achieve a smooth transition to a more normal state of affairs and to see that no one suffers in the interim. We are doing that by helping to stimulate increased production of good, affordable rental units and, at the same time, providing assistance to low-income people, including native people, the elderly, the handicapped and others who are not able to meet their needs in the market.

The fact that the Minister of Finance agreed to make the MURB tax provisions available until the end of 1981, as we know, gave rental production a real spurt in the last few months—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: —of 1981, and I expect that momentum will carry into the spring months. At that time, the Canada rental supply plan will be taking effect and will provide the steam needed to keep production going.

I would like to add that these 15,000 new units would mean not only affordable homes for 15,000 more families, but also an estimated 35,000 additional jobs for people involved in the construction industry and associated businesses.

An hon. Member: That's performance!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: The legislation we are talking about today will give us an additional stimulus to rental construction which is over and above these 15,000 units. It will do this by giving CMHC the flexibility to adjust its mortgage insurance premiums, and the corporation will thus then be in a position to raise its loan value ratio to a much more attractive level without jeopardizing the mortgage insurance fund. In other words, the corporation will be in a position to insure mortgages which represent a substantially higher proportion of the total cost of the project, thus permitting the entrepreneur to launch the project without having to put up a prohibitive amount of his own money.

The amendments as well will permit CMHC to be more helpful to home owners, particularly young families buying their first house. The problem is related, of course, to high mortgage interest rates, and high mortgage interest rates are part of our battle to reduce inflation and, of course, to restore healthy economic growth. But the problem is also in the mortgages themselves. The conventional mortgage, which served us very well over the last 30-odd years, just does not work in a time of high or volatile interest rates.

Mrs. Mitchell: Why don't you keep interest rates under control, then? Do something about that.

Mr. Cosgrove: Lenders are reducing the term to a year or even six months to avoid getting locked in to what may turn out to be an unprofitable rate of interest. Unfortunately, this uncertainty about trends in interest rates falls most heavily on home owners and entrepreneurs who want to borrow money to construct rental accommodation. They have no assurance from year to year, or possibly even month to month, that they will be able to afford the new monthly payments.

Mr. Ittinuar: Tell Allan MacEachen.

Mr. Cosgrove: What we need are new kinds of mortgage instruments, arrangements which will do away with some of the uncertainty. There are a number of them around, such as variable rate mortgages, equity participation mortgages and shared appreciation mortgages.

Mr. Ittinuar: Maybe a new type of government!

Mr. Cosgrove: Some of them may very well help solve the problems of first-time purchasers. We would like these families to have the opportunity to use them, if they wish.

The government would like to help facilitate the introduction of these alternatives. The legislation now before the House will give CMHC more flexibility in premium setting and will allow us to do that.

CMHC has always had an important role, as the agent of the government, in the field of housing. At the same time, as a business corporation it administers the mortgage insurance fund on the government's behalf as a way of ensuring that there is always an adequate supply of mortgage money for people who need it.

When the fund was set up in 1954, it was intended to be self-financing. Premiums were set at a level which would be enough to offset claims which could be reasonably expected. In fact, until the late 1970s it worked pretty much in that way. In recent years, however, claims against the fund sharply increased, mainly because of the high proportion of defaults under the assisted home ownership and assisted rental programs, AHOP and ARP.

Mr. Ittinuar: "No hope", not "AHOP"!

Mr. Cosgrove: This unprecedented rise in claims created a liquidity problem for the fund and a substantial sum had to be borrowed from the government to restore the fund's cash flow.

In addition to the liquidity problem, there was a question about the fund's solvency. The problem lies essentially with the fact that the premium which was set by the corporation and the premium which it, in turn, may charge for mortgage insurance is set out in the National Housing Act and cannot be adjusted except by an act of Parliament. Premiums for insuring mortgages under the two programs I announced were limited by the statute to 1 per cent. Actuaries estimate that, in order to prevent a serious drain on the fund, it would have been necessary to set the premium for these mortgages at more than 8 per cent.

Again, the solution to this situation is in the bill now before us. It would allow the corporation to adjust mortgage insurance premiums and set them at a level which would be appropriate for the risk and sufficient to cover the cost and expense of doing business. In short, CMHC would have the same flexibility with regard to premiums as a private insurer. This arrangement would allow CMHC to insure new, innovative mortgage instruments which it could not cover under the fixed-premium system. It will also permit the corporation to set premiums at a level which will allow it to insure mortgages for rental properties at a loan-to-value ratio that will be more attractive to entrepreneurs. Both of these features go hand in hand, the provision which permits a loan-to-value ratio and the $7,500 per unit interest-free loan.

Another difficulty with the fund has to do with the costs of running the business; underwriting costs, the cost of generating new business, inspections and appraisals, and so on. The application fee charged has never been adequate to cover these costs and the shortfall has been covered by CMHC out of other revenues. The bill will correct the situation by permitting the corporation to charge application fees appropriate to the costs and by providing that the fund be operated on a self-sustaining basis.

Another restriction on the corporation has to do with the reserve fund. At the outset it was specified that the reserve fund should never exceed $5 million. That limit was reached, of course, very early in the history of the corporation. Since then it has not been allowed to engage in the customary business practice of setting aside surpluses in good years to provide for future deficiencies. The bill would rectify that situation by providing that the limit on the reserve fund would be established by order in council rather than by legislation.

The fund's difficulties have been compounded by the constraints set out in the NHA regarding the settlement of claims. This is another very important area that I would stress to all hon. members. It is a cost to the Government of Canada through Canada Mortgage and Housing which is unnecessary, one which can be remedied by supporting the legislation before us today.

The law requires that claims must be settled after the property is transferred to the fund. This means that CMHC cannot negotiate some other settlement that does not involve its acquiring the property, for instance by the lender exercising the power of sale. These restrictions are unnecessary. The cumulative effect is a significant unnecessary cost to the corporation and to taxpayers generally.

These changes will mean that more foreclosures and defaults will be avoided. It will also mean that the fund will not always be obliged to acquire property, as I indicated, depleting its liquid assets and incurring unnecessary costs.

These are some of the ways in which CMHC would become more flexible in responding to changing conditions, more businesslike in its operations and, I believe, more effective in helping to improve the housing situation in Canada.

I do not suggest that the bill now before us will solve all of our housing problems. As a matter of fact, I propose to bring before the House very shortly another bill which will make significant improvements in the program which serves the housing needs of native Canadians and low-income people in rural areas.

During the Christmas break and early in the new year, I had the opportunity to meet with representatives of native organizations, both nationally and provincially. I prepared submissions to my cabinet colleagues. As I indicated, that matter will presently be before the government for consideration. My hope is that it will follow shortly upon this legislation. Indeed, there is a possibility that it might be part of this legislation.

All of the government's social housing programs have recently been the subject of a very thorough evaluation and I believe there will be other important changes. For example, members opposite and myself have asked about the role of the shelter allowance, a device used by other jurisdictions. It is something we have not to this point implemented in Canada. The Minister of Finance indicated that the resources for such a program, which would be costly, have to be considered.

All of these initiatives that I have indicated—the priority I place on the rural native program, the study and the prospect of a shelter allowance—will come forward. In the meantime, the legislation before us today will create the opportunity to take some urgently needed action affecting the supply of rental accommodation throughout Canada and the accessibility of home ownership, especially for young families who are not well served by our conventional mortgage arrangements.

In conclusion, I note that the housing minister of the province of British Columbia has asked that I meet with him and other housing ministers to discuss a wide range of subjects. My feeling is that it is time for action rather than further discussion. That is why we have this legislation before us today which will achieve the objectives I have set out. I would find it very encouraging if that minister and other ministers in the provincial jurisdictions would join with action, funds and specific programs to address the problem of housing in Canada.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important debate. I would like to be able to say that this is a very important bill, but we have very strong reservations about what the government proposes. Certainly we can support the principle of the bill, but we are concerned that it does not go far enough. Indeed, it does not even represent band-aid treatment for a critical housing problem facing this country today.

It is interesting that the minister should open on a positive note wherein he referred to the tri-level of responsibility in the area of housing. He said, and I wrote down his words, "the responsibility should be shared with all levels of government." I thought he would develop that theme throughout his speech, but he did not. Indeed, he ended his speech by saying that he refuses to meet with the ministers responsible for housing to discuss just exactly the course of action the government has embarked upon.

That is difficult for me to understand. One can only assume by that statement that the provincial ministers have had no input whatsoever into this legislation. Indeed, I suppose the minister has not even taken them into his confidence in terms of discussing with them the provisions of the bill. So much for developing the concept of the need for co-operation, bearing in mind the fact that the responsibility for housing in this country is shared with three levels of government.

It is not difficult for us to support the provisions to put Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation on a stronger and more businesslike basis, although I will say that we intend, when the bill gets before the committee, to examine the bill in greater detail and question the officials from CMHC on these particular provisions. However, we must take advantage of this opportunity to zero in on what the legislation proposes to do to bring some measure of relief to the housing crisis facing this country today.

● (1600)

The Minister of Public Works responsible for housing (Mr. Cosgrove) is a member who comes to the House with a measure of experience in one of the three levels of government. He was the mayor of his city for some time and was a member of the metropolitan Toronto council. During the short period that I have had the responsibility of being housing critic, I have come to know the minister. I may say that I have great respect for him because he is a decent and honest man. I believe that he has been given a bum rap in having to bring this bill forward. What we have in this legislation is the embodiment of the inadequate measures which are contained in the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to deal with the drastic housing crisis which faces Canada today. This legislation is an attempt to deal with the expectations which have been generated in the minds of the Canadian people by the minister responsible for housing when he told them to wait for the budget—expectations which have gone unfulfilled.

It is interesting to note as we commence second reading of this bill today that it coincides with the release of the seasonally adjusted housing starts for January. These starts show a drop of 18 per cent from the previous month of December, down to 148,700 starts. This provides me the opportunity to comment on what the minister said a few minutes ago with respect to MURBs. The reason for the surge in housing starts during November and December was due to a last minute effort to cash in on the MURB program which was to be terminated by the Minister of Finance in his budget. I will have more to say about that in a few moments.

It also coincides with today's release of a letter which was the subject of question period today. It was a letter from ten Liberal Members of Parliament, including two cabinet ministers, which was released with a communiqué. I will read the communiqué:

Mr. Roy: En français.

Mr. McGrath: I will let the hon. member read it "en français". I look forward to hearing him participate in the debate and defending the views put forward by his ten hon. friends.

Mr. Roy: I put my name on the list.

Miss MacDonald: Good for you.

Mr. McGrath: The communiqué read as follows:

Following two meetings of their regional Caucus, the Members of Parliament for the Central-Eastern part of Montreal have released today a letter to the Prime Minister asking Mr. Trudeau to immediately initiate measures to fight unemployment.

The ten Members of Parliament have suggested two new programs to create jobs in certain specific sectors of the economy.

The first proposal calls for the stimulation of the housing construction industry because of its well known spinoff effects.

I will continue to quote:

The program would also help to make up for the deficit of some 50,000 housing units suffered by Canada in 1981.

Of course, that is a very conservative estimate.

As a second measure, the group suggests a program to help business hire more youths under age 25, as this group is the most severely affected by unemployment.

They then conclude by saying:

These MPs are also convinced that these measures must be adopted right now as they cannot wait for the results of a long-term economic policy which they otherwise consider sound and realistic.

That letter is signed by the hon. member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou who happens to be Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal) who is the Minister of State from Quebec, as well as the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), the hon. member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs Hervieux-Payette), the hon. member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), the hon. member for Gamelin (Mr. Portelance), the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Mrs. Killens), the hon. member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), and the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Miss MacDonald: They all did it after seeing the minister's bill.

Mr. McGrath: Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, they made their representations to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) after the bill had received first reading and before second reading debate on the bill in the House. It makes one wonder why it was necessary for a senior member of the cabinet and the most junior member of the cabinet, although he is very well respected, to communicate with the government in this way when they are members of that same government. I find that intriguing. I suspect there is more to it than meets the eye. Perhaps we are seeing the beginning of a little game to attempt to get the minister responsible for housing and the Minister of Finance off the hook. Perhaps we may see, even before this debate is finished, a magnanimous gesture on the part of the Minister of Finance and the minister responsible for housing to bring in further amendments which would go considerably beyond the measly provisions in the budget. Perhaps that is their objective.

Knowing the Minister of National Health and Welfare, a senior and experienced member of the House, and knowing the Minister of State, a very respected and competent member of the House, I suspect there is a great deal more to this than what is contained in the communiqué. It is interesting that the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing made no reference to it. Before this debate is over I suspect we will hear more, probably a great deal more, about the letter.

One thing this letter does implicitly is to suggest there are inadequacies in this measure which is now before the House. This measure will do nothing to address the deficit in housing starts we will be facing in this current year. If nothing else, those ten hon. members have done a service by underlining that fact. To my recollection, there is no similar precedent to this happening in the past 20 years, where a minister of the Crown would publicly comment and criticize a bill on the very day that second reading debate is to commence. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I suspect there is a great deal more to it than meets the eye.

In order to put this monumental problem of the housing crisis in perspective—a crisis which is unprecedented since the Second World War when Canada Mortgage and Housing had to become directly involved in the housing construction industry to satisfy the needs of returning veterans—we should go back a decade to review the report of the Hellyer task force. For those hon. members who may not recall, Paul Hellyer was the deputy prime minister, minister of transport and minister responsible for housing. He felt so strongly about the housing problem and where it was headed that he put together a task force over which he presided and went across Canada to hold public hearings. He introduced a report with recommendations and a declaration of principles. It should be remembered that the executive assistant to the then minister of transport was none other than the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who I suspect played a large role in writing the report.

I would like to quote one or two points from this declaration of principles contained in the recommendations of ten years ago. They are as follows:

1. Housing and urban development are an urgent priority for the people of Canada and must be treated as such by their elected representatives at all levels.

2. Every Canadian should be entitled to clean, warm shelter as a matter of basic human right.

● (1610)

3. While it will take some time to realize this goal, a concerted effort is required by all concerned—governments and the private sector—in the years immediately ahead. A minimum objective must be to produce one million additional housing units within the next five years.

If the government of the day had taken the report of that task force seriously and implemented the recommendations of that task force—and we have the same Prime Minister and essentially the same government—we would not be facing the monumental problems in housing that we have today.

What happened? The recommendations received such a negative response from the Prime Minister and the members of the government that shortly after the presentation of the report the man who held the second highest elective office in the country, the deputy prime minister of Canada and the minister responsible for housing, saw fit to resign from the cabinet over the failure of the government to respond to the recommendations of the task force.

The present minister responsible for housing has not been a member of this House for very long, although he comes here with the experience of his municipal background, and I know from the pronouncements he made prior to the budget that he expected a great deal more from the government. All we have to do is read from that famous leaked document of October, a presentation made to the cabinet over the signature of the Minister of Public Works who is minister responsible for housing, wherein he identified the seriousness of the problem. One would have expected, consistent with what the Hon. Paul Hellyer did, that when the government failed to act on the advice contained in that document to respond to the alarm expressed in that document, the Minister of Public Works, who as I say is the minister responsible for housing, would have resigned from the cabinet.

Mr. Cosgrove: Have you read the Matthews report?

Mr. McGrath: If the government does not change its disastrous course, perhaps it will come to pass that the Minister of Public Works will have no choice but to do the honourable thing and resign from this government and divorce himself from the disastrous policies of the Minister of Finance which he now has to carry on his back.

Let us take a look at that leaked document. Although it has been quoted in this House, it bears repetition because of its relevance to the bill now before the House and the failure of the government to respond. The document dealt with the implications of the current level of mortgage rates in the housing sector and the impact of prolonged high interest rates. The leaked document states at page 7:

Over the next two years approximately 1.2 million households will be renewing their mortgage. Most of those renewing will be able to do so although the adjustment will be painful. For those households house payments will increase but they will still be paying less than 30 per cent of income for mortgage debt service and taxes.

It then goes on to say:

An estimated 30,000 to 40,000 households cannot even take the steps to help themselves and retain their home. They would have to pay well over 30 per cent of household income for principal, interest and taxes. For these households the situation is one of hardship. Their choices are to pay a very large proportion of their income to retain their home, try to sell their home, or just walk away and face foreclosure.

We know that the proposals contained in this bill will affect only about 12,000 households in Canada out of approximately 900,000 which will be renewing. It barely addresses the problem, and those who are in "dire straits"—a term used by the Prime Minister in addressing what the government intended to do; he suggested it would help those in dire straits—can look forward to a one-time payment. Yet we are told that mortgage interest rates are on the way back up again after falling from the high of 21.4 per cent of last September. We are told they are on their way back up again and will again reach 20 per cent this year.

The problem of lack of housing can best be described in terms of availability and affordability. Let me deal with availability for a moment. On Friday, February 5, CMHC reported that housing starts fell to the seasonally adjusted annual rate of 148,000 units in the month of January. That is a substantial drop of 18 per cent from the month of December. Actual housing starts in urban areas numbered 10,349, up 26 per cent from the comparable number of January, 1981. CMHC showed that housing starts were down sharply from the month before. I have already referred to the fact that the surge in December and November can be directly attributed to the desire to cash in on the MURB program before it was phased out by the Minister of Finance in his budget. Starts on single detached units in urban areas were down 59 per cent for the year, and most of the multiple unit starts were apparently the result of this surge. CMHC states that we need to produce an average of 220,000 new housing units each year between 1981 and 1986 to meet our requirements.

Let us take a closer look at these CMHC figures because they project requirements to the end of the century. In terms of requirements, in the five-year period from 1976 to 1981 the requirement was 222,000 starts per year in rental and home ownership accommodation. From 1981 to 1986 the requirement is 210,000. From 1986 to 1991 the requirement is 181,000, a gradual decline as demand drops off. However, the key, critical period is from 1981 to 1986, which this bill fails to address, because if we look at requirements and actual housing starts, we find that therein lies the true story. For example, there were 178,000 starts in the year just past, 1981, whereas the actual requirement was 222,000. That, of course, speaks to the deficit referred to in the letter from the two ministers and the eight hon. members. We shall be having much more to say about these statistics in terms of requirements and in terms of the failure of the government to meet the need which was foreseen by the Hon. Paul Hellyer at the time he brought in the report of his task force.

In terms of the question of availability and housing inventory, I would like to go back and quote from the minister's document at page 19 as follows:

> The present level of interest rates renders rental investment uneconomic across the country. The average metropolitan area rent of $400 quoted in this document compares with average investor carrying costs of $750 on the mortgage and property tax for a newly constructed unit with a 30 per cent down payment.

Then he went on to say:

> Rental investment will thus dry up in most markets. Even when vacancy rates have dropped to zero there will be no new building until there is a better correspondence between investor costs and market rents for new units. This correspondence will only be achieved after a period during which waiting lists prevail and tenants have little choice of accommodation. Vacancy rates in most markets will approach zero by 1983.

● (1620)

At the rate we are going, Mr. Speaker, we will approach zero vacancy rates in most of the major metropolitan areas of the country before the present year is out. Indeed, we have almost arrived at that particular unhappy situation in metropolitan Toronto. Indeed, it was reached in the city of Oshawa before the end of the year. If you look at the situation across the country, starting from Vancouver and going east to Halifax, to St. John's, Newfoundland, the situation is no better.

Yet what is the response of the government, with the shortfall in rental accommodation? Let us take a look at what they did. They cancelled the MURB program, which was responsible for 25,000 starts last year, and replaced it by a measure contained in this bill, whereby 15,000 units will be eligible for an interest-free loan of $7,500. That means, of course, 10,000 fewer starts this year in rental units.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, if you examine the budget in terms of social housing, there is a net reduction, down to 25,000 social housing units from the 30,000 starts we had last year. That is a net reduction of 5,000. That is to say, there is a net reduction of 15,000 starts in rental units as a result of this budget.

All we are doing with the $7,500 interest-free loans for the 15,000 units to be spread across the country is making up for that shortfall. The CMHC document itself makes the point, and it is a prediction that is well on the way to being realized, that there will be no new rental units started in Canada this year other than those that are publicly assisted. The reason for that is very simple. Given the interest rate situation in the country today, there has to be a greater correspondence between starts and rental income for housing units in order to make them economically viable.

For example, if an investor has to achieve a return of $750 a month on a one-bedroom apartment in order to meet his interest payments and property tax, then obviously he is stuck; because—and here I give full credit to the minister; he made reference to this when he met with his provincial counterparts—that same apartment today, if you take any of the large metropolitan areas of the country, would rent for about $450. That is because of rent controls.

I believe we have to start thinking seriously in terms of rent control. I agree with the minister that if you are going to allow the market forces to work you have to take a look at the kind of impact that rent controls have on the marketplace. If you accept that, obviously it follows that you have to do something to make up for those who cannot afford to pay the market price.

I was sorry to hear the minister dismiss out of hand the question of shelter allowance. I believe that is the way we should be approaching it; we should have a policy of shelter allowance.

An hon. Member: Without rent controls.

Mr. McGrath: We should have a policy of shelter allowances in order to allow the market to operate, so that we can start building rental units in this country. Otherwise we will have a situation—which again was predicted by the minister in his document—whereby we will have a black market situation in Canada, which would lead to key money and all sorts of dreadful things.

We know what key money is. Key money occurs in a black market situation. There was the black market situation that developed during the Second World War, whereby you had to bribe the superintendent of an apartment building. If there was a vacant apartment in that building, you bribed him to let you have a look at the apartment; and if you wanted to rent the apartment you had to give him a bribe for every month you were renting. That is key money.

Many people will be faced with the prospect—predicted by the minister in his document to his cabinet colleagues—of not being able to find rental accommodation and consequently having to double up with their parents and with their friends. What a desperate situation! What a desperate situation we are in in this country today!

This bill, Mr. Speaker, does not come anywhere close to addressing the need. The 15,000 units that will be scattered across the country which will qualify for the interest-free loan of $7,500 would barely satisfy the demand in metropolitan Vancouver. We are told that it would barely satisfy the demand in the city of Calgary. We have the elimination of the MURB program, and what do we get in its place? We get 15,000 units that will be the subject of the $7,500 interest-free loans.

The situation is desperate, Mr. Speaker, and it is getting worse. In 1979, apartment starts were only 58,000; in 1980, apartment starts dropped another 10,000 units, for a total of 48,000; last year, in 1981, apartment starts were approximately 52,000 units. Since 1978, apartment starts have fallen short of apartment requirements by 77,000 units, or a full year's requirements. This shortfall in apartment starts is occurring at a time when apartment vacancy rates are rapidly reaching the zero mark, as I have already indicated.

These are astonishing facts, Mr. Speaker, at a time when apartment vacancy rates are continuing to drop, we are seeing apartment starts continually falling behind our requirements.

To repeat what the minister said in his document, we are rapidly approaching a zero vacancy rate across the country. It is 0.4 per cent in the City of Toronto, in the last figures released from CMHC; in the City of Oshawa; we are already down to 0.0 per cent; and it is 0.2 per cent in Vancouver, and so on.

Let me speak for a moment about the question of affordability, because it is related. If you cannot find an apartment and if you cannot afford to buy a house, what do you do? Where do you go; where do you look for shelter? You double up, if you are not affluent enough to be able to afford the black market?

Let us look at the housing situation in 1965. In 1965, when most families in Canada had only one income, one in two families could afford to buy a home and carry the mortgage for 30 per cent of the family income. In 1965, the average Canadian wage earner was making about $5,000 per year, according to Statistics Canada. In that year mortgage interest rates were about 7 per cent, according to Bank of Canada figures. A three-bedroom bungalow in 1965 could be purchased for between $16,000 and $18,000. That three-bedroom bungalow was a new bungalow. Resold homes could be purchased for less.

In 1981, the situation was drastically different for Canadians wanting to purchase their own homes. In 1981, the average Canadian industrial wage was $18,468 a year. Mortgage interest rates have fluctuated from 15.17 per cent in January, 1981 to a high of 21.6 per cent in October, and are currently hovering around 18 per cent; and we are told by all of the market analysts that they will go to 20 per cent before this year is out. In 1981, the same three-bedroom bungalow, which could be purchased for $16,000 in 1965, cost about $74,000 to purchase on resale or $100,000 to build new. Between 1965 and 1981 the price of that bungalow rose by approximately 600 per cent. The concomitant increase in wages during that time does not even come close; wages between 1965 and 1981 rose by about 300 per cent. Of course, the implication is obvious—to own a home has become an impossible dream. As well, between 1965 and 1981 mortgage interest rates rose by about 300 per cent.

• (1630)

Let me take a look at the government's response in the November budget. The government proposed to provide $50 million in 1982 in the form of relief to home owners faced with mortgage renewals and the added burden of increased fuel costs. We should not forget increased fuel costs. The government came up with a mortgage interest deferral plan, but in 1982 close to 900,000 Canadians will have to renew their mortgages. As I have indicated, barely 2 per cent of that 900,000 will qualify for assistance. If a person is one of the unlucky ones who had to renew before September when mortgage interest rates were 21 per cent, he or she is out of luck and does not qualify.

The government's response with a mortgage renewal plan will put home owners further into debt because the program only allows people to defer interest payments. It is interesting to refer to the minister's document in respect of what he thought of the option of interest deferral payments. It reads:

> Options such as interest deferral and lengthened amortization periods appear unlikely to be able to resolve the difficulties faced by all households renewing their mortgages.

What a pity the minister did not see fit to follow that advice!

Mr. Cosgrove: It is called "the grants provision" of the program.

Mr. McGrath: When the bill goes before committee, we will have an opportunity to examine the minister on his proposals. He did not tell us much in the 25-minute speech he made to the House. Obviously we will have to wait until the bill gets to committee. The minister could have brought in or carried on with the mortgage interest and property tax credit program which would have meant $1,500 to the average mortgage holder this year.

The energy fuel tax credit program which would have addressed the rising cost of home heating could have been continued in the budget. The government could have brought in a proposal for shelter allowance which would have made it easier for provinces to lift rent controls. It is not enough for the minister to tell us that shelter allowances are too expensive. Unless there is some form of shelter allowance which will allow the lifting or easing of rent controls, I see no relief in sight, because the market will not have a chance or be allowed to function. With the elimination of MURBs there is no investment incentive left. Unfortunately the prediction of the minister in his document that the only rental units which will be built in Canada in 1982 will be those that will receive government assistance is all too true.

The minister said that he hoped the debate would be a short one because he was anxious to get the bill passed. I can understand why he would want a short debate, but surely he must realize the depth of the feeling in the country. All he has to do is look at the letter of his own colleagues to the Prime Minister to have some feeling of how deeply the situation runs in the country. I look forward to the ten hon. members on the other side who signed that letter standing in their places and expanding on their remarks. This is the time and place to do it, in this debate, not by way of a letter to the Prime Minister which is released in a communiqué on the day the bill comes before the House for second reading. I hope they will participate in the debate, as many of us will and have to, because it is our responsibility to bring home to the government the desperate need in the country which, unfortunately, is not being addressed by the budget and is being totally ignored by the bill.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, every Member of Parliament is well aware of the housing crisis which affects many of his or her constituents. The cost of rents or mortgages is consuming half the incomes of families. Additional housing units are not being constructed, as my colleagues have pointed out, to meet the needs of young people who have reached child-rearing years but must remain childless. Those houses which are being built are so costly that even middle-income professional families cannot afford them. Workers are moving westward looking for jobs. In places such as Vancouver, thousands of immigrants who have come to the country recently are competing with them in an attempt to find places in which to live. One million poor people, many of whom are single-parent families and elderly pensioners, need decent shelter. In most of our large cities today we are displacing them from inner city areas with new development and white painting, yet no public housing is being built. Housing conditions on Indian reserves are a national disgrace.

These are only some of the reasons we in this party feel that major amendments to the National Housing Act are required. In preparing to speak on the bill, I reviewed the history leading up to the present housing crisis in Canada and indeed the history of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The more I researched, the angrier I became. I have concluded that the disastrous housing situation which is hurting so many Canadians did not just happen. It is not only a result of unavoidable economic trends; it is directly attributable to deliberate federal government policy. The facts show that the Liberal government has created, nurtured and even exploited housing problems of Canadians.

Bill C-89 is the latest step of the Liberal government to divest itself of direct responsibility for housing, at the very time when the housing crisis is the worst in Canada's history. It is another sell-out following a whole series of CMHC cutbacks over the past five years, cutbacks aimed at removing government from all public responsibility for housing. This policy denies the rights of Canadians to decent, affordable housing, a right which we feel should have been enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

A review of historical facts shows that the federal government itself is the villain. It is not just the economy, it is the federal government. The Liberals could have and should have planned for housing needs and continued their direct mortgage policies which were so successful in the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s. Instead, they decided to move out of the areas of direct responsibility for mortgages and for housing programs and to leave them to the private sector. They must have taken lessons from the Tories.

Therefore, the government has not only been negligent or ignored the increasing housing problems of a growing, aging and migrating population, but surely it has not been unaware of the terrific escalation in housing costs. We have challenged the government every day in the House about housing costs faced by renters and home owners alike, costs which are destroying families. An analysis of the budget of CMHC over the past five years proves beyond a doubt that this was a deliberate Liberal policy. The government itself is responsible for the housing crisis in Canada. We on this side of the House accuse the government of committing a crime against the people of our country.

The CMHC budget has been reduced substantially over the past five years, years of mounting housing crises. The over-all CMHC budget was reduced from $1.8 billion in 1976 to $392 million in 1981. That is a drastic reduction. This reduction was made during the very period when times were getting tough and costs were escalating. Yet CMHC was cutting back. The cutback had a direct impact on housing starts over that period. Housing starts dropped from over 245,000 to under 180,000. As my colleague from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has pointed out, housing starts are dropping even more dramatically today.

Between 1976 and 1981 the federal government reduced substantially every type of housing assistance, except in one area, that being rehabilitation housing. Money for rental housing was reduced from $100 million to zero. Imagine no money allocated to rental housing. The amount of money for non-profit housing was reduced from $286.5 million to a mere $1 million. Money for co-op housing was reduced from $51 million to only $800,000. The amount for public housing was reduced from $268 million to $33 million. The only people who have any right to have public housing are Pierre Elliott Trudeau and his sidekick, Joe Clark.

The budget for rehabilitation of old housing was increased, although 100,000 victims of urea formaldehyde foam insulated houses, of course, have not been included in these rehab programs.

Mr. Kristiansen: Trudeau will lose his house, too.

Mrs. Mitchell: Let's hope so, and Joe Clark as well.

The budget for native and rural housing, which should have been expanded as a top priority, was reduced from $178 million to $115 million. Native and rural housing should have been top priority for this government. The condition of native housing, as my colleagues here can substantiate, is one of our greatest national problems.

Finally, the budget for community service programs, to which one of my colleagues will speak next, was reduced for municipalities from just over $434 million to a mere $25 million. Now we know that both the community service grant program and the neighbourhood improvement program have been cancelled altogether.

These figures reflect the fact that the federal government's policy has been to withdraw from direct housing assistance programs. This decision was made over a time when there was the most urgent need in our history for increased, not diminished, involvement in every federal program.

We have a government that ignored the increasing need for a steady supply of rental housing in most urban centres, private, non-profit and public housing. It has deprived municipalities and native communities of essential funds for land banking, for housing infrastructure, servicing of land and for neighbourhood improvements. This is particularly important for older communities in Canada. The government has been of very little help to the private housing sector as well, as my colleague from the Progressive Conservative Party has just documented.

On top of CMHC cutbacks, and over the same period, the government adopted a high interest rate monetary policy, which policy is completely destroying the home ownership dream in Canada.

It is necessary to have an overview of housing conditions as a basis for evaluating the principles of Bill C-89. First, let me deal with home ownership. Housing starts over the past three years have averaged an all-time low of 177,000. New houses have been built but they are so costly they are out of the reach of most Canadians regardless of income. Monthly house payments now consume between 50 per cent and 80 per cent of an average family's income. It takes not just two but three family wage earners in most communities to pay off a mortgage now.

In 1980 an average home in Vancouver cost $100,000; $94,000 in Calgary; $75,000 in Toronto; $51,000 in Montreal and Halifax; and $41,000 in St. John's where prices are rising rapidly. By 1981, within just one year, the over-all national average for a modest home was up to $109,000. In Vancouver, the average house price rose to $165,000. Speculators flipped houses making thousands of dollars overnight. When average prices dropped in the late fall to about $130,000, many could not afford to pay the mortgage renewals and had to consider selling. Of course, by then the market had dropped out of housing sales and people could not sell without facing severe losses. Meanwhile, in Toronto, prices escalated to $104,000. This was an increase of 35.2 per cent over 1980 prices. I mention both Vancouver and Toronto as examples because I am sure we all realize that the trends experienced in those two cities could hit every major urban centre in Canada. This boom or bust real estate market in Canada which has made many people homeless was encouraged by the lack of government spending, the lack of controls on speculation and the general encouragement of the myth that home ownership is the best hedge against inflation. There is nothing in Bill C-89 that will prevent such nightmares from continuing and spreading to the Atlantic provinces and to other regions as resource developments get under way.

As far as rental housing is concerned, Canada needs at least 100,000 new rental units a year. In 1980, when thousands of refugees were welcomed to Canada, only 48,000 apartments were being built to house Canadians as well as newcomers. In 1981, the number of apartments being built rose to 52,000. However, the minister himself predicts that there will be well under 40,000 new rental units constructed this year. We have a situation where 40 per cent of Canadians are tenants, many paying over 50 per cent of their incomes on rent. This trend will increase in the years ahead since home ownership is virtually impossible for most people.

Rent for a two-bedroom apartment in either Toronto or Vancouver costs an average now of $750 per month. Other cities' prices are not far behind. In most major cities there is simply no accommodation despite the price. We have said before in this House that we knew of people sleeping in cars and tents because they could not even get poor rental accommodation in Vancouver.

There are long waiting lists for apartments. People must double up. I suggest that the Conservative critic might like to double up with the minister responsible for CMHC inasmuch as they seem to have the same philosophy on some of these things.

Mr. Dinsdale: That would be the odd couple.

Mrs. Mitchell: People on fixed incomes have no hope of finding accommodation they can afford. Increasingly parents are having to continue supporting their adult children, children in their twenties and even close to the age of 30, because these young adults cannot find work nor can they afford to rent their own apartments.

In a confidential report to cabinet last fall, the minister admitted that the rental market was the first victim of our construction slowdown. This slowdown was caused by high interest rates despite the MURB tax write-offs which were the minister's giveaway to investors, which are now being extolled by the Tories. This report also predicted that no private rental starts would occur this year because of current interest rates. The minister cannot say he did not know about this situation. The situation was predicted in his own report, which we had to release to the public.

The rental situation will, of course, worsen in 1982. As the report indicates, a black market in rental units is within the realm of possibility. Minus zero vacancy rates and the doubling of average rents will also occur if controls are removed. They are being removed in the main because of the campaign by this minister.

● (1650)

If the rental situation is bad for average working people, how much worse is it for pensioners on fixed incomes, some of whom we met today here in Ottawa, and I will say more about that in a moment. How much worse is it for single parents struggling to raise a family on their own, for the disabled, for immigrants working for minimum wages, and for students struggling to get an education and who are lucky if they can find a very crowded basement room with consequently no chance of doing their studies.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is a truly desperate situation. To the existing one million poor people Canada is now adding every week thousands of laid-off workers. How can these people possibly afford rent or mortgage payments which are far in excess of 30 per cent of their income? They simply cannot. Who can on unemployment insurance or welfare? The minister responsible for CMHC obviously is not concerned about the rental problems of Canadians except, of course, from the point of view of the construction industry and wealthy people who want a tax rebate.

Responding to pressure from his HUDAC friends, he continues his campaign to persuade provinces to do away with rent controls. That I feel is immoral. How can this possibly help the rental situation? I mentioned earlier the pensioners we talked to today. One of them in Vancouver had his rent raised to $302 a month for a small one-bedroom apartment. Because that increase brought it out from under rent controls, within a few months his rent jumped to $492. This is the kind of thing that happens if you do not have rent controls. Of course, we need fair rent controls and help for landlords as well, although they can write off some of their costs on their income tax.

The hon. member for St. John's East extolled the virtue of shelter allowances. Obviously he has not read the report on this subject from the Canadian Council on Social Development which has serious questions about this. Unless there are rent controls and an adequate stock of housing at an affordable rent, how can the government afford shelter allowances which are going to subsidize rents of $750?

What has the government done about this disgraceful situation? Well, the poor minister should certainly be shamefaced to have to stand up in this House and announce he is going to provide 15,000 rental units this year when the need is for 100,000.

Mr. Cosgrove: Forty thousand.

Mrs. Mitchell: Forty thousand with non-profit housing. I am referring to private rental housing for the ordinary market. As we know, in the past most rental programs introduced by this government are really just a way of getting into the market, as they did with the MURB write-offs, and then they roll these over, turn them into condominiums, sell them off and the rental housing stock the government has been attempting to introduce is lost. This 15,000 units will do nothing to meet the demand for rental housing. The minister says they will be affordable. He has yet to prove that, so we will be interested to hear his explanation in committee. Bill C-89 and the government policies will do nothing to alleviate the worsening rental situation in Canada and this government must bear the responsibility.

The minister mentioned non-profit housing. This is the only program in Canada which ensures affordable housing at 30 per cent of a family income. It is a good program, we believe in it and would like to see it expanded.

I mentioned the one million poor who are most affected by this government's housing cutbacks and are the hardest hit by the housing crisis. Section 43, the public housing section, remains in the National Housing Act. I notice it is even being amended in this bill, but there is no budget allocation and public housing has not been built for many years in most provinces. Low-income housing built by non-profit societies does not even meet the needs of pensioners in most provinces. Of course, most provinces do not have provincial or municipal housing corporations. Our government is forcing on to the streets those least able to defend themselves.

Funds for non-profit, co-operative housing also must be expanded since this is the only affordable housing for average income and some low-income families today. Funds for tenants to purchase and rehabilitate older homes as a co-operative are also a very good move and a priority. We should have more funds for this. Co-operative communities consisting of mixed—pensioners, working people and low-income people—have been developed. This is a very successful concept in Canada and we would like to see more of it, but we need to have more emphasis on it by the government and a larger allocation of funds. We also, of course, need to have interest rates controlled and reduced so the allocated moneys will go further.

Some federal housing programs are an economic investment as well as a social asset. Land-leasing programs, which are very much needed, and government rental housing are permanent assets. They are not just giveaways, as are some of these tax write-offs for private housing. They are permanent assets which will retain housing stocks for future generations.

Major government investment in housing programs, including public, co-op and private units, would create thousands of much needed jobs during a time of high unemployment. We have proposed repeatedly that a $500 million housing investment fund be established immediately to produce extra housing units to meet the target of 220,000 units which CMHC says is needed each year. This would create some 92,000 extra jobs.

In the time remaining I would like to speak more directly to Bill C-89, and a great number of my colleagues want to speak to this important bill in more detail. The intent of this legislation is clear. The federal government wants to be relieved of all direct responsibility for housing. This is a trend which started well over five years ago. CMHC is being privatized and divested of its public responsibility as a housing corporation which, until recently, has assumed a very important social housing function in Canada. This function was the only way to protect Canadians during times of crisis such as we are experiencing today.

The minister has repeatedly spouted his privatization line, most recently on November 25 when he said governments do not build houses—certainly this government does not build any—and that the dynamic force has been the private construction industry and financial institutions. I would like to suggest the minister check his facts more carefully, since over 50 per cent of the housing stock produced in Canada since 1945 has had direct or indirect CMHC involvement.

History also shows that in a housing crisis, such as the one after World War II, major government leadership is absolutely essential. We have such a crisis today—surely the minister realizes it—and the experience of the past year shows that the private market cannot and will not solve this crisis by itself. The equity principle, which the minister also has been referring to and as espoused by the Minister of Finance, requires government intervention. That is just common sense. How else can we build affordable housing for those in greatest need?

The amendments to the CMHC mortgage insurance scheme, which are the main aspects of Bill C-89, are prime examples of this government's privatization policy. The Conservatives, of course, should be very supportive of this bill, and the last speaker said he did support it very strongly in principle because, of course, this is their policy—privatize it, leave it to the private sector. And, of course, as far as the Tories are concerned, do away with CMHC altogether.

Mr. Cosgrove: Shame, shame!

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, you are doing just as good a job of doing away with it. The minister will be history pretty soon. The history of CMHC in the insurance—

• (1700)

Mr. Cosgrove: Good history, no doubt.

Mrs. Mitchell: —field is indeed a scenario of embarrassment. From assets of $631 million at the end of 1978, the insurance fund declined to $314 million in 1980. Just think! It lost about $300 million which could have gone into sensible housing.

Mr. McDermid: And the stupid AHOP program!

Mrs. Mitchell: You are right, brother. This high rate of insurance claims was a direct result of the Liberal government's ill-conceived AHOP and ARP housing programs, which resulted in mortgage defaults and landed CMHC with many unwanted properties and, of course, landed people without homes as well.

Bill C-89 is designed to avoid such embarrassments for the government in the future. How neat! Although the minister speaks of more flexibility as his reason for the proposed insurance changes, our research indicates that the impact of these changes will cause insurance costs to go substantially higher. Higher costs of premiums may be added to the higher interest rate charges which are facing home owners every time they must renew their mortgages. This is a trend which is already starting in the United States. The insurance change in the bill, as I understand it, will open this up in Canada.

The mortgage insurance amendments attempt to protect CMHC and private lenders from high-risk mortgage situations. Of course, it protects the corporations, and it protects their friends, the lenders, the banks.

Mr. Cosgrove: And the taxpayer.

Mrs. Mitchell: Not the taxpayers, Sir.

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, the taxpayers.

Mrs. Mitchell: It protects them from situations which have been created by faulty government policies and programs such as AHOP, and the kind of programs with mortgage deferment types of arrangements, which are likely to continue.

One might be more sympathetic to this legislation if the proposed insurance amendments were to offer some protection for home owners. We would like to see this discussed in committee. Why should the home owners themselves not be protected against the high interest rate policy of this government? Then it might make some sense. However, it just protects, again, the people who are making the profits out of the whole mortgage scheme. As usual, only the banks and the financial institutions are protected from their risk and, of course, their profits are protected. I would like to remind the House that bank profits were up to $1.7 billion in 1981, which was a 30 per cent increase over profits in 1978. I mention this just in case hon. members have forgoten.

Mr. Cosgrove: Talk about CMHC losses.

Mrs. Mitchell: We also believe the government should require banks to provide a specific proportion of their lending portfolio for long-term mortgages.

Mr. McDermid: How long term?

Mrs. Mitchell: These policies should have been introduced in Bill C-89 and through the Bank Act. Another part of this bill refers to disposition of properties through CMHC. Bill C-89 attempts to relieve CMHC of the burden of acquiring properties. I have mentioned many home owners who received government assistance, some of whom are still in their homes, who simply cannot meet the mortgage interest charges, especially those which have increased as a result of mortgage renewals. As well as mortgage renewals, these home owners face inflated costs in every area of their lives.

In the past, CMHC sold off these reclaimed AHOP houses at below market value in some cases, and we have complained about this in the House.

Mr. McDermid: In most cases.

Mrs. Mitchell: Surely these houses should at least have been retained as rent-geared-to-income housing. Why did we sell them off? Why did we not make them available to people who needed them?

Mr. McDermid: What about the people who stayed there to make it work?

Mrs. Mitchell: We will let the hon. member speak next. Bill C-89 encourages lenders to do their own selling of defaulted houses in order to save CMHC from financial embarrassment.

Mr. Cosgrove: As well as the taxpayer.

Mrs. Mitchell: It does not help people to keep their homes. I would like to ask the minister, through Your Honour, to explain in committee whether or not this change to the insurance regulations will do anything at all to help people to keep their homes.

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes, it reduces their taxes.

Mrs. Mitchell: I would like to refer to mortgage renewal plans. I spoke at length on this subject, the whole question of mortgage interest deferral schemes, in my response to the budget last November. Since then, I have checked back with a number of the people I mentioned as being case examples. I have found, of course, that these people are in worse dire straits today, and they see no solution in deferring mortgage interest payments, which the government and the minister offered as their salvation, because they will only face the same situation, but with a much higher cost and a much higher lifetime debt, and they will be faced with losing their homes one year from now.

I have yet to find any one person, and I have deliberately asked, who will qualify for the government grants which have been offered to some of the poor people and the desperate, low-income home owners who have no equity in their homes.

Mr. Cosgrove: I will send you the 600.

Mrs. Mitchell: I do not think such people exist because surely very few people get into a home without putting something down.

Mr. Murphy: Joe Clark, Pierre Trudeau.

Mrs. Mitchell: That is right. That is a good point. The two leaders of the other parties would be the only ones to qualify.

I repeat my November statement with regard to the mortgage renewal plan which will be authorized in Bill C-89. Instead of lowering mortgage interest rates, the government will subsidize continuing high mortgage interest rates. Instead of requiring the banks to establish an affordable mortgage lending portfolio from their billion dollar profits, the government will guarantee mortgage deferral plans which will bring thousands more dollars to mortgagees, the lenders, while keeping home owners in permanent, lifetime debt. The Canada mortgage renewal program will be a program of guaranteed usury, therefore, sponsored and encouraged by this government.

Mr. Cosgrove: And the government of Manitoba.

Mrs. Mitchell: It will be no solution for the problems of home owners.

I want to conclude by reiterating a concern of the New Democratic Party that this bill is a further step to limit CMHC to an insurance function, further diminishing direct CMHC responsibility for housing programs and assistance which should be a top government priority. I therefore recommend that the government withdraw Bill C-89 or expand it to restructure and reform CMHC so that it will become a national housing corporation with real teeth and with the power and responsibility to do the following: to plan for housing needs on a long-term basis. Why should we not have a five-year plan for housing? We have it for defence. Why should we not have some of that defence money as well? To administer mortgages directly under controlled, long-term mortgage interest policy; to provide direct services to build and assist in the development of affordable rental housing and social housing; finally, to own and control housing assets and Crown land assets for housing to provide a permanent investment for the future.

The policy of this government, of Canada Mortgage and Housing, and of the Department of Public Works, for which this minister shares responsibility, is to sell off assets instead of trading them or going into land bank programs with municipalities which would enable us to retain land and lease it for affordable housing.

Finally, we request that a national housing investment fund of $500 million be immediately established to invest in the needed 220,000 new housing units, both private and public, which would provide an additional 92,000 jobs which are very much needed in the related construction and forestry industries in 1982.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr.

Baker)—Government of Canada—Transfer of Tourism Office from Ottawa to Yarmouth, N.S. (b) Advice tendered by Minister; the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens)—The Economy—Query respecting matters considered when preparing budget—(b) Duration or recession; the hon. member for Hamilton-West (Mr. Hudecki)—Health—Request for vaccination program to combat red measles.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) that Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate, I would like to pay tribue to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the part it has played for more than 35 years in the development of mortgage financing in residential construction in this country.

CMHC introduced mortgage insurance in Canada in 1954 as a way of protecting mortgage insurers against loss, making mortgages more attractive as an investment, and as a way of making sure there was enough capital available for all of the housing which had to be built. In that year, 1954, the Bank Act was amended to allow the chartered banks to make mortgage loans. Until that time, the loans were available only from insurance companies and loan and trust companies.

• (1710)

The first year that CMHC offered mortgage insurance—and the corporation was alone in that field for quite a while, and certainly at that time—lending institutions approved $636 million in loans for new construction, an increase of 70 per cent over the previous year. In 1966 CMHC began insuring mortgages on existing houses as well as new construction. Nowadays with private insurers in the field, CMHC still insures nearly a third of all institutional lending for both new and existing housing.

The corporation now has $24 billion worth of mortgages insured. Its own mortgage portfolio amounts to almost $9 billion. It has played this role through the mechanism of mortgage insurance which, by enabling the introduction and use of the high ratio loan for both home ownership and rental production, has contributed to our status among the best housed people in the world.

The legislation under which CMHC conducts its insurance business, the National Housing Act, was framed and evolved in an extended period of relatively stable growth and low inflation. That world, as we know, changed abruptly in the mid-seventies. With that change, our existing ways of financing housing no longer seemed to be appropriate.

In a time of high inflation and high interest rates, people with five-year level payment mortgages are forced to make very high payments in the early years of the mortgage. These initial high payments effectively block many young families from owning their own homes.

In the last few years interest rates have not only climbed, they have become very much more volatile as well. As a result, it is even more difficult for Canadians to buy homes. Mortgage terms have become shorter because lenders cannot attract longer-term funds. Borrowers, on the other hand, do not want to be stuck with a high rate mortgage if interest rates decline.

As we all know, many borrowers are in serious difficulty because they are suddenly faced with a sharp increase in payments on renewal. The Canada mortgage renewal plan, which this bill will authorize, will bring at least temporary relief to people who are in the most serious trouble. The most disturbing aspect of the situation, however, is the increase in uncertainty about the future of interest rates which affects both lenders and potential home buyers. This uncertainty dampens both the effective demand for housing and the supply of investment capital.

Clearly the time has come to examine alternatives to the rollover mortgages that are more appropriate to these times of high and fluctuating interest rates and to widen the choice for the borrower. I believe the government has a responsibility to play a role in this process. There is no shortage of ideas in the private sector. Due to legislative constraints in the National Housing Act, however, the government cannot play the essential supportive role it would like to in the process of increasing the choice of borrowing instruments and encouraging lenders to assume some of the risk for borrowers in difficulty.

The constraints that I refer to relate to the terms and conditions under which CMHC may insure mortgages, the way it may charge for that insurance and the methods by which it may settle claims on these mortgages. These three factors are all interwoven. The detailed terms and conditions specified in the act prevent the corporation from being receptive to alternative mortgage instruments proposed by builders, lenders and the public. Even if the corporation were given this flexibility, the entrenching of premiums in the act itself would prevent the corporation from charging a premium commensurate with risk. As a result it could not insure the more innovative instruments without causing a drain on the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Finally, the claim settlement procedures in the act now, because of limitations on interest arrears which the lender could claim on default, discourage the lender from deferring default action when borrowers are in temporary difficulty. In summary then, the corporation is hemmed in by legislative constraints which impede its role of ensuring that mortgage markets work well and that prevailing mortgage finance mechanisms facilitate ownership and rental investment.

I believe that the legislative amendments will enable the corporation to be responsive to consumer needs and to the preferences and concerns of the lending industry, builders and experts in the mortgage field. They will permit CMHC to widen the choice of financing options available to the home purchaser and the investor. I believe that the way to a solution to the present-day difficulties in the housing sector lies to a great extent in modifications to financing mechanisms.

Back in 1954 the government showed the initiative in introducing mortgage insurance for high ratio loans to offer more Canadians the opportunity to build their own homes and more investors to build rental housing. Today we need to show initiative comparable to that shown by our predecessors in this House of Commons over 25 years ago. We face economic circumstances very different from those that they faced, and the answers are correspondingly different. The 1980s will be a time of evolving mortgage financing techniques.

The mechanism of mortgage insurance is an essential element of this evolution, but it can only play a part if the legislation is sufficiently flexible. While much of the attention of late has focused on access to ownership and renewal difficulties, we all know that the problems in the rental sector are formidable. Due to the large sums involved in financing large rental projects, public mortgage insurance plays a particularly important role.

A major impediment in this area has been the fact that cost recovery underwriting, given existing premiums, requires the investor to put up an inordinately high proportion of the required capital out of his own funds. In other words, the investor must provide an unacceptably high down payment. In today's circumstances of extremely tight rental markets, the corporation must be in a position to underwrite the size of rental loan which would make rental investment feasible.

● (1720)

To the extent that investors are not willing to finance rental accommodation, there is an increased demand for taxpayers' money for that purpose. The facility to set premiums commensurate with risk will enable the corporation to show more flexibility in its underwriting practices with no cost to the taxpayer.

Similar considerations apply to the ownership side. Aside from affordability, the question of uncertainty is a major consideration for purchasers. With some imagination, mechanisms can be developed which transfer some of the interest-rate risk from the home buyer to the mortgage lender. I think this is extremely significant. The lender's risk can then be underwritten by the government on payment of the appropriate premium.

Mortgage insurance is there because mortgage lending is, and always has been, a risky proposition. It will remain a risky proposition. The bill before us today is designed to ensure that money continues to flow into housing in a way that provides the home buyer with the widest possible choice of how he or she will borrow the money and on what terms he or she will pay it back.

Mr. Blenkarn: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, would the parliamentary secretary permit a question? I do not believe that his time is up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Could the parliamentary secretary tell us if one of the contemplated schemes in the act is to have Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation guarantee a fixed rate of interest for five years upon the payment of an appropriate insurance fee?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. member, I would say that it would be one point of view which we could consider in committee.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that members on the opposite side have come forward with a bill to amend the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and the National Housing Act. Members of the House will now have an opportunity to give serious consideration to the problems which face home owners from coast to coast. No member of the House denies that these problems are serious.

In his introductory remarks, the minister spoke of the urgency of the bill and the opportunity it will give to young people to acquire new homes. I agree with the urgency and the necessity for the House to make it possible for those who already own homes to be able to continue to do so. However, I do not see any provision in the amendments to either act to make it easier for any person, young or old, to buy a new home.

The minister spoke positively and in rather glowing terms about how the provisions will make it possible for home owners in Canada to purchase homes as a result of the flexibility in the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. But the amendment which was brought forward simply reflects an outdated budget which was brought in on November 12, a budget which was an established disaster and disappointment in the eyes of most people across Canada.

It is my hope that the flexibility which the minister says will be introduced in this legislation will enable people who purchased a home under the AHOP agreement five or six years ago at affordable mortgage rates to stay in their homes. I hope this flexibility will allow those home owners to be given the same financial opportunity as the entrepreneur down the street. Even if these home owners do not qualify under the provisions of the 30 per cent shelter cost ratio, I hope they would be able to become a tenant on the property which they have been paying for over the years rather than having to move and rent another CMHC accommodation down the street. This practice has happened in the past. I trust that it will not continue in the future.

At the outset, I would like to say that it is a pretty sad commentary on the state of our economy and the actions of the government when home owner and builder alike are in such dire straits that the minister responsible for housing must ask for speedy passage of this bill. The bill may not offer much, they say, but it is all there is or will be. In other words, the home owner and builder have given up expecting anything but platitudes and empty promises from the government.

Reference has already been made to the letter addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) by ten members of his own government. I would like to quote two paragraphs from that letter:

> It is well known that the construction industry creates numerous jobs in related fields in addition to the direct jobs that it produces. In view of the present slump in the construction industry, we think that incentives in this area would have beneficial, stimulating effects on the job situation throughout the country.
> By putting emphasis on the construction of homes we would be killing two birds with one stone since such a step would help to make up for the deficit of the 50,000 housing units suffered by Canada in 1981.

Last summer and fall, the minister of housing saw fit to raise the hopes and dreams of home owners by making vague and cryptic comments about an assistance program which would soon be forthcoming. He was obviously thinking about the November 12 budget without giving the date it would be brought down. The heart of this campaign, a campaign born of the bunker, was reached on September 15 when the minister met with representatives of the "Convoy of Anger", or the Save Our Homes Campaign Committee. His message to these outraged home owners was quite clear and specific: "Help is on the way." That message was repeated over and over again throughout September, October and the first days of November until even members on this side of the House, as well as myself, being an optimist by nature, took it as a statement we could follow and we urged our constituents to hold off giving up on their homes and to wait until budget night.

We should have known better. The assistance program which was announced on budget night and is under discussion today gives new meaning to the phrase, "Well, that is the least that could be done." Under this program, a home owner must go hat in hand to the mortgage holder at renewal time—but only at renewal time—and set out his personal financial life in detail. If it is found that the principal and interest payments on the mortgage plus property tax and, if applicable, half of the condominium common element costs exceed 30 per cent of the household income, then negotiations might begin. However, those negotiations are really just between the government and the mortgage holder. If both are agreed that the home owner qualifies for assistance and both are prepared to assist, it is then determined how much equity that home owner has built up in his property, and if that equity is sufficient to permit an increase in the mortgage, the mortgagee may increase that mortgage up by a further $3,000. The amount of the increase is deducted from the annual payable interest.

Therefore, if a home owner's mortgage payments were to increase from $400 to $600 per month and that home owner qualified for assistance, $2,400 would be added to his or her mortgage payments for one year. The mortgage payment would remain at $400 per month. But in the instance of the home owner being without equity and subject to the criteria that was mentioned earlier, CMHC will pay the mortgage holder up to $3,000 to offset the increase in the monthly mortgage payment that the home owner is unable to meet. CMHC's contribution is not repayable by either the home owner or the mortgagee. That in essence is how this assistance program as set out is intended to operate. It is too little and too late. The great mortgage renewal crunch came in August of 1981. What does this government propose to do? It proposes to exclude those home owners by limiting the application of this assistance program to home owners renewing their mortgages between September 1, 1981 and November 11, 1982. In addition, this program is sufficiently mired in red tape that it is expected to assist only 50,000 home owners out of a total of 920,000 home owners who will have to renew their mortgages over the course of the program's short existence. That represents about 5 per cent of the total.

Let us not forget the home owner with equity. The home owner with equity is not receiving assistance as such but merely a deferral of his problem. Sooner or later that home owner will have to pay the bill. Out of the 50,000 home owners who will be assisted, 37,500 will receive nothing more than a temporary respite from their dilemma. The other 12,500—or less than 2 per cent of all home owners renewing—are the only ones who will really receive financial or genuine assistance. Twelve thousand five hundred people may sound like many people at first blush, but I want to tell hon. members that following the presentation of the budget an assessment was made in the city of St. Catharines, and it was determined that of a population of 125,000 people, not more than 15 home owners would likely qualify for this assistance. The odds are somewhat better than the odds in a lottery, but they are not something of which the government can be proud. Let us not forget that the majority of home owners who will be renewing their mortgages will be doing so without assistance and without interest deferral.

I have been impressed by the number of home owners in my home town and across the country who are making financial sacrifices to maintain their homes. The social and economic cost is incalculable. Entertainment budgets are being cut. Car repairs are being put off. Shoes and clothes have to do for another year. Home renovation plans are being scrapped, and grocery budgets are being pared to the bare minimum. More and more we will see home owners looking on their houses as onerous financial burdens they cannot sell and cannot manage or, if they can manage, are barely doing so. The dream of home ownership and the pride of home ownership we had in years gone by was part of a way of life in this country, but it is becoming a nightmare, all because of this government's insane high interest rate policy and this government's broken election promise to hard-pressed home owners.

We in this party are often taunted by the government and by the press for having followed a high interest rate policy ourselves during that Conservative interlude. The current Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) was so concerned about the damaging effects of that policy that he vowed to resign if interest rates exceeded 14 per cent under a Liberal government.

Mr. McDermid: He is still around.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Yes, we did follow a high interest rate policy but, unlike the present government and the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, we honoured our election commitments. We told home owners that there would be high interest rates, but let us not forget that interest rates at that time were 12 per cent and 14 per cent. Our policy was that high interest rates would not be permitted to destroy the market or the joy of continuing home ownership. We provided meaningful relief in the form of a mortgage interest and property tax deductibility program. For 1982 that program would have reduced the effective interest rate on an average $40,000 mortgage calculated at 18 per cent to 13.5 per cent. That is what we on this side of the House call assistance to home owners. Unlike the proposal put forward in the disastrous November 12 budget, our assistance program would have helped every home owner and not just 2 per cent of those renewing or those faced with the renewal of mortgages.

One wag told me that the difference between the Progressive Conservative policy and that of the Liberal Party was the difference between renting and owning. The sad part of it is that the government is not promoting rental policies as an effective alternative. Bill C-89 was written at a time when CMHC itself was predicting a zero vacancy rate by 1983, a black market in rental accommodation and a critical slowdown in rental unit construction. Still, Bill C-89 was written, and since it was written, CMHC forecasts indicate that a zero vacancy rate could be reached as early as this summer. In fact, in many communities across this country that rate has already been reached.

In view of the impending rental crisis, what is this government prepared to do? It says the first step was announced on November 12, and that first step was to slash any private sector incentive to provide the necessary construction of rental units. Soft cost write-offs were eliminated. The multiple unit residential building tax shelter was scrapped and, in return, the government offered interest-free loans of up to $7,500 per unit. The net effect of all that was to say goodbye to some $1 billion worth of new construction in return for $30 million in new tax revenue. Even the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen)—and he indeed has a checkered record in doing his arithmetic—could see that this was not a particularly good deal for Canada. Accordingly, the minister reinstated the soft cost deduction and the MURB program for just a little while longer, thus putting off real disaster for a little while longer.

What of that $7,500 in rental construction assistance? Builders estimate that this assistance program will give rise to 15,000 starts, or 10,000 fewer starts than was the case last year under the MURB program. For the government's part, it is assisting the rental crisis by reducing its commitment to social housing by 5,000 units this year. The two programs combined will result in 15,000 fewer places for Canadians to live.

Further, when attempting to project housing and apartment construction starts, we cannot as yet assess the impact of some additional sections contained within the budget proposals. I refer, of course, to the taxation of capital gains on the disposition of an asset, the reduction of the capital cost allowance and those measures which have the effect of reducing people's incentive to save. Savings represent a supply of mortgage funds. By taxing a capital gain at the time of a sale and not when cash is received, the government is in effect demanding a substantially higher down payment for, to pay the tax, the vendor has to get the money to do so. Not only is this tax measure patently unfair and inequitable, but it will also place home ownership further and further away from the ordinary Canadian.

Contrary to what the minister says, the amendments contained in this bill do not provide the flexibility necessary to make it easier for Canadians to acquire homes because under this program there is no way a large number of potential home owners will come close to being able to pay the price. Capital cost allowances, that this government once boasted were the best in the world, have been reduced by half and are bound to drive up housing costs. The builder, especially the landlord constructing new rental accommodation, is already hard pressed to provide affordable living quarters, and this additional cost will not and cannot be absorbed; it must be passed on to the consumer, the potential home occupier. In these times of ever and widely fluctuating interest rates, those with money to invest are less and less attracted to mortgages. Why would anyone want to invest in a mortgage when the interest rate may be five points higher next month? Short-term investments are the preferred choice of many. Anyone looking at the market can see. The stability of mortgage funds supply was being maintained through people's savings, and now even that source of mortgage funds through insurance corporations is being threatened by the November 12 budget.

● (1740)

Canadians, ordinary working Canadians, are discouraged from purchasing their own registered retirement savings plans, as one can no longer claim the interest paid on moneys borrowed for that purpose. Life insurance policies are being attacked as tax loopholes, and this will discourage the purchasing of permanent policies, the kind of policy that provided the source for insurance loan money.

Mr. Speaker, against this backdrop of doom and gloom, the rental and home ownership assistance offered in this Bill C-89 is woefully inadequate. There can be no question that a crisis is looming, and yet we see the federal government sitting idly by, neither caring nor acting. And the minister urges action. Renewing a mortgage today is a nightmare. Trying to find decent, affordable rental accommodation is like trying to find a needle in the proverbial haystack; and trying to make a living in the construction business is even worse than that, it is well nigh impossible. To this list must be added another segment of our society—that I have not yet referred to in any length or detail—which is potentially the hardest hit of all. I might add that the implications to Canada and for Canada are far reaching. What the government is doing is allowing the housing crisis to continue and, by keeping mortgage rates out of sight, is spawning a whole generation of Canadians who no longer believe in the dream of home ownership. They talk in terms of public housing. Our young people have been particularly hard hit by unemployment and are also barely able to make ends meet while living in rented accommodation. They see their parents scrambling to pay the taxes, to meet the mortgage payments, to keep their homes going and to keep food on the table. They see this and they vow that they will not let it happen to them, that they will not be caught in the same position. A house is not a dream or a goal for them to strive for. It is an in and out nightmare that is driving their parents to the wall. They say "Thank you very much, we will avoid that government trap, we will find housing or demand that housing be made available to us from public sources."

Those young people are not deterred by the problem of the marketplace. To purchase an average price home, and the figures were quoted earlier today, to purchase an average price house in Halifax requires a family income of $35,700; in Montreal it is $36,000; and from there you can only go upwards. That is the average cost to acquire a home. But the average household income in Canada is only $27,000. Therefore, even if our average young Canadian family did want to buy a home, the cost of doing so would be prohibitive to him. The end result is that home ownership, the right to hold and own property, is dropped as an objective by this new generation. No longer will we be a nation of home owners. To many it will just be a dream, if they happen to have that kind of dream. What a future, what a futile future for this great country of plenty!

Mr. Speaker, are we, a country of vast geographic expanse, to become a nation of apartment dwellers, a nation where only the rich might own and live in a home, a house of the kind we are used to in this modern day? Is this the goal that brought our forebears to this great country of ours? I would say, surely not. Surely we have been raised to believe in this country and in its promise, and surely one of those promises is that there is an opportunity here to own a piece of land and to build a house upon it. That was my belief and it means as well that it is my desire that this kind of promise in this country be continued.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Bill C-89 is not in keeping with this philosophy, as it is the product of a worn out, cynical and indifferent government that has lost the courage, the vision and the wisdom to stand up for Canadians. I can understand the discomfiture of the minister who sponsored this bill today. But, if he does not want to preside over the destruction of the Canadian housing industry or the shattering of that Canadian dream, he should resign, and he is honour bound to resign, and thus highlight the housing crisis which he finds himself in; and he must give an opportunity for a new and fresh beginning. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on this important bill about housing. Before commencing my remarks, I cannot avoid making a response to the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). I listened very carefully to his words this evening. I felt that he was offering us two solutions to the housing problem. Let us all agree that in the ideal world we would want every Canadian to own his own detached, single family dwelling. We would like to see that. Unfortunately, we are not living in a utopian world. We have harsh realities which affect every one of us and which call upon all of us to exercise, at certain times in our economic history, a period of restraint.

I believe that even the members opposite, even those who are slightly noisy in the back rows, agree that we cannot promise everyone everything, even though we would like to see them have it.

What were the two solutions put forward by the hon. member for St. Catharines to the housing problem? Mr. Speaker, the key of his speech was en recherche du temps passé. He presented to us two solutions. Number one was to get rid of our high interest rates. But did he tell us one concrete way we could get rid of those high interest rates? No. He said it would be desirable, that we should get rid of them. Well, that is marvellous, but we know the implications of irresponsible actions, as much as we would like to see high interest rates go down. He did not tell us, if we drove them down below the United States rates, whether his party would be interested in implementing international exchange controls here, in order to keep the money here. He did not tell us about the implications, as to whether he wanted that or not. He, as a matter of fact, condemned the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party when those suggestions were put forward from that quarter. He has not offered us a responsible alternative in any of the measures he suggested, although we would all like to see lower interest rates at this time.

● (1750)

He criticized us, en recherche du temps passé, for getting rid of MURBs. Need I remind hon. members opposite that in their "Clark-Crosbie" budget they first did away with MURBs? It hardly lies within them, when they made a pretence of the integrity of their budget, having told the people what it was, to now rise and criticize us for abolishing MURBs. Perhaps they have reconsidered and believe that MURBs would be a good instrument for getting housing going. But I say that many new foundations have been laid under the MURB program which was extended to December 31 in order to provide rental housing. It has been shown in the past to have been a very effective instrument. If hon. members opposite are in favour of the MURB program, I should like to see them rise and say it directly rather than wallow in rhetoric without recognizing that it was their party which first abolished the MURB program.

Another possible solution was toyed with by the hon. member for St. Catharines, the solution of mortgage interest deductibility. He said it would be a solution to high housing and mortgage costs. Under their program, mortgage interest deductibility would apply to a limited extent but essentially in an unfair manner. I reject this alternative which would have given the biggest break to the richest taxpayers.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Untrue!

Mr. McDermid: They do not have mortgages on their homes.

Mr. Peterson: A deductibility program for any type of expense always benefits higher-bracket income tax payers more than the lower ones; there is no way to refute it. If that is the hon. member's concept of social justice, if that is a Tory alternative to the government's housing program, it hardly entitles them to damn the positive specific programs outlined in Bill C-89.

Mr. McDermid: Name one.

Mr. Peterson: I wish to proceed with an enunciation of those particular programs. In summary, the bill enables the Canada mortgage renewal plan to succeed. Also it allows the Canada rental supply plan to operate. It contains provisions for home owners, especially first time ones, and finally, it will enable CMHC to conduct its activities in a more efficient and more responsive manner, considering the difficult financial complexities we now see in Canada's capital markets.

Mr. McDermid: Put them more in debt; that is what you are doing.

Mr. Peterson: I hear the hon. member opposite. Their programs are the ones which ignore restraint and give universal help, across the board, to everyone. This demonstrates more than ever that a Tory is a person who looks forward with optimism to the nineteenth century!

As the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) said, the bill does not represent the government's full agenda for housing concerns. It provides a framework within which we will be able to achieve our full agenda. It provides for very important needs and is necessary for the government to deal effectively with housing issues. It is important to all participants in the housing market—home owners, prospective home owners, developers of rental accommodation, renters, builders and lending institutions.

While there are a number of ways to assess the importance of the bill, perhaps the most direct one is to list briefly what I consider to be the housing problems facing the country at this time and to show how the bill is relevant in meeting those concerns. I believe hon. members on all sides of the House share the first concern, that is the uncertainty facing home owners because of mortgage renewals when rates are in a great state of flux. There is no doubt that the vast majority of the estimated 635,000 householders expected to renew mortgages this year have the financial capacity to do so, without undue burden on household income, because of the large amount of equity they have in their homes at this time. This equity, or their other resources, will enable many of them to meet the problem of renewing their mortgages because they will have adequate cash flow. Nevertheless, the most important aspect of the bill is that it addresses itself to those people who face real difficulty—those people who cannot renew because of higher interest rates and would be in a position where they might lose their homes, households where families are required to use more than 30 per cent of their income to pay principal, interest and taxes. Primarily the bill addresses itself to those people in need.

We would like to give more money to every home owner, we would like to make every renter a home owner overnight, but in times of restraint ours is a responsible approach to meeting the needs of particular individuals.

This is why we must look at a few facts of the situation. The Canada mortgage renewal plan recognized that home owners have signifcantly higher incomes than renters—$28,000 on average for an owner as against $17,000 for renters. Also home owners have much greater wealth with $72,000 in assets, versus $9,000 for renters. Householders renewing three-year or five-year mortgage plans have generally experienced significant increases in their equity over the past few years. Therefore, a general and high cost program of mortgage renewal assistance, as has been argued by hon. members opposite, would simply be a transfer of income and would not meet the real needs. As we go into tough days ahead, we will have to address the particular needs of those citizens in the country in many of our programs. We will have to reassess the advisability of universal programs. This is one reason our approach to helping home owners with renewal problems, those in the greatest difficulty, is a responsible one in that it meets the most important problems at this particular time of restraint.

There are many other things I should like to say, but I reiterate that at this time we are simply starting our housing program—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8. p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at 6 p.m. this evening, I believe the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), who had the floor, had completed his remarks. In any event, I do not see him here in the House and accordingly the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) can have the floor.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to speak on Bill C-89, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act. In summary this act is to provide legislative authority for the mortgage interest deferral plan outlined in the budget. It is also to provide legislative authority for interest-free loans up to $7,500 per unit per landlord constructing new buildings. It is also to provide an expansion of the types of lending arrangements.

Initially, I would like to refer to a number of statements that have been made in the House by three cabinet ministers. First, I refer to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) who said on December 10, 1981, referring to the housing crisis in Canada, that this is not the worst crisis we have had. I do not think anyone wants to question whether or not it is the worst housing crisis, but to most people who have outstanding mortgages on their homes it is by far and away the worst that they have ever seen.

Next I want to refer to statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). On December 3, while in Toronto, the Prime Minister stated that the blame for high interest rates lies with the banks, the market economy and individuals who want good returns on Canada Savings Bonds, and not with his government. If that is not bad enough, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in his budget of November 12, 1981, stated, in part, that we can only expect a decline in interest rates of 1 per cent per year over the next four years. That is not very encouraging for Canadians. In fact, to most Canadians who are attempting to buy homes or who are renewing mortgages, it is close to being a disaster.

I now want to refer to a statement made in the House before dinner this evening. The hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) referred to high interest rates in Canada. He wondered what suggestions we have. I asked him to come back this evening so that I could tell him what suggestions we have. Unfortunately, he has not yet returned to the House. But we must ask ourselves why we have high interest rates. Why are high interest rates causing Canadians so many problems? There must be a reason. Bill C-89 deals with the symptoms but not the disease.

Let us look briefly at why we have high interest rates. The Minister of Finance would like us all to know and believe that we have high interest rates because of our high inflation, and that we must keep interest rates high in order to bring down inflation. Unfortunately, that is not the real reason. I would ask those members opposite who are interested to examine the balance of national payments in Canada for the past year. If they do that, the reason will become apparent to them. The government cannot lower interest rates because of its policies. If it did, it would bring about a monetary crisis in Canada. It recognizes that. Let me spell out very quickly why this is so.

• (2010)

If one examines the national account balances, one sees that over the past two years $17 billion in long-term capital has left Canada. Now we have been able to bring capital back. In fact, the figure comes to approximately $16 billion which has returned to Canada. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, most of that has been short term. The investment industry calls it hot money. It follows high interest rates. If interest rates are higher here than in other countries, it will flow in; if lower, it will flow out.

So the government's policies discourage long-term capital. This is not speculation, there is no question the figures are there for everyone to see. We have had an exodus of capital and that is so because our world credit rating is not as high as that of some other nations, namely, the United States. That is a fact. Normally our rates should be at least 1 per cent or 2 per cent higher than in the United States in order to encourage long-term capital. So the government's policies have led to this problem.

However, they have another problem. If government has a large deficit, then its demand for capital leads to higher interest rates. I do not think anyone will dispute that. We must remember that 50 per cent of all borrowing in Canada today is done by federal and provincial governments.

Another major problem is the defence of the dollar. Provincial governments, with a higher credit rating than Canadian corporations, can borrow money in the United States or Europe cheaper than they can here. That, in turn helps to support the dollar. One has only to look at the amount of borrowing abroad by the provinces to see that is so. This was a policy that the government persuaded the provinces to enact in 1975 or 1976. There was a huge bulge of borrowing by the provinces which has continued to this day. Those are the reasons we have high interest rates. It has little to do with inflation, that is a minor factor. The reason for the outflow of capital is that basically this government has discouraged investment in Canada. The national accounts figures show an exodus of long-term capital.

The other factor, of course, is the government's efforts to nationalize energy companies at a time when they were becoming more Canadian. The government felt it was a good opportunity to step in and buy Canadian companies. If not Canadian-owned, they at best were operated in Canada as good corporate citizens, managed by Canadians. The government decided it wants to own a bigger part of the energy industry. The hon. member for Willowdale says he does not like high interest rates, but he would like to see them lowered; he says the Conservatives do not have any answers.

First of all we have to define the problem. I think I have defined the problem. The question is: what can we do about it? Can we lower interest rates? Yes, but there are certain things we must do, such as encourage exports.

Of course, the hon. member for Willowdale would ask: what exports? We have a surplus of goods that we are not selling abroad, such as natural gas from western Canada. Quite frankly, if that surplus were in Ontario or in Quebec it would be exported, but because it is in western Canada, the government decided it does not want to do anything else to help western Canada. That is the only reason why our suplus gas is not being exported. The amount of gas available for export has been estimated by provincial governments as approximately $2 billion worth each year. That would be money flowing into this country. We could allow the dollar to float and it would decline, but if we encouraged exports it would not decline that much. And if it did, it would make our manufacturing industries more competitive as they obviously are not at the present time. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association will admit that they are not as competitive as they would like to be. We must encourage long-term, not short-term capital. However, this government would have to do a complete reversal on policy.

What we need, what everyone in Canada has asked for, is a new budget because this one does not address today's problems. It was drawn up a year ago. Thirty Liberal MPs met with the Minister of Finance last fall to tell him it was not a good budget. Ten Liberal MPs wrote a letter to the minister just recently. We could allow our interest rates, Mr. Speaker, to drop by 3 per cent or 4 per cent and it would not harm our dollar that much. It would not drop below 78 cents to 79 cents.

I would now like to come to the housing market. We have to deal with it piecemeal because the government refuses to recognize why we have high interest rates. In the spring of 1980 Calgary had a vacancy rate of 1 per cent, and it is now 0.2 per cent because construction has fallen off. In many parts of Canada, including Alberta, there is a vacancy rate of zero. In effect, there are no vacancies. At the present time, the cost of the average home in Calgary is $111,000. I am referring to the average home. One must make an income of $62,000 just to afford a home in Calgary. The average mortgage is $50,000. The average Canadian cannot afford that.

During the last three years, the average increase in interest cost per year for a home has been between $2,000 and $3,000. That is absolutely ridiculous. It is not due to the mortgage companies and it is not due to the banks; it is due to the interest rates brought in by this government and carried out by the Bank of Canada. In Canada at this time, we need an average of 220,000 homes or units constructed each year; however, according to the Conference Board, 180,000 may be constructed next year, resulting in a shortfall of 40,000 units. The outlook for the next two years is no better. We will have a shortfall of over 100,000 units over the next two to three years, and this government is not addressing the problem. What is the government suggesting? It is suggesting that it will bring in a plan to assist the renters and home owners. What is this plan? This two-year plan would have a capital requirement of $350 million spent over two years, of which $150 million would be spent this year, and $200 million spent next year.

What does it actually mean when one breaks it down? It means that the government will provide a subsidy to lenders to build up to 15,000 rental units at $7,500 per unit. The government will provide rental assistance for 15,000 units in Canada when there is a need for 100,000 units. The government has hardly scratched the surface of the problem.

What rental units will this help? The average break-even cost for a lender in rental units today is $800. When a lender constructs an apartment block, he must receive a rent of $800 per unit in order to break even. The average subsidized housing in Canada has a rental cost of $400 per month. That means that if one lives in subsidized housing, one pays an average of $400 a month. The average cost is $800 for all other people in Canada.

What will the government do? It will provide a benefit to the lenders to construct rental apartments for those in the higher rental brackets, not those in the lower brackets. Once again, people in lower income tax brackets will be left out because no lender will build subsidized homes unless forced. How does one force them to build for the lower rental market? One cannot.

Therefore, if we look at the $150 million subsidy the government will provide, we find that 15,000 units times $7,500 amounts to $112 million which the government will provide for rental housing. Out of $150 million, the government will have $38 million left over to assist those who are in dire straits as a result of their mortgage renewals. Obviously, this will not help them. If one is renewing a mortgage, and 30 per cent of one's gross income is less than one's principal and interest, one may apply for a loan guarantee. If one's equity in one's home is less than five per cent, the government may allow a one-time grant of $3,000. However, one must have renewed one's mortgage between September 1, 1981, and November 12, 1982.

It does not appear that this will do very many people any good. Surely most people who have owned a home for three to five years would have more than five per cent equity in their homes. Obviously, this offers nothing for most people. If one calculates this benefit, one finds that the maximum number of people who will be helped by this loan or guarantee or loan grant will be 15,000. However, 1,200,000 people will renew mortgages over the next two years. Where is the help the minister promised? It is not there.

Let us look at the MURB program, which is of benefit only when interest rates are high. It was not of much benefit, as the builders will tell us, at lower interest rates, those below 13 per cent or 14 per cent. However, at interest rates above 16 per cent to 18 per cent, the MURBs become very attractive.

Mr. MacKay: Go to Whistler!

Mr. Wright: What has the government stated? It has stated that it will eliminate the MURB program. Concerning rental units, whereas the government is now providing subsidies for 25,000 rental units, it will reduce that to 15,000 units, amounting to a reduction of 10,000 units per year. Concerning subsidized housing, the government will reduce the subsidy from the former 30,000 down to 25,000, amounting to a reduction of 5,000 units. That amounts to a total reduction of 15,000 units over the next year. What does the construction industry state? It states that for every unit built, whether a rental unit or a home, it takes one and a half construction workers to build that unit, on the average. That means that there will be 15,000 fewer units, multiplied by the one and a half employees who would have built those units. That means we will have an increase in unemployment of 22,500 over the next year. Where is the justice in that? The government really does not know how to solve the problem. All it can do is to create more unemployment as a result of this bill.

If we look at the mobility of labour in Canada, we find that as a result of the high interest rates, the high cost of rental units and the high cost of homes, people are unwilling to move from one part of Canada to another because it is too expensive. They may decide they should stay in an area of high unemployment and receive unemployment benefits or welfare benefits rather than move to a high employment area. Where is the justice in that? Why would a government bring out a budget and a bill such as this which would encourage unemployment?

People within the mortgage market recently told the government that, for all intent and purposes, the mortgage market in Canada has dried up. If one asks the Minister of Public Works in the House, he will deny that. He will say we still have an active mortgage market, but the average Canadian is no longer involved in buying a home. He cannot afford it. Many Canadians cannot afford $800 a month in rent, but still this government wishes to continue with its high interest policy.

● (2030)

Why has the mortgagee market dried up? It is because the government brought out Canada Savings Bonds last fall by which it raised $19.5 billion. It took much potential money out of the mortgage market and put it into savings where it will remain for one to two years. By increasing interest rates, other lenders who would have put their money into mortgages, put it into short-term investment in order to obtain a better return. That is why the mortgage industry has been saying the mortgage market has dried up.

What about the life insurance companies which are noted for providing long-term mortgages? Even during the last couple of years, a period of high interest rates and short-term investments, they have been providing 15, 20 and 25-year mortgages, but the government does not tell you that. What does it do? It virtually cancelled income annuities.

In Alberta there would be no homes or apartments built if it were not for Alberta Housing. That is the only reason the people of Alberta are now able to buy or rent new accommodation. That comes from the Alberta Heritage Fund. For those who wonder about the Alberta Heritage Fund, it was that fund which protected Albertans from the scarcity of housing that has occurred in other parts of Canada.

This minister has not given us anything that we really want or need or that will help the people of Canada. We are going to be very interested in discussing some of these questions with the minister in committee. Bill C-89 does not address the problem. The housing industry in its desperation is saying, "We don't like it, but it is better than nothing. If we cannot have it all, give us a little piece. If we cannot have lower rates and fairness in the mortgage markets, we will accept this little bit." They will have to come back to the government in six months or a year and ask whether there is something else that can be done for them. The government may think about it. It may give them another little bit to help the mortgage market, but far less than it should. However, it will at least help it.

We are going to examine this bill in committee very carefully and find out why this minister goes along with high interest rates, why he is not prepared to help those Canadians in desperate need of accommodation and why he has provided nothing but a drop in the bucket. The Minister of Public Works is the minister of a drop in the bucket.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks in support of Bill C-89, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, I will be concentrating on the mortgage insurance fund and the two major social housing programs that have had a considerable impact on the financial status of that fund. To put my comments in the proper perspective I want to make a few general remarks about the housing situation in Canada today.

There have always been persons inadequately housed, even in 1982. I understand that about 2 per cent of the houses in this country are still without modern conveniences. Nevertheless, during the last decade, housing starts in Canada averaged over 230,000 units per annum. Compare that to the United States, the prosperous country to the south, where during the same decade housing starts averaged 1.77 million per annum. Thus, on a per capita basis we were building housing in Canada at a rate more than 30 per cent greater than in the United States.

Because I am from the construction industry, have experience in all provinces and have visited many of the states, I am prepared to add that our standards of quality are generally superior to those in the United States. I give full credit for that exceptional performance to the Canada Housing and Mortgage Corporation. Their success has been in spite of the provincial governments and with no thanks to the Constitution which leaves the major responsibility for construction activity under provincial control.

I was angry last week when I watched the federal-provincial conference of first ministers. The provinces restrain, hinder and impede and still come with their hands out for more money. How many people in Quebec know that the federal government shares with the provincial government the cost of rent subsidies, that it shares the cost of deficits and provides financing or the guarantee of financing for up to 90 per cent, 95 per cent and even 100 per cent for rental accommodation for which the provincial government tries to take all the credit?

In 1980 CMHC contributed over $9 million in operating grants in Quebec and $34 million in contributions to deficits. The housing critic for the Official Opposition received a response to a question on January 27 last indicating that as at December 31, 1980, there were 148,336 units under the administration of the NHA that were provincially-owned rentals, CMHC-financed. That same answer to the question of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) indicated that CMHC, through the mortgage insurance fund, had, on September 30, 1981, 9,538 vacant housing units of which 1,882 were acknowledged to be in areas where there was no demand. That left 7,656 units available for occupancy. I would like to read the following paragraph from the 1980 annual report of CMHC:

By the beginning of 1980, the federal government, through CMHC, was committed to providing operating subsidies on a long-term basis for 225,000 dwelling units. For 1980 it authorized CMHC to make commitments for a further 26,750 dwelling units. During the year, however, approval was given for commitments for an additional 5,000 new dwelling units, to help alleviate very tight rental markets in such cities as Vancouver, Calgary and Toronto.

That means that total NHA social housing subsidy commitments exceed a quarter million units. This country can be very proud of the contribution that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has made in providing the financing or the guarantee of financing that has helped and is helping so many millions of Canadians.

I want to turn now to the subject of the mortgage insurance fund. In 1978, the assets of the mortgage insurance fund decreased for the first time since it was established in 1954. There was a further decrease in the fund in the year 1980 from $512 million at the beginning of the year to $314 million at year end. Mortgage loan insurance was introduced in 1954 when the National Housing Act was amended to permit the chartered banks to enter into the residential lending field. By protecting the lenders against the risk of loss, NHA mortgage insurance encouraged approved lenders to invest in mortgages. Mortgage insurance fees paid to CMHC by brokers are accumulated in a mortgage insurance reserve fund. Lenders may claim against the fund in the event that a borrower defaults on his payments and a foreclosure results.

Over 40 per cent of the five million dwellings completed since 1954 have been insured by CMHC. Over $50 billion in capital funds has been attracted toward investment in housing since the amendment to the National Housing Act over 25 years ago.

A letter which I received from the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing dated October 22, 1980, signed by the minister himself, stated:

I agree that it would be inequitable for CMHC to raise its mortgage insurance premiums to recover the losses incurred in insuring loans under the Assisted Home Ownership Program and the Assisted Rental Program.

As you point out in your letter, these were social programs and accordingly, their social cost should not be borne by those seeking National Housing Act mortgage insurance, but by the government.

Mr. Speaker, no provision was made at that time for these programs which were introduced then, with the result that the mortgage insurance fund has borne this risk and is now bearing the cost.

• (2040)

I have read this excerpt from the letter of the minister because at that time I heard rumours that there may be an increase in the percentage which was to be charged by CMHC and, as everyone knows, at one time the amount in the mortgage insurance fund exceeded $600 million. I was most anxious to ensure that if we were going to introduce social housing programs to use up these available funds, the cost should not be borne by those who had taken out regular mortgages.

In the mid-1970s, the mortgage insurance fund reserve was in excess of $600 million. This was several hundred million more than all the expected liabilities. The government used this excess to underwrite two social housing programs; the Assisted Home Ownership Program known as AHOP and the Assisted Rental Program known as ARP. These programs were designed to make home ownership available to more people and to put more rental units into tight markets. Well over 200,000 units were constructed under these programs.

Until now, the cost of initiating mortgage insurance business was borne by the corporation, for which it received an application fee. This fee originally was $35 and was increased to $100 last year. It never has been adequate to cover the associated costs. The costs not charged to the mortgage insurance fund are estimated to be approximately $75 million. The reason I mention this figure is to keep all the costs which have been charged to the mortgage insurance fund in perspective.

The cost of business initiation included the receiving and reviewing of applications, the receipt and posting of fees and insurance premiums, recording of insurance policy information in the corporation's files and computing systems and the carrying out of inspections and appraisals. These inspections ensure compliance with housing standards.

I would like to make a few remarks about the inspection process since I feel that it is relevant. I was always somewhat intrigued by the fact that CMHC was insuring mortgages and that most people were able to get somewhat preferential rates from the bank or lending institution if the mortgage was insured by CMHC. Why, then, would there be any private company in business in apparent competition with CMHC? One of the reasons concerns inspections.

Being in the construction industry, I wanted to find out for myself. I travelled across the country and visited several construction sites where contractors whom I knew were working with the company in the private sector which was insuring mortgages. In almost all cases there was no doubt that the consumer, or occupant of the house, would generally be paying about one half per cent more in the final analysis. The builder was expressing dissatisfaction with the inspection practices of CMHC. In fact, it was not so much the inspection practices which were at fault as the fact that the standard being imposed upon the construction by CMHC inspectors was higher than the standard being imposed by the private sector. Not only was the home owner being protected, he was also obtaining the benefit of a slightly lower interest rate on his house.

Nevertheless, this company continued to operate. Of course, the company is the Mortgage Insurance Company of Canada. Just last month, on January 19, I read that one of the developments in the history of this company was its merger with the only other private sector mortgage insurer in Canada, Insmor Holdings Ltd. of Toronto.

I make the point now that, apart from this one organization, there is only Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to turn to if we want to be sure that the consumer has the protection of the government. The claim was made that the merged companies can better compete against the other source of mortgage insurance, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I found it interesting that in the same article there was a comment attributed to William Mulholland, Chairman of the Bank of Montreal, who said that the number of mortgages in arrears by three months or more dropped by 15 per cent between June, 1980 and June, 1981, despite a 5 per cent increase in interest rates during that period. These two items are not particularly tied together but they happen to appear in the same article, and I thought that the second comment by the Chairman of the Bank of Montreal was worth recording here.

I will take a few moments to put on the record the present status of the mortgage insurance fund. As at November 30 last year, the fund assets were as follows: mortgage assets, that is mortgages held by the fund, totalled $124 million; real estate assets, these real estate assets are at market value, totalled $424 million. For those interested in the book value—the acquisition price—the figure is $523 million. This loss is included in the loss figures which are to be mentioned in connection with this particular program.

The fund had $24 million in other assets. The current deficit in the fund is $339.3 million. That is made up of a debt to CMHC of $56 million and a debt to the Government of Canada of $283.6 million.

● (2050)

The total assets as at November 30 were $232 million. Incidentally, the fund receives approximately $30 million per annum in premiums. An actuarial study suggests the fund is deficient by about $210 million.

Bill C-89 is intended to assist in putting the mortgage insurance fund back on a sound financial basis. I should interject, as I talk about AHOP and ARP, to say that the rundown of the amount in the mortgage insurance fund is almost entirely attributable to these two programs which were introduced as social housing programs and which, for reasons I shall be explaining, resulted in a depletion of the cash, the amount of which at one time exceeded $600 million.

The provisions relating to the underwriting of loan insurance are largely of an administrative nature. A significant change is the new section proposed by the bill by which the corporation is given the authority to determine the insurance premium in relation to an approved loan, the premium to be in such amount as the corporation considers appropriate in view of the risks entailed and the costs and expenses incurred by the corporation in relation to the insurance. Each line of business is to be analysed actuarially with a view to establishing and quantifying the risk posed by that line of business. Such an analysis will consider, among other things, historical foreclosure rates, borrower's capacity to repay and the expected economic climate during the risky part of the mortgage life. This analysis will enable the fund to strike a suitable premium for each business line. With such an arrangement, the fund can serve the government's social purposes but with a knowledge of the total financial implications of each program. This will allow full consideration of the total costs of the proposed program.

I must interject that if we had known the costs of the two programs, AHOP and ARP, perhaps we might not have proceeded, or we might not have proceeded to the extent we did and, in my opinion, Canada would have been the poorer for that.

Once this legislation is passed, the old and new funds will be kept separately on the corporation's books so that the problems of the past do not drag the newly instituted fund into financial disarray. The new fund can be monitored and premiums adjusted according to changes in programs.

I want to spend a few minutes discussing the two major social housing programs which are the principal reason why the cash in the mortgage insurance fund has been so depleted. Under the Assisted Home Ownership Program total claims to date come to $515 million. The accumulated loss to date totals $230 million, and this includes known future losses not yet incurred. Actuaries calculate that 4 per cent of insured value would be the fee necessary to cover risk, and I have no hesitation in suggesting that it would be pointless to introduce a program such as AHOP and at that point to impose on those persons who are to be assisted a fee of 4 per cent.

It should be noted that the program provided for a 5 per cent down payment. That was to be the equity of the purchaser of the home. However, there were some federal grants which reduced the down payment even further, and additionally—always, apparently, working at cross-purposes—provincial grants further reduced the down payment to the point where, with assistance from the builder, it was possible for the occupants of AHOP houses to move in with little or no down payment whatsoever. Thus, the owner of the house—and I probably should put "owner" in quotation marks—was occupying premises with little or no down payment at a monthly mortgage repayment figure which was, because of its deferral, less than the normal amount he or she could be expected to pay and, therefore, the owner was in effect able to live for a period of up to five years in what one might term subsidized accommodation.

Some 99,000 units were produced, and of those 99,000 units approximately 13,000 are termed walk-aways; they were occupied and then the owners left, often at the end of the five-year period when mortgages were automatically increased to take care of the lower payments which had been made during the first five years.

I note from the figures that in Quebec—and this information was made available on February 3—some 40,000 units were sold at a total value of $1.148 billion. This compares with 41,500 units in the province of Ontario at a total value of $1.628 billion. It is interesting, when looking at these two figures, to note that in the province of Quebec, where the total number of units sold was approximately the same as in Ontario, there was a total of 1,836 actions taken on AHOP units, that is, acquisitions, for a total of $53 million, whereas in the province of Ontario, with only a few more units built, the number of actions taken, acquisitions, was 8,581 for a total of $318 million. I intend to discuss the reason for the difference in these two figures in Quebec and Ontario; however, it is important to emphasize that the successfully housed rate was over 80 per cent of all the units built.

We should break down the remaining less than 20 per cent. About 13 per cent were the walk-aways to which I referred earlier, the acquisitions, those who did not continue with their houses, and approximately 6.5 per cent or 7 per cent were not even occupied. This makes up the total of about 19.5 per cent, which one might term the failure rate. However, let us bear in mind that among that 13 per cent I have been talking about there were many people who enjoyed living in houses for periods of up to five years, making what was, in effect, subsidized monthly payments with little or no down payments. Thus, approximately seven out of every eight who occupied houses under this program were successfully housed, that is, given the opportunity to own their own homes as the result of the introduction of this program.

An analysis of the market factors behind the high AHOP default experience is appropriate. AHOP claims are primarily from Ontario and British Columbia. In fact, 77 per cent of the 9,000 AHOP units acquired by the mortgage insurance fund were in those two provinces. The ratio of mortgage insurance fund acquisitions compared with approvals in Quebec is only 2.8 per cent, whereas in Ontario the ratio of acquisitions to approvals is 9.7 per cent, and in British Columbia it is 10.5 per cent.

To examine the issue regarding substantial variations in the AHOP default rate between Ontario and Quebec, one needs to look at the types of housing unit produced under the AHOP in the two provinces.

In Quebec, of the 43,000 units, just over 1,000 were condominiums and 42,000 were freehold and other units. However, of the 50,000 in Ontario, 33,000 were condominiums and 17,000 were freehold and other units. Thus, although the default rate in condominiums is approximately the same in Quebec as in Ontario, 10.6 per cent in Quebec and 12.6 per cent in Ontario, because of the lower number of condominiums, when one compares it to the default rate in the freehold and other types, 2.6 per cent in Quebec and 3.8 per cent in Ontario, one can see that while the rate in Quebec is much lower than the rate in Ontario, in fact the rate in Ontario is more than three times, almost four times, the default rate in the province of Quebec.

These figures reveal a significant difference between the types of dwelling units produced in the two provinces. In Ontario, condominium rows and apartments represented two thirds of the production of AHOP units, whereas in Quebec more than 95 per cent of the AHOP units were single and semi-detached freehold units. The insurance risk is higher for condominium than for freehold units, and it is therefore not surprising that AHOP default rates in Ontario are substantially higher than in Quebec.

The second social housing program which has impacted heavily on the mortgage insurance fund is the assisted rental program where the accumulated losses totalled $186 million, and most of this loss has been and is being incurred in Montreal.

Actuaries calculate that 8 per cent of insured value would be the fee necessary to cover risk. Under this program, 123,000 units of rental housing were produced; and I think it would be abundantly apparent to everyone that if 8 per cent had been added to the cost of the mortgage in order to cover the actuarially calculated risk factor, there would have been very few of those 123,000 units produced. To assess the consequences of the impact of the Assisted Rental Program, requires an analysis of the market factors behind the high ARP default experience. As of March 31, 1980, 78.3 per cent of the 6,741 ARP units acquired by the mortgage insurance fund were in Quebec. In the first half of the 1970s, the demand for new rental housing in Montreal averaged 18,700 units per year, while only 14,000 units were being supplied per year. As a result, the Montreal rental market experienced increasing tightness. The demand for new rental housing resulted in part from the large expansion of employment in the province. The average annual growth in employment opportunities between 1970 and 1976 was 55,000 jobs.

These favourable economic circumstances were associated with the turnaround in migration patterns. Rather than experiencing a net outward movement of population, the situation was one in which there was an actual net population gain between June 1974 and May 1975. The tremendous demand pressure pushed rental vacancy rates down from 8.2 per cent in 1970 to only 0.6 per cent in April, 1976; and apartment construction in Montreal responded rapidly.

However, economic conditions worsened in Quebec in 1976. Employment growth stagnated, with a net loss of 23,000 jobs in 1977. In addition, after the election of the Parti Québécois in November, 1976, net outflows of population from Quebec accelerated from 9,600 between June, 1976 and May, 1977, to 54,000 between June, 1977 and May, 1978. It is estimated that the reduction in job creation, coupled with the acceleration of out-migration, translated into a drop in rental demand from an average of 18,700 units per year during the first half of the 1970s, to 8,800 units in 1976, to 4,500 units in 1977 and to 5,200 units in 1978. The upsurge in apartment starts, pushed completions up from 12,500 units in 1976 to 18,600 units in 1977; and vacancy rates in Montreal rose rapidly.

The occupancy rate in new projects was reported to be around 48 per cent; and in April, 1980, the rate fell to 27 per cent.

In 1976, net migration began to increase significantly as economic conditions worsened and because of political developments in the province. Migration flows had a major impact on the assisted rental program default experience. The impact of net migration on foreclosures can be illustrated by these figures. In the province of Quebec, between 1973 and 1976 the net change in the population was an increase of 1,096; in the period from 1976 to 1979 the loss was 103,992.

Mr. Speaker, it is relevant, I think, to read a short extract from a letter dated December 2, 1981, which the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of the federal cabinet. It reads:

> Current levels of rent are so out of line with the costs of producing rental accommodation that there is no prospect for easing the vacancy problem without additional incentives or subsidies.

HUDAC, that is, the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada go on to estimate in the same letter that to put rental housing on a basis that would attract investor participation would require rent increases of 60 per cent or more.

I wanted to read that extract from what is considered the foremost housing association in Canada because of the significance of those figures when they talk about the need for rent increases of 60 per cent or more in order to attract investor participation.

When one invests in a house, one looks at one's ability to pay the mortgage, it is true, but also one feels that in due course, because of inflation, there is likely to be some appreciation in value; and in fact, for most people in this country, there has been a reasonably good increase in equity over the years. However, with rental accommodation, the value of the property is of little significance. Investors are concerned solely with return on investment.

One of the difficult experiences for the mortgage insurance fund has been the realization that while one can build an apartment complex—and I have an example in my hand of one which is not too far from my constituency—it may cost some $7 million. In this particular case the mortgage was a little more than $6 million. If the owner of a project goes bankrupt because of rental experience and, as a result, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation ends up being the owner of the property, when it comes to sell the project, since it is not the intention of CMHC to stay in the real estate business, the price will be substantially lower than the amount of the mortgage. It has nothing to do with the value of the property from a construction point of view. It is simply because rents are so low that there is an inadequate return on investment. In the case of the purchase of such a property, it is rather like buying a bond—one looks simply at the amount of the cost and the amount of the return.

In looking at the project to which I have referred, I found it interesting that in a period of some 19 years gross revenues exceeded gross expenditures by only $2 million, comparing a little under $13 million of expenditures with a little under $15 million of gross revenues. At the time the project was started, it had a mortgage at 5⅛ per cent. It occurred to me to look at what would have been the amount of money one would have received, compounded on the mortgage at that percentage, and it came to something over $5 million. Thus we see a project with construction costs of $7 million, a mortgage of $6 million, but a return which meant that when it was offered for sale it was difficult to obtain a bid of $3 million.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was wondering whether the hon. member would entertain a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has approximately two minutes remaining. If he wishes to take a question, it is up to him.

Mr. Herbert: In the two minutes remaining I will finish my remarks, and if there are a few seconds left, I will accept a question.

The point I was making was that one must look at the experience of the Assisted Rental Program in the mortgage insurance fund to understand why there was such an apparent loss in what has been an excellent rental as well as an excellent social program. I have only one more point to make in my remaining minute. It is an answer to a question which I received on June 17, 1981, wherein the minister responsible for CMHC pointed out that the average time lag from the date of a borrower's default on payments to the time when title is conveyed to CMHC, under the terms of the mortgage loan insurance policy, is 414 calendar days. I suggest that the 414 calendar days on the average for the takeover of a property is unacceptable. That is why I am pleased to see in this bill that, in addition to other measures, there will be measures to make it possible for the acquisition to proceed more quickly, thus reducing loss to the insurer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) has a question. There is approximately 45 seconds remaining, if the hon. member wishes to accept it.

Mr. Stevens: Would the hon. member indicate whether he was one of the group of ten who chose to criticize the government's budget and, if not, why not?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): Order, please. I do not believe that is relevant to the bill before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-89 to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act. Housing is a vital industry in Canada, and its continued existence and
