HUMAN RIGHTS

RETRAINING NEEDS OF FEMALE PRISON INMATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Canadian Human Rights Commission ruled that the federal penitentiary system discriminates against women prisoners by offering them fewer training and rehabilitation programs and no chance of transferring to better facilities or prisons closer to their families and friends. The Commission also revealed that this country's female prison population is provided with only the most basic academic upgrading courses and a vocational training program which consists solely of instruction in hairdressing. Since this House placed the highest value on the equality of rights clause in the constitutional package, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House reaffirm its commitment to equality of sexes in Canada and direct the Solicitor General to initiate immediately an investigation of the retraining needs and receptivity of female prison inmates in order that appropriate programs can be put in place which will ensure them equal opportunity in the work force upon their release.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN VIOLATION OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, the United Nations Human Rights Commission yesterday ruled that Canada violated an international agreement which limited Larry Pinkney's right to appeal his extortion conviction. Since Mr. Pinkney is due to be released from prison on January 11, 1982, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration permit him to stay in Canada long enough to take advantage of the full appeal process.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

SALES OF URANIUM TO EUROPEAN COUNTRIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I too have a motion under Standing Order 43. Whereas Canada is expected to sign a new nuclear sales agreement with the European Economic Community and Sweden in the near future which will not include provisions for case by case studies of the end use of Canadian uranium by foreign countries, and whereas provisions for case by case studies of the after sale end use of Canadian uranium has been a cornerstone of our nuclear safeguards policy for years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House condemns this desperate and irresponsible attempt to prop up our failing nuclear industry at the expense of our own moral obligation to ensure personally that Canadian uranium is not used to make nuclear weapons and, further, that this House instructs the government to return to case by case scrutiny in all future nuclear sales contracts.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the November 12 budget was a tragedy for farmers. It increased the application of capital gains, did away with income averaging annuities, virtually stopped land sales to young farmers, prevented pioneers from retiring, and even cut the capital cost allowance on equipment that they must have to continue farming. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That this House deplores these anti-producer tactics and urges that these policies be withdrawn.

Our farmers are tired of being taken for granted, and their wrath is reaching the boiling point.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SUGGESTED PURCHASE OF BRITISH FRIGATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, as the government is aware, of the 23 ships in the Canadian naval forces only four are presently operational. Our ships are between 17 and 25 years old, and are showing signs of old age as they are developing serious cracks and prove unseaworthy. In view of the fact that our navy is not operating at a satisfactory level and is uncertain to fulfil our NATO obligations, or even defend our own shores in time of war, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass):

That the House of Commons instruct the Minister of National Defence to purchase those British frigates that are for sale to serve as a stopgap until the Canadian navy obtains the frigates planned for 1987.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST

AUDIT OF MAIL DELIVERY PERFORMANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, the Auditor General's 1981 report stated that the national evaluation of postal services, a system used by the Post Office to measure postal reliability, did not accurately report the performance and reliability of mail delivery. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes):

That a proper system to measure the reliability of mail delivery be implemented and that the Post Office should report publicly the mail performance of its major postal services at least annually.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL ANNEXATION OF GOLAN HEIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday the government and Parliament of Israel unilaterally acted to incorporate the Golan Heights into the State of Israel in contradiction of the terms of Security Council resolution 242, thereby jeopardizing further the quest for peace in the Middle East. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance):

● (1410)

That this House reaffirms its support of Security Council Resolution 242 and calls upon Israel to halt its actions towards the annexation of the Golan Heights.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RAILWAYS

CALL FOR RE-SCHEDULING OF TRAIN SERVICES BETWEEN WINNIPEG AND ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43. In light of the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has given as his excuse for cutting train service, that people do not use the trains, and in view of the fact that there are many people who would like to use trains 7 and 8 to get to their camps at Winnitoba, Malachi, Ottermere, and other places between Winnipeg and Farlane, Ontario, but cannot use them because of the way the trains are scheduled, making weekend traffic difficult, if not impossible, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the minister use his authority constructively instead of destructively as he usually does, to have these trains re-scheduled so that people who want to use the trains and will use the trains, can use the trains.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BANKRUPTCIES

CALL FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, all members of this House are generally dissatisfied with Bill C-12 in that it fails to protect employees adequately on the most common of insolvencies, namely, receiverships, but it is nonetheless high time that this country had a new bankruptcy act. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That this House does direct the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to cause a reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs or to a subcommittee of that committee, or to a special all-party committee of this House to examine the subject matter of Bill C-12 and the subject matter of the government's task force report on wage protection on insolvency so that this House in its next session can deal expeditiously with questions involving bankruptcy and insolvency on the basis of an all-party report.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

MILK SUBSIDIZATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that tough economic times and high interest rates are destroying many farming operations, and in view of the fact that any lowering of the subsidization program for industrial milk and cream will only cause thousands of dairy farmers to go out of business, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That this House instruct the Minister of Agriculture to please explain to his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, that the consumers benefit most from milk being subsidized as it ensures that there are enough dairy farmers in business to continue supplying the customer with inexpensive milk and milk products.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROVISION OF PAID MATERNITY LEAVE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in light of the recent collective agreements signed by the federal government which gave paid maternity leave rights to postal workers, translators, and clerical workers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That this House directs the government to introduce legislation which grants paid maternity leave to all public service employees, and also to ensure that similar benefits are available to employees in the private sector, including employees in small family-owned stores, and further be it resolved that this House immediately grant paid maternity leave to all employees of the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the government stand condemned for developing a Liberal Party economic neutron bomb with its radioactive interest rates and family destroying tax policies, which leaves houses intact but destroys the fathers, mothers and children inside.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—CANADIAN GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is in connection with the Polish situation which developed over the weekend. Will the Prime Minister advise whether his administration has informed the U.S.S.R. how seriously the Canadian government would view any interference in the internal affairs of Poland by the U.S.S.R.? Have we made any representations to them? If so, what representations? Have we made any official representations to the government of Poland deploring the actions taken by them on the weekend, or any representations at all? Will the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs make a statement on motions giving the House the details of what action the government has taken and how it views this very serious situation?

• (1415)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the hon. gentleman has suggested, it is indeed a serious question; but I do not believe that it would add anything to the situation at the present time to make a statement on motions. As of now, we have not made representations to the Soviet Union. Our view is well known to them in the statements which have been issued by us and with our NATO allies. We have made many representations to them on the same subject in the last year.

We have indeed communicated with the Polish government. We have met the Polish ambassador here, and I intend to see him again later today. We have asked the Polish government to exercise restraint. That is the message which I will be giving him again today when I see him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMMUNICATION WITH CANADIAN EMBASSY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs could tell the House whether or not, in addition to urging restraint on the Polish government, we have indicated that we deplore the actions that were taken over the weekend, or whether we have indicated any view with regard to that matter at all? Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs advise us whether we now have full communication with our embassy in Poland? Is the government certain that all Canadian citizens in Poland are safe and in good hands? Or, if we do not have good communications with our embassy, how can the government tell whether they are or are not safe and in good hands?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we have had some communication through indirect means with our embassy in Poland since the crisis began, enough to learn that, as far as the embassy is concerned, all Canadians are safe. In fact the Polish government, in their démarches both in Warsaw and here, indicated that there would be no interference with foreigners except with respect to their travel within Poland. It is my intention today to express to the Polish ambassador our concerns and disapproval of these kinds of actions which have been taken.

COMMODITY CREDIT SALES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, in connection with Canadian citizens travelling in Poland, there are many concerned people who have relatives in Poland who are worried about the situation. The minister's answer does not seem to meet their concerns. As far as we are aware, we do not have good communication with the embassy. Will the minister tell the House what is being done to ensure that we do have full communication with our embassy in the shortest possible time so that one can be sure?

Will he tell the House whether the government has given any consideration to taking the same kind of action as the U.S. has? The minister will be aware that the United States has suspended all food aid to Poland until the situation is reassessed. Are we considering reassessing our present credit sales for grain, and our present arrangements with respect to the fishery, for example, or is that kind of action ruled out?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, our communications have been cut, we believe, by the Polish government. On both occasions we have made strong representations to the Polish government. I also intend to ask today for the restoration of communications, so that we will be able to get the answer to the kind of questions that my hon. friend poses.

With respect to the U.S. action on food aid, I should make it clear to the House that we do not have surplus supplies of food, such as some other countries, and that we do not have food aid, as such, to Poland. What we have are long-term grain contracts which we finance on concessional terms. We have not made any decision at the present time, given the absence of knowledge about the situation, to take any action with respect to those contracts. In any event there will be lots of time between now and the time of delivery of our grain to consider fully any steps that should be taken on our side.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

CONTRACT FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ORION LONG RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On December 8 the minister approved a message to Washington, expressing concern about the U.S. Navy interruption of the Lockheed P-3 Orion program. The minister said that Canada was led to believe that the Orion program would continue through the 1980s and our offset share of the LRPA contract included Orion airframe and systems which would create employment for 2,000 people through the 1980s. Will the minister consider whether there has been a violation of this contract and, if so, what action does the government intend to take about it?

• (1420)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is talking about a proposal within the United States administration to have a five-year hiatus on the P-3 Orion program. I understand the final decision has not yet been taken. That is why I immediately took action to bring our concerns to the attention of the U.S. Secretary of Defense about the possible implications for Canadian industry of the postponement of the program. As I said, a final decision by the U.S. authorities has not yet been taken. At the same time our agreement with respect of offsets is with the Lockheed corporation. I understand that Lockheed has already acknowledged to our officials its ongoing contractual obligation. Bearing in mind that the contract runs to 1995, obviously we expect Lockheed, in any event, to carry out these obligations.

Mr. McKinnon: There are implications other than to industry; there is a defence implication.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONTINGENCY PLANS TO MAINTAIN AURORA AIRCRAFT IN SERVICE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In the telex sent by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce the minister noted that cancellation of the program will cause an increase in the cost of spare parts for Canada's Aurora aircraft and, more significantly, will create delay in their availability, resulting in reduced capability of the Canadian fleet. The defence department has already experienced difficulties in spare parts supply. Will the minister tell the House what contingency plans he has to ensure that our 18 aircraft will be able to continue flying?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think I can reassure the hon. member for Victoria that our 18 Aurora aircraft will be able to fly and to meet their commitment to NATO and to the defence of Canada. We discussed the matter with the American Secretary of Defense, Mr. Weinberger, when we were in Brussels. Despite the fact that this is a Lockheed decision, the United States Secretary of Defense does, of course, have something to say about it. We asked him to look into it and to inform us so that we could discuss these matters. It is important that the supply of spare parts that we need to keep these aircraft available for operations will be fulfilled according to plan.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

COMMITMENT TO EXPAND ROLE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It pertains to the speech he made in Chicago in which he announced that the election promises of the Prime Minister in 1980 concerning the expansion of the mandate of FIRA were no longer government policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Prime Minister promised in that speech in the election campaign to expand the role of FIRA in order to have it carry out periodic reviews of the activities of large foreign companies in Canada, to publicize foreign takeovers of businesses, and to offer government assistance to Canadian companies seeking to buy foreign firms, has this commitment now been utterly abandoned by the Government of Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I did not say what the hon. member suggests I said in my speech in Chicago. He is talking about an unfortunate misinterpretation of my remarks by the Canadian press.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: I will be happy to send my hon. friend a copy of my remarks. He will see that I was talking about a review of the administrative procedures under the present act. Our position with respect to the promises made during the election and in the throne speech was set out in the economic development document. In that document we said that two of the pledges in question, the less important ones dealing with public notice of takeovers, and guarantees of loans for Canadian alternatives, would not be proceeded with for the time being.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: We did not say that they were being abandoned. With respect to performance review, the document made clear that we are expanding it to cover larger firms, whether Canadian controlled or foreign controlled. I look forward to the government being able to announce details of the way we are carrying out this commitment before too long.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Produce the tapes.

• (1425)

PRESS REPORT OF MINISTER'S SPEECH

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that the Prime Minister promised to expand the mandate of FIRA, that is to say, to change the legislation. The minister now says that he was misunderstood. I should like to ask him if he was quoted accurately in today's press when he is reported as saying, in his speech "But note that this is a review of the administration of the act, not the act itself". He is quoted as saying that the government does not plan to change the act. In his election campaign the Prime Minister promised to change the act. Will the minister now tell us what is the truth?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, in my speech yesterday I was simply talking about something that was stated in the economic development document, that we intended to review the existing administrative procedures of the Foreign Investment Review Act to see if they could be made more timely and efficient. We were talking about administrative procedures. In my speech I intended to say nothing beyond what we actually said in the economic development document. Nothing I said in my speech was intended to say, or in fact did say, that the government was ever ruling out any future amendments to the act by way of strengthening it.

QUERY RESPECTING AGENCY POLICY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister is certainly a worthy successor to Paul Martin.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: All his colleagues have the audacity to applaud.

[Translation]

The minister is probably aware of the lay-offs announced last month by General Motors in Sainte-Thérèse and Oshawa and by B.F. Goodrich in Shawinigan. My question is as follows. How can the minister justify abandoning the plan to expand the role of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, which would ensure that the presence of these foreign companies would be of substantial benefit to Canada, when those same companies are now laying off workers in this country for the benefit of their operations outside Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I challenge my hon. colleague to show me where I said specifically that we had gone back on our promises on the FIRA issue. It was certainly not in my speech, which affirmed the government's support for the FIRA process and its objectives. The government confirmed in the economic development document that we were supporting this process. However, my hon. friend was barking up the wrong tree, as usual.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—AMOUNT OF COMPENSATORY GRANTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I should simply like to set the record straight. Some of us think more of Paul Martin than that.

My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and concerns the some 100,000 Canadians who are affected now by urea formaldehyde foam insulation in their homes. The minister has announced that the Government of Canada, having accepted far too late its moral obligation, is prepared to make a grant available to some 10 per cent of the people affected by UFFI. But he will not tell us how much the grant will be, and he refuses to say when he will tell us how much that grant will be. This House has had the experience with the Minister of Transport of having major decisions that hurt Canadians, announced as soon as Members of Parliament had left this Hill. I want to know from the minister responsible for the UFFI crisis why he refuses to tell the House of Commons and interested Canadians exactly what will be available in terms of grants to Canadians affected by UFFI. If he is not prepared to give us that information before Christmas, will he give a firm date by which Canadians will know how much they will receive or whether they will simply be left out in the cold by this government?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition had been here yesterday, he would have had the answers to his questions. If he would take the trouble to read Hansard, he would see my answer to the hon. member for St. John's East.

● (1430)

DETAILS OF PROPOSAL TO BE MADE TO PROVINCES

Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, yesterday the minister refused to answer questions concerning a problem that directly affects 100,000 Canadians from coast to coast, and he now has an obligation to answer the House. He told us that he wanted to pay a certain amount to a certain number of people, but he has refused to give us any specific information and, once again, he is blaming the provinces. I want to have this specific information, because 30 per cent of the home owners who are affected by UFFI are home owners in the minister's own province. I would like to know, first of all, why the minister is refusing to give us any details, and second, if it is a matter of negotiations with the provinces, whether the minister can inform the House today which concrete proposal the federal government wishes to make to the provinces?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition had done his homework, he would know that 80,000 homes, and not the 100,000 he keeps mentioning, are involved. I already pointed out to the member for St. John's East yesterday that the number was 80,000 and not 100,000. I fail to understand why the Leader of the Opposition insists on quoting the wrong figures. When the right hon. member was Prime Minister, though not for long, he was fond of saying that it was important to consult with the provinces. I wonder if his memory is failing him. Yesterday, I announced in the House that I wanted to consult the provinces and the private sector before announcing the details of the government's program. He could at least have the decency to let me consult with the provinces first.

[English]

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The minister indicated yesterday that he will make a measly, inadequate grant available to a small group of Canadians who are affected by UFFI. He is so ashamed of the amount of the grant that he refuses to make it known here while Parliament can put questions to him. That is what he said yesterday, and that is his reason for refusing to tell affected Canadians and this Parliament the exact amount of the grant which will be made available to those people who have been suffering too long, who cannot sell their homes, and whose health is endangered. He will not tell us about the grants. He is trying to hide that from Parliament. Perhaps, because he has admitted that there is a health hazard for individuals other than those who will receive the grant, he will tell the House of Commons, breaking his practice of secrecy, what criteria his government intends to use in determining which Canadians will receive some kind of help with regard to the danger to their health resulting from this program prepared and sponsored by the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is certainly indulging in a lot of political partisanship today, if he wants to tell us how to deal with a matter he could have dealt with himself when he was in the government. What did his government do during the ten months they were in power? Madam Speaker, the quality of this product was first questioned under a Conservative government. Nevertheless, the Conservatives did not ban the product while they were in power, so I do not think the Leader of the Opposition is in a very good position to tell me what to do. In any case, we shall announce our program as soon as we are able to do so, regardless of the petty politics indulged in by the Leader of the Opposition.

[English]

INFORMATION TO BE GIVEN TO HOME OWNERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, this minister speaks about 80,000 homes. We know that there are 100,000 homes, and maybe more, which are affected—

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): —and certainly a great number of apartment units. What are 20,000 home owners, to this Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? This UFFI problem simply cannot be blown away.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. We have heard a series of lengthy questions; but I expect that from now on hon. members will ask very short questions. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs how people with UFFI in their homes or apartment units will know whether they qualify for outright grants. Has the government decided to make nation-wide testing available and, if so, when?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Try another Ouelletism.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, within the next few days I intend to announce the government's full program, and the hon. member's question, which is indeed a valid one, will be answered at that time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL WHO PARTICIPATED IN SEA RESCUES

Madam Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of members of the Canadian Forces personnel who participated in the rescue, off Sable Island, of the crews of the ship Euro-Princess and the oil rig "Rowan Juneau", a total of 70 persons in all. I am sure the House will want to congratulate them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PIPELINES

CONSTRUCTION OF QUEBEC-MARITIME GAS LINE PROJECT

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and relates to the cabinet decision to go ahead with the construction of a Quebec-Maritime pipeline. Could the minister advise the House whether or not there has been any support for this decision by either the government of New Brunswick or the government of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Madam Speaker. During the last few months, I have been very happy to see that the government of Nova Scotia and the government of New Brunswick have been eager to see the approval of this very important project for the maritime provinces. It was with great pleasure that the cabinet took the decision to approve the recommendation of the National Energy Board to proceed with the extension of the gas pipeline across Canada, right through to Halifax. It is now a matter of ensuring that the necessary regulatory approvals take place in each of these provinces, including Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, in order to see a speedy implementation of this project. As far as the Government of Canada is concerned, we are fully behind this project and we want to see it implemented as soon as possible.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—STANDARDS USED IN TESTING FOR HEALTH DANGERS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It also concerns the really terrible plight of urea formaldehyde foam insulation victims. Will the minister explain how he can justify using .1 parts of formaldehyde as an arbitrary standard in providing assistance, which he announced yesterday, since we know that medical authorities agree that individuals greatly vary in their sensitivity to UFFI? Will he also explain whether there will be ongoing assistance which will be flexible in order to help people who have future problems, because we also know that the foam disintegrates over a period of time and there is a greater risk to health later on?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the questions put by the hon. member will be addressed in the program we shall be announcing within the next few days. The hon. member is quite right in saying that setting an arbitrary standard may be harmful to some UFFI victims. This will be a consideration when the program is announced.

[English]

DEPRECIATION OF PROPERTY VALUES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, UFFI victims are also very worried and angry because they know that the value of their homes has gone down, and real estate agencies will not even list their homes because they are not saleable. Will the minister therefore order a real estate assessment? He has already done one testing. Will he do another testing, a real estate assessment of the depreciation in property values which has occurred because of UFFI? Will he tell us what he intends to do about the economic disaster which is plaguing UFFI home owners who deserve compensation? They did not endorse UFFI through CHIP; it was the federal government that sponsored it.

● (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, as I said before, the product was not approved but was accepted along with a list of other products for insulation purposes, and the Government of Canada had not been promoting this particular product but the insulation of homes in general. Regarding the value of these homes, obviously we shall want to deal with this matter, because home owners have noted, and correctly so, that the resale value of their property has gone down. In our program of corrective action, we intend to address this matter and to make suggestions to the municipal authorities, in order to have these homes renovated and their resale value restored to normal levels.

TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF ALTERNATIVE SERVICE TO COMMUNITIES AFFECTED BY VIA RAIL CUTBACKS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Despite the assurances by the minister that the world would evolve as usual after November 15, the fact is that for the good citizens of such communities as McAdam, Plaster Rock, Juniper, McGivney, Napodogan, Chipman and Minto, the world has not evolved as usual since November 15.

On October 26 the minister stated, "We have been very careful not to restrain or cut services to isolated areas. Buses will go where train service was traditional." On November 5 the minister said, "I shall have the opportunity in the very near future to report on the results I have achieved." Will the minister tell the House when the federal wagons will roll to those communities that were cut off by him on November 15 from the rest of the nation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I did say that, and what the hon. member said has taken place. In a number of instances VIA is trying to improve what was done by giving better service. Indeed, in a number of places buses are now ensuring transportation where they did not do so before. I could enumerate some of these cases, and I will if my hon. friend would like me to do so.

COMMUNITIES WITHOUT SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, what the minister has just said is exactly what he said on November 5, that he would be making these issues clear later on. But the good citizens of the communities of Napodogan and Plaster Rock, Chipman and Minto have not seen any tangible efforts in this particular area. Therefore, will the minister confirm that these people will not be receiving any sort of bus service or transportation link to communities with which they have had transportation links in the past? Alternatively, will he deny that?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will inquire further and report to my hon. friend.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

WITHDRAWAL FROM FEED GRAINS DOMESTIC MARKET

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport about which I gave him prior notice. It has to do with his responsibilities to this chamber for the Canadian Wheat Board. Is the Canadian Wheat Board withdrawing from supplying feed grains to the domestic market at the formula price, the corn competitive price, as required under the national feed grains policy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board announced they will do that by December 21. The present situation is a difficult one because we have a conflict of two policies. First, under the Canadian Wheat Board Act, it is the responsibility of the Canadian Wheat Board to sell grains at reasonable prices. Second is the feed grains policy whereby the Canadian Wheat Board acts as a residual supplier and must sell in eastern Canada under the corn competitive formula. The Canadian Wheat Board has said there is now an adequate supply of feed grain in eastern Canada. Because of previous shipments, there are grains on location and there are large quantities at Thunder Bay. There is grain available from Ontario, and there is corn available from the United States. In these instances the board feels that it has fulfilled its responsibility to provide feed grain in adequate quantities and at equitable prices.

QUERY RESPECTING QUOTAS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, could the minister enlighten us on how that decision was reached? Was it reached unilaterally, or was it in consultation with the government and the Canadian Livestock Feed Board?

Second, would the minister consider asking the wheat board, in view of the fact that it is withdrawing from supplying the domestic market at the formula price, which is welcome news to us in western Canada, whether at the same time it will remove quotas on offboard grains and return to the 10 per cent and 20 per cent system of space allocations used prior to the implementation of quotas on offboard grain over two years ago?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not have anything to announce on quotas. However, I want to complete the answer that I have just given by saying that the Canadian Wheat Board made that decision in light of present circumstances. Should scarcities develop in eastern Canada, obviously the Wheat Board would be extremely willing to look at those new circumstances. Again, this is a very complex issue and the advisory committees of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Livestock Feed Board are looking at it again now.

The minister responsible for the Wheat Board has also asked the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to advise him further on the responsibility for adequacy of supply in Canada. It is a very difficult question, and my hon. friend is also very much aware of it. The present decision of the Canadian Wheat Board is one which has been taken in the context of the difficulty of reconciling the two policies that I have mentioned.

SMALL BUSINESS

TRANSFER OF EXCISE TAX TO WHOLESALE LEVEL

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. The minister knows that shifting the federal excise tax from the manufacturing level to the wholesale level will impose hardships on a great many Canadians. It will impose a complete new layer of paperwork on an already over burdened segment of the economy. It discriminates against the small business man and favours the larger corporations. It forces wholesalers to be tax collectors without remuneration. The new system will increase costs to independent retailers by an average of 1.25 per cent on applicable items, and hence will result in higher prices for consumers.

If this is a so-called equitable tax, why is tobacco excluded from the tax the wholesaler must collect? Consequently, four large tobacco manufacturers will have the use of taxes collected and will earn an estimated $5 million profit from the cash flow on this float—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member had a question, and I think it was sufficient.

Mr. Stewart: I have not finished it, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that I was quite able to grasp the substance of the long question put by the hon. member opposite. I should like to point out that the purpose of transferring this tax to wholesale distributors is quite simply to put products manufactured abroad on an equal footing with products manufactured in Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAELI ANNEXATION OF GOLAN HEIGHTS

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The unilateral Israeli action to incorporate the Golan Heights is of urgent concern to Canada and Canadians. Has the minister made, or does he intend to make, representations to the State of Israel voicing Canada's objections, and reaffirming Canada's commitment to Security Council Resolution No. 242?

Mr. Prud'homme: Totally unacceptable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: The chairman has already answered.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, Canada strongly opposes the extension of Israeli law to the occupied territory on the Golan Heights. This is a step toward complete annexation, and we believe that would be contrary to international law. Therefore we intend to make our feelings known to the government of Israel. We are, of course, prepared to state publicly what our position is.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

SALES TAX ON CANADIAN MANUFACTURED CARS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, on November 26 in this House the Minister of Finance, in answer to my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa, said that the government had absolutely no intention of taking off the federal sales tax on cars. On November 27 there was an item on the front page of the Windsor Star which said, "Gray hints sales tax on autos could end." The report went on to say that "Gray told reporters that removal of the sales tax on cars hasn't been ruled out." I would like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is speaking the truth to the Canadian people, the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Nielsen: Flip a coin.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we both speak the truth. I wish there were the same element of truth to the hon. member's question. All that I had done was indicate to journalists earlier that it was one issue that I felt we could continue to discuss with the Minister of Finance. The position of the government has been stated by the Minister of Finance, but obviously tax measures can be reviewed by the government in light of changes in circumstances.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, the minister cannot have it both ways. He cannot be a member of a government which has rejected the sales tax proposal and, at the same time, tell his constituents and the people of Canada it is something the government is considering, when the Minister of Finance said it was something the government was not considering. It is just unacceptable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED CARS— CANADIAN CONTENT IN AMERICAN MANUFACTURED CARS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): My supplementary question is also for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the fact that 25 per cent of the membership of the United Auto Workers are now on permanent lay-off, and in light of the fact that there is an increasing rise in the sale of imported cars into Canada and a tremendous decline in the domestic industry, I would like to ask the minister specifically can he tell us whether the government is currently negotiating with the government of Japan with respect to limitations on imports for the years 1982 and 1983, and can he tell us whether there are any discussions taking place with the American government with respect to increasing the Canadian content in cars produced in North America.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we have been continuing our consultations, which we began under the context of the auto pact with the preceding U.S. administration, with the current one, on a range of issues which are of concern to us.

We have been in touch with the government of Japan in order to get confirmation from them that they intend to maintain their forecast of exports to Canada for the period April, 1981, to April, 1982, of 174,000 vehicles. I anticipate we will be beginning discussions very soon with the Japanese on the question of continuing a restraint period by the Japanese for a second year.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NEW BRUNSWICK FOREST INDUSTRY

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Where the federal and provincial governments have invested extensively in the forest sector of the New Brunswick economy, and where half the lumber mills are now closed and the pulp markets are soft, what measures will the minister take, or is the minister contemplating to alleviate the situation?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the hon. member that not less than three separate agreements with the government of New Brunswick relate to the forestry sector and the modernization of the pulp and paper industry. This is not counting the very major project in which several departments, foremost the Department of the Environment, are working for the ranger school and the forestry complex in Fredericton.

An hon. Member: What kind of answer is that?

INCOME TAX

PROVISIONS AFFECTING CHURCHES

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. The minister will know that the budget has created great anxiety in the voluntary sector. Does the minister intend to penalize the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches of Canada by removing provisions in the Income Tax Act which have not traditionally taxed rental values of manses and rectories and, in the cases where priests or ministers are given subsidized loans to provide their own accommodation, does the minister intend to remove the exemptions covered in such an arrangement?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, there have been many allegations as to how the budget will be applied by the Department of National Revenue.

An hon. Member: Yes or no.

Mr. Rompkey: Let me say, first of all, for the benefit of the members of the Armed Forces who are in the gallery, I repeat what was said in this House last week, that there will be no tax applied to the travel of Armed Forces personnel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What about their dependants?

Mr. Rompkey: Madam Speaker, we have said that we are not going after the nickels, dimes and pennies. There are a lot of unpaid taxes which we should be collecting, but not from people who cannot afford to pay it.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Rompkey: The question of the hon. member was in that category. We will not be taxing parking lot benefits or applying tax to retail clerk discounts. There is a whole range of benefits all across the country, and I have not the time in question period to go into all of it.

An hon. Member: Give us a list.

Mr. Rompkey: These things will be clarified. The general guideline will be that we will not be going after nickels and dimes. We will be taxing those people who should bear a fairer share of the tax burden in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—SAFETY OF CANADIAN NATIONALS

Mr. Louis R. Desmarais (Dollard): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I understand that an official in External Affairs refuses to inquire into the well-being of Canadians presently visiting Poland. A constituent who was worried about his wife now visiting relatives in Poland was advised by this official that he felt it unnecessary to check the status of Canadians now in Poland through our embassy there. Will the minister give us the assurance that his department will make the necessary inquiries to ensure that all Canadians now in Poland will return to Canada safely?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that we will be most happy to take the names of any Canadians in Poland from their relatives here and do our best to ascertain their whereabouts and safety. I am sure that the hon. member's constituent must have misunderstood what he was told. It was my understanding, as I stated in my answer to the hon. member for St. John's West, that we do not have the ability at the present time to make that kind of investigation since we have been denied communication with our embassy by the Polish government. We are asking to have communications restored and, as soon as they are, we will be prepared to undertake that task.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST THAT POLICY ON EMPLOYEE BENEFITS BE TABLED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question supplementary to that of my hon. friend from Waterloo. The Minister of National Revenue has now indicated that the government has a detailed policy regarding who will be affected and who will not be affected by the tax on employee benefits which was announced by his colleague, the Minister of Finance. Since the minister has that detailed policy, surely he must accept that it is not appropriate to this House to have a minister announcing tax policies in bits and pieces on the floor of the House of Commons, as he chooses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: If the minister has a detailed policy, as he has just stated he does, will he give us a commitment that he will table that policy today in the House and, if he will not do that, will he tell us why he is denying specific information about which individuals will be taxed under the provisions of the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance the other day? Will he explain that to the people and to the Parliament of Canada?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, what I was attempting to do was to indicate an approach and to use examples in line with the question which had been asked about what approach would be taken. The Department of National Revenue is an interpretive department which interprets the Income Tax Act. There is a range of hundreds, maybe thousands of benefits across the country, in various amounts and sizes. I do not think it is appropriate to deal with them during question period.

An hon. Member: Table them.

Mr. Rompkey: If hon. members want to they can put specific questions on the Order Paper, but what I am doing is indicating an approach. We are trying to assess how benefits are given all across the country and, indeed, how the law should be applied. I have tried to make it clear, to some degree, and we will be making further clarifications in the days ahead.

• (1500)

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, this is incredible. This government has a responsibility to tell the people of Canada not about an approach to tax policy which can literally cripple hundreds of thousands of Canadians across the country. The minister is not here for an approach. He is here for a policy. The Minister of Finance, now absent, announced a policy—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the right hon. member realizes that he must ask his question.

EFFECT OF UNCERTAINTY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Since he knows that clergymen will not be affected, that servicemen—although perhaps not their dependants—will not be affected, that other individuals will not be affected and that parking lots will not be affected, since he knows that amount of detail, he obviously has a policy and not an approach. Why is he hiding that from the people of Canada? If he has a policy, why will he not put it on paper, table it here in the House of Commons, and end the uncertainty that is causing agony to hundreds of thousands of Canadians?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the right hon. gentleman was the Prime Minister of this country. He had some time to read the laws of Canada. If he had read them carefully, he would know that indeed clergymen are exempt under the law as it is written now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: My department will be attempting to interpret the law in the best way and the fairest way we can. I have indicated an approach. That is the approach we will be taking. It is an approach that will protect the little people of this country and try to get after the tax dollars which are out there and unpaid.

PRIVILEGE

FAILURE BY MR. COSGROVE TO CLARIFY ALLEGED CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) raised a question of privilege last Friday to the effect that statements made in the House by the minister responsible for housing on one occasion contradicted statements made by him on one or other occasions and that therefore the House had been misled.

As hon. members know, the subject of statements both inside and outside the House concerning alleged budget leaks has been broached in one form or another by members in the recent past. As a result of this, the most recent question of privilege on the subject, the Chair will perhaps be able to dispose of it with some measure of finality.

On this occasion—that is, last Friday—the House was treated to a debate on the subject of contradictory or misleading statements and the relation they may have to privilege. I am indebted to all those hon. members who contributed to the debate.

What has been put before the Chair is a series of statements made in the House by the Minister responsible for housing, and the Chair is asked to find that these statements either constitute a contempt of the House or, alternatively, that a prima facie case of privilege exists.

The hon. member for Yukon refers to the different statements made in the House by the minister in reply to questions and says that the House clearly has been misled.

It is, of course, correct to say that to mislead the House deliberately constitutes a contempt of the House. Before the House is seized of such a matter so that it can take action, however, there must be an admission or a finding to that effect before the House.

Hon. members will appreciate, however, that the minister responsible for housing at no time admitted or said that he had misled the House, either deliberately or unintentionally, and the hon. member for Yukon does not allege this either. The United Kingdom precedent cited by the hon. member for Yukon was based on the admission by a member of that House that he had deliberately misled the House. There was no debate on that issue in the Profumo matter.

Alternatively, the hon. member for Yukon suggested that the precedent relating to the then hon. member for Northumberland-Durham—today it is the other way around; he is now the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence)—in 1978 is on point here. On that occasion there was before the House the admission of a former senior officer of the government, a retired commissioner of the RCMP, that during his tenure letters for the signature of the then Solicitor General were not always drafted "on precise statements of fact". This was "privilege" because on its face, or prima facie, the facts disclosed what amounted to a deliberate attempt to obstruct the hon. member in his parliamentary work.

In the case before us, however, while the hon. member for Yukon suggested to the Chair that the various statements of the minister responsible for housing amount to an admission that earlier statements were false, or that he was misled by his officials, causing him to mislead the House, the hon. member does not suggest that officials deliberately misled the minister or that the minister deliberately misled the House. For that matter, the hon. member could only make such an allegation in a charge.

It does not amount to contempt for a member to mislead the House inadvertently, and this does happen from time to time. Furthermore, it is not unparliamentary to suggest that an hon. member has misled the House. In such a case the member may feel obliged to apologize to the House and to its members where he may have unintentionally misled the House. This is an accepted procedure where a member has made a mistake and has had his attention directed to it by another member, or where his attention has not been drawn to a mistake but the member nevertheless felt that he should advise the House.

But if one member wants to bring the conduct of another member into discussion in the House and refer it to the committee, whether or not that conduct amounts to contempt of the House, he must accuse the other member of a serious charge, and to say that a member misled the House does not constitute a serious charge.

On the other hand, if a member admits to the House that he lied to the House or otherwise deliberately misled the House, that could be made the subject of a motion for contempt or of a reference to the committee. But such is not the case here, and I therefore cannot find that a prima facie case exists.

PETITIONS

MR. WENMAN—PROCEDURE RESPECTING PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and responsibility to present a petition on behalf of 114 citizens. The nature of this petition is to support my efforts in this House of Commons to protest the limitation on the right of a private member to present common grievances of his constituents by way of a public petition.

The purpose of this petition is to effect changes to current parliamentary procedure respecting petitions so that a Member of Parliament may read the content of a petition upon presentation to the House of Commons.

These petitioners hope that since this may constitute a matter of present personal grievance as delineated by Your Honour's ruling of November 9, 1981, Your Honour shall use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow the matter of this petition to be read and either brought into immediate discussion or referred to a committee so that some remedy may be found for this complaint respecting direct access of constituents to the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada.

MEASURE TO INCREASE MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF LOANS

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)) moved that Bill C-84, an act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Madam Speaker, I have the honour of tabling in the House Bill C-48, an act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act. I am sure that the House will consider this bill as a piece of routine legislation. It is merely a bill to amend an act that has received the general approval of parliament several times before. Mr. Speaker, the Small Businesses Loans Act, as hon. members will recall, was amended in June 1980. At that time, the amendments we proposed were aimed at achieving three things. First, when the amendments were approved in June 1980, we increased the maximum individual loan from $75,000 to $100,000. Second, we raised the maximum of all loans that may be guaranteed during that period to $850 million, and third, we extended the life of the Small Businesses Loans Act by two years, from July 1, 1980, to June 30, 1982.

The amendment I am proposing today as part of Bill C-84 merely raises the present ceiling of $850 million by $650 million, so that the new lending ceiling for the two-year period will be $1.5 billion. I am aware that it is not customary to amend the act twice in so short a time. However, the reason for this amendment should be sought in the enormous popularity of this program and increased demand on the part of small businesses. This situation has developed because the program has expanded far more rapidly than was expected at the time the last amendment was made in June, 1980.

To demonstrate the program's rapid expansion, I shall, if I may, quote a few statistics comparing the program's activities over consecutive one-year periods. Between July 1, 1979, and July 30, 1980, 12,717 loans were approved, representing a total of $308,364,372. The following year, from July 1, 1980, to June 30, 1981, 18,620 loans were granted, totalling $505,-642,180. Mr. Speaker, these figures mean that in one year alone, the number of loans increased by 46.4 per cent, and the amount or value of these loans by 64 per cent. These increases, percentage-wise and over a single year, prove that the program is gaining increasing acceptance among Canada's businessmen and women and among financial institutions. However, this rate of growth has made it difficult to make accurate projections of loan demand.

As I said before, over $500 million were loaned during the first year of the present two-year period, which represents an increase of 64 per cent over the last year of the previous loan period. If this rate of growth is sustained, over $800 million will be loaned during the second year of the present two-year period, that is, between July 1, 1981, and June 30, 1982. For the entire two-year period, the total amount will then be $500 million plus $800 million, that is, $1.3 billion. At the present time, as I just said, the ceiling is set at $850 million. Consequently, if the present trend continues, the ceiling will be exceeded by about $450 million, and even if the present growth rate should stabilize, the initial ceiling of $850 million would not be adequate.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in the bill now before the House, I am proposing to raise by $650 million the ceiling on loans granted under the Small Businesses Loans Act, thereby raising the total ceiling to $1.5 billion. This will provide, if the present trend continues,, a safety margin of $200 million, should the loans granted under this act increase even faster than is now the case. The increase will make it possible to continue the program without interruption until its expiry date in June 1982, when the act will again be considered by Parliament for renewal or amending purposes. I must emphasize that an increase in the ceiling does not represent an increase of $1.5 billion in liabilities, but will simply allow the program to be maintained without interruption until June 30, 1982.

Mr. Speaker, in examining this bill, opposition members will note that, while increasing the maximum of guaranteed loans, it does not propose any amendment to the policy outlined in the Small Businesses Loans Act. Hon. members are aware that the government will shortly introduce policy proposals resulting from the comprehensive review of its financial assistance programs for small businesses, which review is now in its last stages. A great number of factors affecting the future of this program will be considered, and in the context of this consultation and this study, we intend to examine carefully all the suggestions made by small businesses, as well, of course, as by members of this House.

Opposition members know that as a result of the changes in the Small Business Development Bond program contained in the new budget only small business bonds experiencing financial difficulties will benefit from it. I would like to point out that, while there is no direct link between the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Small Business Development Bond program, the provisions of former can be used to guarantee the bonds issued under the Small Business Development Bond program as long as the terms meet the requirements of the act and both business and project are eligible. The act could therefore encourage lenders to grant bonds at a lower interest rate to help small businesses in financial difficulties, especially when sufficient loan guarantees are not available otherwise. Moreover, we should not forget that the flexibility and length of terms and the preferential interest rates available to businesses under this legislation already allow these businesses to have access to significant amounts which would not be available to them otherwise.

In the meantime, before we have to deal in the coming months with more comprehensive changes to the small business financing programs as a result of the various ongoing analyses and studies, I would ask hon. members to adopt this bill without undue delay. I am aware that the parliamentary leaders on both sides of the House have agreed to end this debate tomorrow at 6 p.m. at the latest. I want to thank them because the adoption of this bill will indeed enable us to continue the implementation of this guaranteed loans program for small businesses which has so far proven to be extremely popular as evidenced by its rate of growth over the last twelve months. I conclude my remarks by urging all my colleagues to do their utmost to ensure speedy passage of this amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act.

[English]

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Let me state at the outset of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Party supports the raising of the aggregate amount of loans guaranteed by the government to lending institutions during the two-year period, July 1, 1980, to June 30, 1982, from $850 million to $1.5 billion.

This change is required by the increased volume of lending under the provisions of the legislation. The Small Businesses Loans Act was first established almost 22 years ago by a Conservative government of the day. Its purpose was to assist small enterprises in their financing of capital improvements. The legislation was aimed at furthering the efficiency and the competitive strength of small-business enterprises and, in doing so, to ensure that small businessmen and women would continue to share in Canada's economic progress.

Since its inception, the Small Businesses Loans Act has undergone a number of significant changes. For example, the categories of eligibility for potential borrowers has been broadened; another example is that the amount permitted by any borrower has been raised; and finally, the interest rate formula was amended permitting a lender to charge a maximum of bank prime, plus 1 per cent.

Today's amendment increasing the amount of government guarantee is important and necessary. It will not be opposed by the Conservative Party. However, lest the small business entrepreneur in Canada and all Canadians forget—and we on this side covenant not to allow the people of Canada to forget—the present government has demonstrated by its record that it is the mortal enemy of Canadian small business entrepreneurs.

The record of the government is one of callous neglect and unparalleled insensitivity to a sector of our economy which employs more than 60 per cent of our workers. There is nothing that reflects such insensitivity and naivete more than the proposals contained in the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) as it impacts on small business entrepreneurs. I will have considerably more to say in a few minutes with regard to this matter.

Before the budget was brought down on November 12, the economic hardship which tens of thousands of Canadians had to endure this year is difficult for words to exaggerate. Over the past six months, prime rates have reached the extortionary height of 22¾ per cent, and on budget night interest rates were perched at the lofty level of 17.25 per cent. Each one of us has witnessed from the focus of our local constituency office the tragedy of businesses buckling under the strain of the interest rates, of families renewing their mortgages at rates that they cannot afford and the whole toll of human tragedy that 20 per cent interest rates creates.

On budget night, inflation was running at 12.7 per cent, without the burden of new energy prices having been absorbed into our economy and in the wake of the warning by the Governor of the Bank of Canada in his speech in Calgary where he said that our inflation was a made-in-Canada inflation and that interest rates which savaged small-business men and women would continue unless inflation was brought under control.

We now know that during budget month 790 Canadian businesses went bankrupt, compared to 531 in the same month last year, a staggering increase of 50 per cent, while at the same time there was a 29.4 per cent increase in personal bankruptcies over the same period, primarily due to high interest rates. In the two months prior to the budget, unemployment had soared to 8.3 per cent in each month, dispelling the minister's forlorn hope that economic indications of unemployment were mere statistical aberrations.

It is against this backdrop, this era of recession, this season of concern and doubt, that all Canadians sincerely hoped that the budget of the Minister of Finance would be a blueprint of future economic stability, which we all so earnestly desired. It was on November 12 that the Minister of Finance delivered such a crippling blow to the small business community in Canada. The budget of the Minister of Finance made sweeping retroactive changes to many of Canada's basic tax provisions.

In 1969, when revolutionary tax changes were proposed, Canadians were given an opportunity by way of a white paper to discuss and to react. They were then weighed with respect to the changes that might have been implemented. But there was no white paper in this case; there was no discussion, criticism or input which allowed the business community and Canadians in general to assess the weight of the proposals.

What we have here is a document written by tax officials who are totally insulated from the Canadian business community. They have been misguided and they have made unconscionable changes. They have demonstrated a shocking lack of practical knowledge of the Canadian business community. I believe that the Minister of Finance is now recognizing the garden path that his department officials have led him down.

In the next few minutes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to examine a few of the tax changes and how they affect the small business community in Canada. For small-business men and women in this country, there is no equity in this budget. It is a recipe for pain and suffering.

In a budget replete with disincentives, gross misrepresentations and obstacles to the businessmen and women in Canada, there are few provisions which match, in terms of disappointment, the gutting of the Small Business Development Bond. When the bond concept was first introduced in the House in the Conservative budget of December 1979, its purpose was to give the small business community a real incentive to expand and develop their businesses. The vehicle by which this expansion and development was to be encouraged was a preference in the interest rate to be charged on moneys borrowed. Specifically, the rate could be determined by taking half the prime rate plus the bank's spread, which was normally between 1 per cent and 2 per cent. Thus, if the prime was 18 per cent, as it almost is today at 17.75 per cent, the cost of the bond would be 10 per cent or 11 per cent per year, depending upon the borrower's financial rating at his or her bank. The benefit to be derived from the bond in encouraging expansion and development was to create both cash flow and jobs in this vital sector of our economy. Additionally, it became urgent to save small businesses in a state of financial plight when interest rates soared to record highs, as we witnessed this year.

Was the bond under the old rule successful? It was enormously so. It saved hundreds of companies from bankruptcy by allowing those companies to take advantage of the preferred rate of interest. Equally, the bond was a vital vehicle of development and expansion in an economy where the record setting interest rates of the past year would have otherwise prohibited prudent business planners from carrying out such undertakings. Indeed, the measure of the bond's success was that financial institutions authorized loans totalling $1.8 billion over the last few months of 1980 and the first three quarters of 1981.

Under the budget of the Minister of Finance, the bond has been gutted in two essential ways. First, the bond can only be given in cases of financial hardship and not for the purposes of development and expansion. Second, the interest cost of the bond has been effectively increased by 3 per cent, even to those hardship cases to which it now solely applies, thus stripping it in real terms of any substantial advantage.

Dealing with the second point first, I ask the minister why the government has increased the cost of the bond in circumstances where the lender must be on the brink of financial insolvency or financial disaster in order to qualify. Let me return to the example I gave earlier. With prime at 18 per cent, the new bond rate charged by the banks will be one half of prime, which is 9 per cent, plus 3 per cent, which is the new additional tax cost to the bank passed on to the lender, plus the bank's margin of probably 2 per cent with less secure loans. Thus, the borrower will be paying 14 per cent interest instead of 11 per cent. It is the government which raised the cost of the bond by 3 per cent in spite of the fact that the borrower must be certified to the satisfaction of his bank that he is about to go under.

Second, by eliminating from the criteria of eligibility for the bond the small business person who seeks to expand or develop his business, the Minister of Finance has snuffed out incentive for development in a current economy where the rate of bankruptcies has exploded, where jobs are being lost in the manufacturing and retail sector at a frightening rate, and where the cash flow of companies is being sucked away by the government's insatiable appetites for revenues. With barely two weeks left this year, both the banking community and many businessmen in Canada still have not been able to obtain answers from the Department of Finance on important and complex questions to which the bond proposal in the budget gives rise.

During the course of the past year many accountants and bankers have encouraged businessmen to finalize their business transactions by way of the SBDB in the month of December, after the year's total financial obligations have been incurred. This advice was given on the sound financial basis that there is only one bond available to an applicant and, accordingly, the total year's obligations can only be included in the bond when the year's expenditures have been incurred. With the definitional change in the small business bond from "development" to "bail-out", many of these businesses are no longer eligible for the bond. They have lost a financial instrument which formed the basis of their borrowing capabilities over the entire fiscal year. The rug has been pulled out from under them through no fault of their own.

What is the future of the bond, now that it has been stripped of its vitality? The government estimated in its budget papers that the new program will cost $20 million per year in forgone tax revenues for each of the next five years. If the bond had not been reduced in definition, the forgone tax revenues would have totalled $150 million per year for the same five-year period. The government has saved $130 million per year through the emasculation of the program which was determined to restore incentive to the small business community. But what has it cost small businessmen? I have spoken to senior sources in the banking industry, and they have estimated that the chartered banks will authorize less than $100 million in small business bonds over fiscal 1982. That is a drop of 95 per cent, from $1.8 billion to $100 million. This program used to be an important financial instrument to small business. It has now been so restricted, as is evidenced in this comparison, that no amount of political doubletalk will return the bond to its previous value.

Another blow given the small business entrepreneur in the budget proposals pertains to the restriction in the deduction of interest expense on tax returns. Interest on money borrowed for investment purposes will be deductible only to the extent of the investment income reported. This restriction is so severe that one must truly wonder whether the Minister of Finance understood the grave implications of this proposal. Consider, for example, an individual who wishes to purchase a 50 per cent interest in a small manufacturing company. If the individual must rely on borrowed funds to purchase his share, he will be denied the current deduction for his interest expense except to the extent that he has declared a dividend in the year.

In this regard I quote from the Coopers & Lybrand report which sums up the effect of the proposal of the Minister of Finance:

> He is proposing to disallow certain current expenses, such as interest, where the income from the investment is not immediately receivable or is less than the expenses claimed. Carried to its logical extreme, such a policy would deny a deduction for all business and investment expenses that did not immediately produce income. Investment for future growth and profit would be denied.

That is an incredible implication. There can be no doubt that this policy will discourage people from borrowing money to invest in shares of a small business where profits will be ploughed back into the business and not distributed as dividends. This provision will deter risk takers and have a serious deleterious effect on the economy in general. I certainly hope that the newspaper accounts of the willingness of the Minister of Finance to retreat from this proposal prove to be accurate.

In my view, the main focus of the budget is the massive revenue grab by the federal government increasing its revenues by some 22 per cent in the first year and 43 per cent in the second. Expenditures for 1981-82 are estimated to rise to $76.6 billion from $62.7 billion. Indirect taxes have been increased from $13.3 billion to $20.5 billion, a growth of 54.1 per cent in one year. In this massive revenue grab, small and medium-size businesses will be detrimentally affected by the provision limiting the capital cost allowance deduction in the year any asset is acquired to half the normal rate of write-off currently provided. It will have a huge dollar impact on the business sector. The government estimates that tax revenues will be increased over the next three fiscal years by $2 billion.

In his May, 1972 budget, as part of the development of a new industrial policy the then minister of finance, the Hon. John Turner, first created the speedy write-off provision which in the past nine years has greatly assisted the manufacturing and processing sector. This sector of the economy is largely comprised of small and medium-size businesses which employ one out of every five Canadians. The then minister of finance said:

> I propose that the cost of all machinery and equipment purchased after tonight by a taxpayer to be used for the purpose of manufacturing or processing goods for sale or lease in Canada may be written off in two years.

He went on to state that this measure was enacted for the purposes of creating cash flow in the manufacturing sector to create jobs, which at that time was a priority of the Liberal government, and finally to allow industry to retool and consequently avoid obsolescence in the decade ahead.

The MacEachen budget proposal as it affects capital cost allowance will suck out of the private sector an additional $1.1 billion in fiscal 1982-1983 and stunt the industry's ability to enhance cash flow and create jobs for expansion. This proposal is both retrogressive and counterproductive and should immediately be withdrawn.

Another major assault on the small business entrepreneur is the budget proposal ending the opportunity for individuals and corporations to defer tax on instalment sales where a portion of the proceeds is not paid until a future date. In spite of the fact that the proceeds from the sale have not been received by the vendor, the total sale price will attract tax. The change will affect all businesses that sell goods on a time payment plan, such as vendors of farm equipment, machinery, furniture and appliances. Moreover, small businessesmen who wish to sell shares of their corporation to employees with payment being made by instalments over a period of years will now have to look for cash buyers. They will not have the money to pay the tax which will be attracted all in one year. The fact is that purchasers will now have to go to banks to finance a purchase because vendors will not be able to afford to extend personal financing arrangements.

The legacy that our forefathers gave to us is a country with unparalleled opportunity, forged on the anvil of risk-taking, incentive, hardwork and imagination. The small business community, which is the backbone of our economy employing more than 60 per cent of all Canadian workers, can only survive and prosper in a climate where incentive and risk-taking are rewarded.

Regrettably, yesterday's economic incentive has become today's tax loophole. In Toronto, on October 28, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) set forth the essential standard which would be employed in the budget when he said, and I quote:

> What we are against is the rich getting richer by taking from the poor. So we take something from the rich, and give it to the poor, and we try to prevent the strong from exploiting the weak.

Juxtaposing this alleged standard against the marginal tax rate applicable to the rich, we witness just one more example of Liberal hypocrisy. The accounting firm of Peat, Marwick has published, subsequent to the budget, the amount of tax savings of Canadians earning more than $40,000 and less than $150,000. For those earning $40,000, the new tax will be $13,446 as compared to $14,070 under the old rate. This is a saving of $624. For those earning $60,000 there is a saving of $1,215. For those earning $80,000 there is a saving of $1,808. At the $100,000 bracket, the saving becomes $2,989; and for those earning $150,000, a handsome wage indeed, taxes will be reduced by $7,670.

In real terms, for a deputy minister, category three, earning between $80,000 and $93,600, the tax load will be lessened by between $1,800 and $2,500. Supreme court and county court judges, assistant deputy ministers and senior bureaucrats are insulated from the effects of the budget because under normal circumstances, deriving their income from salary, their marginal rate of taxation is reduced.

On the other hand, the small business entrepreneur who employs so many Canadians, who is the risk-taker, who has no security of tenure, who has no pension plan save and except the provisions of retirement he himself undertakes, is gouged and discriminated against by the budget proposals. We witness the proposal that interest on money borrowed for investment purposes will be deductible only to the extent of the investment income reported. We witness that the interest on moneys borrowed by RRSP contributions to provide for one's retirement will not be deductible under any circumstances.

We witness firms wishing to utilize the Small Business Development Bond for reasons of expansion or development no longer meeting the criteria. We witness the budget elimination of the allowance for reserves in respect to instalment sales where a portion of the proceeds would not be paid until a future date. We witness the restriction on capital cost allowance whereby the government will reap an additional $2 billion from the private sector in the next three fiscal years. We witness professionals, whether they be lawyers, engineers or architects, paying tax on work in progress which is not ready for billing. We witness the elimination of income-averaging annuity contracts which will have a profound effect on sellers being less willing to finance the sale of a business or a farm through the use of a mortgage. Now it will be cash on demand.

The cumulative effect of all these provisions betrays any attempt by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) or the Minister of Finance to say that they care about this most important sector of the economy. It further demonstrates what little influence the minister responsible for small business has over his colleague, the Minister of Finance.

I cannot refrain from pointing to an item in a very respectable tax journal, "The Canadian Taxpayer", which is edited by Arthur B. C. Drake, who is widely respected. It points out that, on the one hand, incentive is taken away from the small businessmen and, on the other hand, the mandarins are prospering as a result of the budget. I suggest that the article takes a respectful and neutral position. It reads in part as follows:

> We would be remiss if we didn't refer to Michael Pitfield, Clerk of the Privy Council office, the top mandarin and intimate of the Prime Minister. When Pitfield was fired by Joe Clark, he rolled more than $100,000 into an RRSP. When he was reinstated in his job, he refused to give the money back, even though there would have been no tax cost.
> Pitfield got his protection. And then concurred in closing this loophole. If he had any sense of honour or decency, he would give back the money today. And if he says he doesn't know how, we'll explain how to do it without tax cost, and without charging him fees!

To that I say aye, aye!

So to conclude, Mr. Speaker, I support, as does my party, today's amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act, Bill C-84. I can only add that any amendment that will assist Canadian small business will be supported by this party, especially in light of the reprehensible budget proposals that have been tabled in the House by the Minister of Finance.

It is ironic and somewhat indicative of the intellectual impoverishment of this present Liberal administration that we have all-party support for an amendment extending legislation born by a Conservative government while at the same time Canada faces a revolution in the business community caused by the proposals in the recent Liberal budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to say the New Democratic Party supports Bill C-84, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, which would increase the maximum amount of all loans that may be guaranteed during the two-year period ending June 30, 1982, from $850 million to $1.5 billion.

It is unfortunate that the minister and his parliamentary secretary are unable to be in the House. Perhaps if this was the most that I had to say about small business I would also be hiding behind the curtain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: I must say that it is not what is before the House that concerns us at this time as much as what is not before the House, those things that are omitted from the bill. The New Democratic Party has just held task force hearings across Canada in the past few weeks, and at the various stops small business organizations, chambers of commerce, boards of trade and individuals appeared to comment on the health of the economy in Canada in general, on the budget specifically and especially the provisions of the budget which directly relate to the small business community.

I can say without any exaggeration that their response was not an enthusiastic one and was not one of endorsement of the government's policies but, rather, was a response of unbelief, a virtual condemnation of the budget provisions which had an influence on the small business community, and certainly a universal condemnation of the high interest rates and monetarist policy being pursued by the government.

I believe that when one looks at the way in which the government approaches the small business community and at the kind of signals it sends out to the small business community which would indicate its support or lack of support, the message is very clear indeed. In all fairness, this might not be restricted only to Canada. At the recent eighth annual symposium of small business which was hosted by the Government of Canada, one noted that there were hundreds of representatives and delegates at the symposium; yet when one looked around at the number of small-business men who were represented by their own presence, what was notable, in fact, was their absence. Government officials, bureaucrats, financial representatives and leaders of various organizations were in attendance. However, the actual rank-and-file man in the trench, the small-business man, was not there, probably because he could not afford to travel that distance or to neglect his business affairs for two or three days in order to attend the conference. But for whatever reason, it seemed to me to be another indication that small business is not held in high esteem in this country, and perhaps in other countries, and that small business is not receiving a clear signal from the government that, indeed, "We are there to encourage, nurture and support you".

When one looks at the number of government programs which are in place to assist business per se, one notices that at best, out of 200 programs which can be identified to assist the small business community, only a handful are clearly directed at the small business community. Again, six or seven programs out of 200 provide a very clear signal to the members of the small business community as to how the Government of Canada feels about them.

However, I guess the lowest blow of all is the continuing support of Canada's monetarist policy of high interest rates. The Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) are on record, day after day, as saying, "This is the way to beat inflation." Recognizing that inflation is undoubtedly one of the major problems facing us, I think we must clearly state there are two ways of fighting inflation. Certainly, one way is to reduce the amount of money spent by government. We in this House recognize that hundreds of millions of dollars are frivolously spent by the government which could, in fact, be cut out of the budget, perhaps without anyone noticing it. However, the other way to combat inflation is to increase the productivity of this country, to lift the productivity up so that it balances out with the rate of spending. Perhaps we should approach it on both fronts. Federal government spending should be reduced, but the level of economic productivity in Canada should certainly be improved.

Is there anyone in this House who, for a moment, would begin to suggest that the present high interest rates are increasing the productivity in our country? It is very clear that we are into a very serious recession bordering on a depression. I feel very strongly that if there is one thing which is not occurring in our country today, it is an increasing level of productivity.

The one million people who find themselves among the ranks of the unemployed are certainly not assisting the small business community these days. Their spending powers, of course, are severely hampered when they find themselves among the ranks of the unemployed. Inflation, which we are fighting, erodes the purchasing power of virtually all Canadians, with a direct spin-off to the small business entrepreneur. However, as the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) so accurately stated, there exists in the country today, like perhaps never before, an atmosphere of uncertainty, of hopelessness, of doubt, of gloom and doom and of despair. There is certainly good reason for that atmosphere to be existing today.

On November 12, the business communities of Canada, both large and small, were awaiting some direction by the government, awaiting the opportunity to get on with the job and to start building and developing our country. Friday the thirteenth was indeed a black day. On November 13, businessmen across the country gathered in groups, in hordes, to listen to what the budget provided for them. Today we keep hearing the same representations by delegations from various groups, by individual Members of Parliament, and by newspaper ads very clearly spelling out irrefutable evidence that the provisions being introduced in this budget will have a very detrimental effect on the business community of this country. If there was one thing the small business community did not need on November 12, it was a further hammering; but that is what it received on November 13, compliments of the Government of Canada. Therefore, if uncertainty, doubt and hopelessness existed on and before November 12, one can bet that it is certainly accelerating today.

We read that during the month of the budget, the number of bankruptcies in our country was significantly higher. While opposition members often raise the spectre of bankruptcies and quote all kinds of statistics, the most recent one with regard to bankruptcies for the month of November is certainly worth repeating. Bankruptcies for that month were up 48.7 per cent over November of 1980. Bankruptcies in November of 1980 were a serious problem, but I think it is a clear reflection of the difficult times we face that they are now up by 48.7 per cent. That is, of course, only the tip of the iceberg when one considers that those going into receivership without declaring bankruptcy are not reflected in those figures, and that, almost by definition, they comprise a significantly larger number than the 48.7 per cent involved in bankruptcy proceedings.

We can rest assured that the health of the small business community is indeed very poor today. We can also say that this is simply the tip of the iceberg because those people who are simply closing up their shops or small manufacturing plants and walking away because they can no longer make a profit are not reflected, either.

Again, it is very clear that a vital and crucial sector of our economy is under extreme pressure these days. While one could make the same claim for large business, for the international business firms, surely the pressure is more on the small entrepreneur. The large companies can weather out the storm for a much longer period of time. Can hon. members not see, looking into the future, that a larger corporation can be maintained during these very difficult times while a small business cannot?

Six months from now, as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business indicates, the viability of the small business community will be severely challenged. While we can hang on for a number of months, since we now see that bankruptcy rates are up 48 per cent for the month of November, we can certainly expect that figure to rise during December, January and February when we get into traditionally troubled periods of the year.

Mr. Epp: Well, you have your legacy.

Mr. Riis: As the hon. member for Cambridge articulated in some detail, the Small Business Development Bond was one of the few pieces of legislation—and I emphasize "few"—that the federal government held up to the small business community and said, "Here, we are helping you expand; we are helping you become more productive." We on this side admit that such was the case and that the Small Business Development Bond was structured in such a way as to encourage people to expand their operations, to build new plants, to provide opportunities for Canadian manufacturers, to provide new equipment; but the essence of that legislation was expansionary, was growth and development. We would agree that that is the kind of thing we need today in order to become a more competitive country on international markets and to increase our level of productivity.

Therefore, what does the government do during this very crucial period? Do they expand the Small Business Development Bond as all members of the House have been requesting for months? Virtually, the answer is no. They gut the Small Business Development Bond. I know the minister will argue the point that the government did expand the Small Business Development Bond to include unincorporated businesses and farmers. But the government changed the terms of reference so that no longer was it an expansionary bill. No longer was it legislation to encourage expansion, development and productivity. The legislation was in place to help those businesses and farmers who were going down the drain survive. While we support legislation which will help businesses during these difficult times, we are immensely disappointed that the legislation was gutted and that it took away the encouragement and support of those entrepreneurs wishing to expand and create jobs during these very difficult times.

However, we await new legislation in the future. We remain optimistic that the government will gather its wits and realize its errors. We hope that the government will realize that by supporting the small business community, progressive expansionary legislation must be brought in.

Some time ago the minister commented on the small business financing review. I remember vividly 19 months ago when the minister stood up in the House and said that the government was interested in the small business community and in the financial problems it has. He said the government was going to do something about it and would do it quickly. He said that the government would review the problems faced by the small entrepreneur in this country and that it was beginning then with a new active and vigorous policy. He said that the lending institutions, the universities, the public and the private sector would be included. He said that the government would carry out a review and bring in some recommendations.

We supported that move. Both the New Democratic Party and the Conservatives supported that position. However, that was 19 months ago. We are patient folks on this side of the House but recent inquiries indicate that it is likely a number of months off yet before the review will see the light of day, let alone the legislation that will see some of its recommendations put into place, and what we are having to tell the small business community is that it must be patient. Perhaps next spring, next summer or next fall the review will be brought forward with recommendations, and perhaps by next Christmas or shortly thereafter we will have legislation in place to assist financially. That is what we are going to have to tell the small business community. But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the small business community in this country cannot wait that long.

An hon. Member: Why can we not have it this Christmas?

Mr. Riis: It is all right for us to be patient, but when you are out there having to meet a payroll, trying to keep your stock at a suitable size in order to provide adequate service to customers, you cannot wait another six months, nine months or another year. I say that 19 months and still holding is too long.

The kind of problem that was advanced by small business groups from across the country was straightforward. Our task force heard that they would not be assisted greatly by the Small Businesses Loans Act. Although this act has been successful, being particularly successful in British Columbia because that province has taken most advantage of this legislation on a per capita basis, it will not help many of the small businesses that are experiencing difficulty today because loans are not available for working capital. Nor is there anything available in it to keep inventories at levels which can satisfactorily serve customers. If small businesses cannot keep up inventories, their level of service begins to decline. People will go shopping in small stores only to find that the goods are no longer there, that they are on order. The small store then has to get in touch with the manufacturing plant, and the orders have to be processed. Goods that would normally be picked up off the shelves might be weeks or months away. What do customers do in those circumstances? Do they remain patient and support the small entrepreneur? Or do they go next door to a large chain or a multinational which is able to offer the same goods because its financing arrangements enable it to maintain inventories at a much higher level than the small entrepreneur can? This state of affairs is not puzzling. People will obviously go where they can obtain service. Once again we are sounding the death knell loud and clear for the small business community.

I want to say in closing that the hon. member for Cambridge outlined in detail the specific problems which the small business community faces because of the budget. I think most Members of Parliament have been made aware by many groups and individuals what those difficulties are, and I do not feel that I would contribute much this afternoon by articulating them once again. However, I want to say that while we are pleased to support this piece of legislation, it is a hollow piece of legislation. It is one small step toward supporting the small business community at a time when a race is required. While we enthusiastically support the various motions that have come up today regarding this particular bill, we hope the minister has heard our concerns and will do what he can to take action quickly so that we do not have to wait another 19 months before we have to stand up in the House again and ask when we will see some action.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my appreciation to the previous speakers for their support of this piece of legislation which will give us the authority to increase the total amount of loan guarantees available under the Small Businesses Loans Act.

The minister has just outlined the very straightforward nature of the bill. For my part I simply want to draw the attention of hon. members to the purposes of the Small Businesses Loans Act and to its importance and widespread acceptance in the business community. This fact is verified by the need for this amendment before the House today.

The Small Businesses Loans Act is one of several measures implemented by this government in support of the Canadian small business sector. This sector plays an important part of the life of our country's economy. A recent publication of the Federal Business Development Bank had in it the following words:

> More than 90 per cent of Canadian businesses are considered small businesses. They employ 2.5 million people or about 42 per cent of the commercial labour force. Collectively, these businesses account for 25 per cent of all business sales and for a quarter of the Gross National Product.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, even though the General Motors, the IBMs and the Imperial Oils of the world grab most of the attention, it is the little guys and the small businesses that keep the economy on its financial feet.

The Small Businesses Loans Act originally came into force on January 19, 1961. It was designed to make it easier for small business in Canada to obtain current financing. It encourages lenders in the private sector to make term loans available to small businesses by guaranteeing the lender against loss. This legislation is almost identical to the Farm Improvement Loans Act which is available to farmers in this country. The combined totals of those guarantees at the present time are something over $1 billion.

Any small business in Canada operating for gain or profit in the areas of manufacturing, wholesale trade, retail trade, service, communications, construction or transportation, is eligible to borrow, provided that the gross revenue of the applicant is less than $1.5 million in the year of the application.

Loans are made directly between the borrower and the lender without any approval of the government. Loans must be secured and may be payable over a period of up to 10 years. The maximum of all loans outstanding to any one borrower at any one time cannot exceed $100,000. The maximum interest charged on these loans is the bank prime rate, plus 1 per cent.

It is of little surprise, then, that the Small Business Loans Act has been met with approval and success. Between January, 1961 and June, 1981, more than 91,000 applications totalling $1.7 billion have been made. These are loans which have been guaranteed by the Canadian government and which have been used to purchase fixed and movable equipment, new premises, to modernize existing facilities or purchase land for the operation of a business. Without the Small Businesses Loans Act, many of these ventures would not have existed. Either the small businesses involved would not have been able to secure loan financing, or they would have been discouraged from entering into such ventures.

The bill which the Secretary of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) has just introduced into the House simply allows the total amount of small business loan guarantees to be increased from $850 million to $1.5 billion. This enables the benefits which small business ventures bring to the Canadian economy to be promoted and enhanced.

In the first six months of this year, January, 1981 to June, 1981, 8,894 loans totalling $253 million were registered under the Small Businesses Loans Act. This compares to 7,215 loans, totalling $170 million, during the same period in 1980. This increase of 23.3 per cent in numbers and 48.6 per cent in dollars shows the increased demand of Canadian small businesses to borrow money under the Small Businesses Loans Act. This is a very important program for small businesses which has gained widespread support from both small businesses and financial institutions.

As my hon. friend the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism has pointed out, the demand for increased lending proves the importance of this program and the necessity for the introduction of this bill. The legislation simply raises the lending ceiling under the act so it can meet the demand of small business borrowers. I join with the minister in urging speedy passage of the bill and I will therefore keep my remarks brief. The number of speakers on this side of the House will be limited and we would like the co-operation of the House in passing this measure.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) has said, we support Bill C-84 and its passage through all stages. I would like to congratulate the hon. member for a very excellent analysis of the problems facing the small business community today. His speech was both timely and very much to the point.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I must comment on why it is necessary to bring this bill forward. What has happened to the private sector money sources that were the traditional wells of seed money for the small business sector? Why must we again go the route of guaranteeing loans to chartered banks? One would think that with their massive profits and increases in profits since the dramatic rise in interest rates in the past 18 months, the chartered banks themselves would be more venturesome than they are. However, the real question is, where has the venture capital gone? Some has gone to other countries which are perceived to be more stable or favourable to financial ventures or which have less red tape and regulation. Some of that venture capital found its way into Canada Savings Bonds when the government offered them at 19.75 per cent interest. A large source of venture capital dried up when capital gains tax was introduced. We have reached the sad and sorry position of having the government again act as the guarantor of loans put forward by the chartered banks because those persons desiring loans are not considered credit-worthy to the extent that they can have the loans on their own signature.

Under the terms of the loans, these people must first satisfy the chartered bank that the business in which they will invest the money is viable and has a chance of survival. Only then will the bank proceed and become party to the application for a guaranteed loan backed by the government. It is a form of double insurance which is guaranteed by the taxpayers of Canada through their government.

The government has forced the small-business man, farmer and fisherman into this position because its tax laws, attitude and short-sighted policy over a period of years have eroded sources of venture capital and inhibited the ability of the average person to accumulate wealth. The all-powerful government has the small business community in a position to squeeze it dry and bring it to its knees.

The budget of November 12 is a good example. The provision in that budget of non-deductibility of interest from tax payable for money borrowed to loan or invest in a small business was a cruel and senseless move. Many small businesses faced with bank rates reaching 25 per cent sought additional investment in their company in order to reduce their bank loans. In some instances, the original investors borrowed money to achieve this end or they may have invited employees to buy into the company and counselled them to borrow the funds to do so on the understanding that the interest expense would be a deductible expense from their income tax. They then heard the sad news when the budget was brought in.

I wonder how many people in the Department of Finance really know how a business operates. I do not mean how it operates academically, because I know that the bureaucratic mind sees everything in case studies. However, do they have any concept of the amount of creative thought, the hours of work which goes into planning, the sacrifices which must be made and the risks which must be taken to get a small business operating, and operating profitably? I can assure hon. members that it is as creative as any work of art, any novel, play, painting or sculpture. The venture is undertaken with all the intensity of the most eccentric artist. You will find most small-business men work double the hours of the average employee, perhaps 80 or 90 hours per week, and this is normal.

One may ask, why do they work these hours and struggle and fight to survive against their larger economic competitors? Aside from the personal satisfaction of seeing your ideas translated into dollars, which gives you a measure of economic independence, you are utilizing a variety of talents. Small-business men must be managers, financiers, salesmen, planners, export managers, designers, inventors, production planners and so on. In short, they must be all things to all people. They seek advice from a variety of sources and apply it directly in their operations where results become evident in a short period of time.

Now, if you have been weaned and raised on government grants and handouts, you might think there is nothing wrong with your loan being guaranteed by the government. But there are still people who are active in our economy who believe fervently in what is loosely called the free enterprise system. They have sold assets for cash to get started in business so that they can subsequently convert it into something they can sell at a profit. You cash your insurance, mortgage your house, cash bonds, borrow from the bank, work without a salary so you can pay your accounts and employees, all in the hope that you will turn a profit out of which you can pay yourself a salary and make a return on your investment. I have experienced this myself.

There was a time before capital gains taxes and massive personal and business taxes when a person could accumulate assets that would yield a reasonable return which would be reinvested to feed economic growth. However, oppressive regulations and controls have dulled the spirit of those who would venture, to the point that many are seeking havens in other jurisdictions or have placed their liquid assets in other non-productive accounts to wait until conditions change. If there is no change, many of those persons normally active in our economy will move their assets to another jurisdiction and, believe me, Canada will be the loser.

We have as a background the sorry history of the record of the government in small business. The government finally yielded and put in place a minister of state for small business. When we look behind the title, we see that this government set up the small business ministry in 1976 to placate an increasing number of critics who realized that the small business community played a major role in the economy and needed a spokesman at the cabinet table. I have studied the ministry quite closely, and I firmly believe—and I do not want this to be taken as a partisan comment—that it was not until 1979 when my colleague, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), was appointed minister of state that the ministry gathered any momentum or muscle. When he occupied that portfolio, he found that previous ministers operated from a shell. That shell consisted of a minister, an executive assistant, a speech writer and a few secretaries. There was no departmental staff and no clear direction. In fact, the minister's main duties seemed to be to make speeches, to react to small business organizations and to represent the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce at functions he could not attend. Not until 1979 did we begin to see anything like the strong voice needed and the plans and direction which would encourage this vital sector of our economy.

While we support Bill C-84 which will increase the amount that may be guaranteed by the government for the two-year period ending June, 1982, from $850 million to $1.5 billion, what we should be doing is placing before the House a series of measures which would encourage increased venture investment into the small business sector. We must tap that huge source of capital that could regenerate our economy. In the last ten years, 98 per cent of non-government jobs have been created by small business. About 50 per cent of the most significant new industrial products created since World War II were brought to the marketplace by the small business sector.

I have an abiding faith in people. I believe we can regenerate our economy, with the proper atmosphere. What is happening to our economy is that the tremendous engine of the small business community is losing hope. We all know that the whole world lives on hope. We hope for better times. We hope for peace. We hope for freedom from fear and hunger. We hope for our place in the economic sun so that we can realize our dream of economic stability which would allow us to buy homes and raise our families in our style. When we turn off hope, we invite all manner of actions and problems. People fear losing what they have and will fight to preserve it. The government then becomes their adversary.

The present budget is a good example. It has unified the people of Canada in a way the Constitution could not unify them. It has brought them together. It has brought together the people of Canada against the Government of Canada. Today, unless we are a Crown corporation sucking dry the public trough, we have reached the point where we must now apologize for any success in business, as if it were a violation of a moral law. Today it is almost criminal to prosper. Indeed, in today's society a criminal will recieve more protection, and if you are successful in business you are accused of utilizing loopholes to achieve that success. I think that is pretty sick.

The government seems to operate on the "give them a bone" theory. When a particular section of our economy becomes restless, the government tosses it a tax bone, a tariff bone or a series of grants as a bone to keep it quiet for a while. The minister seems to have fallen prey to the socialist view that all revenue produced by the economy belongs to the government and that the government lets you keep that portion it deems necessary for you to survive. The government tosses you bones if you become restless. It forces on you unnecessary regulations which in themselves become inflationary.

For instance, did you know, Mr. Speaker, that General Motors in its North American operations employs more than 20,000 people just to comply with government regulations? I mention this because in Canada we seem to follow this pattern very closely. We tend to move in the regulatory field in lock step with our largest trading partner, but we do not reduce or drop regulations as the Americans do, so that in many of our industries there are disincentives which work to the disadvantage of the economy as a whole. Furthermore, if our neighbor to the south adopts a bad regulation, there is a rush to duplicate it here in some areas of our economy. It seems to me that there is always a rush to control and to regulate. After they regulate by placing rules in the Canada Gazette, the bureaucrats then interpret those regulations and, in many cases, they confuse the issue further.

Let me illustrate briefly with one typical example. We have heard it said in this house time and time again that we need more manufacturing in Canada to create more jobs, to reduce our balance of payments, to reduce our reliance on imports, to create export possibilities and so forth. The bureaucracy has developed a whole series of regulations regarding manufacturing. The Department of National Revenue will give you a sales tax licence as a manufacturer of a product. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will give you a remission order to import machinery for the production of goods. The Department of Finance and Statistics Canada will classify you. The Department of Employment and Immigration will develop a training program for employees in your manufacturing program.

But all this can be brought to a halt because the term "manufacturing" cannot or will not be defined by the bureaucracy of government. They, the bureaucracy, can decide on their own, for their own purposes or for political purposes, whether or not you should survive. They can deem that you are not a manufacturer by adding a percentage of Canadian content that you must achieve or by deciding what may or may not be included as Canadian content. They can put you in a position where the rise or fall of the Canadian dollar will cause your Canadian content to fluctuate so that at the lower scale of the dollar you attract a penalty and at the upper scale you are okay; but the reality is that you have no control over the movement of the Canadian dollar.

It is with this sort of nonsense that we are regulating Canadian business, and particularly small business, beyond the statutes and beyond the regulations. Small business is being regulated by unwritten regulations enforced by nameless, faceless people who hold the success or the failure of a business in their hands. The business community is powerless to act against such power. You either comply or they squeeze you dry. You have no appeal except to those who make the regulations, and they do not want to listen.

While I support Bill C-84, I do so with these reservations. We should open up the market so that private capital can become involved in the venture capital field, and we should have an economic ombudsman with the power to override bureaucratic decisions and hold the bureaucracy responsible for the economic failures caused by its actions.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, anyone who listened to the words of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) would have been left to wonder why all the fuss out there in the business world and particularly the small business world. Can it be true that our economy is in recession, and can small businesses really be going bankrupt in the record numbers reported? Could over 140,000 people really be laid off within the last 90 days?

The minister and his parliamentary secretary cite Bill C-84 in conjunction with the November 12 budget as the answer of the government to the problems facing the business world; that leaves us wondering whether we are wrong and they are right. However, the fact is that Bill C-84 is woefully inadequate, and the minister's remarks are an insult to the business community. That community is in serious trouble. The minister's speech carried no comfort for the small businessman who is being driven to the wall by high inventory costs and slumping sales. In conjunction with that, the merchant, who is the largest user of small business loans, can no longer stock his inventory shelves.

What is at issue, and it rather infuriates me, is that in the face of this deepening recession the only answer the government has to offer to the best job-creating segment of our community is this bill. The minister has the gall to say the government cares for small business. Presumably it will still be caring after there are no small businesses left to care about.

No one can argue that the Small Businesses Loans Act has benefited that part of our business community that it was meant to serve over the years since 1961. The act has been amended from time to time and has reasonably kept pace with the inflation and economic circumstances of those times.

My complaint today is that Bill C-84 can easily be demonstrated by a look at the Small Businesses Loans Act itself. The minister talked in terms of its being a very popular act. Let me put it this way. Since its enactment by the Diefenbaker government, over 82,000 loans have been made for a total of $1,250 million. Almost half that total was in the period 1977 to 1980. Indeed, comparing 1979 with the 1980 figures, it will be seen in that year alone that there was an increase of over 52 per cent in the number of loans made and a 53 per cent increase in the number of dollars loaned.

This means that significant pressures are being placed on this program, pressures that are a direct result of the downturn in our economy and the mismanagement of government enterprise. At the same time, it comes as no surprise that the heaviest users of the program are those in the retail and services areas, accounting for almost 65 per cent of all moneys borrowed.

Despite this heavy use and despite our failing economy, it is a credit to the business community that defaults, that is to say, the number of times the government has had to honour the guarantee provisions under those loans, have consistently been low. For example, in 1980 such defaults were less than 1 per cent of the total amount loaned out that year. As a result, the risk factor to government has been slight.

The figures clearly show a trend as an increasing number of businesses are turning to programs such as the Small Businesses Loans Act to obtain loans. Bill C-84 is an acknowledgement of that fact. However, neither Bill C-84 nor the budget respond to the factors that have led up to the pressures we now find building up in the Small Businesses Loans Act.

It is my contention that regardless of Bill C-84, the Small Businesses Loans Act will not be able to meet the demands that will be placed on it beyond the next six months. Small business people applying to that fund for loans will be told that they are out of funds, as is the case with so many assistance programs such as the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I say this as a result of the November 12 budget and in particular its emasculation of the Small Business Development Bond.

Despite the delays and the hesitancy of the banks, that bond over the short period of two years it was in operation removed a great deal of the pressure that would otherwise have fallen on the Small Businesses Loans Act. About 10,000 businesses borrowed over $2 billion, primarily for business development purposes. By all accounts, save for firms already in financial difficulty, the Small Business Development Bond proved to be a success.

It is estimated that only 5 per cent of the borrowers assisted under that program were persons in financial difficulty. The 95 per cent of the borrowers represented persons expanding and hiring more people. One is left to wonder with this kind of history, a history of record, how that program will be converted to a means of helping firms and businesses in financial difficulty.

In one fell swoop the budget cut out the development aspect of the bond and by a grand stroke of bureaucratic doubletalk was able to render the bond all but meaningless. I am joined in this assessment by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which described the small business bond as virtually useless. In its first rate analysis of the budget, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association found that the 6 per cent threshold being applied to the small business bond seemed to imply that in order to qualify a firm must be bankrupt, in receivership or in default and at the same time making a profit. Perhaps that explains why the chartered banks are so hesitant in participating and making available this bond to the average businessman.

A greenhouse operator in my community has the capital investment, but he is caught in the high interest squeeze and has a cash flow problem. His greenhouse is heated by natural gas. He is not more than six weeks in arrears but has been threatened with having the heat for his greenhouse cut off. In his attempt to find interim financing, he is rejected by the bank. The Small Business Development Bond is not available to him because he has been told it is placed on hold. He cannot get assistance under the Farm Credit Act because he has not been rejected by the Small Business Development Bond program. What answer can be given to that businessman, or is he to be just one more going out of business?

A month has gone by since November 12 and to my knowledge no small business in Canada has been able to obtain a small business bond. I am told that farmers have fared slightly better; a grand total of three farmers have had success on their applications. These are hardly figures a government can be proud of, and I am appalled that the minister would come before us and say that the small business bond is a positive means of assisting the businessman.

The fact is that the bond is a bust and has been closed off entirely for development and expansion purposes. Where are the 10,000 firms which used that bond now going to turn? One answer is the Small Businesses Loans Act and the resources of that program. Bill C-84 notwithstanding, it is not going to be adequate. In just two years of operation, the Small Business Development Bond made available more development funds than the whole of the Small Businesses Loans Act in its 19 years of operation.

In short, this government has to face the fact that small business is in trouble and at the same time it has to recognize that small business is worth saving. By the government's own reckoning, there are some one million small businesses in Canada and those small businesses, firms and organizations, represent 97 per cent of all business in Canada. At a time when unemployment is high, 8.2 per cent in the month of November, small business accounts for 42 per cent of private sector employment.

In my riding of St. Catharines, which I am proud to represent, unemployment is becoming a chronic problem and higher than average, now 9.1 per cent. The contribution of small business to that city's economic life cannot be underestimated. Out of a population of some 125,000 people, small business employs 42,473 people on a full-time basis and 9,200 on a part-time basis for a total of almost 52,000. I might add that the 2,700 stores and offices in that city occupy almost 8 million square feet of accommodation, a significant contribution to the construction and real estate industries.

Unfortunately, many of these businesses are now caught in a sales slump combined with the problems of a low economic community, high unemployment, inventory and loan costs. Many of those businesses will not be able to meet the costs they are faced with today.

Where will those persons now turn for affordable financing? The Small Business Development Bond is a cruel hoax. The banks are too busy looking at their profit picture to assist. The Small Businesses Loans Act is not available for refinancing or working capital purposes. Of course, the answer is that there is now nowhere to turn. That is what happened to my greenhouse operator.

We have seen in the November bankruptcy statistics that even as the Christmas buying season approaches, a season that traditionally accounts for 25 per cent of annual sales, 790 firms called it quits and filed for bankruptcy. We have no way of knowing, as has already been pointed out, the great number of others who have simply closed their doors or walked away. The minister's remarks today will be little appreciated by those people who have lost everything, while he extols the virtues of the government's small business loan programs. For the over 6,000 businesses that went bankrupt in 1981, it is little comfort to be told by the minister that Canada has the best environment for small business and tourism of any western industrialized nation.

As I stated earlier, from a national picture and from the St. Catharines statistics, small business is vital to our economic wellbeing. The road to economic recovery in this country is through a revitalized small business community, a community that has one of the best job-creation records of any sector. Bill C-84 cannot begin to provide this necessary revitalization, this necessary renewal, and, indeed, will not be able to undo the damage done by the November 12 budget.

Earlier, Mr. Speaker, I asked where the hardpressed businesses could look for affordable loans. One source often overlooked is individuals, individuals who, like the owner of the business, had some faith in the system and in the eventual success of the enterprise. The individual would be prepared to support that. Prior to this budget, there was an incentive for those individuals as they were able to deduct the interest expense incurred in the making of those investments. No longer is that permitted to the same extent. As pointed out by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, that source of investment capital, risk capital, Mr. Speaker, is no longer available to enable our country to grow and prosper.

A second blow to small business was the announcement that businesses must now pay the full tax on a sale, regardless of the payment terms with respect to that sale. For businesses dealing in expensive items, and in particular those dependent on time or term sales, this is a heavy tax burden indeed.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the budget attacks the usefulness of one of the main provisions of the Small Businesses Loans Act, that of assisting firms to acquire capital assets. The capital cost allowance, which this government once boasted, was the best in the world, has now been reduced by one half. Thus, on one hand the Small Businesses Loans Act will enable a businessman to purchase a capital asset and, on the other hand, the budget will sharply reduce any incentive to do so. This is not just contradictory but madness. At a time such as this, as the hon. member to the left of me said, it is madness when we need to instil confidence in our business community?

So let us be honest with ourselves. What small business needs today, most of all, is relief from the high interest rates. I have already stated that thanks to the recent budget there is nowhere for small business to turn, save into bankruptcy, receivership or default. May I suggest to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism that he takes a hard look at the provisions of the Small Businesses Loans Act as these affect interest rates. He will find that the rate to be charged within that act is 1 per cent over prime. At today's rates, prime of 17 or 18 per cent can hardly be considered affordable financing.

Might I also suggest to the minister that if he and his government are serious about helping small business, then Bill C-84 should have been expanded to include the interest rate formula applied to the now defunct Small Business Development Bond. That bond did provide affordable financing for small business. The Small Businesses Loans Act does not include that aspect and Bill C-84 is no answer to it either.

The conclusion is clear. Bill C-84, as we have agreed to support it, is a stop-gap measure designed to carry a beseiged program through a simple short time period of six more months. I have suggested that, due to the pressures that will be placed on it by virtue of the destruction of the Small Business Development Bond, the Small Businesses Loans Act will not be able to cope with the increased demand. Again, as a result of the disastrous budget of November 12, a budget condemned by some 20 national organizations and groups, small business will be subject to the continuing pressure of high interest rates on one hand and the harsh, unfair, counterproductive taxes of the budget on the other hand. It brings to a halt the growth and development of a country that was built on the dreams of so many people. What is left for the entrepreneur, the adventuresome, the investor or the dreamer?

In short, and I shall conclude on this point, this government has displayed its total lack of appreciation and understanding of the business and commercial world. It completely lacks an employment philosophy. That is entirely consistent with a budget philosophy that refuses to put people first.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but there is a procedure that I must now dispose of. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave)—Agriculture; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Foreign Investment Review Agency; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Public Works.

MEASURE TO INCREASE MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF LOANS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lapointe that Bill C-84, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House in the Progressive Conservative Party, by taking part in this debate and in saying that we wish to pass Bill C-84 quickly, do so because we do not have any other alternative. Bill C-84 that we are speaking to almost doubles the amount of money available for small business loans in this country. We are talking of approximately $700 million. On November 12, there was a budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) that will take one hundredfold out of the business community over the next year. I am not referring to the large business community, I am referring to the backbone of the Canadian business community, the small businesses that enable this country to prosper, that employ 45 per cent of the people who are employed in business in this country and who have assisted in building this country.

I do not feel proud as a member of the House of Commons to speak in support of a bill which will make far less money available, perhaps 100 times less, to the business community of the country. I do not feel proud about what the government opposite will take away with the proposals in the budget presented on November 12. I cannot understand why we were presented with this bill. At the same time we see provisions in the budget which will take incentive out of the country. These proposals will make small businesses suffer, cry out and disappear in many areas of the country.

The inequities in the income tax legislation have been around for a long time. I recall the election which took place in February, 1980. I should like to refer to a statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), as reported in the London Free Press on January 31, 1980:

> Inequities in income tax legislation regarding farmer capital gains taxes will be removed, Whelan said, by using as the base date for computing the capital gain December 31, 1971, or December 31, 1974, whichever is greater. He said 1974 values in most cases are more realistic than the 1971 base now used. His party would also give farmers a once in a lifetime capital gains exemption. Whelan said Liberals will prevent "privatization" of the Crown Farm Credit Corporation which provides farmers with low interest capital loans and would expand preferred loan rate availability to the agri-business sector and consumers.

This statement was made during the election campaign. Many people say that if the statement was made during an election campaign, the Minister of Agriculture should not be held to anything he said. But those of us who have watched the performance of the government have noticed that it has not been held to anything, that it has not honoured any of its commitments during election campaigns, either the last one or preceding ones.

I should like to review the statement of the Minister of Agriculture by referring to one segment of small business, that is the farm community. I should like to review the results. So far we have not had presented any change in valuation day. There has not been one statement. The minister was asked several times in the House when he would implement the promise of his government, made by himself personally. So far he has not answered. We have seen no selective adjustments in the tax system to ensure that incentives for economic development are maintained. As a matter of fact we have seen just the opposite. Under this government, especially since November 12, we have seen removed the incentive of someone with the ability to take a risk, someone who desires to expand, grow or contribute to Canada.

I certainly hope that the budget does not become law; I hope some of the provisions will be thrown out. In the past I have had some respect for the Minister of Finance, thinking he was a man who came from a region of Canada wherein people worked hard. The people in his part of the country work hard and save hard so that they have something, so that they contribute and are not a burden upon society. I hope some of his constituents will be able to communicate their feelings to him, in not too harsh a form but in a form he will be able to understand.

Young men and women who wish to start home businesses are drawing salaries from other jobs because it takes four or five years to establish their businesses and to gain livelihoods strictly from their businesses. If they borrow $100,000 to start these home businesses at 18 per cent or 20 per cent, it amounts to $20,000 per year, but their cash flow is only about five or six. Their profitability as they build and expand their businesses is less than their interest costs, but they cannot deduct those costs as an expense. Their cash flow must be greater than or as great as their interest. If that law had been in existence when many small businesses in the country were first established, they would never have expanded or got off the ground. I certainly hope that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) do not feel that this paltry addition of money to small business loans will solve the problems of Canadian small-business men.

The budget has done many things, but one of its most damaging effects on people involved in business is the change in the Small Business Development Bond. The bond was established under the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). It was carried on by the Liberal government. Up to November 12, with the exception that one had to be incorporated, it served the small business community well. It served the farming community, small-business men involved in farming, and small-business men in communities around the country. What happened on November 12? From November 12 to the end of this year, strong and viable businesses which can open up their books and say, "Here is my picture; here is where I am going; here is what I have done over the years" will not be eligible for Small Business Development Bonds. I just cannot understand the stupidity of this. Any government, person or individual who is involved in the real world—those who have ever picked up bank books, filled out invoices and attempted to build and expand operations—cannot understand the Liberal government saying that the only people who will be helped are those in financial difficulty. If a company is breaking even or advancing a little, it is told, "Hey, Charlie, you do not get it." What is the problem? I cannot understand it.

I know there are hon. members in the party across the way who have spent a lot of time in the business community. Many of them were farmers, small-business men and contractors who spent time figuring tenders or bids in an attempt to make them work properly. If a viable company needs an extra $100,000 or $200,000 to expand, after December 31, 1981, it will not be able to obtain it. Hopefully the changes which will be brought forward by the Minister of Finance will remove the stigma of being required to come from the town of "Dire Straits" before being eligible for a Small Business Development Bond.

Mr. Speyer: That is in my riding.

Mr. McKnight: The hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) says that it is in his riding. I know his riding really represents small business. Perhaps there are 50 or 60 employees in some plants and more in others; but because there happens to be 100 employees in a plant does not mean it is big business. Because there are 30, 40 or 200 employees does not mean it is big business. It is small business. Those businesses hire and provide jobs, probably 90 per cent of the jobs in the country. I am not talking about Massey-Ferguson or Chrysler. I am talking about a business where someone had a dream or an idea and succeeded because of hard work, perseverance and some luck. Everyone who starts a business knows that he or she is taking a risk. If not, they are in businesses about which I know nothing or they are silly. They know they are taking risks. They are enterprisers and builders. What will happen now when they take risks and get ahead a little? They are no longer eligible for assistance from the government.

The other thing that was changed in the Small Business Development Bond was that not only after the beginning of the year will it not be available to unincorporated companies that need it and could use it, but it will be available only to incorporated or unincorporated companies that show they are in financial difficulty.

I have heard the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture say that the banks are not bleeding enough, that they are making too much money. That may very well be true, but what makes the Minister of Finance think that writing it down in a budget is going to force the banks or the financial institutions to lend money to people who are financially unstable? How does he think that the banking community will react when someone says, "You have to give me that money and it will cost you more to process my loan because I will have to pay 3 per cent more than I would have before November 12, but you have to give it to me because I am in financial difficulty and the Minister of Finance said so in the budget." That is ridiculous. I notice that the government has not had too much luck in its attempts to direct the financial institutions. The only direction they take is from the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) believes that the government has a high interest rate policy or not, everyone else in the country knows that it has. And that is going to continue. We do not see any likelihood of a change.

We cannot deny that $700 million-odd is a fair amount of money. That is a lot of change, Mr. Speaker. In the district of Kindersley-Lloydminster which I represent, land is valued anywhere from $500 to $1,000 per acre and the average farm is over 800 acres. That is just one federal constituency where small businesses have assets which are ten times the amount provided in the bill.

A lot of people feel that farming is not a business but usually they are not involved in it. The farming business has every problem and every disadvantage that any other industry in the country has.

I am sorry that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) is not in the House, Mr. Speaker. On November 2 he was reported in Hansard as saying that farmers have the lowest tax rate of anyone in Canada. I see an hon. member on that side smile; he happens to be involved in the farming industry. I wish he would do more than smile and take the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance out behind the barn and give him a lesson!

Mr. Epp: He has never been there before, and he would get dirty shoes.

Mr. McKnight: That is sheer stupidity, Mr. Speaker. It hurts this country and the business that I am involved in when someone from the "heavily farmed area of Ottawa Centre" says that farmers have the lowest tax rate in the country. The parliamentary secretary is supposed to assist the Minister of Finance and perhaps that is why we ended up with this budget. I hope there are other hon. members on the government side who could give a little better assistance. I see that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Lonsdale) is in the House and I know that he could advise the minister better than that about the small business and farming community.

During this debate we have heard something about the ability of the small business sector to perform. Two or three years ago when Chrysler was in trouble, when Massey-Ferguson started to have trouble and when International Harvester started to have trouble, when all the large manufacturers started to get into trouble, nothing was heard about the small businessman who had eight or ten gravel trucks and a crusher. He was getting along; he was hustling and he did so with pride, initiative and hard work. Now the government's policies have gone so far that it is not only the large corporations that do not have "hands on" management, but the small business owned by a man or woman who is trying to manage it, control the inventory, look after stock—the business that has "hands on" management—has had to cut back in many cases. They have had to lay off employees. Not only do they have to manage the business now, but they have to be clerk, mechanic, salesperson or assembly worker. Sometimes other members of the family become involved as well.

Since this government resumed office in February, 1980, it has done nothing to help small business except offer Bill C-84. I can understand that. When something is not very dramatic, when it is not like taking away 25 per cent of the lands of northern Canada, when it is not like fighting with the producing provinces, when it is not like saving Chrysler—maybe it did save Chrysler but I have my doubts—when it is not making large pronouncements, then the government only offers to double the amount available to small business. When something is inadequate in the first place, it is still inadequate when it is doubled.

I do not know whether the Minister of Finance has had time to look at the list of bankruptcies that occurred recently. The latest figures for January to October, 1981 show 230 bankruptcies in agri-business in Canada. Saskatchewan has the third highest number, Ontario lists 126 and Quebec 45. In the House recently the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) spoke about his concern for the businesses in his constituency and the farm manufacturing plants there. I can understand his concern. People are being laid off in Ontario and Quebec because the small farm businesses in western Canada and the Atlantic provinces cannot afford to make a commitment for a $100,000 piece of machinery and to pay high interest rates especially when since November 12, the capital cost allowance had been cut in half for the first year. There are areas in central Canada and Ontario, the manufacturing heartland of the country, where employees are being laid off because machinery is not selling.

The government's response is to cut the capital cost allowance for the first year in half. That does not make any sense. It does not make farm sense, it does not make horse sense, and it does not make financial sense. But what really puzzles me is that the government does not see that it hurts people in Canada. Everything we have spoken about relates to people. They are not businesses; they are people in businesses. They are not employees; they are people working in businesses. That is what this government has forgotten. That is what the Minister of Finance has forgotten. Definitely the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism has forgotten this. He should be more aware and I hope he will be more aware after today and tomorrow.

Canada will probably end the year with imports of $110 billion and exports of $100 billion, approximately. What Canada needs the most is to be brought into the twentieth century. There are manufacturing industries in this country which need huge investments in technology, in upgrading and in new plants. This is true of almost every industry in Canada, particularly the first one which we saw in trouble, the textile industry, and then the automotive industry. The fact is not that the Japanese have all the technology but that they have our technology. They have gone ahead and built new modern plants to build their cars. Canada needs investment, machines and plants if we are to take our place among the manufacturing industries of the world. What has happened? The government has cut the capital cost allowance by 15 per cent in the first year.

Mr. Speyer: Federal cash flow.

Mr. McKnight: My friend and colleague the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) mentions cash flow. One could borrow a lot of money from the financial institutions in this country, and one could have a great cash flow; but there comes a time when such a cash flow must turn around and flow back the other way. The government has now said, "Whoa! Before you turn around and send it back upstream, we will tax you. You will have to pay tax on the money you are sending back." Every small-business man survives. As a matter of fact, I know many who earn their daily living from cash flow. It is not that their businesses are developing or that they are increasing their monthly draws to provide their earnings. They stay ahead of inflation through increasing cash flow.

I have considered the bill before us and I will vote in favour of it because it is all this government has offered small business. It has provided $700 million. I guess I should say that we are really lucky because the government has finally done something. However, when one compares $700 million to the billions of dollars the government is taking out of small business through the budget of November 12, one really wonders if there is a future in this country for the enterpriser, for the small-business man or woman, and for the people who have built this country.

I cannot understand how such a budget could come from a party with the historic concern—though not in the last 12 or 13 years—which the Liberal Party has expressed for the small-business man or woman in this country and for the growth and development of this country. I simply cannot understand what has happened to the party opposite, to the Liberal Party of Canada, which would cause it to bring in a budget which will take the very heart and the creative core right out of Canada. It will not only do this, but it will also cause a situation where, in any future slowdown in our country, we will not have sufficient businesses upon which to draw encouragement or strength to pull ourselves up by our own bootstraps.

I will be voting in favour of this bill because, as far as I can see, it is the only thing which the Liberal government opposite has done for small businessmen in Canada since it came into office in February, 1980.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I join in this discussion of the bill following the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). As I sat listening to him, I was actually depressed. I think that is partly a reflection on his ability to strike at the very core of the issues with which we are faced here, and it also reflects his very sympathetic understanding of the plight of small business in the country. It is a little bit difficult to be enthusiastic about speaking on the bill, after hearing about all the difficulties which the country is facing at large; but I think it is an important message, and I congratulate him for having well delivered it.

Bill C-84 is a bill which none of us is about to oppose, as many hon. members have previously said. It is a bill which really changes the original bill of 1961, which first came through as S-10, one which increases the amount of money the government will guarantee to the conventional lenders in the country on behalf of small business. In general, it is a measure which everyone can support. I believe hon. members who have spoken previously today have referred to the issues which surround the bill, and have considered the necessity of the bill with regard to small business.

The bill has been modified and amended many times before now. This bill originally started out through the Department of Finance, and then it went through Industry, Trade and Commerce. There have been several other changes. Additional types of businesses were included so that the bill would provide for increasing amounts of loans to individual businesses and so on. Since its original inception, the bill has been responsible for approximately 82,500 loans which, in fact, amounted to approximately $1.5 billion in total. Therefore, with this bill the yearly amount shows an increase from $800 million to approximately $1.5 billion in one year.

Everyone knows the importance of small business. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe), who has now left the chamber and has been replaced, I suppose, by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans), is very aware of the importance of small business to Canada. The minister, in his speeches, has referred to the one million small businesses in Canada which account for 97 per cent of all businesses in Canada. In total, they account for approximately 45 per cent of all employment and for about 30 per cent of the gross national product of business in the country. Therefore, it is an important factor which must be understood and to which response must be given.

The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism seemed to understand the importance of small business, particularly as he stood in the House and voted in favour of the recent budget and measures contained therein, along with all hon. members opposite, and showed his support of the Minister of Finance. However, in reality, he expressed either a lack of understanding of what the Minister of Finance was saying, or at least a disregard for the impact that the budget would have on small business. In this case, he seems to be more or less standing on both sides of the cash register, standing in front of the counter and representing himself to be a saviour and proponent of small business, while standing behind the counter and taking away much of the ability of small business to survive and to function.

In the time I have left to speak, I must attempt to make the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism understand what he and the Liberal government are really doing to small business through the budgetary measures they brought in.

Many specific points have been described and discussed by hon. members who have previously spoken. There are some very good spokesmen within the small business community, whether from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, from the insurance companies, or from car dealers' associations. There have been numerous messages delivered with such strength of feeling that a sensitive note should have been struck in the hearts of all Members of Parliament, but particularly those of hon. members in the Liberal caucus who have the greatest influence on the Minister of Finance.

I think that the budget is seen to be a direct affront, a direct attack and a direct threat to small business. It affects small business in many ways. It affects the ability of people to invest in small business, it affects the capital formation for small business, and it affects the ability of small business to be transferred from one individual to the other. It affects a number of interbusiness transactions. It also affects significantly the future security of the small-business man as he retires or plans for his retirement.

The question arises whether this budget is a misfire or whether it has specific direction. If it has direction, what is it? The argument has been made that it was a misfire, particularly if one takes into account the current economic climate. When the Minister of Finance was preparing this budget last summer, he misread or misunderstood what was needed and produced this restrictive document. This is a document which has a terrific impact on the entire economic climate of the country. Therefore, the Minister of Finance must have made a mistake. That question bears some argument.

We need to look more deeply into some of the measures in the budget to see their impact and decide for ourselves whether this was indeed a misfire or a specific direction which the Minister of Finance and the senior civil servants wished to take.

The background of this document is well known and has been described with considerable feeling by the previous speaker. We are all aware that we are in a recession and that we are facing inflation rates of 12.75 per cent. We know that we are continuing to face interest rates that are unbearable, intolerable and deadly to small businesses across the country, interest rates which are being supported by the government through the Bank of Canada and held higher by 4 per cent or 5 per cent than comparable American interest rates. All of these were part of the economic background when this budget was introduced.

Our unemployment rate is important too. The budget impacts heavily on small business. Small business creates jobs. Reference has been made to figures and to the fact that there were 140,000 more people unemployed last month. One group which forms the national association for plumbing equipment, talked about its 24,000 employees and the fact that one quarter of them are now unemployed. That sort of thing has a ripple effect throughout the construction industry. Also, this demonstrates the slowdown occurring in the major sector of our economy.

The aim of this budget is directed toward several areas—fairness, equity, restraint and economic renewal. In looking at whether or not this budget is producing more equity and is fair, I think individuals whether self-employed or otherwise, need to look at the sleight-of-hand that has been exhibited by the Minister of Finance. While he has shown a direct decrease in federal tax for a large number of Canadians—the figure of $8 million is quoted—the real amount of tax that has been decreased is almost insignificant. It is almost so insignificant that it should not be mentioned when one compares revenues being taken in through indirect taxation measures in the budget. We hear that people with an income of $15,000 a year will have a total tax saving of about $25 a year and those earning $17,000 a year will save $45 in direct taxes a year.

That sort of thing has to be balanced against the increased revenue coming from indirect taxation. I am not speaking about energy price increases. We all know that energy prices have doubled. We know that gasoline and heating oil will go up by about 50 cents a gallon in the near future. We have to remember those taxes that will be imposed through the change in the federal sales tax in a number of other areas in our economy. These taxes are not readily identified, they are not seen, but they will outweigh the gesture of a tax reduction which the Minister of Finance talks about in the name of equity.

Second, the budget is to deal with restraint. By anyone else's definition, restraint is not what this budget is all about. The bottom line of restraint is the question of what government revenues and expenditures are. The increased taxation which this government will achieve through the recent budget is in the neighbourhood of 31 per cent in one year and 43 per cent in two years. This increased taxation will account for increased government expenditures of 22 per cent. This is at a time when the government says it should slow its own growth by a factor less than inflation. That dedication has been described on paper by both the Minister of Finance and this government for some time. It is something the government says it is trying to achieve. The government tells us that it is practising restraint. But the government is increasing expenditures and taxation mightily.

Third, the budget is to deal with economic renewal. Quite simply, there is no hope for renewal not only because of the other taxation measures introduced in this budget but basically because there are no plans. Probably there is no idea about how to plan for economic renewal in this country. If there had been an idea there would have been one long before this. We have not had anything in the last 13 years or even before that, perhaps even since wartime. We should have had a major economic plan for development with proper direction and orientation toward research through all the mechanisms available to government, through regulations, incentives and so on. These things would have stimulated our economy and we could have paralleled the opportunities we have with our resources and skills that have not been developed.

This budget does two things which have been confirmed and reconfirmed by a number of individuals and groups who have had the opportunity to go into some of the budget measures in detail. This budget raises revenues and at the same time changes the taxation system.

There are many things to discuss about the way in which we are changing the taxation system, especially at a time when we face economic recession. What is important is that even in 1977 when this question of tax reform was considered, it was clearly stated, and it has been clearly supported by members of the Liberal Party and by the government, that we should have a white paper for discussion. This would give the public an opportunity to understand and to comment on any taxation changes, something which the business community has identified and has reacted to very strongly, justifiably so, in my opinion. This is important because a change in the taxation system will have repercussions on the economy.

I will not talk about raising revenues any more because I do not think I have enough time to do that. However, it is well known that the government is trying through the closure of so-called loopholes—maybe loopholes in some cases which have been described previously as incentives—to grab $47 billion. This is the amount the government has identified as escaping its net. I suggest that if that money were available, it would have been better placed in the hands of individuals than in the hands of the government. With the track record it has, $47 billion would have been gone with very little to show for it.

I would like to turn now to the specific measures within the budget that will affect small business. One of these measures is the capital cost allowance which has been changed dramatically. Capital cost allowance is a mechanism which was well known and well used by Canadian businessmen to start or expand businesses and provide new opportunities for employment. One businessman stated that the change in the capital cost allowance would have been enough to stop the erection of the Stelco plant in Nanticoke. The change in the capital cost allowance will have a significant influence on business development in Canada and should be reconsidered before it is passed in its present form because it is a substantial business opportunity which may be denied Canadians.

Another measure which has been changed is the federal tax from the manufacturers' level to the wholesalers' level. Within this adjustment there will be a number of effects, among which is the raising of revenues for the federal government by up to 50 per cent. Fifty per cent of the $5 billion which has already been collected from that tax measure is a considerable sum to be taken out of the economy. Another result of this particular change is that the wholesaler must now be involved as a tax collector for the government and this in itself involves extra paperwork. It is an additional measure which will have a detrimental impact, not only on inflation but on the actual difficulties faced by small-business men throughout the country.

The capital gains tax measures have been discussed by many hon. members, and it is our hope that they will be changed. These measures are affecting the ability of small business to be transferred. It is unfair that this provision requires a small-business man or farmer to pay the total tax on a sale in spite of the fact that the only way he might be able to sell or transfer his business is by partially financing the transaction through a mortgage held by himself. It will be very difficult for small businesses to be transferred under these conditions and this must be changed.

Investment interest is another issue which should be discussed. I would like to quote from the comments made by the Board of Trade in Metropolitan Toronto which perhaps described the effects of this measure most aptly. Before doing so I would point out that one of the hallmarks of the entire budget has been that these measures have been changed in midstream. Many people who have planned for the future have been trapped, after having made financial decisions ten years ago. They are now caught in a fixed situation, whether it be in the form of an insurance policy or any other investment plan. They are caught by changes which were made retroactively. There is an obligation on the part of the government, if not legally then at least morally, to reconsider that aspect of the budget.

To return to the comments made by the Board of Trade in a brief submitted to the Minister of Finance dated December 11, 1981, it said:

> Apart from the retrospective effect of this proposal, we disagree with it on policy grounds. Our economy depends on investment and risk-taking, and this is even more important in these difficult times. The proposed disallowance of interest favours the person who already has a substantial level of salary or investment income and who does not need to borrow. Canadians have traditionally been very conservative and careful investors.

I should point out that that is not in terms of government but in terms of attitude.

> But imaginative investments with great potential for the investor and for future development of the country do not usually bring a large return in the early years. The proposed changes makes it virtually impossible for individuals to undertake such investments.

I repeat that this measure needs to be re-examined, understood and changed.

I can give some examples of what this budget has done to various business. One example is insurance companies. Canadians will not be able to afford the usual level of policy premium they once had. This means that people who are planning for their financial security through an insurance plan will be affected. In addition, young people who are planning their financial future will not be able to invest in insurance policies when they become older because the premiums will increase with age and by the ninth year of a policy they will be paying more income tax than they would be for the premium itself. Consequently, if people are not able to afford insurance, the capital received by insurance companies will not be as great. A large pool of capital will be denied the business community because the insurance companies will suffer a decrease in policyholders. There will be less capital available for reinvestment which could have helped to regenerate the economy.

Another adverse impact on the insurance companies will be the decline in the number of insurance agents and their service activities. This is a definite threat and one about which people are not over-reacting.

Another industry which is adversely affected is the automobile industry. The automotive dealers across Canada have been subject to major impact because capital cost allowances have been changed. Because some of the employee benefits have also changed, and at a time when automobile dealerships are being threatened with extinction because of foreign car competition and the state of the economy, companies are no longer providing fleets for their employees, and these people are going out to buy secondhand cars of their own.

Car dealerships, of which there are already 50 per cent less than there were two years ago, will now diminish in number even further. Some of the dealers who are just hanging on now will go the way of the dinosaur. There must be changes made by the government to correct this situation.

Another area which is affected is the farming industry. Certainly my constituency is concerned about this. The effect of the budget on the farm industry has been disastrous. The budget was to have aided the Farm Credit Corporation and the Small Business Development Bond. When those provisions are studied closely, they reveal another example of sleight of hand by the government and the somewhat deceitful—a word which may be strong but which is very close to being accurate—actions of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Finance. What they have worked out is a program in which the total contribution of the federal government to the agricultural industry is $5 million. They have done this by providing a repayable loan of $45 million to the Farm Credit Corporation and $5 million to subsidize an interest rate, which was already at 16.75 per cent, through the Farm Credit Corporation. The rest of that $45 million after one or two years, depending on the individual circumstances, will then go up to 17.65 per cent. If neither the Minister of Agriculture, nor his parliamentary secretary nor anybody else on the opposite side knows by now that agriculture cannot survive with those interest rates, I suppose it is too late for agriculture. The government needs to understand that agriculture cannot endure interest rates in excess of about 12 per cent. The unfortunate thing is that only $5 million is the total federal contribution to agriculture in this budget.

Many others have discussed the Small Business Development Bond. The tragedy is that its application is restricted to farmers or businesses in distress. New capital expansion cannot occur. Again we have changed the rules in the middle of the game. We passed a bill a year ago and are now changing the rules. Interest rates are probably 3 per cent higher, if not more, than they would have been for anyone who wanted to try to get in with new capital expansion up until December 31, and then after that this assistance is only available to those in so-called distress situations. That again leaves farmers with interest rates of 13 per cent and 14 per cent. This is of minimal, if any, benefit to them in the long term.

We face two or three impacts. One relates to capital, and I have discussed that in some detail previously. There is an impact on people and their ability to start small businesses. There will be an impact on their desire to become involved in an entrepreneurial way in providing jobs and in business activities. There is an impact on the ordinary Canadian when he is looking to his future and looking at investment to provide secure income as he approaches retirement. All these things have a direct impact on people and should be carefully considered.

Following the question of capital and the question of people is the question of transferring property. There is a very real and significant threat to the ability of people to buy and sell property, if the budgetary measures of the government we are considering now are carried through. Perhaps for government members this is a philosophical question, but it is a very serious concern to people who want to transfer their property, whether it be businesses or farms. The property of individuals is now very seriously in jeopardy.

We see also that research and development and venture capital will be markedly restricted.

I see my time is rapidly drawing to a close. I suggest the question of the entire free enterprise system needs to be considered very carefully. If hon. members opposite feel that the budget, for which they voted, supports free enterprise, they either have a perceptual problem—which is possible—or an honest, philosophical bent, with which we disagree. If they really believe in free enterprise and if their party wants to support free enterprise, I think they have an obligation—and it will be identified for them by individual Canadians and groups of Canadians represented by organizations—to respond now and to give the Minister of Finance direction so that many of the budgetary measures which seriously affect the future of free enterprise in Canada can be changed.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, if this bill had been brought before the House by the government prior to the budget, we would probably have looked at it as a housekeeping measure and as something necessary to increase spending under the Small Businesses Loans Act from $850 million to the level indicated, namely, $1.5 billion. However, we are now in the post budget period, and this is the first measure affecting small business after the death blow delivered to small business by the budget. It is almost an insult to think that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) could be, first, so incredibly ruthless with the small business sector and then could bring in a measure like this under the guise of helping small business.

I called a banker the other day on behalf of one of my constituents. My constituent had difficulty obtaining an interpretation from his banker or a commitment from him as to whether my constituent would or would not be eligible for a small business bond. I asked the bank manager if he had not heard what the Minister of Finance had said. The Minister of Finance had said he received the assurance from the banks that they would respond and make money available. That was the agreement, and that was in the budget. I told the bank manager that the minister appeared confident that the banks would be responding positively. I know this banker; he is a good bank manager with one of the major banks. He said, "Frank, if I had the Minister of Finance as my client, I would have pulled the rug from under him long before this". He said, "What are you guys doing? This man should not get a loan. His business was not solvent before interest rates went up, and it is not solvent now". The banker said he would not take any direction from a minister of finance who has to borrow money this year to pay interest on loans he did not retire last year. That is the reaction we get from banks.

What is the Small Businesses Loans Act? It is one of the tools, instruments or measures the government has to bring in from time to time to apply a band-aid here and a band-aid there to correct some of the negative effects on small business of other government measures and interventions in the marketplace. The Small Businesses Loans Act, the Small Business Development Bank, the Farm Credit Corporation and the Federal Business Development Bank were all put in place as instruments to react to certain situations in the marketplace not regulated by the invincible hand of Adam Smith. The government knows full well it cannot intervene in the economy just a little because whenever it does intervene, it creates certain imbalances in other areas. For that reason the federal government needs these instruments to regulate from time to time sectors which are negatively affected by government intervention.

Why do we need these measures? I have already stated that we need them because the government intends to take—and has taken in the last 12 years particularly—a very active part in the economy. The public sector does not play by the same rules as the private sector, so the private sector must be controlled. Somebody once said that the private sector is controlled by the government and the public sector is controlled by no one. The government tells us to restrain our demands on the economy, yet it increases its own budgetary expectations and spends money as if there were no tomorrow. That is the reason, when from time to time certain sectors of the economy go under, are in default or become insolvent, the government has to intervene and help them keep their heads above water.

What the small-business man really needs is less government intervention and less competition from government because he can no longer compete with Big Brother in a number of important areas. The federal government itself competes with the small-business man in the marketplace. It is now an active player in the energy sector, and certain small-business men have to compete with the neighborhood service station which is government owned and controlled. The government competes very effectively and rigorously in the labour market, which causes the small-business man a great deal of concern. For instance, what skilled person in his right mind would work for a small-business man today, particularly in the service industry, when he can work for the federal government or any of the provincial governments under the umbrella or the protection of what I call the social hammock where there are all the social benefits anyone could dream of? There are indexed pensions, tenure, 17 weeks' maternity leave and so on. The small-business man cannot afford this. A small-business man may have five or 15 employees, one-third of them women, all performing an important function. If a businessman has only five or six employees and were to grant maternity leave benefits for example, he could have one third of his work force off for 17 weeks. Obviously he would have to hire someone to take over and reserve their place for when they return. The small-business man cannot afford to compete with governments and the large corporate sector in some of these areas.

In answer to my friends in the NDP who like to gaggle and yak when I raise these matters, I have always said that social benefits of that kind should not be selectively dispensed. It is fair and just for a woman to receive 17 weeks maternity leave. I think that is fair. It is an important aspect for the maintenance of the family and survival of our society. If the economy can afford that kind of benefit, it should be available to all workers, not just those who use the NDP as their spokesman in the House, the public sector and corporate sector unions. They are the ones this group speaks for. I speak for all Canadians. I speak for the two thirds of the work force that does not sleep in the social hammock and have the protection of the large powerful unions.

If it is fair for the family of a steel worker to have a dental plan, it should be fair for every worker in our society. However, these social services are dispensed selectively. The small-business man cannot compete. Therefore, he has a difficult time attracting workers to his plant.

The large unions should certainly set themselves social goals and discuss, as they have in other modern industrial societies, with the government and employers the virtues of such benefits. Once having decided and agreed that the general economy, the GNP, can afford such benefits, they should be equally, equitably and fairly dispensed to all workers, not just a select few.

Here is where the government is at fault. It is beginning a very dangerous trend. It is leading instead of following the marketplace. It is creating serious tensions in the marketplace and difficulties for small-business men. In most cases, a small-business man would be better off with some kind of public service job rather than, as my friend, the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) said earlier, working 18 hours a day in the hope that some day he will make a profit from his business.

I have started four businesses. They are all still going. Two remain small businesses, one got larger. I know precisely what the hon. member for Burlington was talking about. I worked hard seven days a week. There is no Sunday or holiday when you are in small business, particularly the service sector. You are there seven days a week. If you only have five or ten employees and one does not show up for some reason or another, it is you who must replace that individual.

These are some of the problems the small-business man faces and some of the encumbrances the government, particularly the public sector, places on small business enterprise. The federal government competes in other areas as well, and this is more to the point. It competes in the capital market.

The question was asked where venture capital goes and why the banks are not investing in small businesses. One reason is that the risks are higher. Small business loans are much harder to service and control. If you start a small business away from the metropolitan areas, in the north or in a rural area, the banks are almost completely useless. They like to invest where they can see their investment and control it. I do not begrudge them for that. They are in the business of making money and have to show a profit to their shareholders.

The cost of servicing small business loans is much higher than that of servicing a large loan to the Power Corporation or any of the large conglomerates. It takes one person no longer to administer the large loan than to administer a $60,000 loan to a small-business man.

The government has been very active in the marketplace, particularly in the last couple of years, competing for money. It would be silly for an individual to put money into a small business when he can buy a Canada Savings Bond at 19½ per cent interest. Why put your money into a business when you can get that much interest by lending it to the government and having it fully guaranteed and flexible?

Between now and 1990 the government will have to raise between $400 billion and $600 billion in the marketplace for the energy sector. As a result of Bill C-48, we have what is known in the business world as a contingent liability. We will end up owning 50 per cent of the energy sector. It will take about $600 billion to become energy self-sufficient by 1990. That is the goal of the government and I applaud them for it. However, it will place an incredible demand on the financial market, virtually ruling out any opportunity for the private sector to compete. As a result, there will be no money available from the banks for the small business sector.

As I said, the government competes in the marketplace. May I say also that it competes unfairly. That is one of the main problems the small-business man faces today.

Survival in the small-business world today requires exceptional skills. My friend, the hon. member for Burlington compared the small-business man to an eccentric artist. That is stretching it a bit. I do not consider myself an eccentric. However, I have often said that my dealings with the bankers in my business and professional careers over the past 20 years have developed my political skills. I had to convince them that I had a much better mousetrap and that even though I would lose money for a year, eventually I would make a profit, create employment and serve my country in the best way I knew how. I pointed out that I would help the bank's position. When a banker told me he might or might not be able to help me, I always reminded him that I wanted to help him and would be doing so since I always retired my loans and paid my interest. I want to expound on this a little further, but I see that it is now six o'clock and I know it is Your Honour's duty to interrupt the proceedings. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will interrupt the proceedings at this point. I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) had the floor.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me once again and pronouncing my riding the proper way.

Before the House recessed for the supper hour I was discussing the Small Businesses Loans Act in the context of why it is necessary from time to time for the government to take these measures so as to protect or help certain sectors in the economy. Of course, the reason is that the marketplace can no longer function as it has previously. In other words, there is no longer a free market economy. In my contribution to the budget debate, I demonstrated why it is that the conventional and traditional tools and instruments that governments, monitors and fiscal planners were using were no longer effective. Of course, the reason is that there is no longer a free market economy in our country in the traditional sense. In the small business sector there is free enterprise and competition, but the small business sector or, indeed, the private sector as a whole, is no longer the dominant force in the economy. In fact, it is the government which is now the biggest employer—and I suppose it always has been—the biggest investor and the biggest corporate entity in the country, not only in the public service sector but in several major sectors of the economy, the most important being the energy sector, but also in transportation, communications and so on.

The government, which occupies such a dominant position in the economy, does not play by the same rules as does the private sector. That is the reason that the conventional tinkering, the conventional exercise of government regulations can no longer function. It does not really matter how much the private sector restrains itself in spending and in expanding the economy, as long as the government continues to spend as if there were no tomorrow. Then it really would not matter what we were doing. That is the main reason we have these distorted problems in our economy today. Because the government attempts to regulate a free market economy, there is no longer a free market economy operating in our country.

The Minister of Finance and the government spokesmen are ready always to blame others for the problems that the small business sector and the economy confront. It is either the American high inflation rate policy or, in the last few weeks, it has been the banks. The Minister of Finance and some of his colleagues actually stand in the House and blame the banks for the problems facing the small business community as if it were the banks that set the interest rates. It is the Governor of the Bank of Canada, on the advice of the minister, who sets the interest rates. We all lament the fact, and the NDP is in the forefront, that the banks are making excess profits.

Mr. Oberle: But if we are intervening and telling the banks what interest to charge, they cannot be blamed for making profits. We cannot blame the oil companies for making profits on selling oil when we set the oil price, without controlling it completely and without taxing away any of the profits. I am not advocating that we should have an excess profits tax but, as I said in the budget debate, one cannot be just a little pregnant. Once one starts intervening, one either goes all the way or else one gets out. It is not the fault of the banks that they have made excess profits. It is the fault of the government and of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, as it is their fault that the oil companies are making excess profits.

There are ways to get around the banks. As I said earlier, I have never been a great friend of the banks. I have always operated three years ahead of them. Small-business men are always a nuisance to the banks because their loans are as difficult to administer and service as the loans of large corporations such as Massey-Ferguson and Chrysler. The banks would much prefer to operate in the large corporate sphere of activity without having to worry about small-business men. From time to time the government has to intervene to encourage or provide competition for the banks, as was done with the Federal Business Development Bank and the Farm Credit Corporation. These institutions were actually put in place to give some competition to the banks and to keep them honest.

If we were really serious about helping small-business men, we could do it. Because we are always accused of not advancing any positive ideas, I should like to advance one. The Small Business Development Bond program was brought in in the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). Perhaps my speech is too penetrating or too cutting; it must have melted the wire inside my microphone as apparently I cannot be heard. In any event, if we were really serious about helping the small business sector and about keeping banks honest, I know what we could do. I raised the question with the Minister of Finance the other day during question period. I asked him whether he had given thought to the idea of allowing private investors, through the mortgage exchange corporation, which is already on the books of the House but not yet proclaimed, to put more money into the mortgage field. This would make money available at acceptable and manageable interest rates. All we would have to do is to give the same concessions which the banks already enjoy to private investors. We could get them to cash in their term deposits and to buy private mortgages through the mortgage exchange corporation. If we gave the same concession to private investors, the interest earned on such investment would be free of income tax. For example, if one has money in a term deposit today, probably one would enjoy a 15 per cent or 16 per cent interest rate. I am only speculating because I have not checked recently. If one purchased a mortgage exchange corporation bond at 11 per cent and did not have to pay income tax on the 11 per cent, one would probably be further ahead. Not only would it be a better investment guaranteed by the Government of Canada, but one would be further ahead. Usually the people with term deposits in the bank are income earners who have a few dollars left at the end of the month. They should be putting that money into the economy.

There are two things which we could be doing. Of course I am leading up to the fact that we would not necessarily have to use the mortgage bond to stimulate housing construction and address the crisis in the housing market. We could also sell Small Business Development Bonds to private investors with the same concessions that are being offered to banks. First, if private investors could buy Small Business Development Bonds, government guaranteed and taxfree interest earnings at 11 per cent—and of course the government would require insurance on the bonds and would probably want to add one percentage point—effectively 12 per cent money would be available for venture capital. Also there would be 11 per cent or 12 per cent money available in housing areas. This is not a new, revolutionary idea. This is exactly what is being done in the United States and in other industrialized countries where they have considered something which I suppose we have forgotten, namely the fact that the ownership of a house and the affordability of decent accommodation for one's family is a social right, not a privilege conferred upon us by government. There are various techniques which could be used. Furthermore, it would give the banks some competition for much needed deposits. The banks are always competing for deposits, particularly when the government solicits money by offering savings bonds at 19.5 per cent, which took a lot of money out of the banks. The government is paying 4 per cent to 5 per cent more on its Canada Savings Bonds than the banks are paying on term deposits. Naturally everyone who could afford it bought as many Canada Savings Bonds as they could. It took a lot of money out of the banks, money which could have been invested and loaned to small businesses. If we offered these same concessions to private investors, we would give the banks some competition because they would have to compete for deposits. Also it would put more low interest money into the small business sector, into the venture market.

I have some positive suggestions which I hope the government and the Minister of Finance will some day consider. Certainly there could not have been any consideration of the true needs of the small business sector when the budget was written. The measure we are debating tonight, authority for the government to spend another $700 million or $800 million through the Small Businesses Loans Act, will not even go half way toward correcting some of the measures contained in the budget which, in practical terms, rendered the small business sector vulnerable. Literally thousands of small businessmen and farmers are walking away from enterprises in which they have worked and invested all their lives. Small business bankruptcies are up by 48 per cent. This does not even take into account the businesses which were abandoned by people who have given up and can no longer be bothered filling out government forms, having bureaucrats looking over their shoulders, watching every move, and getting it in the neck every time they turn around. They are tired of their profits being regulated and of being told that they should compete in the marketplace, while every other sector of the economy, particularly the government, is behaving as if our economy were controlled and structured similarly to the one which is operating behind the Iron Curtain.

Many people overlook the fact that as interest rates rise, as energy costs rise, and as input costs from all sources go out of sight, small-business men cannot do what the government simply does—pass them on to consumers. The government never has any problem. It can just raise taxes, and in Crown corporations it can convert loans to equity. It just makes another $800 million available here and there. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) told us yesterday that they just finished budget discussions with PetroCan, the newest child in the government corporate arsenal. He said that the outlook for the next season is glowing. This means that we are probably in for another takeover of a private company, probably again for $1.5 billion, $2 billion or $3 billion. No one ever asks where this money comes from. The government raises it on the private market in competition with private enterprise. The cost of operating these businesses as Crown corporations with all their inherent inefficiencies, is passed on to the taxpayer. The small-business man competes with the large corporate sector which can pass on any labour costs, any energy costs and high interest rates to the consumer. Many of the large integrated corporations and marketing groups no longer operate in a truly free market environment where they compete with marketing groups such as the OPEC countries or European marketing groups; they have to be totally integrated and compete in an environment that is not ideal for free enterprise. As a result, it is the small-business man alone who is supposed to operate in a free market economy. He cannot pass his costs on to the customer, however, because the customer just cannot pay, so he is forced to reduce his profit to the point that the business becomes insolvent. He then must close down and lay off his employees. I think that the government believes that when a small business closes down, some magic employer will take over the people who are laid off. The government does not come to the rescue of those employees and they are just as unemployed as the people who worked for Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler or any other corporation that the government keeps afloat although it is no longer competitive in the marketplace.

If the small-business man closes his establishment the government seems to feel that it is obviously because he could not manage his business. That is not necessarily the case. He just cannot cope with the burden of regulation and control and, if the latest budget is any example, with the ignorance displayed by the government.

Some of my colleagues have said that when we speak of the small business sector we speak of the heart of the economy—the engine that drives the economy. Up to 60 per cent of all workers in this country are employed in the small business arena. They are that two thirds of the work force that is not unionized. All we ever hear about are the social benefits that unions want to achieve, and it seems to be taken for granted that by some magic those concessions will automatically flow to the two thirds of the work force that is not organized. That is not so. Small-business men employ the 60 per cent of our work force which is not unionized and which sometimes works for the minimum wage just because the employer cannot afford to pay more. The social benefits are often less than adequate when compared to those enjoyed by employees of the federal government, provincial governments and the large corporate sector which passes the cost on to the consumer. That consumer is often the small businessman who has to buy his raw materials and products from the corporate sector.

The small business sector is almost totally Canadian-owned. There is no problem with foreign control there. And the small-business man always invests all his profits in the business. I said earlier that I personally had started four businesses, all of them successful and still operating. In no instance did I take any profit out of a business, apart from a monthly wage for myself and my wife, who was always active in them with me. For 20 years everything was plowed back into the business. The only time I ever made a profit was when I turned one business over to the employees who worked for me, when I decided to seek election or when we sold out and a profit was realized. If I were to turn the clock back and the budget we now have was in place, I would think twice about selling a business or building for the future as I have done for 20 years because the minister would be there next day confiscating 50 per cent of the profits that I had stored up.

Will these measures entice people to leave the comfort of a government or a corporate job and test their skills in the free marketplace? I do not think so. In good conscience I could not even advise my own children to start a business and test their ingenuity in a competitive manner.

I do not think a small-business man starting out in the climate that this government has created would be rewarded for the effort of building a new enterprise, of being innovative and inventing new products as was done in the businesses I started, and the effort of creating employment which will help stimulate the economy and improve conditions in general.

We are tearing the heart out of our total economy. Over 50 per cent of the gross national product is created by the small business sector. That is the sector which is efficient, productive and innovative. Unless we realize what we are doing before it is too late, we will destroy not only our small business sector but the total economy.

I do not want to appear philosophical about it but no matter how many times we change the Constitution or entrench rights, there is no personal freedom or individual right in a country that does not have economic freedom. One only has to read history and look around the world to realize that. If we destroy our free market economy, as the latest budget would, we destroy our personal liberty and freedom.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to put my feelings regarding Bill C-84 on the record, not because I am an economist or small-business man but because I think it illustrates the way in which the government has approached economic matters. My views on the bill are probably representative of those of many Canadians.

The bill is pretty flimsy—just two pages. That is not just a cheap trick that I am trying to use, but what that demonstrates is the nature of the legislation which offers loans to small-business men at prime rate plus one per cent which, as my colleague indicates, is nearly 20 per cent. I do not know what small business could operate in today's economy while paying 20 per cent interest.

The bill also gives a small token increase in the amount of money that can be borrowed, and clearly that is just a catch up for inflation. The bill is just a token response to tough problems. I say "token" because it is not going to do anything fundamental to create a climate in which small business can prosper or in which the employees of a small enterprise can make a good living and enjoy the good life.

Why do we have this token response, this flimsy legislation? It is because of the approach of the government toward economic matters in general. It has locked itself into an approach concerning the economy which completely abandons any attempt to manage the economy. Today it has adopted what is popularly called a monetarist approach to the economy. This approach has been recently rejected in Manitoba, for example, where the Conservative government, which followed this monetarist approach to the letter, was thrown out by the people.

Mr. Fulton: Turfed out on their ear.

Mr. Keeper: The Conservative government was turfed out because people will simply not put up with abandonment of economic responsibility by government. While it is the Liberal government in office today which continues that kind of Tory attitude toward the economy, it is clear from the record—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Talk about cheap tricks.

Mr. Keeper: —that the short lived Progressive Conservative government followed the same kind of monetarist policy, as is well illustrated by the fact that interest rates rose at least four times during its administration. Therefore, it followed the same monetarist route. We know the Tories to be monetarists, the people know them to be monetarists, and that is why they threw Lyon out of office. That is why Margaret Thatcher, another Conservative in Britain, suffers the lowest esteem of any government leader in memory. That is why Ronald Reagan, who is also a Conservative monetarist, is likely to be a one-term President. People will simply not put up with this Conservative approach to economics.

Mr. McDermid: How is Foot doing these days?

Mr. Keeper: There is no forgiveness for the fact that a Liberal government follows these Tory approaches to economic matters.

An hon. Member: How long did the Commies last in B.C.?

Mr. Keeper: The budget of November 12, which has put small businesses into such dire straits, and small business people into such difficulties, was based on the assumption that the greatest problem we face today is inflation and the way to beat it is by tight monetary controls and by restraint in public expenditures.

The economic record of the last decade clearly demonstrates that these policies which have been carried on by successive governments just will not work in combating inflation. However, they certainly work when it comes to creating recession, when it comes to knocking people out of work and when it comes to making it impossible for small-business men to prosper. This, of course, would not be anything to decry if it were inevitable and there were no other ways by which to approach the economy. However, there is now clearly a good history of acceptance by governments of intervention in the economy and of intelligent approaches to economic planning. The Japanese and the Germans have done this, and we have done this at times, although not as well as we should have done it. However, it is clear that if we are to help small-business men, we need to take an intelligent approach to the economy. We must now stimulate the economy so that we can create employment and a market in which small business people can sell their goods and in which their enterprises can prosper.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: We must once again make a commitment to economic planning and to adding some intelligence and compassion to the economic system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to make this contribution to the debate as brief as possible, but I should nevertheless like to take advantage of this opportunity to show my colleagues in the House and the general public what we are accomplishing today by proposing another amendment to the Small Businesses Loans Act. Like most or perhaps all of the members of this House, I unreservedly support this bill to amend an act that has assisted small businesses to a very considerable extent, as was explained this afternoon by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) when he opened the debate.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy for the opposition parties to criticize the government and government policy and to attack the budget. I feel that from time to time, the opposition should, in addition to the constructive criticism it occasionally produces, act sensibly and responsibly. The previous speaker on the Conservative side said earlier that small businesses are practically all that is left of the private sector in Canada.

So the federal government and other levels of government are accused of interfering in business and industry, while at the same time the government is asked to do something to save businesses. These people should be a little more responsible in what they say. They are asking us to reduce the deficit, and at the same time they want us to establish new programs. I was listening to the previous speaker for the New Democratic Party who seemed to disagree with the rate charged under this act, namely prime plus 1 per cent.

If we look at the statistics, we see that since the rate was changed, though remaining attractive for the private sector—after all, banks are also private businesses—small business loans have become accessible and the program has become very popular. On one side, they say loans cost too much and the government should subsidize, and on the other side, they complain that the government is interfering too much with private business and the Canadian economy, and should just pass legislation and let the situation evolve according to the natural laws of free enterprise. At the same time, they want the government to reduce interest rates on small business loans and I suppose also at the Federal Business Development Bank, and they are asking the same favour for home owners' mortgages and other loans granted through institutions governed by federal legislation—obviously—and at the same time they are asking us to fight inflation. They want people to spend more, they want the government to spend more, they want to give the economy an artificial boost by making people spend, without making them responsible, and at the same time they want the government to get rid of its deficit.

Mr. Speaker, this Small Businesses Loans Act is not brand new. It goes back to the time when I arrived in this House! It was passed in January, 1961, a little over a year before I entered Parliament, and on a number of occasions, I was in the House when certain amendments were considered. The act was passed to help the lender make sums of money available at competitive rates, to secure such loans against any losses and to enable small businesses that lacked the collateral to obtain such loans, to go to a banking institution and, with the government's guarantee, obtain its financial services for a maximum of ten years for the purpose of improving his business. In 1961, when the act was first passed, the maximum loan was $25,000. Subsequently, this amount was raised in 1974 to $50,000 per business and was available to businesses whose gross revenue did not exceed $1 million. As Canadian small businesses expanded, the government had to increase these amounts. Today, under the provisions of this act which run parallel to the provisions of the Federal Business Development Bank, a business may borrow up to $100,000 provided its gross total revenue does not exceed $1,500,000.

I participated in the previous debate in the House in 1980 concerning the last amendment which increased the lending ceiling for the present two-year period. During the same debate, if I remember correctly, we increased maximum individual loans to $100,000. Today, a business which grosses up to $1.5 million per year may borrow up to $100,000, and can do so through the banks. In recent years, I believe in 1970, credit unions have become authorized lenders, and this also applies to trust companies and other financial institutions recognized and approved by the minister. Formerly, the Act was administered by the Minister of Finance who was the minister responsible to the House. This task has now been given to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Mr. Speaker, who, in fact, takes advantage of these loans? Often, businessmen meet members in their offices and discuss their financial problems. They already have substantial mortgages on a building and liens on machinery and automotive vehicles, they have no idea where to go, and they are reluctant to see the director of a chartered bank or a credit union in order to have their application processed and obtain the tools they need to make their business grow.

As I said before, any business whose total gross revenue does not exceed 1.5 million and which is engaged in manufacturing, wholesale or retail trade, services, communications, construction or transport, is eligible for this program. There are many small businesses that could take advantage of this legislation, and I would encourage them to do so. The specific aim of the act is to make money available for the purchase and improvement of buildings or the renovation of facilities, for the purchase or construction of such facilities and for the purchase of property and machinery, but it does not provide for inventory financing. The government has decided, and this applies both to the Federal Business Development Bank and to the Small Businesses Loans Act, that it was up to the chartered banks and businessmen themselves to negotiate loan guarantees and credit margins on inventories.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the House is considering an act which, as I said when I started my speech, has been extremely helpful to small businesses in this country, especially, as my Progressive Conservative colleague mentioned earlier, since small businesses employ about 60 per cent of the Canadian labour force. This is a substantial figure. My hon. colleague said that these people were not unionized. That is perhaps the unfortunate part. Maybe some day they will be better protected, somehow, some way, and it will be up to the employees themselves and to the appropriate authorities to provide for that aspect. The fact remains that small businesses represent a considerable economic force in the development of the Canadian economy and of our country. Mr. Speaker, in the year ending on December 31, 1980, 16,417 small business loans, totalling $408 million, were granted, and I may point out that, although it is often said that Quebec is not an active participant in the economy, Quebec is still one of the most active borrowers. However, borrowing is not just owing money, borrowing means doing something with that money. I am looking for a table, Mr. Speaker, which I had just now.

The figures for each province show that between January 1, 1981, and the end of October 1981, 4,363 Quebec businesses had borrowed $116,408,674 under this legislation for an average loan of $26,681, compared with only 2,451 small businesses in the neighbouring province for total borrowings of $74,188,468, which represents $31,000 per loan. It is only with this last figure that Ontario beats Quebec. It still remains that these two provinces obtained 50 per cent of all loans granted under this legislation by banking institutions. We should be pleased that small Canadian businessmen take advantage of this legislation. It is surprising to find, when all the figures are added up to the end of October of this year, that during the whole twenty-year period 96,158 loans for a total of $1,841,738,178 were put at the disposal of small-business men throughout Canada.

Members opposite might try to attempt to scare people by saying that a 20 per cent interest rate is prohibitive, but a businessman who is a good manager has commitments to meet; these commitments are often proportionate to his receipts, and that is why he can afford this rate of 1 per cent above the prime rate, which seems to be acceptable because these loans cost nearly nothing to the government. I could go on at length and quote figures showing that this legislation costs the government between $8 million and $10 million a year to administer because of loans which are not repaid and insurance costs.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, I hope that all members will readily comply with the request of the Minister of State who expressed the wish this afternoon that this bill be passed quickly so that it may benefit small businesses during the entire period, because if we do not act quickly, as we have spent about $500 million, I believe, of the $850 million maximum available, we shall not be able to meet the demand. It is only by increasing the maximum from $850 million to $1.5 billion that we can do so. In the present circumstances, when businesses must limit their expectations, be competitive and perhaps make more long-term or medium-term commitments than usual, during this period of high interest rates which are partly due to conditions in other countries, at this time of economic slowdown, small businesses are more hardly hit, and if we want to help them right up to end, right up to 1982, when this act will be reviewed and hopefully improved, we should give speedy passage to this bill.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, before I commence I would like to make a few comments about some of the remarks I have heard tonight. The hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) made reference to attacks on the government's budget. I would like to say to the hon. member that it is difficult to attack the government's budget because we have to find a place in line among the many thousands of business organizations, farmers and home owners who want to attack the government's budget. It is not easy to get any media space or attention when there are so many who want to attack the budget. We on this side can rest assured that when the hon. member returns to his constituency for the holidays he will have to contend with his constituents. I think that he will be relieved to return to Ottawa once he has had his full share of his constituents' comments.

The hon. member also referred to the consistency of our comments about the budget, and I will refer to this later in my speech by making reference to the complete lack of consistency on the part of the government with respect to the Small Business Development Bond.

The hon. member in the NDP commenced his speech by saying that he was not an economist, and then went on to prove it, sentence by sentence. When the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) talked about the political situation in England, he occasionally mentioned the Tory party. However, I would suggest to the Chair that those knowledgeable about the political situation in England would have recognized that the hon. member consistently put his "Foot" in his mouth. I would say that his speech was as short in content as it was in length.

An hon. Member: Yours is real swift.

Mr. Lewis: It is a pleasure for me to speak on the Small Businesses Loans Act and its amendment. The amendment increases the maximum of all loans which may be guaranteed during the two-year period ending June 30, 1982, from $850 million to $1.5 billion. We on this side endorse the thrust of the amendment because of the problems facing small businesses in the economy of Canada today. There is a desperate need by Canadian business to have the financing which this government is not providing in any other way. Bankruptcies are increasing continually in this country and there is little or no action by the federal government.

The purpose of the act is commendable in that it is designed to encourage lenders in the private sector to make loans available to small businesses. These loans must meet certain criteria in order to be guaranteed, and this is specified in the legislation.

The hon. member opposite referred to some of those specifications earlier, and I would like to expand on that. Eligible borrowers must have a gross revenue of less than $1.5 million in the year of the application. Anyone knowledgeable about the wholesale trade knows that it is not very difficult to obtain a gross revenue of $1.5 million in any one year. This is a provision which is not amended by this act and should be reviewed in detail. Loans may be granted for the purchase of fixed or movable equipment, improvement for modernization of plants, purchase of or construction of premises and purchase of land. However, that does not include inventory financing or working capital requirements or the refinancing of existing debts, and these are the areas in which small businesses are hurting today. Small business traditionally financed its inventory by using bank financing. Today, that bank financing is costing small businessmen a startling amount every month. Working capital requirements and refinancing of existing debts are being financed at horrendous rates which could have been greatly improved by the Small Business Development Bond. That bond would have helped small business, a subject about which I will say more later.

My experience with this legislation was gained in the field. It has not been all that good. I am not impressed by what the Canadian chartered banks do in Canada, despite the figures shown in the 1981 Small Businesses Loans Act annual report. I am not impressed when I see that the National Bank of Canada can lend $41 million under this legislation in Quebec and the other banks can not come close to that figure. As a resident of Ontario, I wonder why the Bank of Montreal lends more money in British Columbia than in Ontario and Quebec together. I wonder what the government is doing to ensure that all small businesses receive just treatment from all banks under this legislation.

I would like to discuss the responsibilities of the banks. It is about time, Mr. Speaker, that banks started to demonstrate some responsibility in this country. What we did as parliamentarians is to set up a bank system in Canada which would ensure successful banks. Where are the banks in this time of need? What are they doing for us? I suggest that they are spectators and not as heavily involved as they could be in helping to solve Canada's problems. I suggest that they have failed the Canadian people by not using all the personnel and financial resources which are at their disposal to come to our aid. The chartered banks in Canada, with the exception of a few branches, did not act very favourably toward the Small Business Development Bond program. I suggest to you that they use the switch and bake technique and provide people with conventional loans.

I know for a fact that when dealing with the Small Businesses Loans Act, the banker who was asked about a small business loan would reach under his desk and produce a book about as thick as the stack of Hansards which I have on my desk here and flip halfway through it and say, "You do not want this kind of loan anyway." They use the switch and bake technique to their advantage when dealing with the Small Businesses Loans Act.

I am concerned about why the average spread between what the banks pay out on savings deposits as opposed to the prime rate which they charge has increased. It concerns me that commercial mortgages are almost impossible to get. Why have the banks received direction from their head offices to demand appraisals on fixed assets involved in loans to businesses connected with farming? Why have bank profits increased so dramatically? Why are bank branches closing down in small towns and villages in Simcoe North? When are we going to see some initiative and innovation from Canadian banks? Although a Canadian bank has not failed since the Home Bank during the 1920s, they are failing Canadians morally every day.

I would now like to deal with the legislation which was passed in Saskatchewan recently. I suggest that it is an indication of the problems facing the banks today. As I understand the legislation, it has created a moratorium on foreclosures in Saskatchewan for one year. Home owners in that province can continue their mortgage at the same interest rate. I suggest that should scare the banks of Canada. Let me give an example of how the banks get money to lend. An elderly person sells his home and realizes $50,000 on the sale. Let us say he did that in 1978. He went to a bank and obtained a three year deposit certificate at, let us say, 10.5 per cent. If he had gone to a trust company, he might have obtained a guaranteed investment certificate. In any event, the bank holds this deposit certificate for three years until January 1, 1982, when this legislation comes into effect. He goes to his bank in Saskatchewan and says he would like his $50,000 back because he wants to put it into Canada Savings Bonds at 18.5 per cent. The bank in Saskatchewan would have to say, "We do not have the money; we will continue to lend it to you at 10.5 per cent". That is what will happen to the banking system. There will be unhappy depositors and a breakdown in the system if that kind of legislation is in effect right across the land. That is what the banks fail to realize, and that is why our party called upon the government to do as we did, that is to have the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs review bank profits and interest rates. We have asked for it but have been turned down by the government.

This amendment is really necessary because the small business sector of Canada is in serious trouble. The Progressive Conservative Party introduced the Small Business Development Bond. Our original concept was exciting and innovative. We brought it in in the December 1979 budget. We gave small business a way to translate long-term capital requirements into long-term financing at a preferred interest rate. Small business, the backbone of Canadian industry, which was in difficulty at that time, would have had a chance. All right, we lost, but in April, 1980, the Liberal government adopted the idea of the Small Business Development Bond. It adopted the wording but not the philosophy. New ventures were eligible but not ongoing ones. We were pleased nonetheless because at least new ventures could be financed. A brochure put out by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) says that the Small Business Development Bond measure:

> —is a tax initiative designed to reduce the interest costs of qualifying small business corporations . . . in recognition of the important contribution small businesses make to Canada's economy and in support of their continued growth and development.

What could it be used for? It could be used for acquiring land, for financing Canadian scientific research and development expenditures, for refinancing a loan to the extent that a qualified expenditure had been made or for assisting a small business in financial difficulty. That was what the government designed it to do.

What did the Canadian Federation of Independent Business say about what it would have done? The federation says that even in its semi-emasculated state, the Small Business Development Bond would have given help to between 5,000 and 10,000 small corporations; it would have provided about 36,000 direct jobs; the gross tax expenditure during 1980-84 per job created would have been $5,000 in 1980; and there would have been no net costs to the federal treasury and an actual gain of $77 million in the first year of the program. That is what it would have done. Now there are problems with it. I do not want to dwell at length on the problems, but let us look at what the government did with the Small Business Development Bond. In that "equitable" budget of November 12, 1981, the bond was extended for firms in financial difficulty.

An hon. Member: Ian Deans is in the chair now.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I can only comment at this point that you have aged considerably. However, you do have more hair for the job than the last Speaker.

An hon. Member: Be serious now.

Mr. Lewis: Those are not my instructions.

I suggest that what I am about to say will really curl your hair, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry. I am trying to give you all the dignity I feel you deserve, Sir.

What we are really doing to the Small Business Development Bond in this budget is saying to small business—

Mr. Riis: We are gutting it.

Mr. Lewis: My colleague from the NDP is correct. I note a shift in emphasis on the part of the NDP. My colleague is absolutely correct that the government has absolutely gutted the Small Business Development Bond and emasculated it completely. In order to get a Small Business Development Bond now a business has to be going broke. Is that not a great advertisement? The next brochure from the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism will say: "Terrific! You can get yourself a Small Business Development Bond as long as you are broke". That is a lot a nonsense. It is absolutely no way to treat small business to say that in order to get help from the government and in order to get a guarantee from the government a business has to be going broke or be in financial difficulty. Is that something for the Liberal government to be proud of? "Yes sirree, if you are going broke, we are there," and the reason businesses are going broke is that the government put them there. I suggest that the banks saw through these Small Business Development Bonds immediately. There is absolutely no way any branch manager of a bank in Canada will telephone his head office and say: "Guess what, Mr. Vice-President? A customer just walked across the street from one of our competitors, and he looks really good because he is going broke". No bank will steal that customer from the bank across the way if he is going broke, but that is the criterion of the Liberal government's Small Business Development Bond program. No branch manager in the world would lend money to a customer because he is going broke; he could not be bothered with the paperwork.

I would like to read from a memorandum sent out by one of the major banks in Canada respecting the Small Business Development Bond. It is dated December 9, so it is current. It was written about one month after the tragedy called the MacEachen budget. It says this:

This new formula is being developed and . . . branches will be advised shortly of the formula. Until that time it is not possible to enter into any new SBDB agreements . . . the SBDB program cannot be offered by banks until the government defines more precisely the eligible borrowers.

Presumably the government is going to great lengths to define financial difficulty, and by the time it gets financial difficulty defined, anyone who was not in financial difficulty when the government started defining it will certainly be in financial difficulty once the government has defined it. The criterion is not there and when it is, it is going to be disasterville!

I would like to refer to a recording of a telephone conversation my research assistant had with a bank manager in my riding on November 9, 1981. The bank manager said:

The new program stinks! They just received their instructions from head office today. They are cancelling their files as far as SBDB are concerned . . . The only way they feel that they could consider an SBDB would be if the person had a marginal account with them already and that an SBDB would release the pressure. Even at that they would have to add 3 per cent to the rate to make up for the imposed 6 per cent dividend.

I want to read to the House a letter from one of my constituents addressed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). It reads!

We had been gearing up all year to build a new energy efficient building material showroom at our location in . . .

Simcoe North.

Financing was tentatively approved at—

A bank.

—through the Small Business Development Bond program.

We wrote you September 8, requesting an extension to this program since we were having problems obtaining completed blueprints with approvals. When we received your letter of November 6, no definite answer was obtained only to look for an extension or change in the budget November 12.

It appears from the budget that we cannot now use this form of financing to complete our plans.

This business is not going broke. It is not in financial difficulty. To return to the letter, this is what is facing Canadian small business across this country. It says:

It just does not make sense to start to build considering the present economic conditions, interest rates at over 18 per cent, inflation running at 13 per cent and the number of business failures in our industry. Looking over past years profits and projecting (or predicting) the future is so uncertain that to contemplate building at this time would be out of the question without this type of financing available to small business. At a time when many companies are closing, laying off, etc. this incentive for financing new buildings, equipment, etc. was really needed to help small business to expand and improve the economy.

Please reconsider your position on the budget for the Small Business Development Bonds.

There is no question but that we should support this bill. We do it with sadness, sadness because there was the mechanism available to this government to do something for small business in Canada. There was no need to gut the Small Business Development Bond, but this government gutted it. Effectively, it is now the small business disaster bond. That is no reflection on you being in the Chair when I say so, Mr. Speaker. You have done a good job. It is now the small business disaster bond.

We can blame the government for this all we like, but the people who do not understand what the Small Business Development Bond was supposed to do for Canadian economy are the same bureaucrats living in this cocoon called Ottawa who fail to realize what the entire budget will do for the economy of Canada.

If ever these people get out of this place and visit small businesses in constituents like Simcoe North, we will show them the reality of making a living in these times. We will show them that if bureaucrats get out in the field, they can see what is going on.

In closing I should like to say that I intend to support the bill and I thank you for your time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, we have a new face in the Chair. I must say this evening we have a very handsome face in the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Deans): I think the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Thacker: I apologize for being out of order. I would never challenge the Chair. Presumably that says something about my comments.

This evening I want to say a few words on Bill C-84, the Small Businesses Loans Act. Because this is second reading of the bill I can discuss the principle, which is that there will be more government involvement in the lives of our citizens, particularly small-business men.

This amendment increases the amount the government guarantees to the banks to $1.5 billion. I am sure Your Honour is aware this is the eighth time the amount has been increased. When the bill first came in, it was $300 million. It is now $1.5 billion.

This bill increases the welfare of our banking system. We certainly would not want to have any banks fail. The bill says to the banks that if they will make loans to small business of up to $1.5 billion, the government will guarantee they will not lose it. This is an incredible bill and an incredible role for government.

The contingent liabilities of this government are now truly enormous when you add up all of the various contingent liabilities such as small business, farm improvement loans, Petro-Canada and the loans to our Crown corporations.

I suppose it is a proper question to ask why the amount has increased. I am sure government members will say it is because small business is important. There is no doubt about that. Over 90 per cent of all Canadians business is small business. There are 2.5 million people employed directly, and 25 per cent of our gross national product comes from the people who are statutorily defined as being in small business. If you add to that our farm community of some 330,000 farmers, you can clearly see the enormous impact of small business on our country.

Given the importance of small business, it is a very good question as to why this government has hurt them in so many ways. Small business is being given this little bit, a guarantee to the banks of $1.5 billion. That is just a drop in the bucket when contrasted with the many ways small business has been hurt.

The prime way in which the small business community has been hurt is as a result of the massive government deficit of $83 billion. As a result of that deficit, the government recently had to go into the marketplace and pull out $12.7 billion. That pool of capital should have been available for small business and other industries. The government has taken that pool of capital at a rate of interest that small business cannot compete with. No small business can pay 19.5 per cent and still make money.

What is happening is that those in this country with wealth are not using it to set up small businesses which would employ men and women, thereby increasing our communities and requiring more doctors, dentists and so on to serve the people. These people would rather lend it to the government at 19.5 per cent, and why not? It is guaranteed. That is a prime example of how the government is hurting small industry.

Politicians in general and cabinet ministers in particular have learned by being in government that they can deceive the people. They perform very well. The Liberal government is an absolute master. It proposes tremendous programs, all sorts of social programs, but there is a small capitalistic tax attached to it. The government says it will give the people this or that program without increasing their taxes. The trick performed by the great magicians is to borrow the difference. At first it is great. The people get the programs with no corresponding tax increase. Everything seems to be hunky-dory. At first only 5 per cent of government revenues went to service the debt. Suddenly it went to 10 per cent, 15 per cent, 20 per cent, and we are now in the situation where 25 per cent of the revenue collected from working men and women in this country goes to service the debt.

This money is not distributed equally in servicing that debt. Those with wealth receive 19.5 per cent from their government. That is a very real concentration of wealth. Within ten years we will have a nation of very, very rich and very, very poor. As a result of government deficits and a concentration of government wealth in the hands of a few, we are in the process of wiping out our middle class. A huge deficit prevents the government from having flexibility and the ability to help those who genuinely need help. Keynesian economics will work in the sense that during bad times governments should be able to borrow money on the collective strength of the nation, put it into an automotive industry or wherever it will create jobs. But during the good years, it is incumbent upon the government to pay the money back. That is where we have fallen down in Canada. During our good years, in the 1950s, 1960s and the 1970s when we were really economically strong and we should not have been having deficits, indeed, we should have been lowering taxes and building up surpluses if we had to, instead we were increasing the deficit. Therefore, when we need to have government involvement, we cannot because 25 per cent of our revenue goes to service the debt. That debt concentrates wealth among the very rich. It is the small business people who hurt the worst.

There is no doubt that the major curse upon the nation at the moment is the Liberal government, a government that spends $100 million in advertising to tell people what a great government it is and what a great Constitution it now has with all of the entrenched rights. The Chair, as well as I, knows that all of the so-called entrenched rights were rights that we had because some of us believed that individually we all had the rights. Government gives us absolutely nothing. Government takes away rights. Government does not give me rights.

What are some of the most important rights one should set forth and entrench? Clearly one would be property. The reason our ancestors emigrated to Canada was to get away from countries where they had governments that did to them exactly what this Liberal government is trying to do to our people today. People emigrated to Canada because they had an opportunity to get land. Do we have that entrenched in our national Constitution? No, because the government deliberately took it out. That is something that Canadians need to understand. On a Friday during the constitutional committee meetings, the government agreed with the Conservative Party proposal to include it, but on Saturday morning the Leader of the NDP party stood up and said to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), "If you put that in, we will withdraw our support". On the following Monday, the Liberal government returned to the committee and withdrew that amendment granting individuals the right to ownership of property.

Did they accept any of our suggestions and proposals that we have economic rights in the Constitution? It could be stated in our national Constitution that governments cannot have deficits unless they (a) have a referendum or (b) there is a war or a depression, some major overriding concern. If it were included in our Constitution that there had to be balanced budgets, except for those few exceptions, we would not get into the situation where the deficit is so crushing to small business and to individuals.

The next way government has hurt small business in this country is through the curse of inflation. There is absolutely no doubt that inflation is primarily caused by government. Right now in this country government is taking over 50 per cent of our incomes. It takes it municipally with municipal taxes and licences, it takes it provincially with all of the sales taxes and provincial taxes, and it takes it federally. I agree with the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) where he describes a slave as simply someone who is taxed 100 per cent. That being so, Canadians are at least half slaves, and the person who puts them there is the government. All that means is that 50 per cent of our income goes to other people who make the decisions with regard to how that money is spent. That is what I do not like about it. The philosophy of the Conservative Party is to leave the money with the people and that millions of individual decisions will come to a far wiser result, rather than to leave it up to the federal cabinet consisting of some 30 people and the civil service bureaucracy which is not answerable to anyone. I do not like that, Mr. Speaker. I do not agree that over 50 per cent of my income should be spent at the whim and wish of other people. Leave it with me, Mr. Speaker, and I shall make those decisions. If all hon. members were to do that collectively, the system would work much better.

Mr. Taylor: Hear, hear! That is democracy.

Mr. Riis: I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member from Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) entertain a question at this point?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Deans): I wonder if the hon. member will entertain a question from the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis)?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, there are so many bad things about this government that I would be delighted to entertain a question at the end of my speech if, in fact, there is time left at the end of my 40 minutes, which is doubtful because I could really continue for four or five days.

It is absolutely clear that the Canadian people have a clear, philosophical choice. If the Canadian people were to vote for the NDP party, there would be an enormous concentration of wealth and decision-making power in the hands of government.

Mrs. Mitchell: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thacker: And if citizens want to have government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Deans): Does the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) have a question?

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mrs. Mitchell: My point of order—

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Deans): I should like to suggest to the hon. member that it is quite appropriate for the hon. member to raise a point of order as a question, but that she might do it as a point of view rather than a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is that the hon. member who represents the Conservative Party in its traditional terminology continually repeats NDP party. Would the Chair please correct the member and explain to him that it is the New Democratic Party and not the New Democratic Party Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Deans): I recognize the aggravation it causes the House. It has been raised a number of times. I bring to the attention of all hon. members the fact that the proper terminology is NDP. Of course, the "P" means party.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the floor once again. One becomes accustomed to these interjections from the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: There are different definitions of "P". I suppose we all have our own with regard to the NDP.

As I was saying before I was interrupted, clearly a vote for the NDP in this country means a vote whereby ordinary Canadians will have to give up more of their tax dollars. The decisions about how those tax dollars will be spent would be by a cabinet and a bureaucracy. The Liberal Party always picks up the themes of the NDP. There is no doubt that a vote for the Liberal government will have the same results.

Only a vote for the Conservative Party—and small business and individuals are beginning to realize that—will result in a real choice and people will be returning to our party en masse.

Mr. Taylor: PET socialism is the same thing, instead of NDP.

Mr. Thacker: Under the government's economic philosophy and the NDP philosophy, all roads will clearly lead to Ottawa. It is the same in the oil industry and under the National Energy Program where we have seen the flowering of that policy, where, previous to the NEP, individuals who formed their own companies could go out and drill a well if the seismic results showed that it should be drilled. They were entitled to deduct the cost of that well against any income that might accrue. That was a decision that was made as a function of management. Then we come along to the NEP policy which states that no longer will that be the case. The oil companies now have to come, first of all, to the bureaucracy in Ottawa for approval of the lease and where they can drill the well. If the seismic data says that it should be drilled in spot A, but the bureaucracy decides it will be in spot B, it will be in spot B. The bureaucrats will also decide whether or not one receives a grant based on a number of factors, one of which will be one's Canadian rating. People must first come to Ottawa for approval. As part of this philosophy, industry must operate that way now. If an industry wants to receive a DREE grant, it must obtain approval from Ottawa. It is a decision-making process which is now occurring in the centre, rather than being based on good economic business principles. I do not believe that is how the country should operate.

Previously, under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act universities and provinces have been able to make decisions as to how dollars would be spent. Basically they have been university decisions because they are autonomous institutions which prepare their own budgets, submit them to provincial governments for approval, and very seldom are they approved in total; they will often be cut back. Under the new proposals of the government pursuant to the philosophy that all roads lead to Ottawa, the universities and colleges will soon have to come to Ottawa to have their programs of instruction approved before money will paid out to them. Students will have the same philosophy applied to them. One program which is being discussed actively by the government is the voucher system. This will mean that students will come to the national government to receive vouchers with which they can go to universities of their choice. One might think that is great, that it is free choice for people, but we know it has some very severe ramifications.

First, large institutions will be able to destroy the small ones because they have the existing infrastructure, power and programs to offer more attractive packages to students. This will mean the closing of universities in various small towns and cities across the country where universities have added immeasurably to the cultural, intellectual and social life of communities.

Second, with respect to students individually, the voucher system will initially apply to all disciplines. For example, if one wanted to be a philosopher, one would probably be able to obtain a voucher. But it will not take very long before the bureaucracy starts to say, "We need more engineers in the next four or five years. Therefore, if you want to study philosophy, there is no national money for you; but if you want to study engineering or something else, here is your voucher". This will totally disrupt and distort what has heretofore been free choice on the part of students to decide what they want to study in response to their own interests. It goes back to the increasing philosophy of the government that all roads lead to Ottawa.

The next major kick at small business surely must be the budget. We know that the budget tax take is truly enormous. Since the government came back into power in 1980, it presented the budget of April, 1980, the tax increases in the budget of October, 1980, the energy taxes which were placed on the backs of ordinary citizens, and now the enormous tax take of the November, 1981, budget. If we add these together, we realize the tremendous pressure which is being felt by ordinary Canadians. It is very understandable why all hon. members are receiving dozens and dozens of letters from organized groups indicating that every aspect of the budget is wrong. At a time when ordinary Canadians, the men and women who really add something new to the country, are taking home less net pay, government revenues are up 30 per cent and government expenditures are up 22 per cent.

Just to get an idea of the extent of the unhappiness, perhaps I could refer hon. members to the article which appeared in The Globe and Mail indicating that some 18 accountants from the city of London, Ontario, sent a letter to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) pointing out how absolutely devastating are the budget provisions. Those 18 accountants represent between 85 per cent and 90 per cent of the small business community in London. London, Ontario, is a very significant city, it is a major city in the country. Through their accountants, 90 per cent of the businesses are writing to the Minister of Finance to say, "Look, it is absolutely crushing us and it will not wash". Perhaps Canadians, small-business men and women are waking up to the real danger in the country.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the hon. member has been using what I would describe as unparliamentary language. Given that increasing percentages of people these days who are entrepreneurs are of the female sex, why does the hon. member continue to refer in an old-fashioned way to businessmen?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Deans): That is an interesting point of view, but it is hardly a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Is that not a wonderful contribution? It is an NDP contribution.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member shows his true level of mentality because in fact I heard his speech and he used the word "businessmen" too.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. The hon. member is correct that in the first instance I used the term "businessmen", but with the interjection of my learned colleague I learned from my experience and talked of business people.

Mr. Thacker: Speaking of learning, it has never ceased to amaze me how hon. members of the ND Party have never been able to learn lessons from history. Their solution to the economic problems of Canada is for more government. Let me look at what happened in other countries where that occurred. Since the Second World War in the United Kingdom there has been a total nationalization of the coal, harbours, electrical and automobile industries. Every aspect of the life of citizens of the United Kingdom has been nationalized. Are they better off with the nationalization of every major industry in Britain? Of course they are not, and they are trying to get out of Britain by the hundreds of thousands. The reason they are trying to get out by the millions is that, as we can tell and chart statistically, for every year the country has a socialist government it will have a year of real pain and anguish. The people of Britain are going through the agony of hell because they have had so many socialist governments which have nationalized all their industries.

Let me refer to another example, that of Poland. Poland has an incredible history in which it was several times a major world power. Also it has a fabulous culture, social life and respect for the family unit, which are hard to beat. It is a very religious country. As a result of government, we find in Poland that all means of distributing food and all industries have been nationalized. Again it is governed by a cabinet of some 30-odd people, with the bureaucracy making decisions as to how money should be spent. They simply cannot do it, and history teaches us this. Rather than Poland being a food exporter today, as it was, its people are now standing in line waiting for food.

This is where small business people come in. Small business people are really the buttress, the group which can make quick decisions. When the economy is going sour, they can make the necessary adjustments to get back on stream, which is impossible for the government. We have found that to be the case with PetroCan. We have $1.5 billion in it. We must remember that it started out with the $300 million or $400 million which we put in. It took over one company. It was not working, so we gave it more money. Every year we give it hundreds of millions of dollars. It still was not a success, so we gave it access to 25 per cent of all northern lands from which to choose. That still was not working, and now we have the flowering of the policy to expropriate wealth from the people who have found oil and give it to Petro-Canada. The reason for this is clear. That company cannot fail because if it did, the political image of the government would be tarnished. It does not matter how much money it will take; Petro-Canada will succeed if they have to take over every oil company in this country so there are no competitors.

Mr. Taylor: It is straight communism.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: Behind the scenes communism, and you are hiding it but the people are waking up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Deans): Order, please. The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant) on a point of order.

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the hon. member since he began speaking. It seems to me that he thinks he lives in the year 1881. I should like to remind him that we are living in 1981.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Deans): That is an interesting reminder.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting how hon. members get exercised when they are given a clear enunciation of principles and a clear explanation is given to the people of Canada of what it means to vote Liberal, what it means to vote NDP as compared to voting for this party. This party believes that government should basically restrict itself to regulation—I do not care how strict the regulations are—so that there cannot be an exploitation like that of the 1880s. The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant) should remember that it was the people of France in 1790 who had to have a revolution in order to get government off their backs and that it was the people of the United States who had to have a revolution in order to get government off their backs.

The Canadian people are going to be faced with exactly the same choice, although perhaps not in my generation because I will survive and not in the generation of my son or daughter because they will survive. We will teach them the system and they will be able to manipulate within it. One day the ordinary citizen of Canada will have to fight the French and the American revolutions again in order to get government off his back because the problem is government per se.

There is another attack on the 330,000 farmers in this country who are small-business men as well as the 2.5 million people who work for small business in Canada. That attack in the budget was clearly related to capital gains. It has effectively blocked small business people who have worked their whole life, taking perhaps only a meagre salary, and who would use the proceeds of the sale of the business for their pension when they retired. Until the last budget was introduced, such people used to sell the business to their children under an agreement for sale whereby the payments would be spread over ten or 15 years and the capital gain realized on the sale spread over the same period. In each year they received a payment from their child, they would pay a portion of the capital gains tax and keep the rest of the money for their pension.

Sometimes, in the case of farmers, the children could get a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation or, in the case of a small business, from the Small Business Development Bank. They could get the cash and then give that to the parent who would buy an income-averaging annuity and spread the capital gain over 10 or 15 years, and thus have a good pension. That scheme has been wiped out by the budget. The government insists that the forward-averaging provision will be equally generous but it has not been able to demonstrate this is the case I am convinced that forward-averaging is not going to be as generous to a man or a woman of retiring age—perhaps because it often happens that they do not live long enough to enjoy the benefit of it.

I think figures will show that if a farmer sells his property and then dies within the next year, the government will take the bulk of the estate, even though the spouse might be involved.

I could go on talking about the other budget attacks such as energy costs and employee benefits that have been taxed, higher housing costs, higher food costs, unemployment—I could wax eloquent about how the solution is more small business entrepreneurship, with the government acting as regulator and setting regulations to protect people so that those with initiative and drive would be able to compete in the marketplace. That would mean a continuous process of the weak and inefficient dropping out of the system. But when government becomes involved, anything it touches never has to apologize thereafter, even if it is inefficient. The system is just perpetuated.

A classic example of this, one in which I am sure you will be interested, Mr. Speaker, as you come from an Ontario riding, concerns the automobile industry. Very few Canadians realize that lay-offs today in the automobile industry are the result of government decisions taken in 1973-1974 to keep the price of Canadian oil depressed. That decision sent signals to ordinary Canadians that the price of gas would remain low and so they could continue to buy big cars. It sent signals to the car manufacturers to continue building big cars. Meanwhile, Japan and Germany, not having the resource cushion that we have and having governments that are more direct and honest in matters of economics, immediately put their oil to world price and the best brains in their country to designing efficient engines and cars. Now, eight years later, they are whipping our industry because they made hard decisions.

I am sure it is difficult for the man in the street today to appreciate that he has lost his job in the automobile industry because ten years ago a Liberal government made a decision about the price of oil. Any Canadian who fails to appreciate the relationship between government decisions and subsequent injury, makes a fatal mistake.

Generally speaking, Canadians do not spend enough time on their politics. Perhaps that is because the country is so big. Other countries such as Greece and Great Britain take their politics seriously. I wish it were so in Canada. I believe that if ordinary Canadians understood more about the relationship between government decisions and the subsequent economic effects on them individually, they would pay more attention to all of us as politicians. It gets down to the fact of politicians being able to fool Canadians almost always!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in being able to spend the remaining 11 minutes speaking to Bill C-84 which extends the limits of borrowing under the Small Businesses Loans Act.

I was somewhat amused by the puerile interjections made during the speech of my hon. friend, the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) and the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper). Their remarks reminded me of Alexander Pope's perceptive comment—"A little learning is a dangerous thing".

Again we have seen why the New Democratic Party is so dangerous. While we are extending the borrowing limits of this bill or, rather, the security to a lender to $1.5 billion, we really are not addressing the problems that are faced by the business community.

First of all, we need to address the greatest need of the business community, which is an atmosphere of stable planning for itself. No business can thrive, prosper or plan for the future if the future is filled with insecurity. The kind of insecurity which has been built into the economy by this government is destroying the planning and building capacity of our business community, particularly the small business community.

I would like to refer to a couple of previous Liberal budgets which were designed to send signals to reach the business community to plan for the future. First of all, I would like to refer to the budget presented on November 18, 1974, by the then minister, Mr. John Turner. On pages 1426 to 1427 of Hansard, in relation to MURBs he stated:

> I am confident that this measure will attract a significant amount of private equity capital into the construction of new rental housing.
> . . . will provide the impetus necessary to increase the housing stock in this country at a healthy pace and fulfil our commitment to place decent accommodation within the reach of every Canadian.

In 1974 that was called an incentive, an initiative; but in 1981, under this present budget, it is called a loophole. I refer to the same budget where the then minister was speaking of depreciation write-offs. On page 1427 of Hansard of November 18, 1974, Mr. Turner stated:

> . . . in the area of business investment, I wish to announce the extension of a measure which has made a major contribution to the strong investment performance, which is improving our productivity, enhancing supply, creating new jobs and helping to sustain the Canadian economy . . .
> This measure is the two-year write-off of expenditures on new machinery and equipment for manufacturing and processing in Canada—

In 1974, that was called a business investment incentive; but in 1981, that is called a loophole, and it is called unfair.

In 1976, the then minister of finance, referring to capital cost allowances, said, "After making an extensive review of the Canadian system of capital cost allowances, the main conclusion reached is that it is basically sound. It is not out of line with systems in other industrialized countries." That was an incentive in 1976; but today that is a loophole. The point I am trying to make is that business people have come to all of us, expressing their desire to invest, wanting to look into the future in order to do their planning, and asking, almost in anguish, "What are the intentions of government in this area?" I think that builders have come to all of us and have asked, "What is the future of MURBS? Will the government extend the program to December 31 of this year?" I suggest that it is the atmosphere of instability and insecurity which is killing the incentive, the drive and the zeal of the small-business man today.

Second, what we need and what business needs is a redirection of government goals! I would like to underscore what has already been stated to us tonight by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills. He said that the government formerly acted as a policeman, as a regulator, to ensure that the economic actors in our economy were functioning well. At one time the government was the policeman. Today it is a principal actor in the community. I point out that at one time the government did most of its borrowing out of the country and dabbled with borrowing within Canada. However, the last Canada Savings Bonds changed all that. On the first day of the sale of those bonds in my community, one vendor alone sold $1.5 million worth. That should be considered, let alone considering all of the other vendors who sold bonds to a total of $12 billion across Canada. That has robbed the business community of a potential $12 billion borrowing pool which ought to have belonged to it by right. Therefore, the small-business man can no longer go to the private investor and borrow $50,000 or $100,000 because that money has now been lent out to the government. I might add that when the government borrowed that money, it invested in non-productive investments.

Finally, since I have only a few minutes left to speak, I would like to address myself to the Small Business Development Bond and what the government has done to it through this particular budget. In doing so, I would like to read into the record a letter I received from an accountant in my constituency. In the letter, he is pleading with the tax policy and legislation branch of the department of finance on behalf of his clients. He writes:

My client is a company involved in poultry processing in the interior of B.C. As you are probably aware, poultry processing is a very high risk business as evidenced by the present proposed closure of the Panco Poultry plant—

The Panco Poultry plant is in Surrey, British Columbia. The letter states further:

—and by the previous closure of Maplewood Poultry. The Honourable Eugene Whelan has been indirectly involved in assisting the Maplewood Poultry Plant and, I am sure would provide you with any required details about the high risks involved.

Three years ago my client started a very small plant from 'scratch' and has recently been involved in large capital expenditures to increase capacity and employment. A publicly stated goal of the federal government has been to encourage investment in secondary industry (and of course increase employment as a result) in the lesser developed areas of the country. My client's investment expenditures have been until November 12, 1981, a specific example of physically putting into practice the government's highly acclaimed self-laudatory goal.

The client had a large amount of plant expenditures eligible for the SBDB, and, until November 12, 1981, arrangements had been 'substantially concluded' (as had Dome Petroleum) to refinance existing loans originally made for plant expansion so that the burden of record interest rates could be alleviated somewhat by the SBDB.

The only outstanding issue at November 12, 1981, was that the client had not yet decided what total expenditures were still to be incurred before December 31, 1981. Prior to November 12, 1981, because of the nature of the SBDB, it had been decided to wait until the last possible moment before December 31, 1981, to issue a SBDB, so that the precise and maximum amount could be financed under a SBDB. This would result in the maximum relief possible from the interest expense burden.

However, the client's diligent plans have been put to waste by the November 12, 1981, budget. As you can see from the enclosed photocopies the bank has advised that the formula regarding interest expense on the SBDB had changed. Now the client has been advised that the interest expense on SBDB, issued after November 12, 1981, will be 3 per cent higher than for those that had been issued before November 12, 1981. For all practical purposes that reduction 3 per cent spread now makes it no longer attractive for the client to issue SBDB. The net result of the client's diligent planning based on the previously set rules and deadline of December 31, 1981, is that they are penalized by the budget by losing out on an interest expense reduction of an estimated $5,000.00 per year (3 per cent of $169,500.00).

I would respectfully request that the SBDB budget prepared be amended so that it results in no difference in the interest formula charged by banks. Then my client (and other similarly affected Companies) can be treated in the same fashion as those companies who had issued SBDB before November 12, 1981.

The accountant went on to write to the Royal Bank, who was the lender of that bond. He stated:

I am writing to confirm our telephone conversations of November 17 and December 1, 1981. On November 17th you advised that the Company's SBDB application progress was still acceptable as the application was substantially complete before November 17th. On December 1st you advised that the bank's formula had changed because of the federal budget and the result is an effective rate increase of 3 per cent per annum—

As a result of the dramatic change in the cost to the Company, it has been decided to temporarily shelve its plans to obtain a Small Business Development Bond pending any change in government proposals.

That is what the government is doing by providing an insecure and a hostile climate where the government is the major competitor in the lending industry of our country.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON INTRODUCTION OF BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM. (B) REQUEST THAT SURVEY RESULTS BE PUBLISHED

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, this adjournment debate is a follow-up to my question addressed to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on November 19 which can be found in Hansard at page 12920. My question was a specific request for a progress report on a national harmonized beef cattle stabilization program for the calendar year 1981.

The minister knows my views and concerns about Canada's beef cattle industry, which is now in such a serious crisis throughout all of Canada. We have talked about it privately and in committee on various occasions. I advised the minister of the exact subject of my question in advance. It concerned stabilization, but he ignored my question.

He said:

Madam Speaker, the hon. member asks about what kind of plan I was proposing.

The minister went on to brag about his 1977 proposed stabilization program for several agricultural products. The situation four years ago was entirely different from today's cattle crisis. In 1977, our Canadian markets were trying to recover from political manoeuvring, mostly by the American government following that country's price and wage controls and its infamous "Nixon freeze". That was the occasion when United States over-fat steers, some of them weighing as much as 1,800 pounds, were able to be brought into Canada for slaughter and then be re-exported as beef to avoid the Nixon freeze. That was also the period of massive offshore imports from Australia and New Zealand that had unrestricted access to our Canadian markets at give away prices.

When the minister recites this story of his 1977 stabilization plan, which incidentally never came into being for our cattle industry, he should tell the whole story and why that plan could not work then. Now, of course, we have an entirely different and much more critical situation. The biggest difference is that our cattle numbers and supply cycles are at their low points and have been for over four years. Our industry is fast becoming a complex total of balkanized regions as one province after another competes through its own treasury board with each other with various provincial subsidies and top loaded stabilization plans. Surely this is the wrong approach to take.

My original question was on national stabilization. The minister answered by discussing his personal cattle questionnaire. It seems that 140,000 copies of this questionnaire had gone out over his signature, including 53,000 to dairy producers. That sounds like a large number, but the minister and his staff must now know that many beef producers and feeders had never received a copy of this questionnaire.

Our beef cattle associations in Alberta and in Ontario through a recent follow-up survey have found that only one third of Alberta cattlemen and 40 per cent of Ontario cattlemen have received the questionnaire. These are beef cattlemen and not dairy producers. If the minister cannot do a better job than that, he would be well advised to abandon the questionnaire. It is no accident that the wording of the questionnaire was deliberately slanted to answers that favour marketing boards and supply management. Does the minister realize that Alberta's three largest feed lots turn out more fat cattle in one year than all of Quebec, including Quebec's dairy cattle population?

In the meantime, our Canadian-fed cattle market prices have dropped $6 to $7 a hundredweight over the last ten days. The crisis is here now. It is demanding attention now.

The least disruptive approach is to use the federal stabilization legislation with cost sharing by the cattle provinces and cattle producers and feeders themselves. I suggest that it is most unfortunate that the minister has made it rather obvious that he does not intend to act until after the three current cattle investigations have been reported. These three investigations are, first, the Senate Agricultural Committee studies on Alternatives to Beef Marketing; second, the questionnaire I have just mentioned which the minister has sent out and, third, the two-man investigative committee which has finished making its private investigation, throughout western Canada especially, and who are presently writing their report.

I sincerely hope that the minister will realize the situation which Canada's cow-calf, yearling and feeders sectors in the cattle industry are faced with today and does indeed meet with cattle producers, through their associations, to get the cattle stabilization program under way.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), who is not only a fellow member in the House but is also a fellow beef producer, let me say that I can understand his concern in this regard. I fully realize that since 1977 the cowherd in the United States has increased by approximately 6 per cent and the number of replacement heifers are up accordingly, while these numbers have remained quite consistent in Canada since 1977. Therefore, we must move to ensure that the proper programs are implemented to continue the existence of a beef industry in Canada.

One of the reasons that the minister had sent out the 140,000 questionnaires to the beef producers in Canada, which of course included some dairy farmers, was to get background information and the opinion of the producers at the local levels since there was a difference of opinion between various cattle producers' organizations. I am well aware of the fact that not all of the beef producers received these questionnaires. I have received similar complaints in my own constituency, but I did contact the Cattlemen's Association in those two counties and asked them to submit lists of their membership so they would all receive a questionnaire.

In regard to the proposal for stabilization, if we could have a system of nationalized stabilization which was in harmony with each province, I could agree that this may be a proper direction to follow. However, when there are incidents of top loading, as referred to by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, which existed in the hog industry last spring, that proposal is clearly unacceptable and unfair to the individual provinces and producers in those provinces across Canada. Until there is a move in the direction of harmony between the provinces toward stabilization programs, which the minister has attempted in many commodities since 1975, I think perhaps we must look at all the alternatives. It is in this context that we want to make sure that all alternatives are examined, not only that of the Senate committee but that of the two-man committee from which the minister will receive information, and also from the questionnaire.

I should perhaps advise the hon. member that the minister has said that it is not desirable to make the preliminary findings public but only the final tabulation.

With respect to an estimate of the number of questionnaires returned, I think it would be pure guesswork at this point to make any estimates in that regard. I hope the hon. member will bear with us until all alternatives are examined respecting the critical situation we are facing at the present time.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY—APPROVAL OF SALE OF TORONTO HOTEL TO HONG KONG INTERESTS. (B) TIME TAKEN TO ISSUE AGENCY APPROVAL

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, on November 24 I rose in the House to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, (Mr. Gray) about the approval of the sale of the Harbour Castle Hotel, a Campeau property, to a wealthy Hong Kong interest controlled by Mr. Canning Fok. At the same time I asked the minister what the average time to gain approval through FIRA is. He indicated, "At least 50 per cent of the applications are dealt with in three weeks or less." What he neglected to say was how long it takes the other 50 per cent.

According to testimony in committee on May 14, 1981 Mr. Gorse Howarth, commissioner of FIRA, stated that for the rest the record is not so good. He said that the median for the remainder—that is, the average—is at present running at about 150 days. If we consider that to be the average, we can imagine what the lowest possible one is compared with the highest.

I have before me a chart from the latest FIRA annual report. It shows that in 1980-81 there were 62 applications pending on small business cases on which more information was requested by the minister, 166 unresolved applications carried forward from the previous year and 311 applications under assessment at year end. This incredible backlog is familiar to the business community and to the lawyers who are faced with the frustration of shepherding the applications through that national boondoggle. That is why I was concerned about the background of expedient treatment and special consideration given to Mr. Robert Campeau and his organization.

The particular concern on which I focussed on November 24 refers to the swift sale of the Harbour Castle Hotel to Hong Kong interests. It is not an exaggeration to say that eyebrows went up all over this country about the way it was worked through, and it would be interesting to know what significant benefits to Canada were received in the process. I was also concerned about the answer the minister gave on November 24 when he said:

> I can assure my hon. friend that the full process was followed and the decision that was announced about the transaction involved significant benefit for Canada, as stated in the relevant press release.

My immediate question has to do with the minister's statement that the full process was followed. Commissioner Howarth says that sometimes the cabinet is responsible for delays, but it seems clear that there was absolutely no cabinet indecision with regard to Mr. Campeau's hotel deal. It is reported that a couple of strategic telephone-calls were made, which greatly facilitated its passage within a comparatively short period of time. It was done within a few days and no more than 10.

Second, the minister referred me to the press release and suggested there was a significant benefit for Canada. "Significant benefit", of course, are bywords or catch words to justify approval by FIRA—particularly in this case, I would say.

I noticed that the press release in which the minister announced this decision also announced another one to establish a new business at Tillsonburg, Ontario. The press release lists all the significant benefits to Canada on this second decision but not one whit of information regarding the sale of this hotel or any of the supposed benefits which are to accrue to Canada. I might revise that just a little bit, look at the chart appended to that press release and refer to two significant benefits to Canada dealt with thereon. There is "new investment" and "increased resource processing or use of Canadian parts and services". I wonder what incredible increase in use of parts and services there will be as a result of the purchase of that hotel by Mr. Fok.

The question with which we must come to grips is how much longer this kind of obvious favouritism, based on what can only be assumed to be political sympathy, large campaign contributions and other factors, is going to continue? Mr. Campeau is not the only one who benefits from this largesse of the Liberal party establishment, but he has to be one of the most obvious and distressing examples.

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to try to answer the hon. member. As the parliamentary secretary, I have been closely associated, maybe more so than other members, with the personnel of FIRA. I appreciate the way they have tried to be efficient and at the same time just.

Mr. Speaker, the government is often accused of taking too long to process investment proposals submitted for consideration under the Foreign Investment Review Act. The government is obviously very sensitive to such criticism and it has throughout the years developed ways of making the process faster and more efficient. I am happy to say that these methods have been improved, but the question asked by the hon. member is not concerned with this aspect. Apparently, the hon. member is accusing the government of processing certain cases too quickly, which I feel is a compliment to the Foreign Investment Review Agency, and I wish to thank him for giving me an opportunity to discuss the agency in this House. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has always tried to deal with the problem of delays in processing. In 1977, it introduced a procedure for small businesses, which made it possible for foreign investors to submit a less detailed application when a proposal concerned assets of less than $2 million and a business with fewer than 100 employees. Since this change was made, about 60 per cent—not 50 per cent as my colleague said—of investments considered under the act were in this category. The processing time for an investment proposal in the case of a small business is about three weeks. It is clear that other cases which may be more substantial and more complex and may have a considerable impact on the Canadian economy will take longer. But even in such cases, the government has tried to reduce processing time by encouraging investors to discuss their plans informally with the responsible officers, in order to save time and prevent delay.

Mr. Speaker, I would also refer the hon. member to the information document "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980's" which was published at the same time as the budget. In this document, the government again states that it wants the administration of the act to be timely and efficient. The document also mentions that a review of the administrative procedures is under way to establish what changes in these procedures are warranted and should be made on the basis of the experience of the last seven years. Mr. Speaker, the transaction to which the hon. member is referring was made in the best interests of Canada. The agency was informed of the plans before an official application was made and was able to act quickly. The transaction has resulted in a number of important benefits to the Canadian economy.

[English]

As the hon. member stated in his remarks, FIRA has found that this transaction can be judged as one that brings significant benefit to Canadians. Of course, it is impossible to unveil all the information that was made available to FIRA during those negotiations. But the hon. member must understand that the records of FIRA prove that it is a dependable organization and that that decision, as many others, will be for the benefit of all.

PUBLIC WORKS—CONTRACT FOR USE OF CENTENNIAL TOWERS OFFICE BUILDING IN OTTAWA. (B) REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT PROPOSAL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague who spoke before me, I am rather outraged at the special status that Mr. Campeau and his organization appear to enjoy in this country. I am amused to think that this expedient treatment, as described by my hon. friend opposite, is somehow a dramatic improvement in the procedures of FIRA. Actually, it is a remarkable departure. We will see if this kind of treatment is extended to anyone else in the future.

In raising the issue that I brought up on the same day as my colleague as to whether or not Public Works should be dealing with Robert Campeau and his organization yet again with regard to a building owned by that company here in Ottawa, I think it is appropriate to keep in mind that the Department of Public Works inventory of vacant space in Crown-owned buildings as of November 1, 1981, indicates approximately one million square feet of surplus space in the national capital area, and there is a note on the data that indicates there is yet another 1,735 square meters, if we must pay tribute to metric these days, of vacant space in 17 other Crown-owned buildings.

Of course, this is the official Department of Public Works version. Mr. Speaker, we both know that there is likely at least as much vacant space camouflaged by unused desks and empty filing cabinets in many departments such as Statistics Canada, for example. Some of us who are used to that—even hardened political observers of wastes and profligate spending by this government, keeping in mind well-known incidents such as Mirabel, the Consolidated Computer debacle that cost $100 million, and most recently the Bank of Canada over expenditure and the CNR overpayment of $50 million—somehow find it offensive to see what has been happening over the years with Mr. Campeau. He is in a special category. He is in a recurring category. I guess it should not come as a surprise to everyone that Mr. Campeau is getting another sweetheart deal since he has made political influence and back-stage manœuvring an art form. Mr. Campeau's latest attempt to deal through the Liberal Party establishment and around the public service, at the taxpayers' expense, is typical. Whether it is making a mockery of the procedures of FIRA, as just pointed out by the hon. member, with some high level assistance from his friends in order to expedite the sale of his organizations, hotel, or buying back Campeau stock from the public at less than fair value, after receiving benefits once again to inflate it, from the taxpayer, this leech—or perhaps it would be better to say political proctologist of the Liberal Party—has certainly been consistent in his methods for many years. His latest proposal regarding Centennial Towers is yet another manifestation of his penchant for putting his snout into the trough. The fact that this building, like many others he has built, is in poor condition is one factor for concern. Leaving that aside for the moment, I want to ask the government why the long suffering taxpayers, at a time of so-called financial restraint, have to have yet another umpteen thousand square feet for this swollen and bloated bureaucracy and why it must come from Mr. Campeau. Of course, I guess that figures.

A very comprehensive and estimable research project has been carried out by two Ottawa ladies, Helen Deachman and Joy Woolfrey. The article is entitled "Les Terrasses de la Chaudière: How the Liberal, federal government did business for us with the Campeau Corporation". This is an excellent article. It should be required reading for a lot of people in this country. I will certainly do whatever I can to see that it is widely circulated. I only wish that it were possible for me to table it. However, I understand that is not possible. I will certainly send it to a lot of people, including our friends in the United States, where Mr. Campeau's organization is now attempting to establish some in-roads. I believe it will save a lot of grief to a lot of people. We owe that to the Americans. We owe that to them, in a small way, to make up for some of the things that have been going on between the two countries.

This research project took more than a year to complete. It clearly outlines the methods and personalities that were involved and the tremendous rip-off of the Canadian taxpayer. The Department of Public Works, the National Capital Commission, past ministers of public works and several cabinet ministers, past and present, are all indicted. Of course, Mr. Campeau is accurately portrayed, I believe, as having nothing but contempt for any and all of those he is able to manage. I believe it may be said with accuracy that while Mr. Campeau, with the help of his friends, has achieved a considerable amount of financial success, no one could ever seriously maintain that he has achieved any financial respectability.

Instead of dealing with Mr. Campeau in a further shameful way, the federal government ought to initiate a public inquiry into the past wheeling and dealing of this man and his organization, especially with regard to the artful and cynical manoeuvres involved in the project in Hull, the infamous Les Terrasses de la Chaudière, and forget about acquiring any particular space from him or anyone else at a time of alleged budgetary restraint.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not here to try and defend Mr. Campeau and his business but to answer questions on behalf of the Minister of Public Works.

[English]

I should like to respond further to the question raised by the hon. member on November 23 by giving the facts as they are. Public Works Canada and the Department of National Defence have been seeking suitable accommodation for long term consolidation of space requirements for the Department of National Defence and to replace outdated premises which it now occupies in Rockcliffe and in various leased premises scattered throughout the city of Ottawa. In Rockcliffe, National Defence will vacate wartime temporary buildings which are scheduled for demolition. The premises currently rented in the city are of low quality and the leases are expiring.

National Defence asked Public Works Canada to seek space which would allow it to consolidate its services in one building, thereby saving administrative and security costs. The Centennial Towers, a building which has remained vacant since its lease with the federal government expired, fit the space requirements of DND. It is in downtown Ottawa, near other DND buildings, and it is large enough to permit consolidation of various DND branches in one building. Thus, the Department of Public Works entered into lease negotiations with the owner, Campeau Corporation.

Hon. members may recall that the Department of Public Works undertook a few years ago under two successive governments to ease the burden of excess vacant office space in the private sector whenever possible, rather than building itself. We are now in a position to do just that. In lease discussions with Campeau, the Department of Public Works obtained two independent appraisal reports on the value of the property as it now exists. The appraisals were $13.9 million and $16.2 million.

In order that this building can meet current occupancy standards, the owner would have to undertake major renovations to the building fabric, structures and services to raise it to class A office building standards. This would no doubt be a significant expenditure. Apparently Campeau Corporation estimates that after completion of this type of renovations, the building would have a market value of approximately $44 million. Hon. members may be assured that at the moment the lease-purchase of this building is only a proposal. Should this proposal prove to be competitive on the market today, it will be submitted to Treasury Board for approval.

The vacant space at Place du Portage in Hull to which the hon. member referred in his question was in fact assigned some time ago to the Public Archives with Treasury Board approval, and Public Archives officials are now working on detailed requirements for fitting-up this space for occupancy. In conclusion, let me say that again the hon. member is seeking a scandal which does not exist.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

BUDGET'S ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, prior to the November 12 budget the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) implied that, if there was no help for Canadian farmers in the budget, he would resign. The budget just passed in this House provides for approximately $15 per farmer in direct assistance, as a result of the budget. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That this House takes note of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture must therefore be satisfied with this amount of assistance, $15 on average per farmer, or he would have followed through with his previous threat and resigned.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSING

DIRECTIVE SOUGHT ON ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, through the November 12 budget we were given to believe that the Government of Canada was offering assistance to home owners facing mortgage renewal at current interest rates. If their payments exceeded 30 per cent of their total income, home owners would be eligible for interest deferrals up to $3,000. This was proclaimed by the minister of housing and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to be a guarantee to the lending institutions. However, banks and trust companies are not honouring this plan because no direction has been given to them on how the plan will work. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie):

That the government immediately inform all banks and trust companies that this plan is to be implemented forthwith, how it will work and assure them that the guarantee will be honoured so that home owners facing the prospect of losing their homes can be assured that the assistance offered in the Liberal budget will in fact be passed on to them and then they and their families can have Christmas without fear of eviction.

CONGRATULATIONS OF ACTS OF RECOVERY IN EVACUATION OF INDIANS TO SAFETY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Considering the exceptional work done by the Canadian Forces at La Romaine this past weekend, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet):

That this House congratulates unanimously Canada's Armed Forces for their efficiency and their humanism in rescuing one civilian and in evacuating some 160 Montagnais Indians from the lower north shore of Quebec.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Maltais: Madam Speaker, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to tell the House that I have just come back from La Romaine, a village where one of the large Montagnais Indian reserves is located, and I wish to stress the complementary role of the Canadian Forces in providing for the safety of civilians and especially in providing transportation to areas that are literally shut off from our larger urban centres. I also wish to take this opportunity to ask the Department of Transport to give close consideration to the issue of municipal airports in this area, because this past weekend I had to stay two days longer, at the expense of the House of Commons, because it was necessary to rent a helicopter in order to get out. I should also like to congratulate Father Alexis Jovenot, a missionary who has been in La Romaine for 28 years and takes care of the spiritual needs of all the Indians and whites living in this village which is 350 miles east of Sept-Îles. Without the quick thinking of this missionary Father, it would have been impossible to evacuate the Indians. Second, Madam Speaker, I wish to ask the co-operation of the Department of National Health and Welfare, in taking specific action in these areas, because, for instance in St. Augustin, it was impossible to treat a twelve-year-old girl who had been sick with appendicitis for five days. I want to ask the Department of National Health and Welfare to increase its presence in these areas, because we depend on them for medical care. Once again, I wish to congratulate the Canadian Forces, and I want to thank the House for giving me an opportunity to express my views on this subject.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Does the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich want to debate this motion?

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, just one moment, if I may. I would like to join with the hon. member in congratulating the members of the Canadian Armed Forces on their heroic endeavours. I just wish that that same unanimity had been shown yesterday when we were congratulating the Armed Forces with a standing ovation, with one single exception in the person of the Prime Minister, for their heroic rescues off Sable Island.

● (1410)

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I should like to join with the hon. member who moved the motion congratulating the Canadian Armed Forces, and also express our concern from this corner of the House that this kind of rescue undertaking had to be undertaken. There ought to be some measures available to ensure that in the future this is not necessary. However, I cannot allow the comment of the previous speaker who was speaking on behalf of the Conservative Party, to pass. I personally noted that the Prime Minister was not the only member who did not rise, because there were members in the Conservative Party who did not rise either.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? Does the House agree to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES

EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY TARIFF ON CANADIAN FISH EXPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion. In view of the fact that the Canadian fishing industry is facing a potentially disastrous marketing situation, and given the position of other major producing countries such as Denmark, Norway, Iceland, the Faroe Islands and Greenland, that ship fish into the European Economic Community at little or no tariff, while Canada faces a 15 per cent tariff, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That the Canadian government contact officials of the European Economic Community requesting that the tariff on Canadian fish exports to that market be eliminated.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas the federal government has expropriated 90,000 acres in the Mirabel area, of which only 17,000 acres are being used for the airport, and whereas local representatives have joined together to ask the federal government to end its control over the area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That the House require the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) to publish the report of the Canada Lands Company (Mirabel) Limited and to honour the commitment he made in February to sell back all property expropriated in excess to the local people, as soon as possible.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

AUDITOR GENERAL

FINDINGS ON CANADA STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, in the 1981 report of the Auditor General he stated that the Department of Secretary of State had failed previously to remedy reported inadequacies in controls over the Canada Student Loans Program. He added that it is unacceptable that an operation the size of the Canada Student Loans Program should continue to have inadequate control procedures, resulting in defaulted loans of $173 million. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That the Department of Secretary of State immediately undertake to review the Canada Student Loans Program and develop adequate control procedures for its operations and management.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

IMPACT ON REGIONS NOT RECEIVING ASSISTANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I should like to commend the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which has worked to the advantage of a number of developing regions in Canada by giving a stimulus to otherwise slow growth areas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: However, in view of the fact that marginal areas of economic growth which are not supported by DREE feel discriminated against by the fact that many of their normal, local industrial projects are siphoned away by the attraction of DREE's financial support elsewhere, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That this House urge the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to undertake a study to ascertain the scope and significance of the negative impact on those regions not assisted by DREE but because of DREE programs elsewhere lose their potential and are robbed of the opportunity to grow.

CANADA POST

CALL FOR CHANGES IN PROPOSED POSTAL RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, the 60 days for the review of the proposed exorbitant increase in postal rates has expired without any changes being made by the Canada Post Corporation. It is now incumbent upon the Governor in Council to accept or reject the 30-cent rate. Because of the hardship the increases will impose on all Canadians, in particular upon senior citizens, voluntary charitable organizations, and small businesses, at a time of growing economic distress, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That before Parliament adjourns for Christmas the government accepts its responsibility and announces changes in the postal rates to bring them to a more reasonable level, and especially that the Secretary of State takes the necessary action to cushion the shock of these rates to pensioners and charitable organizations, as has been suggested by the president of the postal corporation.

THE BUDGET

SPECULATION ON POSSIBLE CHANGES TO PROVISIONS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. There is speculation that the ongoing saga of change in the minister's ill-fated budget will continue this Friday with some announcement in the House. Would the minister care to confirm that speculation today? Would he comment on the nature of the changes which he is proposing to make? Would he also say whether this would be part of an ongoing series of change that we can expect during the Christmas break?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think, to be brief, the answer to each question is no. As the hon. member knows, I have been involved since the weekend with the provincial finance ministers at a conference, which has interrupted my intensive consideration of the representations that I have been receiving on the budget. Therefore it is not possible for me to indicate today when I may be making any announcements. All I can say, as I said to the Leader of the New Democratic Party last week, is that if I am prepared to do that before the House rises, I will certainly draw it to the attention of the House. But I am not prepared yet to say to the hon. member when that will be possible. When it is possible, I will certainly let him know.

PRE-BUDGET DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, many people in the past month have seriously questioned the competence of the Minister of Finance as a result of the budget which he introduced. There is tremendous opposition to the budget. I think this is apparent in the many representations which have been made to him in the past few weeks. My question relates to the process which the minister used in preparing his budget this year. Why did the minister introduce such a wide-ranging change in tax policy without drawing on the normal sources in the private sector which have been drawn on in the past, before the budget was prepared? Why did he avoid discussing this with an expert in his own caucus, the President of the Treasury Board, particularly when tax officials in the department are not as strong or as experienced as they have been in the past? Why did he follow this process, rather than introducing these wide-ranging changes through a white paper?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it has not been the custom, as the hon. member knows, prior to tax measures being produced in the budget to have the kind of consultation the hon. member mentioned.

Mr. Nielsen: Tell that to Walter Gordon.

Mr. MacEachen: We have had a good deal of comment about the question of budget secrecy. Certainly that convention obviously precluded any meaningful consultation on specific measures prior to budget presentation. It seems to me that that is an issue which Parliament may want to examine as to how it may be possible in the future to alter that convention to have specific consultation before tax measures are introduced. In the past the practice has been to hear representations following the budget presentation and, where justified, to make changes. That has happened frequently in past budgets and it is something that I am quite prepared to contemplate in the present circumstances.

ADVICE GIVEN TO MINISTER

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I would suggest to the minister that he brief himself on the past practices because, in the past, the knowledge of experts in the private sector was drawn upon. I should like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that this was done in this case as well. It appears that the only outside expert who was used in the preparation of this budget was a Professor Neil Brooks of Osgoode Hall. Professor Brooks is a well-known left wing tax adviser who, in the past, has advised the NDP on their tax proposals.

It is becoming more clear every day why the minister defends this budget that has been so misguided—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Sure he does; so does the country.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I do have a question and I hope I get an answer. By ignoring the outside advisers who have assisted in the past, was the minister introducing a distinct shift in the philosophy of the government by relying only on Professor Brooks this time, who clearly has a different point of view from that of many people in this House?

Mr. McDermid: From the majority of people in this House.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that I received no advice from Professor Brooks prior to the budget. I do not know what consultations my officials may have had with various persons. I hope that they did consult a wide group of people, as I did, on general matters. On the face of it I do resent the notion that any particular person with expertise in the field should not be consulted simply because the hon. member might describe him as a left winger. I am told there are some left wingers in the Tory party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

IMPACT OF PROVISIONS ON EMPLOYERS' CONTRIBUTIONS TO HEALTH BENEFIT PROGRAMS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Broadbent: That is the whole left wing!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crombie: I am sure the Minister of Finance is aware that one of the truly socially beneficial developments in the past number of years has been the negotiation of health and welfare benefit plans within collective agreements. This has allowed ordinary working people to gain coverage with respect to long-term disability, health and dental plans, group life insurance and so on. One of the great incentives of these plans has been the fact that employers' contributions have not been taxable. All that has changed in the budget and it has put those plans at risk. I know that the minister has received a number of representations from unions across the country and, indeed, from the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask him when he intends to announce a revision of this aspect of his budget.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, am I justified in concluding that the hon. member is the left wing to which I referred earlier?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Take your choice, but answer the question.

Mr. MacEachen: The answer to the question is that if any revisions are made to any particular aspect of the budget they will be announced in the regular way.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVISE TAX PROVISIONS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, this is no small or laughing matter to lots of people. These plans cover 750,000 men, women and children in this country. They were not negotiated as loopholes. They are not diversions for the rich; they are social programs for working people. I want to know, and they want to know, whether the minister is going to revise his budget and make sure that he keeps faith with these plans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when the hon. member is contemplating the question of social justice he should ask why it is that he would support the proposition that employer contributions in the hands of a particular group of workers should be taxable, and not in the hands of other groups. That is the question of equity which is raised in the budget, concerning which the hon. member has said very little.

● (1425)

Mr. Crombie: They made agreements.

Mr. MacEachen: Maybe justice is not an important part of his approach to social affairs.

NEGOTIATION OF EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, the question is a clear one, and it ought not to be dealt with simply in that casual fashion. These agreements have already been negotiated, and negotiations are coming up again next spring. Union leaders, in their negotiations, will have to determine whether or not they can negotiate those benefit packages again. The minister owes them an explanation so that they can do their job.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, is the hon. member saying that any benefit—

Mr. Nielsen: Never mind the rhetoric. Let's have an answer.

Mr. MacEachen: —which is negotiated should not be taxable? Surely wages and salaries are negotiated, and they are taxable. Why is the hon. member drawing that red herring into the discussion?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ANNOUNCEMENT OF POSSIBLE CHANGES

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, when one's left wing is not working, one tends to fly around in circles a great deal.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What part of the chicken are you?

Mr. Rae: Easy, now! Easy, boys!

My question, which is directed to the Minister of Finance, relates to the speculation about changes in the budget. Over the past couple of weeks the minister has made it clear to the House that he intends to make some changes, and that he intends at least to try to give the House of Commons an opportunity to hear about these changes and to debate them before they are put into effect. Will the minister advise us concerning these changes before Friday and, if not, why not? The implication is that several changes will be taking place throughout the months of December and January when this House will have no opportunity to discuss them.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I answered that question in response to a question put by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre. As soon as I have completed the process of hearing representations, giving consideration to the matter and, indeed, discussing any proposals with my colleagues, I will then make an announcement. If the House is here, I will certainly ensure that changes are drawn to the attention of the House.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, the House will be here, but the question is whether we will all be here or whether the minister will be here. That is the problem. The fact is that he did make a commitment over the last couple of weeks that he would bring these matters before the House, but now he seems to be backing away from the commitment. This is yet another retreat by the minister.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

PROPOSAL TO DROP REVENUE GUARANTEE

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance arising from the meetings which he had with the provincial finance ministers on Monday and Tuesday of this week. In view of the figures which were released today by the Conference Board of Canada which show that growth in every one of the provinces will be down and that unemployment will be up, significantly, in all of the provinces, how can the minister possibly carry on with a plan of dropping the revenue guarantee, which will have the effect of reducing the transfer payments and the possibilities of social investment, not only in one part of the country but in every single province of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is aware that in the proposals I have made to the provinces, I have suggested the dropping of the revenue guarantee. I have also made it clear to the provinces that in no way would the dropping of that particular guarantee have an effect on their capacity to support health services or post-secondary education.

In addition to that, I provided, through the budget, that the loss of the revenue guarantee would be offset to a great extent by revenue flows to the provinces as a result of the tax changes.

Mr. Rae: The minister is carrying on as though the economy were not in a recession. It is unbelievable that the minister would persist in his plans to reduce the over-all federal commitment to social spending and to social investment at a time when we are in a recession which, according to all the figures and indications, is becoming worse.

BANKS AND BANKING

INQUIRY RESPECTING EXCESS PROFITS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Finance and is concerning bank profits. The minister gave statements to the House on June 12, 1980; March 13, 1981; April 9, 1981; May 29, 1981; December 2, 1981; and December 7, 1981, in which he indicated that he was still considering the question of whether or not an excess profits tax would be appropriate. The minister wants to make the banks bleed. It is clear that he intends to gum them to death, and that is the only way in which he is doing it. Does the minister not think the gumming has gone on long enough, and that it is time to take action with respect to excess profits of the banks?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked three questions and has described them as supplementary questions. I wonder how one can ask a supplementary question when one's first question is on tax changes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —one's second question is on fiscal arrangements, and the third question is on bank profits. To what are they supplementary? Are they supplementary to the gumming which this hon. member has been practising as a profession for the last several months?

REFERENDUMS

POSSIBILITY OF CONSULTING QUEBECERS ON DESIRE TO REMAIN CANADIAN

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Following a number of more or less obscure and convoluted statements by the leader of the separatist government in Quebec, concerning the same old, rather unrealistic, question of sovereignty or sovereignty with association, French Canadians living in their formerly "belle" province are now totally confused and they are suffering from acute anxiety and are extremely concerned about their own future and especially their children's. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the federal government intends to consider the possibility of asking the citizens of Quebec, once and for all, and by whatever means, whether or not they, in the free exercise of their democratic rights, wish to separate from the rest of a country as free, as vast, as peaceful and as prosperous as Canada is?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the proposal is, of course, worth considering, but it seems to me that, to a considerable extent, the people of Quebec gave their answer when they replied to an ambiguous question put to them in May, 1980, and the majority made it clear that they did not even want to discuss the possibility of sovereignty associated with something else. We all know that the Parti Québécois did not consider the will of the people of Quebec at that time, and therefore I am not so sure that, if the people of Quebec express their views in the way suggested by the hon. member, these views will be respected any more than they were after the last referendum.

NATIONAL SECURITY

INVESTIGATIONS IN QUEBEC

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It also relates to a situation within the province of Quebec, specifically the whole question of the security service investigations in that province involving the Parti Québécois and Quebec cabinet ministers. A Canadian Press wire story is appearing across the country today in which the Solicitor General of Canada has some statements attributed to him. They are quite short, Madam Speaker. I quote:

—any political information discovered by the RCMP during the course of it—

The word "it" refers to the investigation. The sentence continues:

—will not be passed on to the federal government—

This is reiterated in the final paragraph in this story which reads:

If the RCMP happened to uncover any political secrets, it would not pass them on to the government.

Will the Prime Minister tell this House who will be making that judgment as to whether it is a political secret or not? Will it be the RCMP or will it be a member of the ministry of the federal government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not had the advantage which the hon. member has had of reading the comments of the Solicitor General. I can restate the policy of this government, as I did just a few days ago, and maybe that will satisfy the hon. member. The RCMP have no authority or mandate to investigate political parties as such, neither his party nor mine, nor any other provincial party. When evidence comes to the police that there has been purloining of confidential documents, whether by a political party, by an individual or by the hon. member himself, I think it is their duty to try to stop such practices and ensure respect for the property of the federal government. Therefore, if in doing that, they have to investigate political people, I think they will just do their duty and do so.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, before I address my supplementary question to the Solicitor General, I must say to the Prime Minister that simply because some clerk in the Privy Council office happens to stamp a political document confidential that is not going to stop anyone else, Official Secrets Act or not, from attempting to get something which should be legitimately in the public realm, and that includes the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland as well.

INSTRUCTIONS ISSUED TO SECURITY SERVICE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is for the Solicitor General. What instructions, if any, has he issued to the security service—not just the RCMP in general, but to the security service—which is being utilized in these investigations, to make sure that there are some guidelines, some parameters, or some definition about political information for them to follow?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have not issued any new instructions because the instructions have been long standing. They are as follows. In the course of a legitimate investigation under the mandate of the security service, it often happens, I understand, that unrelated information comes to the attention of the security service. I have indicated that political information of the sort I described in that article is not brought to the attention of the government, and that it is the security service itself which makes that decision.

The recommendation of the McDonald Commission on that subject was precisely that, that the government, and ministers in particular, should not be given that kind of political spill-over information. The McDonald Commission described the existing situation, which is rigorous, and that is the situation that will continue.

It is always inevitable that if a legitimate investigation is being conducted by the security service, spill-over information will be included in it and will come to the attention of the security service. Their responsibility is to act as a screen, and to protect the privacy of individuals and to protect the political secrets and objectives, if you like, of their targets that are not related to the national security. That they have done, and that they will continue to do.

DURATION OF CHRISTMAS RECESS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that there are a great many matters that are of tremendous importance to the country which must be dealt with immediately by Parliament for the country's good, will the Prime Minister advise the House and the country why it is that this House is to be in recess for a full five weeks instead of being recalled on Monday, January 4, to deal as quickly as possible with revisions that are vitally necessary to the budget, and also with the economy which is sliding steadily into recession every day?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat puzzled by the hon. member. He is making a suggestion which contradicts the motion which was supported by his own party and, I believe, by the hon. member himself, to have an agreed adjournment date to January 25. I imagine if the hon. member voted for that, either silently or vociferously, it is because he has plans to go skiing at that time.

REASON FOR LENGTH OF RECESS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Prime Minister that I am not planning to go skiing and, if Parliament is recalled on January 4, I will be here, as I hope he will.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: As the Prime Minister has not made any attempt to give an answer to a very important question, and is quite happy to see Parliament recessed for a full five weeks, when it should be sitting for the last three of those five weeks, will he not admit that the real reason Parliament being recessed until January 25 is the fact that the government is trying to avoid, for as long as possible, the embarrassing questions which the opposition puts to it every day on the worst budget that has been presented to this country for more than 30 years, and on the great harm that is being done to the economy of this country by that simply terrible budget?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member has not forgotten that after the last budget put forth by his party there was a long recess, too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INCOME TAX

THE BUDGET—REVENUE FROM LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Finance. In recent weeks, I have received a number of complaints from constituents regarding budget provisions that affect holders of life insurance policies. Accrued income of life insurance policies is now taxable. Could the minister inform us whether he intends to modify this aspect of the budget, considering that life insurance is more a form of protection than an investment, and that most policyholders are people on low incomes?

● (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question gives me the opportunity to assure him that current policyholders presently in possession of such policies are not affected at all by the tax measures in the budget. The system of accruing taxes will continue for policyholders presently in possession of such policies. This has been a misunderstanding that has been widely conveyed, namely, that somehow the tax treatment of current policyholders would be changed. That is not the intention.

I should add further that I have had consultations with representatives of the insurance industry, and certainly in my discussions with them they have acknowledged the particular effort of the budget to prevent the use of policies for tax avoidance or for tax deferrals. But they have raised the special question of the tax treatment in the future of new whole life policies. I have undertaken with them to continue the discussion, and they have undertaken to provide further information and to make further suggestions. That is the process under which I am operating at the present time.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF TAR SANDS PROJECTS IN ALBERTA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it involves government policy on the tar sands. In light of the fact that Canadianization seems to be at the heart of government policy on energy, and in light of the fact also that the Alberta-Ottawa agreements are at the heart of the new policy, and with respect to those agreements both Mr. Leitch for Alberta and the federal minister of energy here have said there is enough money in the agreements for the oil companies to develop the tar sands, why is the minister now negotiating with Alberta and with the oil companies to give more money to foreign-controlled oil companies to develop those tar sands?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not remember the hon. member or his party supporting the energy policy of the minister, and it is obviously true that some of the corporations on the other side do not support his policy, but in the same way as he has listened to representations from members of that party he is probably now listening to representations from members of the tar sands corporations.

REQUEST THAT ADDITIONAL FUNDS BE PROVIDED FOR CONSERVATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, surely the Prime Minister must understand that he is being inconsistent in policy on this matter. Let me put another question to him that is perhaps more in his realm. The fact is that these projects are now going to cost something like $13 billion a project—$26 billion for Cold Lake and for Alsands—by foreign controlled companies. The government has been sitting on the Energy Alternatives report for months and has done nothing about it. As a matter of government policy would the Prime Minister be prepared to put more money into and more emphasis on alternates and on conservation, especially in light of the fact that we have some evidence now that Canadians are starting to respond and conserve energy? Is he prepared to put more government money and energy into that and perhaps less into the tar sands development by foreign-controlled oil companies?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the oil sands, as the hon. member knows, are a very important part of the reserves on which Canada's energy self-reliance will depend, and it is important that those projects proceed; it is important that they proceed on a basis that would be profitable to the Canadian consumer, making it worth while for the producers in effect to produce that oil. That is the substance of the matter.

The hon. member, as usual with his party, always has suggestions for more spending, but I can assure him that in so far as alternate energy is concerned, and in so far as conservation is concerned, this government has already made those an important part of its policies. Once again the hon. member is in the comfortable position of criticizing everything we do, always ending up by saying we do not do enough of the very thing he is criticizing.

PROVISIONS AFFECTING LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance is supplementary to a question asked by a member of his own party. The minister announced a clear policy that involved the taxation of the accrued income on life insurance policies issued in the future. Is the minister telling the House of Commons that he is now considering pulling back from that policy announced in the budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker. What I have said, in order to clarify the situation, is that insurance coverage presently in effect is not brought under the new tax regime proposed in the budget. What I have said is that I have had representations from the insurance industry which has recognized that the provisions and the practice which existed prior to the budget provided significant opportunities for tax avoidance and deferrals by high income individuals. They were quite prepared to co-operate and to draw a line between that group and those who may be in possession of whole life insurance, and we undertook to further our consideration of that problem, but no decision has been taken as to any alteration at the present time.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, with regard to that clarification, and just to translate it into English, it means that the minister has decided to change part of the policy he announced in the House of Commons but he will not tell the House of Commons what part of the policy he intends to change, or how he intends to change it.

MEDICAL AND DENTAL PROGRAM BENEFITS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I want also to ask the minister a question supplementary to that posed by my colleague, the hon. member for Rosedale. The minister will know that yesterday his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, indicated that the government of Canada has a policy on parking lot benefits. They are not going to be taxed. That is the policy announced by his colleague. Yet the minister, if I understood correctly, indicates that while they have a policy on parking lot benefits they do not have a policy yet as to whether they are going to impose taxes on employee benefits respecting dental care and other health and welfare services which are now part of contracts and which affect, in the construction industry alone, some 450,000 Canadians. Those people might be denied the opportunity to take advantage of medical and dental care programs.

Will the minister tell the House of Commons why in his priorities he puts parking lots ahead of the health and dental care of 450,000 Canadians working in the construction industry?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member has introduced the subject of parking lots. I have never discussed parking lots in the House of Commons, so I do not know what the relevance is. I have stated in the budget the tax treatment of employee benefits, to introduce similar treatment to all employees in the country. That concept of justice does not appear to sit well with the Leader of the Opposition. Well, that is his responsibility.

STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me ask the minister whether the Minister of National Revenue was speaking the policy of the government yesterday when he said the government would not be having its policy apply to parking lot benefits, that it would not be applying to servicemen in respect of flights back to Canada or in relation to other specifics he mentioned in the House of Commons? If the Minister of National Revenue was speaking for the government on that matter, would the Minister of Finance give consideration to allowing the Minister of National Revenue to speak to the question of the health and dental care packages that the minister now proposes to deny to approximately 450,000 Canadians working in the construction trades?

• (1450)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is quite confused about this whole area, which is evident from his questions.

An hon. Member: We heard him say it.

An hon. Member: Read Hansard. He said it.

Mr. MacEachen: There were only two items mentioned in the budget with respect to this particular subject, namely, board and lodging, and transportation passes. No other subject was raised in the budget. All the other items which have been thrown into public debate have arisen from speculation in the newspapers and other media—

An hon. Member: From your colleague, the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. MacEachen: —and from questions raised by the members of the opposition. It has not been raised in the budget. The question of employee discounts has not been raised in the budget. The question of parking lots has not been raised in the budget.

Mr. Epp: Ask Rompkey.

Mr. MacEachen: The question of alleged taxation of clergymen has not been raised in the budget.

An hon. Member: What about dental plans?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, all of these questions have been raised by members of the opposition who are drawing conclusions which are not justified by the budget proposals.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. My question is with regard to the national stabilization plan for beef which the minister has so often repeated is necessary. I am not talking about a supply management program, I am talking about a national stabilization system. Has the minister had communication with the province of Saskatchewan regarding the implementation of national beef stabilization program?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member means when he asks if I have had communication with the province of Saskatchewan. I have an office in Regina and we are in communication with them every day. I do not know how long back he wants to go, whether it is the full eight years I have had the office there, or not.

Yes, we had communication as late as a week ago today when the minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan was here. I am sure the hon. member knows that they have initiated a provincial program. They, too, want some kind of national program, but they want it their own way. We proposed in 1977 a 100 per cent income insurance program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Whelan: They do not want to hear about that, Madam Speaker, because they say that we did not offer them anything. We offered them a plan that guaranteed 100 per cent of the cost of production. They turned it down in Saskatchewan.

INQUIRY RESPECTING CONSULTATION WITH SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture can answer my supplementary question with a yes or no. Has the minister consulted with the province of Saskatchewan within the last two to three weeks in order to implement a national beef stabilization program and, if so, has Saskatchewan agreed to accept the proposal?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that we have sent out 142,000 letters to beef producers in Canada. They are still coming in by the thousand. We have not put them through the computer to see what the response is. The agriculture committee in the other place has just finished hearings. Senator Hays, the chairman, will be making recommendations. I have a two-person committee who has studied all the reports on beef marketing, etc. It will be sending in a report. As soon as all that is finished, we will be presenting a report to the Parliament and people of Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—HOLDING OF DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister is aware of the unanimous report tabled by the 15-member sub-committee yesterday on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean. In that report they approached the important question of elections in El Salvador from the fundamental perspective of human rights, stressing that in the present circumstances of "murders, tortures and disappearances" the circumstances are not right for democratic elections. Does the minister now agree that the unanimous recommendation contained in this report that there first should be negotiations between the parties involved in the conflict, then a supervised cease-fire, and finally an internationally supervised election, should be the order of priority?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the report of the committee is one of great interest to members of the House and to government. I admire the idealism of the members of the committee.

An hon. Member: It is called democracy.

Mr. MacGuigan: In many ways, we share that idealism. However, the situation with which we are confronted is not whether we approve of something which another government might do, or whether we do not. The government of El Salvador has already called elections for a certain date, so the hypothetical situation which the members of the committee have set up, which would reflect the ideal, is not the one which we face in reality. Therefore, we have to make a decision in the real world as to what we will do in response to this situation.

We have continually said that we favour a political settlement and negotiations among the parties. We have even offered to make our territory available for such negotiations. We will continue to pursue that line. We will do our best to influence El Salvador and the rebel forces, both of whom I will be meeting shortly, in the direction of a peacefully negotiated settlement. It is not for us to interfere in the internal affairs of another country and to determine the manner in which one of their election campaigns will be run. We can give advice, and we will.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ATTEMPT TO PROMOTE NEGOTIATED SETTLEMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister says that it is not for the Government of Canada to approve. I point out to him that several times in this House in the past that he has given approval for elections at this time. Therefore I ask the minister, following the unanimous report from members of all parties, and the lead given by the Presidents of both France and Mexico, as well as the 632 to 43 vote by the Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference saying that elections now would be totally inappropriate, will the minister offer assurances to the House that he will make a determined effort to obtain a negotiated settlement between the two parties involved in this conflict, and then set the stage for democratic elections?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member cites the authorities which he thinks he has. I do not know why he does not look at the vote of the Organization of American States.

An hon. Member: Almost all of which are dictatorships.

Mr. MacGuigan: Only last week they voted 22 to 3 in favour of the election to be held in El Salvador. My comments to which he refers were made at an earlier time when conditions of the election were still to be determined, and we had hopes that more of the usual guarantees would be present. Subsequently we endeavoured to ensure that they would be present by proposing that negotiations take place between the parties. We will do our best to influence the parties in El Salvador in that direction.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER SUBSIDY FOR MILK PRODUCERS WILL BE MAINTAINED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The minister is no doubt aware of the concern among dairy producers, and of the possibly harmful effects, both for the consumer and for the producer, if milk subsidies are not maintained. In the circumstances, could the minister inform the House today whether he can give the dairy industry the assurance that the subsidy program will remain the same as it has been for a long time? I feel that the dairy industry needs a reply by December 31.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows as well as I do that the dairy review is still under way. By his wish to see the program continued, the hon. member shows that he agrees that the dairy program has been a very good one. I am not in a position to tell him, or anyone else, what will be the new program. I can only tell the hon. member that we will make sure that it is a very good program for the dairy farmers of Canada. They want a good program and we want a good program.

Point of Order—Mr. Clark

INQUIRY WHETHER FIVE-YEAR AGREEMENT WILL BE SIGNED AND WHETHER $2.66 SUBSIDY WILL BE MAINTAINED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, the minister may wish to reassure dairy producers, but he is certainly not doing so with the kind of answers he is giving today. The minister knows perfectly well that the Dairy Producers' Federation has to have his signature on the five-year plan. Can the minister inform us today whether he will sign the five-year plan by December 31, and also, can he inform us whether he has personally recommended that the subsidy be maintained at $2.66 per hundredweight?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, it is not a problem with us signing. At the present time it is a problem of getting all the provinces to sign that agreement. Some provinces have a concern about increasing their production for the domestic needs in their area of jurisdiction. They have not all agreed to sign that. That suggestion has been made to them. We have no problem with it. It does not necessarily have to be signed to continue on with the program. Some changes have been made by the majority of the producers and the provincial governments across Canada. The dairy commission has been negotiating that with the provinces. I met with one of the dairy commissioners last week. I believe there are two or three provinces that have not yet signed because they have certain reservations about parts of the agreement. I remind the hon. member that we have the best dairy policy in the whole world, and he knows that.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. CLARK—REQUEST THAT MR. OUELLET RETRACT HIS STATEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to draw to the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) an inaccuracy in a statement he made to the House which I am sure he offered to us involuntarily and will want to retract in accordance with your ruling yesterday. In relation to urea formaldehyde foam, the minister said yesterday and I quote:

[Translation]

... the quality of this product was first questioned under a Conservative government. Nevertheless, the Conservatives did not ban the product while they were in power ...

[English]

The minister knows very well that on August 4, 1978, Dr. Richard Viau, acting head of the chemical and fire safety program of the minister's department, issued a warning to Canadians through the medium of the public press about the dangers connected with UFFI. Now that this has been drawn to his attention and now that I am prepared to indicate that I believe his misrepresentation to the House yesterday was not intentional, will the minister take the opportunity to set the record straight?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the argument of the Leader of the Opposition is based on an interpretation of the comments made by Dr. Viau. He is quoting a journalist, who, according to Dr. Viau himself, had misquoted him. As for my statement of yesterday that the Progressive Conservative government had an opportunity to deal with this product when it was in power, I may remind the Leader of the Opposition that on November 18, 1979, on a television program called Market Place, the commentator, Mr. Paul, who was discussing problems caused by UFFI, said the following, and I quote:

[English]

With Dr. Anderson's concern in mind and the victim's concerns in mind, I went to Ottawa this week and showed our report to two federal ministers, the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—

Today the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence).

—who said that because the foam is mixed on site it falls under the municipal and provincial jurisdictions for control of licensing and installation. Secondly, I went to the Minister of National Health and Welfare—

Today the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie).

—who said, responding to the request and the questions of the commentator, he had a suggestion. If you think you have a problem, first see your doctor. Then let his ministry know about it.

That is what two ministers of the then Prime Minister did.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Order, please! In my opinion this is not a point of order. I thought the minister wanted to set the record straight, and that is why I gave him the floor, but this is, in fact, a debate.

[English]

MR. WENMAN—REQUEST THAT PETITION BE READ AND REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to your acknowledgement that the petitions were in order. I would ask that the petition I submitted yesterday be read.

Madam Speaker: I am sure the hon. member knows he needs unanimous consent for the petition to be read. Does the House agree that this petition be read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Wenman: Under the provisions of Section 695 of Beauchesne's, I would ask that the petition be referred to the committee on rules and procedure.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is asking me to proceed to stage two of a procedure when stage one has been refused by the House. If we are to proceed logically, it is difficult for me when directing the debates in the House to proceed to the second stage. I do not even feel I can ask the House if it will give its consent to stage two. Since the petition has not been read, I do not see how it can be referred to a committee or even how the House can be asked to refer it to a committee.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, since it has been received and found to be in order, I say you can refer the subject matter to the committee should you so wish or should the House so wish. Further on the point of order I wish to quote Beauchesne's Citation 698(2) which reads:

Petitions affecting the House will at once be taken into consideration in accordance with parliamentary usage in all cases of privilege.

The petition yesterday in fact referred to the privilege of reading petitions in the House of Commons. It relates to my privilege directly. Therefore, under that provision I ask that this matter be now taken into consideration.

Madam Speaker: I have had occasion to tell the hon. member what the procedure is concerning petitions. These are the usages and customs of this House. A petition can only be read if the House gives its unanimous consent for the petition to be read. The hon. member has not received that unanimous consent. He would now like me to proceed to stage two which allows that once a petition has been read, it might be referred to a committee or dealt with in another fashion, again with the unanimous consent of the House.

The petition has not been read because the hon. member has not received unanimous consent. I am afraid that ends the procedures which the hon. member can invoke in order to have his petition dealt with, except in the usual way when it is presented to the House, registered, and recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, the citation I am referring to now does not refer to whether the petition is read, received, or any other matter. It refers to a petition that has now been received by the House of Commons. It says that when that petition has been received, as it has been received, and when it is examined by yourself and, in fact, you find that it does involve a case of privilege, my personal privilege to read it, then in fact it should be taken into account. It is a different procedure which I have not previously brought to your attention. It is isolated from the other two. I would therefore ask Your Honour to rule on the basis of Citation 698(2).

Madam Speaker: I did rule on that previously at the request of the hon. member. Petitions in the House are dealt with subject to the usages and practices of the House. The discretion to which the hon. member refers has never been resorted to except by unanimous consent of the House.

If the hon. member is asking me to change this custom and usage in the House, I say to him that I will not change it unless a discussion takes place between the leaders of the parties in the House and they include that new practice in the usages of the House. The petition has been received but not read because the hon. member has not received unanimous consent for that. I repeat, it has been received. I said that it conforms as to form, as to what is required to present a petition, but I am afraid that ends the procedures which the hon. member can invoke at this time.

PETITIONS

MR. GILCHRIST—PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I have a duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, which is signed by 642 concerned citizens of Scarborough East, is to protest in the strongest possible way the 76½ per cent increase in postal rates from 17 cents to 30 cents which is said to be forthcoming immediately when there is absolutely no improvement in postal delivery, nor of any guarantee of continuity of postal service against strike action offered by the Post Office.

The nature of the petition is to demand that the postal rate increase be put off until the aforementioned conditions have been met and greater postal efficiency is achieved by the new Crown corporation. If the need for an increase is proven, then the rate increase should be much lower than 13 cents. It is hoped, in your examination of their petition, Madam Speaker, that you will find it in order and that you will understand and sympathize with the concern of the petitioners for the grievous distress caused by the much too large increase, which will add to the already intolerable cost of living increase being borne today by all Canadian citizens, especially senior citizens. I personally applaud their initiative in bringing this important matter to Parliament's attention.

MR. DANTZER—PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATE

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): I also have a petition, signed by 152 residents of Enderby, British Columbia. It is to indicate to the government that the proposed postal rate increase is outrageous and it will affect most low-income families and those on fixed incomes. The nature of the petition is to register with the government the concern of these citizens and to demand rejection of the proposed increase.

MR. WENMAN—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): I have the duty and responsibility to present more petitions on behalf of 414 constituents. The nature of this petition is to protest against the high interest rate policy of the government. It is especially burdensome to home owners and those on low and fixed incomes. The purpose of this petition is to demand changes to the policy so that home-owning citizens get the equitable treatment they deserve. They ask that interest rates be reduced and that either mortgage interest rates be made a tax deduction or that limits be placed on mortgage interest increases upon renewal. Their concern about this matter remains unabated, Madam Speaker, because nothing has been done by this irresponsible government to protect and uphold the basic right of home ownership for Canadian citizens and to alleviate this despicable situation. The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The matter of presenting a petition should not be the occasion to make a speech on the subject. The only thing that hon. members can do is to tell the House what the subject matter of the petition is and to make a statement as to the subject matter of the petition, and that is all. Members are really abusing the amount of time they are allowed to take in presenting petitions.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, I was just getting to the portion of the petition that prays or hopes. These petitioners hope that in the Chair's examination of their petition, you will find it in order, will heed the urgency and desperation of their plea and will use the discretionary powers vested in your office, Madam Speaker, to allow discussion and referral to a committee at the earliest possible moment.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MEASURE TO ABOLISH WRITS OF ASSISTANCE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-645, to abolish writs of assistance.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, writs of assistance are extraordinary powers which have been given for life to certain officers of both the RCMP and the Department of National Revenue under four federal statutes: the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act, the Customs Act and the Excise Tax Act. This bill will not only abolish the authority for the issuance of writs of assistance, but it will also abolish the use of writs of assistance.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary for the seventh time what is holding up question No. 2035 and question No. 2519, which are now some nine and eleven months old. The Parliamentary Secretary has assured me on half a dozen occasions that he would take notice of my representation and make inquiries, but he has never been able to give me any of the results of his inquiries. Will the Parliamentary Secretary tell me if they are held up in the Department of National Defence, the Department of Transport or at the Privy Council office?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I have made inquiries as a result of previous representations. I will continue to make further inquiries and hopefully I will be able to provide an answer to the hon. member before too long.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) when he intends to answer question No. 2410 which has been on the Order Paper since April of this past year, which is a period of some eight months, and especially in light of the fact that it was a question directed toward administration within the Department of Agriculture and on which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in today's Ottawa Citizen is making comment by specifically naming me, talking about the questions that I asked and giving excuses, such as last summer's recess, as part of the reason the answer is not being given. All hon. members know that when we returned to the House this fall there was a long list of answers to questions on the Order Paper because of the summer recess. I want to know from the Parliamentary Secretary when that question will be answered.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will look into the matter and see what I can do to expedite the answer to that question.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO INCREASE MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF LOANS

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 15, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix) that Bill C-84, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in speaking to the bill that is before the House today, let me begin by paying tribute to my colleague, the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) for leading off the debate for our party and for doing an excellent job of outlining the position of our party in support of this legislation. Let me also share this with the House, that in the short period of time he has been in the chamber his speeches have always made good reading and have always made good sense.

As the majority of hon. members are aware, the amendment will increase the maximum of all loans which may be guaranteed during the two-year period ending June 30, 1982, from $850 million to $1.5 billion. This is an increase of some $650 million on the ceiling which may be guaranteed by the Government of Canada.

Small business plays a vital and essential role in the economic, social and community lives of all Canadians. I should like to share some facts about the small business sector with the chamber in support of the significant role it plays and the significant contribution it makes to the economic wellbeing of Canada. Over 95 per cent of all business is small business. Small business provide jobs for close to 60 per cent of the work force. Two-thirds of all new jobs are created by small business. Small business contributes over 30 per cent to the gross national product. Small business is the largest employer outside government. Agriculture is a renewable resource and is Alberta's number one industry. It is comprised almost totally of small businesses. Small business develops more new products and services, builds more new outlying communities, replaces more imports and generates more exports than any other segment of the economy. The important goal of small business is obvious, but let me review how the Liberal government reacted to this sector.

It has always been my belief that if business were given the opportunity to expand and flourish the way it should, we would have a thriving economy. I have always believed that business was founded on the idea of private enterprise, that if one built a better mousetrap, the world beat a path to one's door. But if one builds a better mousetrap today, the government comes along with a better mouse. There is no better example of that than the recent budget which was tabled in the House on November 12 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). I will have more to say about the budget shortly, but first I wish to review some more important aspects of the small business sector and the vital role it plays in our social wellbeing. Small business provides more funding and volunteer public service than any other source. It fills the needs of all persons, whether they be residents or visitors. Small business is independent and self-supporting. For every new enterprise in the community, the spin-off benefits create additional new enterprise. Small business provides the greatest source of improved skills training, more than any other segment of the business world. It unites the spirit of every community, providing a common bond to all residents. The majority of revenue produced by small business is recycled within its own trading area. Small business is responsible for the creation of more competition than any other source. It provides the greatest opportunity for innovation. Small business is truly big business.

It appears that there is a wave of contempt, almost hatred born of ignorance, for the free enterprise system of today; a system sparkplugged by the hope of economic reward which has lifted more burdens from the backs of those who toil than any other system the world has known. Some people today would curtail private property rights; others declare that the word "profits" is synonymous with evil. Both groups have forgotten that profits, property and freedom are inseparable and that one cannot have the third unless one has the first two.

It takes a special type of person to become involved in the business sector. He or she faces no regular paycheque or any possibility of ever collecting unemployment insurance. Yet, hundreds of thousands of Canadian men and women are there by choice. They are the small, independent operators who have relinquished most of society's security blankets to take a fling at making it on their own. At times the rewards can be great, but most likely the average business operator does no better working for himself than he would as an employee of someone else, despite the risks he takes. As we know, small business is the backbone of the Canadian way of life. Because of this we as legislators have an obligation to foster a climate which encourages the small business sector. The present Liberal government has fostered a trend whereby the public sector has been playing an ever-increasing role in society. The truth of the matter is that the government violated the principles of the free enterprise system and then blamed the system for its failure. At a time when restraint was required, the government printed more money. When economic restraint was required, it bragged about the country's wellbeing and encouraged "the good life". Now we are paying for these mistakes. We face high unemployment, thanks to the present government not to the free enterprise system. Today we need decision and action, but we are faced with indecision. The government is hoping that the American recovery will pull us out of our economic recession; it hopes that some of their positive responses will spill over into Canada.

We in this party look forward to an over-all policy and economic guidance. We find that hon. members opposite can only talk about economic diversification, but they have no over-all program by which this can be achieved. The government has not stated its policies and does not know the economic consequences of its actions. I feel Canadians wish to get back to basics. They do not expect something for nothing. Indeed, the history of this great nation has shown this to be true. But what they want and expect from government is leadership and guidance.

At this time I think it is noteworthy to review the record of hon. members opposite. Let us consider for a moment what they have done over the last number of years. They have given us record inflation, record unemployment, record trade deficits, record budgetary deficits, record interest rates, record mortgage rates and record high prices. They have contributed to a situation wherein Canada has the highest level of foreign borrowing of any western nation. This is contrary to what they campaigned on during the 1980 election. I should like to review for the record what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in Toronto on January 12, 1980. He indicated that members of the Liberal Party would not simply stand by and let the recession come, that they would fight it and overcome it. He also indicated that they had an economic program for the 1980s which would enhance dignity, create opportunity and provide security.

Let me review what has happened. Economic growth in 1980 was only 0.1 per cent, the worst in 26 years. Productivity fell by 1.5 per cent last year. Inflation has skyrocketed since the Liberals came into power and now stands at 12.4 per cent, the highest level in six years. Housing starts fell to their lowest level in 13 years. Statistics Canada reports that the economy went from bad to worse since the summer and that the deteriorating trend seems to be intensifying. This was indicated in the monthly review. The report also indicated that demand for retail goods and housing, which began to slip in early summer, "will likely be further depressed as employment fell sharply in September and October and as interest rates remained near record levels." It went on to say that the weak national economy has lowered business investment in machinery and equipment. This is the result of destructive Liberal policies, Mr. Speaker.

I sympathize with the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe). He is living in a policy vacuum. The small business community is slowly becoming aware that he is offering nothing more than lip service. I do not blame the minister himself. I blame the government and the Prime Minister for creating a lame duck department which does not have the power or the right to deal directly with the problems and potential solutions of the small business community.

The budget appears to have been influenced by three beliefs. The first belief is that for a private citizen to make money is sinful; the second belief is that there is one law to restrict the governed and another much less restrictive law for the government itself; and the third belief is that governments may increase the tax burden upon the population without limit and without hindrance.

To illustrate this I should like to quote from a paper which was sent to all members of this chamber by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. The paper includes a letter addressed to the Minister of Finance, which begins as follows:

> The tax measures in your November 12 budget are causing and will continue to cause serious damage to the economy and the small business community.

It goes on to say that the proposals of the Minister of Finance are more pervasive and that this time there is no opportunity provided for public input. That is exactly what we on this side of the House are asking for. We want the public to have an opportunity to participate in policy discussions since the budget entails in excess of 160 changes to the Income Tax Act.

The paper contends that the budget will close off access to the risk capital markets for new small business ventures and high growth medium sized enterprises which are the major source of new jobs; it will restrict the cash flow for businesses facing excruciating pressures by financing capital expenditures at high interest rates, and it will also increase the tax burden on investors in small corporations.

In addition, the government has gutted the Small Business Development Bond program, which was advocated by this party when it was in government so that the small business sector could further expand and develop. The government has made it more or less a bail-out bond, as the hon. member for Cambridge suggested yesterday, rather than a development bond; it has increased taxes on the small business sector; it has reduced by half the capital cost reduction; it has destroyed most possibilities of employee stock ownership, and it has limited the provisions whereby one could deduct interest for business purposes.

If this government truly wanted to do something for the small business sector which would be considered constructive not only by that sector but by all areas of our community in Canada, it would reduce the record high rates of interest and the high rate of inflation. More important, it would offer Canadians an efficient postal service. The small business sector relies on this very heavily for its cash flow.

The record of the government speaks for itself, Mr. Speaker. If we compare the bankruptcies in November of this year with those that occurred in November last year, we find they have increased by some 50 per cent. If we compare the first nine months of 1981 to the first nine months of 1979, we see that in the primary sectors bankruptcies have increased by 108 per cent and that in the farming sector bankruptcies have increased by 133 per cent.

When a certain small town was having its annual charity drive, the chairman for that year went to a leading citizen of the town to solicit a contribution. He said that the record indicated the citizen had never contributed to the charity although he had an income of some $90,000 per year. The citizen replied as follows: "Do your records also show that my widowed sister with four children has no means of support? Do they show that my brother who was wounded in World War I is totally disabled? Do they show that I have an aged mother who is unable to provide for herself?" The canvasser replied that the records did not show this information, and the citizen said, "Well, I don't do anything for them so why should I do anything for you?" That is exactly what the Minister of Finance is saying to the small business community of this country, Mr. Speaker. He is saying, "I am not doing anything for Canada so why should I do something for your sector?"

If we want the small business sector to survive in our society—and I am sure we all do—then the federal government must take immediate action. The small business community is what the free enterprise system is all about; it is what this country was built upon and it is the base upon which this country will prosper.

My concern regarding the problems of the small business sector is so genuine that I hope the seriousness of those problems can be dealt with by the government. The small business sector cannot wait any longer; it has waited long enough. I am not talking about government intervention but about governments fostering a productive climate for the small business sector.

It cannot be denied that public opinion has been moulded into an anti-capitalist mentality. John Kenneth Galbraith who, in my opinion, is living proof that economics is an inexact science, has written a book entitled "Economics and the Public Purpose". He has researched the market arrangements of our economy and says it has given us inadequate housing, a terrible mass transit, poor health care and a host of other miseries. Mr. Galbraith comes out from behind the white cloak of liberalism and openly proclaims that the only answer to our problems is socialism. He deals in fairy tales just as do our Liberal friends opposite.

Under this system of ours, in the early 1900s the majority of the people in this country lived below what we consider to be the poverty line. Two-thirds lived in sub-standard housing. Today, both figures are less than 10 per cent. Ninety-five per cent of the people in Canada have a daily minimum intake of nutrients essential to maintain health, 99 per cent of Canadian homes have gas or electric kitchen appliances, and 96 per cent of the homes have TV sets. Thousands of automobiles and trucks are owned by Canadians. Some people will point out that this is evidence of our materialism; but we have been the most generous of people. We have shared our wealth widely. We support with voluntary contributions churches, libraries, symphonies, operas and non-profit theatres.

If Mr. Galbraith is right and socialism is the answer, we do not have to theorize about it; we have a concrete example we can look at for comparison. We can be just like that great nation, Russia, rich in natural resources, with millions of capable people and 60 uninterrupted years in which to fully implement socialism in their nation.

As I say, we could be like them, but it will require just a little doing. We would have to cut our paycheques by 75 per cent, move thousands of our workers back to the farm, abandon two-thirds of our steel-making capacity, destroy thousands of TV sets, tear up miles of highway, junk 19 out of 20 automobiles, tear up miles of our railway tracks and demolish 70 per cent of our houses.

Mr. Gustafson: They don't produce enough food to feed themselves.

Mr. Elzinga: Then we would only have to find a capitalist country which would sell us wheat on credit so that we would not starve.

In my brief presentation, I attempted, more or less to outline my philosophy concerning what should be done for the small business sector. However, let me just state once again in closing that we do support the intent of this legislation. We on this side hope that our Liberal friends opposite would take a more constructive and positive approach in dealing with the small business sector in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bruce Lonsdale (Timiskaming): I thank Your Honour for the opportunity to speak on the amendments to this bill. I believe these amendments are of fundamental importance to small business in Canada. To date, there have been over 91,000 applications for loans under this program which was introduced in 1961. That has provided much help for small business and many jobs for Canadians. However, the more important numbers are those which show the increasing demand in the last year alone. In response to these demands, there has been an increase of 48.6 per cent in the demand for loans and funding under this program. Indeed, in the last three years since 1977, there has been an increase in demand for these funds in the neighbourhood of 400 per cent. This indicates that the program is very popular with the businessmen and business women of Canada.

Since 1961, the government has loaned out $1.8 billion under the Small Businesses Loans Act, a program which has been administered with less than six or seven staff members in the Department of Small Businesses and Tourism. It is a remarkable record for the administrative procedure of any government, and perhaps of any department in this government, that less than seven people have administered all those funds since 1961. I think it is a remarkable tribute to the program's operation, the simplicity under which it was established, and the structure which allows small-business men easy access to this kind of insurance.

We hear criticism from many quarters that the government is giving these guarantees but that it is not doing enough for the small-business men. However, we should look at where those guaranteed funds under the Small Business Loans Act went in 1980 alone. Forty-seven per cent of the guaranteed funds went to the service industry and 25 per cent of the funding went to assist small-business men in the retail trade. Twelve per cent went to the energy sector; nine per cent went to the transportation sector; ten per cent went to the communications sector of small business; and a total of five per cent went to wholesale trade and construction. One will see, considering the funds administered in 1980 alone, that there was a wide dispersement of assistance, protection and guarantees for loans across the small business sector.

Where did the benefit of this funding go, and how did it assist small business? About 58 per cent went to the purchase of movable equipment, equipment which these small businessmen were able to use. That loan, as it spread through the economy, generated a tremendous amount of work, a tremendous amount of jobs, and a great deal of buying power which assisted small businesses that were not even included under the small business loans provisions. There were improvements and modernization of plants, equipment and premises, including construction and the purchases of premises for modernization purposes, in the neighbourhood of 29 per cent. Eleven per cent went toward the purchase of fixed equipment, and approximately 1.8 per cent went toward the purchase of land.

Since 1961 when this program was introduced, the default has been less than one hundredth of one per cent. The government had to pay $9.7 million in defaults as a result of guarantees that it gave under the Small Businesses Loans Act.

That is a remarkable tribute to the Canadian government in that it had sufficient confidence in our Canadian businessmen to know that they would take out responsible loans which they would be able to repay, and that they could manage their businesses to the extent that the government's guarantees would never be called by the banks. Less than one hundredth of one per cent of loans guaranteed by the government were actually in default. Until December 31, 1980, the government only had to come forward with $9.7 million to repay loan guarantees. Therefore, I want to say that that is certainly a remarkable tribute to the foresight of the government, but it is an even more remarkable tribute to the management, skills, productivity and incentives of small business in this country.

We have spoken about the recent budget and what it has done for small business in this country. We have heard a great deal of criticism to the effect that the budget has not done anything for small business. I want to speak about the Small Business Development Bond program itself.

The Small Business Development Bond program has continually been extended. First of all, it was introduced and was to close out on March 31, 1980. That time was extended to December 31, 1981. In November, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) introduced his budget which included an extension of the Small Business Development Bond program for another full year. In essence, the government has responded to those needs.

However, let us look at some of the things in the budget and what has been done. The small business deduction, the annual limit on income qualifying for the special low tax rate for small business corporations, will be raised from $150,000 to $200,000, and the cumulative limit will be raised from $750,000 to $1 million. To target the benefits of this incentive to the growing small businesses, corporations will no longer be able to maintain their eligibility of this benefit by paying out dividends. That provision has been extended to a point where one could accumulate up to $1 million in income, and the annual limit is up to $200,000. That will provide $50 million in assistance to small business in this country.

The other item about which we spoke was the two-year extension of the corporate surtax which will now apply to corporate income which qualifies for the low small business tax rate. We have now increased the limit to $200,000 and the cumulative limit has been increased to $1 million. Those small businesses will now be eligible for the low tax rates for another two years, which will contribute over $100 million in tax savings to small-business men over a period of two years. This will enable approximately 175,000 corporations to qualify for the lower tax rate.

Therefore, there are certainly some significant and major incentives in the budget which will assist small businesses. Indeed, the structural change in the federal sales tax provisions will mean that tax will be applied at the point at which goods are sold for retail rather than at the manufacturer's level. The change will take effect on July 1, 1982, and the tax rate will be reduced from 9 per cent to 8 per cent to keep the revenue yield unchanged. What does that mean? What is the impact of that change?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lonsdale: I notice that the hon. member for—

Mr. McDermid: Brampton-Georgetown!

Mr. Lonsdale: —Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) laughs at that. However, one further, important advantage of that switch is that wholesalers will be able to apply their inventory of goods without the payment of the sales tax. It is estimated that this will lower their inventory financing. We have spoken about inventory financing and the tremendous costs of interest rates to inventory financing. It is estimated that inventory financing requirements will be lowered by as much as $400 million. I think that is a considerable and important incentive which will lend assistance to the small-business men who are trying to maintain a reasonable inventory control at a cost they can continue to finance.

One talks about flexibility in government and how the government responds. I have just given three examples showing how the government has responded to the interests of small-business men in this country. However, let us look precisely at the Small Businesses Loans Act which was introduced in 1961. Since then, there have been five significant changes in that legislation to respond to the needs, requests and demands of the small business community in this country. Since 1961, there have been a number of changes to the legislation, of which the most significant are as follows: In 1974, first of all, the maximum loan amount outstanding to any one borrower was increased from $25,000 to $50,000, and a small business was defined as one with a gross revenue of less than $1 million. Again, in 1977, the legislation was amended so that the total amount permitted to be outstanding by the borrower was increased from $25,000 to $75,000, and the size of an eligible business was increased to $1.5 million in gross revenue. Again, on February 8, 1978, the interest rate formula was changed to permit a lender to charge a maximum of a bank prime plus one per cent, and the rate was permitted to float with the prime rate for the term of the loan. However, this time the criteria defining eligible businesses was widened even further to include the real estate business, which was booming, and the insurance agents and brokers. Again, in 1978, the administrative responsibility for the act was transferred from the Department of Finance to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, so the board could be more closely attached and attuned to the business community. That was a significant move in 1978. Again, on July 1, 1980, the maximum total outstanding available to a borrower was increased from $750,000 to $1 million. I do not think I have ever seen such flexibility on the part of the government. Nor have I ever seen a mechanism whereby the government actually responded to the small business needs and concerns as it does with the Small Businesses Loans Act.

We are making recommendations today to allow the Small Businesses Loans Act to raise the loan ceiling so there will be adequate funding over the next year and a half.

I think it is important to get on with this bill so we can allow our small-business men access to the kind of funding they require. What we have to do now is to stop the shallow criticism of this important legislation, legislation which has contributed $1.8 billion in small business loans assistance to the small business community in this country. It would be much more helpful to the government if members opposite would look at the positive things which the government has been doing for small businessmen, not only in the area of the Small Businesses Loans Act but also in the area of the $550 million worth of incentives outlined in the November 12 budget. These incentives will ease the tax burden on small business corporations across this country.

Bill C-84 is the first step of many steps that have been taken in the past in the small business financing review program and it is now being reviewed by the federal cabinet. We hope to have that review in the very near future so that we can provide even more incentives and assistance to the small business community in Canada. If we do not approve this bill today, the spin-offs needed in other manufacturing sectors will not occur in the next six months. It is important that we continue to have this program financed to allow the small business people in Canada the opportunity to have access to funds that will hold them over until the small business financing review is complete and a new policy with respect to small business financing is announced by the cabinet in the new year.

I want to say that the small businessmen and women of this country need this money. They need this extra funding to allow them to continue to create the jobs that this country needs.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise to support Bill C-84. As we are all aware, the small business loan had its genesis in the government of the late John Diefenbaker. The man who was responsible for the legislation there is in the House today, namely the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees). He was then minister of industry, trade and commerce. I might add that he was the best minister of industry, trade and commerce that this country has ever seen. The hon. member for Northumberland saw the picture from all sides of the spectrum, as a manufacturer, as a politician, as a member of Parliament and as a minister. I understand, although I was not here at the time, that when he was minister, one of his first acts was to call all of his trade commissioners together. He took them home for a pep talk and gave them some plays from the bench, which are so badly needed by this government. To each of the trade commissioners he gave a set of cuff links with the initials "YCDBSOYA" imprinted on them, which translates loosely "You can't do business sitting on your posterior". The hon. member for Northumberland knew the name of the game. The name of the game is sales, competition, profits, as little government interference in the marketplace as necessary, and as much help to small business as the government could give.

I would like to commend my colleague, the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) on his excellent interpretation of what small business is all about. I would like to commend my colleague, the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) who is responsible for this bill and who has followed the traditions of the hon. member for Northumberland.

Bill C-84, although needed, is synonymous with this government's ineptness. As usual, it is too little and too late. This bill evidences a paltry increase to the most important segment of our society, our small business. If the government wanted to do something really useful, it should have expanded the amount available to small business along the lines of the business development bond.

To equate the problems of small business, we must look at the recent budget and the horrendous implications it has on the middle class. The middle class is not the rich class but the class which represents small business, the people who make our nation.

Hon. members have heard figures quoted a few moments ago by the hon. member for Pembina. He demonstrated just what small business means to this country of ours. This budget is aimed cruelly at the middle class and the small business person. It is another plank in the socialized doctrine being enforced by the government in power on the Canadian people. It will damage our middle class. It will take us unmistakable towards the elimination of the middle class. It will make us a socialist, classless state, more dependent upon the government. This budget takes us away from free enterprise which built this nation. The government's only role in the business world should be to aid its endeavours, not to tax it out of existence, not to reward those with little or no incentive to work and produce, while punishing those who work, innovate, achieve and produce.

This budget is a destroyer of initiative. It is a destroyer of any form of elitism. It is the work of warp-minded bureaucrats who cannot define the meaning of the word risk and who have never met a payroll. I am including the so-called finance minister, unfortunately. Any self-respecting minister of finance in the federal system of government that we know, any self-respecting minister who has had such public opposition of the budget and its contents from the public and from business, any minister who has made such wide-ranging changes in the tax system without consulting small business, any minister who has made a $600 million mistake, any minister who has made three major changes as an admission of error, would and should resign.

An article that appeared in the Edmonton Journal for December 11, 1981, has as its heading "The budget disaster". Edmonton is one of the great bastions of our free enterprise system. My son-in-law has moved there recently taking my daughter with him. He happily toils with the Bank of B.C., and I am very proud of that. The article reads:

> The budget Mr. MacEachen read a month ago portrays a vision of an homogenized, grey, spiritless Canada where initiative is discouraged, thrift is punished and the enterpreneurial spirit is laughed at by visionless men with tight little smiles.
> The budget does three things:
> It brings in major tax reform without public debate—
> It proposes punitive legislation that is retroactive—
> It is grossly inequitable. Meant to close the tax "loopholes" used by wealthy Canadians, it helps them by reducing maximum marginal tax rates from 64 per cent to 50 per cent.

This article goes on to point out why we should have MURBs. Without them $500 worth of condominium construction will be killed. It points out the errors of income deductibility which destroys a valuable incentive to invest in Canada. It goes on to point out the taxing of life insurance. This bleeds the source of capital for the mortgage and construction industry.

I have not received ten letters, nor 20 letters, but probably up to 100 letters from the insurance industry. I am sure all members of the House have received a similar letters in similar numbers. It is incredible to see what has happened to the small business people and other Canadians by the unforeseen surprises in this budget.

If this budget is hurting the rich, then I would like to read a letter that I have received just today. It is addressed to the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen. It reads:

> Dear Mr. MacEachen,
> I am writing to you with regard to my non-registered deferred annuity policy for which I shall be required to report accrued investment income on income tax every three years at a time when my investment income is not available to me, so the tax will have to be paid out of other income.
> I have been a clergyman for twenty-five years and have never tried to gain financial advantages in any way during my service in this calling, regarding any call on my energies as my sacrifice for my Lord and it has not been easy for my wife and family who have shared in everything.
> However, due to careful management we have been able to set aside a small amount toward our retirement years. (It may interest you to know that after a lifetime of service we can look forward to a very small church pension.) Now I am going to be penalized by having to take some of my current income to pay income tax on money I do not receive.
> There are thousands like me, so please, Mr. MacEachen, let's have some fair play. Change your budget immediately.

I say this says it all for the insurance industry, for the pensioner, for the person who has put money away for income later on, and for small business.

● (1600)

There is an improving tax climate in the United States, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is also ignoring that, but many Canadians are not. This too is disastrous. The changes are being made, as usual, by the government without any public discussion. I urge the Minister of Finance to consider most of his proposals again and to hear the people affected, then change them, not for the sake of change but for the good of Canadians, particularly small-business men.

The proposition to restrict interest expense deductions to the amount of income earned from investments during the year will cut to a trickle the borrowing done by small businesses to invest in productive business enterprises. The 12.5 per cent tax on dividend planning for small business seriously dissuades the common folk like you and me from starting a small free enterprise, which is the real genesis of this country. If we want to aid small businessmen then the minister should withdraw these things at once.

Let us consider the Small Business Development Bond program for a second. The Small Business Development Bond is a means to expand, to innovate, to research and develop. This program provides capital for capital expenditures and growth which in turn increases productivity. That is the name of the game, and it is the only way to pay for the expensive social programs that come from the other side of the House. Let us have the programs, but we must have expansion of productivity in order to pay for them. The whole bond structure was changed. Now it helps only those in dire financial straits. What straits! What a statement! The bill was garrotted, gutted and gored. The one real help to small business was the bond, and I suggest the minister should reinstate this program at once.

Hidden taxes on individual Canadians prior to this budget amounted to approximately $100. It is now estimated they will be $200. As a small businessman I have many salesmen driving company-owned cars. These salesmen, contrary to the opinion of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Lonsdale) who just spoke, will now be charged 2.5 per cent per month for driving their cars for any type of pleasure. What will that do to the big car sales in the riding of the hon. member in front of me from the Oakville area? This is a tax on the capital cost of the automobile, not its depreciated value. This is the way usury is applied to people. Old "greedy guts" government wants more and more tax for its bottomless pit appetite. A salesman making a sales effort and increasing productivity will be taxed out of his skin for his efforts. On the basis of a $15,000 automobile, this works out to $4,500 taxable income, and even at only 28 per cent it is $1,260. That is some reward for productivity. The government is taxing the producer and stifling initiative.

The government is now taxing employee benefit extended health care plans. The Minister of Finance said we were not reading the budget correctly. That is what he said in the House today. That is the way I read it, and I call it folly.

The insurance industry is gnashing its teeth at the unthinking, uncaring tax policies of this government. It is taxing money that has not been received, a tax to be paid with after-tax dollars. I call that a real shame. A person will not be able to have a pension income deduction in a year in which he has made a contribution to an RRSP or a pension plan unless the payment was deducted at source from his income.

Is small business being helped by the discontinuance of the use of income-averaging annuities? This government is eliminating the device for postponing income tax on capital gains as a tax deferral. This measure has been used in respect of the sale of small businesses and family farms and now it is gone. Capital cost allowances have been reduced by half. This again is something that has been an incentive and has helped to make this country grow. This does not help small business. It does not increase productivity and it does not give confidence or inspiration to small business.

Why does this government not do something constructive, such as encouraging profit sharing in small businesses? Why does it not provide incentives so that small businesses will continue to grow in this country the way they should? Small businesses form the backbone of this country. They still provide the most jobs. This industry should not be garrotted, it should be stimulated in order to obtain increased productivity.

This budget will not help export-geared high technology. It does not help resource exploration and it does not help transportation. It does not cut interest costs. Small businesses need help. Small businesses need the Crosbie Small Business Development Bond. This program should be expanded. Small businesses need alternatives which will allow people to buy shares in those small businesses, and small businesses in my view need an incentive with regard to profit sharing. Small businesses need a far-reaching, expansive and imaginative approach in order to show some light at the end of the tunnel for the small-business man. This industry requires this kind of help quickly. Bill C-84 just does not do enough, although we support it.

This is supposed to be a budget in equity. In reality it is a budget of infamy. It is the planned destruction of the middle class. As a past-president of the National Association of Tobacco and Confectionery Wholesale Distributors of Canada I am appalled at the finance minister's decision to impose the excise tax at the wholesale level instead of at the retail level. Again I would draw my remarks to the attention of the hon. member for Timiskaming, because on the basis of what he just said he has a total lack of understanding of what is going on.

As a representative small-business man I would like to speak on this matter at some length because it is a subject that has been almost ignored.

The tobacco and confectionery association, the grocery distributors association and others have forwarded discussion papers to the Minister of Finance, specifically in 1975, opposing this move, as well as the 1977 report of the commodity tax review group. Successive ministers have been advised repeatedly by small and large-business men for the past six years not to do this, but this government taxes, taxes and taxes, ignoring the small-business man. That is what has been happening.

The tax at the wholesale level will create an administrative nightmare for the small wholesaler, and it will be nothing but inflationary. It will hurt the small-business man. The paper burden will be astronomic. The firm I was associated with before entering this area of enlightenment had some 2,000 customers. The invoicing system is not computerized. This change will result in a paper nightmare and will require the addition of more employees to implement. This firm is just one small wholesaler among 300 tobacco and confectionery distributors. This will also apply to 300 wholesale grocers, as well as wholesale hardware people and wholesale building materials people, just to name a few. Up will go the cost of building material because the difference in the tax will have to be added on from the manufacturer to the wholesaler and then to the product. Do not sit there and tell me this is not going to mean increased costs and taxes amounting to millions of dollars to the federal government. The consumer will end up paying again. This move will add millions of dollars to corporate costs, and that cost will have to be passed along to the consumers of Canada.

Like the rest of this infamous, deleterious budget, this move has not been thought through carefully. The ministry has not yet determined how it will put the proposal into effect. Small business wholesalers will have heartaches galore in sorting out the items to be taxed, adding that tax to the selling price, not the cost price, and then having to put out more investment capital to collect the government's tax. This is a senseless business practice. This practice cannot be compared to any now followed by manufacturers, wholesalers and others in this country. Why does the government not collect from the few as it has done previously? In this way it would be easier to administer with fewer wholesale employees. How many more federal bureaucrats will it take to collect this tax and to police it? If the government needs the money, why does it not increase the tax by one half of one per cent, instead of lowering the tax to 8 per cent and placing the burden on the small wholesaler and ultimately the consumer? This whole drill is inflationary. When this tax is removed from the manufacturers, it will be much easier for them to increase prices without the normal protest from their customers, the small business people.

An hon. Member: What about you in 1979 when you were there?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Why didn't you change it?

Mr. Stewart: Let us look at the surtax on the purchase of retail—

An hon. Member: More jobs for more Liberals.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please! I wish to remind the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) that if he wishes to have the floor, he must be in his seat.

[English]

Mr. Stewart: I did not understand what you said, Mr. Speaker, but I would say that the hon. member is an expert at the game of "river"; he continually runs out at the mouth. Let us look at the surtax on purchases by retail chain stores from manufacturers. The chain buys at the same price as the wholesaler. The Minister of Finance says he will impose a tax of 1 per cent or 2 per cent on the corporate chains in respect of non-food items. To me, this is a crass admission that the new system is not fair, equitable or right and does not work at the wholesale level.

Tobacco products, however, will be taxed at the manufacturers' level, not at the wholesale level as the rest are. I wonder why that is. In 1980, the federal excise and sales tax was $934 million. This was collected predominantly by four major tobacco manufacturers. It showed them an estimated $5 million profit in cash flow. That is the reason why. They are probably avid supporters of the members on the other side. Imagine the benefit to the small wholesalers if this profit was in their cash flow. It is fish for one and fowl for the other. Obviously it is easier to collect from four manufacturers instead of the 600 or 1,000 wholesalers. However, the government is still willing to collect the balance.

The omission of tax collection on tobacco at the wholesale level is another admission that the surtax at the wholesale level is discriminatory, inflationary, patch-worked and wrong—by a government that is supposed to be a champion of human rights. It is costing independent businessmen millions of dollars.

The whole plan should be eliminated in favour of raising the tax minimally or else by reducing the tax on wholesale sales to independent businessmen to make it equal to the tax on the manufacturers' sales to the giant corporate chains who have every advantage over the independent businessman already.

This budget will have a deleterious effect on investment in industry at a time when we need more investment, not less. It comes at a time when we must have more productivity and employment, when we should be encouraging small business and not penalizing it. This budget takes away the incentive for small business to take the risks necessary in an expanding economy.

It seems to me that shifting the incidence of the federal excise or sales tax from the manufacturers' level to the wholesale level will cause confusion and unnecessary paperwork. Does the government realize that there were 21,597 merchants in Canada classed as wholesalers who were small businessmen? The volume of total sales then was almost $71 billion. These figures were reported by Statistics Canada in 1978. Does the government not realize that in addition to those classed as wholesale merchants, there are also about 5,000 establishments classed as agents and brokers, and in 1978, the last reported year, their accumulated gross sales amounted to $16.3 billion? Given the growth over the past ten years, it would be safe to assume that today we have between 26,500 and 30,000 wholesale establishments in this country made up of wholesale merchants, agents and brokers, and under the provisions of this bill a whole new world of bureaucratic interference will open up for them. Most of these establishments are small businesses which are already over-burdened with paperwork. Small businesses today are fighting hard to stay alive and keep afloat. The fight to survive in the wholesale industry is an ongoing one. I am personally involved with this industry and can say that we operate on a low mark-up and depend on volume sales for a small margin of profit. We know what it is like to have to work. We know what it is like to have to live with a .5 per cent net profit. We depend on volume sales with such a small margin of profit. We make it in spite of the tough, large corporate competition. However, we do not need more government interference.

That small profit is jeopardized by any small fluctuation in the marketplace. The current high interest rates have been murderous for my industry. The competition is fierce and the small-business man is being squeezed between a rock and a hard place by the corporate chains and giants who buy direct and in some cases are involved in the wholesale business themselves. Many have their own stores, and we have to compete with their gasoline stations which must now compete with the government.

I cannot understand why the government would disrupt the tax system and thereby create an administrative nightmare for the small businessman. I doubt very much that wholesalers will be compensated for acting as tax collectors for the government. Will they be expected to absorb the additional costs involved in collecting federal taxes in addition to the already excessive overhead costs they bear? The result of this end-run is obvious. The government will extract new revenues from the difference between the manufacturers' sale price and the wholesalers' sale price. Where the tax was at one time levied at the manufacturers' level—at the wholesalers' cost price—it will now be levied at the wholesale level—at the wholesalers' selling price. That is a big difference.

In 1978, the last year for which we have complete statistics, wholesalers bought $53.9 billion worth of goods. They sold those goods for $70.6 billion. Had the tax been in effect then, wholesalers would have had to pay the federal sales tax on the difference. That difference, three years ago, was approximately $17 billion. That is, $17 billion between the buying price and the selling price. There is no doubt that this shift in the incidence of taxation will mean higher costs to the consumer. It discriminates against the small retailer and the small wholesaler.

The large chains have the purchasing power to buy directly from the manufacturer which in effect, makes them a wholesaler and retailer combined. They eliminate the middle man. In the same fashion, this budget helps to eliminate the middle class.

In the past 15 years there have been marked drops in the number of manufacturers in Canada. The wholesaler has been having a more difficult time. In 1974 there were 1.3 million production and related workers. In the following three years the production lines were down from 1.3 million to slightly more than 1.2 million. In 1978, the last year for which we have statistics, employment came up again to 1.3 million, and I shudder to think what the figures are now. Plant closings and lay-offs have been occurring at an alarming rate over the past year. The litany of blue chip companies which have closed their doors is awesome and is testimony to the economic policies of this government, or lack of them. So how does it think small businesses can survive?

I would like to close, Mr. Speaker, by reading a quote which relates directly to small business and this budget. It goes like this:

You cannot bring about prosperity by discouraging thrift,
You cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong
And you cannot help the wage-earner by pulling down the wage-payer;
You cannot help the poor by destroying the rich,
You cannot establish sound security on borrowed money,
You cannot keep out of trouble by spending more than you earn
And you cannot build character and courage by taking away man's initiative and independence;
And you canot help men permanently by doing for them what they could and should do for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, those are not the words of Churchill, not of Kennedy and not of Diefenbaker. They are the words of Abraham Lincoln, and they are as true now as on the day he said them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support Bill C-84, the Small Businesses Loans Act and I wish to indicate the importance of it, not only to the constituency of Spadina but to the rest of the country as well.

Spadina is made up primarily of people who earn their living by working for others. But we also have a good many of the others there—that is to say, the small entrepreneurs. We have the needle trades industry—it is one of the two major centres in Canada for the needle trades. We have the printing industry, a great deal of the retail industry and the entertainment industry. For many of these people, the small-business men, the present situation is one of disaster. This increase in the ceiling of the small business loans total is a good move, but for most of them it is insignificant. According to what they have told me, most of them have found this program to be of not much help. There is too much red tape about it. The banks are not interested since they are offered higher interest opportunities elsewhere. The restrictions on the purpose for which the loan is to be used cuts out many potential borrowers. That is to say, they cannot use it for operating costs when they run into inventory troubles and things like that. They could only use it for expansion, and at a time like this many of them were not able to entertain the idea of expansion. They are trying to survive and the small business loans program is not available to them. As a result, of all the loans made to small business last year, only about 2.8 per cent came under this program—in other words, it was significant to only about 2.8 per cent of the needs of small business in general.

In Spadina the major small business concern is the textile industry. Hundreds of small manufacturers of textiles, clothing, footwear as well as wholesalers and retailers are in those trades. There are many, many of them in grave difficulty. The small business loans program does not seriously address the problem of high interest rates because it is only 1.5 per cent lower. If you are paying 9 per cent or 10 per cent, going down 1.5 per cent makes quite a difference. But if you are paying up to 20 or 25 per cent then 1.5 per cent relief is not that much. As well as being hit by high interest rates, they have been hit a second time by this government within the past few weeks by the dropping of import quotas, particularly in the leather footwear industry. For the major industries of Spadina, the textile, footwear and clothing industries, this is a time of disaster.

For the other retailers of Spadina, the retailers along Kensington, Bloor, College, Queen, Dupont, Yonge, King and the other commercial streets of Spadina, sales are down, credit is tight. If they ought to have any help, it is not primarily to expand at this time but to survive. This program excludes them from obtaining loans directed toward their survival.

It was very interesting on Monday to hear a similar note in the city of Montreal. Along with other members of the NDP caucus, I attended a hearing where a number of people from Montreal and Quebec told us their view of the economy as it relates to the government's budget. Le Conseil des Gens d'Affaires du Québec was one group which spoke to us. They had this to say:

Consequently, the Council would appreciate it if you would explain and defend its views on the economy in the House of Commons in Ottawa.

[English]

In other words, they asked the NDP to bring this message. The message in part as it relates to this bill is that they are being killed. The footwear industry is being killed by the dropping of the quotas on leather footwear, a decision made by this government a couple of weeks ago. Up until that point they still had 70 per cent of the Canadian manufacturing market in that field and still used 70 per cent of the product of Canadian tanners. Now they are afraid they will lose a great deal of that because of the dropping of the quota on leather footwear. At a time when the industry is in trouble, the government has made a decision that is disastrous to them. They will not be helped, unfortunately, even by this Small Businesses Loans Act. They will not be able to make use of it.

I am sure all members have received the brief of the Federation of Independent Businessmen commenting on the budget. They point out, for example, how family firms and farms that are being sold by instalment as retirement plans are being hit by the budget. They will not be helped by the Small Businesses Loans Act.

We heard comment on the Small Business Development Bond. There was the same problem last year, too much red tape and too few people who could make use of it. A comical incident occurred in Spadina this past summer. The Liberal candidate tried to ride on the SBDB program, claiming that the government was really helping small-business men. He used that at public meetings. He used it disastrously for himself. He is not here now.

The SBDB, as has been pointed out, is limited to bailing out businesses in dire straits, wherever that may be. I guess it is in the same place as the home owners the minister of housing was going to help. Apparently the banks are afraid to lend to people who, in order to be eligible under the new rules, must define themselves as being on the point of going broke. When they go to the bank at that stage, the banker looks elsewhere. The Small Business Development Bond gives about the same amount of help as the famous cure for measles. The quacks advertise, "Send in your dollar, follow our directions and if you do not get rid of the measles, we will send your dollar back". The directions are, "Gather all spots together into one spot and step out of it". The SBDB is about as much use to the merchants of Spadina and elsewhere.

The biggest threat to small-business men are the high interest rates of this country. Last summer one of them said to me, "At 12 per cent interest rates, Trudeau was a winner; at 20 per cent, he is dead". That was referring to last summer's by-election in Spadina, and he was right. Bankruptcies are up over a year ago and the small businesses loans program will not make a noticeable difference.

The fact is this government has done something unusual. It has brought together this country's working people, home owners, farmers and small-business men around one major concern. A few weeks ago, 100,000 out on the Hill told the government to bring down interest rates. They wanted no more fooling around with picky little subsidy programs for this or that little group. They simply want the interest rate brought down. That is what the home owners and businessmen of Spadina said last summer, and that is what they are still saying.

Of course we have to support this program to increase the potential of the Small Businesses Loans Act. It will not rescue hundreds of small-business men and others who are going under because of this government's policies. It will not stop them from going under. They will not remember with any gratitude an increase in a program they were not able to use. We have to adopt this bill, but it is irrelevant to the needs of the country at this time.

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am under no illusion—I think that all hon. members are in perfect agreement on the principle and objectives of Bill C-84 because of the proposed increase in the lending ceiling for small business loans from $850 million to $1.5 billion. In fact, the increase has become necessary because of the program's popularity and its usefulness, and since the demand is there, our government is prepared to meet it and it will.

As do other members of the House who take advantage of a debate to discuss other subjects, I ask the House's leniency, but I shall be very brief. I wish to take this opportunity to suggest to the government of Quebec that it be more co-operative, because I feel Quebecers and especially the government of Quebec, should understand that when the federal government takes various measures to help businesses, it is not particularly helpful or efficient if the government of Quebec, with its counter-strategies, manages to cancel or wipe out completely any measures that the federal government wants to take. I think the House should also be made aware of this. The opposite side is often all too eager to defend the interests of Quebec, and often the interests of the Parti Québécois. I feel that from now on we must make this very clear distinction. In this respect, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) must have realized what the situation was when he approached Mr. Lévesque to try and make him listen to reason, and he soon realized that Mr. Lévesque was a separatist—sometimes he seems to forget—but still a separatist!

An hon. Member: Quite true!

Mr. Tessier: I would like to say a few words about Quebec's refusal to take part in the federal-provincial conferences on agriculture and on tourism. I may add that although not hopeless, it is certainly becoming very difficult, for instance, to work on a farm; we may have the best policy in the world, and I am referring to our dairy policy, which in my opinion and that of many experts, is the best dairy policy in the world. But if the Quebec Agricultural Marketing Board does not do its job as it should and fails to supervise the quotas, which has resulted in thefts and fraud, how can we as representatives of the federal government play an effective role to meet the needs of the producers in the agricultural sector?

• (1630)

The government of Quebec ought to take note of this, and so should indeed the Quebec agriculture minister. It is growing more evident every day that he is a lot better at selling independence than at providing producers with the infrastructures they need or promoting in Quebec a dynamic and progressive agricultural sector to serve producers and consumers alike. He was once looked upon as the only champion of producers, and indeed there was a time when too many Quebecers thought he was just that, but he is now making a fool of himself practically every day. We in the federal government want to say to all agricultural producers that we would much rather make sure that they earn a decent income and benefit from a dynamic and prosperous agricultural sector. In that respect, I hope, and I am even convinced, that we will be successful in particular in restoring more stability and more confidence in the future by maintaining our current dairy policy. I dare hope that early in 1982 we will be able to give the producers the policy they want now, which they have questioned in the past, all that in the best interests of the agricultural sector, the economy and Canada as well.

We are not quite sure when we wonder about the participation of the government of Quebec in federal-provincial conferences, and we have every right to ask what the economy represents for the Lévesque government, for Mr. Lévesque himself and for his set of intellectuals. Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to our tourist industry. I suggest that the statistics speak for themselves and that we can really wonder when the Quebec government tells us that the tourist industry has nothing to do with the economy. And yet we know that Canada's tourist industry generates in excess of $15 billion in annual revenue for Canada, that is 5 per cent of the gross national product, and provides one million jobs for Canadians in over 100,000 undertakings.

Mr. Speaker, I wish someone would reassure me about the economic theories of the Lévesque government, and I wish he would explain to the people of Quebec why they were not represented at the tourism conference which was held this week in Ottawa. It is about time that Mr. Lévesque, the Premier of Quebec, the leader of the Péquistes, the head of the Parti Québécois, stopped sorting out his gang of genuine and false separatists, that is the liars and the hypocrites, and concentrate instead on the economy of Quebec. In addition, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Lévesque should not be playing the association game. We know that his new challenge is to play with—

[English]

Mr. Jelinek: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I thought hon. members were talking about the Small Businesses Loans Act, and I feel the hon. member opposite is not speaking to the subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I recognize the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek). His microphone is not on.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to bring to the Chair's attention that we are supposed to be discussing the Small Businesses Loans Act and that the hon. member is totally way off base. He is not discussing anything related to small business at all. I wonder if the Chair could interfere.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I should indicate to the hon. member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier) that I had taken notice of that issue because there was some question in my mind as to how relevant he might be to the bill.

I have also given some thought to the subject matter of the small businesses bill, and it seems to me that the small businesses bill is so wide-ranging that earlier in the day I recognized hon. members and allowed them to have that wide scope. In fairness, while the hon. member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead might consider the point that was made to him, I have during the day allowed other speakers the same latitude that I propose to allow him.

[Translation]

Mr. Tessier: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you I am quite prepared to co-operate. I also want to inform the hon. member on the opposite side that he proved in his point of order that he does not quite understand the implications of policies that conflict with other provincial policies. In fact, my purpose here is to make hon. members opposite realize where Quebec is heading, and that all Canadians are paying for this diversion and dispersal of energies, and I feel that is all part of what I have just been saying.

Hon. members opposite are proving that, in their own way, they too are real separatists. However, we have to live, day in day out, with the separatists in Quebec, but I want to get back to my subject to point out that as far as helping businesses is concerned, we must become more consistent and we must make Quebecers and the Quebec government realize this. Mr. Speaker, I would like to go on, to say that Mr. Lévesque has again started to talk about association, although the PQ convention made it clear that it was not interested in association. Mr. Lévesque told us: It is high time we got back to the association concept, because in civilized countries, in the industrialized world, association and sovereignty must go together. I think we should also realize that what counts for Quebecers is not that Mr. Lévesque, as premier or as leader of the PQ, enjoys playing with the hyphen, but that he can provide an argument that is clear enough for them to realize that he is deceiving them, every day of the week. If Mr. Lévesque is a separatist, if he wants to break up Canada, let him say so! As representatives of Quebec, we know that Quebecers are not interested in separation, that they are willing to take up the Canadian challenge, and that this challenge will benefit all Canadians and not only Quebecers. Perhaps the opposition should start realizing this.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to say a few words about energy. When Mr. Parizeau decided to raise the provincial tax on gas by thirty cents a gallon,—my constituency lies outside of the major urban centres, the population density is very low and distances are enormous—how can businesses be expected to come and settle in my constituency when now not only distance, but cost, has become a deterrent. Mr. Speaker, that too is an example of counterstrategy by the Lévesque government, and it is these counterstrategies that are helping to weaken and destroy our industrial framework, especially in Quebec. I would also like to say a few words in particular about the problems now facing car dealers. In the past, it was said that the footwear industry had to be protected, and that the sales tax would be abolished.

The same minister, Mr. Parizeau, already told us that this method was ineffective. Six months later, however, he used this same approach to help shoe manufacturers and retailers. Through their association, the dealers have now asked Mr. Lévesque to consider removing the sales tax to help the automobile industry, but Mr. Parizeau replied that such action would help Ontario and that the dealers would therefore have to live with the present economic conditions. Because of this, more dealerships have to close down every day! Mr. Speaker, this is another example of a counterproductive economic strategy which is harming small businesses, with the complicity of the Quebec government.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to point out to the Quebec government that we, in the federal government, believe that of necessity Quebec should diversify its industrial structure as it now relies too much on industries as such as textile and clothing, and that it should also have high technology industries, increase its productivity in key sectors, such as the pulp and paper industry, and improve its infrastructures, not only in the area of transport, but also in communications, computer technology and research and development. In this regard, I wish to assure those who still want to work effectively to promote Quebec economy, whether in the Quebec government, in the National Assembly or in the rest of the province, that the federal government is willing to take every possible action to help Quebec to take its rightful place and its rightful share in the Canadian economy so that we can finally solve our economic problems among Canadians without being faced every day with the issue of separation, which some people always put forward to win their point.

I therefore believe, Mr. Speaker, that it was proper to say that we, of the federal government, can afford to help businesses by granting loans and by increasing the amounts of these loans, but that both levels of government must learn that the economy is their responsibility and that they should cooperate if they want to be successful in this regard. In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Scarborough-Centre (Mr. Kelly):

> That the motion be amended by deleting the words "to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs" and substituting the following therefor: "to a committee of the whole".

I hope that the House will support this amendment.

• (1640)

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. I did not want to interrupt the hon. member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier) during his remarks. All of us in the House understand the passion which Quebec members have for their province and their country; there is no question about it. But I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his remarks, if in fact he made them—the translation could be wrong—wherein he indicated that we on this side of the House were the real separatists. I do not think there is anyone like the right hon. gentleman who leads my party who has tried harder to bring Quebec into the constitutional agreement. I do not think this has been questioned anywhere. Hon. members opposite should take the time to read the editorial which appeared in Le Devoir this morning. I think it was very well laid out. I think it is a fallacy to accuse hon. members on this side of the House of being separatists or of promoting the separatist cause, and I ask the hon. member to withdraw those remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Tessier: Mr. Speaker, if I had made such a statement, I would have no hesitation in withdrawing my comments. I would like to point out to the hon. member that we, the members from Quebec, often think some opposition members make Quebecers feel that too often they associate with people who are but separatists. I am not accusing them of being separatists, but I could say that we feel they are playing in the hands of the separatists, and as a Canadian, I greatly deplore this.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I take it that the point of order is settled. The hon. member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead seeks the unanimous consent of the House to put an amendment to deal with all stages of the bill today, in effect to move to Committee of the Whole rather than to refer the bill to a particular standing committee. Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to put the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Tessier) agreed to.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point for clarification. Does this mean that we will continue second reading debate until some time around 5.50 p.m., then go to Committee of the Whole and through all stages today?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair must put it in a way that does not imply that hon. members must continue until 5.45 p.m. As I understand it, there is an agreement between parties that all stages of the bill will be disposed of today. Whatever time suits hon. members will be the time that it is disposed of, but there is no lessening of the hon. member's rights or anyone's rights by this motion.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, now that we have heard the dissertation on the other side about the Quebec situation, which indeed is very important, the point I was attempting to make in my earlier point of order was that, according to the rules of the House, we were discussing the Small Businesses Loans Act which deals with small business and extends into the budget and other measures.

I should like to talk about Bill C-84 and the Small Businesses Loans Act. This amendment would increase the maximum of all loans which may be guaranteed during the two-year period ending June 30, 1982, from $850 million to $1.5 billion. Obviously this amendment is only keeping up with inflation. There is absolutely no new added advantage or incentive to small business. Previously this bill was amended every three years; now it will be amended every two years.

As Your Honour is aware, it was first introduced by a Conservative government in 1961. It was one of the first bills ever introduced for the benefit of small business. Naturally we all support the bill, but as I said, it merely keeps up with the inflationary situation which is plaguing the entire country.

Since the bill was first introduced in 1961, this party, which introduced the original Small Businesses Loans Act, has attempted month after month and year after year to bring forward incentives for the benefit of the small business sector that we all know is important to the economy of the country. Sometimes it was like pulling teeth to get those incentives out of the Liberal government, but over the years we managed to get them until finally the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought down the budget on November 12 and in one fell swoop decreed that those incentives would no longer be called incentives but would be called loopholes and would be plugged. Now we must start from scratch again unless and until the budget is replaced, which the majority of Canadians hope will happen.

During debate on this bill yesterday nine Progressive Conservative members spoke but only two Liberal members participated. The reasons for this are quite simple. First of all, the Liberals are embarrassed by the budget and they do not have anything positive to say about it so they stay away from the House when economic matters are being discussed. Second, nothing new and positive is forthcoming from that side of the House. When introducing the bill yesterday the minister had the audacity to say that, besides extending the Small Businesses Loans Act provisions, the budget will also extend the Small Business Development Bond program. That is the program that was introduced in the Crosbie budget but was voted against by the Liberals and the New Democratic Party. Then the Liberals watered it down till it is now totally ineffective. In these times of high interest rates, it would have been helpful to many small enterprises but now the extension is only available to businesses that are in dire straits.

An hon. Member: Whatever that means!

Mr. Jelinek: That means someone who is in trouble and who is on the verge of bankruptcy. Would any lending institution advance capital to a business which is on the verge of bankruptcy under any circumstances? Under this program a chartered bank must consider the credit-worthiness of a customer, as it must under any other program, before a loan is granted.

I took the liberty of calling officials in the head offices of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Royal Bank this week to find out what instructions were given to their managers across the country regarding this extension of the Small Business Development Bond. I was told that the same basic criteria will be applied for the SBDB program as for any other program. If a business is on the verge of bankruptcy, then obviously a chartered bank will not risk advancing funds to keep it going for two or three months until it goes into bankruptcy. I say shame to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) for having the audacity to stand up in this House yesterday and brag about the phony extension of this program.

Why has this measure that would benefit small business virtually disappeared? Cost cannot be the reason. I should like to read into the record an extract from a study commissioned by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business on the economic impact of the Small Business Development Bond. This computer econo-model study was conducted by Infometrica. This new equipment is well respected and some departments of the federal government use it from time to time to find out what is going on. Perhaps it should have been used prior to the introduction of the budget! One of the findings was as follows:

There is no net cost to the federal treasury for the SBDB, but an actual gain of $77 million in the first year of the program—

The government should pay heed to this finding but instead it virtually eliminated the program in the budget.

I do not know why the incentives are deemed to have become loopholes. Either Liberal members do not understand the budget or they are two-faced hypocrites who say that good measures for small business are included when they know damn well that they are not. It is either that or they are a bunch of gutless wonders who support what the Minister of Finance says and then automatically follow suit. How can they go back to their constituencies and talk to the small business people, the farmers and the fishermen there after the introduction of this disastrous budget and then come here and vote in favour of it? When they do that, then I say they are two-faced hypocrites.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Jelinek: The hon. member says "Oh, come on". I should like him to stand up and tell us what positive reaction there has been from small business. I should like him to come to my riding and tell the small business people there what positive measures this government has taken in the last several years, and specifically what positive measures there are in the November 12 budget.

Mr. Kelly: Set a date and I will be there.

Mr. Jelinek: It is no wonder that the trend of this government has been a negative one as far as it affects free enterprise, and specifically the small business sector which is the backbone of our economic way of life. Not too long ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said:

> We haven't been able to make it work ... the free enterprise system. The government is going to have to take a larger role in running institutions ... It means that there is going to be not less authority in our lives ... but more.

Is it any wonder that the Prime Minister says that the free enterprise system will no longer work? The trouble is not that the free enterprise system no longer works, Mr. Speaker, but that the government will not allow it to work. It is strangled with regulations, directives, controls, the paper burden and must overcome all sorts of other hurdles. The government should leave the small business sector alone, and let it prosper in a free market system. It should replace the directives and controls with incentives, not loopholes. But that will not happen because of who wrote the budget.

It will not happen, because by whom is the budget really written and devised?

Mr. McDermid: A good question.

Mr. Jelinek: A colleague asks who wrote it. The budget is devised by academics; the budget was supported by academics; the budget is endorsed by academics and it is put into operation by academics. I submit that the academics who supported, endorsed and wrote this budget do not have a clue as to what is going on in the real business world outside of their ivory tower here in Ottawa. That is obvious from the state of the budget. Those academics should and must be replaced with people who have some inner knowledge of what goes on in the business world, whether in a small business sector, in a medium-sized sector, or even in large businesses. Surely the time has come when this country, this government and this Parliament should not just depend on academics telling us how the country should be run; there should be some input from businessmen.

I see that some Liberal backbenchers are smiling. They should smile, because every—

An hon. Member: Because it is Christmas!

An hon. Member: You'd never know it by this budget.

Mr. Jelinek: The hon. Liberal member says it is Christmas. It is certainly not Christmas for the unemployed or for the record number of businesses which are going bankrupt, and certainly not for the people who cannot afford to house themselves or to buy cars, food or refrigerators as a result of Liberal mismanagement of the economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What do you suggest?

Mr. Jelinek: What we suggest is that we follow many of the recommendations this party has submitted over the years, many of which were accepted by the Liberal government as incentives. These same recommendations have now been changed to loopholes by the Minister of Finance. That is what we recommend, and hon. members are laughing. However, every business organization in Canada, be it the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, be it the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, be it the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Retail Council of Canada or the Federation of Agriculture—and the list goes on—is totally and absolutely opposed to the bill which was presented by the Minister of Finance on November 12. I will just read what one of these organizations states. Moss, Lawson and Company Ltd., a member of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada, states:

> The budget released Thursday, November 12, 1981 by the Federal Government raises great concern over its ability to perceive reality. We hesitate to call it a budget because it does not address this country's economic needs nor does it recognize the possibility of a severe recession over the next 12 months—indeed the impact of the document has every chance of deepening the recession now underway. The Finance Minister set out to make the tax system more equitable, to capture in the tax net those high income individuals who, through mostly government approved tax deferral methods, sheltered this income from taxes.
> Instead of using a 'surgeon's scalpel' on this minority, the Minister chose to use a 'meat axe', gutting a whole host of long established procedures. The impact of this approach fell most heavily, not on the rich, but on the productive and aspiring middle class, removing much of their incentive and removing the corporate means of attracting and retaining competent managers and executives. This policy strategy was probably initiated after the last budget, and put together by the civil service bureaucracy who, with indexed pension plans and the security of tenure, do not have to assume market risk and the pressures of the real business world. In other places and in other times it would be sufficient cause for revolt.

And revolt there is, by all sectors of Canadians and not only the business sector. There is revolt by the Canadian Labour Congress and by others. The budget introduced by the finance minister hurts many Canadians, including employees, employers, people approaching retirement, tenants and consumers. The budget is also a restrictive budget. It results in a massive tax increase at a time when the economy is in a tailspin. I believe that it is inappropriate for the economic circumstances of today and that it should be withdrawn and replaced, and the sooner, the better.

The budget is not only bad, it is also dishonest. It is a dishonest budget because the minister, for example, when introducing it, stated that the poor will benefit and the rich will suffer. That is a joke, because the fact is that anyone earning $20,000 or less will receive a benefit, after the new budget, amounting to a savings somewhere under $200. However, someone earning $40,000 will have a savings of $624; someone earning $60,000 will have a net savings of $1,215; someone earning $80,000 will have a net savings of $1,808; someone earning $100,000 will have a net savings of $2,989.

An hon. Member: That's in your class.

Mr. Jelinek: The government is trying to tell us that the rich and the poor will benefit. The facts speak for themselves. The government says that taxes will be reduced, but that is not the truth, either. In fact, taxes are being increased, if one takes all the taxes into consideration. There has been an increase of $1,400 in federal energy tax alone per family per year. That is what this budget and this government has now proposed to tax the Canadian people. It amounts to $1,400 a year for every family in Canada.

An hon. Member: Untrue.

Mr. Jelinek: Tax increases will be felt through the erosion of take home pay because of the imposition of a tax on employee benefits, such as private health plans, dental care contributions, day care, the use of a car and travel passes, as well as the immediate taxation of retiring allowances. If take-home pay is reduced and employers make up the lost pay, the result will be higher costs for the company and probably higher prices to the consumer. There will be taxation of income accumulated in life insurance policies during the life of the policy. Life insurance is now considered to be investment rather than protection. Life insurance is to be taxed every three years and the policy holders will pay tax on income which will only be paid out if they die.

The biggest lie in that budget was when the finance minister said that government spending will be reduced. Again, upon examining the budget, the facts speak for themselves. Government spending in this year will increase by 22 per cent and, in the following year, by a whopping 43 per cent. The government calls that restraint. It is telling Canadians to restrain themselves while it increases its spending by 22 per cent in one year and 43 per cent in the next. I say it is shameful and it is time that the budget be replaced.

Before I close, I will read one last quote from today's Globe and Mail editorial. In brief, it states:

> Mr. MacEachen's budget is also a disaster. The budget would hurt almost all Canadians except the very rich. It would injure business and eliminate jobs. A Department of Finance which could forecast in the budget papers that unemployment this year would be 7.2 per cent when it already stood, according to Statistics Canada, at 8.3 per cent is not to be trusted with shaping Canada's taxation future all by itself.

Whether stated by editorials, business associations, individuals, labour or anyone else, the conclusion is that this budget is the most disastrous budget in the history of this country. I repeat, for the third time in my own remarks today, that the time has come for that budget to be withdrawn and replaced with incentives.

An hon. Member: Are you speaking on the bill or on the budget?

Mr. Jelinek: The hon. member said I should speak on the bill. We have been speaking on economics and small business, and on budgetary measures. I am not speaking about Quebec, Ontario, disassociation or separatism, which has increased under the guidance of the Liberal government in this country over the last 12 years more than in the history of this whole nation.

Mr. Mayer: If you had a decent budget, you wouldn't need this bill! If you had a decent Minister of Finance, you wouldn't need this bill!

An hon. Member: Would you be quiet? Show a little decorum in this House.

• (1710)

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member just mentioned that separatism has increased while we have been in power. I remind him that if his government had been in power, we would be separated already.

Mr. Mayer: Sit down.

Mr. McDermid: That's rubbish.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I will not even comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant).

As one who came to this country from behind the iron curtain some years ago, I came because of what Canada had to offer. Canada offered opportunities and hopes for everyone, for new Canadians and for Canadians who have been here for many generations. Canada is blessed. Canada is rich in natural and human resources and it is rich in technological know-how. Canada probably has the potential of becoming the number one country in the world. There is no question about that.

Everything is not lost. We still have our natural resources. We still have the technological know-how. We are building on that. We still have our human resources and we are building on those. We must replace the stranglehold that has developed around the free enterprise system with incentives. These incentives were built over the years until the presentation of this last budget. Once we replace those strangleholds with incentives, then we can build on what we have to offer for all Canadians and for Canada itself, and we can achieve the great potential of which this country is capable.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this debate at the invitation of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe). The other day he yelled across the House and said: "If you want to say something, get up and speak." That is exactly what I am doing today. I shall talk about some of the things he mentioned the other day that are quite ludicrous. I have five or six points for the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. I have a great deal of admiration for him, but I think he should resign because he has no clout in the cabinet. He has been hung out to dry. I do not know how he can appear before his special interest groups, especially the small business groups. He has to appear with his tail between his legs because this budget is a disaster. Maybe Bill C-84 that we are debating today is the little crumb which the cabinet threw to him. Perhaps this is the little crumb that was handed to him so he could go back to the small business people and offer an amended Small Businesses Loans Act. We as a party are supporting this bill.

Let me tell hon. members what has happened with the FBDB. That bank needs money desperately; I understand that. The FBDB has come after a small-business man in my community for about $4,000. I shall explain the situation. This businessman wanted to buy a small business. He went to the FBDB to make the necessary arrangements. He started out very well with the FBDB and came to the point of signing an offer of commitment. At the same time the vendor of the small business met with the manager of the FBDB. They did not get along. They did not agree on the terms of the agreement. The manager of the FBDB, who I understand has since been fired, announced that in no way would he allow this deal to go through, yet a letter of commitment had been signed. The prospective purchaser was most concerned. He went to the vendor and pleaded with him to give him a larger first mortgage. The prospective purchaser then went to the bank. Because he had acquired a large first mortgage, he got a small second mortgage and purchased the business in that manner. That happened in October, 1980.

Last week this purchaser received a bill from the FBDB. A writ was issued on his small business for $2,300, on account of the letter of commitment. There was an interest charge of 20 per cent over the last year which amounted to some $600. A charge of $800 in costs was added, totalling $3,700. This bill of almost $4,000 from the FBDB was presented to the small businessman because the manager said that he would not let the deal go through. He scared the life out of the small-business man, who had to seek financing elsewhere.

The bank is so cash hungry that it is now issuing writs on small-business men, this at a time when small business should not be attacked. Where will this small businessman get $4,000 at this time of the year? I say let us get this bill through this afternoon and get some money into the hands of the FBDB so the bank does not have to drag money out of the pockets of business people who cannot afford it right now. The minister should look into those things.

I understand the FBDB have been issuing all kinds of writs. The bank has gone back years into its records and are issuing writs to small business people. Let us get this bill through the House this afternoon. Let us give the bank some money. Maybe the bank will then call off the hounds and leave the business people alone to do business.

Let us talk about the small business bail-out bond. We cannot call it a development bond any more; that is a misnomer. It does not develop a thing. There are companies in my constituency which took advantage of the Small Business Development Bond. They are very thankful that it was available. Industries have been created, some have expanded. The Small Business Development Bond was designed to help create and expand small businesses. It was, however, a watered down version from what the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) introduced a couple of years ago, but it has played a very important part in small business. That has gone now.

Let me tell the House what that decision on November 12 did to another businessman in my riding. This businessman was in the midst of negotiations for a Small Business Development Bond when the edict came down from on high, from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). This businessman went back to the bank the following week to tidy up the details on this bond, but the bank wanted more and more security. To my way of thinking, to his solicitor's way of thinking and to other people's way of thinking with whom I discussed the matter, the bank was asking for too much security. But what does the businessman do? If the businessman goes along with the bank, then he receives his bond under the old system. If, however, he goes to another bank which might accept the loan under a different security arrangement, what happens to him? He has to pay an extra 6 per cent interest. The businessman is caught between a rock and a hard place. The Minister of Finance did that to him.

The businessman does not thank the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism and the Minister of Finance. The businessman looks to the minister of State for Small Businesses to plead on his behalf, but there is no response. I see the minister of state leaving the House. I hope he is going to plead on this man's behalf. The Small Business Development Bond is now gone. It is a sad state of affairs when we have to take a super development program like that and all of a sudden turn it into a welfare program. That is what it is now. If you are going bankrupt, then here we are. I notice some Liberal backbenchers nodding their heads and agreeing with me.

Let me talk now about taxing life insurance. A small businessman who wants some security for his wife and his family should anything happen to him will now have his life insurance policies taxed. What good does that do the small business person? The Minister of Finance says that if you already have life insurance policies you should not worry because they are not going to be taxed, but if you buy a policy from here on in it will be taxed. He talks about equity, but where is the equity in that? There is no equity there. What about the small businessman who sells life insurance; where is the equity for him?

Where is the minister? He is not speaking out on behalf of these people. He is increasing the amount of money available under the Small Businesses Loans Act so more money can be loaned out, I might add at usurious interest rates. Where is the Minister of State for Small Businesses when it comes to discussing the exorbitant increase in postal rates, 30 cents for first-class mail? He is not standing up and saying to small-business men that he realizes that this is going to be a penalty to their businesses. No, he is not defending them, he is remaining silent. Where is the Minister of State for Small Businesses when we need him?

We find that interest rates on mortgages, which are subsidized by small and large companies, are now going to be a taxable benefit. Let me talk about that for a moment. I know many small-business people in northern Canada who offer accommodation at low interest rates to entice people to come up and work for them in these northern communities. This is something that attracts them to those particular areas. Now this is going to be a taxable benefit. These people cannot compete with the large companies.

Let me tell the House what is happening right now. A large company which I shall not name, a company I know very well and I think is known to all hon. members, provides interest-free or low-interest mortgages to entice people to move from one area to another, or to work in areas in the north. That is how people are enticed to work in the north. This will now be a taxable benefit. These companies have grossed up the salaries of every single person who comes within that category. Where is the equity in that? The big companies can do that and the consumers will pay.

The minister says he is plugging tax loopholes. He is not plugging anything. He is just encouraging people to get around his stupidity. That is all he is doing, and this just adds to inflation. This is an inflationary move.

Where is the Minister of State for Small Businesses when it comes to this measure? He is nowhere to be seen. Businesses are cash short today. For the Minister of Finance to come in with a budget such as this at a time when business needs encouragement is a disgrace to the Government of Canada and to the Liberal Party. He should resign immediately. In the name of equity and fairness, in the name of getting the rich guys and making them pay, he is hitting the middle-income earner. Making the rich pay sounds familiar; I think I have heard that expression before. The minister is hitting the middle-income earner, that guy who has a few extra dollars to invest in his company so it will grow and he will be able to hire more people. That is who he is hitting. He is not hitting the rich or the big boys. He keeps standing up and saying this is being done in the name of equity. No one is buying that. The little guy in the street is not buying that nonsense. The middle income earner and the small businessman are the ones who will suffer, and because of this the economy will be in worse shape, not better shape.

The minister should take a completely new look at this budget and start again. As a member of the House for two and a half years and one who has been involved in political life for a number of years, I have never known an issue in respect of which I have received as many phone calls and as much mail as I have about this budget.

The Minister who very kindly invited me to get into this debate, and I thank him very much for that invitation, said the other day when talking about the tax rate for small business that in the United States small businesses with incomes between $50,000 and $75,000 were taxed at a rate of 30 per cent while in Canada they were taxed at a rate of 25 per cent; that businesses between $75,000 and $100,000 were taxed at 40 per cent; and those over $100,000 were taxed at 46 per cent whereas they were taxed at the rate of 25 per cent here. The one thing he did not tell us, and probably on purpose, although he would have to clarify that, was about the various write-offs available to small businesses in the United States—the various items that can be charged against income in order to run the business properly. The list is much longer than a similar list in Canada, and right at the top of that list is the right to write off interest on borrowed money for investment in a small business.

Let me wind up briefly with just three or four quick points. This government purports to support small business. I have example after example of how it does not support small business. Let me give one example since that great defender of the "buy Canada" policy is sitting in the House, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais). I will keep this sticker down because I know one is not supposed to show things in the House. This is a sticker you are supposed to put on your door after you have participated in the CHIP program to announce your participation to your neighbours and anybody who comes to your door, such as the mailman or whoever. The only difficulty is that the sticky tape comes from Brokaw, Wisconsin, not from Canada. There are all kinds of companies in Canada who can provide this tape at a competitive price. The minister is sitting there with a smirk on his face as though this is a big joke. It is not a joke, Mr. Minister, and I tell you that right now. I have a small business in Brampton that can provide the same product cheaper than that outfit in Brokaw, Wisconsin, where the minister is getting that sticky tape for his CHIP program stickers. What a disgrace.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate to the hon. gentleman that at the time he made that intervention I was deep in thought. I was not paying any attention to his ongoing drone, and there was absolutely no expression on my face.

An hon. Member: That part is for sure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: There is a great line there, Mr. Speaker, but I will not jump in. I will resist temptation, I really will.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. McDermid: No, I cannot do it. I have already given him enough flak. I just hope he looks into this kind of thing that is going on in his ministry and all the others who support this great "buy Canada" policy.

Let me give another example of how this government is wasting money and not helping the small businessman. I have here a brochure put out under the authority of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan). This is a beautiful brochure with nice glossy pictures and glossy prints. It is entitled "Urban Transportation: The Canadian Experience". It is one of the best publications that has been put out by those people over there. It is going to help all kinds of small-business people in Canada who work on urban transportation. I think it is a terrific book and it was going to be circulated—here comes the hooker—right around the world, so we could sell our urban transportation to the world. But do you know what happened, Mr. Speaker? The minister for some reason—and we do know the reason—cancelled it after there was printed I do not know how many thousand copies. How many copies was it? I wish the minister would look into that question and let us know. I am sure it was thousands. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what I was told as to why they were cancelled? It was because there were not enough pictures of Montreal in it.

An hon. Member: You are kidding.

Mr. McDermid: No, I am not. There was too much of Ontario in it. That was the excuse that was given—there was too much of Ontario in it after they printed it. Look at this book—glossy pictures. That is an example of the waste that is going on over there. They are damaging small business people who could probably have gotten some advantage from this. It is just nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

I am supporting this bill, Mr. Speaker, but in closing, and in spite of all that I have been saying, I do want to acknowledge that the Minister of State for Small Businesses has a tremendous load on his shoulders, as do those Liberal backbenchers who did not have one iota of input into the budget. Not one iota, Mr. Speaker, yet they are the ones who have to go home and defend it. And they are having trouble defending it. We speak together privately and they have been telling us the problems they have. We know what they are going through and we feel sorry for them, but at the same time our challenge to them is to come back and tell their minister and the Minister of State for Small Businesses to clean up their act and to help small businesses, not damage them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, we are coming to the close of a debate which deals with a subject matter which is much broader than the single concept of small business. It must be considered as taking in the farmer, the fisherman, the small jobber in the forest, the small jobber in business, in a multitude of ways—the retailer, the small producer, etc. It covers a very broad spectrum. It is not to be considered in isolation.

It is my wish to mention that some of the effects of the budget will generate a great need for this particular legislation and will generate a great need for the expansion of money supplies to other agencies of government where other small businesses are concerned, such as agriculture. For instance, one of the pieces of information which has crossed my desk indicates that a particular farmer who was in the livestock business has undergone a change in his tax requirement by virtue of this budget. How much is it? His taxable income has gone up by something in the the neighbourhood of $34,400—that is a 12 per cent increase. But his tax has gone up by 46 per cent, or $23,000. Just imagine what it means in an era when the Government of Canada, through its Outlook Conference, tables statistics which indicate that farm income in the crop year ahead is going down by 15 per cent and yet the farmer's tax load, in some instances, is going up 46 per cent. What a contradictory situation we now find ourselves in, Mr. Speaker. What people are saying is that most of the farmers in the area owe more to the bank or to the feed store than their farms are worth.

I quote from another source, a lady who says:

> We are closing down. We're tired of spending money but not making any.

Time does not permit one to quote all the worthy letters one receives in a situation like this, but I do want to quote one more item. It reads:

> The $45 million will in any case only refinance 450 farmers at $100,000 each, or 225 farmers at the $200,000 level. This is for all of Canada.

Might I add a comment, Mr. Speaker, and say that one district manager received two applications from family farms which, if he had approved them, would have absorbed the total allocation of additional money through the Farm Credit Corporation to his branch. That was in an area where, I submit, a multimillion dollar requirement existed and he could not look after two family farm operations with the extra money provided. I ask the gentlemen to your right, Mr. Speaker, to give some thought to the inadequacies of this situation.

The measure before us is just a drop in the bucket. To oppose it would be in opposition to the principles which we happen to support, namely, that there must be some recognition of this need in the country. Supporting it is an expression of our recognition of this fact, but it does not suggest, Mr. Speaker, to you or to anybody else in this nation, that it is in any way adequate to meet the needs which exist in such quantity in this country.

Not 48 hours ago, a friend of mine called me and said he wished to report something to me. He wanted me to know what the budget did to him. He said he had worked for a lifetime in a little business he owned and now had an opportunity to sell it to some of his family and to some who had served him loyally for a good many years. He said: "Last year I could have retired, but this year I cannot retire and sell it to those people". Why, Mr. Speaker? Because, as he said, "I have to pay my capital gains tax now. It would take my bank account and the first payment and I will have nothing, not a thing left on which to live in the next year. I must therefore seek out management and try to find some other means of retirement because I cannot sell my business and still enable myself and my wife to eat. They take it all."

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. McCain: Do those to your right have no heart, Mr. Speaker? Suppose this man owned a small sawmill in the province of New Brunswick, and Domtar, or Bathurst, or Fraser's came along and said, "We want to buy your sawmill and your lands". There was another complication which I neglected to mention earlier—it was that those who would borrow the money to make the downpayment would have to pay for that payment in "after tax dollars", since interest would not count as it heretofore would have counted in such a case. So neither could the buyer afford to buy nor the seller afford to sell. But if some multinational or large corporation, Canadian owned, wanted to buy a sawmill under similar conditions, they would not have the same interest problem as a purchaser because it would not reflect in their books that they had borrowed money to buy. And you could not sort it out if you tried.

So the large corporations can now buy out the small guys, Mr. Speaker, and so it goes on and on and on. But private individuals, such as members of this House, cannot effectively get a loan to buy a business to become small business people because of the adjustment in the tax structure. Your interest paid is not a cost to your operation as an individual. This whole thing is quite ridiculous. This seems to be a sort of climax, Mr. Speaker. I have said much the same thing once before in this House. This seems to be the climax of a situation which started with Benson who was dumped, that was reintroduced under the Hon. John Turner, who began just gradually to bring this in. It was at that time that an individual who wanted to be a small-business man appeared before some of our members and told them he had a chance to go into small business. He said this business would help him to live a little more comfortably in his retirement. Then he said, "But when I look at what the capital gains tax would do, etc., in the Turner era, it just is not worth the risk to employ 14 people and I am not going to do it." Now, Mr. Speaker, if that was the attitude in the Turner years, what would that individual think about investing today? It has become ridiculous—but it was introduced at that point in time.

How much better it would have been had the government introduced an incentives budget. Then it could have reduced its expenditures. How much better it would have been if the commentary on this budget could have been, "There will be production. We will reach for more productivity. We will give incentive to business. We will give incentive to the development of the oil sands. We will give incentive to the development of the offshore resources on the east coast of Canada. We will inspire people to invest." And what would have been the difference? We would probably have had 200,000 or 250,000 less people unemployed. We would have had a tax base from those 250,000 people. We would not have had to scrounge every cent that every taxpayer has.

What is the government trying to do? I charge this government, Mr. Speaker, with establishing a tax base which encourages the inefficiencies of private enterprise, or discourages them to the degree that this government will be able to justify itself when it says: "We are going to socialize, we are going to nationalize, we are going to take this country over by virtue of the tax and regulation impact of the budget." Many people in this nation will be discouraged. Is that the base it is trying to lay to justify nationalization and further government interference?

A question was raised today by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). He asked why we do not have a definitive answer on what is to be the government's position in respect to a subsidy for the dairy industry. That has been under study and will be under study until the poor cow's udders have gone dry. This has been under study for months. The gestation period of that program far exceeds that of any bovine. No bovine needs as long a gestation period as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) requires. When in the name of all that is good and holy is he going to get on his toes, get this job done, report to the dairy industry and get it on its way?

I know one reason. It has reached the stage where the DREE committee is now considering grants for tourism, for agriculture, for fishing, for forestry and many other different items. This government and this Minister of Agriculture have no idea. One minister does not know what his colleague is doing. He does not know what is going into tourism, forestry, agriculture, mining, highways or public works because it is going through a dispersed structure of government which is so confusing that no one has a handle on the whole deal. Why not bring this back in place so that we can treat it as we should, intelligently and without having to look at the minister responsible for forestry to see what is being spent there and what is being spent through DREE. It is ridiculous. It is defeating.

It is in the bureaucracy where the additional expenditure is coming. Did it ever occur to the government that we might save $5 billion or $10 billion in Canadian money down the road, which we are going to give to the Arabs, if we had an incentive budget for the development of our resources in eastern and western Canada? Today somebody asked me what I wanted for Christmas. It was a puzzling question but I think I have the answer. I want an intelligent government that is interested in people employed, in providing incentives for production, in leading this country and laying it on the line to Canadians that we must have better productivity. I want a government that is more interested in productivity and incentive than in writing unemployment insurance cheques because it gives them a high profile, helping the poor people. They believe putting out unemployment insurance cheques gives them a high profile and that it would have a low profile if the country were prosperous. Is there an insidious seed in the mind of the government that it can destroy the country and develop a political profile by sending out aid? I have to feel there may be.

What I want for Christmas is an opportunity for this country to show its mettle without the degradation of excessive taxation. I want a government that will sit down with the provinces and municipalities and determine under what tax level this country can prosper. I want a long-term and intelligent assessment of this nation's capability to pay taxes. I want a government that understands that over-taxation and over-expenditure is degrading and debilitating to this country.

This situation is probably like the little girl blowing out the candles on her cake. She is told to make a wish. She knows dammed well she is not going to get it, but at least she has the right to wish. That is all we in this House have left, the right to wish for an intelligent appraisal of the capability of the nation. That is all we have left to wish for this Christmas.

I regret very much there has been a House agreement which requires that we stop this debate and proceed to finish this bill, which really does little if anything for Canada. However, it is a principle we will espouse. In co-operation with that agreement, I thank you very much.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I understand that we will go through all stages and pass this bill before six o'clock, so I would now ask you to go into Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is no difficulty with what the minister proposes. We will dispose of that accordingly. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want hon. members to appreciate the fact that the Chair was so speedy that the Sergeant-at-Arms had to run to keep up with the Mace!

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): With the unanimous consent of the House we will call it six o'clock. I do now leave the chair until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 5.48 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—RESOLUTION PASSED AT PUBLIC MEETING IN TORONTO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion. Last night at Nathan Phillips Square in Toronto thousands of concerned Canadians, including members of all political parties, gathered to show their concern and support for the people of Poland in the form of the following resolution:

We, Canadians of Polish descent, are deeply concerned about the current events in Poland, and we call upon the Canadian government as cosignatory of the Helsinki Accords to undertake the following actions:

1. To press for the immediate lifting of martial law in Poland and the release of all Solidarity officials.

2. To press for the reinstatement of the rights of workers to form free trade unions.

3. To publicly state that no intervention by third parties into the internal affairs of Poland will be tolerated.

4. To send to Poland, for distribution by non-government organizations, significant economic aid in the form of food, medical supplies and agricultural machinery and feedstuffs in order that the people of Poland survive the coming winter.

We trust that the voice of the Canadian government as international mediator will be heard and that the conflicts in Poland will be resolved in a just and lasting manner.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House express its concern by supporting the resolution introduced last night by the Canadian Polish Congress and approved by the thousands of Canadians there present.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Does the House agree to the said motion?

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I wish to address this matter very briefly, as I am sure the hon. member for Oshawa, the seconder of the motion, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) would simply like to underline the grave concern which is felt by Canadians across the country about the situation in Poland, and particularly to underline the importance with which we, in the House and in this party, feel this matter be treated as a question that the rights and freedoms so recently won by the citizens of Poland be preserved and be free from any interference by the Soviet Union or by other outside forces.

It is for that reason that we have introduced this motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 today. I am certainly pleased that it has received the unanimous consent of the House. I am pleased that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Government of Canada will be fortified in actions they might take by knowing that they have the support not only of the thousands of Canadians who met last night in Toronto, but also the unanimous support of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, as the seconder of the motion I rise eagerly to support its purpose and the ideas which lie behind it. I think people the world over, beginning in August of 1980, were impressed, were delighted with, and ultimately gave their total support to the courageous movement of the people of Poland to begin to take the very difficult steps toward achieving a free society within their own land. We have seen in the past year, in my judgment, the most remarkable mass movement since World War II by a people in face of incredible odds to determine the conditions of their lives, not by forces from without their borders but by themselves. In recent days we have seen that courage, that determination, and that fundamental love for freedom put in jeopardy. I and my colleagues strongly support the principle and the details of this motion.

I conclude by saying that I am sure I speak not only for Canadians of Polish ancestry but for all Canadians from one part of our land to the other when I wish the people of Poland well in this moment of trial.

● (1410)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I received a copy of this motion just after coming into the House. I agreed to its being debated so that we could have some moments to reflect on this very serious situation here in Parliament.

S.O. 43

The Government of Canada has been very concerned about what has been happening in and around Poland in recent months. Of course the Canadian people themselves have been concerned. In fact there has been an enormous outpouring of support from the Canadian people, not only from Canadians of Polish ancestry but from Canadians of many other ancestries, which is typical of this country, to the Poles. There have been many contributions of food, and many contributions of money to enable food and medicines to be sent to Poland. The Government of Canada has joined in that and recently announced the contribution of $100,000 to the Canadian Polish Congress to enable food and medicines and any other useful materials to be sent to the Polish people.

Aid of that kind, of course, is distributed in Poland by non-governmental organizations but, generally speaking, the Canadian government has to deal with the Polish government, so the greater part of the aid we have sent to the Polish people has been sent through the Polish government. We have in fact been the largest per capita donors to the people of Poland. Our contributions have been principally through our sales of grain at concessional rates.

On October 29 Canada announced that it would provide an additional $500 million in credit guarantees in order to permit Poland to continue to import the one million to 1.5 million tonnes of grain provided for in our bilateral grain agreement which expires in December, 1982. Food credits announced by other countries, such as the United States, do not go beyond this year, whereas ours go through this year into next year. We are already in the position of having fulfilled some of the requirements of that contract by having shipped something like one third of the grain which is provided for under the framework agreement. We intend to continue to provide support of that kind to the Polish people.

The Canadian banks have also made a contribution to Poland in recent years. These banks are participating along with other world banks in negotiations with Poland to reschedule payments for 1981.

It is my understanding that these negotiations are still in process, but at this stage it is not clear what the outcome of them will be. Undoubtedly there will be further word on that within the next several weeks. It is not our intention, as I suggested in this House the other day, to suspend any form of our assistance to Poland at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: It may be all very well for some countries which have different policies to suspend the application of those different policies, but it is not our policy to hurt the Polish people in any way in this time of difficulty for them by suspending our shipments of grain to them. We do not think that would be in their best interests.

As I understand this resolution, it would urge us to do even more than has been done up to this time, even though we are the largest per capita donor.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacGuigan: I might say that it would not be possible for us to ensure that our aid be given through non-governmental organizations as the motion requests—

Mr. Nielsen: Talk it out!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It being 2.15 p.m. it is my duty now to interrupt the debate. Oral questions.

An hon. Member: Put the question.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am sure there is consent to put the question.

Madam Speaker: Oral questions.

• (1415)

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, as an officer of the House I would appeal to Your Honour, I believe with the agreement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), to extend, by the time necessary to allow a vote to be taken, the period for Standing Order 43 motions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I am not at liberty to do that unless the House gives me unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: No. Oral questions.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I very deeply regret that the Secretary of State for External Affairs said no to the request by Madam Speaker for unanimous consent.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We are on oral questions. Certainly, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) realizes that.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—SAFETY OF CANADIAN NATIONALS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs whose refusal of unanimous consent to a motion which would have allowed this whole House to go on record in relation to a situation which is of grave concern to all Canadians, is a matter of deepest concern to me, and, I am sure, to all hon. members on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I want to ask the minister a question with regard to the approximately 250 Canadian nationals who are now in Poland. The Polish government has stated that those who wish to leave are free to do so. However, because of the situation there, leaving Poland is a very difficult undertaking. I wonder, in those circumstances, first, whether the minister would inform the House how many Canadian nationals have been successful in leaving Poland. Second, have there been any difficulties experienced by Canadian consular staff in locating and assisting Canadians who are trapped in Poland?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am sorry that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition tried to interfere with my right to speech in this House—

Mr. Beatty: That's absurd.

Mr. MacGuigan: —by preventing us from having the kind of full debate in which many hon. members on this side would wish to join. The Minister of Employment and Immigration would have been only too pleased to tell the House what he proposes to do concerning Polish immigrants.

Mr. Lawrence: You interfered with my right to vote.

Mr. MacGuigan: We would welcome the debate on the subject, if the opposition chooses to use an opposition day for this matter.

Mr. Epp: Right now.

Mr. MacGuigan: The Polish ambassador telephoned me last night to tell me that he had heard from his government in response to my representations the previous evening on a number of subjects, but he replied to only one, that is, the cutting off of communications, which is contrary to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations. He informed me that from today—I do not know what point of today he meant—that telecommunications, both coded and non-coded, would be restored. When that happens, it will, of course, enable us to have a full exchange of information—

Mr. Lawrence: Why is there no radio contact?

Mr. MacGuigan: —with our embassy in Warsaw.

At the present time, we have no knowledge of any difficulties which any Canadians, consular officials or others, are experiencing in Poland, but we have no count of those who have left. It has been difficult for people to leave, but we have also been told that air transportation will soon be restored. That was stated in the message from the Polish ambassador last night. That should enable us to see people allowed to leave the country.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the minister has said that he would be interested in full debate in the House. He knows there are no allotted days left this session. If he is genuinely interested in free debate in this House on the matter, I would suggest that he might make a statement on motions this afternoon, indicating the government's intentions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: There could then be full discussion. We will await the end of the question period to see if the minister is forthcoming with that statement on motions to indicate whether he is serious or not in his request that the House have an opportunity to express its views on this very serious crisis.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST THAT QUOTA BE INCREASED FOR REFUGEES FROM EASTERN EUROPE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and it relates to the situation in Poland. The minister stated that he would watch that situation very carefully and that if any changes took place, such as an international crisis, his government would "respond in a flexible and open manner".

In keeping with that commitment, I wonder if the minister is prepared to increase the present refugee total of 6,000 from eastern Europe. Some 35,000 Polish refugees are now crowded in Austrian camps. In light of the present situation those numbers can only increase. Will the minister take action to aid those refugees now by significantly increasing the quota, and by doing that on an urgent basis?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, we have been responding in a number of ways to the request and concern about applications for landing in Canada by Polish nationals. I want to indicate to him, and to other members of the House, that since we announced our special measures about two months ago we have already accepted close to 500 applications for landing directly from Poland. We have also given over 500 permits to Polish nationals already here in Canada. In addition, we have the special designation class which allows people to come directly from the Austrian camps. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will know that we increased that number to 6,000 this year, which is the full capacity of our processing at this time.

I can also indicate to the right hon. gentleman, now that he asks, that just today I announced a further extension because of the difficulty faced by Polish nationals wishing to leave the country at the present time by applying to our embassy. We will now accept landing applications sponsored by a Canadian citizen for any Polish person or family to be entered into in any of our visa offices around the world. All these applications, rather than having to originate in Warsaw, can now come from any third country around the world. This will substantially increase the ability of Poles to come into this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REFUGEES ADMITTED UNDER PRIVATE SPONSORSHIP

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I am pleased, and I am sure other members of the House are pleased, to know that the government has taken that additional step. I hope also that the government will consider very seriously, in light of the urgent circumstances, a further increase in the quota concerning Polish refugees in Austrian camps.

As the minister is aware, many Vietnamese refugees were sponsored privately by churches, by individuals and by families. Will the minister agree to apply to the Polish situation the principle of private sponsorship that was applied in the case of the Vietnamese refugees, so that additional Polish refugees will be able to come into Canada through the avenue of private sponsorship and not be included in the refugee total established by the government.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition will be pleased to know that over a year ago I signed an agreement with the Canadian Polish Congress which gives that organization the right to provide private sponsorship of refugees. Since that time the Canadian Polish Congress has provided that application for close to several hundred Polish individuals. That measure is already in effect. All I can say to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is that we will provide even further encouragement for other private sponsors or individuals in Canada, and we will be prepared to receive any application from any private sponsor who wants to bring in a Polish national.

QUERY RESPECTING EFFECT ON QUOTA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, just to be clear on this matter, is the minister saying that these refugees, brought in through private sponsorship, are refugees in excess of the quota, or are they subject to the quota?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, under our immigration regulations we do not count those people brought in under private sponsorship as part of the set general level. All we need is an indication by an organization such as the Canadian Polish Congress, or any five individuals, that they are prepared to band together to give certain guarantees. They will not be considered under our normal levels and therefore, it is open as far as the numbers they wish to bring into Canada.

APPLICATIONS FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister has allowed Polish visitors in Canada, who do not have relatives here, to have permits for up to one year. At the end of that time he will review the situation again. Will the minister now entertain a plan to allow these people to apply for landed immigrant status immediately, because many of them do want to stay here now?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the reason why we established a ministerial permit was to provide some element of a choice for those individuals. We are not saying that every individual necessarily would ultimately want to decide to stay in Canada. They may want to remain here only until such time as the situation in Poland clarifies itself and at that time they may decide to return.

We have established a general principle of one year's residency in Canada and we are allowing them to work during that time. As I said in my original statement, we will be very receptive to their applications. Because it is such an exceptional measure, one we have only applied to a few other countries, such as El Salvador and others, I think we would want to maintain the argument that they should be here on ministerial permits. I am sure we would then be prepared, as I said at the time, to accept any application for permanent landing when their renewals come forward.

REQUEST THAT OPTION BE GIVEN TO HOLDERS OF WORK PERMITS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I will ask the minister again if he will give consideration to providing an option for those people who are here on that 12-month basis, because they are in a very uncertain period right now. Many of them feel they will have to go back to Austria after the one year is up, and apply for landed immigrant status from offshore. They are prepared to settle here and be good citizens, and they want to apply for landed immigrant status now from within Canada. Would the minister provide that as an option for those people who are now here on a one-year work permit?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, we are certainly prepared to look at such options, but I would think it would require a substantial change in the ways in which our immigration procedures are conducted. As it is, we have given very wide latitude already, allowing them to stay here on a ministerial permit, a privilege which is not given to many other people or groups around the world. I can assure hon. members of the House that we are keeping a very careful and very close watch on the situation there. We are in close touch and consultation with the Canadian Polish organization, and during that consultation if it comes forward that further measures are required, we will respond in as sensitive a way then as we have in the past.

PROCEDURE RELATING TO STANDING ORDER 43 MOTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it is quite direct. The motion moved by the Leader of the Official Opposition, seconded by myself, called for four specific measures to which, it seems to me, no civilized Canadian could object at all. It seems to me that the Secretary of State for External Affairs took every opportunity to stop the House from taking a vote on that issue. Therefore my question to the minister is, why did he talk the motion out so the people of Canada, through their representatives in the House of Commons, could not vote on this profoundly important question?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as members of the House, including the hon. gentleman, know, we have already had a resolution passed unanimously by Parliament this week. We have seven opposition days left between now and the end of March.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We are going to recess tomorrow.

Mr. MacGuigan: The resolution—

An hon. Member: It was intentional; what a phony.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: The resolution which was moved by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, supported by the hon. member for Oshawa, was brought to my attention after I entered the House. I was working my way through it in the process of debate. There are many members of this House who would wish to debate such an important measure because there are many concerns expressed in this very complicated motion which involve non-interference in internal affairs. It is very important for the government, on a question of this kind, to set the bounds with respect to what we may or may not do under international law. We have clearly expressed our view on the crisis in Poland, and I am glad that members on the other side are prepared to do the same thing.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISCUSSION OF MOTION DEALING WITH POLISH AFFAIRS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I want to put my next question to the government House leader because he knows that under the rules of this House we could debate this matter at three o'clock if the government so decided. Considering that the four points are thoroughly responsible, recognizing the integrity of the Polish people, and are totally non-inflammatory in nature—they pertain to the problem of martial law, the rights of the workers to organize unions, the request that all outside states not intervene in Polish affairs and, finally, they simply refer to a request that we provide some aid in the form of food and other kinds of assistance to the Polish people—this is something one would have thought the Government of Canada could have supported without equivocation.

• (1430)

I would like to ask the government House leader if he will agree, under the rules of this House, that we have a brief opportunity at three o'clock to discuss this matter before us. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has just given us one of the reasons for wanting to say no at that time. He will have the opportunity to debate the matter at three o'clock.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): First of all, Madam Speaker, I fully agree with what was said by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. However, I am rather surprised at the request made by the leader of the New Democratic Party. This morning, at a meeting that included his House leader, we discussed the business of the House for today and tomorrow, and no one gave any indication that there was any desire to discuss this matter, either today or tomorrow. In any case, Madam Speaker, the request has taken us somewhat by surprise. Again, I agree with the statement made by the Secretary of State, but we could still set aside tomorrow as an opposition day, when the leader of the New Democratic Party or a representative of the Progressive Conservative Party could present the motion if they are really serious about it. In the circumstances, I am ready to consider this possibility. For today, the order of business was set on the basis of discussions we had with the House leaders a few hours ago. No one mentioned this request to me at the time—this is the first I have heard of it—and I think it deserves serious consideration. If the members on the opposite side want tomorrow to be an opposition day, I am prepared to give the request serious consideration.

[English]

REQUEST THAT HOUSE REVERT TO DISCUSSION OF STANDING ORDER 43 MOTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I normally respect the government House leader—and I mean that—in his dealings with the parties on this side of the House, but considering that the meeting that he referred to this morning involving House leaders of all the parties could not have dealt the government's reaction in advance to a motion which was moved in this House at two o'clock, I say with all respect that the argument he has just made is totally irrelevant.

An hon. Member: You are playing politics.

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to ask him is he now prepared to discuss with his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the possibility of reverting at three o'clock to this very important subject, if there is agreement on this side of the House—as I am sure there will be—so that the Government of Canada could indicate its position on the four points in the resolution, and so that members on this side of the House could also indicate that all of us in the House can make it clear that we are behind the people of Poland 100 per cent in their serious struggle, without jeopardizing at all the international situation in other respects.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am truly sorry that the leader of the New Democratic Party is trying to indulge in petty politics on such an important matter. We on this side of the House have shown that we are serious about showing support for the Polish people. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has answered very extensively the concerns raised by the NDP leader. I indicated just now and did so quite clearly, that I am prepared to consider a request that is entirely new to us and to set aside tomorrow as an opposition day, for the purpose of discussing this kind of motion. I fail to see how the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the New Democratic Party, could take offence at this show of generosity on our part.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance who once again is not in his seat, and with his budget, no wonder, I will address my question to the acting minister. In light of the Economic Council's advice to the government to take precisely the opposite tack to that being taken in the minister's budget, in order to reduce inflation and create jobs, will the government now agree to withdraw the budget and present the proposals in the form of a white paper before these recessionary measures can be implemented? Is it the aim of the government to destroy the economy simply to save face?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at the hon. member's attitude and at the way she has allowed herself to be influenced by a report that was presented today. She could just as well have looked at the inflation figures and noticed that the inflation rate dropped from 13 per cent in July to 12.2 per cent in November, an indication that the government's firm resolve and determination, and the measure it is taking to reduce inflation, are effective. These measures are restated in the budget, and the government intends to see to it that inflation rates are brought down so as to make our economic climate more favourable.

PROVISIONS AFFECTING EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. I am surprised at the way he would misinterpret a report prepared by an independent advisory body to his government. Possibly he can clear up another point which was raised by the missing Minister of Finance who claims that he is simply being misunderstood. Yesterday the Minister of Finance told the House that the only employee benefits named in his budget as being subject to taxation were transportation passes and board and lodging. He said, "no other subject was raised in the budget." Well, the budget papers specifically say, on page 20:

> Among the benefits to become taxable are:
> Employer contributions to private health service plans and dental plans on behalf of employees.

An hon. Member: Order.

Miss Carney: Would the real finance minister please stand up, either the one who feels these benefits are not taxable or the one who wrote the budget?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I wonder why the hon. member, who seems to have read the budget speech very carefully, is asking questions about the government's intentions. She has the budget, she has read it, and she certainly does not have to worry about intentions because the government's firm resolve as well as its intentions are stated in the budget. If she did not quite understand the budget, she should read it again and she will find the answers to her own questions.

CARTELS

REQUEST THAT URANIUM CARTEL GAGGING ORDER BE WITHDRAWN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. As the minister is aware, an order in council was recently passed partially lifting the gag order under the uranium information security regulations, on documents and information available to the public with respect to cartel activities on the part of a number of companies and individuals, including government Crown corporations. On the basis of the fact that all the litigation in the United States has now been completed and there is really no purpose served in terms of continuing this gag order, will the minister now agree to recommend to his cabinet colleagues the withdrawal of the entire regulation so that people in Canada will have the opportunity of a full investigation, and an opportunity of looking at the documents and information with respect to the cartel?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, we have authorized a change of the order to permit access to some documents by people who are the defendants in these cases. With regard to the statement by the hon. member to the effect that a gag order is no longer needed, I think that it is still needed—

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Chrétien: —but I am glad he implicitly recognized that we were well advised to have the gag order.

REASONS FOR NON-REMOVAL OF ORDER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the only excuse the government has given so far for keeping the gag order in place is so that it can protect its own cronies, as far as protecting Senator Jack Austin and others is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There are many civil actions which could well be brought with respect to an illegal domestic cartel. It is alleged, for example, that the people of Ontario have paid and lost hundreds of millions of dollars with respect to artificial uranium pricing. In order to allow provincial governments and agencies and utilities to investigate their civil opportunities for recovery, I would again ask the minister why he does not allow the gag order to be removed in order for justice to take its course?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I wish to remind the hon. member that there was an investigation into this matter, as recommended by Mr. Bertrand, which took quite a few months. When we received Mr. Bertrand's report, I personally approved the report's recommendations after discussing them with the lawyer who had served on the case for Mr. Bertrand, and who has now approached the courts. I think we are being entirely open about this, and we have agreed with all the recommendations we received on this matter. The case is now before the courts, and we have allowed the gag order to be lifted to a certain extent, so that lawyers for the defence can prepare their case. I believe that everything is quite in order. As for the hon. member's allegations that a gag order is no longer necessary because litigation has been completed in the United States, I do not believe that is quite the case, but I will look into this, and we may change our approach if necessary.

CANADA POST

SHIPMENT OF GROCERIES TO NORTHERN COMMUNITIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. As the minister may know, prior to the establishment of the Canada Post Corporation the postmaster general permitted groceries to be shipped via parcel post into isolated Indian communities located in the northern regions of Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba. This procedure enabled food costs to be reduced by as much as $50 per week for a family of six. It has come to my attention that the Canada Post Corporation has requested the RCMP to examine this practice to discern whether it, or some aspect of it, may constitute a criminal offence.

I would like the Solicitor General to tell this House how it can possibly be a crime to help people who are living at or below the subsistence level to receive the nutrition they need by way of parcel post service.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, Canada Post and the new corporation have been engaged in the practice of carrying perishable foods to persons in northern communities. There is absolutely nothing improper or illegal about that. It is a fine service Canada Post is providing, and I want to assure the House that the allegations which have been made and are under investigation by the RCMP—and to which I do not want to give more currency by repeating them—having nothing to do with regular customers of that service who are engaging in a perfectly lawful practice and hopefully will continue to be served by Canada Post in that way for many years.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PRIMACY OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Yesterday the minister released a native claims policy which says that "persons of non-native origin who have acquired for various purposes rights in the land area claimed are equally deserving of consideration". Does this mean, for example, that a company with oil drilling rights in the Northwest Territories is as deserving of consideration as the aboriginal people who have a claim in that area and, if this is so, will the minister change his policy to recognize the primacy of aboriginal rights rather than seeing them in competition with the exploitive rights of multinational corporations?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member should read that in the context of discussions which have been going on for some time during land claims negotiations.

An hon. Member: Smokey the Bear.

Mr. Nielsen: When you need a shower, you can't find one.

Mr. Kempling: You have been sending smoke signals to the natives.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I can tell hon. members that is probably the last time I will have a non-partisan reception in my ministerial office.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Christmas is coming. I could not make out whether the minister had finished his answer.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No.

Madam Speaker: Then he has the floor.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, if I may be permitted to finish my answer, all that clause in the land claims policy means is that already alienated interests of third parties cannot be ignored. They have to be dealt with in all fairness. We cannot just obliterate them in a land claims settlement, so when they are dealt with they will have to be dealt with fairly. Those third party interests will have to be accepted and compensated for in some fashion in over-all settlements with Indian people.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I take it from the minister's answer that aboriginal rights claims will not be prejudicated by these other claims.

NEGOTIATION OF LAND CLAIMS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question relates to another statement in the policy that where claims are made in a province the province must be involved in claims negotiations. Considering the past intransigence of the British Columbia government—where all major claims are still waiting negotiation—what steps is the minister prepared to take if a province refuses to negotiate?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the present policy is to be constantly urging the provinces to meet with us to resolve this question. In my view it has not become necessary to adopt any alternative method of proceeding simply because even in the province of British Columbia, as the hon. member is aware, the attorney general there has indicated that he is supportive of the negotiator we have in place with reference to the Nishga claim. His officials are participating with us in the over-all settlement. That was not the situation in that province no more than a year or so ago. I am happy to say that the situation with respect to provinces assisting and co-operating with us—not just British Columbia but several other provinces—is changing for the better.

GRAIN

POSSIBILITY OF EMBARGO ON EXPORTS TO EASTERN EUROPE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as the minister responsible for responding to questions in this House respecting the Canadian Wheat Board. My question has to do with the situation in Poland. We all certainly hope that tensions will not increase and the problems will not intensify in Poland, but if they do, there is some indication that we could see a total embargo into all eastern bloc countries, possibly initiated by the United States. If that happens, Canadian grain would, of course, be the first affected.

Is the government giving any thought—although I hope it would never have to use it—to a contingency plan in case there is an embargo and in case we find that exports to that part of the world are cut off?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there was at least one "if" and perhaps a couple of others in the question. I think this is one occasion on which it might be better not to indulge in speculation. The Secretary of State of External Affairs has said very clearly today that we intend to continue our sales of grain to Poland. I think we would be better to leave it at that for the time being.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the minister is very simple. Can he indicate to the House what the policy of the government on grain embargoes in any part of the world is?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this is not an easy question to answer on the spur of the moment, but if I may express a personal view on the subject I think it has often been demonstrated very clearly in the past—I used to be the minister of industry, trade and commerce—that embargoes are not easy to administer and, generally speaking, do not produce what they were intended to produce in the first place. That is my own reasoning on the concept of embargoes, but it will be for the government as a whole to decide what to do if circumstances such as those indicated by the hon. member should ever develop. And, I hope, as he does, that they will not.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES ON ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and it has to do with urea formaldehyde. Would the minister tell us how negotiations with the provinces regarding some form of assistance for home owners affected with urea formaldehyde are going, and will he soon be prepared to issue a statement covering this entire issue?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, discussions with the provinces are continuing. Unfortunately I am not in a position today to respond one way or another on the type of aid we would like to be able to give to the victims of urea formaldehyde. I hope in the near future I will be in a position to announce the intentions of the Government of Canada in this regard.

Mr. Nielsen: Announce them in the House.

AIRPORTS

CALLING OF TENDERS FOR ADVERTISING CONCESSION

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I tried to get some information on this issue on May 25 when I put a question on the Order Paper, and it was not answered. In light of the Auditor General's report in which a detailed audit examination of Transport Canada's airport concessions was recommended, specifically in relation to the sum in excess of $5 million which the government lost due to an unauthorized 2½-year extension granted to the duty-free shop concessionaire at Toronto International Airport, will the minister assure the House that tenders will be called immediately for the concession for advertising—repeat, advertising—at Canadian airports which has not been publicly tendered for 15 years?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this is being done now. We are now developing a regime for that particular activity of our airports. I do not see anything irregular now. On the subject of the duty-free shop, yes, indeed, I am the first one to recognize that the delay was extraordinarily long. But my hon. friend might want to agree to the fact that, here again, the Department of Transport had to develop a regime for the foreign operation of duty-free shops. I agree that it took too much time, but it was not an easy definition to reach.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, may I just say that I thought the minister and the government would have learned something from Sky Shops.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, we did.

RAILWAYS

FUTURE OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since both he and the Minister of Agriculture have been making statements about the Crow rate, and since the Crow rate has great impact in the economy of the prairie provinces, and since two of the three prairie provincial governments support its retention, as did three Royal Commissions, which researched the problem very well, will the minister assure the House that the government has no plans to change the Crow rate either now or in the near future?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I cannot do so, Madam Speaker. But having received a letter today from the leader of the NDP, I can assure him and the NDP that it will not be done over the Christmas recess.

GRAIN HANDLING SYSTEM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, since farm net income is projected to drop 15 per cent in 1982, and since the Crow rate is part of the Confederation bargain—trading tariffs in exchange for this special rate—will the Minister of Transport tell the House whether or not he shares the vision of his department and of the previous minister, the Hon. Otto Lang, to centralize the grain handling system in such a way that it will impact heavily on local communities in the prairies, the kind of program that has been vociferously opposed by the prairie people?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, one of the ways to oppose an idea is to deform it. The NDP has been very good at it when it comes to the Crow rate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: It has never been the view of those of us who believe it might be time to look at the question of modernizing the Crow rate—it has never been the intention of any person that is worth any respect to eliminate the Crow rate. This is a straw man that the NDP has created. No one in his right mind wants to eliminate the Crow rate right off the surface. No one will deny the concept of the "Crow benefit". Those of us who believe that the Crow rate should be modernized are quite willing and eager to accommodate that concept of the Crow benefit. So stop deforming the idea.

UNITED NATIONS

ISRAELI ANNEXATION OF GOLAN HEIGHTS—STATUS OF CANADIAN MEMBERS OF OBSERVER FORCE

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Since 1974 Canada has had approximately 200 military personnel involved in the United Nations Truce Supervisory Organization Disengagement Observer Force on the Golan Heights. We have had many other personnel in the region during the years previous to 1974, dating back to 1948. In the light of the recent action of the Israeli government with respect to the annexation of the Golan Heights, will the Minister of National Defence give a report to the House on the status of the members of the Canadian Armed Forces who presently make up the Canadian Observer Force in place now on the Golan Heights?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, following the most unfortunate action by Israel on the Golan Heights, the status of our observer group there has not changed. As the hon. member knows, we have 190 military people there and they are responsible for communications, logistics, and technical support to our Austrian, Polish and Finnish friends who are with us in this observer force. We have daily contact with the commander. Every day we ask him what is the situation. I might tell the hon. member that his answer yesterday was that "the situation is normal, there is no imminent danger, UN forces are not at a higher state of alert, morale is good, and they expect to have a pleasant Christmas."

PENITENTIARIES

REPORT ON MATSQUI PRISON RIOT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The officials of his department have completed their study on the riot in Matsqui prison last summer. He has released it to the police chief in the area. The officials know what the study says. The prisoners can have news conferences and dump on the guards. Only the guards cannot defend themselves. Will the minister make that report available to the guards so that they can defend themselves and maintain some semblance of morale in the prison?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the guards did have an opportunity the night that I visited Matsqui to express their views and they held a press conference. So far as making the report public, for the sake of the guards, I point out to the House that the purpose of that report is not to level criticism at the guards but that the purpose of the report is to improve the security of the institution.

If I were to change the long-standing policy of the confidentiality of those reports, the Inspector General, who gathers them, would not have the benefit of confidential disclosures from the hundreds of individuals whom he interviews in connection with the preparation of those reports, and they would not be nearly as useful as they are now. If I were to make them public, reviewing, as they often do, some of the security weaknesses of the institutions, they would be a great benefit to inmates who are considering escaping. Those are the only reasons why those reports are not made public.

I gave it to the police chief so that any suggestion of wrong doing or cover-up could be exploded. The only reason for keeping those reports confidential is a good reason, and I intend to continue that practice.

RELEASE OF REPORT TO POLICE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, the minister has already violated confidentiality by releasing it to the police chief. If he is concerned about the reputation of the force with the police chief and the police departments, why does he not allow the prison guards to defend themselves?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I was willing to release it to the police chief because I understood that he would be prepared to respect the confidentiality of sources of the report and that he would not disclose to the inmates any of the structural or other weaknesses in the institution. To go beyond that I think is taking risks with that institution, that I am not prepared to take.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT ON CONDITIONS IN FOREIGN SERVICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has to do with the report of the Royal Commission on Conditions in the Foreign Service. Miss McDougall, in a very commendable way, has pointed out some real difficulties with respect to foreign service officers serving abroad with their families, and in other areas which must be of concern to the minister. In view of the fact that she has found that there is a great deal of cynicism in the foreign service and about the government's intentions to implement any of the recommendations that she might make, will the minister advise the House what are the government's intentions with respect to her recommendations?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the McDougall report was commissioned by the Prime Minister. He will be making a statement on it in due course. I hope to have an opportunity of reading the report during the recess. I have not yet had a chance to open the covers. In any event it will not be for me to make a statement on behalf of the government. There will be government discussion, and at the appropriate time the Prime Minister will indicate our views.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, when the minister is reading the report during the recess, will he pay particular regard to page 50 which talks about the implementation and review process? Having regard to his experience, would he consider recommending to his colleagues in government that there be special consideration in Parliament given to the findings of the report, and the recommendations of Miss McDougall, and that there be responses from the government as to its intentions with respect to the findings? Would he undertake to the House that that would be his recommendation, that Parliament will have a chance to look at these in depth outside the estimates process?

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, when the government has a position on the report we will be releasing it. I will not give any advance commitments to the hon. member, except to assure him that I will read that page very carefully.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON SERVICE MORALE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, regarding a statement on the report, on Tuesday of this week the minister said in a press conference that his general experience with the foreign service had been that morale was very good. Could the minister explain this? Has he been shielded from the morale problem in the department by his senior officers, or is he denying the validity of the findings of the McDougall report?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I was not at that time commenting upon the McDougall report, nor do I intend to do so now. But may I say that I have a good deal of experience in meeting foreign service officers in all parts of the world. If the hon. member will read the text of Miss McDougall's press conference he will see that she herself stated that the report puts things out of focus, that on balance it is a good foreign service with good morale. By singling out the various problems with it in the report, she said at her press conference that this gives an over-all false impression, that she is picking out spots rather than commenting upon the whole.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Wednesday, December 16, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I ask the government House leader what the business will be for tomorrow, and in the event that we might possibly finish Bill C-53 before adjournment today, whether there is anything for back-up, and as far as he can take us into the new year after January 25.

I am sorry the Minister of Finance is not here, but while I am on my feet I ask the government House leader to refer to Hansard of November 27, 1981, at page 13384, where the Minister of Finance stipulated that he would be providing the hon. member for Calgary West with a breakdown of the scientific study which would show the impact on senior citizens in this country of his indirect taxes on their capacity to buy food, to pay rent and to buy clothing. This was followed up with a letter from the hon. member for Calgary West on December 7 requesting that information which has not yet been supplied. Before we adjourn tomorrow, perhaps the government House leader might consult the Minister of Finance in the hope that that information might be provided tomorrow.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, on the last point, I will talk to the Minister of Finance and inquire about the matter. So far as House business is concerned for the rest of today, as the hon. member mentioned we will deal with Bill C-53. There is an understanding among House leaders to obtain second reading of the bill before the end of the day. If we were to obtain second reading of the bill earlier than ten o'clock tonight, the next item of business would be Bill C-10.

Also we discussed earlier the quick adoption through all stages of a bill related to the National Energy Board. This could be done either today or tomorrow. Subject to further talks, we will decide later whether we will bring it on today or tomorrow.

So far as the business for tomorrow is concerned, if hon. members opposite do not wish to have an allotted day, we will deal with the bill respecting the National Energy Board, if it is not disposed of today, as first item of business. The second item of business for tomorrow will be Bill C-11 through all stages, followed by Bill C-45 through all stages. This is the fruit of our negotiations and it was agreed among ourselves in the spirit of Christmas, I assume. Later in the afternoon we were supposed to have royal assent on a few bills. If necessary, we will resume debate tomorrow on Bill C-10, if it has not been dealt with and terminated today. But Bill C-10 would be the last item of business for tomorrow.

[Translation]

As regards the business of the House after the Christmas recess, Madam Speaker, the hon. members are aware that the period between January 25, when the House resumes its sittings, and March 26 is a supply period during which the government must allot the opposition a total of seven days, the first of which will either be tomorrow or Tuesday, January 26, when we come back. The opposition could then discuss the topic of its choice, as is customary. In addition, on Monday and the days following January 26, we shall be considering a bill that is very important to the farmers in our country, namely Bill C-85, an act to establish a corporation called Canagrex, designed to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada. Once this bill gets second reading, depending of course when this occurs, the government intends to introduce for discussion and debate the following bills ensuing from the budget, subject to confirmation in due time, namely the borrowing authority bill and another bill to amend the Customs Tariff Act. In any event, everything I have just said, with the exception of the Canagrex bill, is subject to reconfirmation in January, and I shall of course be in touch with my colleagues, the House leaders, to give them reasonable notice as appropriate.

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I have just a point of clarification for the government House leader, concerning tomorrow's deliberations. He referred to Bill C-10. I wonder whether it was a slip of the tongue and he meant to say Bill C-11. Did he really mean Bill C-10? If so, it would cause some concern for me.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely correct and I was absolutely correct. I mentioned both Bill C-11 and Bill C-10.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

TABLING OF INITIAL RESPONSE OF GOVERNMENT TO OBSTACLES REPORT

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, as the minister responsible for co-ordinating the government's response to the Obstacles report, I have the pleasure today to table in the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2), the federal government's initial response to the report tabled in the House earlier this year by the Special Parliamentary Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped.

PETITIONS

MR. WISE—PROPOSED TAXATION OF LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and the responsibility today to table a petition signed by the citizens of St. Thomas in Elgin county. This petition reflects the strong protest of Elgin constituents regarding the changes in the taxation of life insurance policies as indicated in the November 12 budget.

• (1510)

This petition reflects the disappointments and the hostility of life insurance companies, sales representatives and thousands of policyholders across the country.

I sincerely hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) will recognize this blunder and have the courage to withdraw these provisions immediately.

MISS CARNEY—CRIMINAL CODE—STRENGTHENING OF PROVISIONS RESPECTING PROSTITUTION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petitition on behalf of my constituents who live in the west end of Vancouver. The purpose of this petition, which is signed by 678 concerned residents, is to demonstrate to the government the strength of their belief that they have a right to live in peace and quiet in their neighbourhood to the same extent as that which is enjoyed by other Canadians.

In the face of continuing inaction by the federal government, the nature of the petition is to demand that the Criminal Code be strengthened to give police the powers to cope with the problems associated with street prostitution because this has overtaken the west end and threatens to destroy forever the quality of life long enjoyed by residents.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find that it is in order and that you will understand the urgency and the justice of their request.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. DANTZER—CRIMINAL CODE—MEASURE RESPECTING GUN CONTROL

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. This petition was signed by 59 residents of Okanagan North who indicate that when the government is dealing with gun control it must ensure that it does not infringe upon the rights and privileges of law abiding citizens who own and use guns for legitimate purposes. The petition registers the citizens' concern regarding the proposed private member's legislation, Bill C-451.

MR. FRIESEN—ECONOMIC POLICY OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents as well as people from other areas of the Fraser Valley. These 52 signatures represent individuals from Abbotsford, Coquitlam, Mission, Clearbrook, Langley, Surrey and White Rock. The substance of the petition concerns the government's economic policy and I should like to read the four points which are of greatest concern, as follows:

Wherefore we demand that the following programs be implemented:

That: 1. Interest rates be reduced,

2. Adequate, affordable housing become recognized as a major government principle and objective,

3. Mortgage interest be made a tax deduction or a tax credit,

4. Limits be placed on mortgage interest increase upon renewal.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Order Paper Questions

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,153, 3,155, 3,156, 3,188, 3,273 and 3,444.

COST OF FLIGHTS OF ADMIRAL FALLS

Question No. 3,153—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,196 which stated in part that Admiral Falls made some of his flights on commercial aircraft, in the case of all the flights listed, what was the cost of such flights to the taxpayer and, in each case, what category of service was used, including occasions when the Admiral flew first class?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): With reference to question No. 1,196 no commercial flights were made by Admiral Falls. The first sentence of para. (a) emphasizes that point—"All flights were service air".

TOTAL AIR TRAVEL COSTS OF ADMIRAL FALLS

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,196 which stated in part that the total air travel costs for Admiral Falls, his aide-de-camp and his military secretary to visit Burbank, California and Colorado Springs, Colorado from August 28 to September 1, 1978 amounted to $7,157, for what reason were regular scheduled commercial flights not used and what is the justification for spending such an amount of taxpayers' funds on a special aircraft for the Admiral?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): The use of regularly scheduled commercial aircraft for the visit of Admiral Falls to Burbank, California to discuss the acquisition of the CP 140 Aurora and to Colorado Springs to pay an official visit to the commander-in-chief of NORAD, was precluded because of the limited time available to the Chief of the Defence Staff.

CMHC REPOSSESSIONS

Question No. 3,156—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 592 which stated in part that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation had acquired through repossession 44,890 units and 21,980 units over a number of years, what were the total number of repossessions in each of the past eight calendar years?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

	Total no. of units acquired by the mortgage insurance fund in each of the past eight calendar years	Total no. of units acquired by CMHC in each of the past eight calendar years
1973	2,728	1,968

ARMED FORCES STRENGTH IN WESTERN CANADA

Question No. 3,188—Mr. Lambert:

1. What is the strength and location of all naval, air force and ground personnel in (a) Manitoba (b) Saskatchewan (c) Alberta (d) British Columbia (e) the Yukon (f) the Northwest Territories?

2. What are the names of all active armed forces bases in western Canada and the Territories and which bases were deactivated in the past two years?

3. What is the over-all ratio of male to female personnel in western Canada and the Territories?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2 Canadian Forces bases are no longer exclusively manned by personnel identified to one element or another. In providing the data in the table it is to be noted that maritime, land or air elements are predominating rather than exclusive on the bases so annotated. Where a single element cannot be exclusively identified, it is because of its tri-service orientation.

The only base deactivated in the past two years is CFS Churchill, Manitoba.

DND RESEARCH INTO RADIATION HAZARD

Question No. 3,273—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence award a contract for a study on radiation-induced nausea and vomiting using rats and dogs and, if so, to whom?

2. Was the government asked to conduct these experiments in support of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and, if not, who decided on the need for such a study?

3. Did the department check with its NATO allies to see if such experiments had been performed elsewhere and, if so, what were its findings?

4. Will the experiments be performed in co-operation with any other country and, if so, which country?

5. During the experiments, how long will an irradiated animal be kept alive?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. The Department of Supply and Services on behalf of the Department of National Defence awarded a contract to study radiation induced nausea and vomiting using dogs to the University of Ottawa.

2. No. The department considered these experiments to be necessary as part of its study on the biological effects of ionizing radiation from nuclear weapons.

3. NATO allies have been consulted and following a world search of literature, it was determined that this work has not been done before.

4. No.

5. Up to 12 hours; and in this respect attention is drawn to the last two sentences of parts 1(a), (b) and (c) of question No. 2,507 tabled on July 16, 1981, and published in Hansard No. 232 page 11598.

PURCHASE OF AIRCRAFT REFUELLER TRUCKS

Question No. 3,444—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Department of National Defence recently order 157 aircraft refueller trucks at a cost of $121,000 each and, if so, where are the trucks to be stationed?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Yes, DND contracted through DSS with Remtec Inc. for 157 aircraft refueller trucks plus spare parts and operating and maintenance manuals. The vehicles will be positioned at 19 Canadian Forces Bases across Canada and in support of Canadian forces overseas.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the other questions stand?

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, once again I would ask the parliamentary secretary if he can offer the House any satisfactory explanation why question No. 2,042, relating to the Prime Minister's world tour a year ago, has not been answered. It is shameful that the people of Canada cannot learn some of these facts.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will take note of the representation made by the hon. member. He should be here tomorrow and he may be pleasantly surprised.

Mr. Stevens: I will be here.

Mr. Pinard: You will not regret it.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO SEXUAL OFFENCES AND THE PROTECTION OF YOUNG PERSONS

The House resumed from Wednesday, July 8, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-53, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to sexual offences and the protection of young persons and to amend certain other acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting to see how urgencies can evaporate in this House. I recall that when we were dealing with Bill C-53 last July, the government urged that the bill just had to get to committee in July or else Parliament would have to continue sitting. Then, of course, the postal situation intervened and I never saw such scampering in my life as there was to get Parliament to adjourn. Everyone knows the results of what happened in that period. From July until now there has been no movement on the bill but, or course, priorities change.

As we come to the end of another session, it has been decided that it is appropriate that the House give some consideration to Bill C-53. It is so long since we last discussed it that I am afraid it will be very difficult for hon. members to recall what Bill C-53 is all about. In the time allotted to me today I shall try to indicate to the House what the bill is about just for the purpose of framing the debate. It involves some major amendments to the criminal law.

I am conscious that in this debate I am following a very distinguished counsel, the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). In the early part of the debate he made a speech in this House that will ring through the annals of Parliament as an indication of his great depth of understanding of the criminal law, an understanding such as is rarely seen in this House. He is a counsel so pre-eminent that he was one of the very few in the province of Saskatchewan—a Conservative under New Democratic Party government—who was able to convince the powers that be that in the year 1973 he should be made a Queen's Counsel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I think his pre-eminence at the bar should not be forgotten. He is a learned lecturer, a practitioner of great repute and all who rise to speak in this debate are conscious that they speak in the shadow of the fine parliamentary performance that will grace the pages of Hansard forever and which will be of great assistance to the committee when it considers this bill.

My friend in the New Democratic Party from Regina said that they gave him a Queen's Counsel because they thought he might then leave town. He did; he was elected to Parliament where he has distinguished himself. I think Parliament is the richer for his presence.

Having unburdened myself of that accolade I want to turn now to a discussion of the bill. As the title states, this is "An act to amend the Criminal Code in relation to sexual offences and the protection of young persons". These matters have absorbed the attention of members of this House for some time. The efforts of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) on behalf of young people and their relationship to the law have been outstanding. I think this bill is an important step in advancing the cause that he has championed in this House.

To enhance the protection of children, the bill will create new offences resulting from the sexual exploitation of young people by adults and against child pornography. In addition, other changes will assist in the prosecution of child abuse cases and cases of abduction of young children in custody disputes.

There are really four broad principles contained in this bill. The first is the protection of the integrity of the person. In a society like ours, it is a fundamental principle that the criminal law, which is a federal responsibility in terms of law-making, speaks to the protection of the integrity of the person. I guess the reason and the purpose behind laws, and the reason we have Parliament, police, and courts, is so that people will not only find equality before the law, but also protection so that they can move freely about their business providing they do so within the law. That principle really means that every person in our society is entitled to live free from violence and free from fear, as much as is possible. That is the purpose of those instruments of justice and the administration of justice about which I have spoken. In terms of the purpose of this bill, it is clearly implied that no one should be compelled to engage in sexual activity without his or her consent. That is the basic premise of these amendments.

The second broad principle is the protection of children and special groups. The need for this is obvious. Children are not deemed to be adults who are able to make certain decisions. If one looks at the history of law in Canada, children have been treated differently from adults. The law has always indicated that those who are not mature and cannot make judgments ought not to be held responsible for making judgments under the law. Children require special protection from the physical and emotional consequences of activities with which they cannot properly deal. There has been a sufficient number of reported incidents which fall against this principle to indicate to anyone who considers the matter that we must be very vigilant in ensuring that the law is adequate for that purpose.

The third broad area reflected in this bill is the government's duty to safeguard public decency. As the parliamentary secretary said on behalf of the minister, society has a right to expect laws which protect its members from other individuals and which safeguard public morals. That is a broad principle. There are naturally questions as to how that is addressed by this bill, but it is a thread which passes through the bill. As society changes, this must be addressed from time to time.

The fourth broad principle is also of significance. It is also the proper subject of increasing attention today. It concerns the elimination of sexual discrimination in the country. That is the part of the bill which has gained the greatest attention in society, by women's groups, by lawyers, by learned legal authors and by others who were interested in the evolution of criminal law.

Therefore, this bill creates some new crimes. It replaces rape and indecent assault in the part of the code dealing with offences against the person and reputation. This change would separate violent sexual attacks from the concept of sexual morality. The bill would eliminate the stigma attached to terms such as "indecent assault" and "rape". There would be two new offences, the first being sexual assault and the second being aggravated sexual assault. Assault causing serious bodily harm through the use of a weapon would be known as aggravated sexual assault. I think that all of us who are involved in the law remember rape trails under the present court system in which great emphasis was placed on required evidence of penetration to prove that the crime of rape had been committed. In the event this bill becomes law, that will be no longer necessary.

I believe that everyone who has practised or observed in the criminal courts has gone through a certain amount of emotional turmoil in watching an attempt being made to prove penetration, and in watching the effect of the evidence adduced during the trial on the people involved. Indeed, what concerns me about the law as it presently exists, with its preoccupation on penetration, is something which was raised by the Law Reform Commission some time ago. The commission indicated that many cases involving grievous sexual assault have not led to conviction for the very serious offence of rape, but, rather, to conviction for the lesser offence of indecent assault. I have a feeling that the amendments which have been proposed in this bill will go a long way toward removing that from the law.

I want to say one thing. I do not intend to speak for very long because it is the intention of our party and this House, I believe, to have this bill dealt with today. However, I want to say something to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) who has come into the House, about the practice of his department with regard to legislation. His department has the practice of putting a number of concepts dealing with the broad field of criminal law, or any other field, into an omnibus bill. When that occurs, Parliament has great difficulty in dealing with the matter in any particular way at that stage of the bill or legislation. A former hon. member of this House, Mr. Eldon Woolliams, Q.C., of Calgary, who is a very distinguished lawyer, made the point time and time again that there could be difficulty if we deal with a huge number of things which are perhaps strung together generally, but which deal with separate principles.

I have enumerated four very important principles with which this bill deals. Members of Parliament may have views with regard to one principle or another, yet they must consider it all in the scope of one bill. While the minister is here, I hope he will consider that particular problem.

I suggest it could be dealt with in another way. When the government considers a bill of this nature which deals with a whole host of matters, these items could be forwarded in advance, before a bill is brought to the House of Commons, by way of a white paper to the justice committee. The justice committee could deal with the matter before the government made a commitment to a particular principle as set forth in the bill. Experts could be called to look at the legislation in advance, to consider all of its elements, to see where it might be changed or improved, and to consider what should be dropped. Then, when the omnibus bill came forward for debate on second reading, if we must deal with an omnibus bill, the principles would have been discussed by Members of Parliament who are particularly interested in justice and legal matters.

I think this would do two things. It would allow a department to have responses from public interest groups in advance. It would allow Parliament to deal with a number of principles in a way they cannot be dealt with in debate and on second reading in the House. It would also move toward finding some consensus with respect to what the law ought to be in Parliament, and in dealing with affairs which are of great interest to all hon. members of the House. It is important that we recognize the difficulty of handling this kind of omnibus bill on second reading in the House of Commons.

I am glad the minister is here to listen to this suggestion. A great deal of time could be saved in the House of Commons by transferring much of that debate through the subject matter approach before the legislation is finally put down. I remind the minister of the experience of the House concerning immigration legislation which was brought in by his government. The green paper was used with respect to legislation which fundamentally changed the immigration laws of the country. At that time, abuse was heaped upon a joint committee which did some travelling as a result of that green paper. However, as the minister will recall, the concepts set forth in that green paper were dealt with by the committee and the public.

As a result, there was guidance to the department, to the minister of employment and immigration and to the government with respect to what society really thought about immigration and what the true problems really were. The legislation that came out of that was responsive, at least in terms of this House of Commons. It was so responsive that, as I recollect it, there were only four days spent on second reading of a very complicated bill. It got over the problem of the omnibus nature of the bill. It is something which should commend itself to the minister in terms of dealing with a number of principles arranged side by side in a piece of legislation that can cause great difficulty in focusing upon those principles for the purposes of a debate.

As you perhaps know, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of non-controversial items in the bill. I am concerned that nowhere in Sections 166, 177 and 168(1) is there any definition of what constitutes sexual misconduct. A definition of that is nowhere to be found in this bill. I think this can cause some difficulty in terms of the application of the law. I hope that in the course of studying this bill, the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will try to find some definition. If that does not happen, then the courts will have to take a close look and come up with something that constitutes what is sexual misconduct in any given set of circumstances.

It is important when we are making some new law in the matter that the criminal law define rather specifically for the benefit of the accused as well as the benefit of society what the rights and responsibilities and the limits of conduct are in accordance with that law.

One other question I think the committee will have to consider concerns the sentences that are set forth in the bill. Some of them are rather light. One matter brought to my attention by men and women in my constituency as well as those people I meet as I travel across the country, and also mentioned in letters, concerns a developing sense of disrespect for the law. Policemen tell me that sentences in some cases are really licences to carry on an illegal activity, that the element of deterrence is gradually being eroded from the criminal law and that the criminal law itself is not providing a sense of determination by government, as they see it, by the system of the administration of justice. I hear these things from policemen, and I am sure the minister has received letters from policemen regarding that matter. But more and more ordinary members of society, who are either the beneficiaries of the law or perhaps from time to time subject to it, but at least those who would like to be beneficiaries, are saying that something is happening with respect to sentencing, with respect to parole and with respect to bail. People say now that attitudes are hardening, that sentences are too light and that people are getting off too easily. There are some areas within this bill where sentences are set out. I think the committee has to look at those areas with respect to the general concern that is evident in society.

The law that exists, particularly the criminal law, gives a message to the community. It sets a certain standard for the community and demands something of the community. That message has to be that we are within reason, when they are reasonable, behind the law enforcement agencies of the country; that a criminal act, an act outside the law, is viewed seriously and that the administration of justice in all of its fields views breaches of the law seriously. That is not to say we do not temper justice with mercy, but the public is demanding, and I think they have a right to demand, that sentences be firm and that there are messages for those who contemplate breaking the law. However, some people will not listen to those messages. We make mistakes sometimes in thinking that criminals think normally. They do not. Having dealt with them at both ends of the counsel table, I have found they do not. It is important that a message goes out. From that point of view we will have to look at some of the sentences in this bill.

There has been a great deal of public comment. No doubt the committee will have the benefit of advice from the Department of Justice as well as input from a great number of people who are concerned with all of the elements in the bill. It is not the kind of bill that should be delayed. It is one that should be dealt with appropriately because of the nature of the bill and the fact that it deals with a number of matters.

I want to say that I am very pleased that the Minister of Justice has returned from launching his leadership campaign in the United Kingdom and is here to listen to my speech. I want to express to him every good wish for Christmas.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in paying tribute to the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who has been working on this bill. I was not aware that he was a Queen's Counsel, but I am aware that he has a keen interest in the people of this country and in the unity of Canada. That, in my view, is even better than being a Queen's Counsel.

I want to deal with some items in the bill. I cannot say that I am enthusiastic about everything in this bill, nor are my constituents. It is my responsibility to bring to the attention of the Minister of Justice who is sponsoring this bill some of the concerns of the people and some of the changes we would like to see in this bill.

The title of the bill is very positive. It reads:

An Act to amend the Criminal Code in relation to sexual offences and the protection of young persons and to amend certain other acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof.

When I first read that title and noticed the words "the protection of young persons", I felt quite happy. That was a positive statement. Certainly our young people need protection. But when I read the bill, I am not so sure that we are protecting our young people. I am concerned about what appears to me to be a lowering of moral standards in the country.

Some of the sections in the bill, instead of protecting young people, really destroy the morals of Canada's young people, in my opinion. I do not believe that it would be of benefit to our youth to know that they can commit rape provided that the victim is not more than three years younger than the offender. But yes, it could very well be rape.

I have difficulty in following the new clause on sexual assault which will replace rape and other charges. Sexual assault is not defined anywhere in the bill. What is sexual assault? If the sexual assault clause is to replace the clause on rape, as it does in the bill, what about the retroactivity of the penal provisions? At the present time, if an individual is found guilty of rape, he is given a sentence of 15 years. But this bill provides a penalty of only ten years' imprisonment. Is there going to be a new law for those who have already been charged, convicted and are now in our prisons? I find it difficult to understand why we are lowering the penalty from 15 years to ten years for a crime like rape, particularly when the sexual assault may be on a young girl or a teenage girl, or even someone under the age of ten.

I noticed a story in the paper the other day about a teacher who had been convicted of assault on an eight or nine year old girl. Surely that type of person should not be out running loose. I know he might be sick, but if he is teaching school he is not that sick. Surely he is not that sick if he can hold a job as a teacher in any province in Canada, and if he is doing that type of thing surely 15 years is not too much. I really object to the lowering of the penalties for some of these offences, even if the offence is committed under a different name. The name is not going to make much difference. Rape is rape whether you call it sexual assault or rape.

I know the question of retroactivity of legislation may be dealt with in the interpretation section, but I am concerned about whether it refers to those who have already been convicted and are in our prisons, or refers only to those who are convicted from the date of the passing of this measure. In my view, reducing the penalty to ten years is not good.

I am not a member of the committee that will study this, but I would like to see the committee increase the penalties, if anything. Let us not encourage people to think we are lowering moral standards in this country. I know there are groups that want that done, but the vast majority of the Canadian people have high moral standards and want those high moral standards for their families, their children, their grandchildren and their friends. We should not be reducing these penalties because when you reduce penalties you inadvertently say that the crime is now not quite as bad as it was a few years ago. In my view, when rape is carried out, particularly on young people, it is just as bad now as it was ten, 50 or 200 years ago. We should be very careful of what we do in this regard.

Another item in the bill which bothers me greatly is to be found in proposed Section 166 which deals with sexual misconduct. Exactly what is sexual misconduct? I know there are some things that will become sexual misconduct under the provisions of this bill, but I would have thought that sexual misconduct would be defined. It is a term that should be defined so that when we talk about sexual misconduct we know what we are talking about.

Proposed Section 166 dealing with this particular item is of concern to a great number of people. I am going to read it into the record because I think it is that important. The heading is "Sexual Exploitation of Young Persons". It does not form part of the act, of course. It states:

> Every one who engages in or procures sexual misconduct with or by a person who
> (a) is not his spouse, and
> (b) is under the age of fourteen years, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for ten years.

If that happens to be rape, the individual gets ten years, but I believe the present penalty is 15 years and I do not think we should lower that at all. Then the proposed section continues as follows:

> (2) No one shall be found guilty of an offence under subsection (1) if he establishes that
> (a) at the time the sexual misconduct took place, he was under fourteen years of age; or
> (b) he is less than three years older than the complainant.

I suppose he could be 17 and the girl could be 15, in which case there would be no offence. I do not really know what we are trying to do in this regard, and neither do a lot of people in this country.

I want to put on the record some comments that have come to my attention from people in my constituency in connection with this proposed section. One letter that came in on February 23 says:

> Although there are other parts of this bill that I disagree with, the part that I am particularly outraged at and am vehemently against is the section on the lowering of the legal age to have sex to 14.

And further on it states:

> We do not need our government to aid and abet the general lowering of standards by putting forth such bills camouflaged in the name of help . . .
> I would also let you know at this time that I am not some puritanical old maid preaching. I am a young mother with four small children. I am sick at heart when I think of how hard our government is trying to make it for parents to bring their children up in any kind of moral surroundings.

I think the letter speaks for itself.

This is a statement that comes from another letter:

> I was stunned to read in the paper Bill C-53 which wants to make it legal for children 14 years and older to have sexual intercourse with partners who are no more than three years older (Single people).

People are concerned about this section, as I am.

Most of all I want to deal with this matter in relation to a case that came to my attention, first of all, through a telephone conversation with a mother who was very, very impassioned, angry and frustrated because when her daughter was 21 she had been persuaded to have intercourse and became pregnant and her entire life was ruined. Later on things were patched up, but at the time the whole earth crumbled and a gap opened in that family. They were overwhelmed with sorrow and agony. Her first words to me were "she was 21". Now we are going to lower the legal age to 18 so this type of thing can be done legally and within the law. This is her letter dated February 13, 1981:

> I am very upset and concerned about Bill C-53 regarding the lowering of the age limit to 14, for legal sexual intercourse! My husband and I were appalled and sickened by this proposed law. Recently, we had cause for grief over the legal age being 18 instead of 21, as it used to be a few years ago. What a terrible grief will cover the whole land if our young 14-year-olds can legally take part in sex, with their parents being helpless to do anything about it! We found that even though we taught our children well, certain traumatic experiences can weaken the thinking of a child, as well as the ability to hold on to high standards when strong temptations come along.

The letter then refers to the bill and asks whether it is "actually protecting our youth by limiting the partner's age to no more than three years older". The letter then states:

> What difference, really, is the age of the partner if he makes a 14-year-old pregnant? What's the difference, if he causes her to sin, to commit fornication—it goes by the same name, regardless of age!

This is the sentiment of many parents in this country. The legislation may not say that we are legalizing it, but the very fact that we lower the age and say it is not an indictable offence if there is a three-year difference between the two means we are indicating it is okay, that the laws of the land permit this lowering of standards. This is contrary to the teachings of almost every church in this country and at least 9 per cent of the parents, the ones who are concerned about their children.

When the parliamentary secretary dealt with this bill a few months ago, he outlined four principles of the bill. The first principle was the protection of the integrity of a person. I agree that our laws should contain this principle, and I hope that this legislation will meet that principle. When a girl is walking home, be it night or day, and she is assaulted on a street corner and subsequently there is a charge laid, she must then be put on the witness stand. She is then insulted, maligned and her character is torn apart. She becomes the guilty one instead of the person who assaulted her. I do not think any lawyers have the right to do this. Although we expect them to represent the defendant, they should not be allowed to turn the tables on the person who was assaulted, who had nothing whatsoever to do with the fact that someone grabbed her and dragged her into an alley. This situation should be corrected. It should not be permitted by any court or judge in Canada. If this principle becomes law, I hope it will protect the integrity of those people who are assaulted. The law itself may not do that but it would show our desire to deal properly with those people in our courts.

The second principle which was mentioned was the protection of children. I agree that our children should be protected. I do not know why we talk about lowering the penalty on these people, who I call monsters, who attack children of all ages. We have seen this happening in Canada and I think we have to start thinking more of the victims of these crimes and less of those who commit them. I have sympathy for a person who is mentally unbalanced or insane, but I do not consider anyone who deliberately plans to take a girl and assault her, who then ties her up to rocks and drops her to the bottom of a lake, insane. This happened to a young girl in Alberta. When that monster is caught no one should feel sorry for him. I do not feel sorry for him because he brought misery to a wonderful family and killed a girl who had a bright future, a girl in her teens who was working to become a contributing citizen of this country. Since she was killed by this monster, in my view that person should have the same penalty handed out. I believe in capital punishment when somebody deliberately plans and takes the life of an individual. It is even worse when a grown man does it to a young girl. Instead of reducing the punishment it should be increased significantly. Every provision in this act should be explicit to protect our young people. It is not only young children who need this protection, but our teenagers who have not yet reached the age of majority.

This legislation also tries to protect young children in respect to pornography, and they need still further protection in that respect. Some of our Canadian cities have become as bad as San Francisco and New York where pictures of absolutely every sexual act are displayed in full view of young children. In Toronto, I saw a young child, no more than nine years old, looking through a window at some of these pictures. That should not be permitted. It was my understanding that pictures of this kind were to be displayed in a separate room and this most likely is the case in many places, but not all. I have no objection if an adult wants to read that kind of material, it is his business, but it should not be on display in front of boys and girls. There should be severe penalties for those who have this material on display for children to see. There should be other means of advertising, instead of in a window for everyone to see. Protecting children from pornography is excellent but there should be more protection against pornography.

The third principle is the duty to safeguard public morals and decency. I think we all want to do that, yet there is a clause in this bill which allows these acts to be carried out in public but in a private way. I do not know whether the back seat of a car is considered private, or whether it would have to take place in the trunk. This kind of conduct should not take place in a public park where families are out to enjoy the scenery. I, along with many others, would like to see this clause removed entirely from the bill. I will expand on that point later on. Every legislature in Canada should pass legislation safeguarding public morals and decency. It is a basic principle upon which to work.

The fourth principle is the elimination of sexual discrimination and protection for those who are sick. I agree with that. Men should not have preference over women and women should not have preference over men.

Although I agree with these four broad principles stated by the parliamentary secretary, in my view the bill does not follow through with these principles. When it goes to committee it will be its responsibility to go through this legislation with a fine-toothed comb to find out exactly where the legislation does not follow through on those principles.

Shortly after the parliamentary secretary introduced the bill to the House in which these principles were outlined, I sent a survey containing four questions to my constituency. I will read the questions to the House. I tried to be impartial although it is sometimes hard to be impartial. I tried not to solicit an answer one way or the other. The first question I asked was:

Bill C-53 will repeal Sections 155 and 156 of the Criminal Code of Canada; and if passed, charges for buggery and bestiality would have to be laid under gross indecency and not per se for the said acts. Do you agree?

Normally I receive 2,000 or 3,000 answers, but perhaps because it was during the summer I only received a little over 800 responses. Out of those, 36 per cent agreed that it was all right to do away with charges of bestiality and buggery and put them under gross indecency, 57 per cent said no, they did not agree, and 8 per cent were undecided. I think that speaks for itself. Why do we want to eliminate the actual charges of buggery and bestiality to make it sound like something nicer under gross indecency?

I do not think we should be encouraging that type of behaviour. If it is done in private, under the Criminal Code today it is nobody's business; but what we are talking about is when it is not done in private but in a public way or in a semi-public way. I really cannot accept the argument that we should eliminate charges like that and put them under a nicer sounding heading such as gross indecency. That does not sound too nice, but certainly nicer than buggery and bestiality.

The second question was:

Bill C-53 changes Section 158 of the Criminal Code, which concerns gross indecency, by reducing the age of consent from 21 to 18 and by expanding the concept of privacy to allow for more than two participants. Do you agree?

This might be an orgy of some kind. The number of people who agreed was 53, 65 said no and 3 were undecided. That is not quite as definite as the one before, but again I think we have to take a careful look at what we are doing with this bill.

The third question was the following:

Bill C-53 repeals Section 158(2) of the Criminal Code, thereby permitting certain acts to be done in a public place, provided that they are done "in private". Do you agree?

The number who said yes was 33, 108 said no and 8 were undecided. However, the majority said this should not go ahead.

My fourth question was the following:

Do you agree with Section 167 of Bill C-53 concerning sexual misconduct?

The number who said yes was 53, 66 said no, and 25 were undecided. I think we have to take a careful look at whether some of the clauses in this bill follow the broad basic principles upon which the parliamentary secretary said the bill is based.

I suppose all hon. members have received printed cards like the one I have in my hand sent out by a number of people. It is not a postcard, it is a letter to Members of Parliament, and I think everyone on all sides of the House has received these. This is what it says:

I wish to express my gratitude for the introducing of Bill C-53 to control child pornography and ease the pain of rape victims.

I think everybody agrees with respect to those items.

I ask, however, that it not be passed as introduced but that:

1) Sexual assault charged between spouses be prohibited.

I want to deal with that item for a moment. Many people are charging that this will put another nail in the coffin of the family unit. There are too many things today which make it difficult for family units to operate, and this item will certainly not help.

2) There be no lowering of the legal age of consent for sexual activities, homosexual or heterosexual.

3) That the prohibition of gross indency be retained.

4) That there be retained a category of sexual assault or rape for forced sexual intercourse.

It is my belief that the changes proposed in these respects would result in increased government interference in the family, divorce, violence, juvenile delinquency, immorality, crime, welfare costs and a multitude of other hurts inflicted on individual members of our Canadian society and harm to our nation that it can ill afford at a time when an increase in their growth has already contributed to the near destruction of our homes and our once solid economy and a questioning of our future viability as a nation.

People do not take the signing of this type of card lightly. They have signed it because they are concerned about the direction we are taking and concerned about their children and grandchildren. Legislation which in any way lowers moral standards, reduces penalties for hideous crimes or condones things which are completely obnoxious to the majority of the people should not be supported. Let us set an example instead of giving way, as even some churches have done. Some think that if you do it often enough and enough people do it, it is all right. The next thing is that there will no longer be any such thing as sin and you can do anything you like if enough people do it. That is not the type of country we want. That is not the type of thing the men and women who are members of this House teach their children. They teach them high moral standards. They try to set an example, and our laws should set an example too.

I strongly urge that the government look again at the clauses in this bill which would lower standards and reduce penalties for hideous offences. Let us make sure we do not send a message out across this nation that anything is okay if enough people do it. Let us send out the message of a high standard of moral living so that we can all try to live up to it and achieve it.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is a very hard act to follow, but I am glad to be participating in this debate at second reading of Bill C-53.

Since we are dealing with the principle of the legislation, I would like to address my remarks to what will be achieved by this bill and, equally important, what will not be achieved if it is passed in its present form.

First, I would like to deal with the background of the bill. The law regarding sexual offences is basically unchanged since confederation. The most important exception was the 1969 amendments which decriminalized certain acts between consenting adults. In 1978 the Law Reform Commission of Canada advocated sweeping reform of the parts of the Criminal Code dealing with sexual offences. The commission said, first, that the rape charge should be replaced with assault and, second, that males and females should be treated equally under the law. This bill is the fourth time the government has attempted to make amendments to this part of the Criminal Code since 1978.

When the Tories were in government, then justice minister Senator Flynn promised to introduce legislation similar to the reforms the Liberals had attempted in some of these areas. As I understand it, the purpose of Bill C-53 is to modernize the code while adhering to certain principles of our society such as the protection of the integrity of the person, the protection of children and special groups, the safeguarding of public decency and the elimination of sexual discrimination.

I will just summarize the contents of the bill, which is familiar to hon. members. The new crime of sexual assault is created to replace the existing charge of rape. The exploitation of children for pornographic purposes is prohibited. Offences are enumerated regarding sexual relations with children under 16 and under 14, and I will be speaking about that portion of the bill. The offence of child abduction is redefined so as to cover children involved in custody disputes. The charge of procuring is expanded to include males as well as females.

There are two subjects in particular with which I would like to deal in my limited time. They are the issues of prostitution and sexual assault. With regard to sexual assault, the bill goes a long way toward improving the present legislation and meets many of the criticisms put forward regarding the inadequacy of our rape legislation. With regard to prostitution, however, the bill is totally inadequate, and I will deal with that subject first.

Earlier today I filed on behalf of my constituents a petition signed by 678 residents of the west end of Vancouver urging the government to take those measures necessary in amending the Criminal Code to restore to their residential neighbourhoods some form of peace and quiet. I have been actively involved in pushing for the reform of the laws dealing with this subject since I was elected, and that is why I am so disappointed with the failure of Bill C-53 to deal with this subject.

I should like to describe what the west end of Vancouver is like. It is that part of the city that I think one would see on a picture postcard. It is adjacent to the downtown area. It is primarily, but not exclusively, highrises. It is one of the most historic neighbourhoods in our city. For the last couple of years it has been invaded by prostitutes and pimps who are found on every corner. It is a business well organized by pimps with walkie-talkies and runners on motor bikes carrying messages. It is organized in relation to territories. Certain groups have the rights for certain streets and territories. It is dangerous for residents. They are not only accosted every time they leave their apartment or home to get a loaf of bread or to pick up some milk or go to the post office, but there has already been one knifing incident. It is very noisy. There are cars squealing tires and people yelling in the middle of the night.

I should like to quote some letters from residents to make my point. One resident wrote:

> I am a manager of an apartment with 42 suites. Please advise what progress, if any, the federal government is acting on this terrible prostitution of these young males and females . . . The traffic is terrible from 5 p.m. to 5 a.m. I have good, hard working tenants paying taxes. Why should we all have to put up with this terrible situation?

Another one wrote:

> As usual, I had trouble sleeping last night. The prostitutes were chattering in loud voices on the sidewalk and there was the constant roar of car engines and frequent honkings from the bumper-to-bumper traffic of hooker-hunters in the alley behind my apartment building. That is nothing new. However, by chance, because sleep was impossible I looked out my window, and there below in the parking lot, in the light of the street lamp, protected only by a three-foot high concrete wall, was a young girl hooker—

The rules of the House and one's natural sensitivity prohibit me from finishing the description of what this resident saw.

> People going by in the steady flow of cars could see the proceedings. Hundreds of apartment windows looked down on that well-lit parking lot where this event took place. A young child, an elderly person, someone's daughter, someone's wife, would have seen (and perhaps did) exactly what I saw . . . The youngsters view it in amazement, the elderly view it in horror, and many people like myself view it with utter disgust.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that we are not dealing with the age old problem here of street prostitution in red light districts or street prostitution in downtown areas; we are dealing with the problem of prostitution on people's lawns, by their paper boxes, right in front of their grocery stores, in their churches and in their daycare centres. It is an infestation of a quiet and beautiful neighbourhood.

The inability of the government to act on this matter led to the formation of a group called CROWE, "Concerned Residents Of the West End", who have been again assisting in trying to bring pressure on the federal government to deal with this problem. They are intimidated by the fact that if they are publicly known, in terms of who the individuals are, they feel that there would be recriminations from the pimps and the organized drug dealers and the prostitutes who now control and patrol the west end.

CROWE has been successful in raising people's perception of the problem, but they have been unsuccessful and so far have had limited success in having the necessary changes introduced. Because of this, many people, including the mayor of Vancouver, myself and some of the residents, feel that the next step may be vigilante groups and active violence against this plague on a resident. I feel that that could take place before summer if these changes are not brought forward.

I should like to deal particularly with the juvenile prostitution problem. I see the member opposite is yawning. I would like to assure him that the problem of juvenile prostitution in the west end is not a yawning matter. It is a matter which involves children. The estimates say that on busy nights there will be 50 or 60 children in the Davie Street area alone. Some of these may be boys dressed as girls, some of them may be girls as young as 15 or boys as young as 12. One of the provisions of the bill, which I will be dealing with, will deal with the age of consent.

Most of these young prostitutes come from broken or unstable homes. Many have been physically or sexually abused. In general, they have the common denominator of a very poor self-image. Some are habitual runaways who end up on the streets and are drug addicts. Some of them come from stable backgrounds, wealthy families. They are well provided for. They seek money, excitement, or the experience. There is a danger of its becoming a sort of trendy youth movement for lower mainland young people.

Along with experience, excitement and money they often find violence. They may be beaten, raped, or robbed. To escape the degradation that they experience, they seek refuge in drugs and become heroine addicts and therefore become hardened.

Recently I visited a project called the Senator Project which is in my constituency. It is a half-way house to give these children a safe haven. It is not federally funded. It is financed by the provincial government and by the city of Vancouver. I am glad today to have received notice that the council has approved the Senator hotel for another year. The thing which strikes one who visits this modest establishment, which is not a luxurious operation, is that these are just ordinary kids. They have terrible health problems. The street life is physically very degrading and harmful to them. The first thing that the Senator Project staff try to do is to restore their basic physical health. They do not try to reform or rehabilitate them; they simply try to give them a roof over their heads so that they can be restored to physical health.

These children are sometimes extremely talented. I met a young artist, who I shall not name, who was about 16, who is illiterate by our standards and who is very talented. In this kind of environment he has the opportunity to explore his artistic talent. They also have some opportunity to learn what the jargon calls "entry skills". They have very good educators who help these children get enough confidence in themselves so they can go into the school system. They are taught while they are there. These educators also have a lot of basic understanding and support. We do not know if this project will be successful because we do not know how many young people it will save nor how many young people it will rehabilitate, but we do know that it has been a worthwhile experiment. The issue is to keep the kids off the streets in the first place and to ensure that adults who exploit these children are punished.

I first began raising the issue at a federal level in June, 1980, when I proposed a motion calling on the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) to amend the Criminal Code to give local police the authority to deal fairly and firmly with the problem of prostitution. Of course, by that time, it had reached crisis proportions in the west end. However, the motion was defeated.

Also at that time I began a letter-writing campaign to the Minister of Justice pressuring him to take action on the situation. In a series of letters I asked the minister specifically what amendments he was prepared to make to the Criminal Code to toughen the laws on prostitution. I have also asked him to accompany me on a tour of the west end so he could see exactly what it is like. It cannot be imagined, it must be seen.

The minister has given several reasons for not acting on the problem. Initially he said that some people had expressed concern that changes to the Criminal Code might lead to some form of harassment of private citizens by the police. This is a legitimate concern. Later he mentioned that some women's groups were fearful that the rights of women may be infringed by any new laws. The last excuse seems particularly ludicrous to me, since the rights of west enders to live in a peaceful neighbourhood have long been thrown out and the rights of these children who are being exploited have long been ignored. I have canvassed women's groups in the area by letter. Not one of them responded that this was the intent of any opposition they may have. They were all appalled by the situation which exists in the west end and were quite responsive to suggestions that the situation can be dealt with.

In one letter to the minister I pointed out that if the residents of Rockcliffe in Ottawa had to endure half the disruption, noise, inconvenience and harassment experienced by west enders, I was quite convinced that the laws would have been changed a long time ago.

Last summer when the minister visited Vancouver, in the course of a confrontation with a group of concerned citizens he finally gave them a commitment that he would take some action as soon as the Supreme Court decision on soliciting was handed down. It came down earlier this month, so I intend to see that he holds to his promise.

In summary, there are four important issues which the new legislation regarding prostitution must address. It must define soliciting; the customer should be charged along with the prostitute; males should be included in the definition of prostitute; public place should be defined. The present law does not address these issues, so the police find that they are prevented from dealing with the problem of prostitution.

In the absence of any help from Ottawa, local municipalities have tried passing their own bylaws to deal with the problem, but these have almost invariably been struck down by the courts as conflicting with the Criminal Code or as being ultra vires the powers of municipalities. In fact this happened to the recent bylaw in Montreal. The only bylaw which has withstood court challenges has been a Nova Scotia law, which is the remedy the minister keeps insisting is his solution. Most municipalities, particularly Vancouver, feel that this is an issue which must be dealt with at the federal level and see the urgings by the Minister of Justice that they follow the example set by Nova Scotia as an attempt to pass the responsibility off on municipalities. Certainly there is no indication in the legislation that the federal government is ready to deal with the problem.

When questioned in committee by myself, the deputy minister of justice claimed that, despite all the time which has passed, his officials still have not prepared any draft legislation. The situation is becoming intolerable in Vancouver's west end. There is a pressing problem in many other cities across Canada; Edmonton and Calgary are two examples. There are no more excuses left for inaction. The government must make changes to the legislation now.

The second issue I should like to address is the issue of sexual assault, although I feel it has been more than adequately covered by the hon. member for Bow River. According to a study commissioned by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, the original meaning of the word rape was to steal. The whole idea was that women were the property of men; their chastity was prized because it guaranteed the legitimacy of heirs. In Babylonian times, rape was punished by death and restitution was made to the father of the victim since she would no longer fetch any money as a bride. A married woman who was raped was put to death along with her assailant, on the grounds that she shared in the adultery.

In medieval England, propertied heiresses were sometimes kidnapped and married by unpropertied knights. If the woman in question declined to have him tried, which happened if her family considered the match beneficial and in its interests, he did not face the normal penalty of death. Interestingly enough, rape of non-propertied women such as virgins, nuns, widows and concubines was considered to be a crime but convictions were rare.

The current law is criticized because some of these medieval attitudes remain in it. Critics say that women are still treated as the property of men, and moral judgments regarding the value of virginity and chastity underlie it. The law calls the most serious offence "rape". No crime exists if the woman in question is found to have consented to the act. She must prove that force or threats were used to carry out the act as stated in the charge. Lesser penalties fall under the subject of indecent assault. These are separated into attacks on women and attacks on men. Some sections specify that a woman must be of a previously chaste character for the rape to be considered a crime.

Other criticisms of the law are that assaults on both females and males are not treated equally. The law only deals with the assault of a female by a male. Equal protection under the law is not extended to married women. The law does not recognize sexual assault between marriage partners. Great weight is placed on the issue of consent or the lack thereof on the part of the victim. It has meant that the victim's reaction to the assault has been extremely important. The violent nature of the crime has been downplayed. The attitude is that some men seem to believe that resistance by women is something to be overcome, that it is not to be taken seriously. There is the myth that women want to be overpowered, so sympathy may be evoked for the accused at the expense of the victim in the course of the trial. This concept was reinforced by the infamous Pappajohn case before the Supreme Court in June, 1980, when Mr. Justice Dickson ruled:

> The facts of life not infrequently impede the drawing of a clear line between consensual and non-consensual intercourse . . . It is easy for a man intent upon his own desires to mistake the intentions of a woman or girl who may herself be in two minds about what to do.

Of course, that was the case and the statement which infuriated women's groups across the country. Critics of this kind of interpretation argue that "no" means "no", and that consent is not possible if force is used.

Other criticisms of the present law are that the previous sexual history of the victim may be introduced as evidence during the trial. The defence may try to prove that the victim has been sexually active in the past because she may then appear to be immoral. Her credibility as a witness is then diminished. Furthermore, if she has consented to sex in the past, it may be argued that she consented in this case.

In 1976 the Criminal Code was amended so that the use of prior sexual conduct on the part of the victim was limited. Prior notice must be given that the defence intends to raise this issue and the judge must decide in camera whether the evidence is germane. Before 1976, judges were required to warn juries about the dangers of convicting someone on the basis of uncorroborated testimony. Since 1976 they have not been required to do so but may continue to so warn.

In the time remaining I should like to deal with some of the objectives of Bill C-53 dealing with this aspect. In the new bill, the crime of rape is replaced by sexual assault. Attempted rape and indecent assault are also covered by these categories. The emphasis is on violence and aggression. The sexual aspect is only part of the package. The consent issue is dealt with as in conventional assault cases. Consent is not present if the victim submits in the face of threatened or actual force. Prior sexual conduct is limited in use during the trial. If the victim raises this issue, the defence may pursue it. The accused may be allowed to argue that he honestly believes consent was present and if he can prove it to be reasonable, he may be acquitted.

Thus, those who make stupid mistakes, if they are honest mistakes, will not be convicted of crimes they were unaware of committing. This obviously is a controversial section since women's groups think that even this is unacceptable—that it may still be used to invoke sympathy for the accused at the expense of the victim.

Further, under the new bill men and women will be treated equally. That is one of the aspects which we would like to have extended to the matter of soliciting. Both may be charged with, and both may be viewed as victims of, sexual assault. Finally, no exemption will be made for husbands. Spousal immunity will be eliminated. As the hon. member for Bow River has indicated, some people view this as an attack on the family.

There are problems with Bill C-53 besides the deficiency that I dealt with in the area of prostitution. Many people criticize it for the vagueness of the term "sexual assault". Some people argue that more than two categories of sexual assault should be specified and some argue that the sexual element of the offence should be relevant to the sentencing. The larger argument is that the sexual aspect should not be downplayed too much. Other people claim that removal of the word "rape" reduces the seriousness of the crime.

My own personal reservation is with the age of consent. For that reason I look forward to a study of the bill in committee which will give us an excellent opportunity to consider the changes that should be made before it becomes law.

I should like to say that there are many good things about the proposed legislation. It will apply to men and women; it will make it easier to get convictions for sexual assault; it will give more protection for children and many anachronisms will be removed.

I look forward to the bill being made even better when it comes before committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I think all hon. members owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) for sharing her insight and experience with us, for the work she has done within her constituency, for being brave and honest enough to really look at what is going on in western Vancouver, for being sensitive to the needs of the people there and for giving us a true picture of the community. She has shown the unutterable contrast between the affluence of the surroundings and the degradation of the life there.

I do not want to bicker or thrust a barb at the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—I do not say this in that sense—but some weeks ago in an attempt to badger the government to bring this legislation forward he made a slip of the tongue. I am sure that is all it was. He said, "We want to get some decent rape legislation in this country".

I think that is what is wrong with the perspective of this House, Mr. Speaker. That is what is wrong with a large percentage of the practitioners of law in this country. They are looking for technical precision. They want legislation to be technically accurate. We are not dealing with whether the issue is good law, although that in itself is an issue, we are dealing with the question of whether the issue is good life.

Life in the western side of Vancouver in particular is being destroyed because we in this chamber have sat in splendid isolation for years, talking about the intricacies of law so that we can get good judgments in court. I realize that is important, of course, but all the while life in that part of the community and in other cities is being destroyed. So the issue is not simply whether this is good law; the issue is how we can preserve a good life for these people in the fullest sense of the word.

As the hon. member for Vancouver Centre spoke I could not help but think of some work being done in my own community of Surrey. Most of the teenage prostitutes in Vancouver are there because they were the victims of incest in their homes. These teenage prostitutes have had their self-concept destroyed in childhood. They have had their sense of self-worth destroyed in childhood. For them there is nothing to live for that is relevant except the opportunity to make some money from their lack of self-worth. So they end up on the streets on the western side of Vancouver.

There is a committee in Surrey which has almost finished a project which, sadly enough, is to deal with an area of education from kindergarten through third grade, the aim of which is to let children know in sensitive ways, through the use of text and picture, what the subtleties of child seduction are.

I am sure hon. members have seen news reports in the last few weeks about a conference held in Medicine Hat which drew attention to the fact that most child abuse comes at the hands of close relatives and friends—the people a child trusts. Because the adults manipulate them, they get the signals from those adults that the practice is all right. In the process their lives are being destroyed.

I say again that the focus is wrong, Mr. Speaker. Certainly we want to get good legislation because it is the mechanism that is used to preserve the good life for our children who will grow up to be the future citizens of this country.

I know that the hon. member for Burnaby and others have focused on rape legislation and that they are concerned about what is going on in the courtrooms of our land and the difficulty of getting convictions. I understand that concern, but it is disturbing to realize that all we are aiming for is good convictions. As I say this, I recognize the need for good convictions, and because rape law has not been adequate it is easy to lose sight of other issues.

I should like to spend a few minutes pointing out to hon. members what is going on in other areas of the country. Some weeks ago I attended a public meeting in Vancouver when a high school counsellor from my constituency spoke. He spoke of the myriad of young people who come to his office to discuss the problems of life and of the high school discussion groups with which he is involved. He told us that the dominant question about anything is: Is it against the law? That is the only rule of conduct that appears to be left for young people in our society—is it against the law?

It seems to me that along with a lot of other things that have gone on in our society has been an erosion of non-legal barriers to certain kinds of conduct. By and large, one kind of mentality that is developing asks—can I get away with it, is it against the law, or can I get around the law? As long as that kind of mentality is developing among our young people, it behooves us to be extra careful about the laws we pass in this chamber. There is an erosion of the moral and social guidance systems that we as individuals need in order to steer our course.

As fewer and fewer people are attending churches, and more and more people are becoming uneducated in terms of strict moral judgments in our land, it becomes more and more important that the laws of our land reflect a guidance system which will tell our young people, "This is what you can do, and this is what you cannot do for fear of what will happen to you". The subtle change which has come in our mentality is that the judgments passed down in our courtrooms are seen to be the judgments which affect young people. As destructive as those judgments may be, they do not have any real effect or the greatest effect on our young people. What happens to people when they violate the law is what happens to them inside: the erosion of moral courage, the erosion of moral fibre, the erosion of character, and the erosion of self-respect which goes on within themselves, setting aside the judgments handed down by the courts. Today, our young people need reference points, more than anything else, so that they can know how they ought to behave. That is what the law becomes. The law becomes that reference point which says, "Look, if you do this, you will hurt yourself." It is more than the simple penalty the law imposes.

However, there are other ways in which people hurt themselves when they violate the law. As I said before, today the question is: If it is legal, then it is permissible. What bothers me is that if we pass Sections 166 and 167 as proposed in this bill, we will be sending out signals to our young people that will be totally destructive.

I would like to spend one moment on those sections. Section 166 states:

(1) Every one who engages in or procures sexual misconduct with or by a person who

(a) is not his spouse, and

(b) is under the age of fourteen years,

is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for ten years.

However, the defence is contained in subsection (2), which states:

(2) No one shall be found guilty of an offence under subsection (1) if he establishes that

(a) at the time the sexual misconduct took place, he was under fourteen years of age; or

(b) he is less than three years older than the complainant.

This comes under the broad and general topic of age of consent. Are we sending a signal to these young people that if the 14-year age limit was a barrier, and it is now legal, that it is now permissible? Are we saying to them that if there is no more than a three-year age difference between them, it is then permissible? I suggest to hon. members of the House that it is destructive, even if it is legal. I will come back to that in a moment.

I would like to turn to Section 167, which states:

Every one who engages in or procures sexual misconduct with or by a person who

(a) is not his spouse, and

(b) is fourteen years of age or more and is under the age of sixteen years, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years.

The defence is found under subsection (2), which states:

(2) No one shall be found guilty of an offence under subsection (1) if he establishes that

(a) at the time the sexual misconduct took place he was under sixteen years of age;

(b) he is less than three years older than the complainant;

(c) he believed at the time the sexual misconduct took place that the complainant was sixteen years of age or more; or

(d) he is less responsible than the complainant for the sexual misconduct that took place.

Aside from the loose definition of sexual misconduct, I am looking at the defence once again. If the law is meant to be a reference point for the conduct of our young people, are we not sending the wrong signal to them by suggesting that, if it is legal for those who are 16 years of age and under, it is permissible? I suggest to hon. members that we must fully consider this legislation before we pass it into law.

That is why I intend to look at this measure with great scrutiny when it comes before committee. I believe other hon. members will also. I will be concerned about the kind of witnesses we bring to the committee so that it will not be rammed through on greased skids. We should have witnesses before the committee who know something about juvenile problems, juvenile psychology and so forth.

The related question we must ask ourselves is whether we are introducing young people to experiences before they are ready to handle them. It is no secret—indeed, it is common knowledge—that we tend to develop physically more quickly than we develop emotionally and psychologically. People have much physical capacity long before they have the kind of emotional self-control, emotional decision-making powers and mental information banks which enable them to make informed and sensible decisions. The fact is that someone who is 16 years old or 14 years old is physically capable of doing all of these things about which this law speaks. The question we must ask ourselves is whether they are emotionally prepared to make the kind of decisions which will lead to a healthy future.

It is not necessary to look further than television to realize that the whole commercial world is bombarding young people with suggestions to become older at a younger age. Young people feel they must be mature at 12, 14 or 16 years of age. As my hon. colleague said, "Take a look at Brooke Shields". At 14 years of age, when appearing on television, Brooke Shields appeared to be 21 years old. The entire commercial world conspires against young people to make them old before they are ready to become old. One of the side effects is that all of the anticipation for the future is taken away.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: Young people are not ready to absorb the pleasures which could be theirs when they are 16, 18 or 20 years old. I think we need to take a very careful look at whether we are not pushing the age limit too low before the young people have sufficiently matured and their knowledge is seasoned enough to make the kinds of decisions which will lead them to a healthy future.

I know that it would be easy to be painted as an ogre, a killjoy, a fogey, and all of those square images. However, I make no apologies for being square enough to want to preserve young people so that they have a healthy future. I want their decision-making process to be intact so that when they can enjoy those pleasures at their fullest, they will be able to do so and will not have their pasts sullied, tarnished and ruined by the force of peer pressure and commercial pressure to do things they will regret later on.

There are many measures in this bill which I support. I take pleasure in the fact that the government is introducing measures which deal with child pornography, about which we have spoken at length. I am super pleased that the government has included a measure dealing with parental kidnapping. I know hon. members realize that I have worked on that matter for about five years, and the government has now adopted that provision. However, while those provisions are in the bill, and they are good and necessary, there are provisions in this legislation which are deeply disturbing and could erode the future of our country. They will send signals out to the youth which will introduce them to a life that could cause misfortune, destruction, concern and care in their later years. As I have said, I intend to push for very close scrutiny with regard to the future implications of those provisions.

CRIMINAL CODE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-53, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to sexual offences and the protection of young persons and to amend certain other acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-53, which is a large package of amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada. It relates specifically to sexual offences and the protection of young people. It is a very broad bill. I think members should be very careful to realize that it probably contains too many dimensions for one bill and that it should be broken up into a series of bills so that members can more adequately direct their minds to it and vote accordingly.

For example, in this bill sexual offences are redefined to recognize that they are assaults. The number of offences is reduced and the law is simplified. Existing non-consensual sexual offences are replaced by the offences of sexual assault and aggravated sexual assault. The spousal immunity for rape is removed. Provisions of the Criminal Code are amended so as to apply equally to persons of both sexes. New offences are created for sexual misconduct by people involving young persons under the age of 16. An offence is created with regard to the exploitation of young people for pornographic purposes. The offence of abduction of children is redefined with a view to protecting children involved in custody suits. Changes are made to protect the complainant in sexual assault cases. These include restrictions on questions about previous sexual conduct with persons other than the accused. Then the general assault provisions of the code are redefined.

It is very clear that we are dealing with a vast package. It is very complex and there are many issues. I do believe that we should split the bill. However, until that occurs, I want to deal with the principle of many of the amendments. We need to recognize that we are dealing with the minimum of legal requirements which this Parliament is setting out. There is no doubt that we should be dealing at a much higher level in terms of our relationships with one another. Unfortunately, too often we find governments acting at the bare minimum level. We find adults acting at the bare minimum level rather than the much higher moral level to which we should all aspire.

This bill, as we debate it, will involve Members of Parliament sitting here making value judgments which will be put into effect by police forces across this huge country. That in itself will be very difficult.

As the caucus spokesman in our party for youth, I am particularly interested in, and will certainly want to monitor carefully, the speeches made on second reading. I will want to hear the witnesses who are brought before the committee so that we can make sure that we receive as parliamentarians a very broadly based group of people who will give evidence. This point was mentioned by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

Too often we will have groups coming in dealing with only one section of the bill, putting enormous pressure on members individually and collectively to pass the bill in order to achieve several of the very good things which the bill does contain. But we must look at the entire bill. Each of us will have to make a decision as to whether we can support a bill, which may have some provisions that are very deleterious, particularly to the young people of this country. The bill does have some very bad principles in it when I think of it from a young person's point of view, and when we think of it from the position of maturity and experience, a state to which many of us are growing, in contrast to a young 16-year-old. I am sure we all agree that, as a broad principle over the whole bill, we want to protect our youth.

It is an interesting personal observation that one of the main thrusts of this bill is to take away protection of young women over the age of 16. Young women used to have protection under the Criminal Code up to the age of 18 years, but in this area of the law we find the government backing out of the lives of that group in contrast to all of the other areas of our lives, particularly economic, where the government is becoming more and more involved.

Interestingly enough, some years ago when government played a very small role in our lives and people generally were uneducated, we had a higher moral standard that protected the young people. Now we find people are better educated and more sophisticated and the government is taking over more of our lives, so much more in economic matters, yet at the same time backing off on this matter of moral judgment and protection for young men and women between the ages of 16 and 18. It is an interesting inconsistency. If it is possible, I will raise that point with the witnesses. At present, religious controls and higher moral standards are declining. As parliamentarians, we are backing away when perhaps we should be stepping in to set a better and a higher minimum standard.

I do not have a lot of concern about people over the age of 18, which is the age of majority. I am not sure that we as a government should try to pass many laws that affect free consenting adults over the age of 18. But we should have extremely good laws on which we all agree and which should be enforced rigorously. We should back up our police forces in the protection of our young people. Clearly the same thing applies for mentally handicapped people.

In summary, on the first part, I am sure we can all agree that we should protect our youth, that we should be passing laws to support the family and that we should be supporting laws that promote a peaceful community. All of these aspects will be interpreted by judges. They will all be interpreted in light of the new constitutional provisions when our Constitution returns from the United Kingdom. That in itself will cause many years of uncertainty in this country as the new constitutional provisions are balanced against the specific Criminal Code matters.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-86, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1982.

EMERGENCY PLANNING—P.C. 1981-1305, MAY 21, 1981, REGISTRATION SI/81-76 JUNE 10, 1981

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings, memos, telegrams and communications relating to the order respecting Emergency Planning, P.C. 1981-1305, May 21, 1981, Registration SI/81-76 June 10, 1981.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the summer quiet was disturbed for me last July when I was informed of a news report in one of the Edmonton newspapers which said that the government had passed an order in council empowering the government to establish and administer civilian internment camps. Frankly, I found it hard to believe that the government had passed that kind of an order because I remembered speeches in the House of Commons during the constitutional resolution debate. I recall hearing the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) in February standing in his place here in the House recounting what an injustice had been done to Japanese Canadians during World War II, and the ringing words "never again". That was his justification for bringing forward a charter of rights.

As I sat in the committee and in this House I heard those assurances repeated, that the experience of the Japanese Canadian and of any other minority group in Canada should never be repeated in the future history of our country.

I also remember being part of a minority group, the Mennonites, during World War II. As members know, most Mennonites come from German stock and they are almost all pacifists. Then came national registration and we were not allowed to register our nationality as Canadian. There were no Canadians during World War II as all of us had to register according to our national origin. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the tension in that Christian community, the members of which were all German, most of them pacifists, who had to register as Germans knowing full well that this would place a stigma on them resulting in community pressure all during the war years.

As a matter of fact, just a few months ago a relative of my wife told me of an experience she had had in a small Saskatchewan town, Drake, with a population of about 350. That Mennonite community wanted to conduct a bible school during the winter months, as was and still is so often the custom, particularly in prairie communities. They brought in a young man to teach that bible school, but the Anglos in that community would not let him get off the train to teach the bible school because he was a "Nazi". That is the kind of scorn the Mennonites faced during World War II. I remember those years.

An hon. Member: It was a Liberal government that did that.

Mr. Friesen: It was a Liberal government that did that.

I remember attending an NDP convention in Vancouver last summer and hearing Dave Barrett speak. I hate even to inject the New Democratic Party into this speech, but he made a very relevant point. Just a few years prior to the national registration when I had to register as a German rather than as a Canadian, the Liberals, during a Liberal provincial campaign in the province of British Columbia, ran ads saying "Vote for the socialists and you will bring in the yellow peril". Mr. Woodsworth and Mr. Coldwell championed the rights of the orientals in Canada, hence the ad "Vote for the socialists and you will bring in the yellow peril." I keep wondering, do we dare scratch the Liberal government too hard for fear of what we might find underneath?

I remember in October, 1970, when, under the powers of the War Measures Act, the Liberal government rounded up hundreds of innocent people in the province of Quebec without charges being laid. I recall reading just a few weeks ago a statement by the Speaker of the other place, Senator Jean Marchand. He was given a list of the names of people in the province of Quebec who were suspect at that time, and he said how foolish it was to include most of the names on that list of about 180 that was submitted to him.

I can understand the need to prepare for war, and I make that concession right away. I understand the government's need to do that, but there are several things that bother me and I would like to enumerate them. What bothers me is the glib contradiction between what the government says and what it does. While the minister was standing in his place in the House of Commons saying "never again", at that very moment the cabinet was discussing provisions by way of order in council to establish internment camps. That kind of glib contradiction bothers me.

It bothers me that this order is written in the context of the War Measures Act, and I am bothered by the very loose statement in there that the measures can be used at a time of "real or apprehended insurrection". I particularly wonder about that phrase "apprehended insurrection". At a time when the government wants to strengthen its position, any kind of paranoia could be apprehended insurrection.

I wonder about the fact that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) says the order needs legislation to validate it.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Friesen: The hon. member from Toronto says that is right. The order in council was passed while the House was sitting. Why did the government not first introduce legislation and then develop the regulations out of that legislation, if that is what it needs? Why the hurry, the rush to bring in by order in council the kind of sweeping powers included in this provision?

It bothers me when I read about the kind of changes which were brought in in a 1965 order in council. I think hon. members should know that the order in council we are discussing now is a revision of the 1965 order in council. Let me enumerate the differences between this order in council and the one of 1965. All of those powers and provisions in the 1965 order in council were in the context of war or as a result of an attack by an enemy. The 1981 order in council provides for a division between wartime and peacetime powers. I will clarify this even more when I deal with the peacetime powers.

The 1965 order in council outlined no specific duties for the Prime Minister. The present order in council outlines that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has duties only in war and peace as they relate to censorship and control of information. All the administration of the 1965 order in council was through the use of the RCMP and other police forces, whether they be city or provincial. The 1981 order in council makes no mention at all of the RCMP or any other police forces.

The question that arises in my mind is, does the government have a new police force in mind? Does the government have in mind the use of the military? What is going on in the mind of the government in order to carry out the administration of these orders?

Further, the 1965 order makes no mention of prisoners within the penitentiary system at all. The 1981 order, the present one, empowers the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) to "Facilitate the selective reduction and transfer of prison populations to provide for the establishment of civilian internment camps". What are the mechanisms the Solicitor General will use? Which prisoners will he free first from the penitentiaries across Canada in order to make room for the political prisoners? Beyond that, what is the triggering mechanism that will bring all of these measures into force, especially in peacetime?

The 1965 order authorizes the Minister of Justice to advise other departments and agencies on legal problems. That is the principal role of the Minister of Justice in the 1965 order. The 1981 order has no such authority at all. It appears to suggest that it will not be bothered with those legal niceties regarding the legal advice and legal limits.

The 1965 order empowered the Minister of Labour—because there was no minister of manpower at the time—with the authority for conscription, all in the context of wartime emergency. The 1981 order gives the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) no wartime duties at all but has sweeping powers which are all peacetime powers.

I would like to talk about those powers for a moment. With regard to peacetime powers, I would point out that the sole responsibility of the Prime Minister is, first, to "Manage and co-ordinate the national information services"; second, to "Provide general guidance and direction to the public, including the co-ordination and transmission of any technical advice and recommendations developed by any National Emergency Agency or department".

What kind of calamity in peacetime could befall our country that would require the Prime Minister to manage and co-ordinate the national information services? This is in a country which does not believe in censorship.

I would now refer hon. members to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration's authority under these provisions. I note that these are peacetime provisions. The minister of Manpower is empowered to control and regulate the registration, mobilization, allocation and movement of civilian manpower, excluding medical manpower, taking into consideration the requirements of other national emergency agencies and ministers reconciling competing claims and establishing such priorities as may be required. More sweeping, Mr. Speaker, are the powers under items six and seven. Item six states:

Establish a population register for the effective management of manpower in consultation with other ministers and National Emergency Agencies.

This one is a real mind-bender:

7. Arrange any required international manpower transactions.

Are we looking ahead to where the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is empowered to conscript manpower in Canada to serve in another country in a civilian capacity? Now, this is something which disturbs me about the whole edict, that the President of the Privy Council says in one of his speeches that if Parliament is not sitting at the time when the government declares that there is a national emergency, the government may have to act—he uses the term "extra-legally". He says that the government may have to act extra-legally. That is ominous to me and smells to me of October, 1970.

What bothers me is that we have a Prime Minister who enjoys blustering about strength and every once in a while he needs periodic confirmation of that strength through dramatic action. All we need do is remember October, 1970. All we need do is look at the way he has used the RCMP. All we have to do is look at the way he dealt with wage and price controls. The Prime Minister likes to talk about strength and every once in a while he has to reinforce what he says by some kind of dramatic action. What bothers me is that the Prime Minister has a cabinet which is filled with weak colleagues who lack the courage to stand against him, whose guide is not what is right but simply what the Prime Minister wants. They will do anything that the Prime Minister asks of them.

These are the realities which bother me. These are the reasons I think we need background information, to call upon the government to justify the passage of this order in council at this time, hard on the heels of having passed a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, at a time when there is no national emergency and at a time when the government has been talking about peace and safety.

Are they saying that sudden destruction will be coming upon us? I call upon the government to release all documents, letters, correspondence, telegrams and information on the work done with all the provincial governments which would validate in its eyes the need for this kind of precipitous and draconian order in council. I think the people of Canada are entitled to know what has been going on in the background that justified in the mind of the government this order in council. I will be looking to the government to produce the kind of papers and documentation that will quieten the fears of Canadians and justify this kind of order in council.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief remarks to make in support of the very important motion which has been put forward by my colleague from Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

To begin, I want to pay tribute to him for his persistence with respect to this particular issue. It is an issue which I think is most important in terms of the respect we have for the rule of law in this country. I will elaborate on that particular contention during my speech.

This order that is the basis of the regulations and the documentation my colleague has asked to be produced to the House now was passed under royal prerogative. It was an order which was carried out within the discretion and power of government to take action, and to direct and compel public servants and other people in the employ of the Crown to carry out certain duties. It is not an order which is passed pursuant to any legislation considered and passed by the House of Commons.

We have a unilateral, arbitrary action which was taken by the government with respect to this emergency planning order. As I understand the order, it was passed to authorize various ministers to plan for emergency situations both of a peacetime and wartime nature. However, at the present time the only legal way these plans can be implemented is through the proclamation of the War Measures Act. If we study the order, the definition of "emergency" is as follows:

An abnormal situation that requires prompt attention beyond normal procedures to prevent or limit injury to persons or damage to property or the environment.

This defines a situation far wider than that contemplated by the words "war, inflation or insurrection, real or apprehended". A lot of planning, therefore, is being undertaken by the government which cannot lawfully be used in most of the emergency situations contemplated by the order.

I think it is interesting to note, however, the comments of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) in an address on emergency legislation reported in the July to September, 1981 Emergency Planning Digest. I want to quote what he said because it is an incredible proposition. He said:

When we must deal with a grave emergency, we cannot afford to base our actions on the flawed product of hurried drafting and rushed consideration by Parliament.

I agree with that, but he went on to say this:

And if the emergency arises when Parliament itself is dissolved, we would at present have no option but to act extra-legally.

To the layman, "extra-legally" means outside the law, without legal justification and without legal background or authority. I suggest that this proposition flies totally in the face of the rule of law.

The logical extension of this argument is a contemplation by the government that this planning scheme could then be used as a method of dealing with an emergency even without enabling legislation. That has very serious consequences.

In his remarks the minister said that it may be preferable to place entirely new emergency legislation before Parliament. Surely it is more than just preferable; it is absolutely essential.

This government is taking unprecedented action in passing, under royal prerogative, such a planning order. It may be called a planning order, but in all probability it will include the expenditure of funds to erect buildings, design plans and enlist personnel. At what point does this massive planning step outside the prerogative authority of the government? We do not know the answers to questions such as this because we do not have access to government documents in the matter. We do not know what the plans are and what funds are being expended, and the government has stonewalled every reasonable attempt to obtain this information and simply carries on in an aura of secrecy and an aura of planning with no enabling legislative authority.

We must be made aware of these plans. No large scale planning should be undertaken without the introduction and consideration of new emergency legislation, which is something, incidentally, which has been promised by this government since 1970.

Another concern I have is that apparently many government members do not appreciate the real nature of the order. For instance, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette), in reply to a question posed by my colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta on November 17, 1981, said that this order would go into effect only after proclamation by the House. That is simply wrong, in view of the statement of the President of the Privy Council I have quoted. There are no provisions for proclamation in the order. To implement it we either have to use the War Measures Act, with its limited scope and application, or new emergency legislation, or we act in the other way pointed out by the President of the Privy Council, extra-legally.

I think it is important that government members and the Canadian public generally understand that even to suggest the possibility of extra-legal implementation of the order is to suggest the wholesale removal of rights and freedoms without any form of parliamentary endorsement. That is a very serious suggestion indeed.

Finally, I am concerned about specific aspects of the order which give ministers authority to plan for wide-scale suppression of basic and fundamental human rights in peacetime at a time when this Parliament is asking the British Parliament to pass legislation providing for the entrenchment of a charter of rights. Let me give some examples. Under this particular order, in the field of agriculture there is provision for planning and the implementation of control and regulation of farm production. In communications, there is provision for control, regulation and maintenance of all essential telecommunications. In employment and immigration there are provisions for control and regulation of the registration, mobilization, allocation and movement of manpower. In energy, mines and resources there is provision for the control, regulation and production of fuels. My colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta, has pointed out that specific wartime provisions include directions to plan for censorship and civilian internment camps which, I take it, will be similar in nature to those set up during the Second World War for Japanese Canadians.

In light of past experience these plans must be looked at closely. This is so particularly in light of the fact that the government is suggesting the possibility of extra-legal implementation. It must be appreciated that these types of actions, though necessary in some very limited instances such as war, do restrict the freedom of the individual. To make plans for carrying out these actions with no enabling legislation and no parliamentary sanction leaves open the possibility of either the expenditure of a great deal of time and money without the ability to use the plans or, on the other hand—and more worrisome, as far as I am concerned—what the President of the Privy Council calls extra-legal implementation.

The first is highly undesirable, and the second prospect is outrageous. What the President of the Privy Council has said is that it would be the intention of the government, an emergency, in the opinion of the government of the day having come about, whether it happens to be some environmental emergency during peacetime or some form of insurrection in one part of the country or another, to take steps to carry out the product of the planning that is taking place. Then, according to the rationale of the President of the Privy Council, the government would expect to come back to a subsequent Parliament to have its unlawful acts retroactively made lawful. Under our parliamentary system, that is completely and absolutely out of the question and should be rejected and resisted by every thinking Canadian.

I appreciate the opportunity to give my opinion about the motion brought forward, and I call upon the government to do the right thing and produce the information requested by my colleague.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, like my two colleagues who have spoken, I too am very concerned about the implications of what we are doing here today. I will not speak at any great length because I know that the parliamentary secretary wants a chance to respond. Hopefully he will assure the House and the country that he will be tabling the information we on this side of the House are requesting so that the fears of Canadians, which are justifiably aroused, about the draconian implications of what the government has been doing will be assuaged, at least to some extent.

I think it is rather ironic that this kind of debate is taking place in the House of Commons so close upon the heels of the passage of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. One of the reasons I voted against the Constitution was the apprehension I had about some of the clauses in that charter, and I have said publicly that the very first one leaves me slightly less than inspired. I think I will put it on the record again. The very first part of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms in our proposed new Constitution has a weasel clause in it. Particularly in view of the events unfolding here today I do not think it has to be taken very seriously, at least until the government does something to justify the faith it is asking Canadians to have in it.

Before I read it I want to remind the House, for example, that we have done a lot of talking about freedom of information, and one of the most regressive clauses of any legislation of any civilized country is Section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act of Canada. I remind hon. members also that drastic modifications have been proposed to our freedom of information legislation. Yet right now in Quebec members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are being denied an adequate opportunity to defend themselves by virtue of this particular section's invocation by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

This was not the first time that this draconian action has been taken since the freedom of information act has been brought forward in committee. It would seem to me that if the government were the least bit serious about doing something to become more enlightened in this respect, it would not be doing what it is doing with Section 41(2), when it is apparently on the way out, nor would it be taking the course of action it is taking here today in refusing to bring forward the kind of information that it has been requested to do if it were serious about the ideals of our new Constitution. The first clause reads:

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it—

—and here is where it starts to weasel, Mr. Speaker—

—subject only to such reasonable limits—

—as are generally accepted in a free and democratic society with a parliamentary system of government.

What kind of system are we talking about? Are we talking about Tanzania? If we are, I do not have very much confidence. I do not think we will ever assuage the fears of Canadians about the implications of arbitrary pieces of legislation such as this, or regulations, until the government demonstrates by its actions what it intends to do, instead of obfuscating. As the author, Eldridge Cleaver, once said, "If you are going to talk the talk, you have got to walk the walk." I do not understand why in times of peace, as the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said, "We have to put up with the kind of apprehended fears caused by this sort of draconian regulation".

Back in the 1950s, the hysteria was over the spread of atomic technology. I can well remember a bit of doggerel by the late Pete Seeger which went something like this, "The atom don't care about all this hysteria. It flourishes in Los Alamos and also Siberia". So, it may seem, will internment camps. If we will take this kind of legislation or regulation to its logical conclusion, maybe we will have a "Gulag Archipelago" in North Bay, or perhaps Thunder Bay. Perhaps that will be a great advancement in our contemporary Canadian Constitution.

In any event, I do not understand why the government would cause such an atmosphere to develop as is present in the House this afternoon, when it could have simply assured the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) before the debate started that it would table and make available some informaton to reassure members, such as myself and others from this side, and I am sure many members on that side, that these kinds of regulations are not really as bad as they sound.

Returning to something that hon. member from Surrey-White Rock-North Delta said regarding, I think, Clause 7 in the regulations in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) takes upon himself the right of censorship and will establish an organization to co-ordinate and implement the application of censorship controls, some people may say that the Prime Minister, of course, would not do anything bad. The same Prime Minister, shortly after imposing the draconian measures in the War Measures Act that affected Quebec, promised to repeal it. That was a long time ago. The War Measures Act is still with us, and so is Section 41 (2) of the Federal Court Act.

The Prime Minister has talked in the past about participatory democracy, when what we have here, of course, is his anticipatory autocracy. So far there has been no justification for what the government is proposing to do, and we do not have any reassurance that its motives are charitable. And that is really something that should have been dealt with by Parliament. We should be assured that when Parliament is sitting, nothing will be done unless it is brought forward and fully debated. I hope we will get that kind of assurance from the parliamentary secretary. As a little token of good faith, I hope that he will accede to the most reasonable request made by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta, buttressed so ably by the hon. member for Saskatoon West, and will assure all hon. members that this proposal, about which we are so apprehensive, will not be as autocratic and dictatorial as it seems.

Hon. members who are fortunate enough to have some training in law are familiar with the term res ipsa loquitur, things speak for themselves. The way these regulations now read, without the background and without the necessary explanation to convince hon. members they do not really seem as bad as they read nor as bad as we anticipate, and in the absence of explanations, these regulations will continue to speak for themselves. I think they will raise a great deal of well justified apprehensions in the minds and hearts of the people of Canada. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will do something in a small way to alleviate the fears raised this afternoon.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to convey to hon. members of the House some of the background behind the Emergency Planning Order P.C. 1981-1305. I particularly welcome the opportunity to correct a few false impressions that may have been left since its passage and publication in June, 1981.

In a very real sense the story of the Emergency Planning Order begins with its predecessor, the Civil Emergency Measures Planning Order P.C. 1965-1041.

The shortest explanation for the issuance of the new order in council is that the old order in council had become badly outdated. The question recently before the government was whether substantially to amend the old order, which itself had already been amended more than once, or to issue a new one. For the sake of clarity, we chose the second route.

The old order was outdated in two ways. First, it no longer reflected the actual institutional structure of the federal government. In the 1965 order, the departments of Employment and Immigration, Solicitor General and Supply and Services were not mentioned, although the minister responsible for defence production was given significant responsibility. Responsibility for certain co-ordinating functions for civil emergency planning lodged with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, although these responsibilities had been transferred as long ago as 1968.

The order was also outdated in a second way. It concentrated almost exclusively on civil emergency and civil defence plans and operations for wartime conditions and was silent on ministerial responsibilities for peacetime emergencies, such as natural disasters and large scale industrial accidents. It has been federal policy since 1974 that federal emergency planning should be addressed both to peacetime and wartime contingencies. The new Emergency Planning Order reflects this dual concern by setting out some continuing responsibilities of ministers in the areas of peacetime and wartime emergency planning. The new order also describes some machinery that potentially would be essential to mitigate and to recover from either peacetime or wartime emergencies.

Thus, the first part, Section (3) of the Emergency Planning Order, assigns to ministers three general responsibilities: First, ministers shall be responsible for the identification of possible types of emergencies within or directly related to their areas of responsibility, and for preparing, evaluating, testing and, when required, implementing appropriate related emergency plans and arrangements. Second, when a minister is assigned lead responsibility for an emergency, he co-ordinates relevant federal emergency planning and stands ready to secure and control assistance provided by other ministers. Third, each minister shall at all times be prepared to provide resources from his own portfolio to any other minister having lead responsibility for an emergency.

These three general responsibilities form the heart of the lead department concept in emergency planning that the government adopted in the mid 1970s. The emergency planning responsibilities of ministers are logical extensions of their normal powers, duties and functions. The Solicitor General is responsible for internal security, both in time of normality and in times of emergency.

The Emergency Planning Order also calls upon ministers, in Section 4:

—to provide emergency planning assistance to the provincial governments, and, through them, to municipal governments;

—to assist in the joint development of federal-provincial emergency plans in the regions of Canada;

—to be prepared to provide for the safety and welfare of the employees of the agencies in their portfolios;

—to develop and maintain plans for war emergencies;

—and to be prepared to provide assistance to those ministers having additional responsibilities as set out in the Emergency Planning Order.

These provisions express the main differences between the earlier war-related approach to emergency planning described in the 1965 order in council, and the current approach which is generally and equally applicable to peacetime and wartime contingencies, as was described by the minister responsible for emergency planning in his announcement of November of last year. Thus, the addition of emergency planning responsibilities for peacetime contingencies in PC 1981-1305 reflects what is in fact the current policy of the federal government in this field.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), as minister responsible for emergency planning, has already indicated that a certain amount of confusion has arisen about this new order. Some of that confusion can be traced to this peacetime wartime distinction and to the planning for emergency measures that, however regrettably, may be needed in either setting. I draw attention to Part I of the schedule which is entitled, "Establishment and Responsibilities of National Emergency Agencies". The eleven national emergency agencies to be planned by ministers are quite similar in detail to certain of the civil emergency powers, duties and functions assigned ministers by the 1965 order in council. I have already stated that the new order better reflects the present institutional structure of the federal government. This accounts for most of whatever differences may be found between the two texts. But Section 5 of the new order calls upon ministers to plan for the effective operation of the agency in any region of Canada in time of national emergency; that is, this machinery should ultimately be capable of operation in the circumstances of very grave peacetime emergencies as well as during wartime. Obviously the peacetime operation of national emergency agencies would only be required by and justified in the face of a most severe challenge to the peace, order and good government of Canada.

Here I would stress that the order is concerned only with the planning of these exceptional measures. The implementation of these measures quite clearly requires statutory authority, either as found in existing statutes or through new and special legislation which would have to be introduced, debated and passed when needed. It is very important to point this out since it seems to have been lost on some of my colleagues opposite.

Mr. Deans: Which ones?

Mr. Smith: Those who have spoken.

Mr. Deans: All of them?

Mr. Smith: No, not hon. members of the New Democratic Party, just those of the official opposition.

In the case of wartime emergencies, the War Measures Act confers, in our view, sufficient authority to activate, for example, the national emergency agencies needed to meet such a grave national crisis as war.

The third major part of the emergency planning order comprises ministerial planning responsibilities uniquely relevant to the exigencies of war. These responsibilities, set out in Part II of the schedule, are again quite similar in detail to certain of those set out in the 1965 order in council. Here, too, it appears to be clear that the War Measures Act confers sufficient authority to permit implementation of these plans and arrangements should this be required.

The activation of one or more of the national emergency agencies, say in the aftermath of a catastrophic disaster in Canada during peacetime, would however require authority not now conferred by any act of Parliament. Legislation to fill this void could take the form of special legislation especially tailored for a particular situation or a continuing statute addressed to emergencies more generally. Which of these paths should be followed to meet particular needs is a question now under study within the government. I should like to refer to a presentation made by the President of the Privy Council to a federal provincial conference on emergency planning for some further thoughts on the matter.

I invite hon. members to consider only one of the issues now being investigated, that is, the situation obtaining when Parliament has been dissolved. I would emphasize that I speak here not of adjournment nor of prorogation when Parliament could be recalled to deal with an extraordinary situation. In his address, the minister indicated that if an emergency were to arise when Parliament is dissolved, that is when there was no Parliament in existence to consult, the government, if it judged that action was vital and authority was not available in existing statutes, would at present have no option but to act outside the four corners of statute law. There is probably sufficient authority remaining in the prerogative of the Crown to justify such an initiative, provided the action taken was reasonable having regard to the circumstances and was referred to Parliament for review at the absolutely earliest opportunity. But the minister's point was that a continuing statute on emergencies could cater for this problem directly, thus providing the means to deal with all possible situations under all conceivable circumstances. If I rightly understand some of the concerns of hon. members, they will take comfort in the fact that this and related issues are now being carefully reviewed.

Also I should like to state that it is our profound hope that we shall never need to make use of the plans, arrangements and machinery called for by the emergency planning order. It is, however, our firm belief that emergency plans addressed to contingencies that can happen here should in fact be carefully drawn up, kept current and regularly tested. I believe that Canadians want, expect and deserve no less preparedness than this.

I should like to turn to the matter of civilian internment camps which are identified in Part II of the schedule of the order, the part covering war contingency planning as a responsibility of the Solicitor General. I point out two facts to hon. members. First, this responsibility was carried over from the 1965 order in council where it was assigned to the Minister of Justice, acting through the RCMP. The present order lodges this responsibility with the minister responsible for the internal security of Canada under the lead department concept, that is, with the Solicitor General, who alone is accountable to the House. Accordingly, it leaves open the question of which element or elements in the minister's portfolio will actually undertake the detailed planning associated with this responsibility. This determination is properly made by the minister, and I would only mention that both the new security intelligence agency and the correctional service could be expected, along with the RCMP, to have some input into this planning.

Second, I draw the attention of hon. members to the view of the McDonald royal commission on the importance of the internment program and the program by which internees are identified. Pages 928 to 934 of the report are specifically addressed to the need to enhance and strengthen this aspect of federal emergency planning, not to downplay or disregard it. The commissioners state at page 930:

> The wholesale round-up of people does not sit well with many Canadians who have lived through the arrests of Japanese Canadians in World War II and the crisis of October 1970. Having said this, however, the fact remains that in an emergency of the kinds contemplated by the War Measures Act some potentially dangerous persons will have to be put under restraint.

The commissioners direct six recommendations about internment to the government, all of which are being carefully considered at this time. Although I am advised that no final mechanisms have been established by which the incumbent solicitor general will discharge his obligations under the Emergency Planning Order, I would hope that the following brief description of the anticipated procedures would help to alleviate the concerns about possible internment requirements that have been expressed by hon. members.

First, it is and will continue to be a function of the security service, that is, the security intelligence agency, to obtain intelligence concerning only those individuals who are the legitimate concern of that service in accordance with an approved mandate.

Second, as a safeguard against possible abuse, any intelligence to be used in support of this identification program must first be presented for examination to a review committee composed of senior officials of the security service—again, the security intelligence agency—members of the solicitor general's secretariat and legal counsel acting as a representative of the Crown. That would be the Department of Justice.

Third, the review committee would examine the information presented to ensure that stringent guidelines protecting the rights and civil liberties of individuals are respected.

Fourth, only if the Parliament of Canada declared a national emergency in relation to war or public order and subject to the passage by this House of specific enabling legislation, could internment action actually be taken. It is important to point out that all these safeguards would be taken into consideration before internment action was taken.

Fifth, as a final safeguard against potential injustice, such legislation would guarantee a detainee the right to appeal his detention to an independent advisory committee appointed by the incumbent minister of justice, which would have the power to review all information pertaining to the case, and, if justified, order the release of the detainees.

These proposed procedures clearly illustrate the concern found throughout the federal government, that the security and safety of the state must be preserved by measures that respect the rights and freedoms of individual Canadians to the fullest extent possible. I think anyone who is objective and fair-minded in evaluating these criteria could come to no other conclusion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Kelly).

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my attention was drawn to this issue for the first time several months ago when I received a number of letters that proclaimed the imminent creation of a fascist dictatorship in Canada. I did not know what those letters were referring to. Like all good members of this House, however, when approached with a question to which I do not know the answer, I made the proper inquiries. I found that the situation is exactly as the preceding speaker outlined it. I communicated that to my constituents. I found that there has always been legislation of this sort; that this is not something new or sudden, and it certainly is not something that is unexpected. I also found out that the legislation is outmoded.

All of us in the House are used to seeing things change through the passage of time, so why should we be surprised that this sort of legislation would have to address itself to situations that change through time as well? Recognizing changing circumstances and the need to respond to those changes, the government decided to review, amend and introduce new portions to this type of legislation which has always been with us. I think every member of the House would be critical of any government that did not do that to all legislation. I do not think anyone in the House would look suspiciously at the government for reviewing and updating this particular legislation at this time.

When we look at the amended document, however, what do we find? What are the horror stories that we have supposedly been hiding from the general public? We find that we have divided emergencies into two categories—war and peace. I do not think anyone here would dispute that type of categorization. It seems to be obvious. We have tried to target it in such a way that it can be applied to municipalities and to provinces, regionally and nationally.

In light of the debate I have heard in the House over the last few months about the diversity of the country and the need to develop structures, that reflect and cater to this diversity, I wonder what is so offensive or, to the hon. gentlemen opposite, what is so amusing, about creating a piece of legislation that recognizes that diversity and attempts to respond to it?

Mr. Hargrave: You did it by order in council.

Mr. Kelly: We find the government has decided, organizationally, to divide its response—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour allotted for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock later this day.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO SEXUAL OFFENCES AND THE PROTECTION OF YOUNG PERSONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-53, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to sexual offences and the protection of young persons and to amend certain other acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the debate was interrupted at five o'clock this afternoon, the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) had the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, at 5 p.m. I had been speaking for some ten minutes, and I had been setting out some of my thoughts on the principle of these sections which are before the House in Bill C-53. At that time, I was pointing out that there has been a general lowering of standards in our country over the last few years, and I think most hon. members would agree. One need only look at the television programs which are the daily fare of our young people, who are of prime interest to me. One need only go into the bookstores and see the books which are on display to know that the input our children are receiving can have no other possible effect than to lower standards, moral, legal and other.

One looks at the abortion statistics and finds that, in the last year, we as a society effectively killed 67,000 unborn children.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Thacker: We did that in the face of medical evidence which showed, beyond any shadow of a doubt, that from the moment of conception a life has been created, a life which is entirely separated from the life of the mother except for a support system which lasts for a very few short months. However, in the face of all that scientific evidence, there were 67,000 abortions. I would not for one moment blame the vast majority of the young girls who have abortions, because when one looks at their conduct from the Christian perspective of tolerance, understanding and patience, one realizes that they have been faced with the daily bombardment of television, movies and books. They look to the conduct of their peer groups and, particularly, to the conduct of the older members of society. How could they do otherwise? I do not think we should ever criticize them.

Therefore, our job as legislators is surely to attempt to come up with some standard upon which we can all agree, one which we can hold out to our society as being the very minimum standard. We would certainly hope everyone would operate at a much higher standard than that; but we would want to have a minimum standard which is at least high enough to perpetuate our society. There is no doubt that if we carry on in the manner we are now, our society, as we know it, will end. The wheel of history has turned over all sorts of groups of people who came together as societies and who simply failed because they permitted the standards to which they aspired to drop.

We know that as a society in Canada, we are at an interface between two major industrial and post-industrial societies. Therefore, we are now changing, just as we developed from a nomadic society to an agricultural society, which caused stress on the people who went through that change, and just as we evolved from a rural, agricultural society to the industrial society. Those who read history know that the two or three generations of individuals throughout that transition suffered terribly. The rights of individuals failed, and the people did terrible things to themselves.

Only a few short years ago, 90 per cent of our people were on farms and in small communities with less than 10 per cent in the cities. Now over 90 per cent of people are in the cities, and we are a highly industrialized society. It will take us a while, probably two or three generations, to work out the new checks and balances between people and groups so that our society can become more stable. It seems to me that our job as legislators is, particularly, to protect the youth during this transition period. Therefore, we should clearly understand why we want to protect the youth. I suppose we could say that we need no laws at all, that everyone will be subject to his own personal sanction and the sanction of the people and the power around them. That is one way society can go. But we do not believe that in a democracy. We particularly want to protect our youth so that they will retain the opportunity to get out in society when they reach the proper age and to achieve their goals.

I am sure that you have worked with youth as most of us in this House have, Mr. Speaker. I believe, as sophisticated as children are in terms of the knowledge to which they are exposed, that they lack the emotional maturity to make conscious decisions about sexual matters and how to interact with their peer groups until they reach at least 17 or 18 years of age.

While we are protecting young girls and boys under the age of 18 and girls between 14 and 16, once they reach the magical age of 16, we have no further special protection for them other than the new sexual misconduct clauses under which it will be very difficult to obtain any sort of conviction in a situation where it is peer group versus peer group. Certainly for an age group difference of less than three years between a boy and a girl, it will be very difficult to obtain any sort of conviction. Therefore, we should recognize that fact.

I have no problem at all in speaking to high school students and telling them that that is my firm belief as a result of my experience in life. If we put the argument to them that if they will simply trust us because they lack the experience base upon which to make those important life decisions, life decisions that will forever affect their lives adversely if they make a mistake, I find that most young people have no problem accepting it. They agree that we should be setting a high standard.

For a few moments I would like to discuss some of the specific clauses of Bill C-53. The first part deals with the sexual exploitation of young people. The Criminal Code of Canada under Section 146, which deals with sexual intercourse with females under the age of 14, reads as follows:

> 146. (1) Every male person who has sexual intercourse with a female person who
> (a) is not his wife, and
> (b) is under the age of fourteen years,
> whether or not he believes that she is fourteen years of age or more, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life.

That section will be dropped and in its place, we will have Clause 166(1) which reads as follows:

> 166. (1) Everyone who engages in or procures sexual misconduct with or by a person who
> (a) is not his spouse, and
> (b) is under the age of fourteen years,
> is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for ten years.

Hon. members can see that the definition of sexual intercourse has been changed to sexual misconduct. I believe the question arises as to whether or not this covers ordinary sexual intercourse because the words are "sexual misconduct". Does sexual misconduct cover ordinary sexual intercourse? That question is not set forth or covered in the statute. The words sexual misconduct are not defined. The committee should look at that area in detail and hear evidence on it from experts.

A great part of this clause is to try and legitimize and save the young people in the 15 to 18-year age group from having criminal charges pressed against them as a result of what some people describe as ordinary conduct for young people in that age group, such as fondling, petting etc, that is seen to be normal in some cases but which I am not sure, as a matter of criminal law, we should be trying to cover at all, at least to make it legal.

It is also clear that the penalty under this new clause has been changed from life imprisonment to that of ten years in prison. It will be interesting to hear what the government has to say as to why it felt it should put forth this policy for the people of Canada. It will be interesting to hear what the experts have to say, and we will want to follow up on that as well.

Section 146(2) of the Criminal Code reads:

> Every male person who has sexual intercourse with a female person who
> (a) is not his wife,
> (b) is of previously chaste character, and
> (c) is fourteen years of age or more and is under the age of sixteen years,
> whether or not he believes that she is sixteen years of age or more, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years.

That was the special section of protection for females between the ages of 14 and 16 years. That section has been carried forward with some changes into the new bill. It will be numbered Clause 167(1), and it reads:

> Every one who engages in or procures sexual misconduct with or by a person who
> (a) is not spouse, and
> (b) is fourteen years of age or more and is under the age of sixteen years,
> is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years.

Clause 167 sets forth several defences. For example, if the boy is under the age of 16, that would constitute a defence. If the boy is less than three years older than the girl, that would constitute a defence.

However, the following is interesting. We read:

> (b) he is less responsible than the complainant for the sexual misconduct that took place.

It has always been a principle of our criminal law that if the boy could show that he was no more responsible—those are the words in the old act—then a judge or a jury could acquit him. But the standard under these new laws, and the onus would be on the person charged to prove that he is less responsible. In the case of two 17-year-old people, how could you possibly show that the boy was less responsible than the girl?

As a matter of evidence, and as a practising lawyer, I can tell hon. members that it would be very difficult to meet that requirement. I believe that to leave that clause in is worse than to leave it out.

Over all we must agree that the clause protects both males and females equally. It removes anachronism, or at least what some people say is anachronism.

Section 152 in the Criminal Code permitted a man to be charged if he seduced a girl under promise of marriage. That section is to be removed in its entirety. But again, I wonder if that is wise. I hope that hon. members will study that section. In other sections of the act we admit 18 is the age at which girls achieve full maturity. In effect, we are saying that girls between the ages of 16 and 18 have no protection at all in the case where an older man seduces them under the promise of marriage.

Bill C-53 has Clause 168 in it. This deals with sexual misconduct by a parent with a child under the age of 16. Again, we are faced with the question of what the definition of sexual misconduct is. Does it cover petting or fondling? What if a father kisses his daughter goodbye on her way to school, does that have the potential of a charge being laid if a daughter becomes spiteful and wants to insist on a charge being laid? That section has a penalty of ten years. I have to ask whether that is enough, because we do know from statistics that the incidence of parents being involved sexually with their children is increasing. That is very regrettable, but clearly it is a fact of life. More people are being divorced. Men and women are taking on common-law spouses, or new spouses who do not have the same parent-child relationship with their stepchildren, and it is simply easy for them to become involved, given the situations that occur in many, many homes. I wonder if ten years is enough as a signal from us as parliamentarians to the judges who sit out there. I particularly wonder if it is enough when you consider that there is automatically a remission of one-third of the sentence, and that the parole board gets involved and automatically reduces that sentence still further. When we as parliamentarians set ten years as the maximum penalty, we are really not giving the judges much leeway in imposing a sentence that is good in terms of preventing other people from committing similar acts. That is what we normally would call a deterrent.

Section 168(2), deals with the use of premises and is no doubt very good. This relates to a growing problem in our society that has to be dealt with. Section 168.1 deals with incest, and I wonder how witnesses will respond to this because again the penalty has been reduced from 14 years to ten years.

Section 168.2 deals with visual representation of sexually explicit conduct of young persons, namely, pornography. That is a new section. This is clearly a growing problem in our society, and I am wondering why, as a matter of government policy, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has brought the bill forward with a penalty of only five years. Surely it is very damaging to young children to be used in making pornographic movies because they might even have the image of themselves as heroes when clearly that is not the case and their whole lives will be affected as a result. When an adult takes a 16-year-old person and gets him or her started in that kind of activity and the child comes to believe that is a legitimate way of life and carries on in that way, surely that is a loss to society as a whole. When we say the penalty will be only five years, again given the remission provisions and the parole board, that is not much of a signal to our courts that we deem that to be important, and that that kind of conduct should be discouraged.

Section 249 deals with the abduction of unmarried persons under 16 years of age. Section 250 deals with the abduction of children under 16 years of age. I can say to you, sir, these are very good provisions, particularly in the case of divorced parents, because in many, many cases it is an absolute tragedy what happens to young children. Parents who are divorced sometimes steal these children back and forth. They are sometimes mean and vicious, using these children as though they were hammers and sledges with which to beat each other over the head, with no concern for the child; often claiming great concern for the child, but in fact using the child as a weapon to attack the other parent. Meanwhile, the children are becoming increasingly confused, and as parliamentarians I believe we should speak on that very loudly, sending a signal to parents that children have interests that go beyond the mean, narrow and selfish views of the parents.

We could then go on to other sections that deal with gross indecency, buggery and bestiality. In fact, under the present law those are offences. Under the new law they will no longer be offences. Buggery and bestiality simply disappear from our laws. Again, I am not sure that is what we should be doing in society.

Many times we believe we are updating and modernizing our law, but we are forgetting the fact that those sections were put in by people who were every bit as intelligent as are we, or think we are. They were put in as a result of the common experiences of their societies and because they found them to be necessary. I think we should look carefully at these offences before we pull them out.

People are often very unhappy with high interest rates and they go back to the biblical injunction against usury. Some seem to think that is in the Bible as a matter of religion. In fact, the parts of the Bible on usury flowed from the common experience of society at that time with high interest rates. They learned from practical experience that high interest rates cause a great concentration of wealth in the hands of the people who already have wealth and, in fact, create a class society that leads to the downfall of that society. That is why there is a section in the Bible against usury. Before we take out these sections we should be sure we understand as a society that we are doing the right thing.

There are quite a few changes dealing with assault. As you know, under the present code we have Section 245 which deals with common assault. That same section in another subsection deals with assault causing bodily harm. We have a separate section which deals with bodily harm with intent to wound, and there is a fourth section that deals with assault with intent to commit an indictable offence, and assaulting police officers.

Bill C-53 replaces that present system with offences of assault, assault causing serious bodily harm, unlawfully causing serious bodily harm and assaulting a police officer. There is no doubt that, from a positive point of view, it is in conformity with some of the basic criminal law principles. It expresses an instruction regarding reasonableness. There is a problem in that a mistake of fact must be reasonable and not just honest.

Finally, the bill deals with sexual assaults. This is perhaps the part of the bill that gets the maximum coverage and is probably a very good reason why the bill should not be dealt with as an omnibus bill. Some of us have some pretty strong feelings about many of these other sections, yet feel that this part on rape and sexual assault has some very positive provisions which should be brought in. I believe if the government were to split the package, it would be much easier to get at least some parts passed very quickly.

Under the present Criminal Code, Section 143 deals with rape, Section 149 deals with indecent assault on females and Section 156 deals with indecent assault on males.

In 1979 there were some 3,388 rape cases reported. We know, as a broad general statistic, that only one of eight rapes is actually reported because most women are just too embarrassed to raise the matter. They know that the trial and the publicity is often more harmful to them personally than the rape, however violent, vicious and awful it might be. Under the new code Section 246.1 says:

> Every one who commits a sexual assault is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for ten years.

Section 246.2(1) reads:

> Everyone who commits an aggravated sexual assault who
> (a) uses a weapon during or at the time he commits a sexual assault; or
> (b) commits a sexual assault that causes serious bodily harm.
> (2) Everyone who commits an aggravated assault is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life.

That has now been dropped as a matter of government policy to ten years, and again that sends quite an improper signal to our judges as to how we as parliamentarians want that dealt with and how we feel Canadians want that dealt with. I suppose that provision for ten years will stay unless the public indicates to all of us as members with sufficient force that they want to have a harsher punishment. Perhaps if 20 years were served, that might be better than ten years.

It is also interesting to note that under aggravated sexual assault there can only be a conviction under that section if the person is using a weapon. A weapon is not often necessary in a case where the attacker is a big man. Surely you can still have aggravated assault without a weapon. Just the difference in size would put many women at a very real disadvantage.

The section also points out that the woman must suffer serious bodily harm. We all know that a punch in the nose heals within a short time, but when a woman has her apartment door broken down and has been dragged into her bedroom and thrown on the floor, it is an emotional trauma and an indignity for her which is far greater and lasts far longer than an actual physical punch in the nose.

Another problem with the whole section is that sexual assault is not defined. There are many situations which might arise that may result in convictions that Parliament would not want, or vice versa. Surely with the collective wisdom of cabinet, Parliament and the skilled bureaucracy, along with all the witnesses who come forward, we should be able to arrive at a proper definition which is far more meaningful than the one we have. If we do not, it will be left entirely to the judiciary, and I think that they will be so busy dealing with the new constitutional provisions that they probably will not have time to decipher this. We could be doing that ourselves. I could say much more because this is an omnibus bill which covers many other areas, but I will leave time for other members to speak.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the omnibus bill known as C-53 which proposes to change some of the aspects of the Criminal Code of Canada. After being a member for two and half years, I am beginning to understand the rhythms of the chamber and to carry a deep appreciation of the constitutional process and its implications on the lives of Canadians.

I rise to speak to this bill during this stage of discussion of principle, which is appropriate. To the backbenchers on the government side and to hon. members on this side of the House, I would say that as we discuss these changes to the Criminal Code, I hope we will approach the task and employ a process which is quite different from the process which was used to change the Constitution. I think it is important that we do not approach the issue of amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada with any sense of partisanship. We should deal with the amendments to the Criminal Code with the intent to define our values. I feel that we should be free in this chamber, in committee and at all stages, to work collectively to gather information of the possible implications that the proposed changes will have on Canadians. We could obtain this knowledge by bringing forward the experts we need to interpret the common law words we intend to use. These experts could help us to understand the implications that a bill such as this would have on Canadian society today and in the future. If the Liberal backbenchers allow themselves to be forced into a position of supporting one cabinet minister or one particular policy, they run the risk of doing a disservice to Canadians which will last for a long time.

That was perhaps one of the greatest tragedies during the long constitutional debate. As a Member of Parliament I was present at 50 of the 56 public hearings. Many groups of concerned Canadians came forward to give us their opinion and share their perspective on what should be in the Canadian Constitution. They talked to the committee members, and I know that those committee members who sat in the room were affected by what they heard. I know that they understood. But the decisions were made by people who were not in the room. The decisions were made by people who did not hear the testimony and were brought forward by a minister and supported by a political party and its backbenchers who served on that committee. They supported those decisions, whether or not it was in accordance with the evidence on what would be good for the country.

The primary purpose for my intervention this evening is to say as distinctly as possible that we are dealing with some very difficult value issues which interface with the criminal justice system. Not one person in this country, whether he is a cabinet minister or a Supreme Court judge, has the wisdom to determine the best consequences for Canada. As this bill passes through the House this evening, it is important that we all have the collective will to ensure that when it goes to committee, the committee members will work hard enough and the process will last long enough to give sufficient time for Canadians who are knowledgeable of the issue to be summoned to give evidence. That testimony should be carefully examined. We should not allow ourselves to become the victims of the Department of Justice, to be subjected to their determination of the wording in the legislation. We should have alternative legal advice.

People in social work who deal with the issue of child abduction, family and marital problems should be allowed to testify about the reality of these problems in Canada and about the possible implications the wording of this bill might have on those situations.

If we do not approach this bill in this way, then we would better serve the nation if we did not change the situation at all, because in dealing with the crimes of rape, child abuse, child pornography and child abduction at least we have in place some systems which benefit from our experience in the common law. However, when we seek to revise those systems which are in place—and I think they need revision—if we do not do it in that spirit of open investigation and inquiry, we could make a bad situation worse. It is our responsibility not to move and not to make changes unless we have the information which gives us a sense of certitude that to move and to change will make the situation better in the future and more in accord with the kind of society we want to have and would value.

I stand here today because I see little evidence that Members of Parliament have an adequate opportunity in a variety of our processes to explore in a real way the issue of values and the implications of measures we pass in the House for the values we hold.

I rose in the House one day and put a series of three questions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) about the budget. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has told us that the budget is a document with a social policy purpose, and that social policy purpose is equity. I have spent days examining whether there is equity in that budget, and I have concluded that there really is not. In some respects, yes, there is, but in most there is not. In the process of that examination I noted that the budget reflects the values of whoever created it. I wonder if those are the values of the Liberal Party of Canada and all those who sit on the benches opposite, whether they are the values of the cabinet and the whole party or whether they are the values of a very small group of people in the centre. We do not have a process which allows us to look at the budget in terms of the values it expresses.

There is just one aspect of the budget I would like to identify for the House at this point. The budget expresses itself with some sense of clarity on the importance it places on the family in Canadian society.

Bill C-53 deals in part with the values we hold in relation to families. When I rose in the House to question the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I pointed out that there is a budget provision which provides that any adult Canadian can prepare for his retirement by owning a residence because the government leaves it tax free. The government will not levy capital gains tax when it is sold, and an adult Canadian can roll that into some kind of retirement plan. There is an encouragement to own a home, unless one is married. If a person has signed a marriage licence, the budget says he has half that right. He must share. If he chooses to live common law, gets a divorce or stays single, he can have a residence, enjoy whatever that gains for him and use it in retirement, but not if he signs a marriage license.

I examined the budget further. If I were a tax adviser, I could look at the budget and advise any married couple. I could look around this chamber and pick some Member of Parliament who is 30 or 35 years of age and married and say to him, "Go to a lawyer before the end of this year, get yourself a divorce and reach a financial settlement whereby you put half your income into the hands of your spouse." He and his spouse could live together common law from that point on. If he were to do that, the tax system would reward him to the tune of somewhere between $150 and $200 a month. There would be some $2,000 a year in tax savings if such a Member of Parliament were to go through the legal process of dissolving his marriage and live common law. How many members sitting on government backbenches recognize that the budget makes a social policy statement of that kind and reflects a value of that kind in two important respects? One is capital gains in terms of residence and the other is the actual income tax system itself. One of those inequities is new; the other has been there a long, long time. Is that in any way responsible for the fact that we have a society in which it seems to be more and more difficult for families to stay together or for marriages to endure, flourish and prosper?

When I look at this bill through that perspective, its wording causes me a great deal of concern. The wording of the child abduction clause leads me to think of the case of a divorce resulting in a child living with one of the parents. In this hypothetical case a 13 or 14-year-old child gets into a violent disagreement with that parent—children do that—and runs away. A logical place to run is to the other parent. As I read this legislation, a charge can be brought against a parent who welcomes his child into his home in that frightened state. As expressed in Bill C-53, the criminal law of this country would allow somebody to lay a criminal charge of abduction against that parent, and the penalty would be a maximum of 5 years in prison. I do not think that is what any minister of the Crown really wants. I am quite certain it is not what any member of this Parliament would want, but it sits there as a possibility in the current wording of the bill. I think it speaks eloquently about the point on which I began: the need for caution, the need to be non-political in a partisan sense and the need to have a committee process in which hon. members can work hard and hear witnesses who will provide them with the knowledge they need to comprehend in a real way what this bill will do.

As I was looking through this bill over the last few weeks, I obtained from the library some of the books and research information which deal with the variety of topics dealt with in this omnibus bill. The one I have in my hand at this moment is entitled "Rape: The Price of Coercive Sexuality". The statistics in it are perhaps the best available, but they are not very good. According to one statistic in this book, one quarter of those who commit offences such as rape are unemployed and fairly young. When I see the unemployment figures that are published monthly increasing in this country, and I see that it is our young people who suffer disproportionate amounts of unemployment, as a behaviourial scientist I must conclude that we can expect to see more crimes of this kind. If we do not do a good job with legislation related to the topics that are before us tonight, then we are not providing our society with the kind of tools that it needs to ensure that we do not have an explosion of the kind of crimes which are dealt with by this particular piece of legislation.

As a member of the constitutional committee, it made any member who served there for all those hours, acutely conscious of the inherent conflict between the notion of individual rights and the notion of group rights, and the dilemma of whether the individual shall have the right to do whatever he chooses, versus the right of a society or some element of that society to live in a situation which promotes the kind of values which they have.

In our society I guess a group right for a family is an important kind of element. We give parents a great deal of power to determine the kind of schooling that their children might get, as one kind of an example. Some people will send their children to a school that has a strong religious flavour. Others would send them to a school which did not, and they would choose the kind of religious flavour that they wanted their children to enjoy.

What we are dealing with in this bill is an attempt to define the rights of the group over the rights of the individual. We are saying that an individual may not do the following series of things. The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) identified some of the problems that exist in this bill in terms of that issue. The bill speaks about sexual misconduct and then is silent on defining what that is. The member for Lethbridge-Foothills indicated that perhaps as parliamentarians we need to put our minds to finding a somewhat more complete definition of that, or we can opt out and turn it over to the judges, whose value systems may be an expression of the collective will as we experience it as people who are elected or who may be a discrepant group because of their training and experience and therefore may interpret those words in a way that is very different from what is in the minds of members of this chamber.

It seems to me that when one examines any piece of legislation which is dealing with the Criminal Code of Canada there is a sort of check list of concerns and of priorities that would run through one's mind. In some way I suspect that my check list of priorities is not the one that would immediately come to the minds of perhaps most members of the House, and certainly most members of Canadian society. It is because we have come to view our Criminal Code and our justice system from a certain perspective. When I lay out my priorities as to whether or not a particular piece of legislation affecting the Criminal Code will work, will be helpful, right at the top of my list is the concern for the victim. As a society, in a piece of legislation, in the systems we have in place, do we have adequate concern for the victim? That is at the top of my list. As one looks at the crime of rape and as one talks to people who are knowledgeable in that area and who work in rape crisis centres, they will tell you, with a great deal of clarity, that the rape which has been inflicted on the victim is bad, traumatic and very upsetting. However, far too often the treatment of the victim which follows from the rape is worse than the actual rape itself.

As we look at Bill C-53, we are trying to show some concern for the victim in the sense of trying to make the crime less potent in the vocabulary that we use—we now talk about assault rather than rape—we try to make it easier for the victim to go through the necessary process of testifying. That is quite an achievement, and one which members on this side of the House will support. It is equally important to recognize that the Criminal Code can be used to create a victim. From time to time the victim in our criminal justice system is someone who is unjustly accused.

In the area of a crime such as rape or sexual assault, we do have a tendency from time to time to accuse people unjustly. The minute that becomes public knowledge, they are a victim, whether innocent or not innocent. If they were unjustly accused of a crime of robbery of a small amount and the courts were subsequently to discover they had been unjustly accused, they would have been victims, but they would not be dealt with with the same sense of severity that will accrue to those who have been charged in a court of law with an offence of the kind that is identified in Bill C-53. Think of offences against children, sexual offences or child abduction. To be accused of any one of those is to create a problem to make a victim out of someone if, in fact, that person has not committed the offence.

As I read through the bill, is there not a fatal flaw in the fact that we are treating these kinds of concerns in the same way that we might treat a bank robber? We go immediately from some kind of police investigation to a formal charge in a court of law, to a criminal charge which is public. Yet we are dealing with situations that, in many cases, are intra-family, that occur between family members. We are dealing with situations that occur between lovers, people who cared a great deal about each other at one point in time, and through some set of circumstances, create trouble for each other at another point in time. I wonder if we as a parliament would have the wisdom to start from a slightly different beginning point with the concern for the victim. If we have the wisdom to design a process which is more adequate and takes into account our concerns about these offences, a process which provides perhaps a more thorough investigation before charges are laid and provides a broader based professional group to do the investigating, rather than only police personnel, we can be sure, before going to the criminal justice process, that we have done the best we can do for all potential victims. In many cases everyone involved in the situation will turn out to be victims; their lives will never be the same.

Can we really get a clear handle on the protection of victims as the starting point for this piece of legislation? Can we get the witnesses we require? Can we dig inside ourselves for the wisdom to think somewhat differently and to create our law somewhat differently so that we will not risk the future of victims, whether they are innocent children or adults? I say to hon. members of the House that I hope we can approach it with that kind of spirit. Can we balance that? Do we have the wisdom to balance that with the need to protect future victims from the excesses of persons who are likely to repeat their crimes? Are we sure that we have included in this legislation the mechanism to convict people who really should be convicted? Have we included the mechanism to subsequently deal with them for long periods of time and in ways which are required, so that potential future victims do not become the victims of people who commit such crimes? The third priority should be the punishment priority or the rehabilitation priority, but that should be only the third priority, after we have dealt with the first two.

I should like to talk for a longer period of time, but the risk one runs in such situations is that one might provide such a large set of ideas that the ones one started with become obscured. In conclusion, I reiterate that we should have a decent process as we approach the bill. We should forget our party labels, work collectively and examine witnesses. We should examine thoroughly the problem which exists in society and all proposed solutions. Then, in a year's time we may be in a position to deal with the bill in third reading. We will have amended it quite a bit but with some sense of good feeling among hon. members that we have a good piece of legislation which will do a good job for Canada—adults and children of the future. I hope that is that spirit in which we approach this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I support Bill C-53 in principle. I see many warts and many blemishes, none of which in my view are fatal, none of which are beyond correction or improvement in committee. Of course I sincerely believe that this is a committee bill.

There has been some suggestion that we have dealt with it for too long. I think spokesmen for the New Democratic Party asked at one point for agreement that there only be one speaker, limited debate for a day, or something of that nature. I was very much opposed to the suggestion. I do not think the bill needs to be considered day after day, it is a bill on which various hon. members on all sides of the House should comment because it touches the lives of many of our constituents.

It is an omnibus bill. In principle I have never been happy with omnibus bills, particularly those amending the Criminal Code, because they were often used as vehicles by a succession of governments wherein they would sugarcoat an unacceptable amendment with a variety of amendments which had been long sought and long desired. I cannot make the same accusation with equal force about this omnibus bill. I would have preferred that sexual assault amendments be dealt with separately. But I want to emphasize that omnibus bills amending the Criminal Code should not become the rule but preferably the exception.

The bill has had an unhappy history. When it was first introduced by the then minister of justice, the Hon. Ron Basford, three and a half or four years ago, I remember how deplorable was the timing of the introduction of that legislation. It preceded by only three or four months the long-awaited report of the Law Reform Commission on the same subject. I thought the then minister of justice was doing a grave disservice to the commission. It was referred to again in the Speech from the Throne in April, 1980, and finally introduced in Parliament by the then parliamentary secretary to the minister of justice. I know and respect the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin), but I suggest that any significant amendment to the Criminal Code deserves to be introduced on second reading in the House by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), not his parliamentary secretary.

There are a number of important matters that are dealt with in the legislation, any one of which could command our exclusive attention—child pornography, sexual exploitation of young persons and public decency. As much as I am tempted to dwell on some of these important aspects, I wish to deal exclusively with the amendments regarding sexual assault. I almost made a fatal mistake today because I recalled making a speech on this subject some seven or eight years ago, and I almost looked it up. But I was wise enough to stop at the last moment. I cannot remember the circumstances. I know it was not legislation. I believe it was private members' hour, an allotted day or something like that. I remember late in the evening, on about five minutes' notice, rising and saying, "When, oh when will we be rid of the rape provisions in the Criminal Code?" I went on at some length, and as a result I received a considerable amount of mail, both in support and against. I am not so naive as to suggest that my speech prompted this legislation, but I recall saying without reservation and without qualification that the offence of rape must be absolutely done away with.

I dealt with two aspects of the offence of rape. The one which was hard to come to grips with was the dirty and smutty aspect, the multitude of clichés normally directed at victims of which we are all aware. For example, an unacceptable aspect of the offence is when young children look up the word "rape" in the dictionary and giggle. Another much more important aspect is the nature of the crime. I do not pretend to be a legal historian, but historically it was an offence against property, not a matter of protecting the integrity of a person. If a man's wife or daughter was defiled, his property was defiled; that is the history of this offence.

The wife or daughter was a chattel and when someone offended that chattel, the husband or the parent had recourse against the perpetrator of that offence. That is our history.

Perhaps this is not a good analogy, Mr. Speaker, but I remember very well acting for a farmer who owned a pure-bred heifer. A neighbour's bull broke down the fence between them and impregnated the heifer. I sued on behalf of the owner of the heifer and was quite successful. There is a great deal to be said about the offence of rape that is similar to that civil suit which I successfully prosecuted.

Those of us who have practised criminal law have certain cases that we will never forget. I remember an incest case, one which was very difficult for a young lawyer. I met the accused at the preliminary trial. We went through the preliminary hearings, through the trial, and by the end of it all I was absolutely convinced that my client did not know that incest was a criminal offence. He regarded that child as a piece of property and he, being the owner, could do nothing to that property that would offend the criminal law. I was not too busy at the time and I was so concerned about the case that I did some further investigation. The law school of the University of Southern California sent me a doctorate paper which showed that people in a certain vocation, to which my client happened to belong, commonly did not know that incest was a criminal offence.

The report of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women states that in 1979, just under 3,400 rapes were reported in this country, and that their information indicates that only one in eight rape cases were reported to law enforcement agencies. I presume that of the seven unreported, the decision was not left in the hands of the victim but was made by the parent or the husband. I think that situation is completely unacceptable in this century and therefore I say with all the force I can muster that we should do away with the offence of rape.

I support the principle in the bill of equal protection for and sanctions against males and females. That provision is long overdue. I have a personal view with respect to the description of the new offences of sexual assault and aggravated sexual assault. I do not like adjectives in the Criminal Code. Of course that is a sweeping generalization and I understand the necessity of having descriptive words such as "sexual" and "aggravated sexual" in certain sections. I wonder if this does not continue to maintain an undue emphasis on the sexual nature of the offence, however.

I want to adopt the personal view of one of my colleagues, the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). On July 7 he said in the House, as reported at page 11307 of Hansard:

> It is my personal view that it is wise and advisable for the law to recognize that sexual assaults are crimes of violence and that their sexual character is a secondary feature.

I support that, Mr. Speaker. I have defended theft cases where the whole nature of the offence was sexual—the theft of women's clothing off a clothes line. That was a completely sexual offence, but the charge was obviously theft and the sexual aspect played no part in the trial, the conviction or the sentencing.

On the other hand I defended a brutal rape case where the whole nature of the offence was that the accused wished to prove male dominance over the victim. The fact that it had a sexual connotation had absolutely nothing to do with the offence. The accused could just as easily have taken a knife and carved the poor woman to ribbons without any penetration or any sexual aspect to the offence. He could have done that just as easily because he had to prove that as a male he was going to be dominant over his victim. It troubles me when I see adjectives such as "sexual assault" and "aggravated sexual assault" in the bill.

I wish the committee wisdom in its deliberations, Mr. Speaker. I served on that committee for a number of years and I have profound respect for it. It has some difficult days ahead so I wish it well. I am delighted to see that the minister has entered the House, Mr. Speaker. I understand the heavy burden of work that committee had in this session, but I hope it can and will deal with the difficulties in this bill by listening to the broadest range of views that is possible.

I am the last person to ask that a proliferation of sexual offences be included in the Criminal Code, but I must say that I agree with the National Association of Women and the Law which made three basic points in its brief.

First of all, the lowest level of sexual assault must include an option to proceed by indictment or by summary conviction. I think that must be included in order to deal with what we may feel is the knowing behaviour but which, to some victims, is traumatic, upsetting, disturbing and humiliating. The groper on the subway, for example, or that type of behaviour, could be dealt with by summary conviction at the option of the Crown.

Second, the term "serious bodily harm" should be deleted, in my view, and replaced with "bodily harm".

Third, I believe there should be another level of assault which is parallel to the general assault provisions of the code—assault with intent to maim or endanger life.

I understand the concern there is over sentencing, which has been expressed by the attorney general of Ontario for whom I have a profound respect—and I do not say that in any partisan sense. He is very concerned with the sentencing provision. I acknowledge the concern of my colleagues and others in the House who make the argument that a reduction in the maximum sentence could lead the public to believe that these crimes are being treated as less serious social behaviour. On the other hand, I am concerned that unacceptable, brutal and humiliating conduct may go unpunished or undeterred because of lack of prosecution. No one should try to convince us that jury equity is only a theory; juries know what the maximum sentence is and will balance it out.

I believe the committee will face its greatest test with the sexual assault clause on the sentencing aspect and I wish them wisdom. I hope they find it from the witnesses who must be called before it.

I notice the minister is now in the House, Mr. Speaker, and I presume he may wish to close the debate. I appreciate having had the opportunity to participate.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I have received comments on Bill C-53 from a number of national, provincial and local associations, from the attorneys general of the provinces, from the ministers responsible for health and welfare and from the general public. I found that the majority supported the proposed legislation and its underlying principles. I have noted these constructive comments for they will certainly be helpful when I consider amending Bill C-53. I shall not go into the particulars of the bill, as there will be ample opportunity to do so in committee.

[English]

I am certain that the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee will be inviting many of those who have indicated their interest in this topic to appear before the committee. I am hopeful that the committee will begin consideration of the bill early in the new year. A few hon. members, in their speeches on this bill in the House and in questions posed to me when I appeared before the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee on December 1 have suggested other topic areas, such as soliciting for the purpose of prositution and bawdy houses, that should be included in this bill. Some of those who have submitted briefs argue that Bill C-53 should tighten the law to specify that "pressing or persistent" conduct would not be necessary to obtain convictions under Section 195.1 of the Criminal Code. Other groups, such as the National Association of Women and the Law and civil liberties organizations, have recommended deletion of Section 195.1, considering that it penalizes mostly women, or, failing that, ensuring that customers who do the soliciting be included in the offence of soliciting for the purpose of prostitution.

I am well aware of the social nuisance of problems of inconvenience caused by the practice of soliciting for the purpose of prostitution in public and the problems associated with the enforcement of the bawdy house provision, as well as the complications that may result from the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Galjot and Whitter cases.

We need to examine carefully whether the problem of street soliciting, for example, can best be resolved by criminal sanctions or by sanctions under provincial law such as occur in Nova Scotia under provincial loitering legislation.

[Translation]

As hon. members probably know, last week the by-laws of the City of Montreal were declared ultra vires by the Quebec Superior Court because they govern acts that already fall under the Criminal Code. I realize that this is another aspect that must be carefully considered, and I hope that the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will examine this question thoroughly when considering Bill C-53. In any case, all individuals and agencies concerned will have a chance to air their views. Finally, I should also like to point out——in the speeches by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) I have noticed that she was pretty preoccupied and concerned about the situation. I am most sympathetic as I think it is a difficult problem. However, I have just indicated that in Nova Scotia some decisions of the court have permitted the police to operate quite successfully without reversal in appellate divisions. There is a similar situation with the present provisions in the city of Toronto where people who are soliciting have been arrested, and the police have been rather successful in court. I am wondering why it is so difficult to proceed in other provinces when it is possible in some provinces with the existing law. It is not an easy problem.

[English]

My predecessor, Mr. Flynn, very clearly said that we should not amend the Criminal Code and that such matters should be dealt with through either the loitering legislation of the provinces or through the municipal bylaws. At that time, I did not agree; but with the recent development of efficiency and judgments with regard to the situation in some provinces, perhaps he was right. Therefore, if he was right, I will be delighted to recognize that. However, I would like the members of this committee to look at these solutions and invite some witnesses. Some people think that if we press too hard concerning the provision respecting solicitation, especially the women's groups which feel that it is oppressive to women, it might be more than they would like or the legislature would like. I found, from discussions and after waiting for the decision of the Supreme Court in the Galjot case, that the problem was not as easy as I had expected it would be.

I would like the committee to look at all these aspects, even if they are not clearly stated in the bill. I also noted the speech of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who said that it would have been nice if we had discussed these matters before. However, I would like to tell him that this bill does not concern a new subject, but one which has been debated for some time. The Law Reform Commission has looked into the matter and some work has been done since. There was discussion at the time that Mr. Basford tabled Bill C-52 on the same subject. We never managed to proceed, but there was some debate. The House is not seized with a brand new problem. It has been debated in many instances in the House, in committee and in the public.

I now hope that members of the committee will look at the problems. We will debate it and hear witnesses. I am open to suggestions. However, the problem is that it is always extremely difficult to balance freedom and order. Judgments always affect both sides, generally speaking, because if one goes too far in one direction, one will perhaps create a problem concerning the freedom of the people; and if one goes in the other direction, one will have a problem with a society which is a bit too lenient.

Therefore, I will do my best with the help of the members. I am glad the committee work on this subject will start early so that we can conclude the debate and the legislation early next year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

CANADA NON-PROFIT CORPORATIONS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING NON-PROFIT CORPORATIONS

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-10, an act respecting Canadian non-profit corporations, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table for second reading in the House today, Bill C-10, an Act respecting Canadian non-profit corporations. There are in Canada some 3,000 non-profit corporations that are federally incorporated, and the purpose of Bill C-10 is to modernize the legislation applying to such corporations. Generally speaking, the bill's aim is to establish rules and guidelines for all those involved in the administration of non-profit corporations, and this includes managers, professional advisers, consultants and government employees. Under the bill, directors of non-profit corporations have flexible and extensive management powers, subject, of course, to the right of members to verify any abuse on the part of the directors and subject to their right to take an active part in management.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, as it stands today, is the result of many consultations. Its content is similar to that of three previous bills: S-3, S-4 and S-7. All three were considered by the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, passed by the Senate and subsequently tabled in the House of Commons.

[English]

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the bill before us tonight is exactly the same legislation word for word, as which was introduced in 1979 by my predecessor, the current hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence).

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is a fine bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: At the time the bill was being drafted, briefs were submitted by representatives of various key groups with an interest in the bill. In fact, between December, 1977, and February, 1978, the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce heard witnesses from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Quebec Chamber of Commerce, the Toronto Board of Trade, the Institute of Association Executives and the Canadian Red Cross Society. These associations want this legislation, and in fact, Mr. Speaker, they have been waiting for it for a long time. Finally, the bill has the same objectives as Bill S-3, Bill S-4 and Bill S-7, that is, to establish a system in which members are treated equitably and are able to make an effective contribution to the administration of the corporation's internal affairs, and managers are free to pursue the objectives of their corporation. I therefore recommend that the members of this House support the bill.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to say, better late than never.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in having the opportunity to speak on this bill tonight. Somehow when one talks of charitable organizations, many images come to mind. We think of clubs, such as the Lions and the Kinsmen. We think of church organizations. But at the same time we think of other groups and the abuses that have occurred under the umbrella entitled charitable organizations. I think of groups such as the Moonies. I can think of kidnapping, brainwashing and programming and all those sorts of things that we have heard on the news lately. There is no doubt that is all part of this particular piece of legislation we are addressing tonight. It is a part of it, but it is not all of it.

First, I would like to look at what we would be dealing with, the purpose of laws when they are put before Parliament and what happens when we try to have them enacted into legislation. One of the first things we do in any law is to protect the innocent. We dealt with that earlier tonight when we spoke about rape laws, laws that affect sexual conduct and sexual offences. We think of criminal law. The primary focus and purpose of much of our criminal law is to deal with crimes perpetrated on innocent people.

The second aspect of any law is probably to preserve the interests of our society. In other words, if we were to look at it in this country, it is to encourage the development of a Canadian way of life, a Canadian lifestyle, a Canadian framework for our organizations.

The third element of any law is probably to ensure order and peace, basically to have a peaceful environment. The fourth one is a difficult one and one with which parliamentarians must always grapple, that is the idea of ensuring majority rule, but at the same time going to great lengths and being very careful to protect the rights, the concerns, the difficulties and the problems that minorities face. With that in mind, I think we have to look at this particular piece of legislation.

Bill C-10, an act respecting Canadian non-profit organizations does try to protect the innocent. There are several clauses in the bill which deal with protection, the protection of the membership and its members from abuse, from difficulties and from disputes. That is one of the primary focuses of this bill.

The second purpose of any good legislation is to preserve the interests of our society. In other words, what we will try to achieve in our charitable organizations. We would look to encourage honesty. We would look to encourage legitimacy. We would look to encourage consistency in terms of the Canadian way of life and the principles and the objects that we would consider important with what we as Canadians view as right and would like to see reflected in our legislation.

The third aim of good legislation which we must consider is to attempt to ensure order and peace. Again, this legislation tries to deal with that. It would try to discourage societies that would be violent and basically dishonest, abusing the principles of a charitable organization or generally doing anything that would disrupt what we consider good order, good government and good opportunity within our government.

The fourth purpose is to deal with the attempt to ensure majority rule, but at the same time to try to protect the minority. As we study Bill C-10, we see there is plenty of room left to protect individual members from their own organization. They have plenty of opportunities through this bill to appeal to the courts, so much so that I begin to have some concerns about this part of the legislation.

After having looked briefly at the laws and our purposes for laws and what this legislation tries to reflect, what we must do is try to have a look at the purposes of charitable organizations as we see them. We should look at the importance and the role they play within our society.

The first purpose of a charitable organization—and I say first although that necessarily does not mean it is the first order of priority—would be what one would call fellowship, in other words, companionship among members, a sense of belonging, a sense of community, a sense of togetherness and a sense of common direction, common beliefs and common philosophy. To go one step further, its purpose is the promotion of similar ideas and concepts.

The second purpose of a charitable organization is to benefit those with a specific need. As we take a look at the charitable organizations in Canada today, we can see that they cover the whole gamut, the full circle of people or objects within our society with a specific need. We have such things as art societies, animal societies and societies that deal with prisoners, whether Canadian or foreign, or prisoners held behind the Iron Curtain. I think of Amnesty International and that type of organization.

The second area of need would be physical need, for instance, food, clothing and shelter. Still another one would be emotional need. I think specifically of such areas as counselling victims of crime and victims of stress. Just recently in my own riding I have seen some of the concerns that emanate from that. Over the last couple of years we have experienced a booming economy. We have seen charitable organizations that have provided counselling for families that are suffering from some of the traumatic experiences that come with sudden economic growth which tend to put pressure on the family unit and cause all sorts of pain, destruction and hurt.

The third area is propagation of viewpoints. That is where the charitable organization gets together and really has a sense of joining of like-minded people. Their purpose is to teach the people within their organization about the principles, the guidelines and the goals they wish to foster and propagate. They strive to instruct their members and bring them to a mature approach that is consistent with their organization and the beliefs they propagate. Another area, of course, has to be the seeking out of new members, proselytizing, trying to bring new people into the corporation.

My interest in this bill comes from my keen interest in charitable organizations and from the concept I have of charitable organizations. I tend to think of them as being small groups. Charitable organizations are, in my opinion, largely small groups, minority groups, which tend to reflect a minority position, attitude and idea. They tend to have very genuine and very real reasons for their existence. As I said, I think that is one of the most important parts and most fundamental foundations for the way in which I approach Bill C-10. They tend to be small, and any legislation that attempts to deal with them, attempts to address them or their problems must, therefore, recognize the fact that we are not dealing on the average with large corporations.

Of course, there are exceptions. We do have charitable organizations with very large memberships. We do have charitable organizations that are motivated by selfishness, organizations which have been taking advantage of the charitable donations aspect of the laws in order to accumulate wealth and personal gain. We have seen them used as vehicles of abuse. I believe very strongly that in fact these are the exceptions rather than the rule.

As we approach this bill I think it is very important and fundamental that we think in terms of the small organizations which will in fact be affected by the bill. In order to emphasize that, I would like to turn first in Bill C-10 to the definition section which defines charitable organizations. It says:

"charitable corporation" means a corporation incorporated or continued under this act to carry on activities that are primarily for the benefit of the public;

Then it states:

"corporation" means a body corporate incorporated or continued under this Act and not discontinued under this Act;

That is a very broad definition. We wonder, when looking at that, just what it means. The description tends to create in our minds a picture of largeness, grandness, bigness, when in fact what it should bring to mind, because of what it really does define and stand for, is little organizations like Lions Clubs. I have them sprinkled all through my riding; Lions Clubs of ten, 12, 15 members; Kinsmen Clubs, Knights of Columbus, Masons and churches. I think it is important that we recognize that churches represent, in fact, a very important group that will be affected by this particular legislation. That fact has been downplayed in any publicity I have seen about the bill.

In looking into the matter this afternoon I discovered that churches will be covered by this particular legislation. Therefore, I think this causes us some concern and we should give this bill a great deal of consideration. If we look at the size of the bill, we find it is all-encompassing, far-reaching and with many implications. It will have a strong impact on all of us in the House and on people sprinkled throughout my area. Therefore, I believe it deserves very careful consideration and investigation.

This afternoon while sitting in the House I learned that the government intended to bring this bill before us tonight. So I tried to carry out some investigation to find out what the bill is all about. I was surprised that Bill C-10 was to come forward today. I quickly sent out some feelers because I have distributed this bill to a few people asking for consideration and comment. Some of those comments have come back, but the majority have not yet reached me. I suddenly found myself confronted with a bill in respect of which there seemed to be very little resource material on which we could draw, and few sources of background information. On studying the bill. I found it to be massive and all-encompassaing, and it will in fact cause many changes. Therefore, it is important that we treat it with the seriousness it deserves.

I have some concerns about Bill C-10. The first is that in my view it will seriously complicate charitable organizations, those charitable organizations which, as I say, create in my mind a picture of small, simple groups, sometimes almost family affairs. Under this legislation they no longer will be simple. These will no longer be family affairs and will no longer be community affairs.

The best example of that, and the one that probably brought this bill into clear focus for me, came from the work I did last week to assist a small church in my riding to obtain federal incorporation. That small church would probably have a membership of, I would guess, 20, 25, at the outside, 30 people. It is primarily a family church in a rural area and I expect the people will probably meet in someone's home.

As I address this bill I cannot help but think of and relate to that very small church that suddenly, in the next little while, will be confronted with this massive piece of legislation.

Clause 5(1)(c) is the part that I find really begins to put some dramatic and effective regulations before this very small membership I refer to. It states in part:

(c) the classes of membership, and if there are two or more classes of memberships, the rights, privileges, restrictions and conditions that constitute the membership interests of each class;

They must be defined. They must be prescribed in form and set out. I suddenly get the picture of my ten little farmers in this little community church sitting down and trying to define the classes of membership, the rights, privileges and restrictions of membership. They are not lawyers, they are simple family farmers wanting to worship quietly with their families, likely in a farm home. Now they are suddenly involved in very concrete definitions.

The question that really arises—and I have heard it talked about briefly in some of my research—is whether churches would be affected. Just to clarify that, I think it is important that I read a quotation of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). This goes back to his news release of several months ago. It states:

Churches which will be incorporated federally will be affected by this bill, and although most churches which do incorporate do so provincially, there may be those who will incorporate federally.

In fact that is true, as demonstrated last week by my little community church. That little church has sought federal incorporation. As such, it will be subject to this massive legislation which is before us tonight. I would like to use this little church as an example to emphasize the importance of this legislation and its impact on each of us. This example puts a very complicated piece of legislation into perspective. It allows us to grasp some of the difficulties we face with it.

I would like to touch briefly on Clause 105. In some respects this clause personifies the priorities of this act and some of the difficulties it will present for us. Clause 105, subsection (2) says, "Every director and officer of a corporation shall comply with this act, the regulations, articles, bylaws and any unanimous member agreement." It is interesting, when you look at the priority of that clause. The first priority is that the directors are responsible to the act; the second priority is the regulations, and the third and final priority is the bylaws of the charitable organization, of which they are directors. In other words, the state comes before the regulations in their responsibility to the organizations of which they are members.

Many years ago, there was a great deal of fear of the influence that the church had over the state. That led to a doctrine which is today known as "separation of church and state," a doctrine which has had some far-reaching implications on our society over the last several centuries. When I review this particular clause, I cannot help but wonder if we have not in fact gone full circle. Once we worried about the influence of the church on the state, but now perhaps we should worry about the influence of the state on the church. As I begin to study more clauses of the bill, the concern I have becomes more pronounced and clearer.

Another interesting clause of the bill is Clause 114. This section deals with the right of an organization to discipline its members. I believe that every organization has that right and it is defined to their membership and laid out in their rules and regulations. Clause 114 is probably nothing more than what we would see in the constitution of most organizations, simply the right to discipline their members. That is fair and reasonable.

Clause 115 says that the member is entitled to a fair hearing should he be disciplined by his organization. Again, we see that as a fairly normal, reasonable and, in fact, obligatory type of clause which should be in any legislation. It is probably the very clause we would see in the constitution of a charitable organization.

Clause 116 is one with which I have more concern about. In this clause we see a dramatic shift to another direction. I will read clause 116 because I think it is important. It says:

A member of a corporation who claims to be aggrieved because he was disciplined or because his membership interest in a corporation was terminated, may apply to a court under Section 214.

I will refer to Section 214 later. What I want to emphasize at this point is the fact that if a member was disciplined by a charitable organization—I think back to this church in my riding—and his membership was revoked for violating their particular code of law or ethics, he could dispute that in the court. That becomes very interesting and intriguing if you think of the fact that when the member joined, he probably had an understanding of the guidelines and regulations which defined his right to be a member of the organization he was joining. Yet he can appeal to a court when he disagrees with the discipline which was handed out to him.

That small church in my riding is a fundamentalist church and I am sure it would have regulations which state that a member must not commit adultery or engage in fornication or, in fact, if he were to engage in any of those activities, it would be grounds for retiring that member from membership in that church. It becomes very interesting when we realize that the very things for which they could reject him from the organization as being illegal in their organization, would not be illegal under Canadian law. If this member who is disciplined were to appeal to the court, the court would find that it is not contrary to the law. Those ramifications will become very serious, as I will illustrate later.

What results from this bill is that when that member appeals and the court upholds his appeal, the court can dictate to the church that it must change its regulations to be in accordance with government regulations.

I can envisage a massive involvement by the state in the church, which may well have some very serious and dramatic effects in the future on a number of our church organizations.

Another interesting clause in this bill is Clause 123. It stipulates that the membership list of an organization must become public. All I would have to do to get a membership list of any organization is to simply join it. We have received some complaints about this particular part of the legislation because it causes concern to a number of our constituents, and I am including constituents of all members. The dangers of the abuse of this clause become evident. The RCMP could join an organization in order to get a membership list, and once they have it they would know what part of society these members are involved in. This could have very serious implications.

There could be two organizations which are dramatically opposed to each other. For example, one group could be the communists and the other group could be the John Birch Society. Under this legislation, a member of the communist party could join the John Birch Society and immediately have access to the names and addresses of all the members of that organization.

Members of the Ku Klux Klan could join an organization which might be sympathetic to the black people in our country. It would immediately have a list of targets and subjects for harassment. It is easy to see some of the difficulties we could be getting into.

A very simple example could be a mailing list. Some of us get very annoyed at having our names on a mailing list without our permission. Therefore, I believe that that clause presents difficulty and could lead to the discrediting of a number of organizations and lead to a number of difficulties within some of our small, private organizations.

Another clause which deals with court involvement in our charitable organizations is Clause 130. Under Clause 130 a member may dispute the election of a director. Not only can he dispute it among the membership, he can dispute the appointment or election of a member in the courts of the land.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

[English]

AGRICULTURE—REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATE PAYMENTS MADE BY FARMERS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to speak about a very important topic which I raised with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in this House on December 3 concerning items in the budget which were supposed to be there as a result of some of the statements the Minister of Agriculture had been making across the country prior to November 12. He had left the impression that if there was not substantial help forthcoming in the budget for farmers, he would resign.

I want to put what is in the budget in the best perspective I can. What is in the budget for agriculture is $50 million. That $50 million is made up of an additional $45 million for loans and $5 million to be used to keep interest rates down. The $5 million sounds like a lot of money. By the admission of the federal Department of Agriculture in some of its advertisements, there are about 330,000 farmers in Canada, and that $5 million works out almost exactly to $15 per farmer. That is really an incredibly small amount of money to be made available to farmers at this time. The reason I say that amount is incredible, ludricous and insulting is that, on the average, farmers are paying in excess of $7,000 in interest. When we compare that $15 to the average $7,000 farmers are paying, that puts into perspective the kind of aid for farmers there really is in the budget.

In addition to being responsible to the farmers of this country, the Minister of Agriculture has a very large responsibility to consumers. Without a healthy agricultural industry which has some hope for the future, the consumer of the country would be very badly served. We can produce food cheaply; that is the main reason we have the standard of living we have. If the agricultural industry declines, that will be felt by farmers immediately, but ultimately it will affect all of us. It will affect the way we live. It is for this reason that the Minister of Agriculture has a responsibility not just to the agricultural community but to the total community across the country.

The minister has been able to accomplish little for farmers in the budget, and that is a serious matter for farmers. It is serious in another respect. Canada is very wealthy in natural resources. We also have farmers as a resource. I am a farmer, and I am proud of that fact. There is more arable land per farmer in Canada than in any other country in the world. That means we have a responsibility not just to ourselves but to other people around the world to produce as much food as we possibly can, but it is becoming increasingly difficult to do that because of some of the things the minister has done, or not done, during his tenure in office. The minister has held his portfolio since 1972. He makes no bones about the fact that he took a brief sabbatical. In fact, he looks on that in a laughing way, as if it were his divine right to be where he is. It was unfortunate for him he was forced into that sabbatical, but fortunate for farmers and too bad he was not forced right out.

I think that would have been better for the farmers of the country.

We Canadians have a responsibility not just to our own countrymen but to other countries around the world not blessed with the natural resources we have here. What has this minister presided over during his term of office? As we all know, farming is a very risky business. We risk bad markets, weather, hail storms, all kinds of weeds and everything else we associate with the variables of farming. During this minister's tenure he has allowed the government to become the dominant variable, to the point that people are now cutting back on production. This is not because of the variables with which they have learned to live over the centuries. I just mentioned some of the things farmers must cope with, such as weather. There is a common joke; we blame the CPR for everything, including hail storms! Farmers in my part of the country have learned to live with all of these things, but they are now finding it impossible to live with the variables this government has imposed on them.

The Minister of Agriculture cannot have it both ways; he cannot go around the country saying that the banks are the bad guys and that they should not be lending unlimited amounts of money, implying that people get themselves into trouble because of all the money they borrow and cannot repay. The minister cannot say those things while at the same time supporting his government's policies which deliberately keep interest rates high. I could give all kinds of examples of those policies, but I do not have the time to do so tonight. The simple fact is that this government supports the policies of the Bank of Canada and Mr. Bouey, and that is the main reason we have high interest rates. If the Minister of Agriculture were to choose to take up that cause, go to bat in the cabinet, in public and everywhere and resign on this issue, he would earn a tremendous amount of credibility from the agricultural community in this country. I cannot emphasize too strongly, Mr. Speaker, that the budget contained virtually nothing for farmers and that it literally gutted the Small Business Development Bond. In fact, they do not even call it a Small Business Development Bond, they call it the small business bond. There are no guidelines available to the banks as yet. We met with the Royal Bank of Canada on Tuesday night and the bank officials stated that they had not received any guidelines on how the small business bond would be made available to the farming community and that they would go ahead on their own and begin to make loans.

Surely it is incumbent upon the minister to see that there are some guidelines available to the banks so that the banks can then come along and assist farmers in difficulty. I know the Parliamentary Secretary will get up and read a bunch of things that have been prepared by the department and he will talk about all the great things that the minister did. I find that unfortunate.

I shall close, Mr. Speaker, by wishing the chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, who has recently suffered some illness, a speedy recovery and a Merry Christmas to everyone in the House.

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): In reply to the question asked by my colleague opposite concerning interest rates, I would like to point out to him that it is very interesting to see that some people are trying to prove with statistics what the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) is now saying to the effect that the refinancing made possible through the Farm Credit Corporation and announced in the budget will only save $15 in interests per farmer. My hon. colleague was very careful not to say per farmer in Canada, which is the true basis of his figures.

If he had used these words, Mr. Speaker, we would have seen immediately the irrelevance of his comments since the government has never pretended to reduce interest rates paid by every single farmer. On the contrary, this program has always been aimed at those in dire straits. I believe that the folder recently published by the Farm Credit Corporation at the request or for the use of farmers clearly shows that this is a program designed to provide financial assistance during a difficult period. Nearly all eligibility requirements can be found in this folder as well as the maximum amount provided, and so on.

Finally, every farmer who receives the maximum refinancing amount of $200,000 from the Farm Credit Corporation will save not $15,000, but up to $28,000 over two years if he pays the current interest rates of 18¾ per cent, since interest on loans now being granted by the Farm Credit Corporation to those in difficulty is 11¾ per cent, which means that the Corporation is offering a 7 per cent discount on interest rates. While the number of farmers in dire straits is certainly higher than it would appear from bankruptcy data, it must be recognized that they are still a minority.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary, but his time has expired.

Mr. Ostiguy: It is already over, Mr. Speaker, but I had so much to say.

PETRO-CANADA—QUERY RESPECTING LOCATION FOR HEAVY OIL UPGRADER IN SASKATCHEWAN. (B) RESPONSIBILITY FOR SITE DECISION

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this adjournment debate to try to solicit some information on a question that I asked on December 9 of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). I find the reply strange, as I took the time, and felt I did the right thing, to give the minister prior notice that I would ask a question regarding something in the constituency of Kindersley-Lloydminster, which is of utmost importance to that area of Saskatchewan. It concerns a heavy oil upgrader in an area of Canada with the largest available supply of heavy oil. Heavy oil must be refined, upgraded and moved to market. At the present time, 60 per cent of that oil is being sent to the United States so that the sulphur can be removed, so that it can be sweetened, so that it can be sold.

PetroCan is a member of a five-company consortium, comprised of Saskoil with 25 per cent of the shares; Husky Oil with 25 per cent of the shares; Shell Oil with 15 per cent; Petro-Canada with 15 per cent; Gulf Oil with 20 per cent. I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources where PetroCan, which the minister said is the window on the resource industry, and where the government wanted the heavy oil upgrader located in Canada. The minister said that PetroCan did not have any preference at all as to the location of an upgrader in Saskatchewan. He went on to say that Husky was the leader of the group. All representatives of Husky Oil said was that they would provide the people to explore the location. The decision would not be made by Husky, it would be made by the consortium.

The consortium made a decision yesterday in Saskatchewan that the upgrader would be located in Moose Jaw, which is approximately 300 miles from the oil patch which produces the volume required by the upgrader. It will be a $1 billion construction project. It will take 2,000 to 2,500 people to build the upgrader. When it is completed, it will employ 300 to 500 people on a permanent basis. The area in Saskatchewan in which the oil is located is similar to any other area which produces raw material. They become tired of producing raw material and seeing the benefits of refinishing and manufacturing removed from the area. This is what is happening now. The people in the northwestern part of Saskatchewan have long looked forward to additional benefits by having the upgrader located near the oil patch. The decision to move it to Moose Jaw was done with no surprise. It did not surprise anyone in the House or anyone in northwestern Saskatchewan. It was done because Saskoil and the government of Saskatchewan chose to place it in Moose Jaw. They made this choice because the federal government and PetroCan said, "Go ahead and choose the site." Husky Oil did not choose the site. It only has 25 per cent, along with Saskoil.

This summer, Mr. Bob Blair, the president of a Canadian company, Husky, said in Lloydminster that the preference of Husky was to have it built near Lloydminster. As a matter of fact, Husky on its own was prepared to build the 100,000 barrel per day upgrader in northwestern Saskatchewan near Lloydminister. Gulf, which owns 20 per cent of the consortium, indicated that its preference was in northwestern Saskatchewan. The only company which expressed a preference for the Moose Jaw area was Saskoil, and it was done for purely political reasons.

I am astounded that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not have some awareness of even the percentages held by the companies in the consortium. He said that Husky Oil was the largest shareholder. He was completely wrong in that statement. Husky Oil is not the largest shareholder. There are several communities, such as the communities of Maidstone, Lloydminster, Wilkie, Unity, Kindersley, Neilburg and other surrounding communities, which had the capability of providing housing and having the benefit of a stable tax base by people moving into their communities. It would not disrupt those communities.

The plans are to build the townsite during the construction stage so that there would not be much disruption to the 2,000 or 2,500 people who are employed there. Those of us in northwest Saskatchewan find it strange that the minister allowed something like this to happen. I cannot sit idly by in my province and see the manufacturing basis for our raw materials moved away from the areas in which they occur, any more than I appreciate it that the rapeseed produced in Saskatchewan has to be sent to central Canada to be processed. People who produce raw materials have the right to expect the added benefits of manufacturing and finishing the product.

That is why I hope that whoever answers for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will explain why this decision was made. Was it economic grounds or political grounds? I suspect the latter, but in the spirit of brotherly love and good cheer, Merry Christmas, Joyeux Noël et Bonne Année.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, during the past few weeks there has been considerable speculation in the press, especially in Saskatchewan, regarding the location of a heavy oil upgrader being planned for that province. The federal government recognizes the valuable contribution that the heavy crude oil resources of Saskatchewan and Alberta can make to securing future sources of petroleum for Canadians. However, their development has proceeded slowly. The reasons have been partly technical: only a small proportion of this oil can be produced in the field unless costly recovery techniques are employed. While the National Energy Program has provided new price and tax incentives for production of heavy crude oil by enhanced recovery processes, the problem remains of finding domestic markets for this heavy crude.

The federal government believes that resource upgrading should take place in the actual regions of production. It is crucial that facilities be installed in producing areas to upgrade the heavy oil into a more marketable product, which can be readily shipped to any domestic refinery. Toward this end, the federal commitment to participate financially in an upgrading plant in Saskatchewan is clearly set out in the National Energy Program.

The Government of Canada and the government of Saskatchewan agreement of October 26, 1981 provided further encouragement for the establishment of a heavy oil upgrader as noted in the following extract from the agreement:

We are agreed that a commercial-scale crude oil upgrading facility, designed to optimize the energy and economic benefits to Saskatchewan and Canada, should be constructed in Saskatchewan. We agree to encourage the construction of an upgrading facility for substantial completion by the end of the term of this understanding.

A differentiated Petroleum Compensation Charge (PCC) will be applied to the input of heavy crude oil upgraders in Saskatchewan. This will provide heavy oil upgraders with access to appropriate differentials between input and output prices.

It is agreed that heavy oil upgraders in Saskatchewan will be treated as resource activities for income tax purposes.

Shortly after the release of the NEP in October 1980, negotiations began between several companies culminating in the creation of a joint venture to upgrade heavy crude in Saskatchewan. The companies participating in this undertaking are: Husky Oil, the project leader with a 25 per cent interest; SasKoil Resources Inc. 25 per cent; Gulf Canada Limited 20 per cent; Petro-Canada 15 per cent; and Shell Canada 15 per cent. During the past months this group has been actively investigating the possibility of building a heavy crude oil processing plant in Saskatchewan.

May I reiterate what the minister said in the House on December 9 and that is, that so far as the Government of Canada is concerned, it has taken no stand and has no particular views with regard to a specific site.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.20 p.m. the House adjourned without question put pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGETARY MEASURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It is crystal clear that the November 12 budget is having a devastating effect on all sectors of our economy as witnessed by the outcry from virtually every responsible business and consumer organization in Canada, the latest two being the Canadian Institute for Economic Policy, headed by former Liberal finance minister, Walter Gordon, and the Economic Council of Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That this House condemn the government for its budgetary policy, as well as the Minister of Finance for imposing such financial chaos on all Canadians, and further that this House do not adjourn for Christmas until such time as the Minister of Finance introduces new, positive and realistic budgetary measures.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLAND—CONDEMNATION OF MILITARY GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of the imposition of martial law by the communist Government of Poland, and now the brutal killing of innocent Polish citizens, all in a ruthless attempt to stifle the new, free spirit of Solidarity, thereby reducing the people of Poland to little more than slaves in their own country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That this House soundly condemn the military Government of Poland, and its Russian masters, for denying the Polish people their right to freedom of choice, and for the use of force and violence to crush the Solidarity movement, and warn the Soviet Union of serious consequences if it continues to interfere in the domestic affairs of Poland.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO NEW SECRETARY GENERAL, JAVIER PEREZ DE CUELLAR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the House of Commons express its warmest congratulations to the new Secretary General of the United Nations, the Peruvian, Javier Perez de Cuellar, who has been elected unanimously by the General Assembly of the United Nations as the fifth Secretary General of that organization, and the first from our own western hemisphere; and that the House of Commons express its appreciation and thanks to the outgoing Secretary General Kurt Waldheim for his untiring efforts for peace during his two mandates as Secretary General from 1971 to 1981.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I just want to say that that blows my chances of an early retirement. I am sorry!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deans: If I had known that, we would not have seconded the motion.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DELAY IN PROCESSING PENSION APPLICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, on behalf of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I move the following motion under Standing Order 43. There are hundreds, perhaps thousands of veterans who have applied for service-related pensions. The time between applications and decisions runs upwards of one year. This is both unfair and unjust. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this government take steps now to provide whatever technical assistance is necessary to clear up this unacceptable backlog and to ensure that no longer than three months be established as the period for processing and deciding on pension applications.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INSTALLATION OF SAFETY SHIELDS IN TAXIS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given the fact that there has been a steady increase in common assaults across Canada from 112,911 in 1979 to 117,103 in 1980, and given the fact that an increasing number of these assaults include attacks on taxi drivers, the most recent case being the murder of an Edmonton taxi driver while on duty, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek):

That the government give active consideration to the introduction of appropriate legislation that would make the use of safety shields standard equipment for all taxicabs across Canada in order to better protect those drivers who serve the public.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to withdraw any budgetary measures, including the dental plan, that will increase health costs for Canadians.

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, whereas the Liberal government has served the small businesses of this country a Molotov cocktail of high interest rates, inflation, a National Energy Program, and an incompetent budget—

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Cooper: —and whereas the result of this will be an increased federal deficit because many businesses will no longer pay taxes as the result of having no profits, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko):

That the Minister of Finance immediately introduce a new budget which will allow our Canadian entrepreneurs to have a taxable income once again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CHEMICAL POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the precedent established by Environment Canada of providing financial and technical assistance to public interest groups to argue against the proposed Hyde Park clean-up agreement in U.S. courts, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House instruct the Minister of the Environment to provide financial and technical assistance to public advocacy groups, to help them at hearings to begin in February next year to oppose SCA Services' application to expand the number and volume of chemicals they are permitted to discharge into the Niagara River.

REQUEST THAT ANNUITY PURCHASE LEGISLATION BE LEFT UNCHANGED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Hundreds of Canadians who had concluded sales contracts for property, boats or businesses, with a view to taking advantage of income-averaging annuities in order to defer capital gains over the next few years, which is both fair and lawful and would have provided fishermen and farmers with sufficient funds to provide for themselves and their families during retirement, can no longer do so since the new budget was brought down on November 12. These people who have spent a lifetime saving for their retirement have now become the victims of the budget and its retroactive measures. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Bujold):

That the House ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to allow the legislation applying before November 12, 1981, to remain applicable, at least in the case of individuals who entered into contracts that were legal at the time, such as commercial fishermen and farmers who did so in order to purchase income-averaging annuities.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—RESOLUTION PASSED AT PUBLIC MEETING IN TORONTO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43, supported by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), to present a motion similar to that presented yesterday. As the House will recall, yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs talked out the resolution proposed by the Canadian Polish Congress because he could not approve the world "tolerated" in the third paragraph of the resolution. Having made the appropriate changes, I call on all hon. members of the House to give their unanimous approval today to the following resolution from the Canadian Polish Congress:

We Canadians of Polish descent, are deeply concerned about the current events in Poland, and we call upon the Canadian government as cosignatory of the Helsinki Accords to undertake the following actions:

1. To press for the immediate lifting of martial law in Poland and the release of all Solidarity officials.

2. To press for the reinstatement of the rights of workers to form free trade unions.

3. To publicly state that any intervention by a third party or parties into the internal affairs of Poland will be viewed with the greatest of concern.

4. To send to Poland, for distribution by non-government organizations, significant economic aid in the form of food, medical supplies and agricultural machinery and feedstuffs in order that the people of Poland survive the coming winter.

We trust that the voice of the Canadian government as international mediator will be heard and that the conflicts in Poland will be resolved in a just and lasting manner.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House express its concern by supporting the resolution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? I am just worried because there has been a change in the motion which has been transferred to the Orders of the Day. Therefore, I cannot put it to the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Nielsen: Talking it out again.

Mr. MacGuigan: —the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is once again presenting a resolution without any consultation with this side.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacGuigan: This morning the hon. member for Parkdale-Hyde Park (Mr. Flis) did me the courtesy of consulting me on a resolution concerning the situation in Poland, which I am prepared to accept.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacGuigan: If the hon. gentlemen opposite were prepared to allow that, we would be pleased to see it passed.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid that I must interrupt at this time, it being 11.15 a.m. Oral questions.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

PRE-BUDGET CONSULTATIONS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Now that the minister has had an opportunity to discuss with his departmental officials the involvement of Professor Neil Brooks in the pre-budget consultation, will the Minister of Finance explain today why his officials relied exclusively for outside advice on a man who is known to have anti-private enterprise views, and not on the broader group of tax experts that the department has used in the past?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I said in the House the other day, I was not aware that Neil Brooks had been an adviser to the department. I have no objection to the use of his services, but I would add there have been other advisers as well. The hon. member asserted that he was the sole adviser. There were a number of other persons from various institutions who were called upon from time to time to assist the department, and among these was Professor Neil Brooks.

NAMES OF ADVISERS TO DEPARTMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, would the minister be prepared to make that list available to the House so that we can judge the quality and content of the advice that came to the department during the pre-budget preparations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker, I would have no objection to giving the list of all the persons who were called upon to consult with the department prior to the budget. For example, there is a Mr. George R. Lucas, a private consultant. I wonder does the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre find his political flavour unacceptable, or is he going to apply some form of ideological test to Canadians who serve their government in this capacity? Maybe the hon. member would apply a test now to Mr. Lucas, or to Mr. Mike White of Moore Corporation, who provided some advice and assistance. What about Peter Wood of Clarkson, Gordon—would he apply the same test to him as well? I just find the hon. member's approach rather indefensible.

RULES AFFECTING SMALL BUSINESS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the budget has a particularly harsh impact on small business. The minister has altered the rules on interest deductibility, on the Small Business Development Bond, on deferred profit sharing plans, on the dividend payouts of small business, on capital cost allowance, and on capital gains. The lit goes on and on. Would the minister today tell the House why he and his comrade, Neil Brooks, have chosen to attack small business so severely in this budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I have said previously in the House, the benefits to small business, although there have been changes, over all have been improved. For example, in the next taxation year an additional $50 million will flow to small business. As I have stated, it will be my pleasure to answer point by point the objections that have been raised against the small business package.

I must say that I find the hon. member's use of the word "comrade" rather interesting in light of his leader's motion earlier this morning whereby we are attempting to establish respect for each other in the world.

EFFECT ON CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. It is the consensus of the small business community that the minister took lots and gave little to that sector of the community. The Minister of Finance is the Grinch who stole Christmas from the thousands of Canadians who are facing mass lay-offs because of the minister's budget measures. The Canadian construction industry says it is in a state of panic because of the changes in the measures affecting capital cost allowances. This is forcing intensive lay-offs, particularly in western Canada. Why is the minister attacking this industry which is made up of small businesses, mainly family firms, which employ thousands of people? How can he collect his revenues if the industry collapses?

• (1120)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the hon. member's question.

IMPACT OF SALES TAX

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same minister. Do I understand that the minister is telling this House that there are no lay-offs in the construction industry as a result of his budget, when the industry cannot even bid on 1982 contracts because it does not even know what the impact of the sales tax will be?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No. I am saying, Madam Speaker, that I do not accept the premise of the hon. member's question, and it has not improved with the repetition.

RAILWAYS

MODERNIZATION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in light of his response yesterday, and some leaks and news reports last night and today. He spoke about deforming the Crow rate idea yesterday, and said he wanted to modernize it. Is the minister's version of modernizing the Crow rate the implementation of an updated Snavely report that would give the railways a 35 per cent return on equity investment for grain transportation? Is that his version of a modernized Crow rate? Does his version of a modernized Crow rate mean an increase in Crow rates charged to prairie grain producers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as a number of us have previously said, the cabinet is now discussing the subject, and the question to be decided is should it be a comprehensive system approach, or should it be a special project approach. This is the point we are at now.

If I took some rather passionate objection to a question yesterday it was because of the fact that so many people who claim there should not be any change in the western grain transportation system do so by raising the straw man that such a change would mean the total elimination of the Crowsnest rate system. I was simply reacting to that yesterday in saying that such would not be the intent, nor would it be the intent to leave the railways entirely free to do whatever they want, charging any price they want for transportation of grain. I was saying yesterday this was not the case, that if the Crowsnest rate is modernized it would be by way of replacing it by another statutory regime. Yesterday I was reacting against the deformation of that intent.

POSSIBILITY OF RATE INCREASE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I do not want to be accused of being ungenerous to the government. I am always a very generous fellow and I will not abuse the rules by talking about misleading, prevarication, lying or anything like that, when just a simple explanation of stupidity will suffice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: The minister did not answer the question. Does Crow rate modernization mean an increase in the Crow rate? Does it mean implementation of the secret Snavely follow-up report, and that the railways will get a 25 per cent return on the investment of donations by the taxpayers of Canada for the rehabilitation of branch lines, and that they will make money on the grants that were given to them by the Government of Canada?

• (1125)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, should the government decide to modernize the Crowsnest rate, this will be announced in due course. I was only reacting yesterday to the anticipatory deformation of what the policy might be.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, obviously modernize means increase. The minister has not answered. We can only assume that is the answer.

MARINE TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND FERRY SERVICES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I would like to deal with another matter concerning Confederation bargains. The minister has ordered Canadian National to further affect transportation in Canada. Why has he ordered the reduction of south shore service, and the dropping of 42 ports of call from the north shore service and the cutting of ferry service between Sydney and Argentia as well as the north coast ferry service in Newfoundland? Is he trying to do for the Liberal Party in Atlantic Canada what Otto Lang did for them in western Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, that is a very strange supplementary question. It is an entirely different subject.

Mr. Broadbent: The answer was strange.

Mr. Pepin: If the answer was strange it is obviously because I am not in a position to give a clear-cut answer today.

Mr. Benjamin: You ordered it.

Mr. Pepin: The leader of the NDP should understand that, and I am quite sure that he does.

On the subject of the coastal service in Newfoundland, I would be in a position to—but I don't have time—explain the why of our decision to eliminate service to a number of ports in the area. The hon. member who claims to belong to a party of change is probably the most reactionary member I know. Every time someone talks of change in Canada, he goes wild. What is happening in Newfoundland is simply the fact that since the entry of Newfoundland into Confederation a number of changes have taken place, and one of those changes has been the construction of highways in Newfoundland. Therefore, in the Avalon Peninsula and the Burin Peninsula—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must ask the hon. minister if he could be shorter in his replies. Nearly every time he rises I am tempted to call him back to order.

SMALL BUSINESS

PROCESSING OF DEVELOPMENT BOND APPLICATIONS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns the Small Business Development Bond program. As the minister probably realizes, currently there are many applications for these bonds and they cannot be processed before December 31, after which time one has to be in dire straits to be an applicant. In my province of British Columbia, for instance, there are 80 applications being processed by one legal firm for one bank alone. There is no way they can get these through by the end of the month. If a person who wants a Small Business Development Bond can obtain a written commitment from his chartered bank before December 31, would the minister assure us that he would allow this application to go through while it catches up to the documentation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I regret that I did not hear the beginning of the hon. member's question. However, I believe that the circumstances to which he referred in his question were dealt with by me several days ago in the House with respect to the Small Business Development Bond and arrangements that had been made prior to the budget to permit them to be validated before the end of the year.

CRITERIA GOVERNING APPLICATIONS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and it concerns the changes to the Small Business Development Bond. The minister will know that changes have been made in the criteria to allow unincorporated businesses and firms which are in financial difficulty to apply for the bond. It is my understanding that the banks are not in a position to make those loans because there have been no instructions from the department. Will the minister speed up the guidelines set by his department so that the banks will be in a position to assist those people whom the budget was intended to assist?

• (1130)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the same question has been raised and, as I stated earlier, my department has had a meeting with the chartered banks. At the present time all the regulations have been clarified, and there is no justification for any delay arising from an alleged uncertainty as to what the changes mean. I take the view that there is no reason at the present time that derives from the government why these bonds cannot be processed.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET LIVESTOCK FARM LEADERS

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The question is with respect to a recent public statement the minister made at New Liskeard, Ontario, at an Ontario Federation of Agriculture local meeting. It was a very extreme, abrasive, and totally uncalled for remark, and it was about "gutless" farm leaders, with the clear implication that he was referring to the livestock industry, and especially the cattle industry.

In view of the minister's cancellation of a meeting last December 9 with the livestock farm leaders to discuss national stabilization, I would like to ask the minister if he would now reconvene such a meeting and sit down and discuss harmonized national stabilization under the legislation of which he is aware, and include not only cattle producers but the cattle provinces as well.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member talks about those farm leaders about whom I was talking, and I challenge him and anyone else who has led those people down that path to ruination and bankruptcy to accept their responsibility for doing it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Hon. members opposite sound very guilty to me, guilty of the misdemeanour of advising producers on how to use an old-fashioned marketing system that is so outdated we are using it for hardly anything else in our society. Instead of just criticizing the government I say to those farm leaders that they should offer some constructive suggestions. They have not done that kind of thing. Some farm leaders have, and some have not. The farm leaders who have and the people who follow them are the ones who are not going bankrupt, as far as that goes.

The hon. member talks about meeting beef farmers, I have met more beef cattle farmers in the last six months than any other politician in this whole country. The date they set was an inconvenient date for me; I will meet with them any time they want. I met with cattlemen in Alberta on Monday of this week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE BUDGET

INTEREST DEDUCTIBILITY PROVISIONS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. Considering the universal opposition to his November 12 budget, and keeping in mind the spirit of Christmas, would he consider during the recess getting away from his rigid stand of removing interest deductibility, and instead permit interest deductibility for small corporations, that is, those earning less then $200,000 a year and up to $1 million? This is their only means of raising equity financing, and it is absolutely important to them if they are to develop this country.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in the spirit of Christmas to which the hon. member referred, may I say that I regard his suggestion as very valuable, and I will take it under consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS RELIEF FUND

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the House leader of Her Royal Majesty's Official Opposition refused to second a motion under Standing Order 43 which proposed that Canada should continue to provide assistance to the Polish people through the most efficient means, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs please tell the House, in addition to the $100,000 the government gave to the Canadian Polish Congress, and in addition to the $500 million grain credits which have already been given, is the government prepared to give the Polish people further assistance, and through what means?

Mr. Clark: Talk it out, Mark.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I am pleased to be able to tell him and the House that the government is able, in response to an appeal by the International Red Cross for food, clothing and medicine, to announce today a grant of $500,000 to the International Red Cross for Polish relief.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT NEW AUTOMOBILES BE EXEMPTED FROM SALES TAX

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The minister is no doubt aware that just today there were lay-offs announced in the auto industry which will affect Oshawa, Toronto, and Ste. Thérèse. In the case of Oshawa and Toronto they are of a temporary nature, but the Quebec lay-offs are permanent. Will the Minister of Finance reconsider his refusal to reduce or eliminate temporarily the sales tax on new automobiles, and enter into some kind of program to stimulate the auto industry now, and encourage consumers to purchase the backlog of automobiles sitting in showrooms and on the lots of the various companies in order to try to get this industry back on its feet?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker the hon. member has made a suggestion with respect to a tax change. I accept his suggestion, and if and when it will be possible to make further tax changes, I will take his suggestion into account.

Mr. Broadbent: What did you say, Allan?

Mr. Deans: That is something like the aid given to people renewing mortgages last summer.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET INDUSTRIAL REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, in addition to the commitment the minister has just made, I wonder if he might consider sitting down with the industry and the provinces most affected and attempt to work out a program of assistance which would enable the industry to recover at least some of the share of the market which has been lost to cars imported from various parts of the world.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in his preamble the hon. member raised a matter to which he has referred earlier, namely, high mortgage rates during the peak period. I undertook to have some discussions with the banking institutions. The hon. member will be pleased to know, as I am, that the Royal Bank has undertaken to renegotiate over 10,000 mortgages which had been put into effect during that period of high interest rates. That is a very positive step.

Mr. Lawrence: Thanks to Ontario government pressure.

Mr. MacEachen: In view of the benefits which flow from the hon. member's suggestions, I will take this further one under consideration and deal with it, I hope as effectively as with the former one, namely, successfully.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON THE LIFE INSURANCE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In light of the universal opposition to his budget and, in particular, to that portion dealing with taxation involving life insurance, will the minister confirm to the House that he will withdraw that measure concerning life insurance, and will he take a leaf out of the book of the former minister of finance, who tried to do the same thing but later withdrew because of public outcry?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member talks about universal opposition to the budget. He seems to have forgotten that the budget was approved by the House of Commons by a resounding vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Why are you changing it?

Mr. Clark: Peter Lang is not applauding.

Mr. MacEachen: If the budget of the former minister of finance had been treated in the same way, perhaps the hon. member would not be asking questions today.

INCOME TAX

REMISSION ORDER RESPECTING NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question too is addressed to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister bring in permanent changes to the Income Tax Act to replace the remission order on the taxation of certain benefits, reference to which was made in his budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, we did extend that remission order for another period of time. In the meantime, before the remission order comes to an end it is my hope that we would be able to put in place a better system of support to meet the particular requirements dealt with in the remission order.

EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The minister knows that farmers provide room and board for many of their seasonal and permanent workers in order to harvest crops during the year. He also knows that the budget emphasizes taxation of employee benefits. Since this would force an unacceptable cost increase to workers, which would have to be passed on to the farmers at such a difficult time, can the minister assure the House and agriculture in Canada that this room and board provided by the farmers will not force the workers to pay income tax on this benefit?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am not sure the hon. member is accurate in what he is stating. I would like to double check this and have further discussions. Some farm organizations have made that kind of representation to me. However, I do not have the kind of information I need to make proper representations. But I will do so, if it is as he says.

THE BUDGET

EMPLOYEE TRAVEL BENEFITS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Thousands of airline and railway employees in my riding and across Canada have an historic right to travel on a surplus space basis—the minister knows what that means—a right which has always been treated as a non-monetary benefit. The Minister of Finance has given a hint this morning that he feels a bit of the spirit of Christmas. Is he now prepared to announce the withdrawal of his ill-considered plan to tax these employee travel benefits, recognizing that the taxation of non-monetary employee benefits will only lead to higher wage demands, higher travel costs to the public, and a great deal of additional and unproductive paper-pushing by bureaucrats?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has referred to the question of free travel passes. He will recall that in the budget it was stated in more detail that Revenue Canada will be making changes in its administrative practice so as to require employees to include in income an appropriate value of their employment benefits, such as free transportation passes, lodging and boarding assistance. These were the only two items that were mentioned with respect to administrative change. No others have been mentioned. Therefore, I take it for granted that Revenue Canada will be establishing this administrative practice with respect to these particular benefits. That will be the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue.

I draw to the attention of the hon. member the reasoning in the budget documents for the change in employment benefits. He ought to understand that the tax-free status of these benefits is inequitable for employees who cannot receive them. There has been an increasing practice to transfer benefits to employees in this form rather than through cash and normal remuneration, through that method escape taxation and, accordingly, place a higher burden of taxation on employees who are not treated in the same way.

The practice that is pointed out has been concentrated in the larger corporations, since employees of small business typically receive most of their remuneration in the form of wages and salaries which are fully taxable. That is the reasoning behind the proposal to establish some fairness among the employees of Canada. That is the philosophy behind the change.

EMPLOYMENT

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC MUNICIPALITIES WILL BE ALLOWED TO SUBMIT SUMMER WORKS PROJECTS

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the tendency of the government of the province of Quebec to want to restrict the powers of Quebec municipalities, which was particularly apparent last year when municipalities were prevented from submitting Canada Works and Young Canada Works projects, could the parliamentary secretary inform us whether the province of Quebec has given any guarantees that municipalities will be able to submit Young Canada Works projects in 1982?

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, we have as yet received no work from the government of Quebec whether or not it will allow Quebec municipal authorities to submit projects this year under the Young Canada Works Program. We have had discussions with government representatives, and we hope that this year they will take a more open stance and allow municipalities to submit projects. I would even like to suggest to representatives of the government of Quebec that, in view of their great love for democracy, they should conduct a referendum among Quebec municipalities to find out whether they want any projects.

FISHERIES

FRENCH TARIFF ON COD EXPORTED FROM CANADA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. Canada's fishing industry is today facing disastrous marketing problems. I ask the minister, since my question deals with tariffs, why does Canada grant preferential fishing rights to France while that country places a 15 per cent tariff against Canadian cod exports, as compared to no tariff whatsoever on Canada's competitors? Will the minister contact the proper authorities in France and the Economic Community, through the contractual link that was set up by the Prime Minister, pointing out that Canada cannot accept this situation and requesting that the tariff be eliminated on Canadian cod exports?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, we have in fact been discussing with the European Community the very question of reducing tariffs against Canadian fish. Until the dollar strengthened, we were sending a considerable amount of fish to the European market. On the question of France, the hon. member surely knows that France is fishing in Canadian waters under a treaty that was signed a number of years ago. I am sure he does not advocate that we abolish our obligations under that treaty.

On the question of access to the Common market, I will be interested in the hon. member's position if and when we ratify the agreement that was negotiated with the European Community. It will mean that Canadian industry will have to make up its mind whether it wants to have all the fish and full warehouses, or use some of the fish to trade for access to markets.

EQUALIZATION PAYMENT FORMULA

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Earlier this week the Conference Board of Canada projected that Ontario's rate of growth in 1982 would be worse than any other province in Canada. Given that the Minister's budget now ties equalization payments for the poorer provinces to Ontario's economic performance rather than to a national standard, and given that Ontario's economy is in decline, will he finally agree with the Council of Maritime Premiers, who issued a statement to that effect this week, that under the new formula fewer provinces will qualify for equalization payments and those which do will qualify for less money? Will the minister admit that the new formula is just another way for the federal government to grab revenue at the expense of basic and essential services in the poorer provinces of this country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker. I could not agree with the hon. member in the inaccurate statement which he brought into his question. First, I do not believe that the Ontario economy is in the state of imminent collapse as the hon. member seems to imply. The existing equalization formula has been roundly condemned by all the provinces. It has been disagreed with by an all-party parliamentary task force which concluded that the existing equalization formula should be abandoned. In this current session of Parliament we had to introduce a bill to eliminate the province of Ontario arbitrarily from receiving equalization payments. The necessity was obvious of producing a new formula, which stated that it was apparent that the Province of Ontario was able to provide a reasonable level of public services. Therefore, it would be a standard upon which the equalization is based. That is the approach.

The fact of the matter is rather than equalization payments being reduced, as the hon. member alleges, they will increase under the new formula by about 15 per cent in total from year to year. It seems to me that that is a rather substantial increase in payments to the recipient provinces.

Oral Questions

EFFECT ON RETIREMENT INCOME OF FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On November 24 I sent a statement to the Minister of Finance from a firm of Saskatchewan accountants who argue that under his budget would be the elimination of annuities for farmers, which really means the elimination of a great deal of their retirement income so that the average farmer in Saskatchewan would lose around $6,000 or more dollars per year, and in the year of sale he would see his taxes increase from $5,000 to over $70,000. In view of the fact that the minister has not replied to the information, nor to the questions we and the Federation of Agriculture and other people have asked on this issue, I wonder if the minister can confirm, in the spirit of Christmas, that later today or very shortly next week he will announce the reinstatement of the IAAC for farmers and small businessmen, or certainly an exemption that would cover the main concerns of the small farming community in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, I cannot confirm that I will be making any such announcement. I believe that the hon. member has, I am sure unintentionally, not fully understood the comparative advantage of the forward averaging system—

Mr. Mayer: No one understands it; that is the problem.

Mr. MacEachen: —in comparison with the income-averaging annuity contract. Hon. members may be interested in knowing that recently representatives of the cattle industry came to Ottawa to express their concern about the elimination of IAAC, as they are called, and the substitution of the forward averaging. After an examination of the two alternatives, they concluded that probably the new system was better for the farmers. When they returned to the west they issued a statement to that effect and said that, "Yes, indeed, we think that system is probably better for the farmer".

An hon. Member: It means that people will pay more taxes.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, may I say that the hon. member has raised a particular case and I am trying to get a letter off to him today that is on a very complicated example. I hope that will further our common understanding of this problem.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I have with me the comparison made between IAAC and forward averaging that was worked out by 12 accountants of a very respectable firm in our province. I should like to ask the minister directly whether or not he is stating to the House today that the door is absolutely closed with regard to any changes that may pertain to small farmers, and small businessmen not large cattle ranchers, who depend on the sale of their farms for retirement incomes?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the door is never closed at all. The hon. member will have an opportunity to state his case, if it is required, when the budget resolutions are before the House. I can assure the hon. member that I will be listening very carefully to any views that are put forward at that time and, indeed, as I have been listening to views up to the present time.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance has heard several more representations from this party today for changes in the budget. Will the Minister of Finance indicate to the House whether he intends to introduce or to announce any changes in the budget before the House of Commons adjourns today?

An hon. Member: You already know the answer to that one.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is my intention, as I have indicated informally, to indeed make some announcement today. I would make the statement on motions at the present time, but it is necessary that I make this announcement when markets close. If I get consent, Madam Speaker, I would be prepared to come into the House at four o'clock and make a statement and table some documents, so that the House of Commons would be fully apprised of the announcement before it recesses.

Mr. Nielsen: You have it.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I want to assure you that I have attempted to get these announcements put together before the House rose. That is why I have met the deadline today.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I simply want to indicate to the minister right now that he has the consent of the official opposition to make that statement at four o'clock.

EFFECT ON BENEFITS PROVIDED FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA LOGGERS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As the minister knows, in the forest industry in British Columbia there are certain benefits that can be considered deemed benefits, in terms of room and board for people working in outlying logging and timber operations. Will the minister advise the House whether he has yet responded to any representations from the forest industry or the unions in British Columbia, and whether he will reconsider the budget provisions which would make those benefits taxable?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my understanding is that under the present law these benefits are taxable at the present time.

IMPACT ON GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT RECIPIENTS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I have a very serious question for the Minister of Finance. I rose in the House on November 27 and expressed my concern in the form of a question on the impact of his indirect and hidden taxes on senior citizens. Specifically, did his tax take from hidden taxes exceed the $35 which the House of Commons had voted to guaranteed income supplement recipients? The minister responded to the question, Madam Speaker, by stating "No". It is very clear in Hansard on November 27 that he responded "No". In my supplementary question I asked if he would table a scientific study to support his answer. He indicated a willingness, and suggested to the House that my information was incorrect. Earlier today during the question period, under the minister's signature I received the following letter, and I quote one sentence:

> Work has commenced on the study and I will introduce it in the new year.

On November 27 the minister did not know. Today under his own signature he said that he will commence the study and introduce it in the new year. The minister misled the House on November 27. Will he stand in his place and apologize to the House for his statement?

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Sorry, but the hon. Minister of Finance may not raise a point of order at this time. He may later on.

EMPLOYEE TRAVEL BENEFITS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance has now passed the hot potato of employee travel passes to that minister, will the minister tell the House whether he intends to pass regulations in his department that would make those employee travel benefits taxable?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance stated very clearly this morning the position he has taken with regard to the taxation of benefits. My job is to interpret the law. I will be doing that in consultation with the Minister of Finance. I can assure the hon. member, the opposition, and the people in the country that we will be doing that along the same lines as the general theme in the budget, and that is with fairness and equity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

I believe he inadvertently misled the House today when he put a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) about tax as it relates to small farms. The purpose of this petition is to indicate clearly to the federal government the urgent need for the federal government to follow the leadership of many provincial governments and other national governments and recognize chess as a universal form of cultural expression, combining physical and mental excellence.

[Translation]

The purpose of this petition is to ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) to change departmental policy so as to include measures to promote chess and, consequently, physical and mental excellence.

[English]

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency of their plea, and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible moment.

Madam Speaker: Would the hon. member like to repeat that in French now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SECURITY OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-646, to amend the Canada Labour Code (security of employment).

He said: Madam Speaker, I have filed a copy of this bill with the Clerk and I wish to introduce it for the following reason.

During the past year lay-offs of Canadian workers have been occurring with increasing and alarming regularity. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association has reported 140,000 lay-offs in that sector alone during the last few months.

This bill is designed to give increased protection to laid-off workers. If enacted, the bill would require longer advance notice of lay-offs, more generous severance pay and would provide for the establishment of a job protection board with representatives of labour, management and government, to inquire into the reasons for the lay-offs and plant closures.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, while we are on the subject of introduction of bills, I wonder whether the government House leader could now advise the House if it is the intention of the government to introduce the Crown corporation bill which the President of the Treasury Board indicated is very important to him and which has been called for by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and by the Auditor General. If he is not in a position to give me that answer now, would he undertake to give me that answer during the recess? I have information on some good authority that the government has now decided to jettison that bill, and I would want to be persuaded otherwise.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, obviously we shall not be introducing any other bills today. With regard to the bills which will be introduced after the holidays, we shall be in a better position to inform the House as of January 25.

MR. H. G. BOWN

Question No. 2,766—Mr. Beatty:

1. Did Norpak, Limited make an offer of employment to Mr. H. G. Bown, director general of information technology research and development, Department of Communications and, if so, on what date?

2. On what date and to whom did Mr. Bown first disclose the offer of employment as required by the government's guidelines for holders of public office?

3. (a) Did the Minister of Communications announce on June 23, 1981 that Mr. Bown would be leaving the department in order to take a senior executive job with Norpak, Limited (b) was he aware at the time of the implications of the guidelines in Mr. Bown's case and, if so, for what reason did he not mention that it was unclear whether Mr. Bown could accept such a job under the guidelines?

4. On what date did the Minister of Communications first become aware of the implications of the guidelines for Mr. Bown's future employment?

5. Was an application made for exemption from the guidelines and, if so (a) on what date (b) what form did the application take?

6. Is Mr. Bown currently employed by the Department of Communications and, if not, on what date did he leave?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. Norpak Limited made a formal offer of employment to Mr. Bown on June 18, 1981.

2. Mr. Bown officially disclosed his offer of employment to the assistant deputy minister (research) on June 19, 1981. This offer of employment disclosure was also made known to the deputy minister on June 19, 1981.

3. (a) The minister announced on June 23, 1981 at the Noranda-Norpak news conference, that Mr. Bown would be leaving the department to join Norpak Limited.

(b) The minister was aware of the implications and the guidelines and the assistant deputy minister (research), Mr. Doug Parkhill, responded at the June 23 press conference that the department would adhere to the requirements of these guidelines.

4. The minister was aware of the guidelines with respect to post employment for public servants. When the June 18 offer of employment to Mr. Bown became official, action steps were taken to seek exemption for Mr. Bown as provided for in the guidelines.

5. (a) Yes, on July 15, 1981.

(b) The application was sent to Miss Anita Szlazak, the Public Service Commissioner who chairs the post-employment advisory committee for public servants which is responsible under the guidelines for reviewing requests for exemptions and making recommendations to the Treasury Board.

The application was made up of a letter from the deputy minister outlining Mr. Bown's case and the reasons on which the request for exemption was based. The letter was accompanied by supporting documents. The application for exemption and the advisory committee's recommendation was presented to the Treasury Board ministers on July 29, 1981 for consideration and was approved.

6. At the time of receipt of this inquiry Mr. Bown was still an employee of the Department of Communications. Separation date: August 17, 1981.

TRANSFER OF IMMIGRATION OFFICERS TO DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Question No. 3,065—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Were offices and employees of the Department of Employment and Immigration outside Canada transferred to the Department of External Affairs and, if so (a) on what date (b) for what reason (c) does the Minister of Employment and Immigration no longer have control over their functions?

2. Are ministerial entry permits still issued by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and is it necessary for him to have the concurrence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs first?

3. Is this an attempt to dismantle or completely abolish the Department of Employment and Immigration and, if so, how can such a move be justified?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Some 350 foreign service employees of the Employment and Immigration Commission presently in Canada or posted abroad were transferred to the Department of External Affairs.

(a) on April 1, 1981.

(b) to establish a consolidated foreign service which will provide a more refined and effective tool to deliver all overseas programs.

(c) No. The Minister of Employment and Immigration retains full responsibility for administering the provisions of the Immigration Act and its application in Canada and abroad. This includes immigration policy development, program design and legislative interpretation. The Department of External Affairs has assumed responsibility for the delivery only, of the immigration and other programs abroad under the policy and functional direction of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

2. The Minister of Employment and Immigration does not need the concurrence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to issue minister's permits. Section 37 of the Immigration Act (1976) clearly gives this authority exclusively to the minister of immigration.

3. No.

USE OF GOVERNMENT VEHICLES

Question No. 3,222—Mr. Stevens:

1. Is it government policy to allow cabinet ministers, deputy ministers and/or senior public servants to drive or otherwise use government vehicles for personal use?

2. Does the government receive compensation for such personal use of these cars and, if so, on what basis?

3. Who is responsible for the payment of operational and maintenance expenses while the vehicles are being used for the personal benefit of cabinet ministers, deputy ministers, and/or senior public servants?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Yes; cabinet ministers and deputy ministers of departments or equivalent may make personal use of the departmental vehicle assigned to their offices for official use.

2. Yes; all personal use of the departmental vehicle must be paid for on the basis of a kilometric/mileage rate. The total annual charge relates to the taxable benefit received and is determined as the greater of the amount calculated by multiplying the annual personal distance driven by the applicable rate, or the minimum stand-by charge as per section 6(2) of the Income Tax Act, generally calculated, on the date this question was asked, as 1 per cent of the capital cost of the vehicle. Effective with the 1982 taxation year, the minimum stand-by charge has been increased to 2½ per cent per month of the capital cost of the vehicle. Cabinet ministers make a monthly payment to the department equal to the calculated stand-by charge and a further adjustment at the end of the year, should personal use exceed that permissible by dividing the annual amount paid by the kilometric/mileage rate. Deputy ministers have the total taxable benefit accruing from personal use of the departmental vehicle added to their gross earnings for the year.

3. The payment of operational and maintenance expenses for these vehicles is the responsibility of the owner department, as the kilometric/mileage rate is established on the basis of reimbursement of both operating costs (gasoline, oil, lubrication, tires, maintenance and repairs) and ownership costs (depreciation, provincial tax, finance charges, insurance and licences).

IMMIGRATION LEVELS

Question No. 3,316—Mr. Herbert:

Were discussions held with provincial government representatives to determine what the immigration levels will be in the next three years and, if so, for each province, what minimum and maximum level was established?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The provinces have agreed in principle that immigration levels should be set for the next three years. The major purpose of federal-provincial consultation in this area is to allow for an over-all exchange of views on all immigration policy, from which future levels may be determined.

Some provinces have indicated specific intake levels for 1982. Quebec expects to receive 16,000 to 18,000, Saskatchewan 2,850, and Prince Edward Island would like to receive 250 to 280 new arrivals. Most provinces, however, have referred to their needs in terms of a percentage of the total national level to be decided federally, stating preferences for maintaining or slightly increasing present intakes.

USE OF DND AIRCRAFT BY CABINET MINISTERS

Question No. 3,368—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 1,996 with regard to the use of Department of National Defence aircraft by cabinet ministers which stated in part: "The list of executive aircraft used by cabinet ministers... will be available on a monthly basis effective October, 1981 (on request).", was such information requested by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville from the office of the Minister of National Defence and, as of the date of this question, has the information been furnished and, if not, for what reason?

2. Has a specific system been set up to make this information available each month to avoid any necessity of prolonged and repeated inquiries and, if not (a) for what reason (b) on what date will it be set up?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes; as of the date of the question the information for the months of October and November was being compiled, however, this information has since been forwarded.

2. Yes. The monthly list of executive aircraft used by cabinet ministers will be available on written request to the office of the Minister of National Defence within 15 calendar days of the following month.

(a) and (b) Not applicable.

ANSWER TO QUESTION No. 3,470

Question No. 3,532—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,470 which referred in part to the human reaction of many officials in their attitude to answering Order Paper questions, is it government policy to (a) make such blanket statements (b) refuse to make public the names of the public servants involved (c) permit public servants, who complain about Members of Parliament who put questions on the Order Paper, to hide behind a cloak of anonymity?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): (a) See reply to question No. 3,470 answered December 10, 1981.

(b) See reply to question No. 3,469 answered December 10, 1981.

Question No. 3,533—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,469 which stated in part that "The hon. Member needs only to read successive Order Papers in order to form his own conclusions as to the answer to this question" and as to those members accused by the government of having "overloaded the system" concerning Order Paper questions, does the government realize that the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville did not request to be told his own personal conclusions but was requesting information from the government and, in view of this clarification, is the government now prepared to issue a corrected answer?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In view of the fact that this question is entirely argumentative in nature and does not belong on the Order Paper the government pondered not answering. However, since the question implies that an incorrect answer has been given, it is clearly necessary to set matters straight. The answer to this question is: no corrected answer is necessary since the answer given was correct.

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,479 which stated in part that the government bases whether or not it is amused on certain basic psychology texts, what is a complete list of all such texts used by the government?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The answer suggested that the hon. member could, if he wished, consult such books. The government does not believe that it has any need to consult such books. If the hon. member wishes to do so and has difficulty with the index system in the Library of Parliament, he can enlist the assistance of any one of the professionaly trained staff in the Library.

Question No. 1,997—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since the date the government took office following the general election of February 18, 1980, was any Department of National Defence aircraft used by the Prime Minister and/or a cabinet minister and, if so, in each case (a) on what date (b) for what purpose (c) who used the aircraft and what were the names and job designations of all persons on board at any time (d) what was the point of origin, point of termination and any stops in between (e) what was the cost of the flight?

2. What was the total cost of all such flights?

Return tabled.

USE OF FALCON JETS BY CABINET MINISTERS

Question No. 2,519—Mr. McKinnon:

Were Department of National Defence Falcon jets used to transport cabinet ministers or Members of Parliament during the first four months of 1981 and, if so, how many trips were made and, in each case (a) what was the (i) date (ii) point of departure (iii) destination (b) who was the principal passenger?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I raise once again the point of order I raised yesterday. Question No. 2,042, which touches on the costs borne by the taxpayers of Canada for the Prime Minister's world tour approximately a year ago, has still not been answered. Your Honour will recall that yesterday the government House leader promised it would be answered today, yet we now have a reply which does not include the answer to that question which has been on the Order Paper for months.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, if the hon. member would look up question No. 2,035, standing in the name of the hon. member for Victoria which is found in Monday's Order Paper, I think he would find that the question has been asked and answered.

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary when he expects to answer my questions on the Order Paper concerning the Obstacles report. Yesterday the Minister of State tabled the government's initial response to the Obstacles report in the House, which addressed some 40 of the recommendations. In previous announcements by the government, the government spoke about implementing 56 recommendations from the Obstacles report. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary could advise both the House and myself when we can expect answers to at least the additional 16 initial responses which were not included in the minister's document tabled yesterday.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be making representations to the hon. Secretary of State, who has just recently been designated as the minister responsible for co-ordinating those answers.

Mr. Waddell: I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could advise the House whether the subcommittee on the Caribbean will be visiting the Turks and Caicos Islands in their travels.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, he could ask his colleague, who will be going, but I do not believe they were included in the order of reference which just went through the House.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Does the House agree to have questions Nos. 1,997 and 2,519 made Orders for Returns?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

MOTION RESPECTING AUTHORITY FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SECURITY AND DISARMAMENT ISSUES

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be empowered to examine security and disarmament issues with specific attention to Canada's participation in the second Special Session of the United Nations General Assembly devoted to Disarmament scheduled for June/July 1982, and report to the House not later than Friday, April 2nd, 1982; and

That the Committee be empowered for this purpose to retain the services of advisers to assist in its work and that it also be empowered to retain such professional, clerical and stenographic help as may be required and that it also be empowered to advertise invitations to the public to submit opinions on the aforementioned matter.

He said: Madam Speaker, I understand that there has been consultation on this matter and that there is unanimous consent for adoption of this motion.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: That is correct, Madam Speaker. I do not have my Order Paper in front of me, but was the word "security" included in the motion?

Mr. Pinard: Yes.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, it was.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Therefore, there is unanimous consent for adopting this motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: There has also been consultation on Bill C-87, and it has been agreed that we should proceed with all stages of the bill today, so that the motion should include referral of the bill to the Committee of the Whole. I wish to announce now that at the stage of consideration by a Committee of the Whole, I shall be presenting an amendment on behalf of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), to have the number of additional commissioners restricted to six. In the circumstances, and subject to this amendment, I believe there is unanimous consent for the House to proceed as I have just indicated and that the bill can be taken through all stages and adopted during the next few minutes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for proceeding with all stages of the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT, NO. 2

AMENDMENT RESPECTING APPOINTMENT OF TEMPORARY MEMBERS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-87, an Act to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 2), be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the committee of the whole—Mr. Blaker in the chair.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: House in committee of the whole on Bill C-87, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 2). Shall clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Temporary Members

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we whipped through second reading so fast that the minister did not make an explanatory statement. I see that the parliamentary secretary is in his place, and I assumed that he would be recognized first to make the statement which would normally be made on second reading debate, and that he would be followed by the hon. member for Calgary Centre.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Chairman, I could either do so now or on third reading, as the hon. member wishes.

Mr. Nielsen: I think it would be appropriate if the explanation were given now.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Chairman, hon. members may recall that last Friday, December 11, this House gave final reading to Bill C-60, to amend the National Energy Board Act relating to the detailed routing of pipelines, conditions relating to construction, entry on to the right of way, acquisition of the right of way and compensation for the use of the land. The bill is now awaiting royal assent. Hon. members may also recall that all parties agreed to the swift passage of the bill which had originated in the Senate as Bill S-12.

Bill C-60 will require that a company which files a plan, profile and book of reference with the Board must serve a notice on all landowners whose land is proposed to be acquired.

Mr. Andre: You've got the wrong notes.

Mr. MacLaren: The company must publish a similar notice in a newspaper in the area of the land involved. Landowners who have been served with a notice, and any other landowner who believes that his land will be affected by the pipeline, will have 30 days to file a notice of objection with the National Energy Board.

If any notice is received, the Board must conduct a hearing in the locale of the land affected, at which time the landowners who have filed notices have a right to be heard. The terms of reference of this hearing include not only the best possible route for the pipeline, but also the best method of acquiring the land and of constructing the pipeline. The Board has the power to address all of these concerns either by withholding its approval of the plans, profiles, and books of reference or by imposing terms and conditions on the approval.

There is substantial pipeline construction contemplated in the near future. The board estimates that nearly 4,000 land owners will be affected by the bill in the first quarter of 1982 alone. Even if only 3 per cent of them request public hearings, this could give rise to 120 cases in that quarter. Just how many land owners will apply is unknown at this time, but the board must have the flexibility to deal with the situation.

However, Bill C-60 did not provide for any additional board members to conduct these hearings. Staff will also be required by the board to administer Bill C-60, but arrangements have already been made with Treasury Board for the provision of such staff. However, under the National Energy Board Act, the board is restricted to nine permanent members with no provision for temporary members. These permanent members are needed to carry out the existing responsibilities of the board under the National Energy Board Act, the Petroleum Administration Act and the Northern Pipeline Act. With the high level of activity in the energy field, all nine members are already committed to hearings throughout 1982 and beyond. It would be impossible for board members to carry out their obligations under Bill C-60 without provision for additional members.

As the President of the Privy Council has noted, concurrence has been received from all parties to introduce this bill in anticipation that it will receive swift passage so as to permit Bill C-60 to be proclaimed at an early date. The sole purpose of the bill before us now is to provide for the appointment of not more than six temporary members under terms and conditions to be prescribed by the governor in council and for such members to carry out such duties as may be assigned to them by the chairman.

Whether more permanent members are needed can be determined when experience has been gained in administering Bill C-60. Each of the temporary members will be governed by the same conflict of interest rules which are contained in the National Energy Board Act relating to its members.

Members may note that there has been a change in the wording of the residence requirements of board members. They are presently required "to reside in the city of Ottawa or within 25 miles thereof or within such other distance as the governor in council determines". It has been decided to change these definitions and relate them to the National Capital Region based on the definition set forth in the National Capital Act. This seems to reflect the appropriateness of using the term, National Capital Region, embracing an area in both Ontario and Quebec in referring to the federal Government of Canada.

As I pointed out, the act is basically simple. It provides for no more than six temporary board members, permitting the bringing into operation of Bill C-60 at an early date. It is the intention to proclaim the coming into effect of this act on the same day as Bill C-60.

I have referred to the fact that this bill anticipates not more than six temporary members. At the committee stage of the bill, as the President of the Privy Council has already indicated, with the concurrence of the two opposition parties I will move an amendment that will limit the number of temporary members to not more than six.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to say a few words. We concur with the introduction of this bill. We did support and do support Bill C-60 which provides, I think, for a fair way of treating farmers, ranchers and other land owners who are subject to pipeline right-of-way expropriations. Obviously, we concur with the necessary changes to the staff of the National Energy Board so as to enable it properly to administer this new way of handling land owners.

I would also like to take this opportunity to indicate that an equal concern to Bill C-60 is a concern that we in this party feel about the ability of the National Energy Board properly and expeditiously to handle other very important issues which will be coming forward in the coming year. In particular, I consider that the hearings which the National Energy Board will be undertaking on natural gas exports commencing March, 1982, are of vital importance in an energy sense to the future of this country.

These gas export hearings, I hope and believe, will result in the authorization of increased gas exports, which are vital to this country for many reasons. First, although the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources never wants to admit it in this House, there are dozens and dozens of oil and gas companies in severe financial straits at this time. Many of these companies are primarily concerned with natural gas having explored for and found gas over the last few years. These companies have been unable to market their gas. They are now in hock to the banks and are faced with the extremely high interest rates prevailing, putting them into serious straits.

Yesterday I heard about a rather significant company, not a large one but certainly a significant company, that could be purchased for $1 as a result of its inability to market gas. This is a Canadian-owned company. That kind of de-Canadianization flowing from many of this government's policies on interest rates and the policies of the National Energy Board is something about which we should all be concerned. One thing the government could do without having to eat crow and admit how bad the National Energy Program is would be to examine and authorize natural gas exports.

We are faced with a very serious balance of payments problem and serious interest rate differentials vis-à-vis the United States, and increased gas exports would perhaps be the quickest, most readily available way in which we can improve our balance of payments deficit and reduce the interest rate differential between Canada and the United States.

Increased cash flows to industries from increased gas exports would be a tremendous stimulus to increased exploration and development. It will maintain thousands of jobs, not only in the oil and gas industry but all of the industries primarily located in central Canada that supply the oil and gas industry. They produce the pipes, the valves, the pumps, the machinery and so on which are so much a part of exploration and development efforts.

It is important that the National Energy Board get to these decisions quickly. The ability to sell natural gas to the United States market is being reduced daily. The door is slowly being closed. The reason is simple. The United States, unlike Canada, adopted a much saner energy policy two years ago. This triggered a massive increase in exploration and development in the United States. Large gas finds have been discovered in the U.S. Therefore, the market for Canadian natural gas is being reduced daily as a result. I might add that there are 300 to 400 Canadian companies in the United States drilling and finding natural gas also contributing to the restriction of market forces. If we are going to take this opportunity that gas exports offer, it is important that we do it quickly and very soon. It is important also that the National Energy Board be able to pursue these hearings with some vigour and make recommendations to the government as soon as possible.

I would be remiss if I did not mention the other side of the question. Will we have sufficient natural gas to look after Canada's natural gas needs in the reasonably foreseeable future? That is a vitally important question that must be addressed by the National Energy Board as well. The National Energy Board is the best equipped body in the country to make that decision. The National Energy Board should be given the flexibility by the government to consider not just that gas which is now available through opening up a valve, but the gas that has been discovered and could be brought to market with reasonable dispatch. It should also be able to consider that gas which can reasonably be anticipated as coming on line as a result of the exploration and development activity that will be going on.

In conclusion, I would indicate that we are in favour of providing the National Energy Board with this increased manpower to provide flexibility in handling the ongoing mandate as well as the new mandate given the board as a result of Bill C-60. I would express the hope and the wish that the National Energy Board will understand, and I think it does, the gravity of the situation for the Canadian oil and gas industry in western Canada, particularly those smaller Canadian-owned companies which are rich mainly in gas rather than oil, and that the board will handle these hearings with dispatch and make recommendations to the government at an early date. Perhaps with that kind of quick movement on the part of the National Energy Board and, hopefully, the government, we can repair some of the damage done in the last two years, getting this vital and creative sector of the Canadian oil and gas industry back on track, making this country self-sufficient with a more vigorous economy. This will put back to work some of those thousands of Canadians who have been laid off as a result of the energy mistakes over the last two years.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to speak on behalf of the NDP on this bill and to give our approval for its speedy passage. We agree that we need more temporary board members properly to administer the act. Like a hockey team, we would like a few leftwingers if we could choose, but I suppose we will not have that choice, and I will have something to say about that in a few minutes.

I do want to reply briefly to some of the remarks by the hon. member for Calgary Centre before I wish him a Merry Christmas as he leaves to go back to the gas boom. I could not let his remarks pass without some comment. They sounded like what one of my colleagues has called "the Canadian Hunter refrain", or what my colleague refers to as "the oil magots". The refrain is: Give us some money so we can find more gas and oil, becuse we are broke. Give us some tax advantages. When the money and the tax advantages are given, give us permission to export the gas and oil as quickly as we can because we have a surplus and we are broke. Then after it is exported they say: Give us more money because we have to find more. This is like perpetual Christmas, like having Santa Claus all the time. They say: Do these things or we will take our rigs south. We hear that refrain all the time.

At one time in this country in the early 1970s we were exporting one half of our daily production of oil because these people told us that we had lots and we should sell it. Now we are faced with this terrible difficulty of importing about one third of our oil. I am worried that the same thing may happen with natural gas.

We want to help these companies out, but there may be other ways of helping them. For example, would it not make more sense to move our gas east and west rather than north and south? If there is in fact a surplus of gas, perhaps we could even have a gas bank to store some of that gas for Ontario or for Quebec until we need it, particularly when the government is encouraging people to convert to natural gas. Perhaps it could be moved to the maritimes; we might even consider that. It seems to me those kinds of alternatives would make some sense, rather than advocating that we predetermine the board's hearings. After all, the National Energy Board has to determine whether we have an exportable gas surplus, and I do not think it is for members of this House to make those decisions for the National Energy Board.

We are in favour of this bill because we think the new members will be needed to administer effectively the provisions of Bill C-60, as mentioned by the hon. member for Etobicoke North. Bill C-60 was passed last week in the House. It related to new expropriation procedures and protection for those people who are affected, the land owners and small farmers, as a result of pipelines going through their lands. On previous occasions in the House, including last week, the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke made quite strong speeches about the necessity for that measure. Bill C-60 is the "Yahk" bill". It is named after a little town in British Columbia. They have a little slogan there: "I have been to Yahk and back". I hope you will go there some day, Mr. Chairman, to see that very friendly little place.

If my colleague to my left here stops yakking for a minute I will tell hon. members that the Yahk home owners raised such a fuss when their land was expropriated under a very old 19th century law that the member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke brought the issue to the attention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the government did bring in the bill to update that expropriation procedure. What we are now doing is adding temporary members to the National Energy Board who will help administer the measure more effectively.

Before I sit down I want to draw the attention of the House to a private member's bill I had the honour of introducing in the House on October 10, 1980.

An hon. Member: This sounds like a commercial.

Mr. Waddell: My friend across the way says this is a commercial, and it is. He should read that bill because it is an attempt to upgrade and modernize the National Energy Board. The bill we have before us today only touches on one aspect, adding some temporary members. What I was attempting to do in my bill was make some other provisions and I just want briefly to touch on those.

If we could broaden this particular bill today we could put something in it to really make sure that these members got decent salaries and decent status. We have to upgrade these boards, the National Energy Board and other administrative boards, almost to the status of the Federal Court. We should do that because these boards are handling the day to day important matters in Canada, for example the exportation of oil and gas, television licences, the cost of telephone service, prices of this and that, air fares and so on. These boards need to be upgraded. They do not need to be populated by low level appointments. In the past there have been a lot of what one commentator called political hacks appointed to the board. It was not me who said that but a distinguished commentator from the Law Reform Commission.

The other thing we need to do with the National Energy Board is upgrade the role of board counsel. We also need to make public and open up the internal procedures of that board and let the sunlight in as they do with administrative boards in the United States. We need to consult people about appointments, including provincial governments. We should change the background requirements of some of the people who are appointed to these boards. For example, we do not have any environmentalists on the National Energy Board, yet we have been hearing from very active people on environmental law and environmental matters for the last 15 years. Why don't we do that? There are no northerners or native people on these boards. There should at least be a representative of those groups on the boards.

There are many things which can be done to upgrade the boards. I would ask the hon. member to read my bill over the Christmas holidays. He will find it in the October 10, 1980, Hansard and I will put it in his Christmas stocking.

In conclusion, I say that we in the NDP support the provisions of this bill. However, we draw the attention of the government to how appointments are made. Let us not have the usual political hacks. Let us not have the former candidates and bag men. We should try to get board members, even as temporary members, who will take to the board some experience in various fields and who have backgrounds which are not now represented on the boards. We need people who understand the plight of small farmers whose land might have to be expropriated for these public works projects. With that comment, Mr. Speaker, I think I can give our party's consent to the speedy passage of this particular bill.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moncton:

That Clause I of Bill C-87 be amended by adding immediately after line 16 on page 1 the following: "(6.1) Not more than six temporary members of the Board shall hold office at any one time".

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The House has heard the proposed amendment of the parliamentary secretary. Does the House agree to this amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Clause 1, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When shall the bill be read the third time; by unanimous consent, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Lalonde) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ELECTRICITY AND GAS INSPECTION ACT

INSPECTION OF ELECTRIC AND GAS METERS AND SUPPLIES

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-11, an Act relating to the inspection of electric and gas meters and supplies, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief, except to move adoption of this bill which is to replace the Gas Inspection Act and the Electricity Inspection Act. There are several good reasons, Mr. Speaker, why the two existing acts should be consolidated in a single act. First of all, existing legislation governing the accuracy of measuring electricity and gas has not been changed since 1920, so that a review and improvements are necessary to reflect present-day circumstances and technological progress.

Second, the future act will allow accreditation of private meter manufacturers, so as to increase the industry's responsibility for measurement accuracy. However, I can assure the House that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will continue to test electric or gas meters whose accuracy is contested by a purchaser or vendor. Such tests have proved to be an excellent means of ensuring that everyone gets a fair deal, and if they are combined with regular inspections of accredited manufacturers by inspectors, Canadians should be receiving even better service in this area. I would like to point out that the act provides for adjusting provisions to measuring instruments to be used for new energy forms or means of distribution, such as the supply of steam from a central source.

I can assure the House that the intent of the act has received very broad support. In fact, a number of public utilities have written to ask us to accelerate passage of the bill. Thus, the proposed legislation will maintain a system under which our national consumption of electricity and gas will continue to be measured correctly, and my department has a responsibility for seeing to it that the legislation is applied fairly to all marketing agents. Especially with respect to energy and measurement of electricity and gas consumption, this bill is entirely in line with my department's terms of reference. I therefore recommend that this bill be supported by hon. members on both sides of the House.

[English]

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to take part in the second reading of Bill C-11, an act relating to the inspection of electric and gas metres and supplies.

Perhaps I could paraphrase the words of the Gettysburg Address and suggest that the world will little note nor long remember what is said here, but it can never forget what we are doing here.

I feel like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I used to sit up in the gallery for the better part of 20 years and wonder what monentous legislation could keep Members of Parliament here on the last day, just before the Christmas recess. Well, this is an example of the monentous kind of legislation. As I say, I feel like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in filling in these final moments.

As an aside, I am sure that the thoughts of all members of the House are with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre at this time and we all hope to see that distingushed gentleman back here on January 25, even, Sir, if you do not agree with the principles of Bill C-11.

Bill C-11 was first introduced in April, 1980 by the hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). In fact, it is almost identical to Bill C-20 which was introduced by my esteemed friend, the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence), when he was minister of consumer and corporate affairs. In 1978, this bill was introduced by the former Liberal minister of consumer and corporate affairs, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

It is the opinion of the Progressive Conservative Party that this bill has been required for some time. It is with regret that it has not come before the House for second reading until now. It is our hope that it will proceed quickly through all stages of debate today in the House.

The purpose of Bill C-11 is many- faceted. This legislation will replace two existing acts, the Electricity Inspection Act and the Gas Inspection Act. Both of these acts have not been substantially amended or altered since the 1920s. As well as consolidating and updating the current acts, Bill C-11 will also serve to eliminate a number of inconsistencies in the acts which have resulted in various problems of interpretation and enforcement of these two outmoded pieces of legislation.

Due to the fact that these current acts have not been substantially amended since the 1920s, this new bill will reflect the changing technologies in the gas and electricity metering industry. The legislation is also forward-looking, in my view, in that it will provide for the application of the provisions of the legislation to new sources or supplies of energy or new forms of energy distribution. This is a very attractive part of the legislation. We in this House are always being accused of only reacting to change, but here we are anticipating it and applauding it.

The act will also legitimize the use of certain recognized units such as British thermal units, of BTUs, as they are commonly known. The criminal offence provisions of the act are also strengthened. The act makes it a criminal offence for any contractor or supplier to "short supply" a customer by incorporating the wording and intent of Sections 33 and 34 of the Weights and Measures Act. The act also makes it an offence to commit theft by substituting a misleading or fraudulent meter.

The main purpose of this bill, however, aside from these very important housekeeping measures, is to permit the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to transfer a portion of its meter inspection function over to the private sector. Not only will this enable the already overburdened and understaffed branch of legal meterology to utilize its staff in other areas, but it also aids in reducing the government's expenditure at a time when many of us on this side of House are determined that the spending priorities of the government must be redesigned and directed particularly to important areas, such as housing and farming.

The act will authorize qualified utilities and meter manufacturers to verify and seal electricity and gas meters, subject to frequent audits and inspections by the staff of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It will, therefore, extend to the Canadian consumer the same protection he currently receives but at considerable savings to the federal government.

I feel it is incumbent upon me, as consumer affairs spokesman for my party, to allay any fears on the part of consumers who may feel that turning over verification of meters to those industries and contractors who sell the product is, in effect, the fox guarding the chickens. Only those utilities which are qualified and competent and accredited meter shops will be permitted to inspect gas and electricity meters. The qualified service people will have to register annually as well as be subject to spot audits by federal government inspectors to ensure that these meter shops and inspectors are maintaining strict quality control procedures.

These utilities and meter shops are required to meet strict standards on the quality of testing equipment and quality control measures. These standards are set by the federal authorities in accordance with prescribed standards of calibration. It at any time a meter verifier fails to meet these standards, the accreditation necessary for him to be in business can be revoked and the meters under his jurisdiction sealed and re-verified.

Should a dispute between an electricity or gas utility and a consumer arise, federal government inspectors will be able to arbitrate the dispute and verify the meter's accuracy. I hope these safeguards calm the fears of many consumers. The standards are quite rigid, and the penalties for not adhering to them are quite strict.

I am also pleased to see a feature of our government incorporated into this bill, that is, a sunset provision. The minister responsible for the act will submit a report to Parliament after five years on the administration of the act. Should any difficulties arise out of the administration of the act, then the consumer can be assured those sections of the act which are being questioned will come under the scrutiny of this House of Commons.

It is with great pleasure that I say "yea" to Bill C-11, and I hope we can proceed quickly to royal assent.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a word or two about Bill C-11. It was very interesting to hear my good friend and colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott), outline the provisions of the bill. Having read the bill, I recognize that those indeed are the provisions!

I want to talk about some concerns I have about the legislation. I will begin by saying that we will support the passage of the bill, but we do so with some two or three reservations.

It is all well and good to write out the procedures which must be followed in order to effect a proper testing, particularly of natural gas equipment. Perhaps testing of electrical equipment is not quite as important, although it can cause problems. I want to talk seriously for a moment about the hazard involved with natural gas and the difficulties which can be encountered in dealing with it. I have spent a significant portion of my life working as a firefighter, and I can recall on numerous occasions going to fires or to gas leaks in an attempt to evacuate the areas and assist in bringing things under control. It scared me no end when I realized that it would be quite easy for a very major catastrophe to occur as a result of inadvertence or inadequate inspection.

I am therefore compelled to say that no matter how we write the legislation, unless we can instil in the people who are going to assume this responsibility that the responsibility is a real responsibility for the lives of people, then no legislation will suffice in any way.

I draw a comparison with the legislation passed in the province of Ontario some years ago regarding motor vehicle safety inspection. It was done for a good reason. It was done because it was believed that there were on the roads of Ontario vehicles which were unsafe, and we therefore passed legislation which empowered licensed mechanics to inspect vehicles and to issue stickers saying that vehicles were in good working order as far as safety was concerned. I can tell hon. members that it has been brought to my attention on numerous occasions that after cars had been inspected and purchased, brakes failed and wheels fell off. Vehicles were not adequately inspected. The safety of the drivers and people in the vicinity of those vehicles was placed in some jeopardy.

With that in the back of my mind I was concerned about this legislation. It will become a primary responsibility of the minister—who is undoubtedly listening to me with one ear and listening with the other to his colleagues—to ensure that the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does in fact oversee inspections and inspectors in such a way as to protect the safety of Canadians. It is not good enough to assume that just because there are penalties in the bill people given the responsibility of carrying out day to day inspections will automatically do that in such a way as to guarantee the safety of those people who must come into contact with these apparatuses.

I urge that the minister have a staff of a size sufficient to make sure that not only meters and other paraphernalia to be used are properly tested but also that there be a continuation of spot checks both on those who are doing inspections and on the work which has presumably been inspected and for which certificates have been issued, and that spot checks be made on a regular basis across the country to guarantee the quality of the work. As I say, in the case of natural gas in particular the hazard involved is signficant. I suggest to the minister further that with regard to employees who are currently involved in testing—if I speak quickly, I will get to the end—they be given priority and the opportunity to undertake that work.

With those few comments I will now allow the bill to be read the second time.

• (1300)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is a little uncertain. Is there a disposition among members to put the bill through all stages?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Would the minister like to have his bill through all stages before lunch or after?

Mr. Ouellet: Before lunch, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.03 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

PEST CONTROL PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from December 11, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-45, to amend the Pest Control Products Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak on a subject worthy of debate on a Friday afternoon in the House of Commons. It is a most important matter how we in Canada control our pests. However, before I commence my remarks I shall raise in the House the observation that the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) is not present. The hon. member for Perth gave me a solemn undertaking yesterday that if I were to sit in this House and listen to his speech on Bill C-53, he would sit here in return and listen to my speech on pest control! Having given that solemn undertaking, I find it rather unusual that the hon. member has not complied with his undertaking. However, I do see the hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier), and he might serve as a surrogate. I shall address my remarks specifically to him who, I am told, knows a lot about the subject matter.

Pests are an important matter for this House. As I look around, I see pests opposite me, Mr. Speaker, pests to the left of me, and also in Saskatchewan and in Manitoba. We have to do something about these pests. There are no pests in Alberta yet, or very few. Perhaps we should try to be serious for a few minutes.

I have certain objections to the bill, Mr. Speaker. My objection is to the punishment provision. Section 10(1)(a) of the Act reads as follows:

10. (1) Every person who, or whose employee or agent, violates any provision of this act or the regulations is guilty of

(a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years,—

There is something unusual about that wording, Mr. Speaker. The same wording is used not only in the Pest Control Products Act but also in the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act and the Plant Quarantine Act. Unlike other legislation where punishment is set at a maximum and a judge could impose imprisonment of any period up to that maximum, this act specifies a fixed period of imprisonment for two years.

The Electricity Inspection Act provides that someone found guilty of an indictable offence is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. There is that proviso, "a term not exceeding two years", or five years or whatever is the standard wording. I am unable to determine why in this and similar legislation dealt with by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), a fixed period of imprisonment is specified. I hope that matter will be rectified at some future date.

I could also take objection to section 10(2) of the act, Mr. Speaker. Under the Criminal Code people are presumed innocent until found guilty, and a great deal of effort is expended on giving people the maximum opportunity to be presumed innocent. Under this and similar legislation, guilt is assumed until the accused party can prove innocence. Last night we were dealing with the important question of rape. I do not understand why, when dealing with such a subject, or with murder, the presumption of innocence is made, whereas when dealing with a contravention of the Pest Control Products Act guilt is assumed until innocence can be demonstrated.

This applies not only to a principal but to his agent. The agent need not necessarily be present and perhaps cannot even be found. I think this is rather unfair. I would prefer if there were an assumption of innocence until the Crown proved guilt.

There is a problem with the very restrictive drafting of this bill, Mr. Speaker. The drafters of this and similar legislation, assisted by the Department of Justice, take the view the drafting should be wide enough to take in every conceivable thing that might happen.

The definition of a pest control product could include an ordinary hammer. Someone might be able to kill a beetle with a hammer and so it would be included. By regulation, however, the hammer could be exempted from the definition of a pest control product. It seems that the wording is all in favour of the government and that a manufacturer or someone engaged in selling such products could be at a disadvantage.

The definition of a pest control product includes mousetraps. I have a few words to say about mousetraps. The question of mousetraps and the legislation relating thereto could be a good example of the differences in party philosophy. In this party we believe that if you invent a better mousetrap the world will beat a path to your door. You should be able to accumulate wealth and prosperity beyond your wildest dreams. We believe that someone who invents a better mousetrap should receive the full fruits of his labour. According to the philosophy of the party opposite, however, the builder of a better mousetrap would find hordes of bureaucrats at his door with legislation such as this Pest Control Products Act, asking him to fill in pieces of paper and to abide by reams of rules and regulations. The inventor would wish he had never heard of a mousetrap let alone make a better one.

A leg-hold trap could be included in the definition of pest control products, according to this bill, Mr. Speaker. I come from an area where many people make their living through the use of such traps. I know that in some parts of Canada people oppose this device. In the Territories we take the view that the provincial or territorial authorities should make the rules and regulations which govern trapping. Other people, however, believe that the Criminal Code should be amended to bar the use of that type of trap and others that are deemed to be inhumane. If it were the wish of Parliament that this be done, I would not argue that it lies within the jurisdiction of this body, but would insist that it be brought before the House of Commons and the Senate for debate.

This bill provides a way to get around the situation. The use of such traps could be outlawed by regulation. I do not think that is the proper way to address the question. It is my personal opinion that the leg-hold trap should not be banned. Many of my constituents have written to me on this subject at great length. They make a living from its use and have not found any alternative that is as effective. I would not like to see them lose their livelihood by a back door method such as that which might be allowed under the Pest Control Products Act.

What we are doing with the amendment before us is to make the provisions of the Pest Control Products Act binding on Her Majesty the Queen in right of both Canada and the provinces. I would like to hear from the spokesman on the government side what amount of consultation has taken place with the provinces on this matter. I agree wholeheartedly that various federal government departments should come under this act and be bound by it. There is a question of jurisdiction with the provinces. If I am satisfied that these consultations have taken place and that provincial governments agree that it should be binding on provincial government departments, then I would certainly have no objection to that. However, I would like to hear from the government side whether or not these consultations have taken place and concerning the position of the provinces with respect to this legislation.

I have another doubt concerning the act, in that we are really entering an area of joint responsibility, one of those grey areas where part of the legislative responsibility for pest control devices comes under the provincial government and part comes under the federal government. It would seem legitimate to me that the federal government should deal with aspects of pest control devices and products, such as manufacture, interprovincial sales, and import and export of these products. However, the use of these products in a particular province or territory should be governed by provincial or territorial legislation, in my opinion. Most provinces and the territories have pretty good pesticide acts. Therefore, we must be careful, in reading through the act, that we are not trespassing on provincial grounds.

I have one other point to make with respect to this act. I wish that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) were here. I noticed that he was here just a few minutes ago. However, in reading through the Pest Control Products Act and its accompanying piece of legislation, the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act, one will see that the latter contains a provision which has a bearing on the problem with which we are seized in this House relating to urea formaldehyde foam. If someone suffers a loss under the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act with respect to the use of pesticides approved by the government under the Pest Control Products Act, that person will be entitled to compensation. That idea is established in law and has apparently been operating for some time under the auspices of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I see very little difference between the use of the agricultural products we have here and the use of urea formaldehyde foam insulation as approved by CMHC, which reports to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove). It would seem to me that the same types of things have happened. The product has been approved by the government, and I we were to follow the philosophy contained within the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act, the user who suffers a loss should be entitled to compensation.

I think that I have done pretty well for Friday afternoon on a bill such as this, Mr. Speaker. I do not think I have kept the House waiting too long. We on this side do not wish to unduly prevent passage or slow it down. I thank Your Honour for your kind indulgence.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I will not be long in discussing the merits or demerits of this piece of legislation. However, I felt it appropriate to get up and ask some questions. I hope the government is prepared to answer those questions.

This is an amendment to the Pest Control Products Act, an act which is apparently administered by the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). First of all, I want to ask why this amendment is necessary. If it is necessary, why was the act not amended years ago? Why is the amendment so late in coming if, indeed, it is necessary?

The second question one must ask is what this amendment does. I would simply like to read the explanatory notes to indicate what it does. It states that:

This amendment would make the Pest Control Products Act and any regulations made there under applicable to Her Majesty and any agent of Her Majesty, thereby providing legal authority to control the use of pesticides by departments or agencies of the federal government or any provincial government.

One would have thought that legislation like this, passed some years ago, would automatically apply to federal agencies and departments. Therefore, the obvious intent of this legislation is very specific; that is, to make it applicable to areas of provincial jurisdiction. One must then ask whether or not ministers of the government, such as the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), or some other minister, had undertaken extensive negotiations with the provinces to come to some agreement with respect to the extension of this legislation to areas of provincial jurisdiction.

During the first half of the decade of the seventies, I was rather extensively involved in an attempt to reach an accord between the federal and provincial jurisdictions with regard to the applicability of various sections of the Constitution to environmental matters. It was obvious, early in the seventies, that there was some degree of confusion as to just where the concern and responsibility for subsequent legislation lay in Canada with respect to environmental control. Of course, on several occasions we had reached federal-provincial accords for the protection and enhancement of environmental quality in Canada as a result of some major conferences, particularly the Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment in 1972, and a series of conferences in connection with the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers. One fundamental understanding we had between the provinces and the federal government was that the federal government would be primarily responsible for the establishment of ambient standards across the nation which would subsequently be followed by the provinces. However, it was understood that the provinces would be primarily responsible for establishing source standards and, indeed, the regulation and enforcement of those source standards. Therefore, the amount of effluent from a plant or the distribution of some particular type of pesticide was supposedly a matter for provincial regulation and control, rather than federal control.

I would therefore ask whether or not this action and this change to the legislation is being undertaken unilaterally by the federal government or whether, in fact, it is being done after considerable consultation and agreement with the provinces. I think that in light of the new constitutional accord with the provinces, there will be areas of doubt in the future concerning jurisdiction. We will wonder whether the jurisdiction lies with the provinces or the federal government or whether it comes under property and civil rights or some other area. There will surely be a continuing and increasing need for discussion, co-operation and agreement in areas like this.

Therefore, without holding up the bill any longer, I would again simply ask the federal government, in the hope that it can answer, whether or not it has had substantive discussion and agreement with the provinces; if so, which provinces have been consulted with regard to the addition of Clause 1 of this bill which will make it binding upon them?

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, unlike the two previous speakers, I think this is an important amendment. Perhaps the importance is not what is in the amendment itself but what is missing. This act has not been reviewed or changed for some time. I believe a minor amendment took place in the mid-1960s. Many important developments have occurred since that time, particularly in the area of chemical control of weeds and pests.

This is an important issue because it places before us the issue of technological innovations and how our society adapts and deals with them. Over the last two decades we have seen a growing number of ways in which insects, pests and weeds are controlled by chemicals, but we have never taken a look at the side effects which these new chemicals have on the environment and on the health both of the consumer and the producer. It is a case whereby one section of society has gone forward and innovated new technologies without really taking an over-all look at the effects of other sectors upon society.

Indeed, this is an important issue. Every year hundreds and thousands of gallons of toxic substances are distributed throughout our environment, possibly causing great havoc to our environment and to human health. The system that has existed so far has been an honour system. When a new chemical is produced by a manufacturer, that manufacturer may have spent several years working on the product and might have invested $20 million in research. That manufacturer will be very anxious to see his particular product get registered, allowing him to market it to farmers and to other consumers. However, before marketing can take place, the government insists on the company coming up with studies which demonstrate the product is not hazardous to the environment and to the health of both the consumer and the producer.

The government has relied on the data of private labs to verify that the substance in question is not carcinogenic or harmful to the environment before allowing its registration. But very often in the last several years these private labs have deliberately falsified their tests. The major scandal, of course, centred around the Industrial Biotest Laboratories of Illinois in the mid-1970s. This lab removed dead mice and replaced them with live mice. They deliberately altered the results of their tests. A chemical called captan was developed by Chevron. Chevron requested that IBT alter its findings and study documents.

We have had cases in which corporations that were developing chemicals have asked testing companies to deliberately falsify the test results. As a result of these tests, governments determine whether or not to allow registration of chemicals.

The IBT scandal is one of tremendous magnitude. Most of the major pesticides and herbicides on the market in Canada today were tested by that lab. It was on the basis of those tests that the Canadian and the American governments allowed these products on the market. IBT is not the only case, of course. There are other cases. For example, criminal conviction of several officials of the Richardson-Merrill company occurred as a result of a drug called MER/20.

The chemical dornwall was produced by the Wallace Tiernan company. Again it was found that there was fraudulent manipulation of data.

The McNeil Laboratories pleaded no contest on charges of concealing information about the chemical flexin.

Hazelton Laboratories was charged with falsifying data on the artificial sweetener aspartame and the drug aldactone.

The drug panalba was withdrawn from the market in 1968 after information in the manufacturers' files was accidentally discovered by an American food and drug administration inspector.

The Velsical Chemical company was indicted by a U.S. grand jury in 1977 for suppressing information that chlordane heptachlor was carcinogenic.

There is a long string of private labs whose tests were discovered to be false. Nowhere does the amendment that we are dealing with today touch on these important questions. We are dependent upon an honour system, an honour system which has obviously broken down.

The Saskatchewan government has been quite concerned about the laxity of the federal government in dealing with this important question concerning the health and welfare of Canadians and our environment. The present system of regulation has been condemned as having major deficiencies by the Saskatchewan Environmental Advisory Council. Farmers, grain elevator operators and many others suffer from health problems related to chemical exposure, yet chemicals whose safety is in doubt continue to be widely used. Residues of these chemicals contaminate food, pollute lakes, rivers, wells and other sources of water. I will come back to the question of the pollution of water, which is so important to the province of Saskatchewan and to the prairie region, in a moment.

A stinging condemnation of the regulatory system for pesticides is contained in the 1977-1978 and 1978-1979 annual reports of the Saskatchewan government's environmental advisory council. We can read in the 1978 report the following:

> There are major deficiencies in the present research and regulatory process.

The report went on to state that the federal government does not do enough independent research on the chemicals it approves.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They fired the scientists.

Mr. de Jong: This report also states that both the agriculture and the health and welfare departments are forced to rely on laboratory tests by the chemical manufacturers.

The danger signals are out, Mr. Speaker. The high incidences of still births and birth defects in various counties in Ontario surely are a warning to us. I have raised this issue many times. We have reports by Environment Canada on the pollution of surface water on the prairies. In an article in The Western Producer for September 25, 1980 we read:

> The comments came hard on the heels of the release of a study made by Environment Canada last year which showed almost every animal, fish and bird tested throughout the prairies show traces of manufactured chemicals.

We have a report of a study from Tobin Lake, Saskatchewan. The researchers took some of the most primitive life forms, single cell animal forms, at the bottom of lakes and found in them a high degree of abnormality. In other words, the chemicals so widely used on the prairies eventually run through the water system, are deposited in lakes and sink down to the bottom, causing abnormalities in the simple life forms at the bottom of lakes.

This is an early warning system. We cannot go on forever and ever dumping more and more highly toxic materials in our environment without the chickens coming home to roost at some stage. There are limits to the amount of clean air, clean earth and clean water. We are fast approaching those limits. Unfortunately, there is nothing in the minister's amendment to this bill that deals with this very serious problem.

I am not the only one who raises this concern. I have in my possession a letter from the deputy minister of health and welfare which is dated July 16, 1980. That is when this amendment was being discussed. Essentially the deputy minister was suggesting to the Department of Agriculture that the Department of National Health and Welfare be named or listed specifically in the Pest Control Products Act, because the Department of National Health and Welfare does not trust the Department of Agriculture to make unbiased decisions as to what chemicals should be allowed on the market.

An hon. Member: They can't even look after their own labs.

Mr. de Jong: They cannot look after their own labs, indeed. That is another accurate observation.

It has been our position in this party that what is needed is either a Royal commission or a special inquiry, and personally I would prefer a parliamentary inquiry, into the whole chemical question, to study everything from manufacturing to registration, pollution, usage and the disposal of toxic wastes. We must begin to form an overview of what these new substances are doing to our environment. We must begin to examine in depth what alternatives there are, because surely we must begin to come up with alternatives. As I mentioned before, the danger signals are there. We are running out of time.

What are the solutions we can put in place? I am not one who advocates the immediate banning of all sorts of chemicals. I consider it to be part of my duty as a Member of Parliament to give warnings and to raise the fact that there are early warning signals warning us of the limitations. We are running out of time and must begin to devote our energies and resources to the development of other means by which pests and weeds can be controlled, perhaps by biological means. Unfortunately, the amendment before us misses all of these points.

I would like to see the Department of the Environment and the Department of National Health and Welfare mentioned in the act. They should be involved in the decision-making process by which chemicals are registered.

Of course, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) claims his department has a good working relationship with the Department of National Health and Welfare, that the departments do consult with each other and that his department does take the advice of the health department. But that relationship has not always worked.

When it came to the chemical called captan, one of the chemicals tested by the IBT labs and later the test was found to be faulty, the Department of National Health and Welfare recommended that the chemicals should not be used. The Department of Agriculture chose not to follow that advice. In fact, it has now set up its own little group to study this chemical. When it comes to the crunch the Department of National Health and Welfare takes a back seat, indeed, in the decision-making process.

We in this party will continue to press for a responsible attitude by governments to new chemicals that come on to the market. We feel it is not just up to the Department of Agriculture to determine which products should be placed on the market and which products should not. The health of Canadians, both consumers and producers, is at stake here, as is the health of our environment. In that decision-making process we maintain that those other guardians of the public interest, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of the Environment, should also be involved.

The matter of the Constitution was raised just a few moments ago by a previous speaker. Personally it is one of my regrets that in the constitutional process responsibility for the environment and, therefore, responsibility for future generations who must inherit our earth, was not discussed. All too often the responsibility falls between different departments and different levels of government, so in fact what we have is a collective system of irresponsibility.

While our clean air, clean water and clean earth are being consumed by one generation, no one is around to protect the rights of future generations who must live with the mess we are leaving behind for them. I personally hoped that at some stage during the constitutional debates this particular question could have been raised. Some agreement could have been reached among the various levels of government to take on the collective responsibility for the health of our environment, in order to ensure that future generations will have something to inherit. Unfortunately this did not occur, but it is not too late. I urge the government, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) to allow a parliamentary special task force to convene and to discuss in depth all the ramifications of chemical use in our society and in our way of life.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-87, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act, without amendment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PEST CONTROL PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-45, to amend the Pest Control Products Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, this is a very short bill but, in my view, a very important bill. It deals with poisons that can kill human beings, wildlife, and even the earth by stopping it from producing. I do not think we should be in a rush to pass it without adequate debate.

Poisons are always dangerous. The act has been administered with some indifference and, in some cases, with arrogance. It is high time we as Canadians started to take more care with regard to the administration of acts such as this.

This simple amendment is important, and I commend the government for bringing it in. This bill requires more than one amendment. There are many things, some of which have already been mentioned, that are crying for attention, and I have in mind pesticides, herbicides and other toxic materials. As members of this House we have a very definite responsibility in dealing with these matters. We should give them the importance they really deserve.

In relation to the testing of these poisons, I am not at all satisfied that Canadians should be accepting tests carried out in other countries, simply putting the stamp of approval on the substances and using them in this country, because those pesticides, herbicides and toxic materials can mean suffering and sometimes the death of human beings, suffering and sometimes the death of animals, fish and wildlife, and the death of our producing land.

When one of the early explorers saw the prairies which have since become Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta he wrote to the head of his company and said: "This land is a wilderness, it is only good for buffalo; there is no value to it whatsoever". I want to suggest that he missed one great fact, that this land contains two, six or eight inches of black soil. Often today we do not place sufficient value on that black dirt. It is what produces our food. That is what gives us bountiful harvests, along with the sun and the rain and the bountiful will of God. Without that black dirt we would not have the standard of living we enjoy in Canada today. In many cases we are killing or destroying the fertility of that black dirt. How many millions of tons of black dirt—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PEST CONTROL PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-45, to amend the Pest Control Products Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, tons of black earth have been lost to agriculture because of mining, because of pesticides having been put into it and because of bad construction methods, and black dirt will continue to be lost if we continue disregarding its value in the way we have been. We should be looking very carefully now at the situation respecting the injection of poisons into the earth. We should be developing better testing methods for pesticides and toxic materials. We should not be satisfied to accept testing done in another country. I agree with the speaker from the New Democratic Party who a few moments ago said that the Department of Agriculture has not been doing a good job administering the Pest Control Products Act.

We are dealing with the health of human beings, the health of animals and the health of soil. Our country depends on the health of these vital resources, and the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of the Environment should play a vitally important role in this whole matter.

Very little attention has been given to the effects on people of chemicals, pesticides, herbicides and other toxic materials which are designed to do certain things. One pesticide is 2-4-D, which is used to destroy all the growth along highways to make them safe for travel. We do not want brush to become a snow trap and cause accidents and deaths on the highway. The objective is good, but blowers are used to spread poison on rights of way, and in many cases little attention is paid to whether the poison is spread beyond the actual rights of way. In many cases the poison goes beyond and destroys trees, grass and gardens. I remember when one of these blower operators was destroying weeds along a highway; the wind was blowing across the highway and causing the poison to land beyond the right of way. I asked him why he allowed that poison to be spread on a man's garden. This man depended on that garden for his livelihood. I said, "You have destroyed everything in his garden". The blower operator said, "I could not have done that; the blower will only blow 12 feet, and that garden was 30 feet away". I said, "Ye gods man, don't you realize the wind can carry it?"

The public had to pay, and one man lost his job. There has to be some responsibility exercised when we deal with these poisons.

Another case was brought to my attention when I was an MLA of poison being spread by means of an aircraft. Again no cognizance was taken of the kind or of what that poison would do. It went through an open window into a room where there was a sick lady, and this made her sick to the verge of death. She was able to pull through, but she suffered for months because of that carelessness in the distribution of poison. We have to realize that poisons are not little toys. This is not a matter to be laughed at, because these poisons are destroying human life, plant life, wild life and soil. This is a very important matter. There is a responsibility on the part of the departments which administer acts like this to make sure proper notification is given before poison is used.

Just last summer a machine was used to spread poison in a schoolyard, and the school board was not even notified. This poison was spread deliberately to clean up weeds which were felt to be a public nuisance. Youngsters played in the schoolyard, and some of them became very ill. No notification was given to the principal of the school in that small town. No sense of concern or responsibility was demonstrated. They simply went in and did it. I agree completely with the previous speaker, who said there has been a lack of realization that we are dealing with poisons. There have to be some severe penalties for those who completely disregard the health and lives of people, and that is why I am glad to see this amendment. The government has to accept this responsibility too.

This act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada or of a province and any agent thereof. I hope we have the legal authority to enact this for the provinces. I presume we have. This point was raised by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko). I assume that part of the work was done.

There must be a responsibility on governments, whether federal, provincial or municipal, when poisons are being distributed to ensure that they do the job for which they are intended and that they do not affect the lives of people. The methods used are important. Cognizance must be taken of the wind, the amount of moisture in the air and so on. Scientists and others trained in this area should set the criteria as to when, how and where these poisons are distributed.

About seven years ago an Alberta company, I would not say it did not care but it thoughtlessly allowed toxic materials to enter a stream. That stream passed through a farmer's land. He had a beautiful herd of cattle which drank from that stream. They took sick and he lost the entire herd. He did not know what was the matter. They had been healthy. You can admire a healthy animal. However, they became deathly sick and were dying before his eyes. He quickly got a vet who found that the water had been poisoned and that was why his animals were dying. It took two years to affix the responsibility on that oil company. The farmer was eventually paid for his herd. That really did not replace the herd because it was a beautiful herd. Again, it was carelessness, no responsibility for what poisons do. Our people must be trained to realize they are dealing with poisons. We go to great lengths to label our bottled poisons so that they are kept out of the reach of children, and properly so. We should be even more careful when spraying these poisons on our soil, grass, trees and in the air. Who knows what harm they can cause?

Many people will not eat fruit until it has been washed. When I was a youngster, I went to the bushes in the coulees in the canyon of the Red Deer river where I picked and ate the chokecherries and the saskatoons. I did not eat many gooseberries because I did not like them. I never thought anything of it. It was good fruit, beautiful fruit, excellent fruit, delicious fruit, but boy, I would not eat it today with the poisons being sprayed in our countryside. It is necessary to wash them before eating them. When we get fruit from Ontario, Nova Scotia or British Columbia, we wash it before eating because we do not know what pesticides or herbicides have been sprayed. There is a responsibility on the part of government.

I commend the government for now accepting responsibility for its actions and those of its agents. When I was in highways I did not allow the poisons to be thoughtlessly sprayed so that they would ruin the farmers' crops, destroying their livelihood. I had to take the responsibility for that. If I had permitted that to happen two or three times, someone would have said that I was not doing my job and that I had better get out. In fact, we had to let someone go who we thought was a responsible person, because the Crown must be responsible for the actions of its agents. The minister must take that responsibility. That is our way of government.

I would like to see an amendment to this bill to put some responsibility on the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). After all, he is trained to look into these matters. The environment is being affected. There are many ways of ruining the environment, ways probably that I have never even dreamed of.

I recall an occasion when we were building a bridge over a stream. Someone said to me that if we were not careful and did not put it at a certain height, it would stop the fish getting from the warm water to the cold water, and they had to get there. I do not know why they had to get there, but apparently they had to in order to stay alive. Therefore our engineers were instructed to ensure we would not kill the fish in that stream.

There are many ways in which the environment is affected. As the hon. member said a few moments ago, we need people who are trained. We must know all the answers before we start dealing with poisons which can affect the lives of this generation and future generations.

As I mentioned a few moments ago, it is pretty thoughtless—I do not believe anyone would do it deliberately—to allow these sprays to be spread in a schoolyard. That should never happen. I hope it never happens again. I am not going to make any amendments because I know it would be useless if they came from this side. I would like to see a member on the government side move an amendment placing some responsibility on the health minister and the environment minister.

I wish to point out one other sad fact. This is an important agriculture bill. Where is the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)? Maybe he has something important to do. This bill could affect the lives of human beings, animals and our soil, and the minister is not here to listen to the arguments. I hope he reads them in Hansard. I hope he sees the responsibility of the government, particularly with regard to the effects of tests on human beings and the environment to ensure that we leave for future generations clean air, water and soil.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on Bill C-45. Our party agrees this bill should pass. It makes the Pest Control Products Act binding on the provincial and federal governments and their agents. I understand all provinces agree with this. Therefore, it should be quickly implemented.

The recent exposure of the tests at the Industrial Bio-Test Laboratories where over 100 pesticides were improperly tested means that we must do our tests in Canada. While this bill does not provide for the testing to be done in Canada, that is the next major step the government must take.

We believe it is a very legitimate role for government to be testing dangerous chemicals, pesticides and herbicides. This is an area where the government should act quickly, and I hope it will.

Canadians should clearly understand the whole area of crop production and pest control. There is one undeniable fact in Canada, the United States and the world in general. Without pesticides and herbicides, Canada, the United States and indeed the world would not be self-sufficient in food production. Without pesticides we in Canada would be much less sufficient in food.

At present Canada is a major importer of the basic foods we consider essential for our table each day. That should not be the case because we have the agricultural skills in our farm people and a lot of land which could be put into agricultural production. Without pesticides we cannot feed the people of the world today. The spotless apple, Mr. Speaker, is a product of chemicals and of good farm management. The healthy beef, dairy animals, sheep and hogs are all the result of excellent farm management, good veterinarians and the case of chemicals. There is no doubt that in the past there have been major abuses. Many of those abuses have been committed by those of us who have been on the land. I can remember within my own life experience when chemicals were first starting to come into major use, during the late 1940s and 1950s, and how we as farmers were really very careless with them because we just did not know of their effects. The accumulated experience of danger had not yet built up. That experience is now built up and we find that, as a matter of fact, the farming community is much more careful in its handling and use of these chemicals.

There used to be a philosophy that a little was good, a lot was a whole lot better. That does not apply in the case of chemicals. It is often true that if the instructions say two ounces per acre, that is sufficient and it does an excellent job, whereas five or six ounces would build up a residue in the soil that can destroy future crops and can affect that very intricate microcosm of bacteria, fungi and single cell organisms that work in our soil. The improvement has come largely as a result of excellent research being done at our research stations and through our provincial associations and agrologists being imparted to the farms.

It is clear that in the future we will need more biological control of pests and of weeds other than the use of chemicals. We need to develop more resistant strains of crops and more specific chemicals that can be brought in under unique circumstances and used. The only way we can get to that point is by more research and development. If one needs evidence to find out that a dollar spent on research returns itself many times over, I will read from a report by the Agricultural Institute of Canada. On page 2 of that report it states as follows:

> The benefits accruing from agricultural research have been well documented. The safeguarding of wheat from the ravages of rust provided a benefit to cost ratio of 482:1; research leading to the reduction of fallow acreage in Manitoba provided a benefit to cost rates of 278:1 but the benefit should continue to accrue for decades ahead: a benefit to cost rates of 260:1 was estimated for R & D on chicken broilers; in Ontario input cost of $32 million for the improvement of corn provided additional returns of $2.6 billion or an investment return of 80:1.

One can see that for every dollar that is invested, the economy has $482 returned to it on rust research alone. Clearly we need to do more of that. I believe the government can be quite properly criticized for its lack of emphasis on agricultural research and development.

In 1970 the statistics showed that 3.7 per cent of the over-all federal budget was spent on agriculture. By 1979 that had dropped to 1.9 per cent spent on agriculture. Of the 1.9 per cent, only 11 per cent of that was for agricultural research and development. The result has been a deterioration of our agricultural research physical plant and the obsolescence of the equipment and the high technical equipment that is needed for proper research. We also find ourselves at the point where we have too few scientists.

I sat on a fiscal task force this past summer that was called "Fiscal Federalism in Canada". While we were in British Columbia, we heard evidence from Dr. Kenny who is the president of the University of Victoria. As to the need for researchers in Canada, the report states at Page 124:

> . . . It is clear that, if Canada is to achieve its goal of R & D expenditures . . . it will be necessary to increase substantially the . . . rate of production of highly qualified manpower . . . Canada needs an estimated additional 1,500 researchers by 1985 to meet the federal target of 1.5 per cent of GNP to be spent on R & D by the mid-1980s. Canada needs . . . 8,000 . . . foresters over the next decade, or twice the number now graduated in Canada. Canada needs . . . 740 Ph.D.s in agricultural science between 1980 and 1986, but . . . is only turning out 49 graduates per year . . . Canadian universities have about 300 openings for business professors and yet . . . 15 to 20 Ph.D.s will be graduated annually. This shortage . . . will prevent students from studying in Faculties of Commerce . . .

It is patently obvious, and everyone within the establishment of higher education is aware of it, that we have a crying need for our youth to be given the opportunity to become researchers. But they do not have that opportunity because we do not have the infrastructure en place in order to process them. The reason we do not have the infrastructure is that the government has chosen to put its research dollars in other types of programs, rather than in basic research, even when the rate of return is in the order of $480 for each dollar expended.

One of my colleagues has handed me a note stating that President Kenny is not the president of the University of Victoria but the president of the University of British Columbia. I make that correction in my comments.

From comments that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has made, it is clear that he appreciates the great need for research and development in Canada in agriculture. Unfortunately he is one person out of 36 in the cabinet who appreciates that need. I am certainly asking members on the opposite side—we will certainly back them up in this, as will the university system—that they put pressure on each and every cabinet minister to give high priority to dollars being used on research and development in this country. I hope that Canadians will put sustained pressure on all Members of Parliament to allocate money to research and development so that our youth can respond to the real challenge of choosing these research projects, thus bringing a tremendous economic return to our country.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my comments on Bill C-45 will be brief. I believe the points to be made have already been argued with some felicity by my colleagues on this side of the House.

We are debating an act to amend the Pest Control Products Act, Bill C-45. The explanatory note points out that the Pest Control Products Act is being amended so that regulations under it will be applicable to Her Majesty and any agencies of Her Majesty, thereby providing legal authority to control the use of pesticides by departments or agencies of the federal or provincial governments.

At present, Mr. Speaker, as other members have pointed out, the Pest Control Products Act is not legally binding on the federal government and on Crown corporations, nor is it legally binding on provincial governments and their agencies. In effect, what we are doing is broadening the force of the Pest Control Products Act such that it will apply to the provinces and to the federal government, not just to the private sector, I welcome the bill because I think that in many ways it will make the PCPA a more effective instrument of public policy.

I want to stress that we in Canada are blessed with a country that is rich in geography. We are unique in that we are bordered by three oceans. We have more geography in fact, than any other country, except one. While harsh, our climate is nevertheless able to provide us with a healthy quality of life. We derive from our land a standard of living which, because of mismanagement on the part of this government, is falling, but which is still high by practically any reasonable standard. From the beginning, the country has relied on its soil and on the richness of the land, and agriculture remains a major industry. In the Atlantic province, where I come from, it is the main industry.

As the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) pointed out, it behooves us to exercise good stewardship over the land and to manage it so that we can pass it on to future generations in as good shape as we ourselves received it. But the land is now in peril, partly as the result of pesticides.

Some of my colleagues in the House will know that prior to 1940, pesticides were rare in Canada and in the rest of the world. The few that existed were largely ineffective. There were crop losses and declines in productivity due to our inability to control pests. Crop yields were much lower than they are today. The development of pesticides and related products has greatly improved yields since then.

The rapid rate of development of pesticides came around 1945, when progress in chemistry provided effective pest control products. This helped immensely to increase crop productivity and to give us access to a wider range of foods than had hitherto been possible.

Pesticides are not only useful in the production of fruit and vegetables; they also serve to protect livestock from biting flies and other parasites. Development in that area has had an important effect on the development of better animal health and on enhanced meat and milk production. There are now something like 500 different pesticides on the market, whereas in 1940 there were probably only a few dozen. Each of these pesticides plays a distinct role and many are essential to food production. Although pesticides have played a large role in the success of agriculture, they have also caused disasters. A few of the problems that result from the use of pesticides have been resolved but many remain to be dealt with.

Science has allowed us to develop more and more chemicals—pesticides and others—but this progress has outstripped our capacity to manage those chemicals effectively in order to protect the environment against their adverse effects.

If we can do nothing else in this country except restore some of that imbalance, we will have gone a long way toward proper husbandry of our natural resources.

A major point that needs to be stressed is that we cannot continue to go on as we have done, relying on other countries for research and development in the pesticide area. A certain report has been in the public domain for a few years now, authored by Dr. T. H. B. Symons of Trent University. It is the Report of the Commission on Canadian Studies. In great detail the report shows the extent to which our country has indigenous and distinctive research needs which must be responded to by government, the universities and other bodies. In the past we have relied too much on the qualified personnel and scientific enterprise of other countries. We cannot continue to rely on foreign research, Mr. Speaker. Our needs are distinctive and in the context of pesticides, it must be acknowledged that many of our crops are distinctively Canadian. It seems to me that it is in our own environment that we must determine the safety of pesticides for the sake of man and his physical surroundings.

The extent to which we have fallen into the trap of over-reliance on foreign data has been well documented by speakers who preceded me. I shall not go into detail on that subject except to say that the United States Environmental Protection Agency and the Food and Drug Administration combined to audit something like 82 laboratories which were conducting research on pesticides in that country from 1977 to 1980. Of those 82, about 25 were found to have serious deficiencies in their work. Minor problems were found in the work done by all but two of the remaining laboratories. There is a report on the performance levels of the different laboratories and the problems found in each.

I will not quote from the report at any length other than to give one fairly typical example. It concerns the Harris Laboratory of Lincoln, Nebraska. The Environmental Protection Agency found that the record keeping there was poor and that scientific reports were missing. It found that rats used for experimental purposes that had been listed as dead were also listed in the same set of records as having been mated at the identical time. Rats were also listed as having died twice and tumours and other adverse effects appeared to have been under-reported, the EPA said.

I could give other similar examples but I will not except to make the point that we cannot continue to rely on such undependable data from other countries. We do not have control over it and so cannot be sure that it is reliable by scientific standards or that it is sufficiently relevant to our own circumstances to be useful.

The government has recently admitted that hundreds of scientific studies done outside Canada and upon which the government itself has relied have been found to be useless because of fraudulent and careless laboratory work. I think the point has been made: we must have a scientific research and development strategy on pesticides which is our own and which is tailored-made to our distinctive conditions, problems, and goals. That is not to say that we should shut our windows or our doors to the rest of the world. Science is international. We belong to an international community. We should draw on the expertise, resources and data resulting from the accomplishments of scientists throughout the world. However, while doing that, we should also exercise a healthy degree of skepticism, which is the hallmark of the scientific mind, to ensure that our own scientific house is in order.

In my concluding remarks I would like to suggest such a strategy, a scientific approach to pesticides and pesticide control which will meet the problems I have identified. The strategy will ensure that we in Canada are sufficiently on top of the subject to protect our own environment and the health of our people. The first recommendation is that we greatly strengthen the research capability of the country, especially in the university sector. We need more research of both a basic kind and a mission-oriented kind. We need to expand our base line of knowledge relating to pesticides.

Second, by research done outside government itself should be more carefully monitored. Again, we must not rely exclusively on government research, but should also draw on research outside government. Still, we must ensure that research beyond the direct control of the government is done by people using the highest scientific standards.

Third, I think we must rely less than we now do on scientific study done outside the country, as I have suggested. To buttress our own resources and capability in this area, we should look very carefully at providing tax incentives and write-offs for industrial research and development.

Fourth, I think we should substantially strengthen our capacity to list pesticides which are already in use and to test these pesticides which are being proposed for entry into the market. Testing should be done prior to their entry, and not afterwards. Pesticides later identified to be troublesome, dangerous or environmentally harmful should be immediately pulled from use. We should not wait, as this government has done too often, until long after other countries have already abolished pesticides before we do as well. We should identify those pesticides which are harmful and immediately ban them from the marketplace.

Fifth, we should step up our public information capacity. We should get more information out to the users of pesticides, particularly in the farm community. They need to know an awful lot more than they now do about what particular pesticides they should use and should not use, and how pesticides can be used safely. The object should be to minimize inherent dangers in the use of pesticides. Pesticides will never be 100 per cent safe, but we should ensure, through public information and other avenues, that we maximize the benefits of pesticides and minimize their disadvantages.

May I conclude by lending my own support and, I think, the support of the Progressive Conservative Party for Bill C-45. I speak in favour of the bill in my capacity as the environment spokesman for the party. I am not quite sure why it was brought up to the top of the agenda at this time. Nevertheless, I welcome the fact that the government has given it that degree of priority. My hope is that the government will increase its consultations with the provinces to ensure that they are at one with Ottawa on the provisions of the bill. My party welcomes the fact that the legislation is being debated today. For my part, I urge all hon. members to give it speedy passage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe there has been an agreement outside of the House that this bill should be dealt with in all stages today. Accordingly, we should go into Committee of the Whole, rather than sending the bill to the standing committee. Therefore, I so move.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Fox on behalf of Mr. Whelan, seconded by Mr. Joyal, moved:

That Bill C-45, an act to amend the Pest Control Products Act be now read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Francis in the chair.

Mr. Deans: I have a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if Your Honour might identify exactly who will answer on behalf of the minister in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Nielsen: Good question!

The Chairman: The motion was moved by Mr. Fox, on behalf of Mr. Whelan, seconded by Mr. Joyal.

Mr. Kempling: It can't work.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Further to that inquiry, I am just wondering whether we can proceed as agreed in the absence of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), because, after all, it was he who introduced the bill. He is not here. There is not anyone who can reply.

Mr. Nielsen: Good point.

The Chairman: By unanimous consent, we are now in committee of the whole.

An hon. Member: There's the minister!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: There is the biggest pest of all!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No control over that pest!

Mr. Kempling: The original boll weevil!

The Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Act binding on Her Majesty

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Chairman, I would like to place a few questions before the minister concerning the amendment we are considering today. My first question concerns the testing of new pesticides and herbicides. Is the minister aware that the testing procedures not only of the IBT labs, but also those of other labs, are questionable? Is his department looking into any products which have been registered, based on the results of these other labs? Is his department looking into those results as well?

I also question the necessity of this amendment. What are the incidents in which Crown corporations and other agencies of provincial government have used chemicals which have not been registered in Canada? Could he tell us when these incidents took place? Can he identify the Crown corporations or provincial authorities which have used chemicals which were not properly registered in Canada? I think it would be useful for the House to know where and when these products were used and the types of product used.

In the minister's speech introducing the bill he mentioned the good work of his department in trying to develop other forms of biological pest and weed control. I wonder as well if he could enumerate these projects and perhaps give us an indication of the dollar amounts involved when he stands up to answer. My understanding is that roughly only $500,000 is expended for testing non-chemical forms of weed and pest control.

I would also like to ask the minister a question concerning correspondence between his department and the Department of National Health and Welfare, particularly concerning a letter which was sent to his department on July 16, 1980, by the Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare. The deputy minister made the request that the Department of National Health and Welfare be specifically mentioned in the Pest Control Products Act, and that if the Department of Agriculture were to introduce any new amendments, serious consideration should be given to specifically mentioning the Department of National Health and Welfare. Her request is as follows:

That is, groups outside the Federal government do not see an active role within the present act for the Department of National Health and Welfare. Perhaps such a misunderstanding could be eliminated if this department was named in the act at some time in the future, when Agriculture Canada presents to cabinet proposed changes to the Pest Control Products Act. Such an action would place more emphasis on the health aspects of pesticides—

What was the response of his department to that request from the Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare? Why was the Department of National Health and Welfare not listed as one of the responsible departments under the Pest Control Products Act? I made a suggestion in my speech to the minister, a suggestion that I have made to him in committee and on the floor of the House, that he seriously consider supporting the motion of a parliamentary inquiry into the whole chemical area so that all members of the House can take an in depth look at what is occurring and what possible alternatives there could be, such questions as the contamination of the environment, conceivable health defects to both users and consumers of agricultural products. I would like to hear the minister respond to the motion of a parliamentary inquiry being set up to look into all of the implications and questions concerning chemical uses in agriculture.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the time to go over all the questions which the hon. member asked. I do not have all of the information with me. As I outlined when we presented the bill, it was a very simple one, and not that detailed. I outlined why the amendments were needed. I can get evidence for the hon. member if he wants it, and submit it to him as to why we wanted one body on which the provinces could depend; also, if I am aware of other groups that carried out testing that was not legitimate. Even with the control of expenditures in our department that is why spent several million dollars on new equipment of our own. We feel we can do a legitimate job of testing, but it is going to take some time. If we can find the people, and I do know there are some, we can farm out some of this work to them and that is what we will be doing. However, we think that every chemical should be constantly brought up to standard by double checking to make sure that the proper ingredients are there.

The hon. member talks about biological control. I do not know whether the hon. member has visited the station that is situated in the city of Regina, but it is doing some amazing work. When you talk to people there and hear what they are projecting for the next two to five years, you find they feel they are well on their way to controlling many pests on which he used pesticides. They are even making sure that some of the insects chewing up the bad weeds do not get out of control and are safe. All those tests have to be gone through.

Maybe we are not spending as much money, but we are signing agreements with other countries and having an exchange of scientists who do that kind of work. The most recent is with the U.S.S.R. Some people may scoff at that. When we were there we visited their orchards. We know they are doing good work. If we can find out one new way from them or vice versa and perhaps put them together, it could mean a tremendous saving for both our countries in terms of the environment etc. We will all benefit and it will be a less costly way to produce products. I am optimistic about what we are doing. We have sent one of the scientists from the Regina station to Australia for a year to learn new methods from them.

Concerning health and welfare being named in the legislation, all I can say on that is that the Minister for National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and myself are both members of the cabinet committee which goes over the legislation before it is put before cabinet and presented to the House. We both agreed that it was not necessary in this legislation at this time.

To support the hon. member's suggestions on an independent committee, I am sure the hon. member is aware that we have an independent committee now headed by Dr. McGugan, who picked his own members to study Captan. We made suggestions to him about who should serve on the committee, but he would not take the chairmanship of the committee under those terms, so I allowed him to choose his own members, people he thought were qualified to bring in an independent report. If that report is as he says it will be, an independent, thorough report, then we hope to be able to give him more work of that kind, if he will do it for us. There are other people in a similar capacity to Dr. McGugan who can do that sort of thing for us. We will abide by their findings. As far as I am concerned, they are highly qualified people. They come from universities and from the sector that is best qualified. I believe that is all I can say, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I have two questions for the minister. The bill binds provincial governments. Have all provincial governments agreed on that or are the provinces being bound unilaterally?

Second, we have the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). He is trained to deal with the environment. His responsibility is to make sure that we leave a good environment for our children. Why does this bill not involve the Minister of the Environment?

The Chairman: I see hon. members rising, and the Chair has an eye on the clock. Perhaps other hon. members may be recognized and then the Minister of Agriculture can speak.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, my question very closely parallels that of the hon. member for Bow River. I am puzzled that the Minister of the Environment is not here. In his absence, one could be forgiven for wondering whether the Minister of the Environment has been consulted about this bill. Has he had any input? Does he agree with it? Why is he not here?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, my question relates to the fumigation of the golden nematode. I am sure the minister is aware that fumigation has taken place and that it has not been effective. Could the minister, perhaps not today but by correspondence, give me some indication of what plans there are to make sure that those golden nematodes, which are causing such damage in the Saanich peninsula, can be eliminated?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I have one question. Would I be correct in assuming that, if this bill is passed into law, the Pest Control Products Act would then be binding upon the Department of National Defence with respect to defoliants used for military use? If that is indeed the case, what consultation has taken place on this matter between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I will make this as short as possible. The bill, I understand, is by agreement with the provinces. They want the over-all kind of legislation for all producers. I understand that has been taken care of. As far as the questions concerning the Minister of the Environment is concerned, I want to say that he has certainly been very much involved. We had a very close working relationship with his department and with the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Concerning the question of the golden nemathodes, I can give the hon. member that kind of information. What we have tried to do has been very costly. In essence, what we are going to do is to ban the growing of potatoes there and work out some kind of a compensation program for the farmers in that area.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, perhaps hon. members might find a disposition not to see the clock until third reading has been completed.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, did the minister answer the part about the provinces and the provincial governments?

Mr. Whelan: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We have an understanding with the provinces. The hon. member asked about the military. We still work very closely with them in recommending any of the products. In case of war though I do not know whether we would have any authority for them at all.

The Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall I rise and report the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported.

• (1600)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time; by unanimous consent now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Whelan moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the House will now revert to statements by ministers.

THE BUDGET

MODIFICATIONS TO MEASURES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the budget on November 12 I addressed the main obstacles to sustained economic growth, which are inflation and high interest rates. Through a strategy of deficit reduction, the budget combats inflation and reduces upward pressure on interest rates. It is a strategy for creating permanent jobs and growth, not just for this month and next month, but for next year and the years after that. I am convinced it is the right strategy and the one we must continue to follow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Within the framework of that strategy the question was not whether to raise additional tax revenues, but how. Should I raise tax rates, or should I focus on broadening the tax base? Should I increase the load on those already carrying it, or should I spread the burden more evenly? I chose to spread the burden more evenly. I designed a tax package which reduced tax expenditures. These benefits in the tax system reduced taxes for some, but they inevitably had to be financed by taxes on those who did not or could not benefit from such incentives. At the same time I proposed a reduction in tax rates for many Canadians. This meant that I was able to carry on the fight against inflation without increasing taxes for the vast majority of Canadians.

In my view it is the tax package that will improve the basic fairness of the tax system and ensure that tax preferences are more carefully targeted to economic objectives. Those are the fundamental principles of the tax measures and I have no intention of altering those principles; not today or at any time during the consideration of the necessary legislation.

Yet, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —tax changes are rarely popular when new revenue must be raised. The groups and individuals who experience tax increases naturally seek relief. That is part of the inevitable dynamics of the post-budget period. The government then must continue to ensure that the common interest of all Canadians is preserved while legitimate particular interests are taken into account.

Over the past few weeks I have received many representations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: That, Mr. Speaker, is probably the understatement of 1981.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I have listened carefully, and I must say I am grateful to those who have made responsible submissions. The dialogue I have conducted with many delegations and with many citizens has given me an opportunity to explain the budget and to remove many misunderstandings. Even the most concerned groups have found that the budget is far more beneficial to them than the rhetoric of some spokesmen has indicated. I believe, for example, that the impact of the tax measures on investment is becoming better understood. Many of the tax preferences—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is why we are here today.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, many of the tax preferences which the budget eliminated were inducing people to invest in relatively safe shelters at the expense of investments in shares of Canadian corporations and other risk ventures. I also believe that investors are becoming more aware of the very positive impact on investment of the cuts in tax rates and the strategy of reducing inflation and interest rates.

The other positive consequence of the intensive dialogue over the past few weeks is that I have received several useful suggestions for improvements within the main framework. I must say that I am particularly thankful for the advice and support I have received from my friends in the Liberal caucus—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —and from supporters of the government throughout the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: All two of them.

Mr. MacEachen: As you have noticed, Mr. Speaker, there have been no defections from this caucus.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: After a careful analysis of the representations, I have come to several conclusions.

First, there are a number of cases where taxpayers had completed or nearly completed financial undertakings before the budget and should be allowed to receive the tax treatment which existed before the budget.

Second, there are some areas where a transitional period is justified to allow individuals and businesses to adapt their affairs to the new tax rules.

Third, there are a number of measures which can be redesigned to bring them more closely in line with the over-all objectives of the tax package.

I am tabling today a document which describes the tax treatment which is to be accorded to arrangements completed or nearly completed before November 13. These changes affect, for example, the calculation of capital cost allowance, purchases of income-averaging annuity contracts, interest on non-resident loans, soft costs on real estate investments and reserves for property disposition. The document also lists measures for which there will be a transitional period. In particular, the provisions relating to professional work in progress and interest-free housing loans will be phased in over a three-year period.

Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at the reaction of the opposition who have been asking for adjustments for more than four weeks—

An hon. Member: You finally woke up.

Mr. MacEachen: —for changes to the measures that were tabled. Today they seem to find those adjustments objectionable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I am proposing a one-year delay in measures relating to corporate organizations to allow for a thorough discussion prior to their implementation. Individuals who are members of an employee pension plan will be permitted to transfer retiring allowances to an RRSP of up to $2,000 for each year of service. That will help low and middle-income Canadians who are members of pension plans and who receive severance pay in order to supplement their pension income. The reserve provision in the budget is being redesigned to accommodate genuine business circumstances while still limiting unwarranted deferrals of tax. An extended reserve period of ten years will be permitted in the case of inter-generation transfers of farm property and small business assets.

Mr. Clark: The budget is gutted.

Mr. MacEachen: To further assist farmers and small businesses, the 6 per cent threshold for small business bonds will be removed. This will permit a 3 per cent reduction in interest charges on such bonds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Resign.

Mr. MacEachen: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am redesigning the restriction on the deductibility of interest expense in order to increase the incentive for Canadians to acquire shares of Canadian corporations. They will now be able to offset against non-investment income up to $10,000 of interest expense on loans to purchase shares of Canadian corporations. Interest expense incurred by significant shareholders of private corporations to acquire shares of such corporations will be excluded from the definition of the restricted interest expense.

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. MacEachen: The same treatment will apply to interest expense incurred by employees of such corporations up to the limit of their remuneration from the corporation.

There will also be a transitional provision so that taxpayers will be able to offset the restricted interest expense against up to two thirds of their total income in 1982 and one third in 1983.

Mr. Epp: Why don't you resign?

An hon. Member: You should be fired for fraud.

Mr. MacEachen: In addition to what I have said, Mr. Speaker, given appropriate parliamentary arrangements, I am prepared to consider referring several matters to a parliamentary committee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: What were you saying about Jerusalem?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not been saying anything—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: You don't dare say anything.

Mr. MacEachen: I have not said anything about Jerusalem, but I have not decided yet to move the budget to Jerusalem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: It is nothing you could stand behind anyway.

Mr. Nielsen: Just move it out.

An hon. Member: You have moved everything else.

Mr. MacEachen: These matters include rules relating to corporate reorganization, taxation of whole life insurance—

Some hon. Members: Two.

Mr. MacEachen: —charitable foundations—

Some hon. Members: Three.

Mr. MacEachen: —retirement allowances—

Some hon. Members: Four.

Mr. MacEachen: —and work-in-progress.

Some hon. Members: Five.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, these decisions are the result of what I consider to be a valuable process of consultation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Try another one, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: They respond as well to legitimate concerns that have been raised by many citizens and delegations—

Mr. Epp: Thousands.

Mr. MacEachen: —who have visited me since November 13.

Mr. Clark: If they could find you. If they were in Scotland.

Mr. MacEachen: There will be ample opportunity for Parliament to examine all budget measures when legislation is under consideration. Finally, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that as Canadians focus more on the main thrust of the tax measures, the benefits of a fairer tax system and more effective incentives will be clear. I am also confident that the strategy of reducing inflation and interest rates will prove to be the surest and most direct route to create more permanent jobs and stronger growth in the Canadian economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You are going to be shuffled.

An hon. Member: So long.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, Christmas is coming close and I think we have seen for the first time ever that a minister of finance will be eating crow at Christmas instead of turkey.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: The minister has chosen today to make this announcement. It is the last hour of the last day of this session, just before Christmas, when the galleries are empty—fortunately, there is a few of the media here—but he has chosen today in order to hide his own embarrassment.

Let us not be too speedy about this. This is another MacEachen trick, another trick by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) similar to what I referred to on the night of November 12. It is another step, a giant step, toward the complete and total abandonment of this budget.

If this minister were honest, he could end all the speculation about what other changes will be made and admit that this amounts to a total withdrawal of his November 12 budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Anyone who pretends that these are minor or technical changes, would argue that the budget is a major shift in the direction that the country is going, and that this has not done enough to change that direction.

The minister has abandoned his own budget. This should be the end of the budget and the end of the minister. Today the minister should offer his resignation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the performance this afternoon has done great things for Edgar Benson and Walter Gordon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: We are not looking at a few inconsequential changes in this budget. We have already had changes in the MURBs prior to today and we have had changes in the merger provisions. We now have 17 changes in a document that is longer than the minister's budget speech itself.

It is not just an embarrassment for the minister, it is not just an embarrassment for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the government or the Liberal Party, it is a major blunder and, if I may say so, it is a major setback to the minister's own ambitions toward switching one seat over.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: Let us study this budget in the context of last year's budget as well. There were many warnings at the time of last year's budget about the impact it would have on the oil and gas industry and the energy future of this country. That was borne out by the fact of so many rigs leaving the country, the impact on employment in the very valuable oil service industry sector of the province of Alberta. That was followed by major changes last summer. These changes did not set the matter straight, but did do something toward changing the disaster which had been visited upon that industry.

The blame then was shared with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) but let us not forget that it was the budget of this minister. This year, the budget is all his responsibility. We have had the same result, same disruption and same drop in confidence. This year, the impact is much broader.

The minister himself referred to the mammoth amount of criticism which has come into his office. It has also come into my office. I receive copies of many letters, and I am just astounded by the amount of mail which has come in over this past month as a result of the budget. The minister did not have the common sense to test the effect of his budget on many factors, many people and the many companies which would be affected. The transitional impact has been devastating. The impact on transactions which were already in place was devastating. The minister has had to step back from many of the proposed changes, and he has done this in many of the changes proposed here today. He was too lazy to consider the impact of certain parts of the budget on people and companies in the country. Just to underline that point let me refer to a letter given to me by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). The letter says that on November 27 the minister promised a study dealing with indirect taxes and their impact on senior citizens. Just today he responded to the hon. member for Calgary West saying that still no study has been done on the impact on those people in our country. I see the Prime Minister is leaving. I suppose this is too much for him. The embarrassment is too much for the Prime Minister.

The budget itself displayed an incredible lack of understanding of the tax system of the country, the budget's impact on business and its effect on capital formation. The minister should resign because of incompetence and incompetence alone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, let me refer you to Standing Order 35, which says:

No member may reflect upon any vote of the House, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

I believe that the extent of these changes is sufficient to draw into question the vote taken in the House on the budget. I noted that the minister did not move that that vote be rescinded, and I ask Your Honour to put that question to the minister, because 17 items have been changed by this statement today. More than 17 resolutions are affected. These have all been voted upon in the House. They are now subject to change. Major revisions to the budget are necessary. In addition, in the statement he has just read, the minister has said he is considering referring several other matters to committee. Some of these matters are corporate organizations, charitable foundations, taxation of life insurance and work in progress. I contend that this constitutes a major substantive revision to the budget and is thereby a reflection on a vote already taken in the House on the budget. Therefore, it falls squarely within the purview of Standing Order 35. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the minister should move that that vote be rescinded.

The minister should also resign because he has departed from a very sound principle of introducing tax changes of this magnitude not by way of a white paper but through the budget. This was a major fault of the budget. It is something which should have been done differently. It should have been done in the way it has been done in the past, which is the fair and democratic way of doing it.

This budget introduces fundamental changes to the incentives system, to the investment system and to the nature of capital formation. As a result, there are significant changes in the way people will conduct their business activities, and the minister has the audacity to call those incentives he has changed loopholes and to make those people who took advantage of those incentives offered to them by previous governments to feel dirty. That is the deceit of that budget of November 12, and that has not changed as a result of the statement today. The minister should have used a white paper. I think he knows it. I think he understands that now because of the fact that he is proposing to introduce five items of the budget to a parliamentary committee, but I suggest to him that he should withdraw those completely from the budget, present them in a white paper and then let us have a look at them in committee.

The budget was not just to hit the rich. It affects three quarters of Canadians through dental care and health care programs and through employee benefit programs. If affects farmers, small businessmen, high technology companies and small oil, gas, and mining companies. These are not big companies. These are small and medium-sized companies. The big companies are not affected by this budget. It hardly touches them at all. Smaller companies, Canadian-owned companies and individuals are directly affected by this budget. That is why the minister's approach is wrong. This backtracking today is not good enough. It is not good enough to bring this in at four o'clock on the last day of sitting before Christmas.

Let us look at the substantive nature of these changes. There are some improvements; I have to agree with the minister when he says that. He has taken a step in the right direction. He has listened, but how could he help but listen? Some of the major deficiencies in this budget remain, and we will be attacking them further when we get back to the Committee of the Whole on the ways and means motions. We will also be hearing representations from Canadians from across the country on the nature of the impact of the budget through a Progressive Conservative special committee on the budget which will be sitting during the Christmas recess.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: What we have here today is a series of 17 changes. On the question of reserves, the minister recognizes that, in his words, there is hardship and disruption as a result of the changes. Pre-budget there was unlimited provision for reserves. Under the proposal set out today, they are limited to three years. That is insufficient for farmers and other businessmen who are selling assets they have nurtured all their lives and assets which are to be their pension funds and their source of income during their retirement.

With respect to capital cost allowances, the minister again has noted the impact of the budget as being disruptive and needing an orderly transition, but there is no change which will affect transactions entered into after November 12. For those transactions which are short term in nature, there will be no relief as a result of today's statement, and for the minister to compound the problems he created on November 12 when he cut the capital cost allowance in half when he knows that now the recession is deeper than it was and deeper than he knew on November 12, I say is criminal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has a problem at this point in connection with Standing Order 15(3), which provides:

On Statements by Ministers . . . a Minister of the Crown may make a short factual announcement or statement of government policy. A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly thereon—

The original statement lasted 13 minutes.

Mr. Nielsen: Eighteen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The original statement by the minister lasted 13 minutes.

Mr. Nielsen: Eighteen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am going by the record handed to me by the Clerks at the Table, and I invite the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) to make note of this. The Chair is in the hands of the House, but the usual practice is that the length of statements by leaders of the opposition should not exceed the length of the original statement.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order raised by the Chair. Never in my time here have we ever embarked upon such an unusual procedure as a minister of finance swallowing himself to the extent this one has. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) has spoken only eight minutes.

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is guided by the rules of the House. Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre to continue?

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order raised by the Chair to which I have the right to speak—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Certainly.

Mr. Nielsen: There can be no question that what we are embarked on here is a highly unusual procedure which I have never seen in my experience here. We need to have adequate time to respond, as does the spokesman for the New Democratic Party. If there is any question about that at all, I will move a motion now just to see what the attitude of the government is going to be to hearing out members on this side with regard to the highly unusual statement by a minister who has swallowed himself so completely that he should resign. Therefore, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 6(5)(a), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House shall continue its sitting this day until it has finished the procedure on the statement on motions by the Minister of Finance.

I do that to provide adequate opportunity for our spokesman, adequate opportunity for the spokesman for the New Democratic Party and adequate opportunity for all members who wish to question the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has moved a motion according to the provisions of Standing Order 6(5)(a). According to the Standing Orders, this motion is not subject to debate or amendment. I shall now ask those who object to the motion to rise in their places.

And more than ten members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the provisions of Standing Order 6(5)(b), "If ten or more members then rise, the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn."

Motion withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I draw to the attention of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre the problem of the expiration of his time.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I do not think we wanted to engage in a discussion of allocation of time. I hope the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) will recognize that the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) would like to make his comments.

Mr. Wilson: I only require another two or three minutes to complete my remarks, if I could have the indulgence of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre be given an additional three minutes to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank hon. members for their courtesy. I was just discussing some of the substantive changes that are referred to in the statement by the minister.

The next one I would like to refer to is the change in soft costs. We have already seen the disruption in MURBs. That was brought to the attention of the House by my colleague from Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). I should point out to the House that the changes that are referred to in this statement are only transitional in nature. The loss of the reserves plus the changes in the capital cost allowance, plus the change in the capital gains reserves are sufficient to result in a significant decline in the housing activity in this country, and this, at a time when we are having a housing crisis, is totally wrong.

The minister referred to the changes in interest deductibility. The minister must realize that $10,000 exemption will not be sufficient for many small businesses to finance themselves at a time when we have 20 per cent interest rates. That represents a loan of about $50,000. The minister is saying that that interest deductibility change was not to affect the small businessman, but I draw to his attention the fact that many individuals finance small businesses with loans on their own credit. They are reinvested in small business.

The Small Business Development Bond still remains the small business bail-out bond. The removal of the 6 per cent threshold is sensible, but it is not a development bond. It is a bail-out bond. The money is still not available for companies to expand and grow to develop this country. It is still a bail-out bond.

The changes under the heading of reorganization which extend these terms until 1983 still do not address the problem of the reorganization changes to small businesses, to high technology companies, oil and gas companies and so on. It does not do anything to the big companies. The big companies will not be affected, just the smaller companies.

Let me just wind up. The minister referred to five items that will be referred to a standing committee of this House. That is another indication of a total withdrawal of the budget. This budget is a disaster. It is a failure by the Minister of Finance to address the problems of the country, concerns that were stated by many Canadians this past month. It is a continued attack on the free enterprise system in this country, on the average Canadian and on the small business community. It still reflects a lack of understanding by this minister and his officials on the impact of the budget on many Canadians. It should be withdrawn and the new budget that we see in the House should be brought in by a new minister of finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, if one thing is clear in all the discussion of conversions on the road to Damascus and the fact that the minister is not moving anything to Jerusalem, this is one budget that is certainly not engraved in tablets of stone. In fact, the minister should have had it written on a blackboard with pieces of chalk so he could make the kinds of changes he has made.

Unlike the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), I do not intend to focus on the extent to which the minister has retreated. The minister has responded to many of the criticisms that have been made in the country. The principle of being able to respond to changes and to demonstrate some flexibility is not something to which I object or to which those in this party object. Let me make it clear. We had a task force led by my colleague, the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). We made representations to the government.

I want to make it clear to the minister that he operates on the principle of reacting to public demonstrations such as the one of over 100,000 Canadians which took place on Parliament Hill in response to the government's over-all policy and the fact that the minister has made a statement. I do not care when he makes it. He could make it here in the House of Commons at two o'clock in the morning, and we would be here to congratulate the minister on the fact he has responded. What is a problem, however, is the fact that the minister responded to those with the loudest voices. He has not responded with one particular exception. The question of transition is an arrangement that has to be made for those people to meet various business arrangements. If you overlook the question of what has been referred to committee, and there are some major items such as corporate reorganization, when you come right down to it, there have been five changes of any importance. Only one change can be really said to benefit the average worker or, in this case, the average retiring, fired or laid-off Canadian. That has to do with the changes which the minister announced for retirement allowances.

I want to indicate to the minister, as he will know since we have made representations in this particular regard from the beginning of the budget, that we welcome the fact that the minister has moved on retirement allowances. I think it is a tribute to those many Canadians who have written to the minister and to the many trade unions that have made representations. I pay tribute to that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: When one looks at what else the minister has done and one asks what are the major problems facing the Canadian economy, who has the minister responded to? He has responded to those interests, to those people who can make the most powerful claim, but he has not responded to those who are not in the position to make the same kind of technical and powerful claim on the minister's conscience.

The basic problem facing the Canadian economy at the present time is that we are in a recession and that we had a budget on November 12 which was designed to cool out a boom. The minister, his advisers and the Bank of Canada are bringing in policies which have been rejected even by the Economic Council of Canada itself.

I just want to give one example to the minister to demonstrate the hypocrisy, the uneven standard that the minister has applied. If he looks on page 15 of his statement which deals with the problem of employer housing loans which were deemed to be a taxable benefit and to which an imputed rate of interest would be applied, we are now told it will be phased in over two years. Let me make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that I do not particularly object to the principle of the phase-in. I want just to read to the minister one sentence which I think indicates the standard which the government applies in some cases but not in others. It says, "It is proposed that this change be phased in for existing housing loans to allow employers time to work out remuneration arrangements for their employees who are affected by this measure." Mr. Speaker, what about the medical and dental plans? Is the minister seriously arguing that they do not affect the remuneration arrangements of literally hundreds of thousands of employees in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: Is the minister arguing that they are somehow less important than those people who are the employees of banks and other large corporations, managerial employees who are receiving those benefits? There is one difference between people who are receiving employer housing loans and people who are receiving medical and dental plans under collective agreements. One group are managers and the other group are workers. That is the only difference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: If we ever needed an indication from this government that it is a government that responds to managers—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You put them in.

Mr. Rae: I say to the member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) that the people of Canada voted them in and the people of Canada voted the Tories out. Do not forget that either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: I hear the minister in the House every day talking about the importance of providing equity, the importance of seeing that employees are treated equally. Where is the equity? Even in the retreat there is a double standard and even in the retreat there is something special worked out for people who are managerial employees. No similar arrangements are worked out for people who are living with collective agreements that cannot be changed, collective agreements that cannot be affected, because the minister has said that the only kind of changes that he is responding to, in effect, are the changes requested by people with the loudest voices, those who work for the banks and others who will benefit, and no one else.

When the budget came out, I said that the minister proved himself to be a very poor fisherman, that he has cast his net upon the waters, that he has managed to avoid fishing through the Grand Banks, taking the benefits that could be gained by going after those who are really powerful and by casting a net which has the miraculous ability of only catching the small fish.

I wish I could say, Mr. Speaker, that in the changes the minister has announced today he has improved in his qualities as a fisherman, that he had improved in dealing with the real problems facing the Canadian economy. The basic difficulty of the budget was that it did not deal with the fact that we are in a recession, that it provided no stimulus, that the fairness in it was not real and there was no basic stimulus to investment, growth and to jobs in the Canadian economy. I am sorry to say that in the transitional and other announcements that have been made today by the minister, embarrassing as they are personally to him as much as they show a general lack of understanding and a real sense of ineptitude and uncertainty in decision-making in government, they do not get to the core of the economic difficulties facing the country.

Unlike those who would object to the fact that the minister is forced to make a retreat, we do not object to the retreat. We are glad, in fact happy, to be part of a process which has forced the minister to make a retreat. Our sadness is that in making the retreat the government has, once again, demonstrated that it is truly incapable of understanding the human impact of unemployment, high interest rates and inflation. It has instead chosen to make a series of technical changes which, while they will be beneficial in some respects to certain groups—and we certainly do not begrudge those changes, Mr. Speaker—will not get at the basic and real problem facing the economy, that is to say the fact that we live in an economy in a state of crisis and we live with an economic policy which is one of tremendous unfairness.

I want to put the minister on notice that we will continue to fight the budget, not on technical or narrow grounds, but on the grounds that it fails to address the fundamental problems facing the people of Canada. We will continue to oppose that budget precisely for that reason.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have one question for the minister. Will the minister tell the House and the country, or give us an idea in dollar terms, millions or billions—whatever it might be—of the loss in the 1982-1983 revenue consequent on the 17 amendments in the five referrals to committee that he has just made in his retreat from the chilly winds of popular opinion, from the budget proposals he tabled on November 12, as well as, in percentage terms, the percentage that this amount represents of the total revenue he was hoping to collect under those earlier proposals, from which he has now so desperately retreated?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair calls the attention of hon. members to the fact that they need to keep questions short.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member is quite relevant because citizens and others will be wondering whether the changes that have been made will damage or derange the fiscal framework. I will tell him that over the five-year period, for which I made my projections, the preliminary estimate I have is that the loss of revenue on the average would be about $150 million per year, as against the objective of the new taxes which was to raise $1.2 billion on average per year.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Despite the rhetoric from the member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), the minister will know that it was the Progressive Conservative Party that questioned him on the taxation of medical and dental plans. Is the minister still planning to tax union and non-union workers for medical and dental plans, or does he have plans to change too?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) may have the floor, briefly. It is not normal for the same member to speak again for the party, but in view of the fact that he is keeping it short—

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, do you recognize me to ask a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Rae: My question for the minister concerns IAACs. I know that the only change the minister has introduced was of a transitional nature rather than a fundamental nature, this morning and later, in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) about forward averaging. Could the minister tell us if he is prepared to table for the benefit of the House the figures which will show the comparative effects of IAACs and forward averaging? It would be useful if the House could have the benefit of the information which the minister seems to have given to a number of groups so that we can realize in money terms what the comparative advantages and disadvantages are. Our impressions, from talking with a number of farm organizations, are very much the opposite—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made a comment. At this stage he can ask a short question. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think the question asked by the hon. member is very relevant. Not until one looks at the comparative figures is it possible to draw a conclusion about the advantages or disadvantages of one system over another. Based upon that analysis, it is my view that in general the forward-averaging system is likely to provide more flexibility to farmers and others. As I stated earlier, Canadian cattlemen reached that conclusion after discussions with us in Oshawa.

With respect to the detailed analysis, I am sending comparative statistics on the impact of both systems upon farmers and others to members' offices. I am quite concerned that the new system should not disadvantage the farming population which in certain circumstances have come accustomed to the use of income-averaging annuity contracts.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): I am concerned about the social impact of this budget and the things that are not changed. There is no change in the relation to increased health care costs, the hidden taxes that still effect the poor and lower-income Canadians in a devastating way, and there is on the income tax side and on the capital gains side an attack on the institution of marriage or a reward for the dissolution of marriage. I am also interested in the issue of charitable donations when it costs rich people half as much to donate to their church or charitable organization as it does poor people. The rich get $100 back on a $200 donation but poor people get nothing or maybe $12 back.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is not permitted to make a statement at this point but he may ask a question.

Mr. Hawkes: I wonder if the issue is closed or if members of the House can further petition the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to bring some social equity for poorer and lower-income Canadians back to the budget. Is that a foregone conclusion—we cannot do it or will we have the opportunity—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member should ask his question.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, of course, I disagree with the conclusions of the hon. member. It is my belief that the additional tax burden that has undoubtedly been placed upon citizens of Canada as the result of this budget, rests mainly upon the shoulders of those in higher-income groups and that in general, lower and middle-income Canadians are better off as the result of the budget. That is my belief and it is demonstrated in the tax tables that have been made available to hon. members.

With respect to the hon. member's reference to charitable organizations, it is true that certain proposals have been made in the budget with the objective of facilitating the disbursement of funds which are intended to be used for charitable purposes. Questions have been raised and I have agreed, if the House can make the arrangements, to have that question as well as a number of other issues studied by a standing committee. If hon. members have a better view, then I will be glad to consider it.

I find it rather strange that hon. members now have protested so violently against adjustments and proposals which I have made in response to citizens' representations, in response to representations from the Liberal caucus and in response to representations from the other side. What is democracy all about?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to fiscal relations in the country. He will know that his budget provided for a cut of $5.7 billion in transfers to the provinces. As a result of closing what he called loopholes or investment credits, the provinces would have increased revenue of some $3.6 billion over the five-year period for a net loss of $3.1 billion. He has obviously reopened the investment credits and that will reduce provincial income tax. Is he going to take that into consideration when he is negotiating with the provinces?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if the provinces begin to acknowledge the benefits that flow to them from the tax changes, then of course it will be an encouragement for me to consider that question. Even though I made a determined effort in the budget to flow additional benefits to the provinces through tax changes, up to the present time they have not been ready to acknowledge that as an important factor in the over-all benefits to the provinces. I think I must get the acknowledgement before I begin to readjust the payments.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Unlike the Conservative Party, we have already finished our economic tour of the country, and have heard from employers and employees. Workers who work in northern areas have traditionally received some subidy for the higher cost of living and for food in these northern areas. I wonder if the minister is still going to tax those benefits despite the fact that the Canadian Petroleum Association, the International Woodworkers Association, the Council of Forest Industries and others are concerned about the development of the north, with those benefits which are strictly work related being taxed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member asked that question because it gives me the opportunity once again to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the remission order that has been extended has exempted such benefits from taxation. That remission order has been extended within the designated area to which northern benefits apply. I must add that in addition, the so-called housing loan provision was also exempted within that designated area north of 60 and isolated posts. That has been the definition we have used. There has been absolutely no change in the pre-existing situation with respect to northern allowances.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the release that the minister tabled in the House tonight lists 18 changes to the budget. Previously there were another three, so that is 20 plus changes. Any other self-respecting minister of finance operating in a western parliamentary democracy would resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Nielsen: My question is, for the good of the country, will the Minister of Finance submit his resignation in recognition of his incompetence?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Have a merry Christmas!

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, if hon. members on the backbenches of the Liberal Party would calm down, I have a question. I know this is very agitating for them.

• (1700)

Mr. Clark: I have a question. No, my colleague—that is my colleague.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is in the hands of the House. However, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition wishes to be recognized, the Chair will recognize him at this point.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I would welcome being recognized after my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), has completed his question.

Mr. Nielsen: No more time! Muzzling us again!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, p.m., pursuant to an order made Thursday, December 10, 1981, this House does adjourn.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Point of order!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to see if the hon. members opposite will not reconsider their refusal earlier this day to gag the House of Commons and to stop us from examining what is, in effect, the presentation of a new budget. I am consequently asking for the unanimous consent of the House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —to continue our questioning of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Mr. Speaker, may I have that unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Some hon. Members: Agreed!

Mr. Nielsen: Parliament is a nuisance to the Liberals!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.02 o'clock p.m., pursuant to an order made Thursday, December 10, 1981, this House stands adjourned until Monday, January 25, 1982, at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.02 p.m. the House adjourned until Monday, January 25, 1982, at 2 p.m.

THE LATE BRUCE LONSDALE

TRIBUTES TO FORMER MEMBER FOR TIMISKAMING

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it is my painful duty to invite all hon. members to join with me today in paying tribute to the memory of a young man whose death on Friday was profoundly shocking to us. Bruce Lonsdale was one of the most able, most dedicated, and most promising of the younger members of the House of Commons.

Most of us knew him only for a few years, since his election as Member of Parliament for Timiskaming in 1980. In that time we came to understand and share the respect and admiration which led the people of the northern Ontario community of Cobalt to entrust him with great responsibility while he was still in his early twenties. It was because he served so well as town councillor and mayor of Cobalt, especially in the aftermath of the devastating fire which destroyed so much of that community in 1977, that the people of the vast riding of Timiskaming chose him to represent them in Parliament. He repaid their trust by becoming one of the hardest working and most effective Members of Parliament we knew.

His last official act, the announcement in Sturgeon Falls on Friday that the government would open a Statistics Canada office in that community, was typical of the quality of his service. He sought constantly to bring the government closer to the people he represented, and to help create for them new opportunities for employment and fulfilment.

By the strange irony of fate, Bruce Lonsdale was on his way home after carrying out those official duties when he was killed in a highway accident. I am sure that the members of this House will want to join me in wishing a prompt and complete recovery to the other two who were hurt in this accident. To Mrs. Lonsdale, her children and all Bruce Lonsdale's close relatives, we can only express our sorrow and our sympathy. I would ask you, Madam Speaker, to send them our heartfelt condolences. In Bruce Lonsdale we have lost a friend and a dedicated colleague who was dear to us all and who still had so much to offer Canada and the Canadian people. Although we have witnessed only a short period of his full life, he shall live on in our memory.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the official opposition I want to associate us with the words just spoken by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and to express my personal sadness and that of my colleagues on this side of the House at the untimely death last Friday of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Lonsdale).

Many of my colleagues here had the opportunity during Bruce Lonsdale's short period of service in the House of Commons to work very closely with him and he had won, in an uncommonly short time, respect among members on all sides of the House and all parties in this House. As the Prime Minister has said, he was a member here for a very short period of time, but he proved himself during that time to be an able and effective and most energetic representative of all his constituents. He approached his job as Member of Parliament with that same drive and determination that he had exhibited during the period of his service as mayor of Cobalt when he led the citizens of that community in overcoming a great disaster, and he co-ordinated the reconstitution of the town following the fire to which the Prime Minister has referred.

Bruce Lonsdale will be profoundly missed in this House as a member whose standard of service was a model to us all and one who was a very good and personal friend to many of us. We join with all members of the House of Commons in expressing our sympathy to his wife and family.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the members of the New Democratic Party I would like to join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in expressing our deep sympathy to Mr. Lonsdale's wife and children following his tragic death prior to the weekend.

As has been indicated by the Prime Minister, Bruce Lonsdale was a young man, only 32, who had already served the people in his region, first as a mayor and then very diligently here in the House of Commons as a Member of Parliament. It is deeply regretted that any person should lose his or her life in such an accident. It is doubly so for this to happen to one so young who has devoted his energies and talents to the good of his country. It is a sad occasion for us here in the House of Commons. It is a sad event for the people he represented so ably.

Madam Speaker: Of course it was with great sadness that we heard of the sudden death of one of our colleagues. I will transmit to the family of Mr. Lonsdale the sentiments expressed in the House, and I ask the House to rise and observe a minute of silence in his memory.

[Editor's Note: The House rose and observed a one minute silence.]

CHINESE NEW YEAR

EXPRESSION OF GOOD WISHES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. As we mark the beginning of a new year in Parliament I would like to remind the House that this is also a special day for all Canadians of Chinese descent. Today we celebrate the advent of the Chinese New Year, year 4680, the Year of the Dog. It is said that those born in the coming year will be imbued with the qualities of honesty, loyalty, chivalry, devotion and leadership. As one with close ties with the Chinese-Canadian community I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That this House join all Canadians of Chinese descent in a wish for joy and harmony in the coming year.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—COMMENTS MADE BY PRIME MINISTER ON IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this House express its profound regret at the Prime Minister's insensate comments regarding the imposition of martial law in Poland, remarks that have been widely used by the Communist regime to support its position, and that this House indicate to the people of Poland and to its government that Canada supports greater freedom in Poland, not less, that Canada supports the legitimate aspirations expressed by millions of Poles, through Solidarity, for greater democracy and a government responsible to Poles themselves, and that Canada opposes and will oppose in all possible ways the suppression of the Polish people by a government imposed by Moscow.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CALL FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO OPERATION OF SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, Clifford Olson's criminal career spans over more than 20 years. During that time the RCMP have repeatedly arrested him, only to see him released almost immediately, or serve only a short term. In view of this most obvious failure of the justice system, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour):

That the Solicitor General establish a full, open public inquiry into the operation of the justice system so that it will bring full justice to the criminal and security to the public.

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO ASSIST FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas interest rates are 3 per cent or 4 per cent higher this year than they were a year ago—and rising again—whereas Agriculture Canada predicts that 1982 net farm incomes will drop 15 per cent this year to a level below that earned in 1974, despite the fact that farm output has more than doubled since that time, and whereas a sound basis for a healthy agricultural economy exists but assistance is needed to help it reach its full potential, I move, seconded by the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish):

● (1415)

That this house calls on the government to introduce legislation to expand the ability of the Farm Credit Corporation to offer low cost credit to farmers, to introduce legislation to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act to offer stabilization based on the real cost of production, and to encourage the establishment of new marketing agencies to provide a defence against low prices.

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, the Peace River country has long been known as a land of golden opportunity with its vast energy and agricultural potential, and whereas the recent 11.7 per cent unemployment rate reflects the shattering of this potential by the government's disastrous economic policies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That the government immediately withdraw its budget and assume a positive role of co-operation and incentive so that employment opportunities will be reopened for people in all sectors.

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Statistics Canada recently revealed figures showing that almost one million Canadians are unemployed. That number is rising each week. When you include what are known as the hidden unemployed, those people who consider their employment situation so bleak that they have simply stopped looking, the number of unemployed could easily total a million and a half, which is an estimated 12 per cent of the Canadian labour force.

In light of the fact that the recently tabled federal budget was totally regressive in nature and contained absolutely nothing, either to prevent the escalating losses of existing jobs or to provide for the immediate creation of new ones, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the November budget of the Minister of Finance, which has been universally condemned by Canadians everywhere, be immediately withdrawn and replaced by a new budget which would realistically address the urgent problems of this nation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

DEMAND FOR RESIGNATION OF PRIME MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, whereas every Liberal MP in this House voted in favour of the November 12 budget which increases unemployment: by driving capital, equipment and expertise out of the country, by reducing capital cost allowances and increasing capital gains taxes, by killing initiative, by continuing high interest rates, etc., etc., I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House demands that the Prime Minister do immediately tender his resignation to the Governor General on the grounds that he and his party have betrayed the people of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CALL FOR ACTION TO BE TAKEN INDEPENDENTLY OF UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In the spirit of the Chinese Year of the Dog, if the government's budget and its monetarist policy were hung on a fire hydrant, it is clear what Canadians, like dogs, would like to do on them. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That the government refrain from its dog-eat-dog and dog's-breakfast approach to interest rates and its rabid and its rather mongrel approach to budgeting, and instead take serious action to stimulate our ailing economy to bring it back to life, and follow Japan and a number of western European countries which have taken action independent from the United States to stimulate their own economies.

homeless, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith):

That this House express its sorrow to the community of Spanish, Ontario, for the tragic fire that occurred there yesterday morning, claiming the lives of seven children and two adults, and extend its profound sympathy to the families of those who died.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, since it appears that the government and its bureaucratic masters are again displaying their inability to solve Canada's economic problems and may resort to wage and price controls, I move seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I must say, I am sure, on behalf of all members on this side of the House and most Canadians that I am absolutely shocked at the absence of the Minister of Finance from the House on the first opportunity to question him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister will know that Members of Parliament from all parties over the last five weeks have heard from Canadians in all walks of life—pensioners, farmers, students, all Canadians—about the deep damage which is being done to them individually by the budget. In light of that, and in light of the need for Parliament to put the interests of ordinary Canadians first, may I ask the Prime Minister a very simple question. Will he indicate to the House now that his government intends to withdraw its budget and introduce a new budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Finance I want to apologize for his absence. Last August he accepted an invitation to speak to the Canadian Club of Toronto for this day, at a time when no one could foresee that this would be the date of the reconvening of the House.

Mr. Crosbie: Come on!

Mr. Trudeau: I hear the former minister of finance saying "Come on". He will know that it has been a long-standing practice of ministers of finance to speak yearly to the Canadian Club of Toronto. I hope he discharged his duties in that regard, as our minister is doing today.

Mr. Waddell: He is afraid to come into the House.

Mr. Trudeau: The minister will be here tomorrow and on other days. I assure the hon. member opposite who talks about fear that I will wait to see what frightening questions he would be prepared to ask the minister, but I assure the hon. member that there are other members of the ministry in the House who would be prepared to deal with the economy.

Mr. Clark: Would you answer the question?

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition asked if we were going to withdraw the budget. The answer is no, Madam Speaker. The budget measures will be brought before the House for discussion as soon as possible.

TAXATION OF EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I should like to speak for a moment of the responsibility of the Minister of Finance. The Canadian Club meets every week.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Clark: If the Minister of Finance were someone who could have been found to speak for his responsibilities prior to the House reconvening, he could have arranged to be before the Canadian Club and also in his place to stand the heat of questioning in the House of Commons on a budget which does great damage to Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The government seems determined to go ahead with the budget. The Prime Minister will know that one effect of taxing employee benefits such as Blue Cross will be to bump thousands of Canadians into a new tax bracket without giving them any new income. These new taxes on dental care and on extended medical care will, for example, cause 60,000 Canadian mothers to lose all or part of their child tax credit. Does the Prime Minister call that equity, or is it part of the restraint program of the Government of Canada to take away and to cut back on the child tax credit program?

• (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that in the usual way the budget measures will be brought before the House. They will be discussed in the Committee of the Whole, and such allegations that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition makes now, if he can substantiate them, I am sure will be interesting for the House when those measures are looked at and before they are passed.

Mr. Dick: You didn't go home for the holidays.

Mr. Trudeau: I encourage hon. members opposite to have all their questions ready because the measures will be discussed in the House and voted upon. Of course, the Minister of Finance and the rest of the ministry will be happy to look at any statistics to see if they are founded, such as those alleged by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I am amazed that the Prime Minister, who has indicated that the government intends to push through with this budget, does not know about the elemental impact it will have on ordinary Canadians across the country. I am sure that if he listened a little to his backbenchers they would tell him about some of the pressure that they have been receiving from their constituents across the country. I tell the Prime Minister that there will be debate in this House of Commons, and indeed there will be votes in this House of Commons, and if the Prime Minister thinks he is going to get this budget through quickly, then he is deeply mistaken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Right on.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON SOCIAL BENEFITS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me turn now to the Minister of National Revenue and ask him a question, if I can get his attention for a moment. The Minister of National Revenue made some sweeping statements about the application of the budget and he has been backing away from them. But the minister must surely have some idea, even if his Prime Minister does not, of the impact that some of these measures will have upon ordinary individual Canadians. Despite the changes which the minister was forced to make last week, he will know the result of the rules regarding certain employee benefits is that millions of Canadians have at least $500 a year added to their taxable income, and many will be bumped up into different tax brackets.

I assume the Minister of National Revenue now knows the details of the impact of these measures that his government has been proposing for two months now. Would the minister agree to table in the House of Commons a precise estimate of how many Canadians will be losing social benefits, such as the child tax credit and veterans pensions, as a result of the artificial increases in income that are one consequence of the application of these new rules regarding employee benefits?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I said before Christmas in the House of Commons that the policy of the department was not to go after the nickels or dimes, or the small amounts which are administratively not feasible and are unfair, but to go after those measures that were substantial.

I issued a release on Friday which lays out the approach of my department to the taxation of benefits that are not contained specifically in the Income Tax Act. I think the release shows that it is indeed the policy not to go after the nickels and dimes and the small amounts, but to treat individual Canadians fairly.

With regard to the provision of information, as the Prime Minister has said, that obviously will come out in the course of debate as measures are introduced into the House of Commons.

EFFECT ON MOTHERS AND VETERANS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, this House is now back in session. We want some information. We want to know how many Canadian mothers will be denied their child tax credit as a result of this proposal, and how many Canadian veterans will have their eligibility for veterans pensions affected. The minister must know these particular facts. Will he tell the House of Commons now, in respect to those two particular groups of Canadians, mothers affected by the child tax credit, and our Canadian veterans, how many thousands of them will be affected adversely by this Liberal budget proposal?

• (1430)

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I do not have the specific figures to answer the specific questions that the right hon. gentleman has posed, but those figures are readily available. However, I can tell the hon. member that in my own province there are at least 250,000 people whose incomes will be improved as a result of this budget. Most of the people in my province and in my constituency will benefit from this budget, rather than the other way around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PLANS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, many Canadians told our Progressive Conservative budget committee that the budget will result in more lay-offs and higher interest rates as this year goes ahead. We heard from manufacturers who said there would be 100,000 fewer manufacturing jobs. We heard of small-business men, farmers and fishermen who left they were going to lose their businesses because interest rates were going higher. We heard of young couples—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have been rather lenient with the first questioner, but I think the hon. member should get to his question right away. Otherwise I will have to recognize the other section of the House.

Mr. Wilson: I felt that it would be helpful for the Prime Minister to learn more about what is going on in the country.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since Canadians are so frightened and so angry at what is going on as a result of the budget of this government, will the government, and the Prime Minister on behalf of the government, tell these Canadians what the government is preparing to do to avoid these lay-offs, to avoid these high interest rates, and to avoid these dreams being shattered during the course of this year? The budget does not answer those questions.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will understand that one of the first objectives of the budget is to keep inflation under control. That is a necessary pre-condition to the creation of jobs and to the lowering of interest rates.

The hon. member was in the process of telling us the many things he heard. The hon. member knows the macroeconomic policy of the government. The hon. member seems to belong to a party which does not know its own macroeconomic policy. We are not sure, because one questioner suggests greater expenditures while the other suggests restraint. This government believes that the main objective of the budget must be to keep inflation under control. That is why we are exercising restraint in the economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, what we heard in this committee were not the broad, macro problems; we heard what was happening to individual Canadians. I would suggest that the Prime Minister listen to their problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: This budget has destroyed the faith that Canadians had in their country. It has destroyed the faith that they had in the competence of the people who are proposing to lead this country. Therefore, I would like to ask the Prime Minister what is more important to him, the interests of all Canadians, those of the Liberal Party of Canada, or those of his Minister of Finance? Would he, himself, answer that question for all Canadians by asking for the resignation of his Minister of Finance, and get on with the question of economic renewal with a new minister of finance?

Mr. Crosbie: Right on!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it is not a suggestion I can take very seriously because the hon. member—

Mr. Crosbie: You should!

Mr. Trudeau: —like this government, is more interested in the welfare of all Canadians. The welfare of all Canadians, in spite of the hon. member's statement in preface to his question, is a macroeconomic question. We must ensure that the economy is sound if we want the individual areas of the economy to profit from that over-all economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

SPEECH MADE BY MINISTER OF FINANCE TO CANADIAN CLUB IN TORONTO

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We are now in the midst of the deepest depression since the war, having lost 235,000 jobs since August, with lay-offs in the province of Ontario alone, during last month, occurring at the rate of 3,000 per working day.

In his speech today to the Canadian Club in Toronto the Minister of Finance said, "This situation is going to get even worse." In the same speech he said that the government plans to wait for our trading partners, essentially, to bail us out.

My question to the Prime Minister is to ask simply why he thinks Canadians will wait for others to bail us out. In particular, why does he expect that more than one million unemployed Canadians will sit back while this government does nothing about their plight?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot accept the interpretation of the speech given by the minister today in Toronto to mean that we will wait for our partners to bail us out. I would like to know why the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party invents such interpretations.

There is a budget before the House. It presents a macroeconomic approach. It will be discussed in the House, but it serves nothing to invent interpretations of the statement of the Minister of Finance. He has made his position concerning the budget quite clear in the House. He will be back to continue to defend his budget.

There is nothing contained in his policy which suggests that we will wait for others to bail us out. His policy, rather than to say that things will get worse, is to ensure that the Canadian economy is well managed, and is based on the assumption that the depression which is hitting many of the industrialized societies will come to an ebb, will bottom-out by the summer and that we will all be embarking on recovery together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT INDEPENDENTLY OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, finance ministers representing France, West Germany, Great Britain, Japan, and some other European countries met last week and reached a decision which was completely contrary to that of the Government of Canada on two important points; specifically, that they would take action, first, to reduce interest rates as a matter of government policy in their countries, and, second, to take action independently of the United States to stimulate their economies. Why can the Government of Canada not do the same thing here for Canadians?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the economic circumstances of different countries are the responsibilities of the governments of those countries. In the case of Canada—

Mr. Broadbent: And they are exercising it.

Mr. Trudeau: In the case of Canada, the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is suggesting stimulus. I would put to him the simple fact that the Canadian budget is now in a deficit position of over $10 billion. Does the hon. member not consider this to be a form of stimulus?

POLICIES FOLLOWED BY OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister knows, or should know, that the percentage of GNP going to government spending in most of the countries I have just listed is higher than that of the Government of Canada, and they are taking independent action.

I want to ask the Prime Minister, if the governments in western Europe and in Japan recognize that the United States is pursuing a disastrous economic policy in world terms, why is it that they have the political courage to take independent action for their people which this government simply does not possess?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must repeat that the budgetary situations of different countries vary from country to country. In the case of France, for instance, its over-all budget deficit and, hence, its policy of stimulating the economy, was considerably less than that of Canada. Therefore, it is natural that they take a more stimulative position now because it is catching up to what Canada has been doing for some years.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PAYMENT MADE TO CONVICTED MURDERER, CLIFFORD OLSON

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question to the Solicitor General concerns one of several serious contradictions respecting government policy with regard to the purpose of the RCMP payment to the convicted killer, Olson. The Prime Minister has stated that a conviction was obtained because the payment was made, while the Solicitor General has been very definite in saying that the RCMP had a sustainable case and that the payment was not to obtain a conviction but, rather to give peace of mind to the victims' parents. Which one of these contradictory statements is the truth, and which one indicates the federal government's purpose in not stopping this terribly wrong payment?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that there was no trial in this matter, but that there was a plea of guilty which ended it. Therefore, we will never know—

Mr. Nielsen: That's a trial.

Mr. Kaplan:— what the weight of the evidence would have been at any point or what particular aspect of evidence would have borne more weight than other evidence in the opinion the judge who would have heard the case.

● (1440)

What is important to remember is that on August 25, when the deal was struck under the full direction and responsibility of the attorney general of the province, the serious charge of murder had already been laid against Mr. Olson, and that when the RCMP lay a charge of murder against an individual they do so because they have substantial evidence against him.

There is absolutely no doubt that the evidence which was obtained as a result of this agreement was evidence which reinforced the charge against him, and would have borne heavily in the consideration of the court against him. However, the fact is that a very important and significant step was taken when the charge was laid by the RCMP, and it was done with very substantial evidence available to sustain a conviction.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PAYMENT AGREEMENT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General is not only contradicting his Prime Minister, he is contradicting Staff Superintendent Lyman Henschel as well. There was a trial which is now over. A conviction has been registered. Federal public funds were used in the payment. The Canada-B.C. Policing Agreement states in part, this is quite short, and I quote:

> The internal management of provincial police services and the administration and application of proper police procedures are under the control of Canada.

Because the approval of the payment was required here in Ottawa, will the Solicitor General summarize the important parts of the agreement between the RCMP and Olson, and immediately table that agreement?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to table the agreement. The hon. member quoted a part of the agreement, but failed to quote the part of the agreement which repeats the provisions of the BNA Act, namely, that the administration of justice in the province is and continues to be the responsibility of the attorney general in the province, that the RCMP provincial contingent serves him in the administration of justice in the province, and that the attorney general of British Columbia has indicated quite forthrightly that this decision was made under his responsibility and with his approval. As I have indicated, I was not informed and no federal minister was informed before this agreement was consummated.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister in his statement about the imposition of martial law in Poland has never condemned that imposition, nor has he recognized any Soviet responsibility for that intervention. The Polish paper Trybuna Ludu, and the U.S.S.R. and Polish media have quoted the Prime Minister for his approval of the repressive actions of the Polish government.

Does the Prime Minister agree with the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs yesterday that the Soviet Union was involved in the military clampdown and has intervened in Polish affairs? If he agrees with him, what changes will now be made in our policy, which to date has supported the Polish and Russian actions in Poland against the Polish people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must tell the hon. member that I disagree with his interpretation of our policy, particularly the facts that he set forward. When he says that there was never any condemnation of martial law in Poland, I must point out to him that the very first time I was asked about the imposition of martial law, I believe it was at a press conference on December 19, I regretted the imposition of martial law. I went on to indicate that, since it was a fact, we would hope that the military authorities in Poland would permit monitoring by Canada or other people to ensure that the rigours of martial law would be eased as soon as possible. My statement at the year-end went even further along that line.

As to the role of the Soviet Union, I must say that at the time I spoke we had no evidence of any direct intervention by the Soviet Union in Polish affairs. When I say direct, I mean of course beyond the fact that Poland is and has been a satellite of the Soviet Union, as are many other countries in eastern Europe. However, in so far as any direct military intervention is concerned, we had no evidence of that. I understand that some countries claimed to have such evidence. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is in the process of examining and assessing that evidence.

COMMENTS MADE BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has been the reluctant debutante in condemning what happened in Poland and what has gone on there for the last month. On December 18 the Prime Minister stated that martial law was the best alternative in Poland, and I quote:

> Hopefully the military regime will be able to keep Solidarity from excessive demands.

Since the Prime Minister has agreed to appear on a television show arranged by the U.S. International Communications Agency, to be shown around the world on January 30 in support of the Polish people, will he now repudiate and withdraw his comments supporting martial law in Poland and apologize for them, to counteract the view of the Poles that, and I quote:

> Your Trudeau—he really did us in.

Or will he go ahead without repentance as 1982's greatest example of hypocrisy in action?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question is more laden with invective than with fact. When he says that I support martial law, I must ask him to refer to the text of my statement.

Mr. Andre: December 18.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, it was on December 18. It was stated in these terms: if martial law is a way to avoid civil war and Soviet intervention, then I cannot say it is all bad. That, I suppose, is still a question for the history books to decide. In the case of this government, and I believe most of our allies, we have always expressed the hope and stated the policy to the effect that the Soviet Union must not intervene militarily in Polish affairs and that the solution to the Polish crisis should be found by the Poles themselves. My statements will stand.

I do not believe that in advance we can or should condemn the use of troops by any of our friends, if it is to avoid a worse result. The worse result in this case would have been intervention by the Soviet Union. When I say by our friends, of course everybody in this House has examples in mind where democratic or other forms of government have used the military. Britain is using them in Northern Ireland now. Turkey is using them. They are our friends in NATO. We have used them under the War Measures Act in 1970. These cases are all different in scope, but once again we must ask ourselves if there was a better scenario. Perhaps there was. I do not know. However, I say that if the invocation of martial law was a way to keep the Soviet troops out, then I cannot condemn it a priori. I will have to see in what way that martial law proceeds, and I will—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: If hon. members opposite want to engage in debate, we will be happy to have a debate on one of their opposition days, if that is what they want. However, I think the position of the government warrants listening to by members opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENTS TO RECIPIENTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It pertains to the fact that last year the delivery of unemployment insurance in the province of British Columbia collapsed three times, with the result that thousands of workers were forced to turn to the provincial welfare system when they should have been qualified for unemployment insurance. It is taking the minister's department something in the order of two to three months to provide unemployment insurance to those people who are suffering enormous hardship.

What I would like to hear from the minister is if he can tell us today exactly what provisions he intends to make to rectify this situation so as to clear up the problem now, and can he guarantee it will not happen for a fourth time within the next few months? Also can he tell us whether he intends to reimburse the province of British Columbia for the millions of dollars that it is paying out for unemployment insurance funding because of the incompetence of his department?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would apologize to the hon. member for any inconvenience his constituents might have faced but, as the hon. member knows, there is a fair degree of demand upon some of our unemployment insurance offices these days.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is your fault.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, that is what the system is for. When the hon. members opposite ask what we are doing, the fact of the matter is that this government is supporting perhaps the most extensive and broadscale unemployment insurance program to provide support for workers in times of need.

The system is working the way it is supposed to work by providing support for people. What we are doing in British Columbia, as the hon. member knows, is trying to shift and allocate our resources where the demand is greatest. I could provide for the hon. member's interest a letter I received from one of his British Columbia colleagues thanking us for the special efforts we have made in his area.

If he has particular problems, I would be glad to deal with them personally and directly to see what particular assistance we might provide in that constituency.

Mr. Skelly: The minister does not appreciate the serious and explosive nature of this problem. When people start talking about trying to take the problem in hand with a 30-30 in those offices, then it is serious. If you ask any member of this caucus about the kinds of problems their people in their constituencies are suffering, it is not individual.

REQUEST THAT PROPOSED CHANGES TO SYSTEM BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): The minister proposes a new repressive system of unemployment insurance that would see more people thrown off the rolls. Would the minister give us his assurance that he will not bring forward the proposed changes in the unemployment insurance system that would see more people thrown off our first line of defence and more people thrown into provincial welfare? Would he assure this House that he is not going to bring forward those repressive measures?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, to begin with I would like to say to the hon. member that he does not help the case of either his constituents or anyone across the country by engaging in the sort of irresponsible statements which he has just made in the previous question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I would simply say to him that the interest of the members of this House is to look at the entire unemployment insurance program, to improve that program and to provide a broader, more liberal and reform position, and that we are interested in reforming the Unemployment Insurance Act and will do so after we finish consultation with all those who have asked us to provide for better improvements in the present program.

HOUSING

QUERY RESPECTING TECHNOLOGY INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It deals with the housing technology incentive program. Would the minister tell the House how many Canadian companies have benefited from grants under this program, how much money was allocated to it—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Fisher: —and, most important, what he is doing to ensure that these innovations are being made known to the public and to the industry?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to report that the provisions of the budget which will give some increase in the budget for housing, particularly in the area of improving housing conditions, will continue the program of last year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: There is a budget commitment of this government of $375,000 to individual programs of housing technology incentives. Last year the program served 44 different applications of approximately $10,000. It serves the disabled, and three quarters of the program applications were in connection with energy improvement technology incentives in the area of housing.

INDUSTRY

UNEMPLOYMENT CAUSED BY SHUTDOWN OF PLANTS—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER HAS EMERGENCY PLAN

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Recently, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association called to the attention of the government, and thus the minister, that 200,000 jobs had been lost in the manufacturing sector, and now the association expects that a further 100,000 jobs will be lost within the next two months. In the circumstances, I should like first to ask the minister—I realize that he has a list of the plants that have already closed—whether he has looked into the situation of the plants that are expected to shut down, with the attendant loss of another 100,000 jobs, and if so, does the minister have a contingency plan to prevent the loss of 100,000 jobs, a loss Canada cannot afford at the present time?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we feel that the present unemployment rate is a very serious matter, and that is why, before Christmas, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced a new program that would provide greater support for direct job creation, and that is why, this morning, I announced a new program with a budget of $93 million, to further stimulate production and job-creation by applying new electronic production systems. I believe this will result in the creation of many new jobs, while at the same time, Madam Speaker, the new Department of Industrial Regional Expansion will also be producing new job-creation programs. We consider the present situation to be a serious one, and we are working hard to provide the necessary solutions.

Obviously, the minister's reply has little to offer in the way of hope for Canadians. The minister has mentioned medium- and long-term programs. Of course, we cannot judge the value of those programs today, but the minister knows perfectly well that 100,000 jobs are going to be lost within the next two months, and he has offered no solution to that problem. The Minister of Finance, who is in Toronto today, has confirmed that things are going to get worse.

Does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce consider that the situation is serious enough for him to come up with an emergency plan or a special strategy to prevent the closing of these plants, especially since he is well aware, as we all are on both sides of the House, that we cannot afford to lose 100,000 jobs at this time?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, we are going to work very hard in order to prevent the closing of plants across Canada, and in creating new departments we intend to set up programs to respond to the present situation and future developments, as part of our policy to pave the way for industrial and economic renewal by reducing inflation and unemployment. Therefore, I feel that we are working very seriously on providing solutions to problems that are well known to all of us.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF REMOTE WORK SITE EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice who has left his seat before question period is finished, and in the absence of the Minister of Finance who is not here at all, I would direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Here he is.

Miss Carney: If the Minister of Justice would return to his seat I can finish my question. In December the Minister of Justice told Mr. Jack Munro, president of the International Woodworkers' of America, that the government is determined to tax room, board and transportation allowances for workers at remote work sites. The British Columbia Federation of Labour calculates that the extra taxes paid by loggers could be as high as $18 per day. I want to ask the minister why his government is determined to impose this punitive tax on an industry where one out of every five workers is either unemployed or laid off?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): I do not know what the hon. member is referring to, Madam Speaker. I think she is referring to the budget, and the Minister of Finance will be in the House tomorrow to reply. I do not know what Mr. Munro said, but I would like to see what he said. He has not mentioned such a thing to me. He referred to the past practices when I was minister of finance, but we did not discuss what was in the budget.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I would like the record to show that the Minister of Justice spoke to the president of the IWA on December 21 or 22, which he has now denied.

Mr. Chrétien: I am sorry; I did not—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON COLLECTIVE AGREEMENTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Labour. A number of unions and labour organizations have told our Conservative committee on the budget that many collective agreements contain a clause that allows negotiations to be reopened in the event that tax changes affect the terms of the contract. Considering the potential labour unrest that will be created by the proposed taxes on a range of social benefits, including dental plans and extended health benefits, is the government prepared to withdraw these unfair measures to avoid the prospect of labour unrest?

• (1500)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, collective agreements have been respected by labour and management in the past, and I hope this fine tradition will be respected in relation to this and other measures in the future. Of course, if in an agreement there are clauses which would permit the reconsideration of certain aspects of the agreement, that would be part of that particular agreement, but by and large the Canadian labour scene has a fine tradition of respecting collective agreements from the beginning to the end.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO PAYMENT MADE TO CONVICTED MURDERER, CLIFFORD OLSON

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and it concerns the payment of $90,000 in blood money to convicted child murderer Clifford Olson. Since the announcement of this unprecedented and reprehensible payment, the Solicitor General has come up with a series of blatantly contradictory statements. One day he said he knew of the payment two days after it was authorized. Later we found out that in fact it was more than two weeks after the payment was authorized. One day he said that the police had a convictable case. Later we learned that in fact they may not have had a convictable case. One day he said there was no federal money. Later—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask a question, please.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is this: in view of this series of contradictions, and in view of other important questions about the nature of this investigation, is the Solicitor General prepared to order a full public independent inquiry, so that all Canadians can decide for themselves on the wisdom, or lack thereof, of this very serious and unprecedented payment?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, on the question of contradictions I think the hon. member should know better than to believe every single thing he reads.

Mr. Waddell: Especially your statements.

Mr. Kaplan: There were some conflicting statements in the media, and I think all of them have been resolved, or can easily be resolved by some further discussion and further reporting about them.

On the question of conducting an inquiry, this was a matter which was conducted under the provincial policing contract. I have been in touch with the attorney general of the province, to whom the B.C. contingent of the RCMP reports under the provincial policing contract, to ask him if he is satisfied with the way in which the police conducted themselves in that matter. I have been assured that he is. I expect to hear from the Commissioner of the RCMP in the same vein within the next few days, because I have asked him as well to satisfy himself that the policing was properly done in the matter.

If an inquiry is to be conducted into a provincial policing aspect, I do not think the Parliament of Canada should usurp the authority to conduct such an inquiry. It is true that the RCMP is a federal agency, but it is a national police force, and if the Parliament of Canada cannot accept the role it plays in the provinces and cannot allow it to play that role properly so far as the administration of justice is concerned under the attorney general concerned, then we are going to lose the opportunity to use this very important national institution in that way.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General should know very well that not 75 per cent but every penny of the $100,000 paid to Clifford Olson came out of federal coffers, and that alone warrants a federal public independent inquiry.

SUGGESTED RECOVERY OF FUNDS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that this payment could establish a very dangerous legal precedent in Canada, and in view of the fact that it is the understanding of federal and provincial authorities that never before has such a payment been made, will the Solicitor General at least give this House the assurance that never again will a payment of such blood money be made under such circumstances and that he will attempt to recover all funds which have been paid so far?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, in so far as the consideration of where the money came from is concerned, it is true that the federal government is the paymaster of the RCMP, and whether it is for long distance telephone calls, lunches, or gasoline, under the provincial contract the money comes initially from federal coffers. However, I have just negotiated a contract—and I thought the hon. member knew the details of that contract—under which every quarter the federal government claims repayment from the provinces for these outlays on the basis of the federal-provincial cost-sharing agreement, which will change every year over the next ten years in the direction of the federal government contributing a smaller and smaller proportion of that total. I do not think anything turns on the fact that the initial payments are federal, and I think this is simply a red herring being put forward by the hon. member.

In so far as an assurance that such an agreement will never be made again is concerned, I am prepared to assure—as was the case in this case—where an unprecedented type of arrangement is contemplated and demanded by a criminal, that that decision will be raised to the highest level in the province by the RCMP—as was done in this case—that legal advice will be obtained about it, that those politically responsible for the decision will be consulted—as was the case in this case—and that if the decision reached is lawful and if it is consistent with the professional code of the RCMP, it will be their responsibility to make it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ASK FOR WITHDRAWAL OF MARTIAL LAW

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the fact that the presidents of the Canadian Polish Congress, the Polish Alliance of Canada, the Polish National Union of Canada, and the Polish Combatants Association are in the gallery, and in view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has received new and additional information from his counterpart in the United States, Mr. Haig, and from other sources, is he prepared to recommend to the cabinet that his government ask the Polish government to withdraw martial law in Poland as soon as possible and to re-enter negotiations with the church and Solidarity as soon as possible?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to repeat again our urging, our request, and even our demand to the Polish government that it withdraw the martial law which now pertains in that country, free prisoners, and return to political dialogue.

I might say, for the information of the House, that the statement which General Jaruzelski delivered earlier today in that respect is rather disappointing. It forecast a date for the removal of some elements of martial law but far from met what we would hope would be the case in that great country.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GUIDELINES COVERING PAYMENTS FOR EVIDENCE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and it relates to the payment of $100,000 to the family of Clifford Olson. The Prime Minister said in a CBC interview broadcast on January 23 that he saw nothing illegal or immoral in police paying accused for information. In light of the fact that the RCMP is a federal responsibility, would the Prime Minister please advise the House how decisions will be made in the future as to whether accused persons will be paid for their evidence? Are guidelines being prepared for the RCMP and, if so, what are those guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in his answer to the last question the Solicitor General indicated what those guidelines are and what they will be in the future. I hope the hon. member will take the trouble to read Hansard rather than repeat questions.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR POLICE FORCE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General did not in fact answer the question. He simply tried to remove himself from responsibility and put it onto the attorney general of a province. The fact is this is a federal police force. I want to know whether the Prime Minister considers that if when ten young people go missing that is an appropriate time for the RCMP to be paying money out. Should it be five young persons or one young person, or if there is an undue amount of time spent on an investigation and there is a public clamour for payment? Are any of those circumstances going to be used as circumstances under which money should be paid by the federal police force? When will we have some guidelines, and when will the Prime Minister stand and take responsibility for the federal police force?

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General not only dealt with the guidelines and spelled them out quite specifically but he also anticipated the last part of the question relating to our responsibility for the federal police force. When it is acting under the jurisdiction of a province in its task to administer justice and apply the Criminal Code as stated in our Criminal Code, the police are under the authority of that province, and if they have done nothing illegal, as seems to be the case in this particular instance, the question remains whether it is good policy or not, and whether it is moral, and in these matters I think it is wise to let the police make the judgment in the particular cases, provided the over-all guidelines are laid out, as the Solicitor General has just done.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—STATEMENT MADE BY GENERAL JARUZELSKI

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I have one supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External affairs has just mentioned that he was not happy with what General Jaruzelski said in his speech today, would he please tell this House what he plans to do about it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we are giving full consideration to the problem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: I would remind the House that Canada has supplied more food to Poland per capita than any other country, has made more loans to Poland than any other country, and has accepted more Polish refugees per capita than any other country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: It seems to me that this is the best indication of the seriousness with which the Canadian people and the Canadian government regard this issue. We do not regard it as an issue with which to play politics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. HAWKES—CULTURAL AFFAIRS—GAME OF CHESS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and sixty-ninth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on Friday, December 18, 1981, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Madam Speaker: I have notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before coming to my question of privilege I had intended to ask a question or two of the government House leader, but perhaps I will deal with the question of privilege first if that is your desire.

Madam Speaker: I think it might be helpful if the hon. member dealt with his question concerning the business of the House first.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I wonder if I could put some questions to the government House leader with regard to House business, this being the first day of our return.

From the time we rose prior to Christmas until today, a number of changes have been made to the budget proposals that were put before us. Is the government House leader able to tell us whether the legislation which the government intended to place before the House prior to Christmas that deals directly with the budgetary measures put before the House by the Minister of Finance will go forward? Will the measures be consistent with the budget as it was first introduced, or will they take into account a number of changes that have been indicated both by the Minister of Finance and by the Minister of National Revenue over the course of the last two or three weeks?

Specifically, can the government House leader indicate whether legislation is to come before the House that will deal with interest rates on mortgages for home owners and mortgages for farmers? The Minister of Agriculture suggested one week ago that this might be forthcoming.

Can the government House leader also indicate whether a new economic statement will be issued which will show the current thinking of the Minister of Finance before we deal with the legislative proposals of the government?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, there is no change in the business plans that were in front of the House when we adjourned before Christmas. Today we will be dealing with the Canagrex bill and tomorrow is an allotted day. Today we will give notice of a couple of bills that are a direct result of the budget and which deal with farm credit and with housing. Those bills should be ready for introduction later this week or, at the latest, at the beginning of next week. It is the intention of the government to deal with bills and matters related to the economy in the weeks and months to come.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have a further question. I am sure the government House leader listened carefully to statements made by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue during the Christmas and New Year break. Both those hon. ministers indicated there would be changes to the proposals that had been placed before the House of Commons in the budget statement of the Minister of Finance.

When will the House of Commons be given the benefit of direct knowledge of the changes that those two ministers intend to bring forward, and when will the House of Commons receive the proposals that the Minister of Agriculture suggested were forthcoming with regard to aid for farmers in the near future?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I have just indicated that today we will give notice about the bill related to farm credit. That will include a reduction of interest rates in favour of some farmers. This was included in the budget, so if the bill is introduced later this week as I have indicated, then later this week the hon. member will know what is in the bill.

The same goes for the amendments to the National Housing Act. Notice is to be given later today of the introduction of such a bill which will reflect the policies included in the last budget. These are very good measures for home owners and for farmers in this country. The bills will be made public later this week or at the beginning of next week. As a matter of fact, dealing with housing, the draft bill was introduced before Christmas so the hon. member should know most of the content of that bill already.

Finally, dealing with the other measures related to the budget, I suggest that the hon. member should look at the ways and means motions that will be tabled later in the course of the session. That is the proper time to examine them. He will then see if there are any further changes or adjustments and exactly what measures the government is proposing. I can say to the hon. member that it is the intention of the government to propose measures that will reflect statements made by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue so far.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, as a matter of practice for many years, the customary House business question has been asked on a Thursday. Since the government House leader indicated before we rose on December 18 that we would be dealing with the Canagrex legislation today and would have an allotted day tomorrow, and since Wednesday normally arises before Thursday—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are learning!

Mr. Nielsen: —I wonder if I could make the assumption, although making any assumption with this government is always dangerous, that should Canagrex not go through today, we will deal with it again on Wednesday?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I listened to some comments made by my hon. colleague and some of his colleagues during the Christmas break. I welcome him back to reality; in fact, Wednesday is before Thursday!

On Wednesday we will deal again with Canagrex if we do not complete it tonight, but I hope we will get Canagrex to committee tonight. On Wednesday we might go on with Bill C-10 which we started to debate just prior to Christmas.

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. Solicitor General rising on government business?

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Could I ask the minister to remain seated until we finish with government business, please.

Is the hon. member for Brant rising on government business?

Mr. Blackburn: Yes, Madam Speaker. I should like to put a couple of questions to the government House leader with respect to government business. I can find nothing on the Order Paper that specifically addresses the massive problem of widespread unemployment, particularly in the manufacturing sector in Ontario and Quebec. There was nothing in the budget to indicate that the government seriously intends to cope with the 235,000 people who have been laid off in manufacturing and the projected or forecasted 100,000 more who are going to be laid off in the next month.

In view of the fact that 50 per cent of those workers who have been laid off have lost their jobs permanently, I should like to ask the government House leader when we can expect the government to bring in legislation that will directly and effectively deal with this most serious problem in Canada, the problem of massive unemployment. I ask the government House leader to tell this House or to show me on the Order Paper where there is one piece of legislation proposed by the government to help solve the problem of unemployment here and now, this winter. That is my question.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker will recall that a few weeks before the Christmas recess I intervened on a question similar to the one which has just been raised to say that it is not in keeping with the practice of the House for individual members, represented as they are by House leaders, to raise consecutively, member after member, for purely political yardage reasons, questions such as the one which the Chair has just heard.

I have asked the co-operation of hon. members in this party to allow me the freedom to deal with questions of House business, and they have given me that co-operation 100 per cent. Madam Speaker will not find individual members of this party smuggling in political questions such as the one just referred to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —under the guise of a question of House business.

If the Chair allows this kind of practice, I can give no guarantee that my own members will not follow suit. If the Chair recognizes that kind of political question smuggled into routine questions on House business, which should not be arising before Thursday in any event, I can give no guarantee that my own members will not follow suit and will be perfectly justified in doing so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I remind the hon. member that all members are, of course, allowed to ask questions on government business, but through an arrangement which I think is very wise that responsibility is delegated to the leaders of the parties in the House. I do not think there has been abuse by individual members coming forward and asking questions about government business; usually that has been left to House leaders. I remind hon. members that it is a very good practice, one which should be encouraged, to leave these matters to be questioned by House leaders.

However, if an hon. member wants to be recognized to ask a question about government business, I have to allow him his question. But I ask the co-operation of hon. members not to debate when they are asking such questions; then I think the hon. member for Yukon would be justified in saying that this is smuggling in questions on government business for political reasons. I do not think we have had too much trouble with that particular aspect of our business in the House.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I have a question on government House business regarding small business. Prior to our rising on December 18, it was mentioned a number of times by ministers opposite that indeed legislation would be brought in when we returned on January 25 which would provide encouragement for small business to expand. What we have seen prior to that, what we have seen after five weeks of opportunity to draft legislation, and the fact that we now understand that in excess of 8,000 small businesses have experienced bankruptcy—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question to ask about a piece of legislation, he should do so in a straightforward manner and not elaborate on it.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I apologize for going on at some length. My question to the government House leader would be: can we expect shortly some indication of legislation which will encourage small businesses in Canada to expand their operations and provide jobs, as opposed to the present situation where there seems to be an accent on unemployment in terms of government legislation?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, our fight against inflation should produce results.

[English]

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I should also like to ask the House leader a question concerning legislation relating to Canada's very extreme housing problems. We are aware that there are draft amendments to the National Housing Act, but they are restricted to minor changes relating to what we consider to be very inadequate coverage in the budget for deferred mortgage interest rates, etc. The party to my right is aware from its hearings that there has been a major slump in the construction industry over the last three years—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mrs. Mitchell: —not to mention people with inadequate housing and very serious housing problems. Will legislation be introduced to deal with mortgage interest rates per se, preferably through the Bank Act, to reduce mortgage interest rates and to outline a long-term mortgage interest rates policy which, in our opinion, is the only way of solving the problem? Canadians have the right to know whether this kind of legislation will come before the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, this time I must say that I agree with the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. A few minutes ago he very aptly pointed out that abuse of this type of question could very easily occur, after the oral question period, if members ask questions ostensibly to inquire about the order of business in the House during the coming days or weeks, and in fact turn them into an opportunity for making political mileage, without the government having a chance to defend itself. I have no secrets about the order of business in the House. The House leaders of the parties meet regularly, and I inform them about the order of business in the House. Questions like those we heard just now may be justified, and basically they are, but they are not appropriate when members put them in this way and at this time of the day, especially when the time of the House is precious.

Now that the economy is going through a very difficult period, and we recognize this, I feel that it is even more important that members on both sides of the House should act responsibly and attend to the business at hand, so that the government can have a debate on the measures it is proposing with a view to fighting inflation and improving social and economic conditions in this country.

In the circumstances, Madam Speaker, I have no intention of letting the time of the House of Commons be wasted in this way. Like the other ministers during question period, I am under no obligation to answer all questions put to me in my capacity of minister.

I shall observe the common courtesy of providing my colleagues with the information they need to plan for the debates in the House. I intend to continue to provide regular information to my fellow House leaders with whom I am on excellent terms. However, should the Progressive Conservative Party decide tomorrow that it is going to follow this example and members from all parts of the country, at least ten, are deployed to ask questions about the business of the House in order to get political points across, I do not think we will ever get around to consideration of individual bills until four o'clock or 4.30 in the afternoon, and I do think Canadians expect more of us than that. The Canadian people are not interested in organized obstruction by the opposition parties and they expect a minimum of co-operation so that we can get on with our work. In the circumstances, I do not intend to provide a specific answer to this question and I would refer the hon. member to his House leader, with whom I shall be glad to discuss the matter.

[English]

Madam Speaker: In view of the remarks I have just made, I think I can go as far as to give an example of the manner in which this particular question could have been asked. It could have simply been: Can we expect some legislation concerning the reduction of mortgage interest rates? It could be as simple as that. This is the kind of question which is admissible at this time under government business. I should like hon. members to restrain themselves and to ask questions in a precise and concise manner, so that we do not enter into debate at this particular time. I think we would all benefit if the House disciplines itself and follows the rules, and especially the customs, because we are dealing with customs here.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it will be readily apparent that hon. members in this party have put their questions with respect to House business, not themselves but through me. If the system—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: Get off your knees.

Mr. Shields: You are the guys who put the Liberals in power.

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

• (1530)

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, if the system is to work at all—

Mr. Rae: You shut it down for weeks.

Mr. Nielsen: I would urge those yappy people in the socialist party to yap through their House leader instead of interrupting me as they are doing now.

If the Chair permits this practice, the system will break down. I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that it is the simplest thing in the world—

An hon. Member: Thank you, Erik.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps they could stop howling. Everyone can speak except them; that is their idea of free speech in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: If they would stop yapping so that you could hear me, Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: I would like to suggest to you that the Chair recognize the House leaders of the three parties for the purpose of dealing with House business, except in very rare circumstances.

It is very simple for us to do what has been done by the little red rump—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —and organize a series of questions just like the series we have been treated to now. Indeed, if the Chair allows this procedure, and I do not say this in any way at all threateningly, Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —but if this practice is going to be allowed those on my left, I can assure you that we will do it also. I will not keep my members down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I will invite them to participate freely in asking those questions which concern them as individuals as well. I suggest to the Chair that we adopt a policy of working these questions through the House leaders except in very rare circumstances; otherwise there will be chaos.

Madam Speaker: The suggestion that the House leaders discuss this matter I think is a very good one. I just want to remind hon. members that I cannot keep members sitting down; when they rise to ask for the floor, I must give them the floor. Members are allowed to ask questions on government business. Members should be concise and their questions should be to the point. They should not make speeches. I will see to it that speeches do not evolve from their questions. However, I do ask hon. members to co-operate with their House leaders. That is indeed the best way to run the affairs of the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This would not have happened had Stanley Knowles been here.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I have a quick question.

Mr. Shields: Ask it then.

Mr. Waddell: Many of us spent the holidays—

An hon. Member: Ask the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: If hon. members will let me ask the question, I will ask the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Many of us spent the holidays in our riding offices. People came in day in and day out to complain about the government's economic policy.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We do not need a preamble. If the hon. member has a question about government business, he can go right to the question. For example, he can say: "Does the government intend to introduce legislation about . . . ," and so on.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, does the government intend to introduce legislation that would alleviate the problems of the older people in the country, specifically by increasing the old age pension this term so that they will not continue to suffer? They have been telling us day in and day out that they have been suffering, with current interest rates and the general state of inflation in the economy.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, this government is eager to proceed with a major bill, namely Bill C-85. It deals with the promotion of agricultural food and products from Canada. We are ready to work. Because of the attitude of the NDP, we cannot do so. It is a shame.

Mr. Korchinski: Madam Speaker, because there was a realignment of responsibility in DREE, we do not know to whom we should direct our questions. Can the government House leader tell us whether there will be legislation which will authorize someone to speak on behalf of DREE? Do we ask the former minister or the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, or whatever he is called today? To whom do we ask questions relating to this particular department?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we will introduce legislation some time later. In the meantime, I will keep the hon. member for Yukon aware of the question.

Mr. Nielsen: That is what you think.

Mr. Pinard: And the hon. member for Yukon will be in the position to give the right answers to the hon. member.

An hon. Member: For the first time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Could I ask that only members who want to discuss government business rise before I go to questions of privilege?

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I think you have already been presented by the Clerk of the House with a copy of Beauchesne. Page 25, Section 81(1), indicates that in all cases questions of privilege must take priority. I view this as very important. Questions of privilege take priority over government business, in fact over everything, especially when a matter arises as a result of what occurred in question period.

Two members at least have been attempting to rise on a question of privilege on matters arising from question period, namely, the Solicitor General and myself. The Solicitor General gave me notice first that he intended to raise a certain matter and I have been attempting to defer my question of privilege to his, which I suspect is along the same lines. May I mercifully point out to you, in the most polite and submissive way that I can, that Section 81(1) states that a question of privilege takes priority over everything.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is quite right. A question of privilege is defined precisely by the fact that it has to be dealt with in an urgent manner. There is an arrangement in this House whereby government business on Thursday is dealt with immediately after question period. That is an arrangement between the House leaders which I follow.

Today questions about government business have come up. I have taken them in the order in which they are usually taken because that helps other members who have other duties to attend to, especially the House leaders. They can, therefore, leave the House if they are not concerned with what is to follow. The hon. member is right but I have no choice but to follow the arrangements which are transmitted to me by the House leaders.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader concerning future business. There were commitments made about a proposal to create a department of marine transportation, on which the Prime Minister commented, as well as the implementation of a marine industrial strategy, a policy for acquiring marine equipment in Canada and the bringing of foreign-registered ships into Canada.

Does the government have any intention of developing any of those marine industrial programs so that Canadian marine workers will have jobs, instead of—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. This seems to me to be a question that could be asked during question period. It does not deal with government business.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, the last time we met on December 18, before the House adjourned for the Christmas recess, the Minister of Finance made a statement to the House. I have a question for the government House leader which relates directly to what the minister said. On page 14237 of Hansard, the minister is reported as having said:

> In addition to what I said, Mr. Speaker, given appropriate parliamentary arrangements, I am prepared to consider referring several matters to a parliamentary committee.

Further down the page we find the following:

> These matters include rules relating to corporate reorganization, taxation of whole life insurance—

The minister included charitable foundations, retirement allowances and work in progress. Specifically, would the government House leader give us an interpretation of what the minister means when he said "prepared to consider referring several matters to a parliamentary committee"? Can he tell us when these matters will be referred to a parliamentary committee and in what form they will be referred? Can he also give us the assurance that those sections of the ways and means motion which relate to those matters will be withdrawn until such time as they have been considered by that parliamentary committee?

● (1540)

Those are my three very specific questions. I wonder if the government House leader could deal with them since they very directly relate to remarks made in the last sitting by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker, I will inquire of the Minister of Finance and will gladly report to the hon. member through his House leader.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader. I would like to know when or if the government will introduce legislation into this House to provide for a program of employment through municipalities across this country, particularly given the fact that the government recently cut back on funding to municipalities and therefore added to the unprecedented high level of unemployment in this country. When will the government introduce an employment program applied through the municipalities to create some employment in this country to get the economy moving again?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will inquire of the minister responsible for such policy, and if it is the intention of the government to introduce any legislation, I will be glad to let the hon. member know through his House leader.

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, I have a question as well for the government House leader on a matter of House business. It arises from commitments given to a number of members of all three parties shortly before the Christmas break. It relates to a request that the Minister of the Environment discuss with the government House leader the setting up of a special committee or a special task force on forestry across Canada. That commitment was given in the standing committee, and it may be that either the minister or, perhaps, the chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry has now discussed it with the government House leader. If so, would the government House leader advise us whether those consultations have taken place, and advise us of the decision, if any? If there has been a decision, when will we be likely to see him bring forward a government House order in the House so that we can get on with that task force study which has been requested by the IWA, the Canadian Forestry Association and both opposition parties over the last number of months?

Mr. Pinard: The hon. member must understand that it will be necessary for me to inquire of the minister what he said in committee. If anything must be done on this subject, I will be glad to report to the hon. member through his House leader.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege concerning which I gave Your Honour notice. Therefore, I am deferring to my colleagues who, I believe, still have important questions on House business.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway on government business?

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Madam Speaker. I have an important question on House business with regard to the energy security act. I am in receipt of a copy of a letter from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the Conservative critic on energy, the hon. member for Calgary Centre, in which the minister rejects splitting up the energy security act.

My question is, when does the government expect that that act will be tabled in a revised form? Will there be revisions to the act to include an energy tax grant, an energy grant to the old people of this country and to the other poor people who are forced to pay very high prices for energy and are getting no relief from the government? Does he expect that kind of an amendment when the bill comes in, and when will it come in?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, that is a very good question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I will be glad to talk to him and report to the hon. member through his House leader.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I have a second question for the House leader concerning the introduction of combines legislation. Could the House leader indicate when we might expect the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act? Will we be forced to wait until after the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission has reported and the provisions for the Kent commission have been established in the House?

Mr. Pinard: I am sure that the hon. member is very serious in his question. Therefore, if after consultation with the appropriate minister I am in the position to give him a very serious answer, I will do that through his House leader.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton on House business?

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Yes, Madam Speaker. My question is directed to the government House leader. In view of the fact that well over one million Canadians are unemployed, has the government—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): I want to ask the House leader, considering the fact that Unemployment Insurance Commission offices are taxed to the point of overload and people cannot get their benefits or even register complaints, what plans have been made by the government to streamline the Unemployment Insurance Commission—

Madam Speaker: That is not government business. That could be asked during the course of the question period.

The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody on government business?

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, the questions we are asking relate to unemployment. We would like to know what legislation might be forthcoming to deal with that very serious and tragic problem in Canada. Nearly a year ago a task force of this House presented a report—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. No speeches. Simply ask a question concerning whatever legislation the hon. member seeks information.

Mr. Rose: It is certainly not my intention at all to abuse the privileges of the House or the Speaker. However, I would like to ask the government House leader a question. Both the Department of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Science Council of Canada believe that conservation initiatives and alternative energy measures are far more labour intensive than megaprojects and Candu reactors, things which are currently preoccupying our energy department. Is the minister aware of any legislation about to come before this House which would be a positive government response to alternative energy, the report and the nature of that—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is obviously arguing the question.

Mr. Rose: I wonder if I could just restate—

Madam Speaker: No, order!

Mr. Rose: Well, on a point of order—

Madam Speaker: Order! The hon. member is arguing the question. He had a precise question. Once he had asked that question, that was sufficient. If the hon. minister has a reply, he may now reply to that question.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, there are many ways to deal with this situation. We have a budget. We will have many bills flowing from that budget which will be debated the minute the NDP will allow this Parliament to work. We are ready to work with very good legislation to help farmers in this country. We have a bill today, Bill C-85, Canagrex, with which we are not able to proceed because many questions which could be put later on or through House leaders are being posed by the hon. members of the NDP. Therefore, from now on, out of respect for the farmers of this country, I will take note of all questions on House business and report to the House leaders at the next meeting.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi on House business?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Yes, Madam Speaker. In view of the serious problems to be discussed in this Parliament, I wonder when hon. members opposite will let us get on with House business and stop trying to score cheap political points.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as House leader for the government. In view of the lay-offs which have occurred in the mining communities of Leaf Rapids and Lynn Lake in my riding, I was wondering whether the government will introduce legislation to ensure that it knows ahead of time when massive lay-offs will take place, that government officials will meet with company and union officials to decide whether such lay-offs are indeed necessary, or whether there might be ways of getting around lay-offs, such as on-the-job training programs and government funds to provide for communities such as Leaf Rapids and Lynn Lake. Does the government have any plans to introduce such legislation, or to see if they are necessary, to make sure that the—Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Comox-Powell River.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I have another question for the House leader since he is so forthcoming on matters of legislation. Could the House leader tell us if there will be amendments to the Indian Act this session of Parliament? Does the government intend to allow companion legislation to accompany changes in the Indian Act so that independent bands would be allowed to develop as their status would require?

• (1550)

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I have a further question for the government House leader. Considering the amount of unemployment in the lumber and construction industries in this country, does the government have any plans to increase housing for native people to help boost employment in the woods, in the lumber and construction industries, and also provide needed housing for native people in this country?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You're dragging, boys; pick it up. Show more enthusiasm.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council and government House leader. It refers to cow-calf operations in western Canada. Will the minister indicate whether the government is going to bring forward concrete and precise legislation which will indicate once and for all the government's intention regarding beef marketing boards, in view of the uncertainty and confusion existing particularly in cow-calf operations in western Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I have a short question for the government House leader. The hon. member for Brant put the following question to the government House leader: Is there a special program, a special policy or a special bill aimed at fighting unemployment in Canada? He also pointed out that a number of people had been laid off in Ontario and Quebec and that there were many problems in southern Ontario, more specifically in the riding of Brant. I would appreciate it if the minister would say whether a special program exists at this time for the purpose of fighting unemployment in Canada. This is a very short question and I do want an answer.

[English]

Mr. Parker: Madam Speaker, my question is also for the government House leader. It is with regard to the heavy lay-offs in the lumber industry in British Columbia. Hundreds of people are being laid off. The railways are being affected by this. Is the minister prepared to bring in legislation to deal with those kinds of lay-offs, which are manifesting over and over—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. These are all questions which would be better answered during the course of the question period. I remind hon. members that government business does not, in the terms we consider it at this period, have the scope to cover all government activities for all time. Government business has to do with what is being proposed in terms of legislation to be put before this House. It is legislation that has been announced by ministers. Hon. members know it will come forward at some time. I think members are abusing this particular time for questioning the President of the Privy Council on government business.

Mr. Nielsen: Not all members.

Madam Speaker: It cannot address the whole scope of government activities and government business.

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I would really appreciate an answer from the government House leader on this important matter which affects Canada's children. Inasmuch as last spring and for a number of months the health and welfare committee—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, just rule that out of order.

Madam Speaker: Order. I cannot allow that as government business. I really cannot.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I have a question that I would ask the minister to answer. The Canadian people are really angry, even if the Tories are not. They want some answers from the government. My question is this.

Madam Speaker: Order. Members should be reminded that there is a time for debating and a time for asking questions about government business. Government business does not deal with debate. I cannot allow debate to take place at this time. Hon. members will understand that if I do, what will happen will be a prolongation of the question period without any proportion of questions allocated to the different parties in this House. I cannot allow that. If members have questions relating to government business that has been announced, they can ask them. Otherwise I will have to rule them out of order.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, my question did relate to that. I will try to phrase it slowly. With regard to the reshuffle of the cabinet, the DREE minister and the minister for external affairs, can we expect legislation dealing with that reshuffle? Second, since DREE is affected, when will there be special legislation with respect to unemployment in the maritime provinces where we are told people are really suffering? Can I get an answer to that question? It is a reasonable question.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member will recall the minister said that from now on he will take notice of all questions. He may answer them if he wishes. That is the reason I am not recognizing him after each question. He said he would take notice of them and report globally.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader. The last minister of DREE promised the hon. member for Joliette and myself that we would have a new RDIA act in the fall of 1981 or the spring of 1982. Does the government intend to keep that commitment? I have no minister to whom I can direct that question.

Mr. Nielsen: You have no question.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council and government House leader. I would like to know if and when the government will be introducing legislation in this House to provide a framework for democratic economic planning so that the problem of unemployment in this country can be attacked in a just and participatory fashion rather than ignored.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the government House leader and President of the Privy Council. Prior to rising for Christmas, the minister responsible for DREE indicated to us that he was prepared to reconsider legislation that refers to DREE boundaries in order to bring parts of Canada under DREE agreements where they presently do not exist. My question to the minister is, can we expect this legislation shortly or do we have to wait at least another year for any action?

Mr. Miller: Madam Speaker, my question to the government House leader is with regard to Bill C-8, the coastal protection bill. Many fishermen in Atlantic Canada are concerned about that bill. They are already hard hit by lay-offs in the industry. There is considerable concern that any increase in pollution in the area will further decrease the income of fishermen. Can we be assured that Bill C-8 will be put before the House very soon?

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, will the House leader be presenting legislation following up the report on Canada's children which was studied and presented last spring by the health and welfare committee, dealing particularly with poverty, which is really soul-destroying for many of Canada's children and their parents?

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I would ask the House leader if it is the government's intention to bring forward legislation on the air accident investigation tribunal as recommended by the Dubin commission. Will the government committee that has been struck report to the House of Commons with its recommendations before the government drafts that legislation?

• (1600)

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport indicated that legislation would be incorporated establishing a VIA Rail act. It still has not reached the Order Paper. Can the minister tell us if the bill is ready and when it will be called for first reading? When will it be called for debate?

Mr. Miller: Madam Speaker, my question to the House leader relates to the task force of the British Columbia fishing industry which has had a mandate to discuss licensing of fishermen. It is a very serious problem. In view of the fact that the Royal Bank of Canada is now consolidating its position on ownership of licences, could the House leader indicate if the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is anticipating any early action to curtail the ownership of licences in the hands of the Royal Bank of Canada?

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, I too would like to address a question on House business to the House leader. It concerns a commitment made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare a few months ago to address urgently the matter of senior citizens living in poverty.

In light of the report of the National Council of Welfare today that 41.5 per cent of families headed by females are living below the poverty line, can the House leader tell the House how soon his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, will be addressing, through legislation, the incredible and shockingly serious situation?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, my question is to the President of the Privy Council and government House leader. It refers to the Small Business Development Bond which was to be the leverage for providing funding to small businesses of an unincorporated nature and farmers. As we know, that bill has been gutted. Will the minister indicate to this House whether the government will fulfil its promise to expand the small business development bond with an emphasis on development? Will he indicate when that measure will come in and if, in fact, it will be available to firms and farmers other than those in dire straits or who are going into bankruptcy?

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader and President of the Privy Council. I hope that he not only takes notice of this question but will take some action on it. Previous federal budgets have promised investment in the area of urban transit, an action that would provide significant employment at a time when there is a high level of unemployment. When will the minister be bringing forth legislation in this House that will provide for a comprehensive plan of investment in urban transit across this country?

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, my question concerns the freedom of information act which the government is stalling in committee. Could the minister tell the House when the government proposes to bring that measure out of committee and into the House for final reading so we in the opposition can obtain some information as to why there is no industrial strategy, or why the industrial strategy has been rejected in Canada to solve Canada's very serious unemployment problem? Will the minister tell us when he expects that freedom of information act to come back to the House so that we may get that required information on the government's failure to act on unemployment?

Mr. Rose: I have a question relating to unemployment insurance and how farm workers are treated by that legislation. Section 16 requires them to work for the same employer for 25 days in order to qualify. This does not apply to plumbers or carpenters. Will the government House leader ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration when he intends to amend Section 16—

Madam Speaker: Order. That is not government business.

Mr. Sargeant: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the government House leader if he can tell the House when the government will bring before the House the long promised revisions to UIC regulations? In particular, I am concerned about the unfairness of the regulations as they apply to freshwater fishermen who often reach their quotas before they have the particular number of days necessary to qualify for unemployment insurance. Would the government House leader tell us when legislation concerning this will be brought before the House?

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POLICING AGREEMENT WITH GOVERNMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, during the question period I was asked to produce and table an agreement and I agreed to do so. I understood that the agreement to which the hon. member who asked the question was referring, was the policing contract between the province of British Columbia and the federal government. He subsequently sent me a note indicating that in fact he was referring to an agreement between Olson and the "E" Division of the RCMP.

I am prepared to table the policing contract between the government of British Columbia and the federal government. In fact, I think that that document may already have been tabled. However, I am not prepared to table the agreement which the hon. member asked for in his note. I have not seen the blues and I am not certain whether he made it clear.

Mr. Clark: Abundantly.

Mr. Kaplan: If he was referring to the agreement between Olson and "E" Division of the RCMP, my position on that is simply that that agreement is part of the provincial policing service and control over it is in the hands of the British Columbia government, and in particular in the hands of the attorney general of that province.

Although I have a copy of that agreement, if I took any other position and made it public, I believe I would be undermining the administration of justice in that province.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, in relation especially to the quality and the relevance of the Solicitor General's (Mr. Kaplan) answers in the House over the last couple of years, I always had the impression that he was often in dreamland during question period and he certainly proved that today.

My question specifically related to the Olson RCMP agreement. As a matter of fact, I referred to certain clauses of the policing agreement to point out that it was under the strict supervision and control of the Government of Canada in relation to internal police services, especially the management of provincial police services and the administration and application of police procedures in British Columbia.

As a matter of fact, I was very careful with my wording and I emphasized it a couple of times. The very last section of my question to the Solicitor General was: "Would the Solicitor General summarize the important parts of the agreement the RCMP made with Olson and immediately table that agreement?" That was the end of my question. The Solicitor General then stood up and indicated, I thought within the hearing of everybody—certainly it went out over the airwaves and I think is already on the wire service emanating from Ottawa—that the Solicitor General was going to do exactly that.

If that had not been his answer, I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that the members of this House have been put in the very unfair position of being under the assumption that the agreement would be tabled. He now says again—another contradiction, one of many in this whole fiasco—that he misunderstood the question. I do not think that that is good enough. I think that the hon. minister has misled the House. It may not have been intentional, but nevertheless it is part of the whole sorry facade that we have been listening to in regard to this matter and I must object most strenuously to it.

Before I take my seat, may I point out that I have another question of privilege arising from the procedure witnessed in the House this afternoon.

Madam Speaker: I want to make sure that hon. members understand that this was a point of order and that both members have made their point. However, I am grateful to the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) for making his remarks brief. I can see that he does not accept the point made by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and that is his privilege, but he has made his remarks brief and I think that should be an example to all members.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAWRENCE—PRIORITY OF QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I rise on a completely separate question of privilege. It is on the matter of raising a question of privilege. I think it has been one of the guardians of parliamentary democracy that when the Chair or Table receives notice of a question of privilege, that question of privilege cuts like a hot knife through all other procedures of the House and all other business before the House. I am not talking about the phony facade of a public relations effort such as we have heard this afternoon.

Mr. Waddell: Oh, come on.

Mr. Lawrence: I am talking about a question of privilege taking priority over everything else. Madam Speaker, it is enshrined as one of the basic fundamentals of the procedures of the House. It is indicated very, very clearly in the rules and in every precedent and antecedent in connection with every Speaker in this House—and, as far as I know, every other House which has the British parliamentary system—that privilege takes priority over everything else.

• (1610)

You have mentioned, Madam Speaker, that on Thursday, through an arrangement with the House leaders, the tradition is that we do not delay the House leaders; they are permitted to raise questions, not of government business but of House business. I suggest to Your Honour that even though this is 1982 and the year of metric reforms, as far as I know this is still Monday. As far as I know there was no prior arrangement made with Your Honour or with the members of this House relating to the business of this House. Therefore, I submit that unless Your Honour has some better alibi or excuse than we have heard so far—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: —we should get back to the rules and precedents of this House and stick to rule 81(1) as indicated on page 25 of Beauchesne.

Madam Speaker: Yes, I do have explanations to make to the hon. member which are completely in accordance with the rules of the House and the practices which have been accepted traditionally in this House.

Questions concerning government business are usually taken up on Thursdays, and they take precedence over questions of privilege through an arrangement made among the House leaders.

Mr. Lawrence: We had better change the rules.

Madam Speaker: Questions relating to government business do occur on other days of the week as well and are accepted immediately after the question period. That has been the practice ever since I have been here. Therefore, I have not derogated from that practice.

Prior to an arrangement made some time ago—I do not remember the date, but it was made during the time my predecessor was Speaker of the House—questions of privilege were sometimes raised during question period. Although the hon. member is right in saying that questions of privilege should cut through any debate taking place in the House of Commons like a hot knife, through an arrangement among all the House leaders questions of privilege, which previously were usually accepted during question period, were delayed until after the question period; and since there is an arrangement concerning government business, questions of privilege are taken after government business. That is what I intend to do.

MR. DEANS—APPOINTMENT OF SENATOR TO CABINET—LACK OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to raise a matter which I consider to be a question of privilege and to put it before Your Honour for your consideration.

At the outset I want to say that when Your Honour recognized me some time ago on this matter of privilege, I asked permission to raise a question with the House leader, and that permission was given by the Chair with the concurrence of the House; so therefore I assumed there was unanimous consent to do that.

In any event, according to Beauchesne:

> The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual Members—

I want to put to Your Honour that a practice has grown up which has eroded my privileges as a member. There is in the land at the moment considerable concern about the economy. It is necessary for me as a member to be able to place before the House of Commons a number of questions directly related to economic matters. It is important that those questions be put in the House of Commons to someone who is held responsible for the administration of matters economic, and at the moment the minister who is primarily responsible for economic matters sits in the other place. There is no parliamentary secretary sitting in the House of Commons who answers directly for the senator who has the primary responsibility for matters of economic direction by the Government of Canada as it relates to industrial development.

I therefore put it to Your Honour that under the interpretations both of Erskine May and of Beauchesne—the interpretation which I just recently placed before you—it is of vital importance that there be an opportunity for members to be able to exercise the privilege which enables them to execute their powers, which I am being denied. Not only I, but also every other member of the House of Commons, is being denied a privilege which heretofore we had.

I therefore ask, Madam Speaker, that you consider whether it is appropriate for a member of the Senate to be given a senior portfolio in the cabinet of the government without there sitting in the House of Commons a member who is designated to answer all questions which might otherwise be asked of that minister who has the power to exercise jurisdiction.

Madam Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member because I feel that the question he has raised as a question of privilege is not a question of privilege. It has been a practice of this government and of several governments before to appoint ministers who sit in the other House and to designate a minister or ministers who may answer questions members of this House might have concerning the responsibilities of a particular ministry. At any rate, they can be asked of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), should no minister have been designated. The fact that senators sitting in the other House are appointed ministers is a well established practice and, of course, cannot be questioned. Perhaps this is a question concerning the administration of the government, but it cannot be raised as a question of privilege. So I am afraid that the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr Deans) is not founded.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

TABLING OF LIST OF CABINET COMMITTEES

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I am tabling a list of cabinet committees and their members. As a convenience to the House I suggest this list be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Madam Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For list referred to above, see Appendix.]

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

Madam Speaker: I have received two written statements requesting emergency debates under Standing Order 26, one from the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and one from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). Since the first application I received was the one from the hon. member for Oshawa, I will hear his statement now.

THE ECONOMY

ALLEGED CRISIS REQUIRING NATIONAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the fact that Canada now faces its most severe economic crisis since the Great Depression of the 1930s, with unemployment at a post-war record of 8.6 per cent—in real numbers well over a million Canadians—and inflation at 12.5 per cent, both constituting a national emergency requiring, therefore, an immediate program for national economic recovery with job creation as its highest priority.

Madam Speaker: While the Chair recognizes the importance and the seriousness of this matter, the House will agree that the state of the economy has unfortunately been a recurring subject for debate since the beginning of this session and that a change in the figures relating to unemployment and inflation does not necessarily mean that the business of the House should be set aside in order to have an emergency debate.

It must also be understood that the Speaker's only duty in this instance—and I hope this is well understood—is to determine whether the request for an immediate debate meets the requirements of Standing Order 26. One such requirement can be found in Subsection (5) of Standing Order 26, where it is stated that the Speaker " . . . shall have regard to the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time by other means".

Let me also quote Citation 287 of Beauchesne's fifth edition:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

The Chair cannot ignore the fact that there will be other opportunities to debate this matter during the current supply period.

Therefore, although the subject matter of this application is of the greatest importance and of concern to all members of the House, because of the continuing nature of the problem and because of the fact that other opportunities will arise to deal with this matter, I cannot accept the hon. member's application for an emergency debate.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, as you have indicated, I am rising pursuant to Standing Order 26 regarding a matter that is of the utmost urgency. The situation in Poland continues to be critical. It is not clear if military rule will end within the foreseeable future. Meanwhile, food continues to be in extremely short supply. Large numbers of citizens are imprisoned under inhuman conditions. Despite martial law, the economic crisis is deepening and the possibility of default on loans from western banks, including Canadian banks, continues. Many Polish citizens, particularly sailors, have chosen Canada as a place of refuge. Several western governments have begun to apply sanctions against the Soviet Union and Poland and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) has indicated that Canada is also considering the possibility of sanctions.

Because Canada's attitude to the imposition of military rule has become significant in Poland itself and within the NATO alliance, because sanctions will have an impact on Canada's economy as well as Poland's and because trade and immigration considerations have given Canada an interest in the course of the crisis, I believe the House of Commons should have the opportunity to register its feelings with the government and the people of Poland on behalf of Canada and to urge the Government of Canada to make it clear that Canadians do not approve of the imposition or the course of martial law in Poland.

If Your Honour finds that the Polish crisis raises important issues in Canada's foreign policy on which the House should be heard, I would move at the appropriate time that the House do now adjourn.

Madam Speaker: In this particular case the Standing Order states that the matter must be specific and important, requiring urgent consideration, and indeed the subject of the right hon. member's application meets some of these criteria. Hon. members will recall that the House dealt with this subject last December when two motions were proposed and debated and another motion was adopted by the House.

There is no doubt that the right hon. member raises a very important subject, but I cannot ignore the provisions of Standing Order 26(5) which require me to have regard to the extent to which the matter concerns the administrative responsibility of the government or could come within the scope of ministerial action.

The right hon. member has not made that relationship sufficiently clear for me to conclude that there are grounds for allowing debate under the Standing Order, where a debate might demonstrate that some urgent domestic component would resolve or help resolve the particular crisis in Poland, or the impact that the suggestions made in the course of that debate would have inside Canada.

Undoubtedly there will be other avenues that can be pursued in achieving a debate upon this very important subject. As hon. members are aware, tomorrow has been designated as a supply day and the right hon. member may wish to consider this possibility.

Therefore, with regret, I must decline the right hon. member's application.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Madam Speaker: I need a motion in writing from the hon. member.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, it is on its way.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has just moved the adjournment of the House and his motion was not in writing, as is required by the Standing Orders. We on this side of the House are ready to work and Canadians expect this Parliament to work. The NDP wants Parliament to rest and not sit today. That is a shame, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have the motion and it is my duty to put it to the House immeditately. It is moved by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That the House do adjourn.

All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those against the motion please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

EDUCATION TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Question No. 2,656—Mr. Herbert:

1. In each of the past five years, by province, what percentage of the total spending was the amount transferred unconditionally by the government to provincial treasuries for post-secondary education?

2. At what level of instruction does the government consider that post-secondary education starts?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): 1. The table below shows the amounts transferred unconditionally by the Government of Canada to provincial treasuries for post-secondary education in each of the past five years.

2. The legislation authorizing the aforementioned unconditional transfers does not define the level of instruction at which post-secondary education starts. Other programs such as the Canada Student Loans Program, have their own definitions, as does Statistics Canada for statistical purposes. The CSLP is limited to the post-secondary level., i.e. any student attending full time at an educational institution other than an elementary or secondary school.

2. Did any of these employees receive unemployment insurance benefits and, if so, how many and at what cost to the taxpayer?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canada Post Corporation and the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission/Department as follows:

1. As defined in the Public Service Employment Act, no employee was laid off because of the 1981 postal strike, rather they were put on what is called "off duty status".

2. CEIC computer records indicate that 15,185 postal employees received a total of $5,914,601 in unemployment insurance benefits during the 1981 strike.

These figures may not include all postal employees who received UI benefits during the strike because UI claimants are coded in accordance to occupation. Therefore, the figures given do not include occupations such as truck drivers, secretaries and other clerical and casual workers, which cannot be distinguished from non-post office occupations.

Question No. 3,166—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Department of National Defence place contracts in the amount of (a) $34,750 for jackets (b) $18,000 for slacks (c) $15,180 for skirts with Lounge Fashion Clothes Ltd. and, if so, in each case, how many items were purchased and for whom?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Department of Supply and Services awarded three contracts, on behalf of the Department of National Defence, to Lounge Fashion Clothes Ltd., Vancouver, B.C., for the manufacture of ladies services dress jackets, slacks and skirts. They are required for issue to female members of the regular force and primary reserve. They have not yet been delivered. Quantities called up are as follows: (a) 500 jackets (b) 500 slacks (c) 460 skirts.

There are very few sources of supply for large quantity procurement of ladies structured (tailored) garments in Canada. The quantities called up on these three small contracts represent less than 5 per cent of the department's annual maintenance requirements. This was an attempt by the Department of Supply and Services to develop a new source of supply in western Canada for this type of uniform.

JAPANESE FISHING VESSELS

Question No. 3,214—Mr. Crosby:

1. (a) How many Japanese fishing vessels were licensed or otherwise authorized to fish in Canadian territorial waters in (i) 1980 (ii) 1981 and what were the terms and conditions of the licenses or authorities (b) how many of the vessels actually fished in Canadian territorial waters in (i) 1980 (ii) 1981 and what was the amount and size of the catch of tuna, swordfish and any other species recorded?

Order Paper Questions

2. Where are the swordfish, which are caught by the vessels, marketed and does the marketing have an adverse effect on the Canadian swordfish industry?

3. What was the economic value of the Canadian swordfish industry in terms of size of the catch and other benefits in (a) 1981 (b) any prior years in which the industry was in operation?

4. Are steps being taken by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to assist the Canadian swordfish industry on the east coast in the marketing of swordfish in the United States and elsewhere and, if so, what steps?

5. What non-Canadian fishermen are authorized to catch swordfish in Canadian territorial waters and is the marketing of their catch adversely affecting the Canadian swordfish industry?

6. (a) What action was taken by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans or any other government agency to regulate control and to monitor the fishing activity of the Japanese vessels (b) were violations reported and, if so, what were they?

7. Were arrangements permitted or made for the provision, maintenance and repair of the Japanese vessels and, if so, what were they?

8. Were there economic benefits for Canada from fishing activity by the Japanese vessels and, if so, what were they?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. The number of Japanese fishing vessels licensed to fish in Canadian waters and the number which actually fished is as follows:

	(i) 1980		(ii) 1981
	(a) Licensed	(b) Fished	(a) Licensed	(b) Fished
Squid and Argentine	17	17	13	13
Tuna	87	62	106	93
Pacific Hake	4	4	2	2
	108	83	121	108

The terms and conditions of the licences can be found under section 11 of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Regulations.

The size of the Japanese catch of tuna and swordfish are as follows: (M.T.)

	Bigeye	Albacore	Swordfish	Bluefin
1980	1612.32	193.2	144.6	167.54
1981		not yet available		160.0 (preliminary)

The size of the Japanese catch of squid, Argentine and Pacific hake are as follows: (M.T.)

	Squid	Argentine	Pacific Hake
1980	16,134.73	1,526.42	817
1981	6,045.9	2,336.55	131.5

2. The swordfish caught by the Japanese vessels are taken as a bycatch of their tuna fishery in Canadian waters. The incidental catches of swordfish by Japanese vessels are marketed in Japan.

Their marketing of swordfish in Japan does not have an adverse effect on the Canadian swordfish industry inasmuch as Canadian swordfish does not compete in the Japanese market. As Canadian swordfish is not frozen at sea, it does not meet the product specifications required by the Japanese market.

3. The Canadian swordfishery virtually ceased in 1971 but commenced again in the mid-1970s with the catch being transshipped to U.S. vessels at sea; no catch data are available for most of this time period.

The size and value of the Canadian swordfish catch is very difficult to obtain because most of the catch was transshipped at sea to U.S. vessels prior to 1981. Only estimates of total swordfish catch and their value are available for recent years.

	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981
Quota	—	—	3,000	3,500	3,500
Total catch (M.T.)	117	3,053	2,971	1,855	345
Total value	$215,999	$6,010,894	$8,149,626	$4,169,964	$608,470 (estimate)

4. The department's Inspection and Technology Branch has had discussions with U.S. authorities in an effort to have the American mercury standard relaxed. The department has tried to convince the U.S. to change its allowable level to two parts per million. There is no immediate prospect of the standard being changed in the foreseeable future.

With respect to the Japanese market, the department discussed the possibility of swordfish exports to Japan in the most recent Canada-Japan bilateral fisheries discussions. In addition, the department has explored the possibility of over-the-side sales by Canadian swordfishermen to Japanese freezer vessels.

No steps have been taken by the department to date with respect to swordfish promotion in the Canadian market.

5. There are no non-Canadian fishermen, other than the Japanese, authorized to catch swordfish in Canadian territorial waters. As previously indicated, swordfish is caught by the Japanese only as a bycatch to their tuna fishery in Canadian waters.

6. (a) The department has a number of mechanisms to regulate, control and monitor the fishing activity of the Japanese vessels.

Regulatory and control mechanisms include restrictions on the fishing season, fishing gear marking regulations, area restrictions as well as quotas. With respect to quotas, there exists a 180 m.t. fleet ceiling on bluefin tuna for Japanese vessels in the Canadian zone. Once the Japanese tuna fleet attains this quota, they must leave the Canadian zone. In addition, there is a 10 per cent swordfish bycatch allowance. The terms and conditions of the licences include requirements for regularly reporting catches, bycatches, zone entries and departures and port entries and departures.

Monitoring mechanisms include sea surveillance (boardings at sea), air surveillance (sightings), observers on a proportion of the foreign vessels and port inspections.

(b) Swordfish bycatch violations were reported in 1981 for 16 Japanese vessels on which catches exceeded the 10 per cent bycatch allowance.

7. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans' policy concerning ship repairs is to relate Japanese crew transfers in Canadian ports to an understanding that substantial repairs of Japanese vessels would take place in Canadian shipyards. In 1981, Japanese planned crew transfers involving 1,045 people (expected expenditures by these crews in port amounted to Canadian $3.3 million) as well as repairs in Canadian shipyards for 4 vessels valued at about Canadian $2.2 million.

8. The revenues generated by Japanese tuna longliners from September 1, 1981, to October 30, 1981, are estimated as follows:

	Canadian
Port expenses	$1,560,000
Fishing fees	250,000
Fuel	4,543,000
Bait	1,700,000
Cash expenditures by crew in Canada	1,000,000
	$9,053,000

The revenues generated by Japanese squid and Argentine trawlers for the 1981 season (July 1, 1981 to October 31, 1981) are estimated as follows:

	Canadian
Port expenses (including fuel)	$8,835,000
Fishing fees	500,000
Crew exchanges	500,000
Ship repairs	2,200,000
	$12,035,000

Revenues generated by Japanese vessels in the Pacific hake fishery are not yet available.

(a) $158,500,000 (decrease);

2. What are the aims and objectives of the association?

3. Is there a comparable association in French-speaking Canada, such as Canadian Parents for English, which enjoys similar support and, if so (a) what are the aims and objectives of that organization (b) were funds extended to that organization and, if so, what was the amount, by province, for each year 1978 to 1980?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): 1. Federal funds accorded to Canadian Parents for French through Secretary of State Department are as follows:

1978-79	National		$ 60,958
	Newfoundland chapter		5,000
	Ontario chapter		1,130

"To ensure that each Canadian child has the opportunity to acquire as great a knowledge of the French language and culture as he or she is willing and able to obtain; to promote the best possible types of French language learning opportunities; to establish and maintain effective communication between interested parents and educational and governmental authorities concerned with the provision of French language learning opportunities."

3. Not to the knowledge of the Department of Secretary of State.

NATIONAL NATIVE ALCOHOL ABUSE PROGRAM

Question No. 3,272—Mr. Manly:

1. What are the salary scales for counsellors in the alcohol and drug abuse program under Indian Health Services in the Department of National Health and Welfare?

2. What was the estimate for expenditures for the program, nationally and by province?

3. What amount was actually spent by the program in each of the past five years, nationally and by province?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Counsellors in the National Native Alcohol Abuse Program (NNAAP) are not public servants, and therefore, do not have a salary scale, as some 50 groups in the public service have. Salaries are established in some cases by NNAAP regional advisory board, and in others, rates of reimbursement of these workers are established by individual alcohol abuse projects. Generally, their salary ranges from $11,500 to $16,700.

2. For FY 81/82, Treasury Board authorized a total of $8.304 million for the program. This amount is subdivided into a contribution and an operating allotment, and (with the exception of salaries for the national office of the alcohol abuse program, which is charged to the Department of National Health and Welfare) is cost-shared equally between the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, as per table.

The distribution of funds to regions and the national office for FY 81/82, broken down into operating and contributions allotments is shown in table.

3. The amount actually spent by the program in each of the past five years, nationally and by regions is as shown in table.

EVALUATION OF DRUG "INDERAL"

Question No. 3,280—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Miss Jean Sattar of the health protection branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare state on October 28, 1981 or thereabouts that the branch would not determine if the drug "Inderal" could be prescribed for the prevention of heart attacks and that it would require clinical study before the drug could be advertised as useful in this regard and, if so, does the department realize (a) that the drug has been on the market in Canada for approximately one decade (b) that the drug is officially prescribed for the purpose of treating high blood pressure and heart arhythmias, but that it has been common practice in the medical profession to prescribe the drug as a beta-blocker and a preventative for heart attacks, even though the department has not allowed it to be advertised as such?

2. Does the department intend to bring itself up to date on the use of and results of the drug and, if so, on what date?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No. The comment referred to the procedure by which data on drug studies is brought to the attention of the department (health protection branch) for evaluation, and if satisfactory for the issue to the manufacturer of a notice of compliance.

(a) The health protection branch (HPB) issued a notice of compliance for Inderal (propanolol) for use in arhythmias in 1968, as an anti-angina drug in 1969, as an antihypertensive in 1974 and in the prophylaxis of migraine in 1979.

(b) The name beta-blocker indicates a generic function of blockade of B-adrenergic receptors. One of these beta-blockers, Inderal, has been sold in Canada for the indications in 1(a) since the dates indicated. However, the way a physician uses a drug is governed by provincial statutes relating to medical practice. The HPB encourages submission of detailed data and will examine expeditiously any data presented to it concerning new indications.

2. The department considers itself informed on the drug.

COST TO GOVERNMENT OF OAS AND GIS PAYMENTS

Question No. 3,295—Mr. Dantzer:

In 1981 dollars what is the estimate of the cost to the government for (a) OAS payments (b) GIS payments for (i) 1986 (ii) 1991 (iii) 2001 (iv) 2011 (v) 2021 (vi) 2031?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): All figures in 1981 dollars.

(a)	(i)	1986—$ 6,609 million
	(ii)	1991—$ 7,516 million
	(iii)	2001—$ 8,609 million
	(iv)	2011—$ 9,765 million
	(v)	2021—$12,626 million
	(vi)	2031—$16,034 million

Note: Cost in constant dollars is directly proportional to growth in the over-65 population. The above figures and based upon Projection 4 in "Population Projection for Canada and the Provinces 1976-2001", Statistics Canada Catalogue 91-520 Occasional.

(b) (i) 1986—$2,347 million

(ii), (iii), (iv), (v) and (vi)—No projection available.

The guaranteed income supplement is an income tested program. Expenditures depend on the amount of income pensioners receive from other sources. Since this income may vary greatly over time due to alterations in economic growth, interest rates and interest income, personal savings, growth in other pension plans, etc., accurate cost projections for these years are not possible.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

Question No. 3,297—Mr. Dantzer:

1. (a) How many individuals currently hold registered government annuities (b) what is the total amount of the annuities and what rate of interest is being earned?

2. Is it possible for an individual to remove his/her government annuity and place it in an annuity earning better rates of interest and, if not, for what reason?

3. Have actions been taken to ensure that each individual's request is handled in the most satisfactory method for that individual and, if so, what were such actions?

4. (a) On what date was the rate of interest on government annuities last changed (b) how many times since then has the rate of interest been reviewed and, of the last two times, what was the principal reason for not increasing the rate of return?

5. Are government annuities transferable to (a) government pension plans (b) provincial government pension plans (c) para-public pension plans, such as teachers' association plans (d) private pension plans and (i) if not, for what reason (ii) if so, for what reason?

6. If the transfer of government annuities was possible, would it improve an individual's pension and, if so, at whose cost?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. (a) There are an estimated 228,931 individuals currently holding government annuities.

(b) On March 31, 1981, 264,270 contracts and group certificates were being administered by the Annuities Branch. Of these, 143,170 were under payment to nearly 118,500 annuitants who received a total of $92.2 million during the fiscal year 1980/81. The rate of interest is 7 per cent.

2. Yes, the branch automatically refunds the payments plus interest if the annuity is less than $10 per annum. Also, unless prohibited by a particular pension contract, the annuitant has the option of removing his/her annuity if it will be less than $120 per annum. Otherwise, section 10(1) of the Government Annuities Act and section 12 of the Government Annuities Improvement Act, forbid withdrawal by the annuitant. Section 17 of the government annuities regulations, however, permits group certificate holders who are now contributing to federal or provincial superannuation plans to transfer the value of their annuity to their new pension plan.

3. The Annuities Branch responds to requests and inquiries in accordance with the legislation and attempts to do so in the most efficient manner possible.

4. (a) The interest rate was last changed by the Government Annuities Improvement Act, assented to on December 20, 1975 but retroactive to April 1, 1975.

(b) The interest rate has been reviewed twice since 1975. In both cases, the government decided that no increase in the rate of return would be allowed. The reasons for the decision were explained to the House at the time (Hansard, at p. 2230 on June 18, 1980 and at pp. 10972 and 10973 on June 25, 1981).

5. As stated in the reply to question No. 2, only certain group annuity certificates are transferable.

(a) Yes

(b) Yes

(c) No

(d) No

(i) and (ii) All of the above are governed by section 17 of the government annuities regulations.

6. If the holder of a Canadian Government Annuity contract (or group certificate) could transfer the funds supporting that contract to another insurer, the value of the annuity to which he would then become intitled would depend upon the rate of return paid by the other insurer, the actuarial basis on which that insurer worked, and the number of years to maturity of the contract at the time of transfer. Depending upon the type of contract, it is possible, in present money market conditions, that the amount of annuity paid would increase.

Such transfers, were they to be allowed, would be charges to the government annuities account within the Consolidated Revenue Fund. At this time, the replacement of such funds would result in increased costs to the taxpayers of Canada.

IMPORTATION OF EGGS FROM U.S.A.

Question No. 3,321—Mr. Cossitt:

1. To the knowledge of the government, are hundreds of cases of eggs coming into the Ottawa area each month from the state of Minnesota in the United States for sale to Ottawa area hospitals as well as certain other institutions and, if so (a) for what reason do eggs have to be imported from Minnesota when there has been a surplus of eggs in Canada in recent years (b) was this brought about by any regulations of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency or by any other actions of the government?

2. Are egg distributors required to apply for import permits when surplus eggs are available in the immediate area and, if so, for what reason?

3. What is the retail cost in Canadian funds for a dozen eggs imported in this fashion at the time (a) this question is asked (b) the answer to this question is prepared?

4. Does the government consider this to be a ridiculous situation and, if so, will it take steps to remedy it?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), a certain traditional level of imports are allowed. This is established at .675 percent of last year's level of production. Egg imports are coming into Canada all year round. Traditionally, the volume rises with the increase in demand at Easter and Christmas. Supplementary permits will be issued to import more than the traditional amounts when it can be demonstrated that a Canadian supply is not available. The traditional import levels are about 200,000 boxes of 15 dozen with supplementaries raising this to 700,000 boxes during years of balanced supply. This year these imports are much lower, just over 200,000 boxes of 15 dozen to the end of October, 1981, which is about the minimum under GATT. Once the eggs have been received by the importer they lose visibility with respect to where they are marketed through the wholesale and retail chain. It is known, however, that some imported eggs are on sale in the Ottawa area.

2. No.

3. The retail costs associated with handling and processing eggs through the private sector wholesale-retail trade is not known. These areas of cost are not monitored under the supply management program for eggs.

4. The level of imports of eggs into Canada this year has been kept to the bare minimum under the GATT. No special action is required or possible by the government.

LANSDOWNE PORT OF ENTRY

Question No. 3,322—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. Percy Jodoin, Director of Immigration at the port of Lansdowne, Ontario, retire in September, 1981 or thereabouts and, if so (a) is his position now vacant (b) will the position be filled and, if so, on what date?

2. Is the government considering placing immigration at the port of Lansdowne under one of the adjacent ports at Prescott, Ontario or at Kingston, Ontario and, if so, what would be the reasons for choosing (a) Prescott (b) Kingston?

3. (a) Is the government aware that the port falls within the united counties of Leeds and Grenville, a geographically historical district (b) would placing the port under Kingston, which is far outside the boundaries of Leeds-Grenville, mean the same level of service could not be provided as in the past?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes. Mr. Percy Jodoin, manager of the Canada Immigration Centre at Lansdowne retired in September, 1981.

(a) Yes.

(b) As part of its operational planning for 1982-83 and beyond, Ontario region is presently examining the organizational configuration of the Ottawa district in which the Lansdowne port of entry is located. A final recommendation has not yet been formulated.

2. See 1 (b) above.

3. (a) Yes.

(b) No; service to the public is always a prime consideration in resource allocation and operational planning.

COSTS OF DRUGS

Question No. 3,324—Mr. Herbert:

Was a study made of possible cost savings to the public resulting from the use of generic drugs and, if so, was the report made public?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Yes, a study was done by the Economic Council of Canada and published in May, 1981 as a technical report. The study is entitled: "Regulating the Price of Prescription Drugs in Canada: Compulsory Licensing, Product Selection, and Government Reimbursement Programmes", by Paul K. Gorecki.

CIVILIAN SECURITY SERVICE

Question No. 3,373—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Under what authority did the government proceed with setting up a civilian security service to replace the RCMP security service before the McDonald commission report and its recommendations were debated in Parliament?

2. Is it government policy to make major changes in the operation of any department or service without the approval of Parliament and is this policy consistent with the democratic process and, if so, in what way?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1. Although the government has decided to establish a civilian security-intelligence agency, it has not yet given effect to its decision. It has, on receipt and examination of the recommendations of the McDonald commission, accepted the recommendation that a civilian security service be established, and has set up a planning and transitional group to develop proposals for implementing the decision and to develop the necessary organizational and administrative arrangements. The government anticipates that the legislative proposals which will be submitted to Parliament in due course will give rise to constructive debate both in Parliament and among the public.

2. Not applicable (see reply to part 1).

FOOD AID TO THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES

Question No. 3,379—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. What was Canada's contribution to food aid for Third World and developing countries for (a) 1980 (b) the first six months of 1981?

2. To which countries were contributions made and, in each case (a) what food products were contributed and at what dollar value (b) what was the (i) administrative cost (ii) distribution cost (iii) value of the food product?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs):

1. (a) FY 1980-81: $180,121,932.

(b) FY 1981-82: Food aid contributions are made on a fiscal year basis. Because separate memoranda of understanding must be negotiated with each country receiving bilateral food aid, shipments in the first six months of the fiscal year tend to be less than in the last six months. The approved food aid allocation for FY 1981-82 is $231.5 million. The actual amount shipped as of Oct. 1, 1981 was $104,538,062.59.

2. The first table outlines the recipients (bilateral, multilateral and Canadian NGOs), of food products and the dollar value of shipments made under the 1980-81 Canadian food aid program.

The second table outlines the proposed recipients and food products for the 1981-82 Canadian food aid program.

Administrative costs for the food aid program are covered in two ways:

(a) from the CIDA administrative vote—internal administrative costs for any particular program are not broken out;

(b) from the purchase cost of the commodity—food is purchased on a "free alongside" (FAS) basis. The cost per ton covers all administrative costs, including packaging and inland transportation costs to the dockside. The transportation cost covers all shipping charges (plus overseas inland transportation if needed) and the cost of superintending the loading and unloading.

INDEXING OF PUBLIC SERVICE PENSIONS

Question No. 3,459—Mr. Herbert:

1. On what date is the indexing of public service pensions operative?

2. What is the basis for the calculation of the indexing?

3. What is the percentage of indexing for 1982?

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. January 1 of each year.

2. The formula for the pension escalation is set out in the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. The pension increase payable to a retired public servant in any year is based on the ratio of the benefit index for that year to the benefit index for the year of retirement.

The benefit index for each year is, in turn, determined by multiplying the benefit index for the preceding year by the ratio of the pension index for that year to the pension index of the preceding year.

The pension index for any year is equal to the average of the consumer price index over the period from October to September of the previous year. Thus, the pension index for 1982 equals the average of the consumer price index from October, 1980 to September, 1981.

3. The percentage payable in 1982 to those who are already retired will be 12.2 per cent.

FORECASTS OF GROSS FEDERAL DEBT

Question No. 3,486—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Department of Finance prepare forecasts of the size of the gross federal debt for the fiscal year (a) 1981-82 (b) 1982-83 (c) 1983-84 (d) 1984-85 (e) 1985-86 and, if so, what was it?

2. Did Table 1.2 of the document "Budget in More Detail" only provide estimates of the size of the net federal debt and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): 1 and 2. Net public debt is considered a more useful summary measure of government indebtedness; its increase reflects the budgetary deficit. The gross public debt is inherently subject to additional elements of variability. It is influenced by the specifics of the borrowing program which the government does not plan at a detailed level over the multi-year period of the budget plan.

NUMBER OF CIDA STAFF

Question No. 3,515—Mr. Flis:

1. How many staff work for the Canadian International Development Agency and how many work in (a) Ottawa (b) countries where the agency gives aid?

2. What are the total salaries for staff who work (a) in Ottawa (b) outside Canada?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. For the fiscal year 1981-82, the Canadian International Development Agency has, as of November 30, 1981, a person-year authorization of 1,057 (which includes 11 person-years from the Office of the Comptroller General), as follows:

(a)	In Ottawa/Hull area	1,003
(b)	In countries where CIDA provides development assistance	54
		1,057

2. For the fiscal year 1981-82, salary costs (including overtime and other personnel costs) are estimated at $32,400,000, as follows:

CANAGREX ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-85, to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne opening this session of Parliament it was said that food and agriculture were going to be increasingly important to the Canadian economy in the 1980s. That forecast is certainly coming true, probably quicker than many of us realize. Food was a major item on the agenda of the Ottawa Summit last summer, the Commonwealth Conference in Melbourne, and the North-South Conference at Cancun. I have personally attended two major world conferences dealing with food recently—the ministerial meeting of the World Food Council in Novi Sad, Yugoslavia, in May, and the biennial conference of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization in Rome in November.

In one sense the introduction of this legislation into the chamber is the culmination of a dream I have had for a long time. Before coming to the House of Commons, the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) was a strong promoter of such an organization. It is no secret that I have pushed for a Crown corporation to promote agricultural exports at every opportunity. I am sure that many other hon. members in the House share that dream, and I am confident that the legislation will not run into any roadblocks along the way. However, in another sense this is just the beginning. Getting Canagrex established and at work on behalf of the Canadian agri-food industry is merely the first step along the road to improving Canada's very important food trade picture. Canada needs such a corporation, and I am convinced that a few years down the road we will look back and wonder how we got along without it for so long.

Canada is a trading nation. Our livelihood depends upon it. That was emphasized in the chamber recently when we passed the Meat Import Act. It is re-emphasized by the enthusiasm of all hon. members every time a new sale of grains or oilseeds is announced. Matters affecting international trade probably take up more time in the House than any other single item. The importance of trade was stressed in the recent cabinet reorganization announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The fact that all parties co-operated to allow unanimous approval to introduce the Canagrex bill for first reading before Christmas is further evidence of the high priority we all accord to trade policies and programs.

A number of Canadian companies and agencies have worked successfully in the international marketplace; the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission, for example. Several provincial hog boards have moved aggressively in the export field. About 20 per cent of the nation's pork production has been exported in recent years. In 1980 we shipped 166 million pounds of pork to the United States of America and 70.2 million pounds to Japan. Canada was the largest single supplier of pork to Japan in 1980. The Ontario Bean Producers Marketing Board and the British Columbia Tree Fruit Marketing Board are other examples of organizations which have successfully developed export markets. All those agencies and companies which have successfully marketed Canadian agriculture and food products in the past are to be congratulated. They are doing a good job for Canada. Together they exported $7.8 billion worth of products and earned Canada an agricultural trade surplus of $2.7 billion in 1980. The final figures are not in yet, but agricultural exports in 1981 are expected to exceed imports by between $2.5 billion and $2.75 billion. Hardly any other nation in the world can make the claim that it has a net trade balance in food; Canada is one of them.

However, we produce a great variety of food in the country which is not being offered aggressively in the international marketplace. It is fair to say that Canadians still do a better job at production than at sales. When it comes to food that is ready to eat, processed food, as opposed to agricultural products, we are in a trade deficit position of some $300 million. Some people put it much higher, but surely to goodness they do not expect us to produce grapefruit, oranges, bananas, spices, etc.

Mr. Epp: I thought you did.

Mr. Whelan: Manitoba is probably doing better than the hon. member realizes. He probably does not realize what is going on around him. Turning that deficit around is one of the jobs I and many other people who supported the principle of Canagrex see that organization accomplishing. Many of the food manufacturing firms and commodity marketing boards are small and are unfamiliar with the complexities of the international marketplace. For them Canagrex can serve as a source of expert advice. Even more than that, it can become a partner, helping to arrange financing and sharing the risk in joint ventures. In some cases, where opportunity exists and is not being exploited, Canagrex may act on its own to buy and sell agricultural and food products.

• (1750)

Another area where I see Canagrex playing an important role, Mr. Speaker, is in the government to government trade deals which are becoming more and more common, particularly as the Third World and socialist bloc countries become more involved in world trade. Many of those countries handle all their trade through state-trading agencies. They prefer to deal with Canada through a central agency. Even those countries not considered poor, such as the OPEC members, have no hope of being self-sufficient in food in the near future, so they will be in the market for high quality food products for many years to come. They have made no secret about their desire to deal directly with us, and no secret about their unwillingness to deal with some of the huge multinationals.

An example of that occurred last February when Canada signed the $100 million long-term trade deal with Mexico. The state agency handling the sale for Mexico was Conasupo, an agency which has existed for at least ten years, with powers that possibly Canagrex does not have but which were necessary in that country to provide food for about 25 million people in the lower-income or poverty class at reasonable prices. In the future such deals might be handled with Canagrex acting as the umbrella organization for Canadian firms dealing with Conasupo.

Canagrex will have the dual role, Mr. Speaker, of promoting Canadian goods abroad and of promoting within Canada the importance of trade. One problem that Canada has had in the international market is a tendency on the part of some producer organizations to think of export markets as a way of getting rid of surpluses. It is not uncommon to hear it said in government circles and other places that we should perhaps have special legislation just to sell surpluses. However, Mr. Speaker, the one thing we have to remember is that people do not eat just when we have surpluses; they eat 365 days a year. It therefore follows that there should be long-term contracts to guarantee them a steady supply of high quality Canadian food products. I would suggest a minimum term of five years, possibly even longer, ten or 15 years, similar to coal contracts in Alberta or British Columbia. Some of those coal contracts run for 15 years, which is a form of supply-management if I ever saw one. In these contracts their cost increases are guaranteed, and they start negotiating several years before their contracts run out so they can phase out their production. I asked them why they did this and they said that because of the tremendous capital invested they could not operate in any other way.

So, Mr. Speaker, when one measures the tremendous capital the agricultural industry has invested here in Canada, the individual farmer's investment in land and equipment, it is obvious that the investment has to be utilized.

As I said earlier here today, agriculture with its associated industries is the biggest employer in Canada. Let no one forget that: the biggest single employer. What we are saying with Canagrex is that we can make it an even bigger and more important one. Canada would not be able to establish, for instance, the kind of market we want if we are just going to sell when we have surpluses. I have seen it so often, as a minister, as a backbencher and before that in farm organizations when everyone was striving to make a fast buck with a quick sale of a surplus product somewhere in the world. We have looked for an export market when we had a surplus to dispose of, and ignored it when the domestic market was large enough to handle all our production.

Canada will not be able to establish itself as a serious trading nation with such an attitude. Countries interested in buying Canadian produce will be looking for continuity of supply and that is what we want, because it will mean Canadian producers will have a steady market and a steady income, which is what most of the farmers that I talk to want. I know that if we offer that kind of incentive to the farmers, all you will have to do, Mr. Speaker, is just watch them go.

As I said last February when the cabinet first gave approval to the idea of Canagrex, the agency's job will be to increase the volume and variety of sales of Canadian agricultural and food products. That will mean increased income for farmers and a shot in the arm for the whole economy. It will not be wasting time as we have done in the House today, because Canagrex cannot work if we are going to have that kind of operation.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That was by the NDP.

Mr. Whelan: Agricultural exports are vital to the prosperity of the Canadian food and agriculture sector. Traditionally, agricultural exports have made up 40 to 45 per cent of farm cash receipts. Practically no other country is as dependent on exports as we are.

Canagrex will help to expand Canadian food production and processing, and this will provide many new jobs in an industry which is already one of the nation's largest employers, if not the largest.

As you can see from the legislation, Canagrex will run a tight ship. It will not be a big bureaucracy, as some people have suggested. It will be run by a board of 11 directors reporting to the Minister of Agriculture, seven of whom will be appointed from outside the federal public service, and they will be well qualified to deal in agricultural trade matters.

There will also be a policy advisory committee made up of representatives from provincial governments, the business community and farm organizations which will advise me on all matters associated with market development strategy. The working officers will be a president and two vice-presidents who will be hired to administer Canagrex under the direction of the board of directors.

Hon. members will recognize that to be fully effective and to achieve its objection of reinforcing the export capabilities of the food and agricultural sector, the corporation must have wide-ranging powers. These include the ability to make contracts, enter into joint ventures, provide grants and contributions, give loans and guarantees, hold property and, if necessary, purchase, process, package and export food products. It will be able to charge for its services, and the projects it undertakes are expected to be economically viable.

The bill also provides for Canagrex to be funded annually from money appropriated by Parliament. It will not engage in paying direct subsidies on a product to either producers or processors, nor will it deal in products under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian Dairy Commission unless it is invited to do so. In that way, Mr. Speaker, it will not duplicate the efforts of other Crown agencies.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Whelan: As I was saying when we adjourned at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, Canagrex must have wide-ranging powers to enable it to do the job we want it to do. That includes the ability to make contracts, enter into joint ventures, provide grants and contributions, give loans and guarantees, hold property and, if necessary, purchase, process, package and export food products. Canagrex will be able to charge for its services, and the projects it will undertake are expected to be economically viable.

The bill also provides for Canagrex to be funded annually from money appropriated by Parliament. It will not engage in paying direct subsidies on a product to either producers or processors, nor will it deal in products under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian Dairy Commission unless invited to do so. That is to avoid duplication of the efforts of other Crown agencies.

Canagrex will co-operate with and use existing programs and activities of the federal government wherever appropriate. I will report annually to Parliament on the operations of Canagrex and will table a summary of its annual capital budget.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, breaks new ground in that it requires the management of Canagrex to prepare annually a three-year corporate plan spelling out its proposed activities.

I have spent a lot of time, Mr. Speaker, these past few months discussing with the agriculture and food sector a long-term strategy for the development of an agri-food industry that will keep Canada in the lead in this industry for the remainder of this century. It is an exciting prospect, one which has generated a lot of interest among all sectors of the industry in Canada, from primary producer to consumer.

From the very beginning I have emphasized—and the agri-food strategy document, "Challenge for Growth", repeats this—that market development is the spark which will give life to the strategy. It must be clear to everyone that production without a market is not only a waste of food but is an invitation to financial ruin for the producer.

We cannot just produce and pile it up and hope to God that someone is going to buy it at a fair price. Too often in the past we have seen farmers produce a big crop of an excellent quality product, whether it be from the fields or in the livestock industry, only to sell it in the world market below the cost of production. That is what is happening in the red meat industry in Canada today. Some of this product is going to countries which can well afford to pay a decent price, countries such as the United States of America and Japan. Some of it is going to other countries such as the U.S.S.R. where they can send people into space but cannot feed themselves. There is no reason in the world why we should subsidize them simply because we are efficient and produce surplus only to sell it into their markets below the cost of production. I sometimes wonder why farmers would ever want to produce anything under those circumstances.

So, Mr. Speaker, Canagrex is a very important part of the agri-food strategy because it is one of the ways by which we will achieve market development on which the industry's future depends. In fact, I am convinced we will not be able to open up the necessary markets for food which Canada is ideally situated to supply unless we have a Crown corporation such as Canagrex to represent Canada in the world market place.

I know I can count on the support of this chamber to give swift approval to this bill so that we can take this next important step in the development of the agriculture and food industry. I know I can count on members of the opposition to make short, precise and constructive speeches. Perhaps we can even pass the bill in its entirety this evening, give it second and third reading, and away we go! We can have it in operation, and our farmers could be signing contracts before spring begins.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I certainly welcome this opportunity to enter the debate this evening following the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I welcome the opportunity to make some comments on Bill C-85 which, of course, establishes the Crown corporation of Canagrex. I welcome it because it is at least an indication that this government at long last is showing some interest, for the time being, in the promotion of agriculture or the sale of agricultural products. I wonder why it took some ten months, from February to December, to prepare this legislation when farm organizations and farm leaders have been requesting this type of scheme for at least five or six years. I can recall my first introduction to the Canagrex concept when it was brought to the attention of our caucus back in 1973. The minister may doubt this, but it was brought to our attention back in 1973 by my colleague, the hon. member who still represents the riding of Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton).

However, as we are aware, on February 20, 1981, nearly a year ago, the Minister of Agriculture announced that the cabinet had given approval for the establishment of the agriculture export corporation, Canagrex. As the minister said, "Cabinet has given the green light for the creation of Canagrex". It was announced on February 20, 1981. If it took ten months for the green light, then it is no wonder that the workings of this government have been compared to a traffic jam, because we know that there is a great deal of commotion and a great deal of horn sounding in a traffic jam, but there is virtually little or no forward movement. However, this is really the history and the record of this government, particularly when it comes to dealing with the agricultural industry, which is the most important and most vital industry not only in Canada but of course in other countries as well.

It should also be noted that even the February 20 announcement came one year after the 1980 election, and in that campaign Canagrex formed a very integral and important part of the Liberal Party's agricultural platform. If this government had acted upon this promise a year and a half ago and had given priority to increasing agricultural exports, then our agricultural industry might not be experiencing the same severe economic distress which plagues it today.

The rationale given for Canagrex is that many of Canada's smaller agri-businesses and farm organizations lack the expertise, knowledge and indeed the financial resources to be aggressive and effective as export marketers. Canagrex would, therefore, become directly involved in joint ventures with agricultural exporters by providing loans and guarantees.

Certainly, priority must be given to increasing our agricultural exports. I am sure the minister is very much aware of this. Although Canada has traditionally had a food trade surplus, this surplus has largely been an illusion. It is dependent on the variations of the world grain market and the world grain trade. However, when grain sales are removed or omitted from our agricultural trade calculations, we find that Canada has been suffering from an even worsening food trade deficit. This deficit has increased from an average of about $449 billion some 12 years ago in 1970, to a deficit of $1.9 billion in 1979.

We must work very hard and diligently to reduce this deficit. Increasing our agricultural exports, of course, is one way; decreasing our imports of food which can be successfully and economically grown here in Canada is naturally another. It is estimated that Canada imports about $3 billion worth of agricultural products which could be grown here in Canada, products such as apples, fresh vegetables, oil seeds, soybeans, and oats for milling and breakfast cereal, to name but a few. The government must develop new policies which will encourage import replacement.

I know that there are a great many pros and cons to an agricultural export corporation. I am anxious that the merits of Canagrex be fully discussed in committee. In committee and indeed during debate in the House, my colleagues and I will try to find out whether Canagrex is the best method of increasing our agricultural exports.

One of the major problems facing Canagrex will be its effectiveness in views of its very limited budget and staff. In his original proposal, the Minister of Agriculture set out what he thought should be the minimum standards of Canagrex. These minimum standards consisted of a budget of $62.3 million and a staff of between 125 and 175 people. These figures were taken from the minister's announcement. I would say that today we are a little short on funds and long on staff. However, as with so many of the minister's proposals, he failed to manoeuvre these minimum standards which he had established on February 20, 1981, through cabinet. In his February 20 statement, the minister reported that cabinet had approved a budget for Canagrex, not one of $62 million but rather one of $12.3 million, that is $50 million less than what the minister thought was necessary, and that this money had to be spread over a period of three years. Therefore, on an annual basis for the next three years, provided the bill receives approval, the corporation will receive a budget, not of $62.3 million but rather of $4.1 million.

Concerning staffing, the cabinet approved a staff of 12. Again that amounts to 163 people fewer than what the minister set out in his minimum standards. I suppose that if we wanted to be critical of the minister and, after all, he is the Minister of Agriculture and must assume and accept the responsibilities, we could say that at least the minister continues to be successful at failing to get whatever measures he wants through the cabinet intact.

However, with these massive reductions from the minister's own personal assessment of minimum standards for Canagrex, I wonder whether the corporation will be able to perform adequately the role laid out for it in Bill C-85. Again, in committee, my colleagues and I will want to know whether Canagrex might not serve a more useful purpose by being part of the minister's own department, by being a division within Agriculture Canada, rather than another Crown corporation. I do not know. I suppose it would be a fair question to ask the minister if he could tell me now just how many Crown corporations are owned by the government. I know there has been some difficulty in the past with one minister saying there are 185 Crown corporations and someone else contradicting him. If Canagrex receives approval, I just wonder how many Crown corporations will fall under the jurisdiction of the government.

We will also want to be very careful that Canagrex does not repeat the marketing miscalculations of the Canadian Dairy Commission, because David Kates, the deputy chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, and Mr. Justice Hugh Gibson of the federal court of Canada have found, in two separate reports, that there is almost no limit to the potential for ill-advised government intervention for which there is practically no mechanism for accountability. That is a pretty damning statement. The Canadian Dairy Commission has done an excellent job for producers and consumers over the years and has been very effective in the export market field. These revelations could hardly come at a worse time. With the federal government's dairy policy review hanging over the heads of Canadian dairy farmers, it could add powerful ammunition to those people in the bureaucracy and those in Treasury Board. Because of the delay, I am convinced there must be some reluctance on the part of some cabinet colleagues of the Minister of Agriculture. They must be opposing the national dairy policy. We have to see what cabinet did to the Canagrex budget and staff. If this same mentality or feeling applies, I hate to think what it could do to the national dairy policy.

If Canagrex is to be enacted, we have to make sure the government has learned from its mistakes. Bill C-85 must not contain provisions which will allow for the abuse of intervention and the abuse of power.

There are other questions regarding Canagrex which have to be answered. It is appropriate that a number of questions be raised, questions such as the role of Canagrex in the Canadian export business. Will it act in support of or in competition with existing Canadian exporters? There will be the determination of how to allocate a sale. If a market is found for a particular commodity or product, who determines the sale and which company or farm group is given the opportunity to supply the goods?

How do we ensure the board of directors of Canagrex is composed of qualified people? These people are not around the country in great numbers. It is extremely important that we secure well-qualified people, people who are ready to work and are capable of taking appropriate action, and not just create another government body which the government can utilize as an opportunity to pass out some political patronage.

Mr. Whelan: Lord save us from that.

Mr. Wise: The reporting relationship with Agriculture Canada is extremely important. As I indicated earlier, our concept of Canagrex is that it would not necessarily be a Crown corporation, although there may be some problems associated with that.

There is also the reporting relationship with Industry, Trade and Commerce. I could probably add External Affairs when we are dealing in the export market. Canagrex will have a very limited staff. Therefore, co-operation among these three departments will be extremely important.

Canagrex will by necessity be dependent upon the co-operation of these three departments. As a result, we must examine the willingness of these departments to co-operate and share their resources with Canagrex. The minister did not indicate this, but perhaps others who follow him will. I understand a number of his colleagues want to comment on Canagrex. Perhaps they will answer the question of how it will fit in with the latest reorganization that has taken place between Industry, Trade and Commerce and External Affairs.

There is also the question of whether there ought to be a separate Crown corpporation to look after agricultural exports or whether this body, as I indicated, might well do the job being a branch or division within the minister's department, Agriculture Canada.

I would have thought the government might have tried to improve other more basic needs of agricultural exports in the absence of the corporation. One of these basic needs, of course, is the dissemination of information and material. It has always amazed me that a country such as Canada which has 115 embassies and trade offices or consulates abroad has an agriculturalist specialist on staff in only ten. Of these ten, only one is in a Third World country, India, despite the fact that in 1980 nearly 25 per cent of our agricultural exports went to the Third World.

Because of the low representation abroad, Canadian exporters have suffered when it came to finding and defining export opportunities. It is extremely difficult for a person not completely familiar with the fundamentals of agriculture to assess the agricultural needs of a foreign country and to be aware of whether Canadian firms can supply these services or products.

The government can also encourage exporters through information availability. I am aware that Agriculture Canada has sponsored several seminars for agricultural exporters, people in the agri-food industry, and the bankers. These seminars should provide an opportunity for exporters to learn more about sources of financing, export credit, insurance services and market information.

I hope the minister will make certain that these export seminars continue, that they will involve a broad cross-section of agricultural producers and that they will be held in all regions of this country.

I hope that Bill C-85 does not mark the end of this government's attention to agriculture. It has always seemed that this government can only find the time to deal with one major agricultural bill per year. Last year, 1981, it was the meat import law. This year, 1982, it is Canagrex. Canadian agriculture deserves better priority and attention than it has received from this government. The agricultural industry is suffering deeply as a result of this government's high interest rate policy. The latest is the devastating budget that the minister's colleague brought forward on November 12 which adversely affects farmers.

Where are the government measures designed to deal with this economic crisis? Where is the long-promised legislation which would allow the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow supplementary funds from the private marketplace? The Minister of Agriculture has been promising such legislation for over a year. I am being fairly complimentary when I say a year. On second thought, it might be as many as five years.

If such legislation had been enacted last year or a couple of years ago, many Canadian farmers might still be in business today. Last year, 261 farmers declared bankruptcy. Untold hundreds more were forced out of business through foreclosures and forced sales. These heavy losses are a real threat to our future food security. The government should be doing its utmost to reverse this very serious trend.

Unfortunately, the government has done virtually nothing. In fact, it has helped to make matters worse by bringing down one of the most disastrous budgets on record. The budget and its many changes have again demonstrated that this government simply does not know what it is doing. On the one hand there is the Minister of Agriculture encouraging farmers to stay in business for the good of Canada and Canadians. On the other hand, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) which penalizes very seriously the retirement income of farmers who have worked a lifetime providing the food requirements for Canadians and many other hundreds of thousands of people beyond our borders. The Minister of Finance brought in a budget making unfair tax changes to the income-averaging annuity contracts and to the capital gains tax reserves. Also, the Minister of Agriculture, prior to the budget, kept telling farm group after farm group that meaningful economic assistance would be forthcoming in the budget.

Does the minister actually believe that an extra $50 million in the Farm Credit Corporation is really of assistance, especially when the estimates of the basic need for the Farm Credit Corporation has been calculated to be between $500 million and $1 billion? In fact, $45 million of that $50 million will be paid back fully in principal and interest. Does the minister actually believe that the cancellation of the Small Business Development Bond Program at the end of this year, except for those in dire straits, is beneficial to Canadian agriculture? I would hope not.

It is obvious that the minister does not understand the financial crisis facing Canadian agriculture today. He obviously does not have the necessary input and clout and influence in cabinet to secure the necessary programs and policies to cope with the current situation in the agricultural industry today. Rather than dealing with a piece of legislation which would offer immediate help and hope to Canadian farmers, we are dealing with legislation creating a new Crown corporation, a corporation which in the short term will benefit mainly its chairman in the form of a suggested salary of between $100,000 and $200,000. However, the long-term benefits will not accrue to farmers until several years later.

I heard the minister make a comment on that, but these are the rumours and I raise them. I am sure that other speakers will raise them.

Mr. Whelan: Grocery product manufacturers pay their manager $120,000.

Mr. Wise: Therefore, we should be dealing with legislation which will help Canadian agriculture immediately. There should be legislation for an immediate moratorium on farm bankruptcies, foreclosures and forced sales, in order to prevent 48-hour auction sales, to stop the sale of productive assets, to eliminate the sale of valuable livestock at slaughterhouse prices and to give the necessary time for governments to put into place effective and meaningful programs and policies for the survival and indeed for the recovery of the agricultural industry. We should be amending the Farm Credit Corporation legislation so as to allow it to borrow funds from the private marketplace.

Mr. Whelan: We will on Wednesday.

Mr. Wise: We will not on Wednesday.

Mr. Whelan: Why?

Mr. Wise: I think it is very obvious.

Rather than the tax disincentives in the budget, the Minister of Agriculture should have been able to convince his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to implement the agri-bound concept. This would give farmers access to money at interest rates below prime. The cost to the public treasury would be extremely small and the benefits to the farm community would be immense.

Understandably, the farm community today is absolutely convinced that this government does not care about the agricultural industry. Not only does the agricultural industry need adequate financial support today, it also needs support through a meaningful piece of legislation. The Minister of Agriculture would certainly do well to give serious consideration to the proposal of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture to set up a market risk insurance plan which would involve a three-way participation among the two levels of government and the producer.

Another area which could be dealt with would be an upgrading of the V-day values for the capital gains tax. The minister should be familiar with this suggestion because this has been a long-time election promise by his government, a promise which is always ignored shortly after the election campaign is over.

The minister has promised time and time again to the agricultural community to update the valuation day values of the present day from 1971 to 1974 values. I suggest that a far better solution to deal with capital gains would be a once-in-a-lifetime exemption from the sale of a farm by a bona fide farmer.

We could also be dealing with legislation with respect to rebates on fuels used for food production. Given the increases in the energy prices, a total exemption of tax would be appropriate and would indeed benefit all segments of the agri-food industry. Producers, processors, distributors and indeed 24 million Canadians would benefit from that type of legislation.

It is interesting to note that the price of gasoline has increased by approximately 75 cents a gallon since we received the message that, upon election, the government would keep fuel prices down. Of that 75 cents, 36 cents is taken out in tax alone, which works out to about twice as much as 18 cents.

Measures could be implemented to help market returns, because many of today's producers are suffering from a severe cost price squeeze. At the same time, because of the lack of advertising, promotion and public information, many Canadian consumers are willing to pay about $1.50 for a head of grade D imported lettuce. Surely these consumers would be willing to pay a little more for a grade A Canadian product. However, because of the twisted priorities of this government, we do not have any of these worth-while measures to deal with. We can only debate the merits of Canagrex, another Crown corporation to which it is rumoured the present Minister of Agriculture might be heading once it is established. If that rumour is true, Mr. Speaker, I can understand why so many people are so eager to have this legislation passed so quickly. Maybe there is another thought in the back of the minister's mind to account for the fact that he is extremely anxious that this bill actually pass tonight and not on Wednesday.

Mr. Whelan: I might even be thinking about giving you a job.

Mr. Wise: I appreciate the minister's comment. However, there are other questions which we will be asking throughout the debate and more particularly throughout the committee stage. We want to be assured of accountability and control. We want to have some indication as to the possible intentions the government might have with regard to who might serve on the board of directors, whom they might have in mind to take on the position of president and chairman.

We want to discuss to some degree the salaries, expenses and superannuation and we would be quite willing to talk about some of these issues in an in camera session of the standing committee. It is possible because it has been done before with regard to the beef import law. I think we achieved some measure of success because of the fact that there was an offer and a willingness on the part of the minister to convey some of this information to us in an in camera session.

The minister has indicated that he would be making a report to Parliament on the progress of Canagrex. That is fine, but it is really not good enough. We would like to see the minister not only table the report from Canagrex on an annual basis but have the report automatically referred to committee. If Canagrex is formed, we are anxious to see it operate successfully and to ensure that it does indeed increase the export sale of Canadian agricultural products. However, if it does not perform adequately, we want to know about it. We can only know about it if the annual report is referred to committee, thus allowing us to cross examine the officials of Canagrex during committee hearings.

We would also like to see a sunset clause provided in this legislation which would allow a Crown corporation to receive a mandate for a further five years if it is doing an effective job. I believe there are some 200 Crown corporations in Canada, many of which could be wound down. It would be no loss to the Canadian taxpayer, and in fact it would probably be a tax saving.

As I have indicated, the message is that we certainly accept the concept of conditional or qualified support. I have raised some questions. Others will be raised by my colleagues in the debate. Yet other questions will be put forward in committee, and the government must be able to provide answers to those questions and must be able to convince the members of the committee of the necessity of a separate Crown corporation to support agricultural products.

I will just close my remarks by saying that if this can be done and if it is not possible to perform this function having Canagrex as a division within Agriculture Canada or within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce—I am interested only in increasing export sales—and if we can be satisfied about some other matters which will be raised, I am certain Canagrex will receive some support.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on this particular piece of legislation. It has been a long time since it was announced. We in this corner of the House are basically optimistic about the legislation in the same way, I suppose, farmers are optimistic when they go out to seed new crops. We do not see very much description as to what will be brought about here, but we think that the concept and the idea has some possibilities. We do, however, have a number of questions, and we will be raising them in the next few days and in committee.

The farm community too has waited a long time for this legislation. The minister has talked about it and talked about it. It was announced back in February of last year. The bill was finally printed and before us just a few weeks before this session was interrupted for the Christmas break. We appreciate the minister's comments in his speech this evening pleading for speedy passage, but given the fact that this has been coming for lo this past year at least and being cognizant of the remarks of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), who pointed out that this legislation has had a much longer gestation period even than that, I think a few more days of careful discussion and consideration can help rather than hinder the plan behind this legislation.

We agree that there are special needs for some agricultural exports which will require the full-time attention and practical knowledge of people involved in the process at all times. My limited experience in the marketing of agricultural products with the Saskatchewan Hog Marketing Commission and the Canadian Wheat Board advisory committee tells me that this is a very important role, and it is very important that it be fullfilled correctly and properly. I do not agree with some critics of this type of marketing that it cannot play a useful role.

I have some questions about the functions of Canagrex which I will be raising here and in the committee, but the concept itself is one which deserves further attention and deserves developing.

I realize that some people in the industry think that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce should be carrying out these kinds of duties through its commercial counsellors, and indeed some of the job of selling Canadian agricultural products can be carried out that way—and is—but during the Christmas break the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce underwent a revamping. There is a not too well understood combining of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce with foreign affairs postings. This probably leaves even more room for Canagrex to function on the world stage, with the assistance and full co-operation of commercial counsellors in Canadian embassies and trade offices.

We do see that there will be some difficulties for Canagrex. If I were to make a short list of the kinds of products Canagrex is likely to be handling—products which have a potential for further exports—a short list not ranked by priority or anything, it would include pork, potatoes, higher grade beef cuts—a form of boxed beef—specialized products such as lentils, fababeans, mustard, fescue for grass seed, fresh peas, fresh beans, dried peas, dried beans and other vegetables for the frozen trade. In particular, root vegetables are something we produce quite competitively. Also, we see some possibilities for apples and apple products, and given some slight change in the world economic climate, we think there is a potential for poultry products, including chicks and breeding stock, as well as some opportunity for increases in semen sales.

When we look at that list, the job Canagrex has outlined for itself, the budget it has to operate under and the guidelines which are probable and likely, we conclude that Canagrex's first job is—perhaps unfortunately—likely to be to plump for the development of some of these smaller volume products. I say that from my limited experience with pork producers, for instance, which I think some of the drafters of Canagrex had hoped would be one of its first customers, there are some problems to overcome with the marketing of pork which perhaps some of the weaker, less developed commodities will not have, simply because their producers have not been established long enough to develop them. Pork producers have developed a series of marketing agencies in the provinces. In addition to that, all of the packing houses in this country have very sizeable pork departments, and they strive to export pork. In short, when export buyers are interested in Canadian pork or show some interest in Canadian pork, there is a multitude of potential sellers knocking at their door attempting to sell them that commodity. In an ideal world, if we could go to those countries with just one agency—one seller—it would be to the advantage of Canadian producers, Canadian processors and the whole pork industry. However, in the competitive climate we have set up in this country, that will be very, very difficult to carry out. The directors, managing directors and the chief executive officer of Canagrex will not only have to be very good salesmen and know the international market, but the organization will also have to have an ability to bring together the various sectors, organizations and groups within the country if they are to be able to guarantee a product.

I think that is one of the basic problems Canagrex will have. It may be successful in bringing together a group of people who are very good at exporting and making contacts in the export trade for agricultural products, but the back-up—the integrated production to consumer chain of command, so to speak—which is there in some of the one-desk selling agencies such as the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission will be lacking in Canagrex. I think this is one of its shortcomings, by virtue of the fact that it is a voluntary organization and will be able to function only as well as its ability to bring the various sectors of the industry together.

I think we should take a moment or two to analyse how difficult this job will be and the position that Canagrex will find itself in. How is a brand new organization to break into, say, the Japanese market for pork almost overnight when we already have eight or nine in total, and certainly four or five, very large meat processing companies attempting, and some succeeding, to break into that market every month of the year? Are those processing plants going to give up their access to the Japanese market and stand aside for Canagrex? I doubt that, Mr. Speaker. They do not stand aside for some pork marketing boards in this country or for anyone else. In the process of trying to break into the market, will Canagrex not have to do the same thing as some provincial boards and some processing plants have had to do, that is, offer a better deal, a lower price and, we hope, a better product? How are they to do that and still bring benefit to Canadian producers? That is a conundrum that will have to be solved in the agricultural committee. I think it should be solved before Canagrex is struck.

I realize that the 11 board members set their own terms of reference, so to speak, and set their own marketing program on a three-year basis, but there must be some kind of guideline if they are to do an intelligent job. I do not see any immediate advantage unless further back-up is provided and further assistance is granted to help them break into the larger markets with commodities such as pork. That is too bad, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that one of the trump cards for touting Canagrex in this country is to help sell important products like pork. As I understand this legislation, that is not likely to happen.

We know from the description of Canagrex that was presented by the minister and from papers which were introduced prior to the presentation of Canagrex in the form of a bill, that it is supposed to have the power to intervene in the market where needed or desired in order to purchase, process or sell products. I congratulate the minister and the government for leaving these powers in the bill in face of the criticisms made by the Canadian meat council, as I believe it is called. The government and members of the House, however, should be conscious of the fact that the ability to intervene at any stage and make purchases at any stage in the production through processing, still means that it has to be done in competition with the processors and, in some cases, with the marketing boards. It will sometimes be very difficult for the producers to see that they have gained any advantage, because in order to compete they will probably be bidding the price down rather than raising it and thus ensuring that the total efforts of the industry are consolidated, which I think was the intention in the first place.

An hon. Member: How is competition going to lower the price?

Mr. Althouse: My friend asks how competition is going to lower the price. Competition always lowers the price in an export market when the buyer is able to shop around. If pork is available from eight or ten different sources, the Japanese will buy it from the cheapest source. Those who have supplied the Japanese in the past will have to be able to buy at a price that will allow them to continue to supply that market. Eventually the price has to be bid down to the producer in order to meet the price constraints of the world market.

I think there are very definite price constraints in the world market. There are not many countries that are able and willing to pay the price for products that will result in a modest profit to the Canadian producer. That is one of the problems this particular strategy has not addressed very well. That, at least, makes it consistent with the agri-food policy because I am not sure that the farm sector has been addressed very well in the agri-food policy being presented to the country by the government and the Department of Agriculture.

The quality of this agency will depend on the quality of the people attracted or appointed to it. If a raft of political appointees or a bunch of burned out civil servants who are looking for close to retirement sinecures are appointed, then Canagrex will not be very effective. It will quickly fade into obscurity and there will be no benefit derived at the farm level or in world trade. If dynamic and imaginative people are appointed who are prepared to look at the industry with an open mind and a pragmatic philosophy toward marketing, then Canagrex can succeed.

I cannot allow this debate to go too much further without mentioning one other concern that I have and that is how inappropriate it is for an agency like Canagrex to be marketing in Third World countries. In the past we have had some rather unfortunate examples of Canadian agricultural agencies and aid agencies providing products to Third World countries which have no way of using them. We have given skim milk powder and milk products to countries whose people have not consumed milk since the time they were weaned. They have never developed the ability to digest milk and they do not have the appropriate enzymes in their stomachs to aid in the digestion of dairy products.

We have made gifts and have provided aid for the purchase of commodities in countries which simply do not have a societal acceptance of such commodities. While some terrible mistakes have been made in the past, I think this should not hinder us from attempting to aid countries where the industrial process is advanced enough that new forms of food will be welcomed. We should make certain, however, that Canagrex is made aware of some of the gaffes that Canada made in Third World countries in the past and that these are not repeated.

Canagrex is a good idea, Mr. Speaker. But some of the conditions necessary to make it a success are not present in Canada at the moment and they are not within the scope of Canagrex itself. I think particularly of the ability to provide the back-up for the marketing thrust. When the minister spoke, he said that you cannot have production without a market because this means waste, but then a little later he said that Canada is so efficient that it produces surpluses. There seems to be a contradiction in terms in these remarks. If we are truly efficient in our marketing process and the control of production, we should be able to avoid surpluses.

I hope we do not set up an agency which is not cognizant of our ability to produce and the cost of that production. This is fundamental and almost simplistic, but our agricultural policy over the past few years seems to have missed those fundamentals. The agri-food strategy presented to us over the last several months appears not to pay much attention to the basic production unit. For instance, if we are to have truly efficient agriculture in the country, one would think that our agriculture, as opposed to that of countries with inefficient agriculture, would be able to generate adequate investment capital to keep itself going and growing. This has not been the case in Canadian agriculture, basically because farm prices are such that net incomes have not grown as Canadian agriculture has grown. In 1974, realized net incomes in the country were $3.5 billion, a fairly hefty sum, but through all the years from 1974 to 1980-81, it has not risen much above that amount. We have hung in there around $3.5 billion of net income. In fact, the projected outlook for 1982 is that it will be 15 per cent lower or slightly lower than $3.5 billion. For seven or eight years, net incomes have been virtually the same as they were back in 1974, in spite of the fact that a 1974 dollar buys just about twice what a 1981 or 1982 dollar buys. In real terms, net farm incomes have been cut in half. This was not from the lack of production. Production in dollar terms rose 2.5 times during that period of time.

How did farmers continue to stay in business? They did it by adding to their farm debt. They went into the period of time which I have been discussing with just under $7 billion worth of debt, and by the end of 1980 the most recent figures I have been able to obtain indicate a debt of $16.5 billion. Up to the present time, we have accumulated an extra debt of $10 billion to $12 billion because of a lack of ability to create adequate farm incomes in order to provide reinvestment on farms. It is not a particularly healthy industry from which to sell more product, but it is an integrated part of the system and must be acted upon. I do not think adequate attention has been paid to basic producers or farmers down on the land. What benefit will they receive from Canagrex? If it does not show up in improved net incomes, why should they care or become involved? Why should their little marketing boards, marketing co-ops or community organizations ask Canagrex to sell their products for them? This must be considered as part of the agri-food strategy, but I do not think it is being considered in the current one before us at this time.

Interest rates are rising. Over the period of time about which I have been talking, interest costs to Canadian farmers rose from $473 million to approximately $2.2 billion at the end of 1981. This one little part of agricultural production costs has risen five times at the same time as net farm incomes have remained the same. One could refer to many more input costs of farmers which have climbed, but interest rates have climbed phenomenally. It is part of the agri-food strategy and the agri-food chain which is not being addressed by the government. It must be tackled if Canagrex is to be a success.

Another aspect of the agri-food policy which can affect the success or failure of Canagrex is the transportation policy. The country has grown to the extent it has, in terms of the agricultural output, because of an agricultural transportation policy which takes care of outside regions. It was designed to encourage the production of prairie grain and the movement of products at reduced rates to the maritimes. It is an integral part of the Canadian agricultural policy structure, a part which should not be changed rapidly or in haste for reasons which have nothing to do with agricultural productivity. We do not see how increasing the so-called Crow rate on grains will do anything for Canadian agriculture. We do not see how the reduction of net incomes by transferring money from the pockets of farmers to the pockets of the railways will do anything for the redevelopment or continued development of agriculture, an industry which already borrows heavily to keep its investment capital in shape. We do not think it is a wise trade-off to be made or even to be proposed, yet we are faced with rumours of this and speeches by cabinet ministers that this is about to happen.

The transportation policy does not take into account processed goods from certain regions. For instance, processed chilled beef can be shipped from Toronto to Saskatoon, if anyone wants to ship it in that direction, for much less than it can be shipped from Saskatoon to Toronto. It is not regulated, it is not statutory. It is not in existence because of some ancient agreement with the CPR so that it could develop a rail line into Trail to develop some mines. It is just there because it is the manner in which railways priced their products. That pricing structure probably has more to do with the location of packing plants than has the Crow rate, yet we in the House are not attacking or addressing this in public very much.

Mr. Whelan: Yes, we are.

Mr. Althouse: We do not hear of it very much.

Mr. Whelan: You do not listen.

Mr. Althouse: Canagrex will have to be assisted by policies which handle the transportation problem as well as the farm pricing problem. The question of market stabilization is not very well explained in the bill. The bill makes clear those things with which Canagrex will not involve itself. Clause 14(2)(a) indicates that Canagrex shall not "pay to producers or processors a subsidy directly on any Canadian agricultural product or food product", yet we do not have completely adequate stabilization programs so that price guarantees are built into the production formula for farmers. If the farmers are not certain of some price guarantees, why would they produce products for Canagrex to market? They will not do it only because Canagrex is there. There must be an advantage at the farm. That has not been made clear in this bill up to this point, in part because there are not clearly stated policies for transportation and income protection.

• (2110)

I think this bill ought to be dealt with in committee. There are a great many aspects of the bill to which we should have answers before it is passed in the House. The question of auditing has not made that clear. It says that the Auditor General shall audit the books. It does not spell out all of the guidelines in that regard. It still leaves us exposed to some of the problems which the CDC is alleged to have had according to some investigations that have been carried out. We do not think any new agency should be left wide open to those kinds of problems or the possibility of such problems. We think they should be clarified prior to the agency being set up rather than bringing in some doubt as to its ability to function. We do not think that serves either Canagrex, the proposed Crown agency, CDC, or any other Crown agency. Neither does it provide a useful service to farmers to create doubts in the operation because of an inability to explain its business practices to an auditor. We think these items should be spelled out more clearly. We think the minister and some of his officials should appear before the agricultural committee of this House to explain, according to the usual customs and procedures, the bill we will have before us in committee. Generally speaking, as I said at the beginning, we are optimistic about this bill. We think it can have good implications for agriculture, but it must be well managed on the way. Not only must the people who are appointed to this agency do their jobs constructively, but so must members of this House whose function and duty it is to make certain that the bill is as well put together as possible. We think this can only be done in committee and that this bill should not be pushed through the House post-haste.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased to speak to the House on a bill as important as the one before us tonight, namely an act to establish a Canadian agriculture export corporation, Canagrex. At this point, I want to pay tribute to the farm organizations across Canada and to those farmers who have contributed to the initial discussions of the concept. I want to commend the minister for following their suggestions so closely in the legislation before us tonight.

The hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) pointed out that this matter was approved by cabinet almost a year ago. He has perhaps found a little fault on the part of the minister for the delay in bringing this legislation before us. However, I believe the hon. member should look at the number of filibustering delays of last year, particularly last spring. Filibustering took place with regard to the Constitution but also a great deal of time was spent on the Canada lands oil and gas act, which took even more time than the Constitution did. I am not aware that the hon. member had tabled any similar legislation when he was minister, but given a little more time I am sure he would have.

However, I cannot help but respond to his concerns on the funding of this corporation. I can only suggest that one has to walk before one can run. Therefore, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House that in the initial stages we should proceed with caution and work with the producers and their organizations to seek out and encourage sales opportunities in areas of highest potential. In this context, Canagrex does not require large amounts of money in its fledgling stages. But surely as the need grows we as a Parliament can make the financial adjustments as required. I for one hope that Canagrex will not result in a large bureaucracy but rather be a slim, trim organization consisting of the best expertise available, acting as a focal point that can work with our farm organizations and marketing boards, the processors and the shippers in a truly Canadian effort that will utilize our technical expertise and, in particular, our potential as outlined in the minister's food strategy report.

In the next few minutes I intend to examine the need for such a body on the basis of the type of agricultural industry which exists in Canada, the problems it is facing in ever-enlarging world markets and the ability of Canagrex to provide a co-ordinated approach to the marketing of our agricultural and food exports.

We all know that the agricultural industry is important to this country's economy. In fact, it is one of the nation's largest employers, and as Canadians we are one of four countries in the world that is a net exporter of food. Canadian farmers, with the population we have, do not have a large enough domestic market to produce only for Canadian use. The export sector is of vital importance to the well-being of Canadian agriculture and of our total economy.

Agriculture exports represent 40 per cent to 44 per cent of total cash farm receipts in Canada while in the United States this percentage is only about 25 per cent. In spite of this, the agriculture industry is not taking full advantage of the market potentials which exist abroad. Agriculture in Canada is characterized by a great diversity of farm products, and in many cases the producers do not have the expertise and the capital to take the risks involved in operating in an international market.

Many federal and provincial government programs lend assistance to agricultural marketing, but none give the necessary comprehensive, co-ordinating assistance which Canagrex will provide that will bring the potential of this industry into proper focus.

We have a challenge to meet here in Canada. At the Canadian agricultural outlook conference held in Ottawa the first week of December of this year, it was projected that the world's population would increase at an annual rate of 1.8 per cent between 1980 and the year 2000, reaching a total of 6.4 billion people by the year 2000. Much of this growth will be in developing countries where 50 cents of every dollar is spent on food. Canagrex will be the vehicle to help Canadian agriculture rise to this growing challenge. Canagrex will provide the opportunity for the Canadian agricultural industry and the diverse marketing infrastructure in place in this country to take advantage of these growing markets. Canagrex will be able to identify and secure markets for producers and to support farmers and their organizations to meet these challenges.

Canagrex will be a co-ordinated marketing effort. It will bring our marketing efforts into focus and will utilize the potential of Canadian farmers and their ability to produce for world markets. Certainly there is a need for close co-operation between the producer, the processor, and the marketing people in order to improve our export markets. We intend to work closely with these groups in an effort to beef up attempts in areas of highest potential.

I am proud to say that the legislation is intended to ensure that farmers and their organizations will be heavily involved in the decision-making process. The proposed policy advisory committee, representing all parts of the food and agriculture sectors, will be appointed by the minister and will meet with the minister to review operations and policies of Canagrex. We also intend Canagrex to work closely with the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission. But in no way is Canagrex intended to duplicate or interfere with any activities or functions of these bodies or simply to become another level of bureaucracy. In fact, it is intended that Canagrex should co-operate fully with existing marketing agencies and boards across Canada. When you examine the situation, you find that we are perhaps the only nation in the world with the capacity to plan our production in an orderly manner so as to meet the terms of long-range contractual agreements and possibly tie selling prices to production costs.

By working in partnership with packers, processors and others in allied industries, we can enter into long-term contractual arrangements which are not as exposed to the vagaries of the marketplace as is the case now, and allow the farmers of Canada to plan production for both domestic and export markets.

Co-ordination is certainly a key word when we talk about Canagrex. There is a need to present foreign buyers with a clearly identifiable institution which deals with all agricultural commodities, except those which are the responsibility of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission. At present a foreign buyer is sometimes faced with having to deal with as many as 11 governments and their agencies in Canada. The trend is more and more to have governments deal with governments, and Canagrex will provide this facility and avoid the confusion which now faces the foreign buyer. By working with existing marketing agencies, it will work to increase the volume and variety of exports of Canadian agricultural products.

Co-ordination is also needed on the part of those involved in selling our agricultural products abroad. At present, we have ten provincial governments pursuing marketing policies which serve to undercut other provinces. As a consequence, we have producers in one province bidding against those in another, in effect, Canadians bidding against Canadians. An example of this happened several years ago when several provinces, I believe it was five, conducted sales missions to the same country at the same time, all trying to sell pork and bidding against each other. I am aware that last year alone several sales missions were sent abroad by several provinces competing with one another, and certainly that has never made much sense to me. We should be acting as one country selling abroad, not as individual provinces pitted against each other. This will be one possible result of the implementation of this legislation. In addition, I believe the various other problems related to the agricultural industry will also fade or disappear.

It is hoped that we will be able to diversify our exports. Wheat, barley, rapeseed and flaxseed now account for about 60 per cent of Canada's agricultural exports. At the same time Canagrex will be able to foster diversification of markets for agricultural products other than unprocessed grains and oilseeds. Often the United States is the only significant market for other agricultural products. In such a manner Canagrex will be able to co-operate with the producers, processors and marketing institutions at present available in order to increase the volume and variety of sales of our farm products. In this context, I should remind the House that I am aware of several marketing boards which are waiting for the passage of the legislation to assist them in making contracts with other nations who want to deal on a state-to-state basis.

It does not make much sense to me that, in a land with such potential, exports of agricultural products as a percentage of our total exports have declined since 1974. In that year, they accounted for more than 12 per cent of total exports. By 1979-80, they decreased to less than 10 per cent. Certainly this decline exemplifies the need for a co-ordinated approach in marketing abroad.

Canagrex will go a long way toward solving other long-standing agricultural problems faced by the Canadian producer. I have heard a lot of complaints recently from farmers in my area about various things, but one problem in particular surfaced very recently of a buyer who backed out of a contractual arrangement with a private trader, creating a surplus of that product not only here in Canada but a surplus which will eventually reflect back to our neighbours to the south, leaving the producers with a surplus and a bleak year ahead of them as far as this product is concerned. Such an occurrence will be less likely to happen with a Crown corporation dealing on a government to government basis.

In addition, Canagrex will be able to provide bridge financing to assist Third World countries and make export markets less of a risk for the Canadian producer in the sense that another government is less likely to back out of a deal than a private importer. It will also establish the base for long-term contracts which will provide the buyer with continuity of supply of a quality product.

Canadian farmers have the ability, the expertise and the base to produce for these markets. Certainly it is the nature of farmers to want to produce. If you recall Wilkin's law, an economist of the 1930s, we surely must recognize the importance of increased exports of our renewable resources and their contribution to our total economy.

As I indicated earlier, I have talked to scores of farmers and their organizations and I know their reactions. It is our duty as their elected representatives to ensure speedy passage and implementation of this legislation. I know there is a need to find more secure markets, to expand existing markets, and to then encourage production levels to meet those market demands on a continuous basis if we are to take full advantage of the opportunities which will present themselves to the Canadian farmer in the decade ahead.

The goal of Canagrex is to provide new markets to the Canadian producer and to ensure a continuity and stability of income which is not at present available to them. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, if there is an industry in Canada which needs improved marketing capabilities, it has to be agriculture. If there is an industry which needs advice on pricing in the international market, it has to be agriculture. In its present form—and I am not necessarily recommending that form be changed—there is often too little advice on market potential and price on a worldwide basis. This is something which I have advocated ever since I first participated in agricultural organizations, attending Canadian horticultural councils, and ever since I became a member of an elected body, first in the province of New Brunswick and then here.

That advice on and knowledge of the potential of foreign markets has been lacking. I remember, for example, one occasion when I was seeking markets for New Brunswick potatoes as an employee of the government of New Brunswick. I tried to get a list of potato markets but it was not available from the Department of Agriculture. That was about ten years ago, and that department did not have knowledge of the potato importing countries, nor did it have any knowledge of market prices.

It is for that reason that, when I became a member of the House, I persistently stated that there should be more market information and, as the former minister of agriculture pleaded with the government earlier, there should be consular representation for agriculture on a worldwide basis wherever there may be markets. This is lacking, as the former minister pointed out, and I commend him for his statistics in that regard, and also for pointing out the fact that some of these representatives—at least four of the 11, in my opinion—are located in communities where they can be of little if any value to any aspect of agriculture in the Dominion of Canada. That area has been neglected.

In spite of all the window-dressing which this bill has received and all the promotion which it has been granted, it does not fill the bill. I have several reservations about it.

I think that these reservations are shared by many other people in the agricultural field who have recently spoken. I think it would not be inappropriate to refer to some of their remarks. Mr. Runciman called for an end to production quotas and then added that the Wheat Board should compete with private companies for the farmers' grain instead of having a monopoly over exports of wheat, oats and barley. It is a delusion, he asserted, that a system of planned socialism could be operated according to democratic methods of government.

He said that a democracy is inseparably linked with capitalism, and that democracy cannot exist under a planned economy. He offered Poland as an example. Farmers must decide whether they are advocates of economic freedom or of socialism. There is no such thing as a little bit of government intervention, said Runciman. A little bit leads to more. He told the farmers in no uncertain terms that they must choose between the market economy and socialism. I agree wholeheartedly with that statement. It is sort of like becoming bald. I do not have a lot of experience, but I am getting there. A few of us become a little bald. The progression is something that we look at with horror after it has begun and over which we have no control. It is with the warning of Mr. Runciman, who has been a long-time agriculturalist, that I speak to the House of Commons and urge caution. Perhaps, if I would not be considered crude, I would say that it is like being a little bit pregnant to introduce a little bit of socialism into this marketing field.

We have also heard a recent statement by the president of the chamber of commerce who, I believe, was once a member of the House on the government side. He, too, has cautioned that we must give the private enterprise system an opportunity to function and that we must not invoke too many regulations and cause too many difficulties to the functioning of our present system.

It is with that in mind that, as I read this bill, I have some concerns. I am concerned that in no place in this bill can I find any point in time at which the committee on agriculture, the committee on public accounts or any other committee will have an opportunity to give an in-depth and analytical look into the operation of Canagrex to determine what it is going to do. It becomes another Crown corporation, one of almost 500 in Canada today, and it does not come under scrutiny in any meaningful way beyond that of the minister and the Auditor General.

I presume that the minister and hon. members on your right, Mr. Speaker, will say, "But it shall come before a committee of the House for consideration". However, we are in a committee system which gives us a block system. We get an allocation of time. We get a minister of agriculture who fills us with blarney and very little fact at those committee meetings, and time is wasted and information is scarce. I am very concerned that we are creating for agriculture, which is one of the principal interests of my constituency, something which can be swept under the rug. It shall not be accountable to the House of Commons or to the committee on agriculture.

I am further more concerned that Canagrex will also come under government committees, not committees of the House of Commons but committees of ministers. The bill very clearly states that Canagrex will function under the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) but there shall be consultation with other departments of government. There shall be the use of programs of other departments of government. It is not an independent agricultural organization. I am afraid that under these circumstances it will become as subject to extraneous input as would be the farm prices board, which now governs the egg, poultry and other organizations of Canada, headed by a consumer proponent rather than by an agricultural proponent. That does not give agriculture very much of a chance. We have no assurance, for instance, that the president shall come from the field of agriculture. We have no assurance that the vice-president or the second vice-president, or anyone else, shall be appointed from the active, commercial sector of agriculture.

I am concerned about these things, and I ask the minister, in the pursuit and consideration of this bill, to let us have a better definition than we have at present. I do not want a consumer advocate to be telling agriculture and its marketing processors, "You should not charge more than", as the poultry marketing boards of this nation have been told. The dairy board of this nation has been told, "You shall not use present capital costs as a means of arriving at the cost of producing milk", for instance. There has been an ongoing discussion between the lady chairman of the board and the dairy people and the poultry people concerning the proper costing basis. Will we find ourselves in the same boat under this structure? I must say to Your Honour that if there is to be inflation in the world, then the government, including the Department of Agriculture, must recognize it and govern itself accordingly. We cannot be subject to the whim and pleasure of outside forces if they in turn will not consider the full costs incurred by the agricultural producer.

While I had some favourable thoughts on this bill prior to the time the Minister of Agriculture spoke, I must say that he turned me off when he stated—if I am not quoting him incorrectly, although not absolutely directly—that there are other markets which, for instance, would take the red meats today. He used the American market as an example. He said that we should be able to extract prices from that market which would be profitable to the farmers. The document which I have in my hand indicates that in a week in January, although I am not sure of the exact week, somewhere between 1400 and 1800 head of American cattle arrived on the Canadian market. Why did they come to the Canadian market? It is because they must have received a better return than they could receive in the American market. Can Your Honour tell me how, in the name of the great Father above, the farmer will buy the promotional statement that we could sell meat to the United States because they can afford to buy it at a profit to our farmers when they are already using our market as their market?

Let me give Your Honour another example. The minister said we should be able to sell red meat to the Soviet Union. It was my privilege on one occasion in this House to be part of the House of Commons and Senate committee which was meeting with the European parliamentary delegation. At that particular time, a European parliamentarian told us that approximately 500,000 tonnes of beef were in cold storage because there was no market for it in the European Economic Community. At the same time, there were world news items on that day stating that the Russian agricultural minister, or whatever he might be called—commissioner, commissar—had to reduce the cattle population of Russia because there was not enough grain to feed it. If there had been a market for red meat in Russia, there was lots of red meat to be subsidized by the $10 billion reserve fund of the European Economic Community; yet that meat was lying in cold storage, aging and deteriorating, because there was no market. Let us be reasonable. Had there been a Russian market while they were depleting their herd, the European Economic Community had a $10 billion reserve fund for the subsidization of export of agricultural products surplus to the need of the European Economic Community.

I submit that our Minister of Agriculture has done a great disfavour and a serious disservice to agriculture in Canada by that type of misleading statement. I compliment the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) who supports in principle the idea of Canagrex but who expressed reservations which I hope may become part of the committee process. I hope he will stand as firmly on this and as strenuously as is required in the interests of agriculture. A blind vote for this as it is presently written is not good for agriculture in Canada today or any other day.

The minister talked about selling red meat to Japan. The minister will recall that an element of major progress was made by western pork producers, initiated by the Alberta pork producers. A contract was in fact made to sell pork to Japan. At that time Alberta expanded its hog operations. If my memory serves me correctly, it went to 1,600,000 hogs in Alberta at peak. If I am not mistaken, there are barely 500,000 hogs in Alberta today.

There is no market for any significant amount of pork in Japan. They have been exploring that market for a decade. That is a public body, not government to government as the minister so loudly professes this shall be. However, it is the co-operative structure of Canada dealing with a government in good faith.

While there may be a few more porkers sold there now, certainly the long-term dreams of the pork industry of western Canada have not materialized as a result of a market in Japan. Why? As we passed a red meat act in this House, the Japanese government put in place a control on all meat imports to protect its industry at a level and price which satisfy its farms. The mere passing of this act will not give us what the minister suggests. We may have an agency which can give some information and have some marketing capability, but that is the best we are going to have.

Mr. Whelan: Now, now, don't be so optimistic, Fred.

Mr. McCain: I will be frank and honest and above board. I am not going to delude farmers into thinking this is the magic wand of price for which they have been looking so long. We already have a price stabilization board and CIDA, both of which should be capable of stimulating exports of our surpluses.

The statement has been made that we can control and plan our surpluses. The minister will agree that the present cattle population in Canada will indicate that the price of beef should be good. The present population has gone down very materially. It has not gone down as fast as we would have liked in Argentina, Australia, New Zealand, Brazil or other beef-producing countries. As a result, there is a world market slump in beef.

We cannot plan our beef population in this little country of Canada so that we can cope with world prices unless, as I have said many times, we are prepared to exercise the authority and use the money of the price stabilization board. The population has gone down. However, what the minister overlooks is that so has consumption. The Outlook for Agriculture Conference indicated that not only had the consumption of beef gone down in the last year, it will go down further in the next year.

How can we plan and get rid of those cattle presently walking in the pastures or tied up in the barns so there will not be an excess next year? We cannot predict the economy of this nation. To tell the farmers we can is deceit. To tell the farmers further that we can control world markets and guarantee them prices without price stabilization is further misrepresentation of the facts.

Mr. Whelan: We are doing that with many products now.

Mr. McCain: Yes, you are. However, if we expand this, we lose our capability to export in the field of agriculture as we lost our capability of exporting in poultry and eggs. We have decimated that export market. We cannot maintain it any better in other fields if we regulate as the minister proposes.

If the Minister of Agriculture were as sincere and believable as he would have us believe, we would have the same income-averaging opportunity that the farmers had. We would still have the same depreciation allowance that we had. We would still have the right to sell a farm from father to son. We would not have to pay the capital gains in advance. Where has the minister been?

Mr. Whelan: This is the only country in the world that lets a farmer give a farm to his son tax-free.

Mr. McCain: That is not correct. Do not mislead the farm population. Farms are inherited and passed on in a dozen countries without any such foolish tax.

Mr. Whelan: Name me one.

Mr. Taylor: There won't be one to pass on. Look at capital gains, capital costs.

Mr. Whelan: They have it in the United States too, remember that.

Mr. Nielsen: You are an embarrassment to everyone who wears a green hat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. Usually the Chair can hear the hon. member who has been recognized and is standing. We are now hearing from members who are seated and we cannot hear the member who is standing.

Mr. McCain: Where was the minister when there was an obvious need for bridge financing which is being supplied by other governments? Where is there an organization which will provide money for the farmer on the same basis as some U.S. establishments are doing? When our cattle ranchers and feedlot operators were paying 20 per cent to 22 per cent, some Americans were paying 8 per cent. Why do we not have anything like that? Where is our bridge financing of 8 per cent? Where has the minister been? Do not deceive the farmers.

Mr. Whelan: Don't you deceive them with your nonsense either.

Mr. McCain: Where is the minister going to get the expertise to participate in the export market? There are families who have been in the export market for three generations. We are setting up a board with a selection of people without definition of source, including the president, without qualification of expertise or experience in the field of agricultural marketing. If we pass this legislation as it presently exists, we will turn the exporting of agriculture over to the inept and uneducated in that field. Let us get some definition of who will be there.

• (2150)

I suggest to you that the minister does not have any concept of the vast knowledge required to be able to export a single commodity to 50 or 60 countries. I want to know where the expertise comes from when 100 items are exported to as many as 100 countries because I do not want to be part of a House of Commons that passes this responsibility to a group of inept, uneducated and inexperienced individuals.

Mr. Whelan: We have some of the best organizations in Canada, private and governmental.

An hon. Member: What is the matter with the Canadian trade service?

Mr. Whelan: They have not been doing it.

An hon. Member: Name some.

Mr. McCain: I do agree with some of the remarks which were made earlier. I am concerned about the competition that exists among provincial marketing structures. I suggest that these structures are not in the best interests of agriculture. However, the reason that they are competing is that there has not been leadership by this government in combining these structures. The government, through the Minister of Agriculture has had a subsidy plan introduced in British Columbia, Quebec, Ontario, Alberta and Saskatchewan. What will Canagrex be able to do about the price of beef when the oversubsidized Saskatchewan cattle are now going to market and cutting the price received by the farmers who are not subsidized? Why is that, Mr. Speaker? It is because the price stabilization board is not being used as it historically was and provinces have had to take over in defence of their farmers and replace federal responsibilities. It is misleading for the minister to introduce this legislation as a cure.

Mr. Whelan: We offered them income insurance, 100 per cent of cost of production in 1977. They refused it.

Mr. Mayer: This is 1982, five years later.

Mr. Whelan: We offered it to them and they said, no way.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, they said no because they never dreamed that this government or any other government would completely pull the price stabilization board out of activity and when the price stabilization board proposed an estimate of $300 million in support of the beef industry three or four years ago, it was turned down by the cabinet while he was minister. It never got off the ground.

Mr. Whelan: We had offered it because—

Mr. McCain: Because of nothing, Mr. Speaker. Let us not have any more facades. Every member of the House knows that the price stabilization board has been neglected.

Mr. Whelan: Even you know you are wrong in what you are saying.

Mr. McCain: The price stabilization board policy has been neglected and the minister has been asked to exercise that at 95 per cent by one Canadian organization in agriculture.

Mr. Whelan: They did not want stabilization three years ago.

Mr. McCain: That is not correct.

Mr. Whelan: That is correct.

Mr. McCain: The minister should show some leadership. The price stabilization that was offered at that time was subject to organization and control of products and marketing. There was a little string attached to it and they would not buy it.

Mr. Whelan: Not at all. We spent more than any government in Canada's history.

Mr. McCain: On the basis of the inflationary dollar, I doubt if the minister spent 25 cents on the dollar in price stabilization as compared to what was spent by Mr. Gardiner when he was minister.

Mr. Whelan: We spent much more.

Mr. McCain: Fifty cents on the dollar perhaps?

Mr. Whelan: They did not even want that.

Mr. McCain: They did not want the controls that were brought in by the minister's proposition. The minister knows that as well as does every member in the House. Nothing except at a price.

Mr. Whelan: That is nonsense and you know it.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, it may be nonsense, but the potato producers of eastern Canada would suggest to you that they have been threatened with no further price stabilization payments if they did not get production and marketing control. They were threatened.

Mr. Whelan: You are saying stabilization is a waste of money when you improve it by better marketing conditions.

Mr. McCain: I will return to the subject of beef. The most recent publications on beef coming from the government sponsored future of agriculture in December indicated that the consumption was down and would go down further. The minister knows full well that in the beef industry in no way can you anticipate in one year a decline of 2 per cent or 3 per cent. What will be done with the cattle, calves and feeders except to market them? You cannot get rid of them anywhere in the world at this point in time, contrary to what the minister has said. We are not getting the advice which is needed.

If ever an industry needed the publicity of potential prices in the export field, it was the potato industry in the crop year 1981-82. Because that information was not publicized and perhaps not known by the Department of Agriculture, the minister will no doubt use the price cutting of dealers in the world market as an excuse for Canagrex marketing potatoes. If the public had been advised of the potential price in the export market, no sensible dealer could have cut prices to the extent they have been cut this year. That information has not been available and it is needed by the farmers' organizations and those who market. We do not need control of this industry passed over to the government. We do not need the interprovincial competition of marketing boards. We need leadership from the government and a program which will once again try to assume the federal responsibility of agriculture which will remove the interprovincial competition and subsidization which has dislocated certain crops and destroyed the marketing of others.

An hon. Member: How would you do that?

Mr. McCain: My first step would never have been to remove the price stabilization board. The removal of that board encouraged the provincial subsidies. The hon. member knows that as well as I do. Someone had to step in to save their farmers and they stepped into a vacuum, starting in British Columbia and Quebec. The hog industry is dislocated. The red beef industry has been dislocated during the minister's tenure in office because there was no leadership and no knowledge of the agricultural industry.

I am not saying that I will not vote for this bill but I do say that in the interest of agriculture we need some responsibility, accountability and an indication where these officers who will run Canada's agricultural industry will come from. At that time let us consider it. In the meantime, we must keep in mind the warning from the member for Humboldt-Lake Centre and the warning of the former minister. They are real and not imagined.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—PROJECTED RENTAL INCREASES IN OTTAWA-CARLETON REGION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have attended tenants' association meetings in Bayshore in my constituency and I have heard from many tenants in Parkwood Hills and other areas of my riding as well as from other parts of the Ottawa-Carleton area about the situation which has developed and is developing with respect to rental accommodation.

On December 4, 1981, I asked a question of the minister responsible for housing arising out of the budget. The question as it appeared at page 13733 of Hansard was this:

He is aware that in the Ottawa-Carleton region the major rental owner is Minto Management Limited which is intending to raise its rents substantially to some 7,000 to 9,000 tenants. We have one of the lowest vacancy rates in Canada, and there is very little choice in housing in a situation that is virtually a monopoly.

● (2200)

Would the minister please tell the House where in the budget there can be some specific help granted to Ottawa-Carleton so that there can be a choice made in housing? I have looked at the budget. I think the provisions in terms of alternate housing are next to useless. Will the minister make a recommendation to the Minister of Finance that he increase measures for the availability of housing stock so that people will have a choice and not be subject to a monopoly?

In answer to that question this is what the minister said:

Madam Speaker, in the budget announcement dealing with stimulus to rental construction one of the conditions of that housing and its identification for stimulus is that it be located in markets which indeed do have tight vacancy rates. I must bring to the attention of the hon. member that the city of Ottawa does not have a tight vacancy rate—

Let the minister tell that to any tenant searching around in the market.

—when compared with other metropolitan areas—

The minister went on to complete his answer.

I am not arguing rent control. Rent control is a provincial matter, although I think it is absolutely necessary. It is particularly necessary in a monopoly or a virtual monopoly situation. Rent control is being looked to by the tenants' association, which is active and will be presenting the strongest case possible.

But let me deal with the minister's reasoning, and in the course of my remarks if there is some time, I will want to suggest some policy changes.

The vacancy rate in Ottawa fell from 4.2 per cent in April of 1980 to 0.6 per cent in October of 1981. According to CMHC the Ottawa-Hull area needs 7,800 new units each year. In 1980, only 2,600 new units were built, and data for the first ten months of 1981 suggested that no more than 3,000 new housing units would be built in this area in the year 1981. In other words, less than half the number of required homes and apartments are being built. In the past two years, 9,800 fewer homes were built than were required in the area, and virtually all new rental accommodation over the past few years has been government subsidized.

The major cause of this is high interest rates. At current interest rates it has been estimated that a landlord would have to charge in excess of $800 per month for a one-bedroom apartment in a new building to break even. Until the vacancy rates are either non-existent or until rents rise, private sector builders will not build, given that most people are unwilling to pay that much.

At the same time high interest rates are affecting the ability and the desire of young people to pay $1,000 in monthly mortgage payments. That is not an attractive proposition to a couple paying, for example, $300 in rent. If the couple had purchased a home, their apartment would have been made available to someone else.

The average cost in this area is staggering. In the third quarter of 1981 the average cost of a single family home was $69,000. Assuming a 10 per cent down-payment and 30 per cent of one's income going to principal, interest and tax, a family income of $40,000 a year is needed to afford an average priced home. In terms of meeting this problem this budget is virtually barren of any system by which there can be an attack made on an obvious social condition.

Mr. Smith: I thought you liked it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The net effect of the budget is that, instead of rising, the number of housing starts may be reduced. The budget offers builders some assistance for the construction of new homes, up to $7,500 per unit, but in my estimation that would only serve to reduce that $800 a month rent to $700. That is hardly an impact on the situation.

The minister himself has suggested he thinks rent controls should go; that is aside from anything else. I want to tell the minister that is really no policy at all. In that budget MURBs were cancelled when rental accommodation was being built under the MURB provision. This has been replaced with a program of little assistance. The relief for home owners in the budget is little more than a program that allows people to keep their homes by going further into debt. I know that there is co-operative housing and all these other things; it is one thing to talk about co-operative housing but it is another thing to get it under way.

I believe there should be some major changes in the budget; in fact, the budget should be withdrawn and a new one introduced to provide relief for home owners. This could take the form of subsidized interest rates or mortgage interest deductibility. These measures would be of some help in getting people out of apartments and would encourage them to build homes.

As well, there has to be a recognition of the depth and breadth of the social problem. The reintroduction of MURBs in some form is essential.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think this budget was designed in anticipation of higher rents and, through that system, to give an incentive to landlords to build more units, rather than being a commitment by the federal Liberal Party to help tenants and home owners.

I think the best thing that could be done is to withdraw the budget and to give the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) another chance. Better still, perhaps the government should withdraw the Minister of Finance!

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond further to the matter raised by the hon. member on December 4 concerning projected rental increases in the Ottawa-Carleton region.

As the hon. member is aware, rental increases in the province of Ontario are governed by provincial legislation. Any increase in rents beyond the provincially established maximum must first receive the approval of the provincial residential tenancy commission. The hon. member is fully aware of that. Rents in Ottawa and elsewhere for a number of years have not been high enough to prompt an adequate rate of new rental construction costs. This has led to a condition of excess demand and it does not surprise me that rental increases are now occurring.

Low vacancy rates prevail in several cities across Canada. As the hon. member knows, apartment vacancy rates in Ottawa declined to 0.9 per cent in October from 2.4 per cent in April of last year. That is a problem. Centres with below 1 per cent vacancy rates are considered to be very tight and to assist these areas the Canada rental supply plan was announced in the budget on November 12. This plan will provide a total of 15,000 rental units across Canada. I wish to assure the hon. member that Ottawa will be included in the allocation of units under this plan. Of course, if the budget were withdrawn that plan would not exist and I am sure the hon. member would not want that to happen. There are, however, areas where the shortage of rental units is more severe.

In addition, I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that under the non-profit and co-operative housing programs CMHC will be approving approximately 550 units for low and moderate income families and individuals in the Ottawa area alone during 1982. This is an increase from the 465 units committed in 1980 for that area.

PENITENTIARIES—INFORMATION ON RELEASED PRISONERS GIVEN TO ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE (b) NATURE OF INFORMATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, on November 5 I rose in the House to ask the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) a question regarding the policy within the correctional system of Canada. Specifically I asked whether it was the practice of prison officials to pass on to RCMP officers information regarding criminal conduct of inmates within the penitentiary system whilst they were incarcerated there. I had in mind at that time the career of Clifford Olson. I did not want to be specific at the time, partly because I wanted to deal with the principle and partly because I did not want to add notoriety to his case and jeopardize the criminal proceedings that had been launched against him.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I was surprised by the answer of the Solicitor General when he told me in the House on that day that it was indeed the practice of prison officials to pass information on to RCMP officers regarding criminal activity within the prison system.

I have checked on matters before and after that occasion and while I have no specific documentation, it is my clear understanding that RCMP officers are not privy to information regarding criminal activity engaged in by inmates within the prison system. The RCMP do not get that documented information. They must rely on street talk, particularly, and the gossip within that subculture of the prison population.

There are some people who believe that Mr. Olson would have been apprehended sooner had the RCMP known of his behaviour while he was an inmate at the B.C. Penitentiary. Specifically, as a result of Mr. Olson's behaviour prior to 1977 and 1978, was his name on a sex offender list held by the RCMP? Had he been on that list, would that not possibly have helped the RCMP to have apprehended him sooner?

I am sure the Solicitor General knows that in early 1976 Clifford Olson raped a young man at the B.C. Penitentiary. I am sure the Solicitor General knows the young man in question. Right after that three inmates in the protective custody unit attacked Clifford Olson. While that attack was being engaged in, there were over 75 inmates in the PCU at the B.C. Penitentiary watching. This was unprecedented at the B.C. Penitentiary, and the officials there knew that something had to be done. Thus, almost immediately they transferred him to Prince Albert where he was immediately attacked and stabbed by three inmates. It was as a result of that attack that he was awarded $3,500 by the Saskatchewan Crimes Compensation Board, which in its award noted that his conduct was above reproach, that he indicated an unusual degree of moral and physical courage and that he underwent a great deal of emotional turmoil. In June, 1977, Mr. Olson was back at the B.C. Penitentiary. He was the key witness in the trial of one Gary Marcoux, another man arrested and charged with a sex offence and murder. It is clear that without the testimony of Clifford Olson at that trial Marcoux could not—and I underscore "could not" have been convicted.

Did the penitentiary officials at the B.C. Penitentiary scrub Mr. Olson's files so that he would appear to be a credible witness at the Gary Marcoux trial? The Solicitor General will know that within that trial there was a very lengthy voir dire which dealt with the admissibility of evidence, and that evidence concerned the correspondence between Olson and Marcoux; something like 100 pages of correspondence. Would the judge at that voir dire have accepted the testimony of Mr. Olson had the judge known the career of Clifford Olson in the B.C. Penitentiary prior to the arrest and trial of Gary Marcoux? Why was the Crown prosecutor who used Mr. Olson at that trial so solicitous in helping him after the trial was over? I have a letter written by the Crown prosecutor to the chairman of the National Parole Board. In it, in part, he said:

> I have no hesitation in saying that Marcoux would have gone free but for the evidence that Olson gathered and to which he testified during the course of the trial. Marcoux is a dangerous sex offender and should not, in the writer's opinion, be allowed in our community and I, as a citizen of this country, am grateful to Mr. Olson for assisting the Crown in convicting this man.

I should like to know why the prosecutor, who just last month or earlier this month became defense counsel for Mr. Olson and was previously the Crown prosecutor using Mr. Olson in the trial of Gary Marcoux, was so solicitous in helping Mr. Olson by writing to the chairman of the National Parole Board. Could it be that even the Crown prosecutor was not privy to the career of Mr. Olson while he was an inmate at the B.C. penitentiary? Did he know that Clifford Olson had raped someone, that he had been attacked by other members of the protective custody unit within the B.C. penitentiary and in Prince Albert because of that attack on a young man at the B.C. penitentiary? These are very serious questions. Underlying them is whether or not there is collusion among the officials of the correctional system to protect certain inmates and clean up their files so they will appear to be better inmates in the eyes of certain officials in the future.

• (2215)

Hon. Robert Kaplan (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, for some months now the hon. member has been raising this general question about the extent to which the correctional service of Canada warns the police and municipalities to which offenders are being returned about their criminal records. The hon. member has not until tonight indicated that he was specifically interested in any particular offender. He tells me tonight that the offender in which he is interested is Clifford Olson and the trial about which he has a number of specific questions is not the Olson trial but the Marcoux trial. Indeed, I will look into all of these questions and do the best I can to furnish answers, bearing in mind that provincial court records are not within my jurisdiction.

Nevertheless, the questions which the hon. member asked are interesting and I am anxious to get to the bottom of them. However, I want to remind the hon. member, because it is sometimes contradicted in the media, that Clifford Olson at the time of the series of murders for which he was recently convicted was not a parolee. He was not under mandatory supervision. He was free because his warrant justifying his incarceration and justifying mandatory supervision had expired. He was free to go anywhere in Canada without reporting to the police or without reporting to members of the parole service or the correctional service of Canada. The kind of authority which the correctional service has over a person after his or her warrant has expired is much more limited.

I want to assure the hon. member, and through him the people of British Columbia, that the correctional service of Canada and the RCMP are far from being two solitudes and, whatever existed historically, there presently is a very close relationship not only with the RCMP but with all the police forces in Canada. In fact, my ministry originally sponsored a very successful joint committee, which is a national committee, bringing together senior officials of the correctional service of Canada and senior members of the police community. But there are also regional divisions of that organization. I believe over 40 meetings were held last year in the regions. One of the main purposes of these meetings is to exchange information about dangerous individuals known to the correctional service of Canada.

In addition to that, as I have indicated in answers to the House, the correctional service of Canada does provide information about offenders who are going into a community. Prison records are provided and telephone calls are made in serious cases to alert the police of the risk of an offender who is known to be dangerous, who was incarcerated and who is returning to a particular community. That is not only customary for the RCMP, but for all police forces. It does not do a service to criminal justice for the hon. member to create the impression that we are talking here about the old system of two solitudes where the correctional service never took any interest in people once they were back on the street. That is no longer the case.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO PAYMENT MADE TO CONVICTED MURDERER, CLIFFORD OLSON SUGGESTED RECOVERY OF FUNDS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, earlier today during the course of question period I raised certain serious questions with the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) concerning the Clifford Olson case, questions which are being asked by many thousands of Canadians from coast to coast about this black day in Canadian legal history.

I called upon the Solicitor General to order a full independent public inquiry into the circumstances of this payment and the manner in which the investigation was conducted. In addition, I urged the Solicitor General to make a very clear, unequivocal statement in this House that never again in Canadian history would he, as Solicitor General, or his successors, authorize the payment of such blood money to a person suspected or accused of committing a crime, especially the most serious crime which can be committed in Canadian society, that is the taking of another person's life.

Since the announcement of this payment during the course of the trial of Clifford Olson and the announcement of the nature of the investigation and some of the questions raised about that investigation, the B.C. Attorney General, Allan Williams, was caught in a barefaced lie. The Solicitor General himself has made a number of blatantly contradictory statements.

At one point he said that he had the power to veto the payments made to the family of Clifford Olson. He indicated he was informed shortly after the decision was made; there was a reference at one point to "a couple of days". In any event, there was a clear statement that he had veto power over this decision.

However, it now turns out he was not informed until more than two weeks after the decision to authorize payments was in fact made, and after payments were made to the trust fund. How can he possibly suggest that at that point he could have vetoed this particular decision? He has said there was a convictable case at the point at which the decision was made to authorize payment. However, that evidence has been disputed not only by the B.C. attorney general, but also by the commissioner of the RCMP.

In addition, the Solicitor General will know as a lawyer that any evidence obtained either through fear of punishment or hope of reward would certainly be thrown out of court. That is a cardinal principle of our criminal law, and is confirmed in the charter of rights.

The Solicitor General indicated at one point that no federal money was paid to the family of Clifford Olson. He then said the federal amount was 44 per cent, which then became 75 per cent. In fact, Mr. Speaker, every penny of this money must be paid by the federal government under the terms of the contract between it and the province of British Columbia. Section 14 of that contract states very clearly that any ex gratia payments must be paid in full by the federal government.

What does the Solicitor General say in a classic case of buck passing? He says it is not his responsibility. He wants to leave it to the attorney general of British Columbia. The fact of the matter is that it was his responsibility to make the decision to authorize payment. Those funds are coming out of the federal treasury and it is, indeed, his responsibility under the RCMP Act to ensure that a major decision such as this is only taken with the consent of the federal Solicitor General.

There is a second aspect to this case which warrants investigation. I called upon the Solicitor General to assure Canadians that a payment such as that made to Clifford Olson would never be made again under similar circumstances, and that this should not be allowed to establish a precedent. There is a fundamental rule in Canadian law that a criminal must not be allowed to profit from his crimes. This rule has been violated and a very dangerous precedent has been set. Twisted minds may decide to kill for profit. Others may be induced to confess to crimes they did not commit.

All of us understand the anguish that the parents felt in these circumstances. I am a member from British Columbia and I know the pressure on the police, but this kind of payment cannot be tolerated. I was approached by the parents of one of the murdered children who asked me why that man was able to profit from the death of their child?

Other questions must be raised in the course of an inquiry about the nature of this investigation. Why was Clifford Olson not under detailed and intensive surveillance from the moment he became a prime suspect on July 15, 1981? In view of his record and in view of the fact that he was a prime suspect, why was he not under the most intensive form of surveillance? Inspector Proke says, frankly, he cannot tell why the delay occurred. Other questions have been raised. Was Olson on the RCMP payroll at any point as an informer? Was there an accomplice working with Olson on some of these murders? Why was this man not behind bars in view of certain charges made against him and in view of his lengthy record. There are many questions which remain unanswered in the Clifford Olson saga, such as the circumstances of the payment and the manner in which the investigation was handled.

I would very seriously suggest that if the Solicitor General does not respond to this strong outcry by Canadians from coast to coast and order a public inquiry to settle some of these serious questions, he will bring the office of the Solicitor General into disrepute and he will have no alternative but to resign forthwith.

Hon. Robert Kaplan (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has added very little to the questions which he raised in the House this afternoon during question period. I think I gave my answers to those questions at that time. I want to take advantage of the opportunity, however, to indicate why I think a public inquiry into the police investigation would be highly undesirable.

There were three or four prime suspects who were being watched by the police, and there were a great many other people who had accusations brought against them. If there were to be a public inquiry, the public would have to be informed as to who those other suspects were and what the evidence was against them, which was false evidence in some cases, and how the police weighed that evidence in making a decision as to whether it was Olson or whether it was them.

One might say that we could bring the evidence forward but leave out the names of the suspect. However, if one leaves the names out and includes their addresses, places of business, and associates, which were all very important in assessing their possible responsibility in the matter, they would be identified. I think it would be extremely unfair to the other suspects of these murders, who were cleared when Olson was convicted, to bring forward the cases against them which led the police to consider them to be suspects.

If one wanted to assess how the police were doing, and why, until they charged Olson, they thought he might either be guilty or innocent, one would have to know what they thought they had against the other people. One would have to name them or give their names and addresses, which would amount to the same thing, in order to make it possible to review the judgment that the police were exercising in the case.

Then one would have to involve the parents of many, many children in the area where these crimes were committed, those parents who came forward and told the police their children had been the victims of sexual assaults of one kind or another. One would have to give their names in order that the public inquiry could understand why their evidence was important; or, if one left their names out, one would have to give their addresses or something of their descriptions, such as where they worked and how it was that these four suspects and others who were accused came into contact with them.

I think when one indicates what happens when a police report is made public, it is obvious why it should not be made public. If the parents of a child who was a victim or thought to be a victim of a sexual offence came to the police, knowing that in the following few weeks the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) would have the right to have that information made public and broadcast across the country, even if their names, their address and their places of work were omitted, what kind of public inquiry could we have?

This is a case where the attorney general of a province and the Solicitor General of Canada share a responsibility. Their duties are different, but they have this responsibility because it would be unfair and wrong, as well as disruptive and destructive of police operations, for inquiries of this sort to be made public. I think police work would be very seriously deteriorated if this information was made public, even with names and identifications expurgated to avoid prejudice. This just would not mean anything to anyone who wanted to assess it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this House condemns the current puppet government of Poland controlled from Moscow, that we support as a government the spirit of freedom demonstrated by the national and international members of Solidarity, that this House urges the Soviet Union, through diplomatic channels, to cease its present military and political intervention in the affairs of a sovereign nation, and that it censures the Prime Minister of Canada, the Neville Chamberlain of our day, for his deplorable attitude of appeasement toward a totalitarian government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING CLIFFORD OLSON MURDER CASE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, Clifford Olson, a career criminal, murdered 11 young people in British Columbia but recently received only 25 years in prison, and his family received a large sum of money for information he provided. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman):

That an independent federal inquiry assess the matter comprehensively, including the probable effect of the payment on Olson's trial if he had not pleaded guilty, how the offender was on the street at the time of his murders despite indications of repeated violations of his parole conditions, and the effects of the entire incident from the standpoint that justice should not only be done but be manifestly seen to be done by Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

RESIGNATION SOUGHT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has shown a complete lack of compassion and sensitivity to the plight of the ordinary Canadian by blindly sticking to his most unpopular and incompetent budget; whereas his budget, by upholding the government's high interest rate policy, which is now contributing to, and not fighting, inflation, is causing untold suffering amongst farmers, businessmen, home owners and, indeed, all Canadians; and whereas these policies are pushing up unemployment figures to an all-time high, which translates into an increase in personal despair, depression, crime and suicide rates across the country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the Minister of Finance do the only honourable thing left to him to do, that is, to tender his resignation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BANNING OF SASKATCHEWAN HEALTH DEPARTMENT ADVERTISEMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my motion arises out of the refusal of the CBC to carry certain anti-smoking advertisements prepared by the Saskatchewan Department of Health on the ground that the ads go beyond the concerns of health, and emphasize certain social considerations. In light of the contradiction that the CBC does not hesitate to run ads from tobacco companies which promote smoking by relating it to images of mountain streams and macho cowboys, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House requests the CBC censors to review their unfair and contradictory policy and decision and allow the Saskatchewan Department of Health to advertise in order to discourage a very unhealthy practice.

UNEMPLOYMENT CAUSED BY SHUTDOWN OF PLANTS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROPOSE EMERGENCY PLAN

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Considering that the Canadian people are suffering increasing trauma and stress as a result of factory closings and the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs; considering that a study by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association shows that we can expect an additional loss of 100,000 jobs within the next two months in this vital sector of our economy; and considering that the budget brought down on November 12 is only going to exacerbate the recession, which was confirmed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in Toronto yesterday, when he admitted that unemployment would increase, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That the House unanimously urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to propose an emergency plan aimed at stopping immediately this rash of plant shutdowns and permanent lay-offs, thereby recognizing the fact that Canadians cannot afford the luxury of losing 100,000 jobs.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KOREA—SUPPORT FOR UNIFICATION OF COUNTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, South Korean President, His Excellency Chun Doo Hwan, has again called on North Korea to adopt a joint constitution committed to the ideals of nationalism, democracy, liberty and individual well-being, in his unswerving commitment to Korean unification. As Canada is committed to these same ideals of nationalism, democracy, liberty and individual well-being, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That this House commend and support the people of South Korea in their efforts for a united Korea and in so doing pay tribute to those Canadians who fought and some who died in Korea to achieve the goals of freedom.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DISASTERS

DEVELOPMENT OF SHIP SAFETY STANDARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, following the tragic and needless deaths of crew members in the sinking of the Hudson Transport in the Gulf of St. Lawrence last month, and other recent maritime disasters during which 18 Canadians perished in the last two years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That a reference be provided to the Standing Committee on Transport so that that committee may develop recommendations on the whole range of safety standards required of commercial ships sailing in Canadian waters, and in particular the need for survival suits for all members of the crews.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MEDICAL CARE

ENFORCEMENT OF NATIONAL STANDARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43. It is a year and a half since the Hall Report recommended the banning of extra billing by physicians, and six months since the task force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements recommended likewise. Yet all we have had up to date from the Minister of National Health and Welfare is bluster and rhetoric, while the enemies of medicare, from certain doctors to certain provinces, detecting that this government has no courage or spirit for the defence of medicare, are having a heyday. The extra billing that is going on in Alberta, and the hospital policies of the Ontario government, are examples of what I mean. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That this House instruct the Minister of National Health and Welfare, first, to table proposals for the clarification and enforcement of national standards for health care; second, outlaw extra billing immediately before it goes any further and, third, tell the Minister of Finance to withdraw his irresponsible proposals for cutbacks in federal transfer payments to the provinces.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EDUCATION

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL COUNCIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I rise seeking the attention of all hon. members of this House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced on January 6, 1982, a new national training program designed to overcome skill shortages, to accelerate economic growth and development, and to facilitate industrial adjustment, and in light of the fact that this morning's Globe and Mail states that an Ontario manpower commission indicated that the education system in that province failed to produce skilled workers for industry, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet):

That the government take the appropriate steps to establish a national educational council whose main function would be to encourage uniform educational standards and recommend programs which would meet the demands of the skilled labour market.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON VETERANS' INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, a well concealed provision of the November 12 budget, Resolution 53, has put Canadian veterans directly in the taxman's firing line when they can ill afford to be anywhere near the battlefield. This measure will, in effect, be taxing the veterans' families where they have never been taxed before. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to rescind Resolution 53 of the budget which would add veterans' pensions to their total calculable income, thus making them ineligible as dependants for their working spouses to claim the corresponding $3,500 tax deduction.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

ELIMINATION OF INVESTMENT INCENTIVES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke-Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to say "Welcome home!" to the Minister of Finance. What a surprise to see him in the House today! In his speech the minister said that it would be wrong to stimulate the economy. He forgot that over a million Canadians are out of work and that many more stand to lose their jobs in less than a month. Behind these statistics are the countless personal tragedies that are taking place throughout the country. Why did the minister decide this year to remove so many investment incentives which had, in fact, been introduced with a view to creating employment?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his welcome. I am delighted to be welcomed back after one day's absence. He would obviously be weeping with delight if I stayed away a week and then came back.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Try retirement.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member in his statement suggested that somehow the approach of the government is anti-investment. It seems to me that the central message of the budget—

An hon. Member: Is inequity.

Mr. MacEachen: —is anti-inflation. It is intended to do what is required to remove the main obstacle to investment and growth in the country, namely, high inflation rates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: How in the name of Heaven does the hon. member think we can have growth and investment in the country—

Mr. Nielsen: By your resigning.

Mr. MacEachen: —unless we bring down the inflation rate which is presently bedevilling the investment process? That message has not got into the hon. member's head yet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE BUDGET

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S ADVISERS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the central message of many Canadians which I heard across Canada over the past three weeks—I was working, not in a lair in Cape Breton brooding—was that this was an anti-job budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: The inflexibility of the minister in the entire budget process is unprecedented. The tax increase which he has imposed upon Canadians is also unprecedented. We are in a recession which is the worst since the depression.

Yesterday the minister said that he thought it was the wrong time to stimulate, that he wanted to wait until July when things might be better. But all experts—and I do not include the minister in that category of person—are telling us that it will be worse by July. Does the minister have the same people advising him now as he had advising him on the budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is again contradicting himself. He has accused me of great rigidity in my approach to the budget and economic measures. When I announced on December 18 changes to the budget in response to representations received—

Mr. Epp: Just withdraw it, Allan, and get on with it.

Mr. MacEachen: —from across the country, the hon. member was on his feet instantly demanding my resignation because of this enormous retreat which he now describes as rigidity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: You do not remember what you say from one day to the other.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the minister knows as well as all his backbenchers know that he was forced into that retreat because of the stupidity of the budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: The budget is a tax grab which is robbing many Canadians of worth-while and widely accepted social and economic programs. This change has shaken the faith and confidence of many Canadians that the government understands what is going on. "Do they know what they are doing"; that is what we were asked in the past couple of weeks. Will the minister explain why he will not withdraw and cancel those tax changes which affect programs, such as the dental and health programs, savings incentives, and taxation of pensioners, and refer them to a House committee?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member is relying on the statistics which were put before the House by his leader yesterday, then no wonder he is in the blind alley that is revealed by his question. The Leader of the Opposition stated yesterday that millions of Canadians would have their taxable income increased by $500 as a result of the budget. That is false, and it is as false as the other allegations in the hon. member's question.

Mr. Clark: You prove it.

An hon. Member: That is the way to go.

FINANCE

REBATES ON FARM FUEL

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It has to do with what is going on in the farming community. Could I please have the minister's attention?

For the first time we have farmers who are going out of production for reasons of man-made uncertainties having to do with the economy. This does not have to do with weather or with markets, and it will result in substantially increased prices for food to the consumer, in turn affecting inflation.

Specifically, can the minister give any hope to producers that there will be some government assistance so they can stay in production and thereby contribute to holding down the price of food? In that regard, I have a specific suggestion to offer. Would the minister consider increasing the rebates on farm fuel used for the production of food? That seems to be quite reasonable when one considers that the government is currently taking between 40 cents and 60 cents a gallon—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a question?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, I asked the minister if he would consider a rebate on farm fuels used in the production of food. I pointed out to him that the federal government is currently taking between 40 and 60 cents a gallon in tax on that same fuel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has put forward a suggestion with respect to a particular rebate. Obviously all suggestions are given consideration, but I would remind the hon. member that there is presently before the House a bill affecting the farming community on which debate began yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: We have given notice with respect to the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, that bill had to do with increasing exports. If we lose our production at home we will not have anything to export. That will not be of much help to producers at home.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FARMERS' ACCESS TO SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, let me make another specific suggestion to the minister having to do with the budget if I may. The minister changed the provisions of the Small Business Development Bond. Some of the changes were welcome. But we have problems with the one that has financial difficulty as a constraint. Would the minister be prepared to consider removing that financial constraint provision from the Small Business Development Bond so that farmers can have access to at least a limited amount of financing in the 10 to 11 per cent range?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the financial difficulty provision of the Small Business Development Bond was there when it was first introduced by the former minister of finance. It is still there and it is applied in present circumstances to firms and unincorporated businesses, including farmers in financial difficulty, so that the available funds will go first to those who need them most, namely, farmers and small businessmen who, because of high interest rates, are facing these difficulties. I believe the hon. member's suggestion would make it possible for those in a much better position to get the available funds at the expense of those who need them most, namely, firms in financial difficulty. Therefore I cannot accept his suggestion.

THE ECONOMY

ESTIMATE OF FUTURE LAY-OFFS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in his speech made yesterday in Toronto the minister flatly refused to consider any further stimulus to the Canadian economy. In the same speech, however, he made it clear he expected that the disastrous circumstance leading to thousands of Canadians being laid off would continue for some time in the future. We made a forecast of the number of people who could be anticipated to be laid off, but more recently the Canadian Manufacturers' Association attached a precise figure to its estimate. The Association stated that some 100,000 Canadians would lose their jobs in the next few months. Does the minister agree with the Canadian Manufacturer's Association estimate and, if not, what is his estimate?

• (1425)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member wants to get statistical information, I suggest he put a question on the Order Paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I suggest, Madam Speaker, that answer reflects precisely this government's total lack of concern about the human lives affected by unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LAY-OFFS IN INDUSTRIAL SECTOR

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, we have seen the minister's lack of concern about lay-offs in general. My next question concerns the industrial sector specifically.

We have lost 235,000 manufacturing jobs in the last four months. In the province of Quebec alone unemployment in manufacturing is at 12.7 per cent, and this morning Camco announced 1,400 additional lay-offs in Montreal and Hamilton.

My question is straightforward, and I hope this time the minister will answer. Does he not agree that most of the 235,000 lay-offs in manufacturing, and in particular those laid off from Camco this morning, are directly related to the high interest rate policy which has caused a fall off in investment on the one hand, and a decline in consumer spending on the other?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is off the mark. The basic cause for a good deal of the trouble in our domestic industry is a fall-off in foreign markets. It is due in large part to the decline in purchasing power of all our trading partners. The hon. member has to get into place the idea that other countries, not only Canada, are in the midst of a recession which is affecting our markets. That is the basic cause—

Mr. Wilson: Why do you make it worse?

Mr. MacEachen: —at the present time of the situation we are facing. What I am attempting to avoid is worsening—

Mr. Wilson: You have already.

Mr. MacEachen: —the situation by undertaking the massive stimulus the hon. member is advocating, which would have the result of pushing interest rates up further and making Canada less competitive than it is at present.

I ask the hon. member what solution does he have now for a situation where in the United States price inflation and wage increases are much less than in Canada? How do you expect to compete in the future unless Canada gets its inflation rate down? That is the central message of the budget.

Mr. Clark: Get rid of you.

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES ON INVESTMENTS AND PURCHASES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the rhetoric was interesting; it is just too bad the minister did not answer the question. He knows full well that most Canadian manufacturing is intended for the domestic market, not for export, and the question pertained to the decline in manufacturing jobs.

I would like to ask the minister, assuming he has a million dollars to invest, would he put it in a job-creating business project given the markets as they are now in Canada, or would he, because of the high interest rate policy, be more inclined to put it in a bank or trust company where he could get 15 per cent without risk. Alternatively, if he were a consumer would he now buy a television set, a car or refrigerator, when interest rates on consumer loans are at 19 per cent, or would he put off such purchases indefinitely?

Will the minister answer that question, because surely the answer is he will put the money in the bank and put off purchases, and that is why we have massive unemployment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): The hon. member answered his own question and it is the kind of answer I would expect from a comfortable socialist who does not believe in the free enterprise system.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA POST

DELIVERY OF MUNICIPAL TAX BILLS

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation. The self-delivery of bills by municipalities has become an area of discontent since the Canada Post Corporation has threatened court action. The minister knows that this has always been an accepted practice, and restrictions will not increase employment in Canada Post Corporation but, in fact, will cause unemployment as countless senior citizens, handicapped persons, students and boy scouts, etc., will lose their jobs in part-time delivering of bills.

In order to clarify this situation, is the minister at least willing to introduce an amendment to the Canada Post Act, reinstating the exception in question, and thus allowing the continuance of this practice by municipalities?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, this matter was discussed at length when Parliament was debating the bill to establish the Canada Post Corporation. The hon. member should have taken part in the discussions in committee at the time, especially since representatives of his own party discussed the matter at the time and voted with the government for the bill to establish the Canada Post Corporation, a bill that does not give charitable institutions the right to encroach on the exclusive letter delivery monopoly of the corporation.

[English]

Mr. Bradley: Madam Speaker, we were not talking about charitable institutions. We all know, on this side, how bills are passed in this House. I might remind the minister, if he is taking cheap shots, that it was not this side which said that small business should not depend on Canada Post.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bradley: This leads me to another area concerning storekeepers and their bills.

DELIVERY OF MERCHANTS' BILLS

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Will the minister at least confirm that section 15(5) of the act grants storekeepers and other merchants the right to send out their bills using their own employees?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is not customary for a minister of the Crown to give a legal opinion. The hon. member can read the act as well as I can.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MONEYS PAID TO CONVICTED MURDERER, CLIFFORD OLSON

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Could the minister advise whether the moneys paid by the RCMP to convicted killer Olson have been physically removed from Canada and may therefore be outside of the jurisdiction of the Canadian government in the event of any recovery attempt?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the trustee who was originally in possession of those funds has not been totally forthcoming in reply to inquiries made to him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That makes two of you!

Mr. Kaplan: My understanding is that that fund is still in Canada and in the hands of a trustee.

An hon. Member: What is FIRA going to say?

DETAILS OF PAYMENT AGREEMENT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): My supplementary question is directed to the same minister, Madam Speaker. As well as the payment of moneys at Olson's request, were there any other inducements, benefits or considerations held out to Olson in the RCMP agreement with him, or, for that matter, even outside of the agreement?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, there were no other inducements offered to him of which I am aware.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CANADIAN VOTE IN UNITED NATIONS COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of External Affairs. Two weeks ago, in a vote in the Fifth Committee of the United Nations, the U.S., Canada and Turkey alone, among members of the Western Alliance, voted to cut specially allocated funds for the United Nations' "missing persons" group which has been responsible for focusing world attention on the disappearance of some 20,000 people, more than half in Latin America, in some 20 different countries. Diplomatic observers at the United Nations attributed the U.S. vote to the policy of the U.S. administration to ease up human rights pressure on allies in Latin America. I would ask the minister whether Canada, as well, is easing up on its support for human rights in Latin America. If not, will the minister instruct his officials at the United Nations to continue full support for this vital UN human rights function?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and the House that human rights remain one of the foremost priorities of Canada in our foreign policy.

An hon. Member: Right after martial law.

Mr. Crosbie: We saw that!

Mr. MacGuigan: To the best of my recollection, with respect to that vote, and I will subsequently check our vote, it was not cast on the substance of the matter at all, but was cast with respect to budgetary considerations which were not being observed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: However, I will review that file and, if I have the opportunity, I will subsequently report to the House. In any event, it certainly does not reflect any lessening priority, on our part, for human rights.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES INTEREST RATES ON CANADA

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the comfortable capitalist, the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, at the Canadian Club, the minister said that he anticipated a recovery in the world economy in the next six months; but he also said, concerning the American economy, that interest rates in the United States could rise again if there were a strong recovery and if there were government borrowings there they would put heavy pressure on financial markets.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance to try to resolve this contradiction for the House. Is he saying that he expects American interest rates to go down, or is he saying that he expects them to go up? If he is expecting them to go up, can he tell us what this will do to Canadian interest rates and what this will do to potential recovery of the Canadian economy over the next six-month period?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I did state in the speech that it was the opinion of most public and private forecasters that there would be a widely-based recovery in the United States and in Europe. In fact I pointed out that there is already a recovery taking place in Europe, and, to some extent, in Japan, a slight recovery. The expectation is that that recovery will gain momentum by the end of the second quarter of 1982.

I did add what I consider to be the wise observation that this type of recovery could be impeded by another surge in interest rates, particularly if there were very heavy borrowings by the United States; that, of course, relates to their deficit and how they will deal with that. We will probably know more about that when the President makes his statement tonight. However, it seems to me that yesterday, in attempting to assess the economic situation as thoroughly as I could, it was my obligation to point out the risks which were also involved; and, in this case, I pointed them out with respect to American possibilities.

Mr. Crosbie: You tell Turner he was at fault. That's what you did.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, I am sure that President Reagan will appreciate the detailed economic management advice on how to deal with deficits from the Minister of Finance. However, I would point out to the minister that it was Calvin Coolidge, in 1928, who said that he anticipated the future with optimism, and I suggest to the minister that that is the kind of answer we are getting. However, he did not actually deal with the question I asked him with respect to Canadian interest rates.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ON INTEREST RATE MOVEMENTS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): I would like to ask the minister for a flat statement. If American interest rates go up as a result of the policies of the American government and conditions in the United States, can he at least give us the assurance, this time, that we will not join the Americans on that roller-coaster which will have the effect of devastating our real economy and throwing hundreds of thousands more Canadians out of work? Can he give us the assurance that he now intends to follow a made-in-Canada interest rate policy which will respond to conditions in this country and not to policies followed elsewhere?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows, I am sure, that every week there is a public tender of treasury bills in the market, in Ottawa—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —in Canada, and that the interest rate, the bank rate which results from that, is totally made in Canada, to that extent.

Mr. Stevens: By the Bank of Canada.

Mr. MacEachen: Except, Madam Speaker, the hon. member always—

An hon. Member: You know better than that!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —overlooks the fact that Canada is part of an international financial market, that it is part of an international trading system, and that Canada gets a great deal of benefit from participating in that international trade and payments system. What happens in the United States affects Canada, as it does West Germany, the United Kingdom, Italy, and every industrialized country.

An hon. Member: What are they doing now?

Mr. MacEachen: There is no way by which it is possible to insulate Canada against interest rate changes in the United States without paying a very heavy price in the form of short-term capital movements from Canada and in the form of very heavy depreciation of the Canadian dollar. That is the trade-off that the hon. member never mentions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE BUDGET

EFFECT OF PROVISION ON VETERANS' INCOME

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The minister will be aware of a tax provision, Resolution 53, which will drastically reduce a war veteran's annual income. A Canadian veteran can ill afford to lose a potential $3,500 income which is gained by having the working spouse claim him as a dependant for income tax purposes. Will the minister agree to rescind immediately this extremely punitive tax measure which will see veterans and their pensions being put front and centre on the taxman's firing line?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has raised another question with respect to veterans. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition alleged that the taxation of employee benefits would have a direct effect on veterans pensions. I would like to say with regard to one type of veterans pension, namely, veterans allowance as determined by the recipient's income and means, there is no impact whatsoever of the taxation of employee benefits upon the receipt of veterans pensions. I want to clear up that allegation made yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition. The hon. member has given an interpretation of a particular resolution which we will be examining in the Committee of the Whole when we get there. If the hon. member wants to make representations then I will be very glad to consider them.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSIDER ADOPTING UNITED STATES POLICIES

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Inflation in the United States decreased from an average of 12.5 per cent in 1980 to an average of 8.9 per cent in 1982. Inflation in this country increased from an average of 10.1 per cent in 1980 to an average of 12.5 per cent in 1982, a new record for this country. Tax rates for individuals in the United States were lowered on January 1 by an average of 8¾ per cent, making it possible for a family of four earning $20,000 a year to pay $203 less in taxes this year than last year. Has the minister seriously considered introducing the same kind of economic policies, which are doing a far better job of reducing inflation and giving hard-pressed taxpayers a break in the United States than his policies are doing here in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker. I believe it was some months ago that the hon. member for St. John's East asked me if I would implement the Reagan policy in Canada in order to achieve so-called beneficial results. I stated at that time that one of the major characteristics of the Reagan policy was the elimination of very important social programs which I could not recommend to the House of Commons. I would say to the hon. member that it surprises me that he would point to the United States as a source of tax reductions which are undertaken annually in Canada through the indexation system which we all support.

In the last budget, in addition to the retention of indexing, reducing the tax rates and lowering the marginal tax rates, all of these things have been done with the effect that 12 million Canadians will pay less tax in 1982 than in 1981. That is Canada. I would like the President of the United States to top that in his budget address tonight.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S APPROACH

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, the fact that taxes for ordinary people in the United States are going to be considerably lower this year than a year ago seems to bear no weight with the minister at all. The minister has said time and time again that the number one project that his government has is to lower inflation. The United States has materially lowered inflation during the last year. The minister and his policies have materially increased inflation, as I have outlined to the House, and he has not commented upon that because he knows the facts are true and that his policy is a failure. Is it not now safe to describe the minister's approach to economic affairs as simply this: everybody is out of step but Allan?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, may I for a moment return to the previous question which the hon. member asked, comparing the tax situations in Canada and the United States. I would like to tell my hon. friend that the average industrial wage in Canada this year will be about $22,000. At this income level, the tax savings from indexing, the marginal tax rate cuts and the increased federal tax credit, are $625 for a single-earner married couple with two children—that is not bad—and $220 for a single person. I think that is considerably better than the statistics which the hon. member ascribed to the United States.

Mr. Hees: What about inflation which the minister says is the number one problem? He never even mentioned that.

THE BUDGET

PROPOSALS AFFECTING HEALTH AND DENTAL PLANS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Finance about his unprecedented budgetary attack on some 15 million Canadians who are covered by health and dental plans. Are his proposals to tax employer contributions, which will discourage Canadians from buying their own dental and health insurance and result in higher costs for lower-income Canadians, just part of a broadside attack on all worth-while social objectives, or will he come to his senses and reverse these provisions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has raised the question of the taxation of employee benefits, particularly health and dental plans. I ask the hon. member to consider the situation where certain employees receive part of their compensation in the form of employer contributions toward these plans, all non-taxable, and other employees receive their total compensation in the form of regular income which is fully taxable. It is in order to bring that situation into line that it was decided to tax these particular benefits.

I want to tell the hon. member that the tax reductions which I just mentioned, $625 for a married couple with two children, and a single earner family, will in most cases more than compensate for the increased taxes that arise from the taxation of employee benefits. I have the average specific numbers. The hon. member will see that the tax to be paid by the average employee is much less than the tax reduction that he will experience.

REPRESENTATIONS MADE BY CONCERNED ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the previous question. The minister may recall that I asked a question of him on December 16 with respect to dental and health benefits. At that time he suggested it was a "red herring".

● (1450)

Since then the minister has received a number of briefs from the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association, the Canadian Labour Congress, from the Building Trades Council, and the Canadian Construction Association. At the time the minister indicated that he would look into the consequences of the suggestions in those briefs. They make two points, first, that his budget affects the credibility of the future of those private health and dental plans and, second, that there will be increased extra costs to millions of Canadian working people.

Why does the minister still refuse to deal with those briefs and those suggestions from those very reputable organizations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have examined briefs which have been received. I have given a good deal of consideration to this particular problem. I intend to receive further representations which I am sure I will be getting later in the month when I resume my meetings with the interested parties.

As the Leader of the Opposition said, the resolutions will be before the House of Commons and they will all be examined in detail, at great length. I also understand and believe this will be an opportunity to delve into this question, to make the comparisons that I have attempted to make—

Mr. Wilson: How long do you need?

Mr. MacEachen: In answer to the question put by the hon. member I want to assure him that I am giving very careful consideration to all these matters and I respect the parliamentary process which provides for detailed examination of all these measures by the House of Commons. That has not yet taken place and I think that is an appropriate place for us to go into these matters in very great detail.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH CANADIAN-POLISH REPRESENTATIVES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's meeting with the president of the Canadian Polish Congress and other representatives of Canadian Polish associations yesterday, could the Prime Minister tell the House what the outcome of the meeting was, and particularly whether there was agreement on Canada's position in relation to the very distressing situation in Poland now?

An hon. Member: Just like you wrote it, Pierre.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would not want to speak on behalf of the members of the Polish Congress.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are speaking for Jaruzelski.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not my habit to report the position of others. I think they are able to do that for themselves.

My impression is that we agreed on three fundamental points, the ones that Canada has defended both in the NATO forum and since I made my statement on December 30. The points are that, first, there should be a relaxation and cessation of martial law; second, that dialogue should resume between the Polish government, members of Solidarity and the Catholic Church; third, that there should be a release of the prisoners who were put in jail following the imposition of martial law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUERY RESPECTING RECOVERY OF FUNDS PAID TO CONVICTED MURDERER, CLIFFORD OLSON

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and it again concerns the payment of $90,000 in blood money by the RCMP to Clifford Olson—an unprecedented agreement which the Solicitor General now admits he did not even know about until it was beyond his control.

In view of the fact that the Solicitor General originally stated that there was no federal money involved whatsoever, and then gave varying percentages, including 75 per cent, I would ask the minister what was the specific source of these funds. Was there some special informer fund? Precisely what percentage was paid by the federal government? Also, despite his statement that the word of the RCMP is their bond, even to convicted killers, what steps is the federal government taking to recover these funds?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as to the recovery of the funds, that matter is under consideration between the attorney general of British Columbia and the "E" Division of the RCMP, as I have indicated before. I am looking forward to hearing from them at the conclusion of those discussions.

GUIDELINES GOVERNING PAYMENTS TO ACCUSED PERSONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I note that the minister still appears to be unable to answer what percentage of this was paid by the federal government, or whether anything was paid by the federal government.

Yesterday the Solicitor General refused to assure Canadians that similar payments to those made in the Olson case would not be paid in the future, saying that he would continue to authorize them in accordance with the professional code of the RCMP.

Recognizing the possibility that this practice could lead to disturbed individuals killing for profit, or possibly being induced to confess to crimes that they may not have in fact committed, what are the specific guidelines in the RCMP professional code governing the authorization of such payments in the future?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, with regard to the percentage, I know that the hon. member was sounding off yesterday to the effect that, in his legal opinion, these payments would be entirely from the account of the federal government. That was not my view. My view was that they were part of the provincial policing funds, like all other funds disbursed on account of that contract. In the current year those payments are billed and shared between the federal and provincial governments in the ratio of 56 per cent provincial and 44 per cent federal.

I checked with the province of British Columbia and they confirmed that they did not view this as a federal responsibility, notwithstanding the legal advice of the member opposite, and that they too considered it to be part of the general provincial contract.

As far as payments in the future are concerned, the House will be interested to know that the New Democratic Party critic of the attorney general in the province of British Columbia has approved these payments, and I understand has said that if he were attorney general of the province he would have made the same agreement.

As I indicated recently, the position on agreeing to payments in the future is the same as the position on payments in the past; that is, that it is a matter of administration of justice within the province. I would want to assure that in the future the RCMP would bring such a demand from an accused or other offender to the attention of the attorney general of that province, as they have done in the past, so that that attorney general would have the same authority to deal with it as the attorney general of another province not served by the RCMP.

FISHERIES

ASSISTANCE FOR FISH PLANT IN ST. ANTHONY, NFLD.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. According to press reports the minister has been involved in an anguished attempt to salvage the Fishery Products Limited plant at St. Anthony. Could the minister tell us how much federal money is available to help, how much the minister thinks it will cost, and how soon will some action be taken?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, if you intend to allow that question I will simply say that I have represented St. Anthony for ten years and I do not intend to stand by and see the people of St. Anthony suffer in any way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DIFFICULTIES FACED BY EAST COAST FISHERIES

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): In view of the fact that the government has now set up Michael Kirby as the minister for fisheries, and that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans himself seems to have absolutely no role to play in the salvaging of the fishing industry on the east coast, and in view of the fact that Mr. Kirby said that our estimate of what it will cost is all wrong, and in view of the fact that the Minister of National Revenue cannot answer the question, I would like to put the question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Would the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans tell us how much money is needed, how soon it will be paid, and whether he, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, has any ongoing responsibility whatsoever for the financial difficulties of the east coast fisheries?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's rhetoric should remind the House that he has discovered Newfoundland in the last month.

Mr. Crosbie: When will you start?

Mr. LeBlanc: The first thing the hon. member did when he discovered the Newfoundland situation was to write a letter to me suggesting that we spend $100 million without any conditions—simply spend it. I believe that some of his colleagues on that side of the House might find that somewhat irresponsible.

The fact is, Madam Speaker, that before Christmas cabinet made a decision to give some assistance to the industry in the form of deficiency payments. That was very gratefully received. I think it was a good formula. Cabinet also made another decision for the purpose of protecting the communities of Gaultois and Grand Bank. The Lake Company should be encouraged to present to us a business plan that would allow us to help them in their recovery. That is already proving to be productive and very useful.

• (1500)

The matter of St. Anthony is more recent. We are looking at this subject, and I might tell the hon. member that he really should go to Newfoundland again. He might learn something else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRCRAFT NEAR MISSES

Question No. 2,728—Mr. Beatty:

1. For 1980 and 1981, in how many instances did a commercial aircraft pass another aircraft in the air with fewer than 500 feet between them and, in each case (a) what were the aircraft in question, including the origin and destination (b) on what date and at what time did the incident occur (c) was an investigation conducted and, if so, what were the results?

2. Is it a requirement that an investigation take place where near-misses of aircraft occur and, if so, what is the procedure followed?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. An exact method to determine spacing between aircraft in flight in such critical measurements, does not exist at this time. Normally, Air Traffic Control Services conducts an investigation when aircraft under their control are involved and it is alleged that flight safety may have been jeopardized and/or less than the required minimum separation between aircraft may have existed. Within this process, investigations are conducted into both technical and critical losses of separation.

A technical loss of separation is defined as an occurrence in which less than the authorized separation minimum existed but no evasive action was considered necessary by the aircraft or controller.

A critical loss of separation is defined as an occurrence in which less than the authorized separation minimum existed and one or both aircraft took evasive action, or would have instinctively done so had there been sufficient time or knowledge of the situation.

For 1980 and until July 1, 1981, of the critical losses of separation recorded, ten involved commercial aircraft which may have passed in close proximity to other aircraft.

See attached list for:

(a) Aircraft in question; origin and destination.

(b) Date and time of incident.

(c) Results of investigation.

2. In all cases of suspected loss of separation or incident, where the involvement of air traffic control is indicated, a team is convened to investigate the occurrence. Such investigations are conducted under specific guidelines and a report is filed accordingly.

CORPORATION REASSESSMENTS

Question No. 2,767—Mr. Herbert:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,419, of the amount received by the Department of National Revenue for 1980, what portion was received after the initiation of court proceedings?

2. What is the estimated cost of collection of the reassessed amount?

3. What percentage of companies filing tax reports were audited?

4. What percentage of companies audited were reassessed increased taxes?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): 1. This information is not available. Our records do not break down amounts received in corporation reassessing increases between receipts after the initiation of court proceedings and receipts prior to any court proceedings.

2. No estimate is available for the costs of reassessing corporations alone. The total cost of all enforcement for all classes of taxpayers is estimated to be $1 for every $4.7 in additional taxes assessed.

3. Year ending March 31, 1980: 4.7 per cent.

4. 41.2 per cent.

DEPO-PROVERA

Question No. 3,021—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the government funding an abortion drug known as "Depo-Provera" through the Canadian International Development Agency in certain countries and, if so, which countries?

2. Was the drug thoroughly researched by the Department of National Health and Welfare and, if so, what were the findings and what is a complete description of the manner in which the drug works?

3. (a) To the knowledge of the government, was the drug banned by the United States Food and Drug Administration for use in that country and, if so, for what reason (b) does the government consider the administration to be a leading authority on drug administration and distribution and, if so, for what reason is the government promoting a drug that was banned by that authority?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian International Development Agency and Health and Welfare Canada as follows:

1. At present, CIDA is not involved in the funding of Depo-Provera (which is a contraceptive and not an abortifacient) to any countries. Several years ago, CIDA, in a joint program with the World Bank, contributed financially to the purchase of two million doses of Depo-Provera at the express request of the government of Thailand as one of several components in a family health project in that country.

2. The Department of National Health and Welfare does not carry out premarket developmental research on drugs: a notice of compliance is issued provided the manufacturer has supplied data meeting the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act and regulations. Depo-Provera is a long-acting progestogen which has been marketed in Canada since 1961 for endometriosis in non-pregnant women and for palliative treatment of advanced endometrial carcinoma.

3. (a) Depo-Provera is marketed in the United States for the palliative treatment of inoperative, recurrent and metastatic endometrial and renal carcinoma.

(b) The drug is not banned in the United States.

HOME SUPPORT SERVICES FOR VETERANS

Question No. 3,056—Mr. McKenzie:

1. With reference to section 10.43 of the 1980 Report of the Auditor General, what is the projected budget requirements to carry out home support services for the 50 per cent veteran population which will be over 65 by 1985?

2. Has the department of Veterans Affairs developed any other long-term projects to service the aging veteran population other than the visiting homemakers and meals on wheels and, if so, what are they?

3. Has the Department made any plans regarding a veterans health card plan and (a) if so, what are they and how would the system work (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. For fiscal year 1984-85, it is estimated that $3,100,000 will be required for home support services for disability pensioners of all ages, to whom the Aging Veterans Program applies.

2. Veterans Affairs instituted the Aging Veterans Program in response to the needs of the aging veteran population. Services include domiciliary care, ambulatory health care, home modifications for the handicapped, and home care services. Included in home care services are professional health care and assistance such as personal care, preparation of meals, housekeeping, groundskeeping and other necessary tasks required in the upkeep of a home. Currently the program is available to disability pensioners where the need arises from a pensioned condition.

3. No. DVA did study the feasibility of a health card plan and found it to be impractical.

(a) Not applicable.

(b) A standard health card system is not practical. For disability pensioners, it is not always possible to list all pensionable conditions on a wallet-size card, and the listing of certain conditions would not be in the best interest of the veteran. As eligibility of non-pensioners for treatment is dependent on the level of their income, it is not possible to issue a health card which would certify that treatment costs are payable by DVA.

DVA—EVALUATION PROCEDURE

Question No. 3,060—Mr. McKenzie:

With reference to section 10.49 of the 1980 Report of the Auditor General, was a formal evaluation procedure instituted within the Department of Veterans Affairs to serve as a basis of modifying future health care initiatives and, if so (a) who carries out the evaluation and to whom is it presented (b) is the evaluation made public (c) how are the recommendations acted upon and is there an established action procedure?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Section 10.49 of the Auditor General's report refers to the project work preceding the introduction of the Aging Veterans Program which commenced April 1, 1981. The scope of this project is limited to a relatively few disability pensioners. Formal evaluation of projects of this nature are only meaningful when the programs have been in full operation for 3 to 5 years.

A formal evaluation plan is being developed for use in assessing the results of the current limited initiative.

(a) future impact evaluations will be carried out by the Departmental Directorate of Policy Planning and Evaluation and presented to the deputy minister;

(b) evaluations are available to the public within the relevant government guidelines;

(c) the program is established by regulations, therefore approved recommendations for altering the program will, as a minimum need, take that form for implementation.

AUTOMATED CLIENT DATA BASE INFORMATION SYSTEM

Question No. 3,062—Mr. McKenzie:

With reference to section 10.55 of the 1980 Report of the Auditor General, what were the results of the quest of the Department of Veterans Affairs into the potential need for extending the scope of an automated client database information system?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): All studies and experience to date have concerned both the viability and necessity of maintaining and extending Veterans Affairs automated client database information. It is considered an integral element in Veterans Affairs' program of improvement and modernization. Since the Auditor General's review, the client database has been extended to provide management information to the Canadian Pension Commission on its high volume processes such as application and appeals. This information will assist the commission in the monitoring and control of these processes.

The primary current activity is to extend the use of the client database in the Pacific region of the veterans services program. This will be followed by an active program planned for the next two years to further extend both the content and use of this database to other regional and district offices supporting Veterans Affairs activities.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE REVENUE

Question No. 3,148—Mr. Neil:

By province, what revenue is derived by the government from excise and customs?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): This information is contained in the "Report of the Department of National Revenue, Customs, Excise and Taxation, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1981" tabled in the House of Commons October 27, 1981.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 3,291—Mr. Dantzer:

1. How many individuals made Canada Pension Plan contributions in the (a) third quarter of 1980 (b) fourth quarter of 1980 (c) first quarter of 1981 (d) second quarter of 1981?

2. (a) How many CPP contributory accounts are on file (b) are they filed by social insurance number and, if not, what filing mechanism is used?

3. Was the list of CPP accounts ever cross-checked with the Department of Employment and Immigration's list of social insurance numbers to ensure accounts were not set up for non-existent persons?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Health and Welfare Canada and Revenue Canada as follows:

1. Revenue Canada advises that these figures are not available by quarters. The monthly remittances of employers of Canada Pension Plan contributions do not identify the number of contributors involved. The number of individuals who contributed to the Quebec Pension Plan and Canada Pension Plan in the calendar year 1980 as determined from the T1 1980 individual income tax returns assessed to the date of the question totalled 10,447,982. The structure of the T1 is such that it is not possible to break out a separate figure for the Canada Pension Plan at this time.

2. (a) Health and Welfare Canada has at present 13,481,-434 individual contributory accounts on the file, known as the Record of Earnings File.

(b) They are filed by social insurance number.

3. Before posting entries to the Record of Earnings File, the social insurance number of each record is checked against a copy of the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission's file of social insurance numbers.

EXCESS CONTRIBUTIONS TO CPP

Question No. 3,292—Mr. Dantzer:

1. How many individuals, according to Canada Pension Plan files, contributed more than their yearly maximum last year?

2. Does the Department of National Revenue notify the CPP of the number of persons who claim refunds for overcontribution to the plan?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The number of individuals who overcontributed to the Canada Pension Plan in 1980 is not yet available. The number for 1979, derived from the number of refunds through the 1979 T1 individual income tax return system, totalled 2,792,715.

2. Yes.

BONUSES FOR SM AND EX GROUPS

Question No. 3,325—Mr. Herbert:

Will any bonus amounts be payable in 1981 to SM and EX groups and, if so (a) will the amounts be allocated to the appropriate departments (b) are any such expenditures covered in the Main Estimates?

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Performance award payments were made in 1981 to employees in the EX groups. The amounts paid by departments were charged to the relevant vote of the department out of moneys provided for payment of salaries and wages. No payments were made in the SM group as conversion to this group has not been completed. It should be noted that some employees currently in the upper levels of some groups, that may be converted to the SM category, may have received an exceptional bonus payment under existing pay plans.

USE OF HOVERCRAFT ON WEST COAST

Question No. 3,341—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. How many hovercraft are on service with the Coast Guard on the west coast and where is each located?

2. How many additional hovercraft are on order for service with the Coast Guard on the west coast and where are they to be located?

3. (a) What is the (i) primary (ii) secondary task of the hovercraft operating on the west coast (b) are there to be any further tasks and, if so, in what order of priority (c) at whose command are these hovercraft used as resources in each task?

4. (a) What is the cost of each hovercraft and are they all of the same type (b) what is the crew size of each (c) how many crews are in place or are to be put in place to man these hovercraft?

5. What is the size of the administrative tail for this stable of hovercraft?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Two hovercraft CG021, CG039 are stationed at Vancouver International Airport terminal. A third hovercraft CG045 entered service temporarily as a backup unit on November 1, 1981, at Vancouver International Airport terminal. In the near future, CG045 will be stationed in the Gulf of Georgia area to assume its new search and rescue (SAR) role.

2. None.

3. (a) (i) Air and Marine Search and Rescue, and civilian and humanitarian incidents.

(ii) Aids to navigation maintenance work, emergency operations (oil pollution), SAR prevention activities, co-operation with local authorities, transport of peace officers, steamship inspectors, and fisheries officers, co-operation with provincial emergency program (flood relief).

(b) No. The primary function of the hovercraft is search and rescue. Secondary functions other than those mentioned above in 3 (a) (ii) cannot be considered in order not to compromise the hovercraft's primary role.

(c) The responsibility to direct the use of and to allocate SAR forces, both primary and secondary, during a SAR incident rests with the Rescue Co-ordination Centre at Victoria.

In the event the hovercraft is used for secondary tasking, managers of other departments must request permission from the regional manager, search and rescue who is primarily responsible for the operation of these units. In any event the Rescue Co-ordination Centre at Victoria is always informed on the whereabouts of the hovercraft when assigned on secondary taskings.

4. (a)

CG045 SRN6 (48.5 ft.)	$500,000 (Nov.-1981) (rebuilt cost)	3

(b) Crew: 1 seaman rescue specialist
2 craft operators to share duties pilot/and navigator and communications

(c) 7 crews of 3; total: 21 persons

5. One officer-in-charge and one secretary/typist for administrative duties, both located at the hovercraft base. Financial and staffing support functions provided by regional manager, search and rescue and Coast Guard regional headquarters at Vancouver.

CONSULATE IN KIEV

Question No. 3,524—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is the government giving consideration to establishing a consulate in Kiev in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Given the large number of Ukrainian-Canadians in Canada and the strong ties which understandably bind them to their relatives and friends in the U.S.S.R., the Canadian government has long given consideration to the opening of a consulate in Kiev. In times of government fiscal restraint, however, it is unlikely that funds could be set aside for this purpose in the immediate future. Budgetary limitations have forced the government to carefully re-examine Canadian overseas representation and to limit the expansion of foreign operations except in those areas which there is an urgent and overwhelming demand for a Canadian presence.

If a decision were taken to open a second mission in the U.S.S.R., Kiev would clearly be the preferred site. Unfortunately, until such time as funds are available and a consulate in Kiev becomes a top priority, the government must continue to monitor developments in the Ukraine from our embassy in Moscow.

Question No. 3,561—Mr. Cossitt:

What is a current list of all Soviet diplomats accredited to Canada and, in each case, what was his/her date of arrival, what is his/her diplomatic position and where is he/she stationed?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Soviet diplomats accredited to Canada are stationed at the embassy of the U.S.S.R. in Ottawa or at the Consulate General in Montreal. They are stationed as follows:

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BUDGET

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the opposition of Canadians from all walks of life, as expressed to the Members of Parliament of all three parties, proves conclusively that the budget of November 12, as amended by the statement in this House by the Minister of Finance on December 18, should be withdrawn and immediately replaced by a new budget.

He said: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this motion is straightforward and simple. It asks that the government withdraw a budget which was a mistake and that it bring in a new budget to create jobs for the Canadian people and, if not to create confidence, at least to bring a halt to the despair that is stalking the country.

The minister today may defend his budget by saying that this is a time for hard decisions and a time to be tough enough to stick by those decisions. Everyone across the country accepts the need to make tough decisions in our present economic circumstances. The issue about this budget is not whether the government is tough. The issue here is whether the government knows what it is doing, and the issue in this debate is whether, in the face of overwhelming evidence that this budget does not do what the government pretends it does, the government will have the courage to pull the budget back or whether it will push this budget through, whatever the damage, whatever the costs to individual Canadians and whatever the costs to the integrity and the strength of this country.

If I may say so, for individual Members of Parliament on the government side, many of whom have been heard over the last several weeks expressing their views and the views of their constituents on this budget, members who were sent here in a party's name but with a deeper responsibility to a nation and to its people, the issue, if the minister ignores the facts that we all know and inflicts this terrible harm on millions of Canadians, is whether the Liberal Members of Parliament will put their country's interests first or slink subserviently into obeying their political masters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: As you know, Mr. Speaker, when the government failed to show the slightest interest in how the budget was affecting Canadians in their daily life, my party's caucus set up a committee to seek the opinion of the Canadian people. During the last three weeks, 62 members of our caucus held hearings in 15 communities across Canada. One hundred and sixty-eight people were heard by our committee and gave their views on the budget and the economy. These people represented Canadians from all walks of life, including pensioners and Indian bands, professional associations and consumer groups, business and labour. All were unanimous in their opposition to the budget. Everywhere the same message was heard: The budget must be withdrawn before Canada goes under! When the caucus committee's report is made public, the members of this House will realize how great the opposition to the budget actually is. They will understand the frustration of small businessmen upon realizing that the government has completely changed the rules of the game. They will hear the anger of pensioners who see their insurance plan is being taxed before they even get the money to which they are entitled. They will realize that the Canadian people are deeply disappointed in this government which no longer deserves their confidence.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, all of us in this House know the dismal statistics about Canada's economy. From August to December last year 235,000 Canadians lost their jobs across Canada, and in a presentation to our committee the Canadian Manufacturers' Association gave its estimate that another 100,000 jobs will be lost in the manufacturing sector in the next few months alone, a crisis aggravated by this lay-off budget of the Liberal government. A record 8,055 Canadian businesses were forced to declare bankruptcy in 1981. Farm bankruptcies were 18 per cent higher in 1981 than they were in 1980, and they were 109 per cent higher last year than they were in 1979.

Canada Mortgage and Housing estimates that as many as 40,000 Canadian families may lose their homes because of high interest rates. Indeed, the prospects are that this situation will get worse. The November Conference Board forecast was as follows:

> Next year holds a bleak prospect for the Canadian economy and for households in particular . . . continuing double-digit inflation, interest rates, increasing unemployment, declining business investment and the weakness in the United States all combine to rule out the possibility of a quick turnaround in the pace of economic activity.

As dismal a story as those statistics tell of a government wantonly squandering the potential of one of the richest nations in the world, those figures do not begin to describe the individual hardship and despair of countless Canadians. Many of those people came to our committee because they had despaired of the government's listening, but they hoped Members of Parliament might carry their case and their concern there to the floor of the people's Parliament.

The gross numbers on housing shortages and the cost of housing just cannot describe the fear, for example, of many young couples that the working wife may become pregnant, because if she does, they will have to give up the home they worked so hard to buy since one salary will not be able to support that home.

The gross numbers on lay-offs cannot describe the fear of the plant worker in Ontario, in Quebec or anywhere across the country who is out of a job now after more than 20 years and has nowhere to turn. It cannot describe the fear of those people who wonder if their number is among the 100,000 other jobs that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association expects to be lost in the Canadian manufacturing sector. The gross numbers on inflation and interest rates cannot describe the despair that, according to testimony received in Nepean, has doubled calls to the suicide prevention centre in Ottawa.

These are but a few of the examples given to our budget committee across the country. I know that such stories are not limited to members on this side of the House. The tragedy of this budget is that its author either did not know or, worse, did not care about the impact on hardworking Canadians who are simply trying to hold on to their houses, to hold on to their jobs, to hold on to their small businesses or farms and to pass something better along to their children.

It is clear that this budget was prepared on false premises and introduced under false pretences. It was written in September, before we felt the full force of the recession that is now gripping Canada. The budget was written for conditions that had passed before it was presented. On those grounds alone the government should introduce a new budget which would respond to the current reality in Canada.

As I said in November, it is a budget which was dishonest in its presentation. It was put forward as being equitable but the evidence is overwhelming that ordinary working men and women or Canadians who want to work are punished terribly by it. The budget helps multimillionaires but takes all or part of the child tax credit away from at least 60,000 Canadian women. It lowers pensions received by Canadian veterans. It attacks the security of some 13 million Canadians depending on insurance policies for future security. Beyond the economic damage inflicted by this budget on literally millions of Canadians, the injustice extends to creating among many of our citizens, such as Canadians who had taken up investment incentives or Canadians who had followed plans for their own security, the sense that they have been betrayed by their own government.

The budget was described as a weapon against inflation. The one certain thing this budget will do is feed inflation. The proposal to tax employee benefits guarantees that hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers will demand higher wages in new contract negotiations, to make up in cash what they have lost in benefits.

John Fryer, the president of the National Union of Provincial Government Employees who appeared before our committee, estimates that 90 per cent of his 240,000 members will face increased federal taxes as a result of this budget. That is because the budget will artificially raise taxable incomes by taxing dental and extended medical care programs that his union has already negotiated to be paid by employers. That alone will immediately boost the taxable income of a British Columbia civil servant, to take the example of one province, by $498 a year, and the federal tax grabbers will take, on average, $166 of that.

The result is simple and is evident to all of us. It should have been evident to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Mr. Fryer says his members are telling him that whatever they had been demanding to catch up with their losing battle against inflation will have to be raised by one or two percentage points, come the next round of negotiations. Those union members—like the British Columbia loggers who will have to pay an extra $18 per day in tax for remote living allowances—will demand more money. So will their counterparts in unions in various fields across the country. Costs will go up with no increase in productivity. Inflation is automatic. It is guaranteed by this aspect of the minister's budget.

But the minister has built inflation into his budget in other ways. He airily dismisses a major change in the federal sales tax as having no effect. He might think it has no effect but the experts for the Retail Council of Canada calculate that the shift of the tax from the manufacturing to the wholesale level, despite a cut in the rate, will add up to 6 per cent to the cost of almost everything we buy in Canada.

Think of that. According to the figures of the Retail Council of Canada, with this one so-called technical change the price of an $800 refrigerator will increase by a minimum of $13 and a maximum of $48 at a time when refrigerator manufacturers are closing down.

And those increases do not even consider the turmoil and costs of shifting the collection and calculation of the sales tax from the manufacturer to the wholesaler. One major wholesaler estimates the changeover itself will cost $1 million with an added $100,000 per year for compliance. Those costs, too, will be passed on or else more companies will go bankrupt and more Canadian jobs will be lost.

In the interests of ivory tower theory, then, the minister is building inflation into this budget. There could be two explanations for that kind of deception—the pretence that it fights inflation when it feeds it, or the pretence that it is equitable when in fact it imposes an unbearable burden on lower and middle-income Canadians across the country.

This budget is the result either of incompetence or design. If it was simply incompetence—if the minister genuinely did not know what he was doing—an honourable minister would swallow his pride and draw back the budget. Because, I remind the minister, he is not debating parliamentary procedure here. He is damaging lives, he is literally driving people to suicide, he is destroying trust in government, he is destroying investment plans and savings plans that people have built up painstakingly over decades, he is driving Canadians out of jobs, and he is destroying both the means and the will to create future jobs in our country. Those are the stakes here. That is what has happened and it is known to every member who has been listening to his or her constituents over the Christmas break.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It could be incompetence but we cannot rule out the possibility that this budget had exactly the result the government seeks. Certainly, the one unquestioned impact of this budget is to put even more of the nation's money and wealth in the hands of the central government.

Between the third quarter of 1980 and the third quarter of 1981, over one third of the increase in the gross national product was absorbed by increases in federal government revenues. The government now proposes, during this fiscal year and the next fiscal year, to increase its revenues by $27.5 billion. That means it plans to take another $1,100 from every man, woman and child in this country. By the end of that two-year period, the federal government revenues will have increased 52 per cent above what they were in 1980-81. After excluding transfer payments to provincial and local governments, the amount of money at the disposal of the federal government will increase by 63.1 per cent in that two-year period.

While this budget abandons equity, Mr. Speaker, it feeds inflation. It clearly achieves the government's purpose of a major tax grab by the federal government, taking money, wealth and power from the people of this country and concentrating them within a government that is stupid enough to bring in this kind of budget and now tries to defend it in the name of equity or in the name of economic advance.

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: The measures introduced by this budget are extremely harmful, that we know. What makes it even worse is that the budget is based on principles that are disastrous for the future of this country. With this budget, the government is making a profound change in the nature and orientation of Canada. As a rule, Canadians are not hostile to government. They understand that there is a need for reasonable regulations, for fair and just taxation, for protecting the environment and for creating social programs for the handicapped and those who are unable to work. Now, however, the Canadian people have a government that is so eager to extend its influence and control that it has gone completely overboard. The mandarins at the Department of Finance have got their way at last. They now have a Minister of Finance who is so oblivious to the real world he did not even ask the basic questions: what will be the impact of the budget on the average person? What will be the impact of the budget on personal initiative? How will the budget affect investment? What will it do to encourage people to save for the future? What will it do to further justice and equity? What will it do to make Canadians feel their government knows what it is doing?

When the budget was brought down, obviously the members on the opposite side did not ask those questions. Instead, they relied on experts, the same experts who are helping the government to concentrate economic and political power in Ottawa, away from the provinces and from the Canadian people. This unhealthy urge to centralize power was visible in the constitutional proposal and in the energy pricing agreement, and is now surfacing again in the budget.

[English]

The condemnation of the budget by Canadians in all walks of life and in all parts of the country is unanimous and is scathing. Perhaps the minister has not heard from the same people which our budget committee heard from over the past three weeks, so I thought I might give him a sample or a taste of what Canadians think of his budget. From Charlottetown:

> Today's government seems to have a complete lack of understanding and concern for the role of the business sector in our economy.

From Winnipeg:

> The budget does not soak the rich but harms the poor.

From Vancouver:

> British Columbia has gone from a prospect of high growth to one of high unemployment in one year.

From the National Union of Provincial Government Employees:

> That budget was no damn good and it should be thrown out and we should start again.

From Toronto, a citizen standing and asking plaintively:

> Why should I save for my old age? I'll spend it all now and let the government take care of me.

From the Canadian High Technology Association:

> They're not backing winners . . . they're bleeding winners.

From home builders:

> They've already got us down and now they've stomping with hobnailed boots.

The quotations go on and on from the story of agony of individual Canadians, the story of outrage of people who feel betrayed. I notice some Liberal Members of Parliament on the other side of the House smiling. I am convinced that if they were at home listening to their constituents over this past Christmas period, they would have heard the same kind of testimony from individual Canadians who are being damaged by the budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The test for them will be whether they will put the interests of their constituents ahead of the interests of their party. When these matters come up for voting in the House, or when the matter comes up for voting today, the test will be whether they will put the political future of the Minister of Finance ahead of the economic future of the country and the individual well-being of countless Canadians. We have heard from some of those members. I almost hesitate to quote one of them, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), who indicated that he knew of at least a dozen government Members of Parliament who will "sure as hell" criticize the government's economic decisions. The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) said:

> I've been in politics 17 years and I've never seen people so mad about a budget.

The hon. member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) said:

> It is not a happy situation and we're in deep trouble. Our economic policies just aren't working. The interest rates are just loansharking with an official sanction.

The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) said:

> I think we should throw the basic part of this budget out.

I presume he was speaking of the Minister of Finance. The test for those members and for other Liberal members will be whether they put their votes where their mouths are, whether they are prepared to put the interests of their people ahead of the interests of their party, when this question comes to a vote tonight, and if the motion is defeated today, when budget measures come to a vote later on.

We are dealing with not simply a question of a budget which is the worst budget brought in in the history of the country in terms of its impact upon ordinary Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I hear some across the way questioning that. I would ask those members to go back to Sarnia, to go back to Scarborough or to go back even to Ottawa Centre, to go out and hold public hearings of their own, and to ask their own voters what their citizens or their electors think about the budget. Let them do that, let them do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We are dealing with not simply a budget that is bad and is causing Canadians, many of them for the first time in their lives, actually to consider cheating. The testimony has come before our committee. They say that the government has ignored the rules by which they have all worked. "If my government ignores the rules, why should I obey them?" is the kind of question which is being asked by Canadians across the country. It is not simply an attack upon the economy of Canada; it is an attack upon the ethic of Canada and it is an attack which flows directly from the budget brought in by the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Again there is the question of representation. There is the question of for whom does Parliament speak or with what mandate does the government act? I remember a great deal about the February 1980 election campaign. I do not remember very many Liberal Members of Parliament going out and proposing to tax Blue Cross benefits. I do not remember very many Liberal Members of Parliament or Liberal spokesmen going out and proposing to bring in changes which affect 13 million policyholders of Canadian insurance policies across the country. I do not remember any of the measures of the budget being proposed by any of the Liberal spokesmen as they sought the vote of the Canadian people. The reason for that is clear. If they had been honest then about what they intended to introduce now, they never would have been elected to office. If they asked their constituents today for their view in a general election, both they and their budget would be thrown abjectly out.

Some hon. Members: Out, out!

Mr. Clark: I would invite the Minister of Finance to hold a public hearing in his own constituency—and if he will not do it, I will do it for him—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —so that the people of his constituency could express themselves directly about how they feel about a budget which denies them their future, which throws them out of work, which denies their plans for security, which denies their ability to plan for themselves and to stand on their own.

What we have here is not simply a budget which is bad economically, not simply a budget which is bad morally, we also have a budget which raises fundamental questions about democracy in the country. This is a budget for which the government has no mandate at all. It is a budget which tries to change fundamentally the rules of the game as they have existed in the country. It is a budget which changes understandings upon which Canadians have planned and built. It is an illegitimate way for a government to act. If they do not have the courage to withdraw it, they should have the courage to seek a mandate directly from the people of Canada for the budget which they are trying to impose upon the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We would welcome that option, but there is an easier one available, and that is for members of the House simply to accept this motion, which is quite straightforward. It allows the minister to rise and say, "Yes, we made several more mistakes than we admitted last December;" "yes, the budget is bad;" "yes, we have heard from the people of Canada;" and "yes, we withdraw it." That is what the government should do if it has the interests of the people of Canada at heart. That is what I devoutly hope the government and the House of Commons will do today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) will forgive me for interrupting, but I believe in my wildest gesticulations when Madam Speaker was in the chair and she was searching for a seconder that she has on the record the motion of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). With the consent of the House, I would like the record to reflect my name as the seconder of the motion.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, before we adjourned for the Christmas recess and during the early stages of the budget debate it was clear to everyone in Canada, certainly outside of the House of Commons, that we were in a state of economic crisis. It became clearer during the Christmas break that the crisis was not only real and serious but was deepening. During the last 48 hours, as we have listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) reply to questions in the House of Commons, as Canadians have witnessed the speech delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in Toronto and as we have heard him answering questions in the House today, it is also clear that the Government of Canada is either unaware of the crisis or does not care about it. Indeed, I would go further and say that I suspect both things are true.

In terms of the current crisis, if I may speak personally, I think the aspect of it that concerns me most is the effect it has on men and women in their search for the human dignity that can only come from work. If there is one constant truth about human nature throughout the history of mankind, it is that men and women at any period in history have found it a psychological necessity, no matter what other theorists may have said, to gain a sense of dignity and self-worth from making some contribution not only to their own economic well-being, but to that of their families and their community.

Many people, indeed many Canadians, may think or espouse something to the contrary. Some have been known to think that they would live contentedly at a young age—I am talking about pre-retirement years—if only they had enough money to get by. I do not believe that is true. I do not believe that men and women at the productive stage in their lives in any society—and I am talking about ours in particular—can be happy human beings without some sense of earning their own way in society, without some sense that they are working, as I have said, not only to make a contribution to maintain their own existence, but to contribute also to society.

What should be concerning us now in that light more than anything else is that our government has embarked on a budget policy that has built right into it from the outset an increase in unemployment levels. There was a commitment to the people of Canada not to change their economic circumstances so that more men and women could work; it was a policy that said to the people of Canada that in 1982, 1983 and 1984 unemployment would get worse. At this point in our history as a society I regard that as a complete abdication of moral and political responsibility to the people of our country.

Like members of the Conservative Party, my colleagues on the special task force and I spent a good part of the Christmas period listening to the people of Canada. I will not list all the instances I could, but I want to mention to the House, and I hope this might get through to the government side, some of the instances that came directly to my attention. They will stand out in my memory as long as I live.

The first is a young logger in Vancouver. I would guess he is in his early thirties. He told me that he had been working since he left high school and for the first time he had been laid off. He was confronted simultaneously with almost a doubling of his mortgage payments. This was December. He told me that when this increased payment came into effect in January he was going to lose his home. It was as clear as that because he could not maintain the mortgage payment on unemployment insurance. He would not likely have been able to maintain the mortgage payment even if he had remained on the job.

My second example is a 53-year-old man in Thunder Bay, who also told me that at 53 he had been unemployed only once in his life but now was being laid off, in this case by the Canada Steamship Lines Ltd. because of a complete shutdown of operations. What was tragic about this man was, first, he had no pension and, second, he was 53 years of age. Of all those affected by the lay-offs there were only five or six in that particular enterprise who would be getting a pension. Here is a 53-year-old man in Canada in the middle of winter being laid off with no pension. His is a permanent lay-off and he has no other job to go to in the Thunder Bay region, that is for certain.

My third example is a mother on welfare with two children in Brantford, Ontario. This is part of the country that is so devastatingly affected right now by lay-offs in the industrial sector. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) cited the figures that many of us have used recently, some 235,000 lay-offs in the manufacturing sector since August, just four months ago.

Last month in Ontario alone lay-offs have been occurring at the rate of 3,000 per working day. At a meeting in this community, so typical of what is happening in the industrial sector where we found this young mother with two children living on welfare, someone spoke and attacked people like her implicitly—and we have heard this line before—by saying that there is a job out there for anyone who really wants it. All you have to do is make the effort. I am pleased to say as a Canadian that we do not hear that nearly so often as we used to. But that mother's reaction to that statement was very profound. She was in the audience. She was not scheduled to speak at all, but she got up and said: "I am a young mother with two children. I am living on welfare and I work two hours a day". I think she said a day, it might have been two hours a week, but the two-hour figure stands out in my mind. But what really stands out is that she said she wanted work and she wanted a 40-hour-a-week job, just like everyone else, because that would give her some dignity.

Fourth, there was someone in my own constituency of Oshawa: in this case I am speaking about a 41-year-old mother. I learned about her after I left the meeting in Oshawa. She spoke with a reporter. She did not say anything of the unemployed at the meeting. But what she said was reported on the front page of The Oshawa Times. This 41-year-old woman actually attempted suicide by jumping into the Oshawa harbour. She said this: "There was just no work, not even cleaning." Clearly, this woman was desperate. She happened to have been saved by a friend who was on the scene.

The final instance is a case from Cape Breton. Cape Breton, as we all know, has persistently suffered high levels of unemployment. I say persistently because this government, which we have had for years, has lacked the political willpower and the long-range economic sense to take that community with its iron resources, with its harbour and with its steelworkers, and create a first-class steel industry. I will not elaborate on this. In reading about the lay-offs all over Canada this man said to me that if the rest of Canada had unemployment levels the way we have experienced them in the past decade, there would be a revolution in this country. I think he is certainly very close to being right, if not totally right. If we all experienced real levels of unemployment of 20 per cent to 25 per cent for the past decade, then even the Liberal government would have been forced to respond or there would have been something approaching a revolution.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that was the last instance I would cite, but there is one other which came from one of the meetings and was simply that men and women ought to have the right to work. That says it all, Mr. Speaker, and whatever the Government of Canada feels or believes in terms of economic policy—and I am going to come to that in a minute—we in the New Democratic Party believe that every Canadian, man or woman, who wants to work ought to be able to work, and the government should make that possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I have mentioned the human circumstances; I now want to give some statistics on what this level of unemployment costs the Canadian economy.

A special committee of this House was set up to look at unemployment, chaired by a Liberal member, and it said a target of 4 per cent unemployment is a reasonable objective. We will take that as a reasonable objective. Japan has achieved it, as have Austria, West Germany and other countries. Only Canada under the Liberals has managed, with our resources, not to achieve it.

I would like to take unemployment figures beyond the 4 per cent level and see what they mean in terms of lost production. If unemployment were down to that level it would mean another 514,000 men and women would be employed, which in turn would mean we would have an additional $4.7 billion in tax revenue. They are not employed so we lose it. In addition, if they were employed the GNP would be up by some $15.2 billion annually. They are not, so that is a loss to the economy.

Because they are unemployed it is costing us $2.3 billion in unemployment insurance payments to people who would rather be paid for jobs. So, Mr. Speaker, the economic costs are very real and substantial, which the government should be concerned about even if it is not concerned about the human dignity associated with the right to work.

What we need then, Mr. Speaker, if we are concerned, as we are in this party, about the human and economic aspects of unemployment, is aggressive economic action now. We need to demonstrate the will to act, as other countries have as recently as last week, to stimulate the economy. The Minister of Finance knows very well that that will has now been asserted in France, Germany, even in Great Britain. It was demonstrated at the same meeting in Europe last week by the government of Japan, which said yes, these countries are affected by what has happened in the United States, by high interest rate policies, that they are part of the international community. But unlike the Government of Canada, these countries have the political will to say they are going to establish a lower interest rate policy on their own and stimulate their economies. That is precisely what the Government of Canada should be doing for the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In the Minister of Finance's speech yesterday in Toronto, Mr. Speaker, he made it clear that he has learned nothing since he brought down his disastrous budget.

An hon. Member: Since 1930.

Mr. Broadbent: His few tinkering responses, and they have been few indeed, have been aimed directly at the privileged in Canadian society. Most significantly, when we need stimulation in the economy because we are only running at 80 per cent capacity—we are not going to inflate if we stimulate, or it will be minimal—we need a significant tax cut for middle and low-income Canadians. Instead, the tinkering we got from the Minister of Finance benefited those who need assistance least.

I want to get at the reasoning, as I understand it, behind the budget because it is precisely the same reasoning used in President Reagan's budget approach during the past year in the United States. Without using the terminology, what we have in this budget, Mr. Speaker, is supply-side economics, and this is directly related to the fact the two top tax brackets in Canada were given major tax reductions. That is precisely what was done by President Reagan in the United States, with the thinking that if you cut the marginal tax rate at the top, then the people will take their tax savings and reinvest it in the economy.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the minister's advisers have been telling him this, but I do know simply from reading a newspaper such as The New York Times that in the United States the supply-side economics, with tax cuts for the upper-income earners, has simply not worked. This is because, as I indicated in my questions to the minister this afternoon, which he ignored, when you have a high interest rate economy and you give millions of dollars in benefits to the rich, they do not invest it in job-creating ventures, they salt it away in the banks. So the direct result of supply-side economics in the U.S., as in Canada, although the minister has not dared to use the same name, is to make the rich richer. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we in this party categorically reject supply-side economics both because it is unjust and it does not work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: What we want, to use the technical jargon, is demand-side economics. We happen to believe that with this level of unemployment, the worst since the great depression, now is precisely the time to stimulate demand and give middle and low-income earners a tax break. That is the kind of action which would create jobs in our economy.

The unswerving commitment, Mr. Speaker, to this most conservative kind of economic policy now pursued by this government has been demonstrated by its solidly entrenched and locked-in policy of preoccupation with the level of the deficit. It began to reduce the proportion of the GNP going to government spending a number of years ago and has continued with this single-minded preoccupation right up until today. That same policy was maintained in the minister's speech yesterday in Toronto, as it was in the answers today in this House.

We in this party say that there is a time to be concerned about government deficits and about government spending, and social-democratic governments, whether here in Canada or elsewhere in the world, have the same concern when appropriate. But I say to the Minister of Finance that when we have more than a million Canadians unemployed, people who are losing their human dignity, and we are losing millions of dollars in the GNP because of that unemployment, now is the time we should have more, not less, government spending. That makes economic sense.

Having made that point, I must say I listened to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition with care and there was not one sentiment—and I choose that word with care—with which I disagreed because there is no question in my mind that his fears are genuine. Those expressions of concern about unemployment are the same as those we have expressed in this House. However, I also want to say that in politics and economic policy it seems to me that sentiment is not good enough; the debate in this House, as important as that sentiment is, must also deal with economic policy. Economic policy, as demonstrated even in this debate and certainly by past Conservative governments, is almost exactly the same as we are getting from the Liberal government today.

● (1550)

In the short run, the two questions which are of decisive importance are interest rates, on the one hand, and government spending on the other; and they are related. As recently as Sunday night past, Sinclair Stevens, the man sitting four seats just over to my right here—

Mr. Stevens: "York-Peel".

Mr. Broadbent: —the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), was weighing in heavily against government spending. There he was, speaking through the television set to the people of Canada. He said: "Now, we cannot have more government spending." At least he has the merit of being consistent, if he also has the equal merit of being wrong in terms of what is needed for the people of Canada. In fact, just a few years ago, the same gentleman made the following comment, and I will quote.

An hon. Member: Sink with Sinc.

Mr. Broadbent: Just listen to what the hon. member said in the middle of the twentieth century:

> Deficit financing by the federal government must be outlawed by a change in Canada's Constitution that would require the federal government to balance its budget every five years.

That, and I put it bluntly, is economic lunacy, as almost everyone in the modern world knows.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Tell the Germans that! How about Germany?

Mr. Broadbent: My colleagues in the Conservative Party cannot have it both ways. They cannot demand a budget which would stimulate the economy, which would move us in new directions, which would create new jobs, and still have the old hang-ups and fallacious theories about economic spending by the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Then there is the related question. The hon. member never did say when they do want government cutbacks, which is what the hon. member for York-Peel called for. Did he want a cutback in programs for farmers? Did he want a cutback in programs for fishermen? Did he want a cutback in programs for pensioners? They are the unstated questions which must be followed. It is irresponsible of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada to call for cutbacks in general and in government spending if it is not prepared to say where.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. members to my right should learn that.

I address the next point particularly to the Leader of the Official Opposition, who movingly spoke about all the lay-offs in the manufacturing sector. The question pertains, in my judgment, to the fundamental short-run problem with those lay-offs, 235,000 in manufacturing during the past four months and 1,400 lay-offs which were announced in Montreal and in Hamilton today which are directly related to the high interest rate policy of the government. I have in my hand a number of quotes from the former prime minister, the present Leader of the Opposition. On October 29, 1979, when he was prime minister, he said:

> —it was the view of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, concurred in by this government, that the only responsible action open to Canada at this time was to accept, in the intermediate term, an increase in interest rates . . . that is our position, it remains our policy.

That is what the Leader of the Opposition said when he was prime minister. His former finance critic, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), repeated that same position just a few months ago on television. Therefore, I say to the Conservatives that they cannot, either in terms of their interest rate policy or in terms of their attitude toward government spending, offer a credible alternative to what the Government of Canada is doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is as clear as anything could be in terms of economic policy at this time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why did you support the Liberals?

Mr. Broadbent: I will just let that comment go entirely.

Mr. Stevens: Tell us!

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Conservatives—

An hon. Member: Because they had a look at you, that's why.

Mr. Broadbent: Obviously, I have touched a sensitive chord because the hon. member, who is no longer a cabinet minister, is calling from the back, behind the curtains, saying that we voted against a Conservative budget which forced the 1980 election because it was every bit as bad as the Liberal budget today.

An hon. Member: Worse, worse!

Mr. Broadbent: It is interesting that the Conservatives did not send a task force around to have a survey made of their budget when they brought it in in 1980. We would have been interested to hear that one.

An hon. Member: We did! It was called an election!

Mr. Broadbent: I would now like to move an amendment, which will be an interesting task not only for the government but also for the official opposition, to see how serious they are about dealing in a serious way with the economic problems about which the Conservatives have just spoken. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That the motion be amended by striking the period after the word "budget" and adding:

"which would provide that

(a) a system of fixed lower interest rates for mortgages be made mandatory, and that

(b) an excess profits tax be imposed on Canada's chartered banks to restore their marginal tax rate to the 1970 level."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: That was a good year for them! You missed the point, Ed!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to refer to the advantage offered by this amendment. I have already spoken about the direct advantages, in my comments on interest rates, concerning the implication of low mortgage levels for home owners or prospective home owners. However, I want to speak about the excess profits tax on banks. As the motion states, it would simply reduce their levels to what they earned based on the marginal rate of 1970. That would give us additional revenue of approximately $670 million. If we took only $500 million of that revenue and put it into the social housing budget, we could restore that housing budget to the level which existed six years ago when we did not have the housing crisis that we have today. Also, by using that money to produce social housing, we would produce an additional 93,000 jobs in construction, in the logging sector and in the appliance field, not to mention all the housing starts which would be created. This would have the effect of bringing down the price of housing, one would hope, by increasing the supply. Therefore, we would simultaneously deal with the housing crisis—not totally, but in a significant way—and the unemployment situation.

In mentioning this single program, I want to speak about how it could be used as a model for other sectors. Again I want to speak in terms of its technical economic effects. I hope the Minister of Finance will discuss the point. This kind of approach in this sector would have the following additional consequences to the ones that I have just mentioned: first, the economic activity generated would stay in Canada; second, it would not result in increased imports from abroad which might result from other kinds of stimuli. Therefore, in relation to that, the spending of millions of dollars in this way would not in the slightest exacerbate our country's serious international balance of payments problem which did result in a record $9.1 billion deficit last year.

Therefore, this kind of tax on a part of our economy, namely, the banks which have had excessive profits, would get revenue into the government sector where it could now be usefully used to stimulate growth of jobs which are badly needed. It would have a net positive effect in terms of our balance of payment situation and in terms of its ultimate effects on the level of the Canadian dollar. It is, I repeat, a model of what could be done by an imaginative government which cared about the people of Canada and was prepared to use the power of a modern government in a constructive way in the economy.

I want to conclude, because I note that my time has just about expired, by saying that what we need now in Canada is not a government concerned with rhetoric, whether of a progressive or a reactionary kind. What we need is a government which thinks very hard about the state of the Canadian economy. What we need is a government which has a genuine spirit of independence and courage, as demonstrated by western European governments and the government of Japan when they were caught in the same web of economic forces generated by the United States. Finally and above all else—because it is this which shapes the other points—what we need in Canada is a government that cares about the people of Canada.

● (1600)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and then to the statement by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I must say that they were distinctly different. The Leader of the Official Opposition concentrated principally on the tax side of the budget; he gave no prescriptions whatsoever for the general economic situation we face in this country.

I am the first to admit that we do face a serious economic situation, with very high inflation rates, rising unemployment and declining growth in the country. That is a very serious situation. It is a situation that is shared by all the industrialized countries of the world. Their situation is very similar to ours.

It is to that general economic situation that I addressed myself in the budget in an attempt to establish a correct macroeconomic response that would deal with the underlying reasons for the situations we face and would permit us to participate in a recovery. I laid out my position in the budget, and I laid it out in greater detail at the Canadian Club speech in Toronto yesterday. Hon. members have referred to that.

The Leader of the Opposition had nothing to say about what his alternative remedy would be. He did not differ with my analysis that inflation is the chief problem, that basically the question of inflation is a question of jobs and growth and that these concepts cannot be separated. I take it from the silence of the Leader of the Opposition that he has no objection to the general economic policy of the government, although he does have some objection with regard to the tax policy. I will deal with that later in my speech.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party has stated clearly that he believes in massive stimulus. He believes that the way out of our difficulties is to spend, spend, spend. That is what he said. Even other modern social democratic parties have long abandoned that policy. When the former prime minister of Britain, Mr. Callaghan, was facing an economic crisis, he went before his party and told them: "In present circumstances, spend, spend, spend is not the solution".

That is what the Leader of the New Democratic Party has put before the House. I disagree with it. If he believes that massive stimulus at the present time is the answer, he is making a fundamental mistake. He is calling for higher inflation, more unemployment and less growth down the road. If that is his answer, he is careless about inflation. That is his problem. I disagree with him.

He said yesterday and again today that somehow the European and Japanese finance ministers have concerted in a new policy of massive stimulus. I had that checked out this morning. There have been no formal meetings and no formal decisions. Japan has not been part of any discussion. Whatever the Leader of the New Democratic Party is basing his statement upon is not information that we have been able to confirm through official sources.

I may have an opportunity to return to the macroeconomic question, but I want to begin by dealing with a number of the points made by the Leader of the Opposition. I found his speech rather weak, rather ineffective and rather unfocused. After all this accumulation of evidence that we expected to get from the Leader of the Opposition and all the hearings throughout the country, I expected that the Leader of the Opposition would pinpoint specific objections which he wanted to have repaired and which he wanted to form the groundwork in asking the House of Commons to remove the budget. What did he produce? Very few specifics, and when he did go into specifics, he made very great mistakes. I will deal with that later.

What has been stated again today by the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party is that the impact of this budget bears heavily upon low and middle-income Canadians. Last November the Leader of the Opposition said, "it was in fact a budget which will impose an unbearably hard burden upon countless average Canadians and has as its principal purpose the enrichment of the federal government." The leader of the New Democratic Party said that, "the vast majority of Canadians get no tax cuts at all."

Mr. Broadbent: I didn't say that.

Mr. MacEachen: I refer to Hansard of November 16, page 12801, where the leader of the New Democratic Party is reported as saying:

—the vast majority of Canadians get no tax cuts at all.

The "majority" must be Canadians. I find that one of the most incredible misperceptions and misrepresentations that has floated across this country since budget night.

I ask Canadians who have tax withheld from their pay cheques to compare their 1981 pay cheques with their 1982 cheques. I do not ask the Canadian people to believe the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the New Democratic Party or the Minister of Finance. I ask them to look at their pay cheques. I ask them to look at the hard evidence.

• (1610)

I ask members of the House of Commons to look at the withholding tax table, 1981 and 1982. I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, that under the new 1982 tax rates, several million wage earners and salaried employees will have larger take home pay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: In fact, several million will have larger take home pay.

The idea has been put about this country that the effect of the budget has been to bear heavily upon, and to increase taxes for, the low and middle-income Canadian people. That is false, Mr. Speaker.

Last night I was on a television program and I repeated the fact that 12 million Canadians would experience lower taxes as a result of the composite measures in the budget; for example, the marginal tax rate, the change in the federal tax credit, the indexation. Thus, 12 million Canadians will have less taxes to pay, about 3.5 million will pay the same amount and about 800,000 will pay more taxes. These are the facts.

I had a call from a friend of mine, a small employer, who said to me: "I am very pleased that you mentioned that, because based upon the statements made by opposition spokesmen, my employees were expecting to have their taxes increased as a result of the budget. When they looked at their pay cheques, they found there was a decrease."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I ask the Canadian taxpayers to look at what is happening. It is happening as a direct result of indexing and the tax measures in the budget. Anyone who wants to check it should simply compare the 1981 and 1982 tax withholding tables.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, would the hon. minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will deal with questions at the end of my speech. I do not think that I can deal with them now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I was able to bring that result about because, instead of increasing tax rates across the whole range of the system, I decided to broaden the tax base with the effect that lower taxes were available to the numbers I have mentioned with higher taxes for a very small number of Canadians.

The method I chose to raise the new revenues protected the vast majority of low and middle-income Canadians from higher taxes. Through indexing cuts in marginal tax rates and a redesign of the federal tax credit, millions of Canadians will pay less tax for 1982. I draw this fact to the attention of the leader of the New Democratic Party, that of the roughly 14 million Canadians with incomes under $30,000—that is the group that I was principally interested in—

Mr. Broadbent: What was their average weekly saving?

Mr. MacEachen: —a full 95 per cent will pay less tax or have no tax increase.

Mr. Broadbent: Four dollars a week?

Mr. MacEachen: That is quite a difference compared to the statements that have been made by the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Broadbent: Four dollars a week.

Mr. MacEachen: Indexing alone will reduce taxes for Canadians by more than $3 billion. This includes larger personal exemptions and an increase in the child tax credit from $261 to $293 for each child.

Very little attention has been paid to the change in the federal tax credit. That change targets benefits toward one-earner families with low and middle incomes. The tax credit will rise from $200 to up to $400 for approximately 1.5 million Canadian families. That has been virtually ignored. It was a very important step taken to flow some income into the budgets of this particular group of Canadian families and it was virtually ignored, Mr. Speaker.

I have to accept the fulminations of the Leader of the Opposition on this matter when they are based upon false information and misrepresentation from the Leader of the Opposition. I welcome the opportunity to make this statement today. I am not seeking refuge at the Canadian Club to avoid the Leader of the Opposition. Let me tell him that I am delighted to have this opportunity to tell the House and all Canadians that I stand behind the budget, which has produced tax savings in a time of restraint for the vast majority of the Canadian people.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): So do three or four others.

Mr. Clark: You can come to my meeting in Port Hawkesbury.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, the Leader of the Opposition has been in Cape Breton Highlands-Canso before. I welcome him again, because the only time he was there my majority was the highest I ever had.

Mr. Clark: You are invited to the meeting, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: The complaints that were made last December have disappeared from the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition. All we have heard today are some false statements about employee benefits and the child tax credit. Gone are the specific complaints that we heard last December.

The Leader of the Opposition has stated that this budget is anti-investment. I reject this assertion categorically.

Mr. Wilson: You never understood it.

Mr. MacEachen: The fiscal stance in the budget is directed to removing the main obstacles to investment—inflation and high interest rates. The tax measures are also designed to channel funds to productive investment and to encourage investment through cuts in the marginal tax rate. Why is it that so many commentators and observers have virtually ignored the very important step taken in lowering the marginal tax rate? The lowering of the marginal tax rate reduces the maximum tax on capital gains from 33 per cent to 25 per cent. The maximum tax on dividend income is also reduced to 25 per cent. I would prefer to take the advice of authorities other than the Leader of the Opposition on this point.

With regard to marginal tax rates, the Business Council on National Issues states:

> —the general reduction in tax rates combined with the tones and perspective offered in the paper "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s", are extremely encouraging steps.

That is not the language of the Minister of Finance but the Business Council on National Issues.

> Steps which make the tax system simpler and which reduce marginal tax rates will enhance economic development and equity.

I believe that there is a whole series of measures within the budget that demonstrate its intent, namely, to encourage investment funds in productive and risky enterprises. It is clear that the tax system as it was constructed institutionalized private savings and concentrated decisions in the hands of financial institutions while discouraging participation of individuals in the stock market.

Not a word has been said about interest deductibility. What a chorus of protests! What thunderbolts were thrown at my head by the member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the Leader of the Opposition and members in the opposition, with representations from elsewhere about interest deductibility. Again today the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre talked about my inflexibility. I listened to the representations I received in the House of Commons and to representations from other organizations, to the point where today not a word was said. We are depending upon false assertions about the child tax credit. That is the big plea and the false assertion made by the Leader of the Opposition.

As an illustration of the change of attitude on the part of business spokesmen, I refer to a statement—which, I must say, I did not like at the time—made on December 9 by the president of the Toronto Stock Exchange. Hon. members will remember that coalition—I understand it is now disintegrating; certainly it has lost the president of the Toronto Stock Exchange—which came to Ottawa on December 9, staged a press conference and raised hell about the budget. It was a very impressive demonstration, temporarily, and on that occasion the president of the Toronto Stock Exchange stated that the budget hurt the capital investment process.

Mr. MacKay: The market sure showed it, didn't it?

Mr. MacEachen: He stated that the budget would create an advantage for foreign investors over domestic investors. For every rich Canadian hit by the budget there are 28 average Canadians who use the interest deductibility provisions and provide financing for new business.

Mr. MacKay: How is the market these days?

Mr. MacEachen: Having listened to those views and the views of members of the House of Commons, I made changes to that provision on December 18.

Then on January 18 the same person, the president of the Toronto Stock Exchange, wrote me a letter saying that the December 18 amendment to the federal budget on interest expense deductibility——addresses the concerns expressed by the Toronto Stock Exchange and other representatives of the securities industry over the impact of the original proposal on investment in growth-oriented companies.

And industries.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Let's hear what the ordinary Canadian says about your budget.

Mr. MacEachen: Anti-investment? That same old complaint is being repeated by the Leader of the Opposition today. On that general point I prefer the observations of the president of the Toronto Stock Exchange and the president of the Investment Dealers Association, both of whom have said they have no further issue to place on the point of interest deductibility.

Mr. Wilson: Why did they appear before our committee?

Mr. MacEachen: Why do I raise this? I mention it because this was a great big issue. It was supposed to be the tremendous sign that we were anti-investment, and it has been removed. Everything has been straightened out, according to the views of these representatives, and still the Leader of the Opposition repeats that old refrain. So in this case I prefer the views of these particular persons to those of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Leader of the Opposition. He was given total attention by hon. members on this side of the House. I listened to the leader of the New Democratic Party and he was given total attention. Since I began to speak I have been heckled and barracked by members of both parties. My conclusion on that is that these points are striking home and that instead of silence they are reacting with their usual and customary demonstration in the House of Commons.

Mr. MacKay: Look at the expression on those faces behind you.

Mr. Epp: Allan, don't look behind you.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will say just one word about a statement made by the Leader of the Opposition on the child tax credit. He has said that the effect of the budget measures is to remove the child tax credit from 60,000 Canadian mothers. I find that an extraordinary statement to be made by the Leader of the Opposition. I would like him, if he can, to produce evidence which shows that the child tax credit has been denied to 60,000 mothers. The child tax credit is payable in full to families whose net income in 1982 is less than $26,330. For families with incomes above this threshold the tax credit is reduced by 5 per cent of income in excess of the threshold. This year the indexing of the credit has increased the threshold income level by some $2,850. The increase in the threshold more than offsets the effects of the inclusion of employee benefits in income computation. Including all the budget changes and indexing the effect in 1982 will be to increase over all the child tax credit from $900 million, which it would otherwise be, to over $1.1 billion.

Mr. Breau: Wrong again, Joe.

Mr. Trudeau: Withdraw.

Mr. MacEachen: On balance, these changes will increase the total amount of the child tax credit. Indeed, the impact of the budget change and indexing is to raise the credit by over $200 million. In general, the impact on employee benefits will be more than offset by the indexing provisions, but I would say that a few high income individuals who had been able previously to shelter their taxable income through large deductions for income-averaging annuity contracts, soft costs and the like will no longer qualify for the child tax credit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: If hon. members had looked at the tax tables presented with the budget and scrutinized them carefully they would have found that very high-income people were eligible, because of the tax system, for the child tax credit. That certainly was not the intent. I know a wealthy professional who at the Canadian Tax Foundation said that the only impact of the budget on him would be that he would lose the child tax credit.

Mr. Clark: His tax rate would go down.

Mr. Cousineau: Good, Joe.

Mr. MacEachen: Surely, it was about time somebody—even though it was difficult—took a look at the array of selective tax preferences in the tax system which benefited mainly high-income people, allowed large numbers of Canadians to pay no taxes and allowed groups of Canadians in high-income brackets to pay a lower proportion of taxes than others in lower income brackets. Surely it was time to take a look at that kind of system.

Mr. Stevens: Who brought it in?

Mr. MacEachen: I restructured the tax system in a way which, I believe, has maintained the investment incentives which are required in this country, but in a way which will ensure that there is fairness and equity in the tax system. I believe that every time the Leader of the Opposition mounts his attack in the House, he is speaking for a particular interest in the guise of the child tax credit and employee benefits.

• (1630)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He is speaking for the majority of Canadians.

Mr. MacEachen: Why does he not speak out against the wrong features of the tax system that brought about the results that I have corrected in this budget? I do not think this is the day for the Canadian House of Commons to go back on justice in the tax system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, someone who appeared before our special committee on the budget said that arguing numbers with anybody from the Department of Finance is like a shell game in New York City. I think we have had a good demonstration of that in the minister's speech this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I listened carefully to the numbers that the minister was throwing out on the question of 12 million Canadians paying lower taxes. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has perpetrated borderline fraud on the House of Commons and the Canadian people by making this statement in the House today. It is a total misrepresentation. He is completely ignoring the fact that Canadians will be paying $1,400 per family per year for the next five years in energy taxes and that that will totally wipe out any reduction that might result from the indexation of personal taxes. Anybody who owns a home or who drives a car knows that the minister has misrepresented this situation because they have to pay the bills every time they go to the pump and every month to the gas company.

Every time the minister says that, he reduces his credibility even further. This makes no allowance for the increase in taxes that all Canadians will pay as a result of the taxation of benefits, such as dental and health plans, and from the taxation of pensioners, that come directly from this budget.

Yesterday the minister defended his budget in front of a blue chip audience in Toronto. His speech made interesting reading and I read it very carefully. He blamed the United States and he blamed international economic weaknesses for our problems. His main conclusion was that Canada must not spend its way out of this current recession. He stated this as if it were the only alternative available. The speech is remarkable for its superficiality. It is the most shallow, superficial speech by any minister of finance that I have read or heard in the 20 years that I have been reading and listening to them.

The Canadian Club looks forward with great anticipation to this annual event when the incumbent minister of finance states what is on his mind. Mr. Speaker, next year it will have to peddle the tickets on the corner of King and Bay because no one will want to go to hear a speech like this one.

This reinforces one of the underlying themes that ran through the meetings of our special committee on the budget. Time and again we were told that the government does not know what it is doing, that the government and the minister are totally out of touch with what is going on in the real world. We all know that 200,000 Canadians have been laid off and we have heard from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that another 100,000 will be laid off within the next two or three months. I hope I do not have to remind the minister that this represents human tragedy for each of those individuals.

All MPs, whether on this side of the House or on the side opposite, know of instances where individuals have lost a job. In my riding I saw a student who was laid off after three months in his first full-time job. Another gentleman came to my office. He is 62 years old and was laid off, and now he does not know where he will get another job because of his age. A young couple came to see me who were frightened that the wife would become pregnant and have to quit her job and as a result they would lose their house. That is the sort of thing that is going on in the country today. People cannot afford to do the things that they want to do. They want to own a house but feel they need two jobs in order to finance a mortgage. If only one has a job then they feel they might have to leave the house.

All these people are worried and frightened about the future. Fishermen, small businessmen and farmers told the committee that they were worried about losing their businesses and that the dream they had built up over the years would be shattered before their eyes because of the policies of this government. These people fear that they may soon become a statistic, one of those unemployed numbers or one of those bankruptcy numbers. That is the nature of what is going on in the country today, Mr. Speaker. That is the nature of what we heard before our special committee.

The speech the minister made yesterday represents the sum total of his explanation to the Canadian people of why he is following these policies. The minister makes no attempt to explain why revenues have to go up 31 per cent this year or why that additional burden has been laid on the economy in this time of the deepest recession we have had in the past 30 or 40 years. He does not explain why it is necessary to disrupt the personal and business lives of people with the so-called tax reform that is undercutting many of the good social and economic objectives which we have in this country. I will come back to that later, Mr. Speaker.

The minister gives no explanation why business is being totally undermined by this government and this budget. Investment is what would create the jobs we need so desperately in this country today. There is no secret in this. It has been proven time and again that job creation is directly linked to investment of funds by individuals and companies, and that when the investment process is undermined by government tax policies which destroy the confidence of the individuals making the investment decisions, all those people who are looking for jobs are affected. Investment is what we need in this country today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: In this budget the minister has compounded the human misery of one million Canadians. The policies that he has brought in display a total lack of understanding of the problems of the economy. They illustrate his inflexibility—and I repeat that word for his edification, Mr. Speaker. He did not show any flexibility on December 18. He was forced to make those changes or he would have brought a greater disaster upon this country than has been brought upon it already.

Mr. Peterson: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: The hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) knows that as well. Many of his friends have been making those representations to him and are still making them to him.

Mr. Peterson: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: This is a little light interlude from the hon. member for Willowdale.

The inflexibility of the minister in not considering other alternatives displays a total insensibility to those who have been hurt so badly by his policies.

Investment and stability, and I have said before, lead to more jobs. High taxation and lack of confidence lead to fewer jobs. That is the nature of the economy we are living with today. That is the nature of the economy so seriously affected by the budget of November 12.

This budget is far worse than simply a misguided economic policy. It is more than a tax grab on many, many Canadians. No one in this House and no one in the country has any quarrel with equity in the tax system. People say that is a good thing and that we should have it. As a result of the budget many worth-while social and economic policies have been undermined. These are not policies which we hold exclusively in the Conservative Party. These are policies and objectives which are sought by Canadians represented by all parties in the House. This is why there has been such a wholesale condemnation of the budget.

I should like to review, for the benefit of the minister and also for the benefit of backbenchers, some of the broad social objectives which have been undermined by the budget, because I think this might be helpful in their caucus tomorrow. All Canadians are concerned that pensioners should enjoy a comfortable retirement, free from worry and as self-reliant as possible. But the budget taxes individual pensioners—and we heard this from the Consumers' Association of Canada—in seven different areas. Let me refer to one example of the ridiculous nature of these changes. A pensioner who earns a little extra money because his pension is not sufficient to finance his needs today will now lose his $1,000 deduction. The reason for this is that the department and the minister were going after an exclusive group of Canadians who happen to have indexed pensions, who retired at age 55 and are earning money as consultants to the government. That is the direction the budget has taken. Instead of just going exclusively after that group, they have drawn in all pensioners who are earning a little extra money. It is taking an elephant gun to shoot a mosquito. The minister should have the expertise and the sensitivity to work differently than that.

There are many other parts of the budget which affect pensioners in the same ill-conceived fashion. Many people told us that there was some abuse, but that the abuse could be caught if the government knew what it was doing. Let me leave the minister with a comment made by a group which we met in Halifax called "Canadian Pensioners Concerned". They said that these financial shocks to pensioners will lead to ill health and earlier death; the minister should recognize this. Also he should be encouraging people to save for their retirement. That is the Canadian tradition; we have always been good savers. We want to develop the maximum degree of self-reliance among pensioners and the least reliance upon the government, but the budget taxes life insurance and makes loan interest to purchase RRSPs not deductible any longer. The average loan is a little over $2,000. Is that a rich person's loan to buy an RRSP for one year? No, it is not. This loan is taken out by a number of low and middle-income Canadians who do not have the ready cash to put into RRSPs. Deferred profit-sharing plans have been ruled out for many small businesses. Farmers who had looked forward to the use of income-averaging annuities as their means of retirement income have lost an important element of their future financial planning. The result will be that more people will be relying upon the government for support in future years.

We heard in Kitchener that the thrust of the budget penalizes those people who save and prepare for the future. We heard from another group in Kitchener that there was no link between the minister's statements at the pension conference a few months ago and the budget. In short, they said that the budget undermined the basic Canadian tradition of saving for the future. In this area of financial planning for the future, people preparing for retirement, there are abuses, but those abuses can be dealt with without killing the tradition of Canadians to save.

Mr. Peterson: We have done that.

Mr. Wilson: We heard from both management and labour about the entire area of encouragement to Canadians to look after their dental and health care by participating in dental programs. By the way, no federal public servant, with two exceptions in the postal union, has such a program. It makes one wonder why this has been attacked. The budget will tax these benefits. Today the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) noted the inflationary impact, but also the impact that the budget and its changes will have on the collective bargaining process, as both sides try to offset the cost of this at a time when there are many pressures in the collective bargaining process because of inflation and slow economic growth. The result will be more strikes and further slowdowns in the economy.

There is no doubt in anyone's mind that there is a housing crisis, but there are four areas in the budget which undermine the ability of people in the housing industry to do their job. The changes in the budget which hurt the housing industry compound the crisis and are not in any way offset by the $7,500 interest-free loan the minister announced in the budget. We hear time and again from people in the industry that it would not offset the loss of capital cost allowance, the loss of MURBs and so on. We were told by one builder who still has a sense of humour that he was not really concerned about the budget because he did not pay any taxes today; he did not make any money upon which he should pay taxes. This is the nature of things in the housing industry.

We heard yesterday the speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). He indicated that farmers are a great resource in the country. When one takes that speech and compares it with the attack of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) through the high interest rate policy, through the change in the capital cost allowance, one realizes that the farmers have had incentive taken away from them in the farming industry. They see a very bleak future ahead. Someone in Regina said: "We see a real crunch coming." The budget must be withdrawn.

Also the minister referred to the Investment Dealers' Association as being associated with the letter from the president of the Toronto Stock Exchange. The association attended our hearings in Toronto and made a very eloquent representation for the reinstatement of a number of investment incentives as well as some of the basic saving incentives which have been an important part of job creation and economic growth to date.

Mr. MacEachen: What about interest deductibility?

Mr. Wilson: That industry is not in support of the budget.

Mr. MacEachen: Did they say anything about interest deductibility?

Mr. Wilson: I will answer the minister's question. The change in interest deductibility was welcomed by that industry as well as by the small business community. They welcomed it because if they had not received it the small-business community would have been killed. Many individuals and small businesses would have lost their operations completely; they would have gone bankrupt this year. This is why the minister was forced to respond. There was no flexibility: he was forced to make that statement in the House, and there is no other way to express it.

Mr. Peterson: We are the ones who made it deductible.

Mr. Wilson: Another witness indicated that charitable foundations are a source of major financial support for the total voluntary organization community within the country. One witness referred to them as the "bulwark of democracy", but the budget seriously undermines the capacity of charitable institutions to continue in existence. We were given the example of one foundation which in 1970 was capitalized at $14 million. At the end of 1980 it had grown, with inflation, to $30 million. During the course of that period it provided a significant amount of financial support for the voluntary sector. If this budget had been in place, we were told that that charitable foundation would have been capitalized at only $11 million compared with the $14 million in 1970.

Mr. Peterson: That has been looked after.

Mr. Wilson: That is what the budget will do to charitable foundations. I could refer to a number of other areas such as mining, the budget's impact on productivity, the impact on students and on universities of cuts in the established programs financing, and the impact on the Canadianization process. I have tried to make the minister understand that. I do not think he understands it. I do not think he understands that whole investment process at all. Canadianization will slow down. There will be fewer Canadian shareholders and less Canadian ownership in five years' time than there is today, directly as a result of this budget. There are no two ways about that.

• (1650)

Another theme was evident in our meetings, and that was the question of process. I was interested to read what the minister had to say about process in the speech he made yesterday in Toronto. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) was part of a committee when he was in the private sector that proposed changes to the process. They fell on deaf ears. It is only the tremendous embarrassment of the minister in these past two months that has caused him to rethink this whole question of secrecy in budgets. It is very unlike him. He likes to carry everything in his arms so that no one else will know what is going on. He likes to spring things on the country without any opportunity for comment and without any opportunity to understand their impact.

This is what has caused the frustration and anger among so many people who appeared before our committee, individuals as well as those representing organizations. We heard them all say that this process has to change, that the government is operating in an ivory tower in Ottawa, and that the individuals who are to bear the burden of these changes and feel the impact directly must therefore have an opportunity to be heard. In fact, one gentleman said: "I have a right to be heard, but I am not being heard." He asked how the process could be changed to allow individual Canadians to be heard when inequities such as those contained in this budget are brought out which cause such tremendous upset and disruption to the lives of individual Canadians.

I should remind the minister that in the United States the Internal Revenue Service is required, any time it brings forth any changes equivalent to those in this budget, to hold public hearings. Following such hearings, the IRS is required to make a report to Congress, and it is on that basis that Congress acts.

Canada is doing it the wrong way round. Here we have the minister making a statement, setting an effective date on budget night, putting himself in a position where he cannot be pushed unless the tremendous groundswell of public opinion that we experienced over the past two months pushes him off the positions he has taken. This is the nature of the system right now. It must be changed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. There is a bit of difficulty. The hon. member's time has expired. I have allowed him a few minutes extra because I was under the impression that he may wish to present a subamendment. I do not know whether that is the hon. member's intention or not. However, if it is his intention, then the procedural solution to the problem would be for him to put the subamendment as quickly as possible and I can then extend his time by an additional ten minutes. If it is not his intention to present a subamendment, then I have to give him notice that his time has expired and perhaps he can wrap up his remarks in the next moment or two.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, you are clairvoyant. I do have a subamendment. It is an amendment that I felt was necessary to amend the New Democratic Party amendment. I believe that what the NDP has proposed in its amendment does require further study. The impact of what the NDP has proposed on the housing industry is not at all clear. It is for that reason that I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling):

> That the amendment be amended by adding thereto the following:
> "Provided that before final implementation these measures shall be put forward and elaborated in a white paper on government economic policy which shall be referred to a special committee of this House, with power to travel and hear representations from Canadians".

Let me wind up my remarks by drawing a broad conclusion. This budget has clearly undermined many worth-while policy objectives. It has undermined the will on the part of individuals to save and prepare for the future. It has undermined the ability of businesses to exist, to succeed and to create growth in this country. It has undermined the voluntary sector. It has undermined many of the productive elements in our society. It is ominous that this should happen when the government is preparing to be more interventionist with its reorganization which places under the umbrella of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray)—I believe that is still his title today—the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. That will involve a much greater degree of intervention, of direct hands-on, big-lever pulling by one minister who is well known to be a very interventionist thinker.

In addition, we have the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Begin) making ominous noises about a greater degree of government participation and control of the pension industry.

Let me leave hon. members with the following thought. In 1975 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that the market system was not working. He said that we would have to become used to more government involvement and more government intervention in our lives. Many people at that time spoke out in opposition to that sentiment and the Prime Minister backed down. But this budget, when taken in the context of other things that have happened, other policy initiatives that have been instituted by this Liberal Party over the past few years, including the National Energy Program last year, indicates that what the Prime Minister said, and from which he backed down, is part of the underlying thrust and direction of this government.

This budget itself represents the greatest effort to undermine the private sector and to create a vacuum into which government will move, because it will say the private sector is not doing the job and that the government must step in and do it. There will be more government in our lives arising out of this budget than anything we have seen in the past ten or 20 years.

I ask you this question, Mr. Speaker: was this budget sheer stupidity on the part of the government or is it part of a desire by the government to undermine a successful economy and bring on an unprecedented amount of government intervention in our lives? Whatever the answer in either case, this budget should be withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the President of the Privy Council rising on a point of order with respect to the acceptability of the subamendment?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Exactly, Mr. Speaker, I refer to Standing Order 61.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Perhaps I can save the President of the Privy Council from the difficulty. I will hear hon. members who may wish to make contributions on the subject of whether or not the subamendment is in order. I will first read it and then I will read a citation from Beauschene. I think the House will possibly want to come to the same conclusion the Chair has, and that is that the subamendment is out of order. The subamendment reads:

> That the amendment be amended by adding thereto the following:
> "Provided that before final implementation these measures shall be put forward and elaborated in a white paper on government economic policy which shall be referred to a special committee of this House, with power to travel and hear representations from Canadians".

I refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, Citation 202(3), which refers to and deals with the matter of subamendments. It reads:

● (1700)

Since the purpose of a subamendment is to alter the amendment, it should not enlarge upon the scope of the amendment but it should deal with matters that are not covered by the amendment; if it is intended to bring up matters foreign to the amendment, the member should wait until the amendment is disposed of and move a new amendment.

I note that the subamendment put forth by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) brings to the attention of the House three considerations. The first is that he attaches to the amendment now on the floor of the House, a condition. Second, he calls for a white paper on government economic policy. Third, he calls for creation of a special committee. In each of these cases his subamendment would expand upon the amendment of the New Democratic Party.

I will, as I indicated, hear contributions if hon. members see fit. Otherwise, the disposition of the Chair would be to rule the subamendment out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I would not want to complicate things, Mr. Speaker, but if ever you should reach the conclusion that one subamendment is in order I would respectfully submit that only one subamendment can be allowed under our Standing Orders when we are debating a business of supply motion. I draw your attention to Standing Order 61 which is quite clear on that subject and which reads as follows:

Only one amendment and one subamendment may be made to a motion proposed in the Budget Debate or to a motion proposed under an order of the day for the consideration of the business of supply on an allotted day.

Today happens to be an opposition day. It is a motion moved under Standing Order 58, so it has to do with the business of supply. It is covered by Standing Order 61, and only one amendment and only one subamendment are in order. So it matters little which amendment you will accept, it does not make any difference to me, but only one subamendment is in order and we object to any additional subamendment.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I do not want to impinge upon the members' debating time. Had the Chair gone on to read from the fifth edition of Beauchesne's, not the fourth, in paragraph 439 it sets forth by implication:

—two amendments can be proposed at the same time to a question.

That is the limit. Paragraph 440 says:

As the proposal of an amendment to an amendment originates a fresh subject for consideration, the new question thus created must, to prevent confusion, be disposed of by itself. An amendment, when undergoing alteration, is therefore—

The form and content of subamendments is set forth in paragraph 441, four separate subparagraphs. With great respect to the Chair I submit that the subamendment moved here does not enlarge upon the amendment moved by the NDP; and there is no rule, with respect to the Chair, that prevents a subamendment from placing a condition even if it were to be interpreted as such.

What the subamendment is attempting to do is to enable the substance of the amendment itself to be tested by the democratic process of public hearings, so that what members of this party have been trying to convince the government on will be conveyed directly to the government through the process of public hearings in committee. That, Mr. Speaker, does not detract one iota from the substance of the amendment put by the leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent). Indeed, it would be my speculation that the NDP would welcome the kind of public hearings the subamendment calls for and, indeed, one would think that even a government as stubborn as this one would welcome the kind of public hearings which this party alone has been conducting of its own volition.

Mr. Cosgrove: We want action.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, we want action too, I might tell the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), and that action is to withdraw the budget.

With respect to the Standing Order quoted by the government House leader, that simply confirms that subamendments are permissible. It has long been the practice in this House, particularly on opposition days, to accept subamendments. I have never heard of an objection being taken, whether by the Chair or the government, to the right of the opposition to move a subamendment, because if the logic of the government House leader, and of the Chair with respect, is to be followed it would mean that our amendment in this instance, or an NDP amendment on an opposition day allotted to them, might be completely distorted and given an entirely different sense unless it could be rectified by the subamendment process.

So my submission to the Chair is that the government House leader has simply bolstered my argument by citing the order he does. I might point out to him, in the remote event that the Chair might consider his argument has any logic at all, that we are dealing here with an allotted opposition day, the right of an opposition to test the continued confidence of the House in this budget, this minister and this government.

The subamendment is one which I submit most strongly is totally in order because it does not harm by one iota the substance of the NDP amendment, but merely puts in place a process which, if we can anticipate the evidence to be gathered by such public hearings, if that is acceptable to the House, will do nothing but good and will perhaps finally convince the government of the inadequacy of their budget measures and the deep wounds being caused to the Canadian public as a whole. For those reasons I submit that the Chair accept the motion.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I might file a caveat here with respect to the procedures generally that are apparently being followed by the Chair in its interpretation of Standing Order 58(13), where it appears that the Chair is not applying the 20-minute limitation because of an interpretation of the word "motion" in that Standing Order as including an amendment.

If the logic of that interpretation is followed to its ultimate, it would mean, in the case of an amendment and a subamendment, that you would have three 30-minute speeches from that side and three from this side, which totally defeats the intent of the order.

I am not raising that as a point of order now; I am simply filing the caveat that I may raise it as a point of order in future. My inclination, however, is to discuss it with the House leaders to see if we cannot find a consensus on that question.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that the question you have to decide is whether or not the substance of the subamendment is in fact hostile to the purpose of the amendment itself. I submit that, judging from the comments just made by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the reference of our proposed amendment to a committee is indeed hostile to the proposal itself.

What we on our side want to see is a direct vote on two particular proposals we have made. We are prepared to stand by a vote on those two proposals and we do not want to see the clarity of those proposals blurred by a decision to refer it to a committee.

Mr. Nielsen: You are not in favour of public hearings.

● (1710)

Mr. Rae: It is clear from the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre that the purpose of moving the subamendment is to bury forever the proposals which have been put forward by our party. It is for that reason that I think we must consider whether the subamendment, in a sense, explains the substance of the amendment or whether it substitutes an entirely new proposal.

Citation 438(2), on page 155 of the fifth edition of Beauchesne, very clearly states that:

> A subamendment must attempt to explain the substance of the amendment and may not substitute an entirely new proposal.

I submit to Your Honour that the suggestion that a matter or a group of matters should be referred to a committee and should then be developed in a white paper, and so forth, is an entirely different suggestion from the proposal which was put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), which is to say, a very clear-cut proposal that a matter be voted on in the House. We are prepared to stand up and be counted on those two amendments, and we want other parties to stand up and be counted on those two amendments.

We are not prepared to accept the argument that this is a purely procedural matter which will simply be referred to a committee for procedural reasons, because we can distinctly tell, from what the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre said, that he is in fact hostile to the substance of our amendment. For that reason, I think that in following Citation 438(2), Your Honour should find that the subamendment is out of order.

Mr. Clark: Very briefly, I must register some dismay that the New Democratic Party would consider that the process of public hearings is—

Mr. Rae: You guys are just afraid to say where you stand on the banks, that's all.

Mr. Clark: —hostile to their interests or to the viability of any proposals which they would put forward. What is at issue here is whether or not it is in order for the Progressive Conservative Party, the official opposition, to move a subamendment on a separate matter, namely, the matter of the opportunity for the public to consider the measures proposed in the amendment moved by the New Democratic Party, which amendment, in itself, is a separate item from the substance of the motion which I had the honour to move earlier today.

It may well be that the New Democratic Party understands that the motion which it has introduced, in so far as the banks are concerned, goes much more easily on the banks than could be the case resulting from some amendments which might arise through a public hearing process. That might be the reason they are opposed to this procedure.

Mr. Rae: Is that what Bill Neville told you?

Mr. Clark: But the question—

Mr. Rae: Is that what he told you?

Mr. Clark: I got that from Tommy Douglas.

Mr. Rae: How much tax does the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce pay, Joe?

Mr. Clark: The question for the Chair to decide is whether or not, in the separate measure proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), there is anything hostile to the measure proposed by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I submit to Your Honour that they are separate measures. Just as the motion of the leader of the New Democratic Party is separate from the substance of my motion, so is the subamendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre, separate from the amendment proposed by the leader of the New Democratic Party. There is no hostility between them. I hope that the Chair will respect the procedures which have been followed, by my understanding, in allotted days on previous occasions, will allow the motion to be put, and will require that the New Democratic Party go on the record as to whether or not it is in favour of or opposed to public hearings.

Mr. Rae: We've held more hearings than you have, turkeys.

Mr. Mayer: Don't talk about turkeys.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think perhaps the Chair might first deal with the intervention made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) referring to Standing Order 61. I was left uncertain as to the purpose of the intervention. So far as I can understand, the point made by the President of the Privy Council can be satisfied if I review it in the following fashion; that is to say, if the subamendment offered by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr.

Wilson) were found to be out of order, then it would still follow that only one subamendment would be permitted to the main motion before the House. That is clear in the Standing Orders.

I refer back to the comments made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who said that there has been some standing practice which might permit an exception to Standing Order 61.

If the Chair sees more than one subamendment coming to it, there will certainly be immediate research done to determine whether or not there are precedents to permit that. However, at the moment the Chair will be guided by Standing Order 61, which indicates that there is a limit of one subamendment. That does not preclude an effort by some hon. member to make a try at that. I will take a look at some of the texts on the subject while debate continues.

I now want to refer to the next point raised by the hon. member for Yukon relating to Standing Order 58(13). That is the question of allowing each person, each Member of Parliament who replies to an amendment, a motion or a subamendment, a time allotment of 30 minutes. I understand quite well the point made by the hon. member for Yukon. The issue focuses on whether or not an amendment and subamendment are to be considered as motions within the meaning of Standing Order 58(13).

However, at the moment it is the Chair's view, after consideration, that this is obviously an opposition day with an opposition motion and an opposition amendment to that motion, and now an opposition subamendment to the motion. In the circumstances, each of these motions will be considered to entitle—because of the word "reply"—the government members to my right to reply for 30 minutes to each of the motions: the motion, the amendment and the subamendment. The Chair has some question as to that ruling.

I appreciate the courtesy shown by the hon. member for Yukon in alerting the Chair that he wanted to raise that caveat. I have simply put my own words on record so that in future discussions between the hon. House leader for the opposition and other House leaders, perhaps those words will be of some use as being the thoughts of the Chair with regard to that matter.

I can now deal with the matter of the subamendment presented by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre. Both in the case of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and in the case of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), some discussion took place as to whether or not the subamendment is hostile or inimical to the amendment, and I will deal with that in a moment.

The hon. member for Yukon quoted a number of citations from the fifth edition of Beauchesne. In particular, he quoted Citation 440, which I have read with some attention. I do not find that the Chair is helped by a review of that citation. I might, in return, suggest to the hon. member for Yukon and other hon. members that they look instead at Citation 438(2), which states:

> A subamendment must attempt to explain the substance of the amendment and may not substitute an entirely new proposal.

Therefore, we are now back to the issue as to whether or not the subamendment constitutes or puts forward an entirely new proposal. When I look for further assistance with regard to that matter, I go back again, as I did earlier, to Beauchesne's fourth edition, Citation 202(3), which states that a subamendment "should not enlarge upon the scope of the amendment".

I find some further support in Beauchesne's fourth edition by going to Citation 203(5), which states:

> An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

Therefore, in one way or another, I am faced with the issue as to whether or not the subamendment raises a new question, a new issue or enlarges upon the amendment. I find that the proposition that there ought to be a government white paper and the proposition that there ought to be a special committee both constitute new matters, an enlargement upon the amendment. I invited hon. members to comment and I saw that there were no further hon. members who sought to be recognized by the Chair.

Accordingly, with regrets to those who may not be well satisfied with the decision, it is the decision of the Chair that the subamendment is out of order.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, after listening for several hours to the debate on the motion by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), I am tempted to establish at least a preliminary diagnosis, and that is that our colleagues on the opposite side are afflicted with chronic myopia. If we consider the speech by the Leader of the Opposition on presenting his motion and the speech made by the member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), they both concentrated mainly on specific tax measures contained in the budget. The attitude of the Leader of the Opposition, at a time when our primary concern is with the basic problems facing the economy, reminds me of the forester who was sitting on top of his fire tower and was so busy counting the different species of trees and calculating how much each had grown, that he did not notice the whole forest was on fire and suddenly realized that he should be warning the fire wardens. Because he was too concerned with details he forgot what he was actually supposed to do, which was to look at the general situation and, if anything was wrong, try to do something about it.

As for our colleagues farther to the right, I think we can say they are also suffering from chronic shortsightedness, since they were only too eager to pounce on the first scapegoat they could find and blame it for all our problems, that is, our financial institutions and especially the banks. If we look at the suggestion made by the member for Etobicoke Centre, who was describing specific cases, we find that he did not draw the right conclusions from the specific cases he was using as an example. After enumerating various tax measures, he concluded that a white paper on the government's economic policy was necessary and that hearings should be held on the basis of this white paper. I would suggest that he first refer to the document he and his leaders are so eager to have withdrawn—the budget—which is in fact concerned with the government's economic policy. He should take another long, hard look at this document and if he wants to continue his so-called hearings, let him ask the people who come to the hearings what they think about this basic document. I would also draw his attention to the document on the government's economic policy for the eighties which accompanied the budget speech by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). It describes how the government intends to support activity in the private sector to provide for the economic and industrial development of our country during the next ten years. It is an extremely interesting document which provides a perspective on the future and will help us to provide for our country's economic development as soon as the economy has been put back on the right track.

In my speech I would like to address myself to our budget policy and its orientation, in order to clarify its relevance as a solution to the problems facing the Canadian economy. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, has referred to the budget's general objective and the philosophy underlying the various tax measures introduced in this budget. The House will recall that the November budget contains three major themes: restraint, equity and economic renewal. These three themes form the basis for the budget's primary objective which is to fight inflation. Many Canadians and many members of this House have been wondering why this objective was chosen at a time when interest rates are extremely high and unemployment is particularly severe.

The decision to fight inflation was made after carefully weighing the pros and cons of the budget policy's orientation. In fact, this decision was dictated both by common sense and by the conclusions reached after an analysis of various economic indicators. Economic observers have recognized that inflation has become a way of life for Canadians, and that this inflationary context creates an attitude of uncertainty regarding the future. The result of this lack of confidence is that people are inclined to think twice about any investments they might want to make. As a result, investment projects that are necessary if our economic potential is to be utilized at full capacity are not carried through, which means there is a negative impact on the real growth of the economy and thus of employment.

There is therefore a direct relationship between the inflationary forces present in the economy and the underutilization of the factors of production in that same economy. The higher the inflation rate and the more unstable the inflationary pressures, the stronger this relationship. We must also remember that inflation did not appear all of a sudden in our economy. Just as it took some time for inflation to permeate into our economy, we shall need time and constant efforts to get rid of it.

What does this direct relationship between inflation and production imply for the government when it prepares and develops its budgetary policy and strategy? Recognition of this relationship causes a time-related dilemma for the government. It must choose between a necessarily restrictive anti-inflationary policy which could increase unemployment in the short run while failure to fight inflation would jeopardize economic growth in the medium term, thus intensifying unemployment in the medium and the long term, bringing about permanent unemployment. The government must therefore choose between a short-term strategy and putting aside the fight against inflation, which would temporarily relieve pressures on the labour market, and a medium-term strategy including a short-term restrictive policy which will go to the root of the problem, bringing about a firmly based economic recovery.

When I listen to the comments of opposition members, I am forced to put them among those who favour the first option, namely, the short-term, short-lived, ephemereal solution. Perhaps for the sake of expediency they would rather promote the creation of temporary jobs instead of facing facts and supporting policies which go to the root of the problem and through which we shall be able to acquire all the assets necessary to achieve the full potential of our economy. I would be tempted to describe this short-term strategy as myopic, just as I said that certain comments were myopic in my earlier conclusion. It is economic myopia. Opting for this strategy reflects either a sense of political expediency or an unawareness of the effects of long-lasting inflation on medium-term employment. I use the word myopia because sooner or later, anti-inflation measures will have to be put into place and the effects that we would refuse to see today would then be only too obvious.

The second strategy, which was proposed by the hon. Minister of Finance and the government, aims on the one hand at putting an end to the vicious circle of inflation, and on the other hand, at putting in place the mechanism which will enable us in the medium term to better face the challenge of international competition and to put our productive potential to full use. By choosing this anti-inflation strategy and accepting responsibly its consequences, the government is not deceiving Canadians with irresponsible promises. It is not deluding them or giving rise to false hopes. Those who suggest that we can go on living unconcernedly in these inflationary conditions are nothing but dream peddlers and in fact they are merely advocating conventional remedies. It is quite hopeless to dream that it will be easy to come back to a situation of high growth. On the contrary, restoring a climate of comparative prosperity will be rather difficult and will require determined and constant efforts from each economic sector.

● (1730)

I should bring up again that problem of coexisting inflation and sluggish economy and dwell briefly on a special feature of the Canadian economy, that is the very wide and determined opening of our economy on international markets. We have to outdo our trade partners in our fight against inflation. So long as our inflation rate keeps higher than that of our partners, our competitive position is deteriorating and preventing us from reverting to the full use of our productive resources. Our industrial and economic structure is such that 25 per cent of our production is sold on the international markets compared to an average of 18 per cent in the case of our major partners. This feature of the Canadian economy compels us to strive harder to control inflation because the deterioration of our competitive position has tremendous impacts on employment in Canada. To show—

I find it rather strange, Mr. Speaker, that members should let themselves be easily carried away and lose their temper.

Mr. La Salle: This has been said ten years ago.

Mr. Bussières: To show the effect of the above phenomenon on employment, the impact of exports, may I only indicate that during the last quarter of 1980 and the first quarter of 1981, and not ten years ago, our excellent performance abroad has enabled us to reduce significantly our unemployment rate and to reach very high rates of actual growth during those quarters. To the extent that we are competitive, we create jobs. The opposite, however, is also true. To the extent that we allow our competitive position to deteriorate because of a galloping inflation, we lose markets and permanent jobs in the short and medium term. The less competitive we become, the more jobs we lose. In 1980, our gross national product reached nearly $290 billion; $76 billion of which represented the value of our exports. Some 65 per cent of our total exports go to the United States. On the other hand, inflation in the United States reached 8.9 per cent, compared with 12.5 per cent in Canada over the same period. Should this trend continue, it is clear that we would lose ground in terms of the capacity of our own production to compete with foreign goods both on our domestic market and on the American market.

One must also realize that the recession, the economic slow-down of which affects Canada also affects our trading partners. I am not saying that we should rejoice at other people's misery. I am not saying either that we need only explain the phenomena to suppress their effects. I am merely saying that the economic slowdown is worldwide and that most leaders of industrialized countries are faced with the same dilemma as to the direction of their budgetary policy.

One must keep in mind that at the International Monetary Fund and OECD meetings, many participants have insisted on the need to check inflation before tackling unemployment. It is also interesting to note the relationship between inflation and unemployment in every industrialized nation. For instance, in some cases where inflation is very low, so is unemployment. Although the immediate thrust of the budget policy is to reduce the inflationary pressures, one should not conclude that the government disregards the social consequences of the current economic situation. This government has deliberately opted for a gradualist strategy in the strength of the fiscal and monetary restraints it has implemented. It would have been socially unacceptable merely to eliminate a certain number of social programs with a view to drastically reducing the government's expenditures and deficit. Indeed, it has reinforced its inflation strategy by limiting the growth of expenditures and aiming at a gradual reduction of its deficit.

Despite the outcries of the opposition, the last budget leaves untouched the tax and social programs indexing system, which represents a purchasing power of more than $2.5 billion available to the taxpayers for the year 1982. The Minister of Finance has also given many examples of lower marginal rates of taxation and of other measures contained in the budget which will boost the purchasing power of Canadian taxpayers during fiscal year 1982. I hasten to point out as well that Canada is one of the very few countries that offer their taxpayers such an extensive indexation system as applied to tax schedules and basic exemptions. For instance, the United States have no tax rate indexation.

This budget also features an economic development strategy the purpose of which is to promote the long-term expansion of the Canadian economy. That strategy is aimed at making it possible to distribute equitably the benefits stemming from growth and development among regions, social groups and individuals as well. Hon. members will recall that it bears on five priority fields: industrial development, resources development, transportation, export promotion and maximum use of our human resources. Our approach is synchronized with the economic objectives of the provinces, since it is aimed at promoting the natural resources development industries and revitalizing the industrial structure in light of an ever stronger international competition. Our strategy also takes into account regional and national economic development, hence the expected closer co-operation between the Government of Canada and the provincial governments. In spite of the restrictive policy, the anti-inflation policy, between now and 1986 the Canadian government will spend about $60 billion for economic development. This includes close to $19 billion that will be allocated to energy development.

Some references have been made today to the difficulties faced by the manufacturing sector in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a number of measures taken by the Canadian government to help consolidate Quebec's and Canada's industrial structure.

Hon. members are aware that in Quebec some industries are particularly sensitive, the so-called "soft" sectors, namely, the textile industry, the clothing industry and the footwear industry. This government announced a major program, a five-year program. A budget in the area of $250 million that will be managed by the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board.

Mr. La Salle: Tell us about the footwear industry!

An hon. Member: He knows nothing about it.

Mr. La Salle: Are there industrial losses in the footwear industry?

Mr. Bussières: The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) refers to the footwear industry. It seems the hon. member for Joliette does not know much about that industry. If he examined the anti-dumping tribunal's report, if he stopped speaking through his hat, like the Quebec minister of trade and commerce who contradicts Mr. Parizeau, he would know that the government policy concerning the footwear industry is a sensible one, one that will allow the Canadian footwear industry to step up its modernization drive and to become more and more competitive. The hon. member should stop howling and look at the programs put forward by the Canadian government in the past, like the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, to ensure the development and survival of the footwear industry in Canada. He will find his rhetoric does not—

Mr. La Salle: The hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) has admitted this, although he sits on the government side.

Mr. Bussières: —he will find his rhetoric does not come anywhere near this government's economic policies.

Mr. La Salle: Have there been losses in the footwear industry? Eight thousand jobs lost?

An hon. Member: He has led the Union Nationale to bankruptcy!

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette is well known for his ignorance—

An hon. Member: His rudeness.

Mr. Bussières: —his rudeness.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Joliette on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept those remarks. I am simply asking the minister to tell us whether or not, in the footwear industry, thousands of jobs have been lost. The hon. member for Drummond—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please! I suggest the hon. member for Joliette knows full well he does not have a valid point of order. The Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Bussières: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should also like to remind the hon. member for Joliette that the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board is concerned not only with ensuring that those industries, those vulnerable sectors, are brought up to date, but it also sees to the well-being of those Quebecers whose communities live off those industries. The Board was entrusted the care of creating new permanent jobs for the workers who might be affected by the over-all economic situation that deals a harder blow to those industries which by their very nature are more exposed to setbacks.

We are also very much aware that the Quebec shipbuilding industry, especially in the Sorel-Tracy area, is facing rough times. The pulp and paper industry, the primary processing of metals in the Schefferville, Port-Cartier and Sept-Iles regions must also face tougher competition on world markets. In order to help those industries and their workers to adapt, the Canadian government set up last January an industry and labour adjustment program which was allotted a five-year $350 million budget. That amount is in addition to the $135 million the Canadian government has earmarked for the updating of the Quebec pulp and paper industry throughout the province. The financial assistance provided through the industrial and labour adjustment program is also in addition to the amount of $225 million to be paid until 1982-83 under the shipbuilding assistance program to allow for the modernization of the shipyards.

I may add, Mr. Speaker, that thanks to the Canadian government's energy policy, Dome Petroleum has acquired the Davie Shipbuilding shipyards in Lévis, which will double the number of permanent jobs at the Davie shipyards within the next few years. This, Mr. Speaker, is an example of the benefits of a realistic economic development policy.

In the high technology sector, where permanent jobs are being created, Quebec is one of the main beneficiaries of federal government aid. Between now and 1985, the Government of Canada will spend $476 million on the Canadian space program. Important projects for Quebec include the Canadarm for American space shuttles, the manufacture of satellites and also antennas and components for earth stations. Most of this equipment will be manufactured by Spar Aerospace Limited located in Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue. Last month, $132 million was committed to the program and $50 million has been earmarked for Quebec. About 500 new jobs in the high technology sector will be created in that province. Here, Mr. Speaker, I am referring to permanent jobs. These are not stop-gap measures and certainly not a cataplasme sur une jambe de bois as Réal Caouette used to say.

The Canadian government will spend more than $32 million between now and 1983 on improving the Telidon two-way videotex system developed by Canadian government researchers and successfully transplanted to the private sector. Quebec companies are taking part in certain aspects of the system's production and testing. Montreal cable subscribers are already receiving televised pages of La Presse via Telidon. A special fund of $70 million established to promote the development and use of microelectronic equipment was used to help the Mitel company build a major plant in Bromont, in the Eastern Townships, thus creating 640 permanent jobs, again in the high technology sector.

An hon. Member: That's in Quebec!

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bussières: I would like to add that the Canadian government is also taking major steps in other industrial sectors, for instance, at Pratt & Whitney on the South Shore, where $50 million in Canadian government funds will be used to develop a new engine that will be used in the DASH-8 aircraft. Mr. Speaker, I could go on for some time to show how investment and the strategy for industrial economic development presented by the government in this budget are enabling Quebec and the Quebec and Canadian Economy to benefit from this development strategy and how many permanent jobs are being created. We must not let ourselves be tempted by short-term solutions and we must continue to develop policies that will enable the economy to become more and more productive and so bring down interest rates and unemployment.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have this opportunity to speak to this motion to withdraw the budget, as it allows me an opportunity to present to the House the views of many ordinary Canadians affected by this budget. These views were heard by our Conservative special committee on the budget and the economy, which visited 16 cities across the country and heard from 168 individuals and groups. As vice-chairman of the committee and looking back on the experience, I think our hearings had a twofold benefit. It gave members of our caucus who participated in these hearings an opportunity to learn how the budget affected individual Canadians and sectors of our society, and it also gave Canadians a forum in which to express their anger and their concern about this document which drastically altered the lives of many Canadians. Let me tell you what they told us. I will quote the comments of the people I report on.

• (1750)

The Canadian Consumers' Association declared it "outrageously unfair" to seniors. An Ottawa businessman said it was "an amalgam of stupidity and deceit." The Quebec Federation of Labour termed it "devastating." The B.C. Federation of Labour termed it "disgusting." The Association of Chartered Accountants in Alberta said, "It has created anger, frustration and hostility among our members." An Ontario dairy farmer said, "It stinks."

Probably the best capsule summary of the budget came from B.C. entrepreneur Herb Capozzi who said: "This budget is a cure for which there is no known disease".

In fact, it is a disease for which there is a cure—and that cure is to withdraw the whole devastating document, to withdraw the entire budget, and bring in a new economic plan which reflects the realities of the current conditions in this country, which reflects the realities of crippling interest rates, massive unemployment, eroding consumer confidence, and the shambles of foreclosures and bankruptcies which are strewn over the economic landscape of our country.

The overwhelming hostility toward this budget reflects the two key emotions which it has generated in Canadians. One is fear and the other one is fury. Under the economic mismanagement of the Liberals, Canadians today increasingly fear for their jobs, for their homes, and for their future—both their own and that of their children.

They are faced with the realities of more than one million Canadians unemployed, the realities of unprecedented interest rates, the realities of closing businesses and bankrupt farms, and they worry about whether or not they will have a job next week, next month, or whether they can pay the mortgage.

One Ottawa resident who attended a town meeting summed up this prevailing fear when he told us: "To be honest, I'm scared. I'm scared because I do not know if I can keep a roof over my head. I'm scared because I'm just an ordinary Canadian and this budget considered me to be a wealthy one."

But along with this undercurrent of fear was the outright expression of fury and anger that a government could wilfully introduce so destructive a budget.

There are the people whose jobs have effectively been wiped out by the budget. One man, a life insurance underwriter for 28 years, told us, "I paid my price and I did my thing and now all of a sudden the curtains are falling."

And there is fury that the Liberal government could introduce a budget clearly designed, as one Canadian told us, "to break the pride and will of the Canadian people." This man, a car dealer whose business has just collapsed, told us in a town meeting, "I don't feel good. I don't feel like getting up in the morning and going to work. But I feel proud to live in this country which has so much to offer."

Referring to this attempt by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and his officials to break the pride of people in their jobs, in their businesses, in their country, another Canadian told us, "What an insult to a wonderful people and a wonderful country. What an insult this budget is to us."

There was the fury of the Albertan when she learned that the government planned to tax her life insurance before she even received the money, and she asked us, "How can you tax what you haven't received? How can that be?" It can be, if you are the Liberal finance minister.

There was the fury of the Albertan engineer who told us that under this budget he could see the economy grinding to a halt. He said, "All my work will be foreign, and I want to stay here at home."

In B.C., the Interior Forest Labour Relations Association told us that Canada is a country with probably the greatest potential for sustained economic growth of any developed country in the world. Yet, said its spokesman, as a country we appear to do our best to stifle this potential.

Town after town, meeting after meeting, the message was unrelentingly the same. Let me summarize some of the themes which came through the western hearings which form a kind of western perspective. It is interesting that they are very similar to those dealt with earlier by my colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

One theme is the damage being done to the economy by the uncertainty introduced in the budget. Since the budget was first introduced by the finance minister on November 12, he has been forced to announce major revisions. Still more are expected in the future.

Many people have been doubly affected; once when they tried to adapt to the changes that were originally introduced and then again to the revisions to the budget.

A small-business man in Vancouver told us how he was unable even to make out his payroll for this month of January since the Department of National Revenue and the income tax branch could not clearly state the nature or the amount of the benefits to be taxed or how other rules should be implemented. He said: "Uncertainty is the most horrible risk you can experience and it can ruin a business because you can't plan your affairs ahead of time."

Today the Minister of Finance asked Canadians to check their paycheques to determine whether their taxes will be lower. A lot of people will not know yet, because their employers cannot figure out the new taxes. For hundreds of thousands of people, unemployment insurance cheques have replaced paycheques.

Another businessman told us how he had been forced to lay off staff before new revisions were introduced because, as he explained, "You can't keep bodies in a holding pattern."

An Ottawa businessman at our town meeting told us how he and his staff had exactly four working weeks to wind up their company's deferred profit-sharing employee-incentive plan and then had four working days to make new changes when the minister revised his budget. He told us, "This continual changing of the rules leads to so much uncertainty that it is much easier to move the whole damned company somewhere else."

Another theme which we heard continually was the budget's blow to the whole spirit of incentives—the incentive to take risks, to create, to reap rewards. But this loss of incentive does not apply only to business; it also applies to our incentive to save money or to provide for our own retirement.

Borrowing money from a credit union to invest in the future through RRSPs was very prevalent among middle-income Canadians, we found, because they do not have $2,000 or $3,000 in cash in the early months of the year after paying their Christmas and their winter heating bill.

We were continually told how the budget measures had devastated people's retirement incomes or their retirement plans by changes to the capital gains reserve or to the taxing of retirement income and the ending of income-averaging annuities.

One westerner perceived the budget as a document which gave little incentive to provide for oneself. She added, "We will all see welfare in place of pensions."

There was also the perception that the budget is anti-Canadian because it actively permits foreign investors to carry out activities which Canadians cannot. This is particularly worrisome in Alberta which went through an era when Americans and other foreign investors had more ability to invest in Alberta's resources than did Canadians. They do not want to see that repeated. This fear arises from the restrictions on interest deductibility, a measure which no other western country has ever imposed on its citizens. We were continually asked why Canadians should be discriminated against while the new rules favour foreign investors.

Another theme is that this budget is unfair in that the wrong people are being hit. The Alberta Cattle Commission summed up this feeling in its brief when it said, "It appears to us that the budget has chosen the wrong target, the wrong weapon, and the wrong time."

It has chosen the wrong target, because the bulk of the measures in the budget will affect low and middle-income people who will find that their social benefits, such as their health and their dental plans, are now subject to tax.

It has chosen the wrong weapon, because budget measures such as limits to interest deductibility will quite literally starve industries of their lifestream of cash flow.

It has chosen the wrong time, because this restrictive budget, which adds to government revenues at the expense of the ordinary taxpayer, has been introduced in the most unprecedented hard times since the Great Depression.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) had the floor.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, earlier I was talking about our Conservative task force visiting 16 cities to talk with people about the budget. I was reviewing some of the themes which had been brought to our attention about the budget. Also I was reviewing the assessment of the Alberta Cattle Commission that "the budget has chosen the wrong target, the wrong weapon, and at the wrong time." I outlined some of the reasons for that in discussing the themes which emerged from our hearings with Canadians. Another theme which emerged was the perception that under the direction of the Minister of Finance the government simply did not know what it was doing when it introduced some of the measures. This perception has been heightened by the forced retreat of the government on such measures as ending the MURB program which, of course, threw thousands of workers off the job and shut down construction sites.

In British Columbia representatives of the Interior Forest Labour Relations Association told us:

> The budget is a prime example of the impact of a change in government policy and the failure to understand the impact before implementing the policy.

I think this viewpoint was stated in its simplest terms by the Ontario dairy farmer who said:

> The perfect tax system is one which I don't even have to hear about, let alone think about. It is incredible that a family farm has to hire a tax consultant just to stay farming.

A major complaint about the budget regards the retroactivity of its measures. These have been well documented in the House by my colleagues. These measures affect the retirement plans of ordinary Canadians, the investment decisions already made by Canadians, the construction and equipment plans of Canadian companies, just to give some examples.

The Vancouver Real Estate Board appeared before us in Vancouver and made the point that taxpayers who have relied on well-established government policy as set out in the Income Tax Act should be morally entitled to proceed with their plans without being forced into crash programs to rearrange their affairs because of the proposed sweeping changes. Of course, that is what they have been forced to do. It is generally conceded across the western region of the country that the transitional measures proposed by the Minister of Finance do not resolve the problems which he created. The issue of taxation of employee benefits is of particular concern to the west because the booming western economy must be able to attract skilled workers if it is to develop its potential.

One man appearing before our town hall meeting described how his job had taken him to four different centres in the last two years and how adversely the budget measures could affect him in the future, particularly in regard to the proposal to tax housing loans made by employers to compensate employees for the high cost of shelter in the west. The Vancouver Real Estate Board indicated:

> The minister proposes in one fell swoop and without warning to use a sledge-hammer to kill an ant. Countless employment arrangements are being disturbed without warning in the name of equity, and the small amount of the tax which would be collected is insignificant in relation to the unhappiness and unrest which have been created.

Labour unions and organized labour groups have attacked the failure of the budget to deal with job creation or to offset rising unemployment which is causing so much misery in the country. In British Columbia, unemployment increased last year by nearly 50 per cent, to 115,000 people. I would have thought this statistic would have been of some interest to my colleagues across the House.

Another recurring theme was the interventionist philosophy which the budget represents. One alarm bell was rung by the British Columbia & Yukon Chamber of Mines which wondered out loud whether the government was deliberately hammering the mining industry particularly by discouraging investment in order to promote an excuse for government participation in a "Mineral-Can" to stimulate the industry. The chamber suggested that the budget paper which outlined an economic development study for the eighties hinted that the government may want more direct involvement in the resource industry than is necessarily prudent or desirable. The chamber of mines pointed out that the experience of the mining industry is that its survival is not dependent upon any direct government action other than deregulation of legislation which has inhibited the industry's ability to be competitive.

This concept that the federal government will set the goals, the federal government will provide the investment vehicle, the federal government will be the operator and manager of job creation and resource exploitation, is particularly repugnant in the west. Of course, one reason is the depressing effects which the national energy policy has had on the petroleum industry in Alberta. The Canadian Petroleum Association told us that in 1981, following the introduction of the National Energy Program, exploration and capital expenditures fell by about $3.5 billion from their forecast level. The CPA indicated that this sharp decline in the level of activity was a reaction to the realities of the pricing and taxation regimes introduced in the National Energy Program in October, 1980. One result was the decline in the industry's cash flow by 35 per cent in 1981 and, as independent operators told us, cash flow is the industry's lifeblood, particularly for smaller companies which have no other profit centres from which to draw their capital requirements.

The negative impact of the NEP was further explained by the Petroleum Services Association of Canada which represents the service and supply sector of the petroleum industry. Its survey showed that 32 of the 85 companies which responded will have to close down if activity does not pick up. It estimated that nearly 8,000 people, or 20 per cent of the work force, will be laid off.

I should like to explain to hon. members that we are not talking about the oilmen who hang out at the petroleum club or the ranchmen's club in Calgary; we are talking about the people who build airstrips, drilling pads, roads and usually their trucks from the frames up. They are the lifeblood of the entrepreneur of the west. They estimate that 20 per cent of their work force will be laid off, particularly after spring breakup at the conclusion of this winter's drilling program. They described the impact of the slowdown in activity on the western towns of Lloydminster, Grande Prairie, Fort St. John, Dawson Creek and Peace River. They described the auction yards in Edmonton filled with equipment salvaged from bankrupt companies. They told us that the oil and gas industry is taking an incredible bath. They told us that they are losing their trained personnel. They told us that they would lose their equipment and their technology. Who else should be developing the technology in the Mackenzie Basin to work offshore, to work in the Canada lands? Why is the government shutting down this industry and cutting off the lifeblood supply of cash? Those are some of the questions that we were asked when we held our hearings.

• (2010)

In Calgary we also heard from HUDAC, which represents the house builders. They told us there is lots of housing available in Calgary. In fact, there are enough homes to house everyone moving in who can afford to buy a home. In order to qualify at today's interest rates for the average home in Calgary, a buyer must have an income of $45,000 a year. HUDAC estimated that 80 per cent of the apartment starts in Calgary were undertaken through the benefits provided by the MURB legislation and similar tax deferrals.

I think at this point I should indicate my intention to move another subamendment, which I am certain will meet the requirements of the NDP and of the Chair.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the amendment be amended by adding thereto the following:

and that

"(c) One year after the date of coming into force of these measures the government shall review the said measures to ascertain their effect."

May I speak to that, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Yes.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear from my description of the impact of some of these budget measures on the people and the industries in western Canada why we feel that a review after a year should merit the support of the NDP, the House and the Chair. For instance, just dealing with the withdrawal of the MURB legislation, it ensures that Calgary will lose 4,000 apartment and 2,000 rural housing starts. That is a loss of 6,000 units each year, capable of housing 10,000 people. In contrast, the Council of Forest Industries in B.C. told us that the federal government's program to provide 7,500 interest-free loans for some 15,000 units would keep one large plywood mill operating for about two months in B.C. and one large sawmill operating for three months. That is the effect of the government's housing program.

Finally, the major recurring theme throughout our hearings was the consensus that the timing of this budget could not be worse. Inflation, high interest rates, and previous government policies have put dampers on the booming western economy. The many harmful budget measures will only ensure that the recession will deepen.

In British Columbia, where the depressed economy has been created by market conditions rather than the federal government's interventionist energy policy, the frustration is just as deep as in Alberta. We were told by the interior lumber manufacturers that the Canadian lumber industry is facing the worst market slump in more than 30 years. We were told that at least one fifth of the forestry workers are on temporary or permanent lay-off. We learned that price levels for lumber are the same as they were six years ago, and for many operators they are operating at below cost. There is no clear indication if any recovery might be expected or the extent of the recovery.

If conditions do not improve, some companies will face bankruptcy and more lay-offs will become permanent. That is why the forest industry is concerned about a number of budget measures which will affect its economic viability. These include the 12.5 per cent dividend tax—the minister asked for specifics and we will give him some—the elimination of employee incentives, such as deferred profit-sharing plans for shareholders, capital cost allowances, loans to non-residents and restricted interest expense.

Of particular concern to British Columbians is the proposed taxation of employee benefits, such as room and board in remote camps. The International Woodworkers of America say that this measure alone will add $18 a day to the tax of loggers living in a remote camp, which will make it very difficult to attract skilled workers to remote work sites.

They say that this will force loggers to pay an additional $3,600 in income taxes for the privilege of living in logging camps.

The Vancouver Board of Trade told us that the extra cost to a mining operator for employees earning about $38,000 a year in the north would be about $18,000 in payroll costs to compensate for the housing and transportation subsidies.

Similarly, the measures to tax social benefits, such as extended health and dental care, will encourage people to opt out of these plans, which will create further burdens on the health sector of the economy in the future.

The whole issue of the taxation of employee benefits is expected to generate labour unrest in most heavily unionized provinces in the country. Many union leaders told us that these benefits have already been won by unions at the negotiating table, and their members will likely seek to recover any additional income taxes they are forced to pay from the employers themselves.

This will create a stormy environment for labour negotiations since the large resource industries of B.C. are unable to pass on the costs in their severely declining markets. This is acknowledged by responsible labour leaders in the resource industries. Similar pressures on the public sector are emphasized by John L. Fryer, President of the National Union of Provincial Government Employees.

Mr. Fryer says that as a result of the budget measure to tax social benefits, 95 per cent of the provincial government employees who have some form of health and dental plan coverage will experience a reduction in their take-home wages. He said:

> For the vast majority of our membership who earn between $15,000 and $24,000 annually there will be no tax reduction whatsoever.

I challenge the Minister of Finance, who keeps insisting that 12 million Canadians will benefit from his budget measures, to dispute Mr. Fryer's assessment.

Mr. Fryer says these facts cannot be denied. He asks:

> Where is the equity for provincial government employees whose real wages have already declined in each of the last five years as a direct result of inflation. It is obvious that Mr. MacEachen's concept of fairness and equity differs sharply from those of working people in Canada.

Mr. Fryer admits that he is not a member of our party. However, he joins us in agreeing to the solution to the problems created by the budget. Mr. Fryer told us:

> People who pay my salary say that the budget is no damn good. Throw it away and start again.

That is the intent of the amendment before the House today and also of the subamendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I ask the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) to provide a copy of the subamendment?

Miss Carney: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): After deep consideration, I find the subamendment to be in order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has time remaining, would she allow me to ask her a question with regard to her subamendment?

Miss Carney: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to be able to support this subamendment, but I am curious about the section that says "shall review the said measures to ascertain their effect." May I ask the hon. member, their effect on what, the banks, the economy, or the people involved? We will then be able to determine whether or not we should be supporting this change.

Some hon. Members: All of those.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I would think that it was clear, even to the NDP, that the purpose of this subamendment is to review the effect of these measures introduced by the Liberal government on the people of the country and on the economy of the country.

● (2020)

An hon. Member: Nothing is obvious to them, Pat.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this particular debate because I am satisfied, as are most Canadians who have read the budget and all the supporting documents, that home builders, small-business men, farmers and ordinary Canadians have the most to gain if the thrust of the budget is successful.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) indicated to us that his main concern and purpose in bringing in this particular budget is for it to have an impact on the invidious effects of inflation.

An hon. Member: I wish I had said that.

Mr. Cullen: Interest rates will not come down unless we get inflation under control. Recently, three leading economists appearing on that Conservative program "Canada AM"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: —indicated, in answer to a question from Miss Pamela Wallen that the three leading indicators were such as to indicate that the cost of living as reflected in the consumer price index would in fact come down, much to the chagrin of the interviewer and of those who were trying to make a point that the inflation rate would rise even higher than 12.5 per cent. However, these three leading economists selected by the CTV network, not by the Liberal, Conservative or New Democratic parties, were unanimous in their view that the leading indicators indicate that the consumer price index would in fact be coming down; that the media were playing it all wrong by talking about the four tenths increase in the last quarter as being aberrational.

An hon. Member: Where else is it going to go? It has gone through the roof.

An hon. Member: It cannot go any higher.

Mr. Stevens: That was the U.S.; tell us about Canada.

An hon. Member: You are so bad we will give you more time.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I was here this afternoon and listened very intently to the leaders of the two parties opposite, and I did not heckle once. I do not know what they are afraid of over there. It is one thing to be running a road show across the country telling everybody, "Oh, gee, that is too bad. I am sorry to hear that. Yes, we definitely agree with you. We will sure hammer it to them when we get back in the House." However, when they come back, they are not prepared to listen to the other side. They do not want to have a debate; all they can do is heckle.

This afternoon the two leaders of the opposition spoke, the Minister of Finance listened very attentively, but when he got up to speak about some of the inaccuracies in their particular approach, he was, of course, howled and hooted down because they did not want to hear the other side.

An hon. Member: Poor fellow.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that both the Minister of Finance and I can stand a little heckling, but the opposition cannot stand the heat when they are faced with the facts.

Mr. Stevens: Well, try us.

Mr. Cullen: I do not think the opposition would know the truth if it hit them in the face judging from what I have been listening to today.

Now, in keeping with the request of Mr. McDermott and the Canadian Labour Congress I, along with a lot of other Members of Parliament, agreed to meet with members of various labour unions from across Canada to hear about their particular concerns on the budget and the present state of the economy. One individual came to me and said he has been working all this time trying to get a home, trying to get it together, and now the government is taking it away from him. So I said, "well, what is your situation?" He bought a home for $39,000, with a $38,000 mortgage and paid $1,000 down. He did not like the floors in the house—remember that this is his first purchase—and so he went out to a credit union and borrowed more money so that he could put in the kind of floors he wanted.

At that time he was earning the minimum wage, as was his wife. In fact, his wife was pregnant. They had two children, the wife had not worked since giving birth to the baby, and because he was now working for the minimum wage he could not meet his mortgage and credit union commitments. Now if that is the kind of management that individual exercises, it is nice to have a scapegoat like the government to blame for your particular problems.

I was serious today, Mr. Speaker, when I said I listened very attentively because I also did that when I was in my riding, and I have also read very carefully letters not only from my constituents but from across Canada. Some of the points made were excellent but, Mr. Speaker, members of the Liberal Party did not wait for that first wave of complaint or criticism which follows every budget. We looked at it ourselves, studied it—

An hon. Member: And said what a disaster.

Mr. Cullen: —and determined that if we were going to support the budget, we were going to make representations to the Minister of Finance. We did so, and I am proud to say that he showed the flexibility for which he has become famous by agreeing to something like 17 amendments after previously having made three different changes.

The opposition cannot have it both ways. Some of them say it is a massive retreat, there is no budget left, it is decimated. Then others get up and say, oh, they were very minor technical changes. That is why I say you cannot depend on the opposition criticism because we cannot hear and understand from them what side of the coin they want. They cannot have it both ways. They tried that when they were in government. When I say government, they were in government for nine months but in this House for only something like three. Their arrogance is rather incredible since they could not handle the House for any more than three months, and yet they are now going to tell the country how a particular budget should be drafted.

They are afraid to listen. If they were prepared to listen at that time, which they were not, if they were prepared to count at that time, which they were not, they might conceivably still be in power, heaven forbid, and we would have had that worst of all possible budgets foisted upon us, the one brought in by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I think he is happy today that he does not have that particular responsibility and is not accountable to the Canadian public for that particular mistake.

Mr. Wilson: Ask your constituents which was better, Bud.

Mr. Cullen: Now, Mr. Speaker, it is my view that the criticism the Minister of Finance is receiving from this side of the House is more constructive and responsible. It is the sort of criticism which is appropriate for every budget, which is why some changes have been made and why some five or six items, if the minister can get the consent of the House, will be referred for further study, items such as insurance and corporate reorganization. I think that came about as a direct result of honest, solid representations, not only from Liberal members but from people who met with and wrote to the Minister of Finance who was prepared to listen.

Mr. Wilson: Who had to listen.

Mr. Cullen: Well, the hon. member says, "a poorly-thought-out budget in the first place." I think there are some items in the budget that could maybe have been looked at more carefully.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Careful now, Bud.

Mr. Cullen: It was for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that a Liberal group on this side got together and indicated to the minister those areas where we thought changes should be made. The minister was very quick, and properly so, to respond to these responsible and constructive critical comments that were made. However, in listening to the opposition today, I was looking for something that might be helpful, something that we might use to buttress our arguments for further changes we might like to see. All we heard were misrepresentations: Sixty thousand women will no longer qualify for a particular credit. We hear all of these tales of gloom and doom but we do not hear one solid, constructive thought.

We have heard from the NDP about exchange controls, but when they are challenged, it is not really exchange controls they are in favour of; it is a modified form of controls, without identifying what they mean by "modified". That is the old NDP trick, because when you do bring in something of that nature, and there are modifications made, those are not the modifications they were talking about, they would not have done it that way if they had been in power. They always leave that convenient loophole.

I listened very carefully, Mr. Speaker, for something positive from the opposition today which might be used in this particular budget.

Mr. Nielsen: Withdraw it.

Mr. Cullen: Remember the "con" in Conservative, because they are endeavouring to do that to the Canadian public, trying to tell them that everything in this budget is bad. It is not, Mr. Speaker, and the thrust of this budget can be good if it has the impact the Minister of Finance wants, that of bringing down the cost of living.

An hon. Member: Bud for cabinet.

• (2030)

Mr. Cullen: A little louder? Now there is something to which I would like to refer, a change of emphasis, if you will, and that is the method which is used to bring in budgets. I do not care whether that is under a Conservative regime or a Liberal regime. The fact is that the present system is not working properly. It did not work very well for the Conservatives, so they have a little to be humble about, and we can be humble, too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You've got a lot to be humble about, Uriah Heep!

Mr. Cullen: What I am suggesting is that the present system is not appropriate. There must be some changes. Frankly, when Walter Gordon brought in his particular budget, he tried to open the door a little bit. He tried to bring a little bit of light on the subject by bringing in people from outside.

Mr. Nielsen: He did the respectable thing!

Mr. Cullen: If that particular budget had not been such a bummer, and if individuals had not been subject to criticism that they might have been still on the payroll, that step would have been applauded by any responsible Member of Parliament. There was a minister who was prepared to go outside the civil service to bring in people with some knowledge of the subject and to use them to buttress arguments from civil servants and to help the minister in making up his mind concerning the kinds of programs that he wanted to bring in. I think something like that would have been appropriate, and I think it would have been applauded.

However, that particular budget was not a good one, and there was criticism that maybe one or two of the members might still have been on the payroll of the company for which they had worked. Therefore, all of the criticism was directed that way. Then, of course, when the budget turned out to be a bad one, as my history books seems to tell me it was, that whole process was lost. Therefore, there was a kind of a backing off or a kind of a closing in, and ministers of finance became a little wary and got back into this secrecy bit again, believing that everything had to be very secretive.

My next personal involvement with a budget was as parliamentary secretary to a former minister of finance, Mr. Turner. As a parliamentary secretary, one has the privilege of sitting around where these ideas are discussed. On and before the presentation of that particular budget, we were unundated with this concept of secrecy. I know what I felt sitting in there when I looked around and members said, "We have never had a budget leak." I knew that I was the only new boy on the team and I thought, "My golly, if it happens, I know where the finger of blame will be pointed." Mr. Benson tried the white paper approach, covering a lot of territory. That approach was criticized because it was suggested that everything that was in there was what the government wanted to bring about. As a result of that, rather than having a dialogue about whether we should or should not put something in, with possible ramifications, we got into a political argument which simply destroyed, at least for the time being, the idea of putting something out to the general public for discussion.

All ministers of finance with whom I have dealt, including, I am sure, the hon. member for St. John's West, have shared the idea that there must be a better way to bring in a budget. There must be a better way to have a dialogue before a budget is brought in.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Cullen: Because with every budget, no matter which party brings it in, we have a situation where something comes down on budget night, and if we have a discussion afterwards, it is always with the idea that a Damocles Sword is hanging above us, that sooner or later things will take place, no matter what. In my opinion, that is not the right atmosphere for bringing in a budget which can be beneficial to all Canadians. I believe that everyone, perhaps with different emphasis, has that in mind concerning the manner in which budgets should work.

The present Minister of Finance used an approach, if you will, an econmic statement which is also a good move, in my view. It is a step in the right direction. I think we must find a way in which we can get the general Canadian public into the discussion about the kind of tax system we want. By that I do not mean right across the board; but we can surely pick the kind of representatives, who are making representations today and who have made representations in other budgets, who will be able to find out the ramifications of particular moves. If we do that, it will be for the benefit of all Canadians. I think it would be an appropriate step or an appropriate move to set up a group which could come up with some ideas about how we might better present budgets in the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: Have us do it: That's the way!

Mr. Cullen: We had you do it, and it lasted one day, I think.

An hon. Member: Well, that was your fault.

Mr. Cullen: It was not my fault. I was out earning a living.

An hon. Member: Why don't you go back to making a living?

Mr. Cullen: I think it was the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who said to me when I came back that he could not believe it. There are only two ways out of here: to be defeated or to die. I came back, notwithstanding. That is the first piece of advice I received from the hon. member for Yukon when I got back. I feel very much alive and very happy to be a part of this particular party.

However, I say to the hon. member, my friend across the way here, that if we do not find a better system, we will lose the confidence of the people, and we will make the House of Commons in effect irrelevant. Federal-provincial conferences, ministers' meetings, regulations, newspaper comments and all kinds of things will take precedence over the House of Commons unless we get the focus back here where it belongs.

For my part, if I were a minister of finance, there would not be an earlier lock-up. The Minister of Finance would deliver his speech on the night of the budget and let all of the Canadian people hear the comment, and then deal with them after. That is only a minor thought, but it seems to me that if we have a budget which is being presented by the Minister of Finance and it is meant for the Canadian public, surely it should not be discussed out here two minutes after the Minister of Finance is on his feet.

I heard a comment by Dian Cohen. She was almost drooling over the idea that she would be able to get out there and attack this particular budget. Two minutes had not gone by after the minister stood up.

An hon. Member: She's on your side.

Mr. Cullen: If Dian Cohen is on our side, we are picking the wrong friends.

An hon. Member: You're learning, Bud.

Mr. Epp: Better take what you can get.

Mr. Cullen: I think we have had good representation in some areas of this particular budget. I think the insurance industry, particularly the Canadian life underwriters, have been responsible in the kinds of representations they have made. They are a very well organized group. They know how to approach their policyholders. They have come up with some ideas which warrant consideration. It is my personal view that no one really purchases life insurance for the purpose of saving. If one wants to save money, one will do it in a different way. That is something we can consider, and that is why I welcome the minister's indication that this was an area he was prepared to consider.

I would like to refer to capital cost allowance. Here is an area in which there is no reduction in the capital cost allowance, but in the first year we are saying to Canadians, "You cannot have a full capital cost allowance. It will only be a portion of that. But you will stretch it over a longer and more extended period of time." There is nothing wrong with that approach.

Mr. Taylor: Do you have a farm?

Mr. Cullen: As the minister indicated, and as anyone who has studied this knows, in the United States the capital cost allowance does not commence when one buys a machine. It does not commence until one begins using the particular machine. That is when the capital cost allowance begins applying.

Mr. Taylor: That's what happens on farms!

Mr. Cullen: Our system will still allow a capital cost allowance but it will be spread over a longer period of time.

Mr. Taylor: Oh, baloney! Did you have a farm? Did you have a farm?

Mr. Cullen: If the hon. member would listen for 30 seconds and let me finish my point, which he has not had the courtesy to do—

Mr. Taylor: Tell the farmer that when he is buying a combine!

Mr. Cullen: One cannot deal with a dinosaur in the House of Commons. I guess that is the way it works. I will just carry on and ignore him.

My view on the capital cost allowance is that it may impact on people who are leasing equipment.

Mr. Taylor: Oh, baloney!

Mr. Cullen: Because here is an area where an individual buys a car at the beginning of the year or leases it through the whole year, and there is a capital cost allowance feature in the first year which may be appropriate, and I think is something we should be considering.

Mr. Taylor: You fellows tell your farmers that!

An hon. Member: Easy does it, Gordon. Watch your blood pressure.

Mr. Taylor: Tell your farmers what he is saying!

Mr. Cullen: I think the hon. member must have worked in a big field because we can hear him all the way across the back forty. There was a time when we understood that we would be courteous in the House of Commons and at least listen to what another individual had to say; but he is a new hon. member in the House, and I guess he has not learned his rules yet.

Mr. Stevens: You should listen to him. He's right, Bud. Listen to him.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I understand that under the rules, and they are still being debated here, I would have approximately one-half hour in which to speak; but I know other hon. members want to make comments. However, I feel very strongly that there must be a better way to present a budget, one in which there is more input prior to the budget coming in than after the budget is already introduced. It is apparent to me as a person who loves this place, the House of Commons, that, as with every other single piece of legislation, a minister must bring that piece of legislation to caucus and get it through that caucus; and if he or she cannot get it through the caucus, that particular legislation does not see the light of day. However, if it gets into the House, and we are defeated on a section, or a part of it, it does not result in the fall of the government.

● (2040)

What is mystifying to me is that when the budget is introduced at eight o'clock in the House of Commons on a Thursday night or any other night, it is only at that time that the members of the party in power have the full information as to what is in the budget, yet we are expected to support that budget. When we find that we cannot, we move as quickly as we can to make whatever changes we are able to bring about. What a foolish way to do something. It is a bill that, if it were defeated in the House, could result in an election.

There should be more input and more discussion among Members of Parliament. I do not care which party is in power, it is not a good system for introducing a budget. I believe it should be changed. That is one point I wanted to make tonight.

The other point is that we are still, and this is an ongoing process, meeting with our constituents, with constituents and representative groups in Ottawa, in an endeavour to get as much information as we can in order that we can talk in a knowledgeable way about the panopoly of issues covered in this budget. That is a good and appropriate process.

I believe we would do a better job if there were a better way of introducing a budget so that when it comes into the House, if it does not have unanimous approval, at least we could debate the issues with some degree of knowledge or information and with some degree of dedication to a particular process.

I know that others want to speak. I understand the bells will ring in about an hour, so I will leave it at that. Maybe the member who has been shouting will make a speech and tell us how great this budget is.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make, and first of all, I want to tell the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) that I was very interested in what he had to say. I have the impression that his cabinet experience has been beneficial. This evening he has been giving us advice on how to present budgets, and I feel he would have no trouble stepping into the shoes of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). We would certainly have no objection.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments. A lot of statistics have been quoted on both sides of the House, but the fact remains that this afternoon the Minister of Finance solemnly stated that the situation was very serious. He did not, of course, go on to wonder who was responsible. Perhaps the Canadian people and perhaps the House should try to find out who is to blame for this disaster. And indeed it is one. We have heard thousands of Canadians and hundreds of organizations discuss the absolutely pitiful performance of this government with respect to the economy. Again, we are being told about long-term projections. We are being told about government proposals and commitments, which is an attempt to have us believe they are willing to clean up their act which, to my knowledge, they have not done for 15 years.

How do they expect the Canadian people to believe projections which for 15 years have proved to be utterly wrong? And the Minister of Finance is talking about tax rebates as if he had managed to find some nice presents for Canadian taxpayers, but not a word about indirect taxes and increased energy costs which are making all these rebates cost so much more. In any case, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) may have had the audacity to say that the member speaking to you now does not know what he is talking about, but at least we do not indulge in hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker. Hypocrisy is not on this side of the House. I feel this government should be made to show its true colours and that its actions should be made clear to all Canadians. At a time like this, Canadians are beginning to realize the kind of hypocritical policies this government has been churning out for 15 years, Mr. Speaker. There is a saying: Beware of Greeks bearing gifts, and Canadians have just about had enough. We are aware of this, Mr. Speaker, in my own riding as well as anywhere else in Canada. In my own province, the economy's performance has been pitiful during the 15 years this government has been in power, and the majority of government members are well aware of this. They feel uncomfortable and I would say depressed when faced with questions put to them by certain reporters. Last night, Mr. Speaker, I saw four Quebec Liberal members on television who had no idea what the solution should be.

What suggestion could they make to the House of Commons to get Canada clear of this fix, of this disaster of this abyss in which the government has hurled us? I will not mention any Liberal members this evening. I will come back to that later. These Liberals have been most outspoken with me. I wish to point it out to the Minister of State for Finance that Quebecers are concerned. They are dissatisfied with the behaviour of the Minister of Finance and would have paid a high price to have him stay in Toronto another three months or even another three years. Liberal members do not hesitate to say that they are unhappy about their present situation. They are unable to answer the questions asked by their constituents. What will the government do? We do no longer know. The government is exhausted, empty and devoid of ideas. This government is asking Canadians to remain confident. No way, Mr. Speaker, since more especially during the past two years this government has shown gross carelessness in the economic field. During the past two years, this government has been playing petty politics in its dealings with the provinces, especially in the field of energy.

This government could have brought about the oil agreement two years ago and given back some much needed strength to our economy and bolstered the Canadian dollar on world markets. This government preferred playing petty politics, through the minister concerned, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), and confronting a government which could also justify its position. We must now pay very dearly for all this. This government scrapped the private sector policy that we, on this side of the House, had developed for Canadian businessmen. This government refused to support an interest rate policy that would have stimulated the construction industry which is the mainspring of our economy. And now, these people who defeated us because our proposal for home owners did not directly affect the tenants—

An hon. Member: Ignorant!

Mr. La Salle: Ignorant? Which side was the most ignorant, when we knew quite well that a policy favouring home owners would help to maintain normal rental costs? Because the government refused to grant a preferential interest rate to such an essential sector of our economy as the construction industry, we now have major problems and thousands of unemployed people in Canada. And these people say that we are playing petty politics when thousands of Canadians urge us to fight against this government. This is what Canadians are asking us to do today, Mr. Speaker.

● (2050)

The Minister of Finance says that he is flexible because he has been forced to back up on 18 points. This is gross incompetence, Mr. Speaker! I was on an open line program this morning with a Liberal Member of Parliament. I shall not give his name yet. I bet that you also know who he is, but you will not mention his name either. He admitted that the Liberal members had not been informed of the projections made by the Minister of Finance. They knew nothing about what the budget would contain. Is it possible that these government members were not at least aware of the main thrust of this budget? He confessed to it on an open line program on CKVL, Mr. Speaker, if this can help you identify this hon. member. This is impossible. These same people are now saying that they have succeeded in convincing the Minister of Finance to reverse his decisions. Mr. Speaker, this so-called flexibility is simply unacceptable incompetence which reflects on the whole Liberal Party. In the last two days I have noticed that the Prime Minister seems a bit out of sorts. He is not happy with his Minister of Finance. In view of the opposition that is felt everywhere, of the pressures which are exerted and of the comments which are heard from all sectors, I wonder how the government members can still honestly support, endorse and encourage this Minister of Finance. Only 20 of them were here to listen to his speech this afternoon. That is very few! Only 20! I understand that the great majority preferred to remain in their offices and I wonder if these same people will not remain in their offices when we vote this evening, and I believe that it would be the best thing they could do for Canada.

An hon. Member: Do not count on it!

Mr. La Salle: I believe that it is the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) who said that I should not count on it.

I know them, Mr. Speaker. Even if it hurts them, even if this is against the interests of their constituents, as they have been doing for the past 15 years, they will behave like sheep and blindly support the Minister of Finance whom they are not particularly fond of, something I can quite easily understand. But the example is a good demonstration of this and could not lie, in my opinion. This afternoon I merely asked the Minister of State responsible for finance, who was bragging about the fact that his government had taken steps to streamline the footwear industry—basically, that is a good thing, and we were quite happy about that. The Minister of State responsible for finance did not allow me to finish—

An hon. Member: Are you not pleased now?

Mr. La Salle: Of course we are pleased to see Canada promote the Canadian footwear industry. I simply and honestly asked the minister to tell us why—instead of calling us ignorant—I repeat that I have never been guilty of such hypocrisy—why it had suddenly decided to revive this industry, after waiting so long that jobs were lost by the thousands in Quebec. But the Minister of State would not answer. I was not asking anything else, Mr. Speaker. And the Minister of State is perfectly aware that we have indeed lost jobs by the thousands not only in Quebec, but in other parts of Canada as well, in the footwear industry. Jobs by the thousands! Because the government has procrastinated. It has waited so long that it will cost more jobs, especially in the province of Quebec. I remember that the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) had given the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a tongue lashing in public and, in my opinion, with good reason. And there is another member, I believe it is the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), although I am not sure—I believe he too is concerned with the problems of the footwear industry. We certainly are also affected by those problems in my riding.

The lack of action on the part of the government is costing us a pretty penny in that sector, and there are also others that are suffering. The Minister of State for Finance gave us a course in economics today. I had a feeling I was hearing again the speech the former minister of finance and present Minister of Justice made seven or eight years ago. He told us then about the same things. Still, the present minister did a better job of it because when the former minister of finance, now Minister of Justice, gave us that speech, I had a feeling he understood absolutely nothing about what he was reading. Today, the Minister of State for Finance gave me the impression he understood what he was reading. He tried to show us that two and two are four, and four and four are eight. I am convinced several members on this side are already aware of those mathematics.

But the Minister of State for Finance did not tell us that with projections over a five-year period, because that is what we are given here, projections over two, three or five years—the Minister of State seems to have forgotten it. We well remember that the last two or three ministers of finance, including the one I see before me and this will not be the first time we have been given projections that prove wrong later on, and not only false but so far from reality that they border on scandal, on hypocrisy; they even smack of lies. Of course, I am not accusing anyone of having lied to us deliberately. They did not know what they were saying: May God forgive them! But obviously we are dealing here with false projections. We are constantly told about the hundreds, the thousands of jobs that have been created right and left. But I say to you that in 1968—I believe we came to this House at the same time—there were 300,000 unemployed, while there are now a million of them. It is a fact that over the last six months 235,000 jobs have been lost in the manufacturing sector, and 100,000 others will be lost according to the projections made by a very responsible association. I ask this government to come up with something positive, an emergency plan. Of course, they will ask whether we want the deficit to be reduced, inflation to be wrestled down. For the past ten years I have been hearing about wrestling down inflation. Unemployment is created to fight inflation, and inflation is created to fight unemployment. We are having both anyway.

Mr. Guilbault: Read your sentence in Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. La Salle: I submit we have both. Do we not? Of course, we do. And this is the result of projections as brilliant as those the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) should have made, but I am not aware he has made any for quite some time. Today we heard the Minister of Finance. I think we are in a serious predicament, a catastrophic one. There will be 100,000 jobs lost and the government gives us nothing. There is nothing in the budget to ensure that in the short term our economy will be redirected and strenghtened. The Minister of Finance confirmed this yesterday in Toronto. Such proposals will result in increased unemployment, to wrestle down the inflation we never could control these last ten years. Can we afford in Quebec to lose 100,000 jobs at this point? Should we not reassess our priorities and make political choices based on our moral and political responsibilities? On the humane level, Mr. Speaker, we have a hard-hearted government. It is willing to add to the misery of those who already are suffering and to add thousands worse to their numbers. This is unbelievable and unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. All categories are affected: farmers are unhappy, businessmen are dissatisfied, workers are penalized, the young are worried, and rightly so. And these people across the aisle are asking us to trust them. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance would have us believe there is a solution in the budget. Nothing could be further from the truth. They say we are making misleading statements. I am sorry, but I would like the government to prove the opposite right now.

I see on the government side, Mr. Speaker, hon. members from a province faced with those problems. I have in front of me members from Quebec who know perfectly well the budget does not meet the expectations of Quebecers. In front of me I have 74 members who, as usual, will not have the guts to face up to their basic responsibilities and their duties as Members of Parliament. And this is not the first time. I may be lucky to be the only one, but it is Quebec's tough luck to have 74 members on the other side. That is Quebec's tragedy, to have six dozen members of Parliament who do not meet their commitment and their promise.

Before concluding, I would like to recall that two years ago the same people were supporting their great leader who was saying in a short commercial: With an 18-cent increase in the price of gas, farmers cannot even afford to crank their tractors. In a second commercial aimed at another group, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) repeated this a hundred times during that campaign. With the 18-cent tax on gas, fishermen cannot afford to go where the fish are. So where are the fish today? How are the fishermen and the farmers doing? You people from Quebec and from ridings in other provinces, how are your farmers doing? At least we were honest enough to say exactly how much it would cost, but the previous government did not have the courage to apply those increases to meet the needs and the objectives we had set for ourselves, namely, self-sufficiency by 1990. You have failed there. Mr. Speaker, I would have many other comments to make. If they had honoured the agreement we had already concluded with Alberta, Canada would not be in the position it is in today. I conclude, Mr. Speaker. This is a catastrophic budget. This government has led us to the brink. We are in an economic slump the likes of which Canada has never seen before, thanks to the support of the Quebec Liberal members. I would urge those six dozen members, at least one dozen, to grasp the significance of their responsibilities and to act in such a way that this minister will not go on doing so much harm to Canadians and Quebecers.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to speak in favour of the motion before us tonight. The motion refers to the budget of November 12 and its amendment on December 18 and suggests that the budget should be withdrawn and replaced by a new budget. We in the New Democratic Party certainly support that and would look forward to a budget which would deal effectively with some of the economic challenges facing this country instead of the rather limp wrist budget we have before us presently.

I have also had an opportunity to peruse the amendment to the amendment which the Tories have put forward. We find it rather unnecessary, assuming that legislation is evaluated on a continuing basis. However, if in fact the Tories would like us to review it annually, we are quite in favour of the suggestion that profits taxes imposed on Canada's chartered banks should be restored to their marginal tax rate at the 1970 level. I think the point is that if this is what is required, we like the idea of this evaluation because we feel that perhaps after one year we will find that the excessive profits of 1970 were just that—they were excessive—and that they should be taxed even further. Or, perhaps the rate of 1970 will be recognized as an obscene and excessive rate. Perhaps it should be reduced even further, so we are certainly in favour of reviewing that at the end of the year.

As I watched the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in the House today and as I listened to his statements on television the last time, I was reminded of a French monarch of the fourteenth century who was also out of touch with his country and countrymen. When approached and asked what he would do about additional hospital beds which were required throughout France, his response was, "Perhaps we should ask patients to double up in the beds." That was his "progressive" response, and I suggest that what we are hearing from the Minister of Finance today is similar.

Mr. Nielsen: There is no more room.

M. Riis: With whom did the Minister of Finance consult regarding this budget? Who supports this budget? Opposition members certainly do not. The provincial governments and local governments certainly do not. Industry, business, labour, students, the elderly and home owners certainly do not. Even a number of backbenchers in the Liberal party have indicated on a number of occasions that they do not support it. Who on earth does? I think it has become clear that there is probably only one person who supports this budget. It was brought in without the knowledge of his colleagues. Yet, in spite of overwhelming opposition, he continues to drive ahead like a lemming leaping into the sea. He gives the impression that the people of Canada are wrong and that he alone is right.

This reminds me of another man who sits quite near him, namely, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). When the Prime Minister was out in British Columbia recently, he made it very clear that as the Prime Minister of the country he felt that British Columbia does not understand Canada. I agree with him. We in British Columbia do not understand that Canada we see today, a Canada of 1.5 million unemployed, a Canada where business bankruptcies have increased by 22 per cent over last year, where farm bankruptcies are up 18 per cent and where in the interval between August and December of last year 235,000 people lost their jobs. As we heard earlier today, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association says that another 100,000 people will lose their jobs. We do not understand that Canada. We do not understand a Canada where there are all kinds of discouragements to investment and expansion, a Canada which has policies now to strangle growth, development and progress, a country where productivity is decreasing, a country where Canadians see their purchasing power in decline year after year, where there is a deterioration in the distribution of income among Canadians and a country which has a current account balance which has fallen to record deficit levels. No, we do not understand that Canada.

The Economic Council of Canada outlined five goals for our Canadian economy. Those five goals in a sense provide a signal to the government. One goal is to bring about full employment. The council said that unemployment should not be over 3 per cent of the labour force. Another goal is price stability. Prices should rise at most by 2 per cent a year. With respect to economic growth, the council said that real production should increase by 5.5 per cent a year. We should strive for a viable balance of payments, and we should attempt an equitable distribution of rising incomes. Those are laudable goals. Unfortunately, those goals were set by the Economic Council of Canada back in 1964. Eighteen years of federal Liberal policy initiatives have seen none of these goals realized. None of these goals have even begun to appear to be fulfilled. That is the kind of success there has been. That is the kind of budgeting success we have seen for 18 consecutive years.

Oh, we have a great deal of gloom about us. There is a great deal to be disappointed about, but one sector is doing exceptionally well, and that is the chartered banks of Canada. In the fourth quarter of 1981, the profits of the chartered banks of Canada varied from 42 per cent higher than the previous year up to a high of 114 per cent. One has to ask—and I am certain Canadians are asking—why it is that the Tories are mute on this particular point. Why is it that the finance critic for the Tories never stands up and draws our attention to profits which must be recognized as being obscenely high? Why is it we never hear anything about this from hon. members opposite? One could speculate on a number of reasons. I wonder if this has anything to do with the fact that among those who made political contributions to the Liberals and the Conservatives, each of the five major banks in Canada contributed $50,000 last year. Each of the five major banks contributed $50,000 to the Liberal coffers and to the Conservative coffers. I wonder if that is one reason why we hear little or no comment from the Tories or the Liberals on this question.

Mr. Crosby: Have you checked Royal Bank stock on the stock market? If it is so great, why don't you buy it? Put your money where your mouth is.

Mr. Riis: While government spent $72 million on advertising the budget and the advantages of the budget, some of us had a different idea. We in the NDP decided that a task force on the economy and the budget would be appropriate. I am pleased to see that a few weeks later the Tories followed suit; we were pleased to provide the example. Our task force visited 11 different cities; we received 120 different briefs representing a wide spectrum of Canadian society and representing all of the critical economic sectors of our economy.

I should like to indicate why we did that, Mr. Speaker. It allowed us to hear, first-hand, from people throughout the country who were knowledgeable about their particular sector of the economy or about a particular region of Canada. They commented on the budget and the way that they felt the government was handling the economic challenges that faced it. Canadians were provided with a forum in which to speak out on the budget and to let parliamentarians know how they felt about the budget brought in on November 12.

Canadians were enabled to present positive solutions to some of our economic problems and positive, credible, proven suggestions and alternatives to some of the economic bottlenecks that face Canadians today. The people of Canada knew that at least some parliamentarians were prepared to listen to them. What became very obvious was the lack of any Liberal task force on the economy or the budget. Where were the Liberals? Why were they not out providing an opportunity for normal, everyday Canadians to present their views on the budget and on the economy? The Liberals were noticeable by their absence.

I should like to quote from a number of briefs that we received, Mr. Speaker. The Council of Forest Industries of B.C. indicated very clearly that all of their expansions had been placed on the back burner. As a result of this budget and considering the economic climate, $200 million worth of expansion projects will have to wait until there is some indication of economic leadership being provided. The council stated that 15,000 forest workers had been laid off in the last number of months and not only because of the slump in the lumber markets in the United States. We must recognize that 25 per cent of British Columbia lumber is for the domestic market and 85 per cent of the plywood is for the domestic market. It is in the plywood industry that the major lay-offs have occurred.

HUDAC of Canada says that the government has killed the housing industry. Indeed, it maintained that we have a housing crisis. It mocked the government's efforts to provide a subsidy for rental housing. There was a generous offer to provide 25,000 rental units. Perhaps that would be enough for the city of Vancouver, but it is not even a drop in the bucket compared to the housing demand across the country.

The Canadian organization of small business suggested that the present high interest rate policy is reducing the number of small businesses and believes that the only economic growth that is occurring in Canada is the merging of large corporations at the expense of the small companies.

The Energy Services Association of Alberta indicated that the federal government had no idea of the realities of western Canadian economic development. Its spokesman told us that they never see Liberals in western Canada unless they drop in for a quick press statement or a quick ribbon cutting and dash out again. We were told of small resource towns in northern and central Alberta that just a few months previously had been boom towns and now are virtual ghost towns.

The Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture stated that the number of farm bankruptcies will inevitably continue to increase. At a time when Canada should be expanding its agricultural potential, instead, the farming community finds itself in a struggle for survival.

The City of Thunder Bay outlined to our task force the situation where nearly 1,000 employees in one firm had been laid off in the last few weeks due to the lack of any long-term planning for the country or the province.

The Council of Student Unions from Memorial University in St. John's indicated that there is no incentive for young people to continue post-secondary education. There are few jobs in their own province and fewer jobs beyond Newfoundland. Again, there is little incentive to continue.

It became apparent from the task force hearings that an aura of uncertainty prevails across Canada today. There is an atmosphere of declining confidence in our future. Recent Gallup polls have supported the view of some people that Canadians feel that things are going to get worse and that our economy will not improve in the near future. There is almost an atmosphere of disillusionment about the future, an atmosphere of distress, bordering upon fear. There is a recognition of the unfairness of this particular budget which is leading to a level of frustration that I do not think has ever been demonstrated before in Canada.

Time and time again at the task force hearings individuals who are used to public speaking would be so filled with amazement, anger and frustration that half way through their presentation they would be shaking and they spoke of the economy and the budget. They would have to stop to collect their wits because of the level of their anger and frustration which sometimes bordered on outrage.

There is no question that today our country is well on the way to an economic recession. All the indications are that this will continue for some time. Canadians are suffering; Canadian spirits have been dashed by increasing unemployment.

In the submissions made by the Tories so far today, they have not said what they would do about the situation. Indeed, I suggest it is clear that the Tory record shows that they support Governor Bouey and his high interest rate policy.

Mr. Broadbent: They reappointed him.

Mr. Riis: They reappointed Governor Bouey. The Conservative Party supports more cuts.

As was indicated by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the NDP suggests that this is a time to stimulate the economy. It is not a time to spend more but to invest in the future of the country—in the infrastructure which is necessary to encourage the growth potential in western Canada in particular.

I recall with interest the remarks made on Wednesday, December 2, 1981, by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) when he said that the Liberal government has no intention of trying to stimulate the Canadian economy, even if the current recession lasts until next summer. It has no interest in stimulating the economy, but we have, Mr. Speaker, because we recognize that inflation is a serious problem that plagues us.

There are two ways to counter inflation. One is to strangle the economy and drive it to its knees. That is essentially what this government and the Tories propose, but we have a different suggestion. We would provide the stimulus and provide the initiative needed to develop productivity in this country. I do not suppose there is another country in the world that has the economic potential of Canada. We have the ability to create a much more productive economy than we have at the present time. That is our proposal, Mr. Speaker.

Let it never be said that we have stood in the House of Commons and have not come up with very positive suggestions as to ways and means around our economic difficulties. Productivity is our way to fight inflation. Surely when we look at 1.5 million people unemployed, we realize that that in itself is fuel for inflation, with individuals draining the economy or draining the finances of our government and providing little productivity. Surely that is the inflationary process which must be fought and fought well.

Let me look at what the government is doing in terms of encouraging productivity. It is maintaining high interest rates in spite of the action being taken by Japan and a number of western European countries which, quite to the contrary, are saying that now is the time to make some changes and to stimulate their economies back to higher levels of productivity. The Minister of Finance taxes living-out allowances. How will this encourage people to go to the resource projects of western Canada and in the far north? Is that an encouragement or incentive for tradesmen to move up into the resource camps or for those in the forest industry to move up into the logging camps and be taxed an extra $18, $25 or in the far north perhaps closer to $50 per day, on income which they do not receive? Is that the kind of incentive which improves productivity?

We notice with interest that the government eliminated the development in the Small Business Development Bond program. Now in a sense it is just a bit of intensive care for ailing businesses and farmers, but it does little to encourage development and expansion. We know that $50 million went into the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would hope—

Mr. Rae: Let us hear it for the loopholes.

Mr. Johnston: I hope that I am able to have the attention of the House.

An hon. Member: Only two glasses of water! Is that water in those glasses?

Mr. Johnston: I am sure I will have some difficulty with my friends in the NDP, but in any event I hope I have a certain amount of quiet and calm to make a sensible deliberation. I, for my part, have listened with great interest to a series of speakers.

Mr. Murphy: You were not here.

Mr. Johnston: I know I was not here, but I listened very intently in my office this afternoon to a series of speakers criticize the budget. I may have missed something, but I would ask my colleagues whether they heard any constructive criticism. I do not recall hearing any constructive criticism.

An hon. Member: You have a bad memory.

Mr. Johnston: I do not recall hearing any suggestions as to how the income tax system might be improved. The bombast and sometimes purple rhetoric mixed with the odd truth seems to have pretty much dominated the discussions and debate in the House this afternoon.

We have heard a great deal today about the Conservative touring budget committee. I gather that it listened to the complaints of taxpayers across Canada, but nothing we have heard indicates that those members learned anything from this experience. If there are any lessons to be learned, they are certainly keeping them to themselves. I must say that that is not true of my friends in the NDP. They have been consistent; they believe in throwing money at problems. The usual bin full of money and a big shovel seems to be the cornerstone of their policies.

Before I talk about some of the microaspects of the budget—

Mr. Rae: You are the microaspect.

Mr. Johnston: —particularly the amendments—

Mr. Rae: They do not come any smaller than you, Don.

Mr. Johnston: I am sorry that more of that wit is not used in developing policies. I am referring particularly to the amendments tabled on December 18—and I will come to those—but I should like to address what some might refer to as the big picture.

Mr. Broadbent: Leave Allan MacEachen out of it.

Mr. Rae: Is that the one with Roy Rogers and Dale Evans?

Mr. Broadbent: Is it on a 75 millimetre screen?

Mr. Johnston: I am sorry if I guffaw occasionally, but humour is about all they have to offer. The macroeconomic aspects of the budget appear to have either been forgotten or largely ignored in the wake of specific criticisms by specific groups on specific provisions of the budget which affect them. Mr. Speaker will recall from the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) that the budget had as its principal theme the principle of restraint.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this theme reflects the need for restraint, and I would like to quote the Minister of Finance who said in his budget speech before the House on November 12, and I quote:

The first is the need for restraint on the part of the government and restraint on the part of all Canadians. For our part, I believe we must reduce our deficit and our borrowing requirements substantially—even more than I proposed a year ago. This will take pressures off credit markets, ease interest rates and provide room for needy borrowers. The control of the money supply by the Bank of Canada is an essential element in our strategy to fight inflation, but it has to be supported by greater fiscal restraint.

While the increase in our energy revenues will make an important contribution to this objective, I have had to seek additional revenues from the personal and corporate tax, although there is tax relief or no tax increase in this budget for the vast majority of Canadians.

This is a point that should not be forgotten, Mr. Speaker.

Most fundamentally, we are committed to restraining the growth of our spending over the next few years to less than the growth of the economy as a whole while still exercising our responsibilities for leadership and for caring.

[English]

In the days, weeks and now months following the budget, I have yet to meet one businessman who disagrees with the macroeconomic thrust of the budget.

Mr. Fulton: Come to Winnipeg.

Mr. Johnston: Unless the problem of inflation is tackled as indicated in the speech of the Minsiter of Finance on November 12, unless inflation is controlled, any budget would be meaningless.

I am very pleased to see that the financial critic of the Conservative Party is present in the House this evening, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). In fact, he reinforced the validity of that position in his speech this afternoon, albeit inadvertently, namely, the objective to control inflation. He told the House this afternoon the story of a businessman he met during his budget committee travels throughout the country, to which I referred a moment ago and about which we have heard so much in the House today. The businessman allegedly said to the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre that he was not concerned about the budget, that he had no income tax to pay, that apparently interest rates had brought his building business to a stop, and that he was losing money.

The very point of the macroeconomic stance of the budget, namely, to control inflation and to reduce interest rates, is the thrust of the budget. If inflation is controlled, interest rates will fall. I suggest to the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre that his friend, the businessman, will then have taxable income and be glad of it. Of course, if he is like the rest of us, once he has taxable income he will start complaining about the taxes he will have to pay.

In the absence of this macroeconomic stance, which I have described very briefly and which is so well described in the budget speech, more and more businessmen are bound to become unconcerned about taxes as they close their doors and join the list of the unemployed, and that will be solely because of inflation. Inflation is the villain that is being stalked by this budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Do not smile now.

An hon. Member: When did it happen?

Mr. Johnston: It is hard to resist smiling at my friends in the NDP, Mr. Speaker. But it is even easier for me to laugh at their policies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: I ask you what sensible, thoughtful Canadian—

Mr. Broadbent: Would vote Liberal?

Mr. Johnston: —present company on that side of the House excluded—could conceivably disagree with that macroeconomic stance in today's economic plight.

Mr. Rae: Let's hear it from the heart.

Mr. Johnston: Let me talk for a moment about the tax measures themselves. Again, in a macro sense—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: As I stated in fact during my earlier speech on the budget on November 16, I am supportive of the over-all thrust of the tax measures in that macro sense, particularly the lowering of marginal rates to not more than 50 per cent.

An hon. Member: Especially for the rich.

Mr. Johnston: That, for me—

Mr. Rae: Yes, for you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Tell us about those Liberals, Don.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, if these jackals will hear me out, I will state again that there is much support, even probably from socialist economists.

An hon. Member: Who?

An hon. Member: I didn't know there were any.

Mr. Johnston: —for the view that a maximum rate of 50 per cent will have the effect of reducing efforts by taxpayers, as it has in the United States for many years, to circumvent the law and to take advantage of the wide variety of tax avoidance devices.

I also believe in the reduction of those tax shelters which have been part of our system for many years, the simplification of the statute, and I might say that in taking that position I am in no way critical of Canadians who have used tax shelters in the past and continue to use them—

An hon. Member: You used to advise people about them.

Mr. Johnston: —or to exploit what my friend from Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) refers to as loopholes. This is not a question of morality.

An hon. Member: It is immorality.

Mr. Johnston: But there is a very real question of productivity. I am talking about productivity of brains and productivity of money. Because of the high marginal rates that we have had in this country combined with specific tax shelters and combined with the loopholes, as defined by my friend from Broadview-Greenwood, too many intelligent Canadians have devoted their energies and creativity to paper transactions, paper transactions which are designed to avoid taxation rather than engaging in productive transactions which are there to produce wealth and produce jobs. That is part of the thrust of this budget, and a very important part. I suggest to you that the maximum rate of 50 per cent will go a long way to achieving that objective.

I might say that I have had some experience in the area of taxation in the past.

Mr. Broadbent: Tell us about the Prime Minister.

Mr. Johnston: Some, I might say, have even accused me of selling out, as they say, because I have not, they claim, defended principles which I am alleged to have defended in the past. I deny that categorically, Mr. Speaker. I have always been supportive of a more comprehensive tax base, simplification of the law, improvement of its administration and, as I said, a reduction of the marginal rate to 50 per cent, with a number of other matters. I will certainly continue to support those principles and improvements within the over-all framework to approach some day the kind of system that was described by the Carter commission, the system the commissioners concluded that Canadians want. I would like to quote from the commissioners' report as follows:

> A tax system can be judged from different points of view. Is the system fair?

Mr. Broadbent: Your government gutted that report.

Mr. Johnston: I shall continue:

> Does it contribute as much as possible to the growth and stability of the economy? Are the rights and liberty of the individual protected? Does it help strengthen the federation? These questions reflect not only the many facets of taxation but also what we believe to be the principal objectives that Canadians wish to realize through their tax system.

An hon. Member: What did Edgar Benson do with that anyway?

Mr. Johnston: Listen carefully, my friends.

Mr. Broadbent: Your party gutted that.

Mr. Rae: Are you reading from Xavier Hollander or somebody else?

Mr. Johnston: The paragraph concludes:

> They want equity, more goods and services, full employment without inflation, a free society and a strong, independent federation.

That is the kind of system that Canadians want. I suggest to you that the over-all thrust of this budget and of its provisions are completely compatible with those objectives. Canadians want equity, they want more goods and services and they want more employment without inflation and, as I said a few moments ago, that problem has been addressed head on in this budget.

Since budget day—

Mr. Broadbent: Things have got worse.

Mr. Johnston: —I, and others, have received representations from many people—

Mr. Rae: Richard Gwynn.

Mr. Johnston: —in my riding and from other parts of the country of concern about the budget and the impact that it might have on their particular circumstance.

Mr. Rae: We got some letters too.

Mr. Johnston: I, perhaps, received more than my share because I represent a riding which has a complete cross-section of business interests, people from all walks of life—

Mr. Lewis: Used to represent.

Mr. Johnston: —many of whom saw themselves adversely affected by the budget.

Mr. Broadbent: Let us hear it for Westmount.

Mr. Johnston: Saint-Henri-Westmount, I might remind the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: They don't know much about Quebec.

Mr. Johnston: Perhaps because of my interests in the area, I received representations from former clients, professional colleagues, associates and so on from across Canada. I also met with business groups in a number of Canadian cities.

Mr. Lewis: All favourable?

Mr. Johnston: I received quantities of material—

An hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Johnston: —individual letters and thoughtful briefs.

Mr. Keeper: What about Nassau and Maui?

Mr. Johnston: —such as that prepared by the joint committee of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. From that review it seemed to me there were three areas—

Mr. Crosby: Think about the people, never mind about the Bar association.

Mr. Johnston: There are three general categories which these various representations addressed. Specifically, they addressed the retrospective application of certain provisions claiming that there were not adequate transitional provisions, the issue of the restriction on interest deductibility, some cash flow problems—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: —which arose where tax liabilities existed without there being cash receipts available to discharge those obligations. Any of you who paid any attention to the amendments tabled in the House by the Minister of Finance on December 18 will realize how responsive the minister was to all serious representations.

An hon. Member: All serious ones?

An hon. Member: If you step on a dog, it might bite.

Mr. Johnston: Hon. members might have a look at the document, which many of you clearly have not, judging by the comments I have heard here today. The document is entitled "Transitional arrangements and adjustments relating to the tax measures of the budget".

I have these changes here with me this evening. I will not take the time of the House to repeat what should already have been considered by members prepared to criticize the budget. In fact, I would point out that extensive transitional provisions were introduced in response to that first area of representation to which I made reference. Major adjustments were made in the area of the interest restriction, and a series of changes were also set forth in this document to address the cash flow issue. Yet, is it not true that we still hear accusations of inflexibility?

[Translation]

And in fact, most of the opposition's comments fail to reflect any awareness of the changes that were made, as I just pointed out, on December 18 by the Minister of Finance. In fact, when he brought down his budget, the minister said that he would be willing to refer some of the measures to a committee of the House, as appropriate. Now that is flexibility, in my view, and demonstrates the willingness of the minister and the government to examine all these specific measures that are of special interest to certain Canadians and to certain sectors of our economy and our society.

● (2140)

[English]

This, Mr. Speaker, brings me to the question of budget process. I know this was mentioned during today's debate. The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) touched upon the subject this evening. It has been discussed at some length since the budget was tabled November 12, and I note that my colleague, the Minister of Finance, when he addressed the Canadian Club in Toronto yesterday stated: "I will have more to say in the near future not only about the impact of the tax measures, but also about possible improvements to the process of budget formulation".

Mr. Rose: So will the people of Canada.

Mr. Johnston: Now, by referring certain matters to committee as the minister has indicated he may do, certainly an important step will be taken in the evolution of that process.

The Minister of Finance produced this budget in the tradition of budget secrecy, and as independent observers have often said, a tradition is harder to kill than a law.

An hon. Member: Tell us about secrecy, Paul.

Mr. Johnston: Back in the mid-1970s, Mr. Speaker, this issue of budget secrecy was raised. I was then in private practice, and a committee was struck by the Canadian Tax Foundation to deal with the tax legislative process.

An hon. Member: You should have kept the whole budget secret.

Mr. Johnston: A number of recommendations were made, and the problem of budgetary process is well described in that report. Mr. Speaker, are you signalling me that my time is up?

An hon. Member: A long time ago, we hope.

Mr. Johnston: Do I have the indulgence of the House to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent, and the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, surely I have the greatest challenge of all the members who have participated in this debate, that of recording in a few minutes all the difficulties, deficiencies and defects of this budget. I cannot do that, so let me just take the time to credit the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) for providing to the Canadian people a process by which they can register their complaints and concerns about the budget through our special committee on the budget and the economy. I am very proud to have been a member of that committee. What we heard and now know is that the budget is based on a myth, a fiction, based on the idea that there is a class of people in Canada who, if they are taxed properly, will save the working people of Canada and will contribute to the economy in such a way that their taxes will be reduced.

We know that is not true. We found that out when the Canadian Trades Council and the Quebec Federation of Labour came before our committee and said that you are taxing the workers in this budget, not the rich. You are reaching out to the seven million Canadians participating in health benefit plans. You are taxing the 13 million people who participate in life insurance plans. The myth that the budget taxes the rich is false, and we found it to be false.

Mr. Broadbent: Faster, faster.

Mr. Crosby: That has given us the courage to come to the House and make that challenge that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is exposed in his budget, he stands before us naked—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosby: —by his own words. In 1980 he came before the House and said in his budget speech, with respect to the taxation system in Canada, that on the whole our tax system is one of the best in the world. Canada's individual and corporate taxes are lower than in many industrial countries, including the United States. A year later, on November 12, he came before this same House and said that many Canadians find our tax system unfair, and I agree with them. That is what he told the House but he cannot tell that to the people of Canada because—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Crosby: The myth is defeated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 58(9). The question is on the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). All those in favour of the motion, please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed, please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Miss Carney), which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

It being 10.30 p.m., I do now leave the chair under the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.30 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, January 27, 1982

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DANGEROUS SUSPECT AT LARGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, Randy Ludlow has been declared to be a danger to the public by two psychiatrists and one clinical psychologist. He is known to have associated with Clifford Olson for four months last summer. His appearance resembles the composite published of a suspected accomplice of Olson. He was due to stand trial yesterday on another charge, but never appeared. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Solicitor General explain to this House why the justice system allows a dangerous suspect such as this to walk the streets.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—SUPPORT FOR FREEDOM OF PEOPLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That this House express its profound regret at the Prime Minister's insensate comments regarding the imposition of martial law in Poland, remarks that have been widely used by the communist regime to support its position; that this House indicate to the people of Poland and to its government that Canada supports greater freedom in Poland, not less; that Canada supports the legitimate aspirations expressed by millions of Poles, through Solidarity, for greater democracy and a government responsible to Poles themselves, and that Canada opposes and will oppose in all possible ways the suppression of the Polish people by a government imposed by Moscow.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

EXEMPTION SUGGESTED FOR RETAIL FOOD SECTOR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to commend the government for wisely not obliging the Canadian beef industry to participate in the forced metric conversion program. Allowing cattlemen to continue to buy and sell under the imperial system will protect our valuable trade with the United States and eliminate weights and measures confusion in the market place. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That the government reconsider its forced metric conversion program in 1982 and extend the same exemption it granted to the beef industry to the retail food sector.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE MEASURES CONCERNING LAND, INDUSTRIAL PARK, AND PROFITABILITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Considering that since the federal government has failed to take any action, more than 30 mayors of municipalities around Mirabel have decided to take steps in order to get a decision on the airport area problem, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the government take immediate action to deal with the problems of unused farmland, the industrial park scandal and the viability of the airport itself.

S.O. 43

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE BUDGET

WITHDRAWAL URGED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, thousands of workers of all ages are sad, depressed, and frustrated. They were working hard at their jobs to build a good country and a heritage for their wives and children when suddenly, right out of the blue, on November 12, 1981, the Minister of Finance blasted their dreams and hopes—no more dental care for their wives and kids, no more trips each year on passes supplied by their company, no more chances to buy shares and become an employer, no more company homes at reasonable rentals, no more of anything but taxes, taxes, taxes. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That this House urges the Minister of Finance to put a ray of sunshine back into the lives of these workers by immediately packing up his ill-begotten budget and vanishing into oblivion.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MEDICAL CARE

EXTRA BILLING IN SASKATCHEWAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, in a motion presented yesterday the New Democratic Party called for the government to outlaw extra billing in Alberta, to set up an inquiry to present proposals for the enforcement of national standards for health care, and to withdraw the finance minister's proposals for cutbacks in federal transfer payments to the provinces. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House call on the New Democratic Party to cleanse itself before telling others to clean up their act by calling on their Saskatchewan counterparts to ban extra billing in that NDP province.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON AUTOMOBILE DEALERSHIPS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. As a result of the November budget, owners and employees of automobile dealerships across the country are beginning to experience severe financial difficulty. The dealers are losing revenue because of a drop in their leasing business. Employees receiving financial assistance from their employers for the lease of a car will now be taxed on almost the entire monthly leasing charge, and dealership employees provided with a demonstrator car to advertise their product will now be taxed on the use of the vehicle. In light of the fact that this industry is already suffering the financial woes of low sales due to high interest rates I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Finance make an immediate change to his budget and cancel these punitive measures which are hurting the people involved.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

CALL FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the government's policy of enticing the provinces with cushy financial deals into buying CANDU reactors for the production of electricity for export to the United States will result in unnecessary health, safety and environmental dangers for all Canadians—and perhaps some Americans as well—and whereas the government secrecy concerning financing agreements being offered to potential CANDU reactor customers abroad also shows a complete disregard for the rights of the Canadian electorate to know, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House call for an independent public inquiry into the health and safety aspects of the Canadian nuclear industry, as well as to examine the squandering of billions of taxpayers' dollars by the government in a hopeless attempt to prop up this languishing loser.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

TRANSFER OF FEDERAL SALES TAX TO WHOLESALE LEVEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, the budget proposes to move federal sales tax from the manufacturing to the wholesale level. In addition to generating huge amounts of additional revenue for the government and causing retail prices to increase, this is an example of several measures in the budget that are bringing about major tax reforms without prior warning. Therefore I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the government refer this topic to committee for proper consideration by everybody involved so that the full impact of this tax change can be fully discussed before the measure is finally implemented.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Because it is inconsistent for the Government of Canada to enshrine cherished human and political rights in our new Constitution and to be indifferent to violations of human and national rights of the people in Poland and generally in eastern Europe, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the Prime Minister condemn the military junta in Poland for violating human rights in complete disregard of the provisions of the Helsinki agreement and for the suppression of the Solidarity trade union.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PAYMENT OF OUTSTANDING ACCOUNTS TO SMALL BUSINESSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity for small businesses in Canada. Small businesses are experiencing a growing problem of collecting accounts receivable, and one of the worst offenders when it comes to slow payment is the federal government. Payment for goods and services sold to the federal government is often not received for three, four or more months and, to add insult to injury, no interest is paid on accounts outstanding more than 30 days. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson):

That this House direct the Minister of Supply and Services to remedy this burden the federal government is placing on Canada's small businesses.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING PENSIONERS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance concerning the tax measures which will affect senior Canadians who are receiving retirement income. The minister will remove the $1,000 exemption for those pensioners who receive other income and contribute to registered retirement savings plans. Many of these pensioners have retired from the armed forces, the police, and the public service, with very modest pensions.

Where is the justice in taxing senior citizens who are trying to provide for their old age? Will he explain how taxing a Canadian who must supplement his or her pension income and postpone real retirement can result in more equity in the tax system? Why should Parliament punish senior Canadians who want to maintain their independence? Do we really need that kind of revenue?

● (1415)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has made a very stirring appeal to consider that particular case of the deduction that is available for retired persons. The main objective of that change in the budget proposal was to eliminate that deduction for persons who are not retired. I will certainly listen to the hon. member's representations very carefully when we have those matters in the committee of the Whole.

TAXPAYER STATISTICS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, we are pleased with the conciliatory tone of the Minister of Finance, but I wish he would promise here and now to make a change in that particular provision. Senior Canadians are the ones who are affected.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: I want to tell the minister also that it was not retired business executives who came to our special committee with this concern, it was the Consumers Association of Canada. It is the little man who can be hurt by this provision. That is what we are concerned with, Madam Speaker.

We want to know about the minister's statistics. The minister has said in this House that 12 million Canadians will pay less tax but seven million Canadians will pay tax on health plans. Whose statistics are right? The statistics of the Canadian Labour Congress, or the statistics of the minister? I would like the minister to confirm the statistics and tell us who will pay more taxes.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, all the facts are stated in the tables that were presented with the budget. They show that almost 12 million Canadians, as a result of the budget, will pay less tax in 1982 than in 1981, that about 3.5 million Canadians will pay about the same level of taxes, and that about 800,000 Canadian taxpayers will pay more taxes. Those are the statistics that are in the tax tables. They are public knowledge. If the Canadian Labour Congress and other bodies can contest these statistics, then I will examine their contestations. However, I believe the statistics to be accurate and to reflect the actual situation.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They have already contested them.

MINISTER'S BUDGETARY STATEMENTS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, it is very difficult for any Member of Parliament to argue with the minister's statistics, but Canadians will know in ensuing tax years whether more Canadians or fewer Canadians will be paying tax, and that will be the test.

However, I want to know in a more general way how the minister can explain some items in the budget. In the minister's 1980 budget speech he said that Canada had one of the best tax systems in the world. He said that in 1980.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: Last year, 1981, the minister said that many Canadians find the tax system unfair, and he agrees with them. Who are those Canadians? Are they the backbenchers in the Liberal Party who thought the new tax measures were needed?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid that we did not get the question. I would like the hon. member to repeat his question, but only his question.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, it is difficult to phrase a question when we have contradictory remarks in two budgets. I will simply ask the minister which remark is true?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is nothing contradictory, in my mind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: It seems to me that even the best can be improved. I stated that our system was among the best. It is among the best, but it still can be improved, and that is what I was attempting to do.

QUERY RESPECTING LIFE INSURANCE POLICYHOLDERS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. One of the areas in which the minister's November budget created unnecessary financial hardship for Canadians is the area dealing with life insurance. Could the minister tell the House why the approximately nine million low and middle-income policyholders who have life insurance are now being harassed by the government? Why are they being discouraged from protecting their families and their own security in retirement? Why are they being punished by being asked to pay tax on their policies before they receive any cash benefit whatever?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am pleased the hon. member raised that question because it gives me an opportunity to straighten the record. The fact is that no existing policyholder in any part of Canada is affected by the budget provisions of November 12. Let me repeat that: no existing policyholders. That is the fact. I hope that the message gets out. I can assure the hon. member that no existing policyholder is harassed, punished, affected, or impacted by taxes because all of them, all of the existing policyholders, are not touched whatever. I would like that to be put out.

Mr. Pinard: Read the budget.

• (1420)

REQUEST THAT PROVISIONS BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I am sure the minister is aware his predecessor brought in something similar and withdrew it. I hope the minister will decide to withdraw entirely any tax on the life insurance industry, RRSPs and the like, because no one—as a life insurance agent I can emphasize this—in their right minds would be investing in any form of life insurance because of high interest rates available in other forms.

Will the minister withdraw anything and everything he has agreed to or considered doing regarding life insurance, annuities, or anything else?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Well, Madam Speaker, as long as the hon. member is now satisfied there is no impact whatsoever on existing policyholders, then I believe we have made some progress.

The hon. member has referred to the general provisions affecting the life insurance industry, and I believe his question deserves a careful answer. The first point is that I suggested on December 18 that, subject to appropriate parliamentary arrangements, I was prepared to send that question to a standing committee for examination. Second, I have undertaken through my officials to have, and indeed already have had consultations, with the insurance industry, and it is my firm objective to reach some conclusions with them which hopefully would meet both their difficulties and my concerns as Minister of Finance.

These meetings have taken place. Just this week I had a discussion with one of the leaders of the industry whose view was that it might be possible to reach a mutually satisfactory conclusion. So there are two avenues open to the hon. member to reflect upon, instead of asking me to withdraw the important changes which are to the benefit of the people of Canada.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We are seeing another retreat from Moscow.

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF UNITED STATES INTEREST RATES ON CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Today in the United States, analysts, in response to President Reagan's State of the Union Address last night, are now saying interest rates there are going to go up. I ask the minister, should this occur, will he on behalf of the Government of Canada assure the people of Canada that we will not pursue that disastrous economic policy here?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all the hon. member's question is hypothetical, and I assure him it is not my intention to adopt any disastrous economic policies.

An hon. Member: Other than the one you have.

Mr. MacEachen: We have expressed more than once our concern about the interest rate policy being pursued in the United States. On the occasion of the Summit in Ottawa last summer all the representatives drew similar concerns to the attention of the United States. They have been restated since that time, but it seems to me that we cannot predict what will happen in the United States except I did, on Monday in Toronto, express my concern about that possibility in certain circumstances in the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I did not ask the minister to predict what would happen in the United States; I just asked him to make for once an unequivocal assertion that if interest rates go up in the United States, as many analysts now say they will as a result of President Reagan's address last night, the Government of Canada will not follow that policy. It is pretty straightforward. Surely even the minister could respond to that.

However, I would like to move to a different aspect of the government's policy.

● (1425)

THE BUDGET

IMPACT OF CHANGES ON INCOME TAX PAYERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The minister was busy, in his speech yesterday, boasting about the number of Canadians who were going to get a tax cut. He did not tell us which Canadians, or how much. Will the minister confirm that the average working Canadian will receive a tax cut of about $4 a week, but that as a result of the reduction of the tax rate in the top two income categories, a Canadian who earns $250,000 a year will get an actual reduction of $400 a week from this government? If that is so, is that his concept of Liberal justice for the people of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker. I could not confirm these false statistics used by the hon. member for Oshawa. Yesterday I laid on the record the impact of these tax changes which were made in the budget, such as tax indexing, marginal rate, and so on. The impact of that upon the average industrial wage of $22,000—

Mr. Broadbent: $4 a week!

Mr. MacEachen: —in a one-wage-earner family of four members will be a tax cut of $650—

Mr. Wilson: What about energy, Allan?

Mr. MacEachen: —and that is not bad.

Mr. Broadbent: It is not bad for some, but when the government gives ten times that amount to people who are millionaires, at least some people in this country think that is a little unjust, whatever the Liberal Party may think.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON DEFICIT FINANCING

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My last question goes to the Prime Minister, because both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have said this week that further government investment in job-creation programs at this time would not be desirable because of the impact such investment would have on the deficit. During the last election campaign the Prime Minister said that "dealing with the deficit must not be at the expense of lost jobs at a time when the economy is slowing down".

Considering that our current ratio of deficit to the gross national product is the same now as it was 12 years ago, how can he square his election promise that deficit concern would be subordinate to job creation with the government policy as expressed in the last two days in the House, which policy means, in effect, that no matter how many are unemployed in Canada, the government has no intention of creating some job investment programs which would put Canadians back to work?

An hon. Member: Oh, you'd be surprised.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Oshawa is falling into his usual habit of putting up straw men and then knocking them down.

Mr. Broadbent: I'm talking about one!

Mr. Trudeau: He is ascribing positions to the government which it never took, nor did the Minister of Finance, nor did I. Concerning the priority of not solving our problems on the backs of the workers, that election promise still stands. When the hon. member quotes us as saying that we will not invest in jobs, surely he is fabricating a statement—

Mr. Broadbent: Except that's not what the quotation was. Listen to the quotation.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, I will listen to the quotation. Let us hear it again.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's West.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, let us hear the quotation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. I thought the Right Hon. Prime Minister had finished his answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crombie: Same rules for everybody, eh?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I was in the process of indicating the moneys which we are and will be spending to create jobs. I was interrupted by the Leader of the New Democratic Party saying that, in some sense, he wanted to repeat the quotation. I was prepared to accede to him; but he does not want to take that opportunity. Let me tell him that—

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, I do!

Mr. Trudeau: —even in the budget, even in the white paper which we tabled at the time of the budget, even in the various speeches of the various ministers, we have indicated that literally hundreds of millions of dollars will be spent of federal budget money in order to create jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Just for western transportation alone, $1,350 million will be spent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Double-track!

Mr. Trudeau: To help rehabilitate the textile, clothing and shoe industries—

Mr. Epp: Out west?

Mr. Trudeau: —some $350 million will be spent. To assist the pulp, paper and wood industry and rehabilitate the ship-building industry, some $350 million will be spent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The figures can go on. I know that this is not the time to enumerate them. But how can the hon. member say that we are not spending any money to create jobs? This is pure invention of his twisted mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: On a further and brief supplementary, the hon. member for Oshawa.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN COMMITMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, just in case the Prime Minister is interested in the truth, and I want to quote him carefully, because I am quoting him accurately, and I hope he will reply to the substance of the question, during the last election campaign he said that "dealing with the deficit must not be at the expense of lost jobs at a time when the economy is slowing down". The Prime Minister is nodding affirmatively. He agrees with that quotation. The other day, in debate, in the House—

Some hon. Members: Question, question!

Mr. Broadbent: —the Prime Minister, and then the Minister of Finance, in response to questions, indicated that the current level of deficit was too high for more spending to take place in job creation.

My question to the Prime Minister is straightforward. Since he made this comment and promise in the 1980 election, and since it is clear, as the Minister of Finance indicated in his speech in Toronto on Monday, that unemployment is following from this—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize that I permitted an additional question, but I asked him to be brief, and I would like him to be just that.

Mr. Broadbent: I simply wanted to be clearly understood, because I want the Prime Minister to have a fair chance.

By refusing to spend more because it will increase the deficit, is the Prime Minister not reneging on a commitment that he made in the 1980 election campaign when he said that he—

Some hon. Members: Order. Order!

Madam Speaker: Order.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the quotation from the campaign was to the effect that we would not reduce the deficit or we would not solve our budgetary problems by taking away or destroying jobs. That is the effect of the quote which he just read. I repeated to the hon. member the other day that when we are budgeting for more than a $10 billion deficit, it is obvious that we are not concerned with balancing the budget as much as we are concerned with creating opportunity for investment and workers. That is why there are literally, once again, billions of dollars which are planned for spending by various departments to create jobs and stimulate economic growth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The only recourse that the Leader of the New Democratic Party can take is to say to spend more. We can say we would spend more and put the money on paper, but right now there are hundreds of billions of unspent dollars which are going to be spent in the plans that have been laid before Parliament.

● (1430)

An hon. Member: Hundreds of billions?

Mr. Trudeau: Let us spend that money and then, if the hon. member wants to say more, we can look at it again.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I would like to move from the world of fantasy land to the world of Poland.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: On Monday when the Prime Minister was asked about Poland and his earlier approval of the actions of the Polish government, he said, and I quote from Monday's Hansard:

I do not believe that in advance we can or should condemn the use of troops by any of our friends—

Apparently the Polish government is his friend.

The worse result in this case would have been intervention by the Soviet Union.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has since said the Soviet Union has intervened:

—once again we must ask ourselves if there was a better scenario.

Have the Prime Minister and his government, who have now had 46 days to decide this, yet decided whether there was a better scenario than the imposition of martial law and the crushing of human rights in Poland and doing away with the rights of the trade union, Solidarity? Has that been decided, or what is the Prime Minister going to tell the world when he appears on the television program Friday or Saturday night? Was that the best scenario, or was there an even better scenario?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have asked this question of various people, including the representative of the Polish Congress that I met the other day. I asked the hon. member what was his scenario. I have indicated that if the alternative was Soviet invasion, it was better to have martial law if that prevented Soviet invasion. My statement still stands. It is hypothetical. No one knows if the Soviets would have invaded or not.

One does know that the objective of all the western nations for the past two years has been to warn the Soviet Union against invasion of Poland, and against military occupation of that country. To that extent we have succeeded in preventing that worse scenario. I would like to hear the hon. member say that he would prefer to see Soviet troops occupying Poland and that that would be better for the Polish people than to have the Polish people themselves attempt to prevent that eventuality.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONDEMN IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has confirmed that what happened in Poland was the best scenario, in his opinion. In my opinion it was the worst scenario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: There was no threat of invasion by the U.S.S.R. The government's position is confused and contradictory. Apparently the Secretary of State for External Affairs has more backbone than the Prime Minister, who is positively pusillanimous in connection with Poland. My question to the Prime Minister is this. Last Monday the Prime Minister said, and I again quote from Hansard:

I will have to see in what way that martial law proceeds—

He was still not prepared to condemn martial law. Later that afternoon he met with the Canadian Polish Congress and said martial law should be relaxed. What is now the position—

An hon. Member: What is yours?

Mr. Crosbie: Our position is that we are totally opposed to martial law in Poland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: We think this government should represent Canadians and condemn it, and not approve it as the Prime Minister did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is going beyond what is permissible during a question. I cannot be any more lenient with him if he does not put his question in five words, and not more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Will the Prime Minister now condemn the imposition of martial law and send a stern diplomatic note to the U.S.S.R. and to Poland opposing any continuation of martial law?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Let's have a five-word answer.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think it is clear that the hon. member's position is indefensible, even from the point of view of the Polish people. I quote him. The hon. member for St. John's West said that in his opinion what was happening in Poland was the worst scenario. I do not believe that. I believe the worst scenario would have been for the Soviet army with its tanks to have marched into Poland and crushed the Polish people. That, I think, would have been worse.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FUTURE OF INCENTIVE PROGRAMS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Now that the Prime Minister has announced the intended dismantling of DREE so there will no longer be a department of government concerned solely with regional economic development in Canada, will the minister tell the House whether, under his new department, the regional development incentives, formerly administered by DREE, will be available all across Canada, or will they be restricted to certain geographic areas?

• (1440)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, what is happening is not in any way a downgrading or downplaying of the efforts and focus of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. At the present time, and until there is appropriate legislation, the department continues to offer its help and incentive in specific areas across Canada.

I anticipate that once the activities of DREE and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are integrated there will not be any lesser focus on the regional imperatives followed by DREE. If anything, there will be an enhancement of that in the interest of those areas and therefore of the entire country.

PAYMENT OF INCENTIVE GRANTS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, it is difficult to see how the enhancement will take place when the Prime Minister announces that there will be no more money. Is it the intention of the minister to pay development incentive grants to Canadian-owned firms only?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, FIRA will follow the law in this regard to offer grants to those who will offer net economic benefits to the less advantaged regions of the country. That is the purpose, to enhance economic activity and permanent job creation in less advantaged areas of our country. This is what we are doing now and will continue doing, and our intention is to do it in a more effective and focused manner than before.

MANPOWER

FORECASTED SHORTAGE OF SKILLED WORKERS IN ONTARIO

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister is probably aware of a report from the Ontario government, the Manpower Commission, which forecast that Ontario faces a shortage of between 38,000 and 48,000 highly skilled workers in the next five years. Could the minister indicate what our government is prepared to do to prevent this provincial forecast and overcome this critical shortage?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the report that was prepared for the Ontario Manpower Commission simply enforces findings that were put forth by the parliamentary task force that was chaired by our colleague, the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. It simply indicates to us that it is a major priority, and in response to that task force and other representations we put forward in the first week of January a proposal for a new national training program which would shift the priority of federal support into those areas where the skill shortages are greatest. At the same time, the proposal is to provide assistance to modernize the training institutions and the industrial training programs across Canada.

We believe very strongly that it is important to establish a national set of priorities so that we can address the problem not just in Ontario but across the country. We think that is one of the most effective ways to meet both the demand for skilled labour and also to provide a major stimulus for economic growth in Canada.

INDUSTRY

EMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DID NOT ESTABLISH SHIPBUILDING POLICY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion. My question concerns an announcement made yesterday by Gulf Canada that a contract had been signed with Japanese shipyards for the construction of an icebreaker to be used in the Canadian Arctic. When the minister appeared before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, he promised to set up a program for the purpose of keeping shipbuilding projects in Canada. According to our calculations, shipping companies that have had ships built outside the country during the last two years have made Canadian workers lose 10,000 person-years. Could the minister inform us whether our figures are correct and could he also tell us why the government has as yet failed to develop an effective marine industry policy and why it has actually created more jobs in Japan than in Canada at a time when many workers in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia need these jobs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I shall be glad to check the figures provided by my hon. colleague as well as the facts on the contract that Gulf Canada is said to have signed with Japanese shipbuilders. I remember that not long ago, Gulf Canada announced it was giving out contracts for the construction of ships in Canadian dockyards, and the hon. member may recall that last August I announced a new government policy that would be aimed at giving Canadian industries and workers a chance to compete on an equal basis for participation in the economic and industrial spin-offs of our megaprojects. This policy is being implemented and we have almost finished work on a policy to stimulate shipbuilding in Canada by Canadian industries. I feel that we are making considerable progress and that this will continue.

[English]

CONSTRUCTION OF VESSELS IN CANADA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, the fact of the matter is that month after month, in spite of the minister's announcements and good intentions, we see ship after ship and project after project going offshore. Unfortunately, we have not seen good delivery.

Could the minister give us some indication when ships will be built in Canada, particularly in the province of Quebec where there is talk about shutting down a major shipyard because they need a project such as the one being built in Japan?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I said just before Christmas, Gulf is giving contracts to Canadian shipyards to build ships for its offshore activity. We have recently given substantial assistance to companies such as Burrard Yarrows in British Columbia, Saint John Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company in New Brunswick, and the Halifax shipyard in Halifax, Nova Scotia, to extend their facilities to enable them to be more competitive and to build more of the vessels for offshore and world activities. We intend to continue doing that with this effort buttressed by our recently announced program to ensure on a full, fair and competitive basis, industrial spin-offs from our megaprojects to companies in Canada and Canadian workers. I think we are making a substantial effort, and we will be adding to that effort for workers and shipyards in every part of our country.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

FREEDOM OF SUSPECTED ACCOMPLICE OF CLIFFORD OLSON

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the Clifford Olson case. As I mentioned in a motion under Standing Order 43, a known suspected accomplice is loose on the streets. On October 16 the Solicitor General told my colleague from Central Nova that he was fully aware of the circumstances of the Olson case. I have known for some time that this suspected accomplice was about, and immediately reported it to the authorities.

I would now ask the minister, without giving any disclaimers about provincial responsibility, and knowing full well that he cannot be involved in the day to day investigation, if he is now fully informed about the Olson case and what action he has taken about the suspected accomplice.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am not responsible for the laying of charges, particularly in offences that are under the Criminal Code to be administered under the responsibility of the Crown in the provinces. The hon. member mentioned, in his motion under Standing Order 43, that there were outstanding charges against Mr. Ludlow. I do not think the hon. member should invite me to make statements that might prejudice a fair trial.

INQUIRY INTO MANDATORY SUPERVISION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, for some time now the Solicitor General has been conducting an inquiry into the effectiveness of mandatory supervision. In light of the new cause for concern across Canada due to the Olson case about the effectiveness of the entire justice system, would the Solicitor General first of all tell us if he has completed his inquiry into the effectiveness of mandatory supervision and, in light of the concern of Canadians, will he now extend that inquiry into a full public and independent inquiry into the effectiveness of the entire justice system?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that at the time of the offences which were the subject of the conviction of Clifford Olson, he was not under mandatory supervision. His warrant had expired and he was a free man.

As to the question of the study under way on mandatory supervision, that study has been completed and I have consulted with the interested members of the private sector, the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, and many other groups. I have their views, and I am planning to go to cabinet shortly with proposals for change.

Again, I would remind the hon. member that mandatory supervision is in the law which was established by this Parliament. Neither the Solicitor General nor any other official has the authority to change those rules outside Parliament, so that whatever changes I propose and are accepted by the cabinet will have to be brought forward to this House. When they are brought forward, which I expect in the not too distant future, I hope they will receive more prompt consideration than some of the other important changes to the criminal justice system I have brought forward in legislation to this House and which have been stalled here.

● (1450)

USE OF TRUTH-INDUCING DRUGS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I remind him that while Mr. Olson was out on the street he was wanted on outstanding charges in Sydney, Nova Scotia, and Williams Lake.

In view of the unusual circumstances which have arisen here, and certain questions having been raised about methods in certain areas of the administration of justice, and the perception that there were parts of the scenario about which the Solicitor General was not fully informed, has he ever been informed by his advisers whether sodium pentothal or truth-inducing drugs have been used on witnesses or accused persons?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, that is a very general question. I am aware of the use and value of that drug, but I would want to have a specific question before giving a specific answer.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

IMPACT OF TRANSFER OF FEDERAL SALES TAX FROM MANUFACTURING TO WHOLESALE LEVEL

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I would like to ask him whether a study has been made as to the impact of transferring federal sales tax from the manufacturing to the wholesale level on the residents of northern and remote regions of our country. As the minister knows, most of the high cost of living in the north is associated with freight. The practice now, of course, will be that northerners will have to pay federal sales tax on one of the main components of their high cost of living, namely, freight. Has a study been undertaken into the cost to northerners of that particular provision in the budget, and can the minister report on it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we have attempted to assess the general impact upon the economy of these changes to the sales tax. It should be made clear to hon. members that there will be a great deal of opportunity to consider these changes and to examine their impacts before the legislation will be brought in and before it will be enacted.

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN POLICY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, as the minister knows, neither in his budget nor in his statement has he dealt with the whole question of northern benefits, knowing full well that in some areas of our country the cost of the most essential items is sometimes two and three times what it is in the more populated regions of our country and that there is in place a certain tax remission or remission order. Can the minister tell us what terms of reference will be used to develop a policy which will bring about a greater degree of equity and fairness with respect to taxation on northerners generally? What he has done so far has been to place an additional burden on northerners by virtue of moving the sales tax from the manufacturing to the wholesale level, knowing full well that there are very few manufacturing facilities in the north. Most goods are shipped to wholesalers before they are distributed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the general effect of the changes in the sales tax we are proposing will be to benefit domestic manufacturers but, as the hon. member will recall, we did extend the remission order for an additional year. As I stated in the budget papers, it is my intention to examine what alternative instruments can be put in place in order to meet the requirements of that part of the country, such as an expenditure program rather than through the tax system.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON AUTOMOBILE SALES PERSONNEL

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. It relates to the budget proposal whereby the minister will now assess to car salespersons 30 per cent of the wholesale value of the demonstrator cars they use in the course of selling cars. The minister knows that the car business has been in a slump over the last few years. We obviously want that business to increase.

In view of the fact that in December the average wholesale price of a car was $10,000, which adds $3,000 to the average taxable income of these salespersons, is the minister considering withdrawing that provision from the budget, or at least reducing that amount of taxation in order to reflect more closely the state of that industry?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker. As I have stated in reply to a number of other representations, we will have an opportunity to consider the impact of all these measures in the very long debate which has been previewed for us by the Leader of the Opposition.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF ROAD EXPENSES INCURRED BY AUTOMOBILE SALES PERSONNEL

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. On December 18 the minister again hid behind a stock answer and said that he would deal with these tax provisions with equity and fairness. Regarding the provision of 30 per cent of taxable income for car salespersons, and specifically in view of the state of the industry at this time—for example, there are 1,200 car salespersons in Manitoba alone, so it is a large number of people who are affected—could the minister explain why, if it is dealing with fairness and equity, his own department has submitted a letter to car salesmen and the Canadian Automobile Dealers Association saying that road expenses for these people will be taxed retroactively to 1979 and 1980? These are road expenses which had been accruing and had been used to sell automobiles. Why is the minister now going back to 1979 and 1980 in order to tax these people on road expenses which previously had been allowed?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, indeed it is the intention of the government to deal in fairness and equity both in the matter of law and in the matter of the application of the law. With regard to the matter about which the hon. member talks, I will certainly look into that because I can assure the hon. member it is not our intention to put an unfair burden on people. It is, indeed, our intention to deal with them with fairness and equity.

SOCIAL SECURITY

QUERY RESPECTING PROGRAMS TO ERADICATE POVERTY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and it also deals with equity and fairness. In the last election campaign the Liberal Party made this promise:

> The Liberals are committed to reduce poverty in Canada and to ensuring economic and social fairness for all Canadians.

How does the minister square this promise with the recent report from the National Council on Welfare which shows that some three million Canadians still live in poverty in Canada, that over half of all single pensioners over the age of 70 live in poverty, and that the distribution of income in this country has not changed since 1951? Can the minister tell us when we can expect programs to eradicate poverty in Canada?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is addressing one of the constant problems in any society, and he wants me to solve it now when we also have a tight economic situation. I do not think his question is serious or responsible in that respect.

I can send the hon. member recent statistics on the fight against poverty in Canada. I discussed this with university students in Toronto two days ago. Those statistics show that over recent years the rate of absolute real poverty in Canada has decreased from 20 per cent to 12 per cent.

Of course there is still work to be done. What we have accomplished up until now has been to index fully—at a cost of millions of dollars—the Child Tax Credit, for example, which is now almost $300 non-taxable per child. In the coming months this will go to thousands of mothers of families who are most in need at the present time.

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN BENEFITS PAID TO SINGLE WOMEN OVER 65 YEARS OF AGE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance knows—or should know—that the vast majority of single women over age 65 live in poverty. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has certainly publicly stated that fact. Will the Minister of Finance agree to bring in amendments to his budget to use some of the additional revenue the government will gain from both the energy agreement and from additional taxation to increase immediately benefits for those single women over age 65 who are living in poverty and who rely on welfare to receive an adequate retirement income?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I would like to make one correction to the statement of the hon. member. These people do not receive welfare. They receive the Federal Guaranteed Income Supplement which is more than the amount of welfare payments, which are provincial. As soon as we can—when the economy picks up again—we will, as our first priority, increase their monthly benefits again. The description the hon. member makes is false. I should like to add that he should also address the problem of those from age 60 to 65. If the provinces wanted to—if Ontario decides tomorrow to bring the welfare payment to a decent level, which is not the case to date, we would immediately pay back 50 per cent of that. But it cannot be a federal initiative; it must come from the province.

● (1500)

Madam Speaker: I have notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

PRIVILEGE

MR. DEANS—IMPLEMENTATION OF TAXING MEASURE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on what I consider to be a very important matter of privilege. I wish to place before the House a situation which I believe, when carefully considered, constitutes not only a breach of privilege of a Member of Parliament and a contempt of Parliament, but is fundamentally an act of illegality.

I anticipate that a claim may be made that there is precedent which justifies the act which I am about to place before you. I hope to be able to deal with that claim should it arise, however, by referring to certain case law that is already in existence and available both to you, Madam Speaker, and to the House.

I am sure that you are aware that, as a result of the budget brought forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), certain taxing measures have now been implemented in this country in advance of any law having been passed by Parliament.

I want to suggest that if there is any doubt about the authenticity of that claim one need only call, as my office did, to the Department of National Revenue to ascertain—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has now been talking for a few minutes but has not given me any indication yet of the basis of his question of privilege. I would ask him to state that forthwith and to elaborate upon it for a few minutes if he feels that he needs to, but I must know the basis of the question of privilege.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, the privilege I raise is that there is an act in Canada at the moment, that a procedure is being followed in Canada at the moment, which imposes a tax for which no approval has been given by Parliament and regarding which members of Parliament, in the exercise of their duty, have been ignored. The opportunity for me as a Member of Parliament adequately to represent not only my own view but the views of the people of Canada with regard to the appropriateness of the measure currently in force in the country has not been afforded me. I therefore claim the privilege that I have to be given an opportunity in Parliament to deal with acts of Parliament in advance of their implementation.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member seems to be bringing up a question of the legality of certain things which have been implemented by the government. I would remind the hon. member that the Speaker is in no way capable of determining the legality of certain actions. If the hon. member feels something illegal has taken place, the appeal, of course, is not to the Speaker but is available in some other form.

Mr. Deans: If you will permit me, Madam Speaker, I would point out that the illegality of the act goes without saying. The question of whether or not I am being given an opportunity to adequately represent my constituents and the people of Canada in dealing with tax measures that the government may or may not bring forward some day, legally or illegally, is not the issue. The issue is that as a Member of Parliament representing people in this country who are having money illegally taken out of their pay packet by employers all across the country, I have not had an opportunity to express the concerns of those people in the House of Commons.

I simply ask, Madam Speaker, that you allow me two minutes to explain the point.

There is case law which quite specifically states that it is not appropriate to collect a tax for which there is no law in force. I would refer you, Madam Speaker, to the case in the British Parliament in 1913 of Bowles v. The Bank of England. In that case the Bank of England collected a tax on behalf of the government of England for which there was no law. In the judgment—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is obviously arguing along lines which I cannot accept as being the basis of a question of privilege.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He has made a good case but it is in the wrong court.

Madam Speaker: That is right. The case might be a good one but it is not a question of privilege. Unless the hon. member can demonstrate to me that he has a question of privilege as defined by our rules, I am afraid I will not be able to recognize him further. I would ask him not to pursue the line of argument he has started because that indicates to me quite clearly that he does not have the basis for a question of privilege.

Mr. Deans: Then let me ask, Madam Speaker, whether it is a privilege of a Member of Parliament to be able to deal with legislation proposed by the government before that legislation is enacted. Is that not a privilege of a Member of Parliament? Is that not one of the reasons why we are sent here—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: —that there be no taxation without representation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Is that not a privilege of a Member of Parliament? I want to suggest that if it is not a privilege of a member to be able to deal with legislation in advance of its implementation, then what in heaven's name is the Parliament of Canada here for?

I put it to you, Madam Speaker, that it is my firm belief that as a member of this House I have not been given the opportunity to deal with a taxing measure and that taxing measure has already been put into force as a result of a directive given by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) to employers from coast to coast.

I suggest that it is a contempt of this Parliament for a minister to allow his ministry to put a law into force in advance of its being dealt with in principle by this House of Commons. I suggest further that it is a contempt of my privilege as a member to tax my constituents without a law authorizing that tax which has been passed by this House of Commons. I put it to you, Madam Speaker, that it is clear that, notwithstanding a claim that this has been done in this way for centuries, the truth of the matter is in the final statement of the summation in the judgment I referred to, where it is quite clearly stated:

> It was finally settled there could be no taxation in this country except under authority of an act of Parliament, and no practice or custom, however prolonged or however acquiesced in on the part of—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If it is the contention of the hon. member that that case resembles the one which he makes now, then he should bring it before the courts and not to the Speaker as a question of privilege. I am afraid that I definitely have to rule that the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain does not have a question of privilege based on what he has just exposed to me.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege which to some extent is related fairly closely to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

As a member of this Parliament I was elected by my constituents to represent—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They may reconsider that.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member may not refer to a question upon which I have just ruled. I know that he wanted to elaborate on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, but in light of the ruling which I have just made, he must know that it is not permissible.

• (1510)

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I would in no way wish to question Your Honour's ruling.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): However, Your Honour stated that, on the basis of information heard from the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, a question of privilege did not arise. I am not questioning that ruling, but I have further information which I would—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): This government is arrogant. We are Members of Parliament and we have a right to be heard.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. No one will deny that the hon. member has a right to be heard, but the right to be heard in the House is subject to certain rules. I would ask him to read the rules and he will know that if he has a new question of privilege which he wants to raise, he must give me notice of it. I could not hear it at this time, but at another time on another day, if the hon. member sends me notice of the question of privilege. Is the hon. member rising on a point or order?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, indeed I am. Perhaps Madam Speaker overlooked that I gave her notice of a question of privilege during question period. The fact of the matter is that Madam Speaker has that notice and I should like an opportunity to elaborate upon it.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Yes, I received a notice which said that the hon. member wanted to elaborate on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain. That is not allowed at this time because I have ruled on the question of privilege of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I do not wish to belabour the point, but there are certain facts which I have a right to put forward in Parliament, and I am being denied that right.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member must accept the consequences of the fact that sufficient facts were not brought forward to allow me to rule that there might be a prima facie case of privilege in the case of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain. If the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain cannot indicate to me that he has the basis for a question of privilege, I fail to see how another member could do it for him. If the hon. member has a question of privilege he should like to bring up at another time and gives me proper notice, I will hear him, but not at this time. I am just warning the hon. member that I will not hear him any more on this particular point.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I feel that you did not give us sufficient chance to make the point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They are trying to hijack Parliament, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Order. Hon. members create their own chance. If in the first sentences they indicate to me that they might have something which is the basis of a question of privilege, then they are allowed to continue the elaboration of that question of privilege. But when after three or four minutes there is nothing in the argumentation which allows me to think that there could be the basis of a question of privilege, then yes, indeed, they have ruined their chances.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, surely some of us who perhaps have had legal experience can see a point that you raised—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Such disrespect!

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is suggesting that one would need legal experience in order to interpret the rules of the House. I would challenge that statement.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, on a point of order—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: I cannot hear the hon. member commenting any more on the ruling I have just made.

MR. FLIS—REMARKS OF MR. CROSBIE

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because a member of the House during today's question period discriminated against 400,000 Canadians of Polish descent and offended 35 million people in Poland. I refer to the words coming from the mouth of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Elzinga: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid that is not a question of privilege either.

PETITIONS

MR. SHIELDS—EFFECT OF BUDGET ON CITIZENS OF FORT McMURRAY

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents who live in the city of Fort McMurray in northeastern Alberta. The purpose of this petition signed by 8,285 citizens of the riding of Athabasca is to petition the government to recognize the unique role which Fort McMurray plays in the development of the Athabasca oil sands megaprojects and the devastating effect that the November budget will have on the residents of Fort McMurray who, because of the city's relative isolation, experience costs for goods and services 20 per cent higher than in Edmonton, 500 kilometres south.

The nature of the petition is to request that the government take action to reinstate tax exempt employee benefits used to attract workers to Fort McMurray, such as interest-free loans for home purchases, vehicle allowances, subsidized rents and utilities, etc. The petitioners hope, in Madam Speaker's examination of this petition, that you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency of their plea, and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral of this petition to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs at the earliest possible moment.

MR. BRADLEY—POLAND—IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition signed by some 349 citizens of the Dunnville area is to indicate to the government their great concern about the imposition of martial law in Poland. The nature of this petition is to ask our government's insistence that martial law imposed in Poland be rescinded immediately and that all arrested and detained members of Solidarity, workers, intellectuals and dissidents be released right away. The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find it in order, sense its urgency and allow its reading in the House.

AVIATION SAFETY

Question No. 3,288—Mr. Skelly:

1. With reference to volume II of the Report of the Commission of Inquiry on Aviation Safety conducted by Mr. Justice Charles Dubin, does the report indicate a serious concern about safety problems related to working conditions of commercial pilots?

2. Does the Minister of Transport intend to define "duty time" for pilots to prevent employers from requiring that pilots not work more than a regular eight-hour day or more than a five-day week and, if so, what will be the definition?

3. Are commercial pilots often required by employers to fly in adverse or marginal weather conditions or to fly aircraft in over-loaded conditions or to operate aircraft upon which maintenance procedures have not been properly carried out and do employers threaten to dismiss them or threaten not to promote or recommend them if they refuse to fly and, if so, does the Minister of Transport intend to create an arbitration procedure to hear cases concerning commercial pilots who have been dismissed for refusing to fly unsafe aircraft and does the minister intend to give any arbitration board the power to reinstate the pilot and to order the employer to pay lost wages and damages?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. Duty time for pilots is presently covered by information circular 0/3/73 dated March 12, 1973, and which addresses duty time under two headings. Flight time is defined as "the total time from the moment an aircraft first moves under its own power for the purpose of taking off until the moment it comes to rest at the end of the flight".

Flight duty time is defined as: "the time necessary to prepare for, execute and terminate a flight or series of flights and the administrative functions associated therewith".

The information circular recommends the following flight time limitations: 120 hours in any month; 300 hours in any quarter; and 1,200 hours in any year. In addition, flight duty time is recommended to be normally limited to 15 hours in any day unless provisions are made to allow for increased times. (e.g. relief pilots carried on board the aircraft). The circular also recommends rest periods of eight consecutive hours of prone rest between periods of flight duty time.

Legislatively, Air Regulations section 411 (C.R.C. c.2) states: "No person shall act as a flight crew member and no operator shall require a person to act as a flight crew member if either the person or the operator has any reason to believe, having regard to the circumstances of the particular flight to be undertaken, that the person: (a) is suffering from or is likely to suffer fatigue, or (b) would be otherwise unfit to properly perform his duties."

Detailed questionnaires were sent to all commercial pilots in Canada to elicit their views on flight-time limitations, the results of which are now being analysed to determine the validity and effectiveness of existing flight-time guidelines and regulatory requirements.

3. Vol. II of the Report of the Commission of Inquiry on Aviation Safety states on page 361 that: "During the course of the inquiry . . . the commission learned of overloading, falsification of logbook entries, flying below legal limits in bad weather, pressure on pilots to push weather limits, pilots working hours greatly in excess of the established guidelines, maintenance engineers signing maintenance logs without the required work having been done, and other unsafe practices."

The question of follow-up action related to these findings, i.e. arbitration procedures, will be addressed by Justice Dubin in volume III.

MAINTENANCE OF AUTOMATIC RAILWAY SIGNALS

Question No. 3,303—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission receive a communication from the county engineer of the united counties of Leeds and Grenville objecting to the fact that CNR has been invoicing the united counties for the maintenance of automatic railway signals at county roads 5 and 9 in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville?

2. Is the railway out of service and, if so (a) what are all the reasons which justify making the municipality pay for the maintenance of signals where the railway does not operate (b) will the committee order the CNR to refund to the municipality any invoices paid since the railway ceased service in the area?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows:

1. Yes. Considering the comments of the county engineer for the united counties of Leeds and Grenville along with the present level of rail traffic, the continued requirement for the provision of automatic protection at the two county roads will be reviewed.

2. No. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

USE OF UNTRAINED FLIGHT ATTENDANTS

Question No. 3,323—Mr. Skelly:

1. Did volume II of the Report of the Commission of Inquiry on Aviation Safety state that the use of untrained flight attendants by airlines was a major safety hazard in the event of an emergency?

2. Did the Department of Transport waive or ignore normally accepted procedures in order to accommodate Wardair when that airline locked out its flight attendants and hired untrained people to take the jobs of the locked-out employees?

3. Does the minister intend to recommend legislation that will prevent airlines from leaving stranded employees away from home during a labour dispute by denying them passage home or by encouraging other carriers not to provide stranded employees with passage home?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. Volume II of the inquiry, tabled in the House of Commons on October 22, 1981, referred to a particular case by stating "there were, therefore, serious safety implications in the event of an emergency" (page 469). This issue is also referred to in testimony (page 458).

2. No. The content and quality of the safety and emergency training was fully in accordance with Wardair's normal cabin attendant training program as approved by Transport Canada.

3. No.

VESSEL "MAISONNEUVE"

Question No. 3,365—Mr. Crosby:

1. During the years 1975 to 1980, did the Minister of Transport or any other Member of Parliament board the vessel Maisonneuve and, if so, on what date and for what reason?

2. During which months of the year does the vessel operate and how much of this time is spent in the promotion of the port of Montreal?

3. Does the minister consider that the expenditures for the maintenance of the vessel are a reasonable and prudent dispersement of public funds?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows:

1. During the years 1975 to 1980 the Minister of Transport did not board the vessel Maisonneuve. Eight Members of Parliament boarded the vessel on June 14, 1976. They were invited by Mr. J. M. Chabot, chairman of the Port Authority who was accompanied by Mr. Roger Beauchemin, vice-chairman of the Port Authority. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the following:

(a) Jacques-Cartier Pier as a possible site for a future container terminal.

(b) "Le Vieux Port de Montréal"—status report on its development.

(c) ILA labour problems and their effect on port authorities.

2. The vessel operates from the beginning of April to mid-December, on average. A total of 120 hours per annum is spent on port promotion during the months of June, July and August.

3. Yes.

CMHC INFORMATION KIT

Question No. 3,458—Mr. Blenkarn:

Did the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation pay to have an information kit prepared in connection with the government's proposed assistance to home owners to carry their mortgages as set out in the budget and, if so, what amount and what was the (a) cost of each information folder (b) total cost of preparing all of the folders?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: CMHC prepared in its own print shop approximately 2,025 kits with information concerning the Canada Mortgage renewal plan. Two types of kits were prepared. One, prepared for Members of Parliament and Senators, contained 32 pages and cost $1.67 per unit. The other, prepared for the general public, contained 24 pages and cost $1.39 per unit. The total cost for all information kits was $2,926.75 and the average unit cost of all the kits was $1.45.

WAVE DAMAGE IN ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Question No. 3,508—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the government conduct a survey of the damage done by waves made by large speeding vessels in the area of the St. Lawrence Seaway between the upper end of the locks at the eastern end of the Seaway and the entrance to Lake Ontario and, if so, what were the results?

2. Did the government take or does it plan to take steps to slow down the speed of such vessels in areas where damage has been done to property on the shoreline?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): In so far as the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is concerned:

1. No.

2. Speed limits are imposed on vessels transiting the Montreal-Lake Ontario section to prevent damage to property on the shoreline. An enforcement program is carried out on an ongoing basis. To date, the speed of 1,903 commercial vessels and 120 tour boats has been checked. The U.S. Seaway entity carries out a similar program.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

● (1520)

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the parliamentary secretary that it is almost a year since I asked question No. 2,250. This question has to do with the government's active pursuit and investigation of the possibility that there are former German Nazis living in this country. This is the fourth time in almost a year that I have raised this question. The last time the parliamentary secretary replied to my intervention he said that he would as expeditiously as possible see to it that the question was answered.

I ask this question again, Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that it is part of the policy of our present Solicitor General to pursue that investigation. I am not asking for a witch hunt; I just want to find out whether or not the government is pursuing an investigation of former Nazis presently resident in this country. It is a simple question and it is about time it was answered.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will again endeavour to see what can be done to expedite the answer in this matter.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANAGREX ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed, from Monday, January 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill C-85. Agriculture is certainly one industrial sector in Canada that needs improved marketing mechanisms. Yesterday I listened to a number of speeches about the objectives of Canagrex, and I know, Mr. Speaker, that many opposition members had serious doubts about the effectiveness of Canagrex. Now, Canagrex did not come out of the blue. It was planned through close co-operation and consultation with all farmers' groups and associations throughout Canada, and I can say that especially in Quebec, the vast majority of farmers are very positive about this new corporation. Furthermore, this kind of organization is already well known in international markets and Canagrex is certainly not creating a precedent. I should like to point out to my colleagues on the opposite side that many, if not the majority of foreign governments have had agencies to deal with the export of agri-food products for a number of years. Some examples are SOPEXA in France, Britain's board for farm products exports, AGREXCO in Israel and CONASUPO in Mexico. The reason why these agencies were established is that an increasing number of countries want to negotiate on a government-to-government basis. The advantage of such negotiations is mainly that they offer government protection in addition to providing for speedy assembly of a stable export market for all farm products, especially in a country like Canada, where most producers are working under a quota system for products such as potatoes, dairy products, grain and poultry. As far as meat imports are concerned, Mr. Speaker, a bill to regulate meat imports was promised in the throne speech—Canada was the only beef-importing country without a permanent policy on the volume of beef imports. Mr. Speaker, Canagrex is not going to do away with the other agencies but will consolidate all the agencies we have right now. In fact, our new legislation on meat imports will ensure that imports from overseas do not affect Canada's traditional role in the North American economy as a beef producer.

Another reason for changing Canada's policy in this area is that the U.S. legislation on meat imports, which dated back to 1964, was amended as of January 1, 1980, to include compensatory measures. Again, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that stabilization board payments and marketing boards will not be affected by Canagrex. In fact, I feel that Canagrex will act as an umbrella organization for the agencies being established in Canada, that it will give us a broader perspective on export markets and will encourage Canadian farmers to become even more dynamic. My colleagues will probably recall that last February, Agriculture Canada negotiated a major agreement with CONASUPO, a similar agency in Mexico. Under the agreement, Canada will provide Mexico with some $100 million worth of wheat, dairy products, corn, beans and other commodities. However, it took more than a year of negotiations before the agreement was signed. Obviously, if Canada had had a similar agency of its own, as will now be the case with Canagrex, this would have speeded up negotiations and perhaps we would have got a better deal.

During negotiations the Mexican authorities made it quite clear that they favoured agreements between governments. Mexico, like many other nations, is trying to achieve self-sufficiency in food, and Canada will be helping Mexico in its efforts to achieve that goal. However, until then, Canada could supply Mexico with even more agri-food products. As soon as Canagrex is established, export markets and increasing opportunities in this area will be more readily accessible to Canadians. The agreement with Mexico is a first for Canada. The $100 million transaction may seem quite a lot, but it represents only a fraction of Mexico's agri-food needs. That means, Mr. Speaker, that with Canagrex there is almost no limit to what our contribution could be over several years. There are many possibilities, especially if we consider that the population of Mexico is growing at a rate of 3.5 per cent per year. In fact, these projections reflect only part of the possibilities of the Mexican market. And Mexico is not the only country offering very attractive economic potential for agri-food exports. I could name many more such as Algeria, Venezuela and others. It is incredible that Canagrex should still be in the planning stage at a time when this kind of agency could do so much for Canada. However, at our present speed we are probably going to miss out on a number of good deals.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, I want to stress the fact that Canagrex will act as an umbrella organization for the many agricultural agencies we are setting up in this country. As I said before, we are not going to eliminate stabilization board payments and we are not going to do away with marketing boards, and I feel that we can encourage productivity and initiative among our farmers. Mr. Speaker, it would seem that a number of my hon. colleagues have tried to cast doubts on the usefulness of an agency that Canadians and especially farmers would be proud to have. I made a few queries in order to be able to answer some questions that are important to farm producers. I would like to give an answer to the member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) who claims that the drop in the price of beef is a result of too much beef being imported from Australia, New Zealand and Brazil. Present world beef prices are not due to a beef surplus, but rather to a low demand in most industrialized countries. Australia and New Zealand have exported nearly 100 million pounds of beef to Canada in the last three years compared with 185 million pounds in 1976. Why is this? Because nearly all this imported beef is used for various types of sausages and hamburgers. Because of high interest rates, Canadian meat importers are unable to maintain large stocks of frozen beef. Sausage manufacturers therefore use more Canadian pork and less imported beef because Canadian pork is less expensive. More than ever at the present time, beef prices in Canada depend mostly on the availability of other meats, such as pork or poultry, and on domestic demand. It is not simply the beef supply that explains beef prices. This and many other factors must be taken into account.

On the other hand, almost all imported beef consists of special cuts for hotels and expensive restaurants, but as the need for special cuts increases, we shall be able to export fancier cuts, especially from Alberta, to west coast American markets. Our exports to Japan are mostly high grade boneless beef cuts and in 1981 these exports reached eight million pounds. Our major competitor for the same grade of meat on the Japanese market is the United States. However, Australia is the main supplier of beef to Japan even though it exports beef of a lower quality and supplies a specific sector of the Japanese market. It must be realized that the international market includes specialized products and varied markets.

I would simply like to reply to the hon. member opposite who suggested the pig population has declined in Alberta because of sagging sales in Japan. This should not go unchallenged, because during each of the three years 1978, 1979 and 1980, our pork exports to Japan were very stable at a yearly average of 70 million pounds. In 1981, we exported 80 million pounds of pork to Japan. While four or five years ago most of the pork shipped to Japan came from western Canada, the majority now comes from Quebec. The reason is that western farmers would rather specialize in the production of grain and rapeseed while farmers in Quebec and Ontario would tend to specialize in the production of pork which places them in a better position to serve regularly and consistently the export markets.

This does not mean there are no pork producers in western Canada. Far from it. However, the smaller number of pigs in Alberta has absolutely nothing to do with the decline of our exports to Japan, as implied by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte. It must be emphasized the U.S. are currently our main pork market, with sales of 145 million pounds in 1981. It must be noted that over the same period Canada imported 35 million pounds of pork from the United States. Also, the hon. member opposite suggested that since we import cattle in eastern Canada, we cannot export cattle or beef to the United States. Coming as he does from the maritime provinces the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte, who is fully aware of our potato markets in the United States, where we normally export from the maritime provinces while we import in the western provinces and central Canada, should know that the food market is not homogeneous.

As for livestock in 1981, we imported 170,000 head of cattle for beef and veal, especially to Ontario. At the same time, we exported 200,000 heads of cattle for beef, and feeding calves to the United States. Most of the cattle exported for veal and feeding calves came from western Canada, but it should be stated that eastern Canada exported 85,000 head of cattle for beef and veal, especially dairy herds. At the same time in 1981, we were exporting 121 million pounds of beef to the United States while we were importing about 20 million pounds from that same country. Almost all the beef exported from western Canada comes from beef cattle and dairy herds in eastern Canada and is used for processed meat such as sausages and hamburgers.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that since those statements were in my opinion unfounded, it was necessary to get the facts straight, and it is my belief that Canagrex will contribute to strengthening the foundations of Canadian agriculture.

I also noted other hon. members have stated that there was a tendency to socialize our Canadian agriculture. I dispute the validity of that claim, Mr. Speaker. Canadian farmers are entirely free to produce what they want on their farms except that when it comes to marketing, they have to obey the rules which are increasingly made on their own suggestions. I contend that the Government of Canada does not impose its decisions on farmers; on the contrary, over the past few years the government has been really open to discussions or to suggestions put forward by the farming community, which is primarily responsible for agricultural production and fair prices. I am proud to repeat, Mr. Speaker, that compared with the United States, which is the only country in the world to grow food throughout the year on account of its climate, Canadian producers can provide the same foodstuff at a cost only 1 per cent higher. This is all to the credit of Canadians. We are told that Canadian agriculture should be socialized, and in response to that I would like to quote from this book Mr. Speaker.

[English]

In his book "The Merchants of Grain", Dan Morgan describes the structure and marketing methods of the five multinational grain companies which control the world grain market. Does the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte suggest that we leave ourselves to the mercy of these huge companies when Mr. Morgan describes the Canadian Wheat Board as the most sophisticated marketing system in the world, and leave ourselves at the mercy of five huge companies, not one of them Canadian?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if we were to believe some of the untruths which are being spread everywhere in Canada, we would think the government is trying to socialize agriculture. Because I was personally involved in agriculture for a while, I can honestly say that farmers certainly enjoy more freedom than most Canadians. Except that sometimes they have marketing problems. That is why we are establishing a corporation called Canagrex to promote and facilitate the export to foreign markets of our agricultural and food products, and encourage our farmers to become more productive and dynamic, which in turn will result in lower production costs. People often say that there is no way we could get a hold on European markets. I do not share this view, Mr. Speaker. For instance, I read here that a dozen eggs cost $2.65 in Paris, while it costs only $1.18 in Quebec and the rest of Canada.

Mr. Laniel: They must have been laid by expensive chicks, that's why!

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): My colleague is right when he says that they must have been laid by expensive chicks, because these prices are unacceptably high, and we could certainly use a corporation like Canagrex to sell more on foreign markets and encourage our farmers to become more productive and seek increased quotas. I shall mention other cases. For instance, beef is 35 per cent more expensive in Paris; chicken, 52 per cent; butter, 76 per cent, compared with 125 per cent for eggs. The situation in France is no exception. It is the same the world over, as I mentioned a moment ago. Only in the United States are production costs slightly lower than in Canada. Let me quote the price of eggs elsewhere in a few other countries. In Tokyo, a dozen eggs costs $1.76, in Brussels, $1.82, in London, $2.31 and in Berne $2.60. Mr. Speaker, I am anxious for that corporation to be set up and I look forward to the day when once and for all we decide to tackle world markets just like the Americans. We have much to learn from them. Day after day, their expert salesmen travel around the world selling their agricultural products. In Canada, in the past we were aware that we had excellent food products but, unfortunately, we waited for the buyers to come to us. But this is no longer the case. In the 1980s and in the years to come, we will use Canagrex increasingly and it will become the true promoter of Canadian agricultural produce and products.

This prompts me to say that if we succeed as promoters we will be able indeed to shore up our agricultural food industry which employs hundreds of thousands of Canadians. We will also achieve a better trade balance thanks to our agricultural production, and our processing industry will grow stronger still. Another significant aspect is that our agricultural research will become even more sophisticated. We will be able to earmark additional funds to develop improved and better yielding varieties and to enhance the genetics of our herds. Mr. Speaker, time flies by and I would have a lot more to say about what Canagrex might be, because I have mentioned only a few of the numerous and challenging opportunities likely to stem from the establishment of that corporation. I hope that my colleagues do realize the urgency of such a corporation for Canadian exports. Canada can no longer do without the services of all our producers and all of them would stand to derive great benefits from it. As I pointed out earlier, the whole country could also benefit by way of a greater income and a wider trade network and by offsetting our trade deficit. I hope that all those who are anxious to promote the agricultural development of our country will join in a common effort to ensure that the corporation is set up as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I agree, along with the hon. member who previously spoke, that the bill is of some significance to agriculture; but most of all, agriculture is of importance to the country. It is unfortunate that this government does not see fit to recognize how important agriculture is to the country.

I am glad to see that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is in the chamber this afternoon because there are some things that I want to say to him about the bill and, more particularly, about the kind of general condition of agriculture today. This government does not give very much of a priority to agriculture. Let me just refer to the bill, for instance. Reference was made to it in the throne speech of April 14, 1980. Almost two years ago, the throne speech stated:

> To improve the ability of Canadian industry to compete abroad in order to create jobs at home, my government will establish a national trading corporation.

We assume that the national trading corporation referred to in the throne speech is Bill C-85, the Canagrex legislation which is in front of us this afternoon. We wanted to do that almost two years ago. Eleven months ago, on February 20, 1981, the minister issued a press release which stated:

> Mr. Whelan said he will soon submit legislation to Parliament to establish Canagrex.

He was given the green light by cabinet to set up Canagrex. If a green light meant that 11 months would pass before such legislation came before the House, I would hate to know what a red or amber light would mean to this government. If there was any kind of clout the minister could have used at cabinet meetings, he either did not use it or did not have it, because 11 months later we have the Canagrex legislation. It is now being touted as very important legislation that will be of help. Why, then, was it not given some priority a long time ago? Why was it not dealt with in this House before?

● (1550)

I suggest that the Standing Committee on Agriculture is a well-run and in many cases non-partisan committee. That committee did not have anything to do for the first four months of 1981. In fact, it did not meet. If this legislation is so important, I am sure there would have been agreement on all sides to give it quick second reading so that it could have gone to committee. This government did not see fit to do that. Therefore, we should let Canadian farmers know how this government considers agriculture.

Something else I find interesting is what the minister has been saying about banks. I refer to what is going on in our domestic industry. It is fine to have programs which encourage Canadian agriculture to export. However, if in the meantime our domestic industry dies and there is no farm production at home, it is a moot point whether there will be any benefit by encouraging exports when there is nothing to export.

The Minister of Agriculture has been running around this country saying that the banks are behaving scandalously. In one speech that was well covered by the media, he suggested that the banks could be sued for the kind of lending practices they were following. That seems to be erroneous when this minister supports his cabinet colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who is responsible for the high interest rate policy in this country. If the minister wants to talk about suing somebody and doing something for farmers, he should tell the Minister of Finance to do something about these high interest rates. Then we could have some faith in him.

I now want to deal with a more specific matter. Last evening there was a vote in this chamber. One of the votes was on a subamendment which in part read:

> —an excess profits tax be imposed on Canada's chartered banks to restore their marginal tax rate to the 1970 level.

The Minister of Agriculture has been running around the country talking about how terrible the banks are, stating that they should be sued because of the scandalous way they have been lending money to farmers. One would have expected him to vote in favour of that resolution. But how did he vote? He voted against it. He voted with the banks.

If one is going to have any credibility with regard to what one says, one should have the courage in this case to stand up and vote according to what one is telling the farmers as to how the banks are treating them. Many people in this country believe that agriculture is in as bad a shape as it was in the thirties. Fortunately, I did not have an opportunity to experience that first-hand because I was born in the middle of the thirties. At this time when Canadian agriculture is suffering such severe problems, this government comes forward with Canagrex legislation.

The minister has been quoted as saying that something else he will do this year is to bring forward legislation dealing with off-track betting. That will certainly help the farming community in this country! This kind of attitude and performance by our Minister of Agriculture is a disgrace.

Let me talk about the bill before us. There is no doubt that Canada has to compete in foreign markets. In order to do that, we have to be as well represented as we can. Everyone agrees that the agricultural products produced in this country are second to none. We pride ourselves on the fact that our grain sets world standards. It is not enough to have the best; we have to be able to promote and sell it. There are not many who can quarrel with the intent of what Canagrex is being set up to do. However, we do have some concerns over the way this Canagrex legislation will tackle it.

Two days ago the minister spoke on second reading of this bill. He stated that Canagrex would run a tight ship. In the next sentence he said it would have wide-ranging powers. I am concerned that if Canagrex is given wide-ranging powers, it will be more difficult to run a tight ship.

That is a problem with a lot of our legislation today. Those who elect us to this place in normal times have one vote every four years to pass judgment on all that we do. If we are to run a tight ship, it is important that this legislation does not set up something that can get out of hand. As I said, those who elect us only have one vote to judge us on everything from the way the Post Office is run to foreign policy, energy policy and everything else that goes on in this country. It is important that we have control over the various institutions, semi-judicial bodies, Crown corporations and so on.

It is impossible for Members of Parliament to keep track of everything on a day to day basis. I refer to some of the powers being given to Canagrex. I refer to page 6 of the bill:

> —Canagrex may
> (a) purchase agricultural products and food products and package, process, store . . .
> (b) undertake and assist in promotion of the use of Canadian agricultural products . . .
> (c) enter into contracts with Canadian companies, co-operatives, . . . or other Canadian enterprises or with individuals carrying on business in Canada . . .
> (d) enter into contracts with foreign governments . . .
> (e) enter into joint ventures with government . . .
> (f) make, on the recommendation of the Minister and subject to conditions of general application . . . grants and contributions for the purposes for which it is established.
> (g) purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold real and personal property . . .
> (i) pledge, mortgage, hypothecate, sell, lease or otherwise deal with—

This bill gives very wide-ranging powers to Canagrex. Directors will be appointed as follows:

> All directors, other than the president, shall be appointed by the governor in council to hold office during pleasure for such terms, not exceeding three years—

Another part of the paragraph describes the sequence in which the directors shall be appointed. When you give that kind of wide-ranging power and you give the government the power to appoint directors, there should be a better accountability to Parliament.

If the democratic system is to work properly, we are the ones to be held accountable for the operations of the government. I agree with the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) who spoke on the bill last Monday. He is concerned about the way the books will be audited.

I would like to see much more authority and latitude given to the Auditor General to look at the operations of Canagrex. I suspect the minister will agree that, in order to be effective, it has to have some autonomy. This could lead to a problem. It can be given too much autonomy. The bill provides that the Canagrex Corporation can have contingent liabilities of $75 million. I suspect that if it is successful, that will be used up very quickly. The situation could quickly develop where it is dealing with hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money. We must be very careful to ensure there is a proper chain of authority and responsibility flowing back to this chamber.

We intend to raise some of these concerns in committee. I hope there will be an automatic reporting procedure to the House and to the committee so that we do not have to wait. I must confess that I am not too familiar with the rules of this House. I am not sure whether I need to apologize for that because the longer I am here, the more I realize that nobody understands all the rules of this House. However, there should be some procedure set up so that the annual report of Canagrex is immediately referred to the agriculture committee without the necessity of a House reference from the government or the President of the Privy Council.

In my brief experience as a Member of Parliament I have already seen problems with the agriculture committee getting people who should be there simply because the government does not want to provide a reference so that the appropriate witnesses can appear. There should be some mechanism in the bill to refer the report so members of the committee can examine the performance of the Canagrex Corporation without any interference by the government of the day, regardless of which party is in power. I am sure that those knowledgeable in agriculture in this country and the way agriculture works internationally would be very much in favour of that.

Canagrex is but one part of a very large industry in Canada. If Canagrex is going to work, why was it not set up a long time ago? It could have been effective in helping in our export markets. We now belatedly have a beef import law. We are very pleased to have it, but it would have been more effective had we had it ten years ago. There is no reason why that could not have been done a long time ago.

I now want to talk about the problems facing the beef industry. I have copies here of the minister's agri-food strategy for the eighties and challenge for growth as well as a copy of the main report and summary. The minister talks about increasing beef production in this country as a means of helping out Canadian agriculture. The beef industry in this country is presently facing a very serious problem. This is true of the whole red meat industry. Every province that is producing beef in significant numbers has a provincial stabilization program with the exception of my province, Manitoba.

The other day the minister said he had offered the industry a 100 per cent stabilization program in 1977. He said it as though, once having been offered and turned down, it would never be offered again. If the minister wants to exercise his responsibility to Canadian agriculture from coast to coast, he has the responsibility to set up and co-ordinate a nationally uniform beef stabilization program. The longer he sits and dawdles, the tougher it is on the industry.

The minister appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture prior to Christmas. At that time he suggested he had a plan in his back pocket. We suggested it might be appropriate to have a meeting of the committee with him in camera to talk about what he had in his back pocket.

In the meantime, the minister sent out a survey across the country. That is an interesting story in itself. I sent a copy of the survey to a professional pollster and asked what he thought of it. I will send the minister a copy of it. In essence, the professional people said the survey was a sham, that it was set up in such a way as to get the answers the minister was looking for. I point out to the minister that the longer he waits, the tougher it is on the industry. If we wait long enough we will destroy our domestic beef industry to the extent that we will be lucky if we have enough beef for ourselves. In that event, Canagrex will not have enough beef to export to worry about. There is an urgent need for action on a national scale for which the minister has direct responsibility, if in fact we will be able to make use of Canagrex. If we drive our Canadian farmers out of business and have a hard time feeding ourselves, whether or not we have an operation set up to encourage exports becomes foolish because we will not have any product to export.

• (1600)

I am very disturbed that the minister has accused farm leaders in this country of being gutless and not wanting to do anything. If anyone has been gutless in showing leadership, it must be that same minister who makes that sort of allegation. I will go further and call him absolutely useless. Since he has taken office we have seen a great agricultural industry decimated. I see that the minister is leaving the chamber.

Mr. Whelan: I will be back.

Mr. Mayer: When one starts talking about some of the things he has done, he cannot stand the heat and has to leave. If I had been minister for ten years and accomplished as little as he has for Canadian agriculture, I would probably leave the chamber too.

The minister also indicated that he would like to have a national beef marketing board which would have supply management powers. This seems to be a ludicrous statement to make when we know that he would not be able to have this type of program approved by cabinet. It would involve very large expenditures and we know that the minister cannot even get enough support, from wherever it comes, to establish a national stabilization program in Canada. I therefore fail to see how he could establish a national beef marketing board with supply management powers which would involve a vast amount of money from the government. If he cannot get support for a national stabilization scheme, there is less chance of support for a marketing board.

I turn now to some of the provisions in the budget and how they will affect farm production at home and our ability to be competitive and export abroad. The budget will now only provide the Small Business Development Bond to farmers and small-business men in financial stress. We welcome the provision in the budget to make small business loans available to unincorporated businesses, including farmers, but it is only available to people in financial stress. People I have talked to say that the banks find it very difficult to make loans to people in financial difficulty because the banks do not like to lend money to people who will have a hard time staying in business. The banks prefer to lend to people who have the possibility of staying in business.

Another effect the budget had on farmers was to halve the capital cost allowance, or depreciation allowance, in the first year. If hon. members opposite had been back to their farming constituencies during the Christmas recess they would know that farm machinery sales have taken a turn for the worse. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Ostiguy) in the House and I know he is a farm equipment dealer. He will bear me out on the fact that the capital cost allowance for farm machinery had a devastating effect on farm sales. Farmers who want to buy a tractor or combine in the fall, which is the busy time of the year when combines are used, now cannot deduct the total year of depreciation. That will hurt the way farmers plan and maintain equipment, thus affecting farm machinery dealers which in turn will affect companies like Massey-Ferguson, who the government helped to stay in business. Some of the measures in this budget do not make a lot of sense.

Another major area of concern is the manner in which farmers will be treated when they sell land. This is true particularly for Saskatchewan because there is more farm land there than in any other province. However, it applies equally to any province where there is farm land for sale. The farmer cannot afford to sell his land because immediately upon completion of an agreement for sale, whether they receive all the proceeds from that sale or not, they are taxed on the total amount. Many farmers cannot now afford to sell out and will wait until they die, when the farm must be disposed of and tax paid to the government. As a result it will be very hard for young farmers to get started in the farming industry.

This will have serious imlications for all Canadians. We know that the family farm has been a unit which has provided the sort of products which enable this country to have easy access to food. We know there always is milk available—nobody has gone to a store to find there is no milk or bread—and it is always plentiful. There may be some people who have trouble paying for it, but the fact is that it has been available in large quantities and at reasonable prices relative to the average wage in Canada. If the family unit is destroyed, it will not only have a serious effect on our domestic production but on the ability to export and compete with foreign producers.

I must be fair and talk about some of the favourable provisions in the budget for the farmer. There is $50 million to assist the Farm Credit Corporation which is made up of $45 million in loans to be made available at lower interest rates. This $45 million, relative to the number of farms, is not a lot of money. Of the $50 million, there is $5 million in direct assistance to farmers to help them with interest costs. This $5 million is available to farmers over a two-year period. That works out to $15 per farm over the two-year period. That is what the Minister of Agriculture did for the farming community in the budget. As I said, we have to give him credit for that. Although it is not very much, $15 per farm over two years, I suppose we have to be thankful for it.

To turn to the matter of transportation, in western Canada we are capable of growing much more for export than we are able to transport to the export terminal. Unless the government shows some leadership in assuming responsibility for providing proper transportation systems in Canada, not only for grain but for potatoes which maritimers are having difficulty moving, it becomes a moot point whether we need an export corporation like Canagrex. Unless the government takes positive steps to improve transportation facilities, then Canagrex will have no opportunity to function.

It has been pointed out that we do have some knowledgeable agricultural people attached to embassies around the world. However, there are very few. If I remember correctly, when the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) spoke on Monday, he said that of the some 100 embassies around the world there were only ten people knowledgeable in agriculture attached to them. I suggest it would be sensible to study this matter and provide knowledgeable agricultural people for those embassies so they will be able to work with foreign buyers and encourage exports.

There are many other areas of concern in this bill. During second reading I tried to point out some of the concerns we now have and which we must deal with in terms of domestic production before we can anticipate competing internationally. Unless the government addresses these problems quickly, I suggest to this government and this minister that we will be in danger of setting up an export corporation with nothing to export.

In conclusion, I would like to comment on the performance of the Minister of Agriculture. The minister has been in office for almost ten years. I have often heard him talk about the problems in Canadian agriculture but I have never seen him tackle those problems. I challenge members opposite to point out to me some of the major programs that this minister has put into effect which will be a lasting legacy to his tenure in that very prestigious position he occupies. I cannot think of one.

Hopefully if we can improve our production at home and give our farmers the incentive to produce again—we know they will produce if they are given incentive—then we can make use of this Canagrex legislation. Perhaps it will be the one thing which will be testimony to some of the good things this minister did when he was in office.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, to the comments of the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) I would like to add that in the last five years the only piece of agricultural legislation which has been before this House has been the recently passed meat import law. My colleagues who have been here for a longer period tell me that in the five years before that there was no agricultural legislation passed or brought forward.

Canagrex is intended to be a publicly-owned corporation. Public ownership has become part of the structure and fibre of our country. It is part of our everyday life. Basically there are three large groups of Crown corporations or public ownership groups. There is direct government ownership by municipalities, the provinces and the country. This includes buildings, canals, roads and those utilities which are necessary for the operation of the country.

There is another kind of public ownership which is direct ownership by groups of people in co-ops. These are also a type of public ownership. They have done much and are very important to the fibre of the country. These co-ops are the banding together of similarly motivated people for a particular reason, usually to protect themselves against some kind of exploitation. If we were to look at unions closely, I think we would have to say that they are a type of a co-op. They are the banding together of people to protect themselves.

Finally, there is a third group of publicly-owned institutions owned indirectly by government. Such institutions are a form of Crown corporation.

Over the years public ownership has become an effective social movement in which we as citizens have placed our faith and trust and from which we have come to expect a certain kind of service. We expect that service to be provided efficiently and effectively and with a minimum of cost and waste.

In Canada we have expected that publicly-owned concerns display a certain amount of public conscience. We expect that any publicly-owned business—a building or a utility—will operate for the benefit of the group being served or the people in its particular area of the country. We expect them to operate generally for the benefit of the whole population. We expect publicly-owned corporations or businesses to have a different outlook and a different policy respecting matters of conservation, ecology, labour relations, exploitation of resources and pollution. We also expect government ownership to be an instrument of government policy.

Sometimes we have a tendency to become angry with a corporation if it does not live up to our expectations, when what we should really be doing is becoming angry with the government for not establishing a relationship between itself and the Crown corporation which would allow the Crown corporation to be the instrument of policy it was intended to be. I very definitely agree with the hon. member for Portage-Marquette that there is a great need for Crown corporations to be much more responsible to the government, to Parliament or to the country than they are at present. Because of the criteria I have outlined, we in Canada have come to expect that public corporations should have a public conscience and be an instrument of government policy.

On the whole, however, federal Crown corporations are a sorry lot. It has been said quite often that there is not one good federal Crown corporation. If we look over the main public corporations, we can find a considerable amount of evidence to back that up. I refer here to the CNR, Eldorado, the Bank of Canada and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. One of the reasons we say these are very bad corporations is that the government has not given them the kind of policy direction which would allow them to be good citizens or to provide the type of service we would like.

Some people, particularly free enterprise capitalists, say Crown operations are bad because they think they could make more money from the services which are being supplied to the people as a whole. This might be so. Free enterprisers might be able to make more money, but it would usually be at the expense of the service involved or of the consumers of the service. Others level that description of a sorry lot upon federal Crown corporations because these Crown corporations have not recognized their responsibilities. I am sure many hon. members have been abundantly impressed with the advertising of probably our most prominent Crown corporation, Canadian National Railways, the slogan of which for a long time has been "a business as well as a responsibility". Let us look carefully at how CN fulfils that responsibility. In no way has it provided the kind of service to Canada which has been expected of it. CN is unwilling to provide the kind of service for which it was set up. Lately we have been saying exactly the same thing about VIA Rail, a grandchild, I suppose, of the CNR and the CPR.

Some corporations are criticized because they have very little concern about the environment. For example, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has had a record for many years of misuse of the environment. Often the labour relations records of Crown corporations are worse than those in the private sector. Crown corporations are also criticized because they often take regressive approaches to the services they provide.

The position of the newly established postal corporation is that the people most able to pay, such as Imperial Oil which sends out thousands of bills, can send them out at 21 cents each. The small-business man, however, who only sends out a few hundred bills, must pay 30 cents each. One can pick any federal Crown corporation and I am sure one will find some area where it has failed to fulfil one's idea of a publicly-owned corporation.

Canagrex is going to be another federal Crown corporation which will have some responsibility for the marketing of agricultural products. That sounds like a very good idea and it probably is. It will likely do some good in the marketing of agricultural products; but is there not a danger that it will follow the great sales tradition of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. in the sale of Candu reactors? That sales promotion was a disaster for the corporation and for Canada as well. The sale of heavy water by the same corporation was another disaster which last year cost the taxpayers over $600 million, and the cost is rising. Will it follow the loss of Consolidated Computer Inc. of $91 million?

I raise these spectres not in an attempt to downgrade the possible value of Canagrex but to point out, as expressed by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette, that government control and intervention in marketing has often been inadequate. In fact, the arm's length policy of the federal government in relation to Crown corporations makes their effectiveness rather doutbful. I am almost inclined to agree with the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), who suggested that perhaps all we need is an agency. Maybe it is wrong to establish a Crown corporation. Traditionally, federal Crown corporations have operated at arm's length from the government. In the category of agencies we have an effective and efficient model in the Canadian Wheat Board with which we have had much much experience and much success.

What I am really suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is that when we examine Canagrex in committee perhaps we should examine its relationship to the government and the relationship of all Crown corporations to the government. Perhaps the chairman of the board should be the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), so that when Canagrex does not perform well we can ask him questions about it. It is bad enough that the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board sits in the other place and that we are unable to ask questions of him, but at least he is the minister responsible for it. In the case of many corporations there is no one who has any responsibility within the corporation to whom we can put questions or to whom we can say that what the corporation is doing is wrong and that we should be told why that is the case.

I should like now to turn to the relationship of Canagrex to the industry. It is an important relationship. The industry is made up of a number of not distinct but interrelated parts. There is production at the farm level, there is transportation and there is processing which, in many cases, is value added before the marketing process. There are those four areas and there are possibly further parts to the whole industry, such as market development. Those parts cannot be separated with Canagrex taking care of the marketing phase only and ignoring all the others. That is a fallacy and we cannot accept it.

The grain pools in western Canada were formed in order to market grain and protect farmers from the line elevator companies that were gouging them, but now they have effectively become a part of all phases of the industry. The pools assist the farmer in getting seed, fertilizer and chemicals; they help him transport the grain to market; they help finance the farmer and keep the cash flow available when necessary or when a small farmer could not afford it, and they enable the farmer to keep going when it takes too long for him to get money back from the point of export.

Will Canagrex fulfil these requirements of the industry? Will it help the farmer? The minister said that it will provide markets and that it will help to process the product and put it out for sale.

Clause 14(1) of the bill reads as follows:

Canagrex is established for the purposes of promoting, facilitating and engaging in the export of agricultural products and services and food products and services from Canada to other countries—

Subclause (a) reads:

(a) purchase agricultural products and food products and package, process, store, ship, insure, import, export or sell or otherwise dispose of products purchased by it;—

That is a pretty large order, Mr. Speaker. Will it all be done to help the farmer? We have a tendency to say that because this is a Crown corporation it is there for the benefit of the producer and the country, but will it be there for the benefit of the farmer? Will it help the farmer realize at least the cost of production of his product?

At committee stage we will attempt to ensure that the farmer/producer is protected in this structure, which may turn out to be mammoth and so far from the government that we will be unable to find out what it is doing and why.

Clause 2 of the bill sets out the limits of power and states specifically what Canagrex will not do. I think that is a little dangerous. That clause reads as follows:

Notwithstanding anything in this act, Canagrex shall not (a) pay to producers or processors a subsidy directly on any Canadian agricultural product or food product;—

That point is emphasized later in the bill, but nowhere does it say that Canagrex will cease to operate if its operation is detrimental to the welfare of the producer. We all know of monolithic steamrollers in some corporations which cannot be stopped. They will go on doing what they think they were set up to do, even if it is at the expense of the citizens of the country.

As reported on page 14288 of Hansard, the Minister of Agriculture said:

I know I can count on the support of this chamber to give swift approval to this bill so that we can take this next important step in the development of the agriculture and food industry . . . Perhaps we can even pass the bill in its entirety this evening, give it second and third reading, and away we go!

I think this irresponsibility on the part of the minister is why it has taken so long for this piece of legislation to be brought before the House. He expects a lot, if he expects hon. members on this side of the House—and I hope those on that side of the House—to proceed without some assurance that producers will be protected. It is a good idea to sell all this food and farm produce, but if in the process we eliminate farmers, where will we get those products from?

The Canadian Wheat Board is not a Crown corporation; sometimes I am very thankful for that.

Mr. Neil: Some people want to make it one.

Mr. Hovdebo: I hope not. I should like to paraphrase the mandate of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is to sell producers' grain and to move that grain to export—and a certain amount of it domestically as well—so as to get the best possible benefit for producers. The minister did not mention such a mandate for Canagrex in his speech, in fact it is not even mentioned in the bill. Although I know the vagaries of politics and governments, I think it would have been worth something if Canagrex had such a mandate.

The major objective of the industry is getting the product to market. In this we have a parallel which cannot be overlooked. In the grain industry the government is showing its colours. I should like to take a minute to look at what is happening, as far as government performance is concerned, in present and future grain movement, as well as how it has or will benefit producers. Central to any discussion on developing markets for Canadian export is the matter of supply. In the words of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, "You cannot sell more product than you have got on the shelf".

I have looked at the performance of the Canadian Wheat Board during the last two years that I have been a Member of Parliament. I have found that the message which has been given to farmers fairly consistently over that period of time has been, in two words, grow more. I believe it is important to underline this message for the benefit of the Canadian public because the public has been misled time and again by the slick, manipulative campaign orchestrated by the railways, bulk shippers and lobby groups which have consistently painted the transportation system as the villain in the choked-up supply of moving Canadian grains to market.

In truth, as is often the case when major Canadian corporations begin to manipulate the media, the answer lies elsewhere. I am sorry the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) left the House. He has been a captive of his own department and of the railways on this issue. Despite his latter day conversion to statutory rates which can be raised as he pleases, he believes that the present transportation system based on the Crow rate inhibits exports, yet he has only to look at the evidence provided by the Canadian Wheat Board. The evidence indicated that we moved a tremendous amount of grain last year. This year the target is 26 million tonnes, and we were right on target at the end of December.

On November 28, 1980, the Minister of State referred to these targets in a public statement to the Alberta Wheat Pool annual meeting and added:

I know you are now planning your production for next spring and I urge you to expand because the Canadian Wheat Board will be able to sell it.

After he saw the results of his admonition to the public, he said:

With such encouraging market prospects and a transportation system ahead of the game, farmers should do everything practical on their own farms to increase production.

On July 31 of last year, the minister reviewed the fruits of his exhortations and said:

With present prospects for a high level of production this year, particularly in wheat and barley, I am expecting we will set new records in the movement and export of these crops—

Canagrex should be able to take care of or take advantage of the basic, solid transportation system which was established by the efforts of the Canadian Wheat Board and other agencies involved in the transportation of grain.

What kind of relationship does the government have with the grain industry? It may be the same kind of relationship which the government will have with Canagrex. If the government, as it suggested, changes the Crow rate, what will happen? The answer is simple. Farmers will be paying substantially more to move their grain; they will cut their losses by growing less; they will apply less fertilizers and less chemicals; they will plant less seed and will harvest less. Production will drop. The target of approximately 30 million tonnes for grain exports, which was not so easily attainable a couple of years ago, will go by the board. This is not what the government wants, but it is what it will get. Those of us who have fought to keep the Crow rate will recognize these factors. Those who have fought to take away the Crow rate will have succeeded, but at the cost of reduced exports and reduced incomes for western Canadians.

Before such a momentous step is taken, we should take a good look at the trust we have put into government legislation, legislation which will pass the Canagrex Act. In 1925 the rates were made statutory and were established. It was an economic act which was of benefit to Canadian farmers, the same way as the Railway Act gave the mineral rights on thousands of acres of land to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

What happens if this Crow rate is changed? What happens, for instance, to things such as the livestock industry? It is often touted that livestock production is an alternate to the production of grain. If the production of grain is reduced, so will the production of cattle be reduced. If the government were so rash as to adopt the measure produced by Carl Snavely in his latest update of grain movement, livestock production would have to increase by 350 per cent to offset the grain losses in western Canada. This is a very poor joke to those who are now in the livestock business in western Canada where oversupply and low prices have put that industry in long-standing difficulty.

A major part of Canagrex has to do with the processing, the packaging and the storing within the industry. Again, time will not allow me to elaborate on this, but the minister has said that they must be prepared to the extent that Canagrex would go into these phases. We must look into those to the extent to which money will be spent on processing when we examine this bill in committee. Where will that money come from? Will it come from the producers? The government is putting very little money into Canagrex. As the hon. member for Elgin pointed out, it is so little money that it will be very difficult for Canagrex to operate. In order to build up its financial resources, where will that money come from? Will it come from the producer? If that is the case, we will be doing a disservice to the group that we are pretending to help.

Who will guarantee that Canagrex will not follow the lead of Eldorado, another federal Crown corporation, and spend almost $90 million to upgrade its operation? In the last five years, Eldorado has spent $88.7 million to upgrade its operation, and just a month ago it cashed it in. Where did that money come from? It came from the taxpayers. If this happens to Canagrex, where will the money come from? It will come from the producers.

The hon. member for Elgin also did a most adequate job of pointing out the shortage of funds from the minister's minimum standard when he originally set up the bill. There is a great danger that the corporation may attempt to reach those minimums with money from its operation. If that happens, it will be at the expense of the producer. Unfortunately, the structure of Canagrex lacks any original relationship with the producers of the products it intends to sell. Only normal commercial relationships will apply. Unfortunately for Canagrex, many other companies, often substantially more expert in their ability, are already marketing farm products.

Further, Canagex unlike the Canadian Wheat Board, cannot offer producers advantages of price pooling. Therefore, it cannot ask the producer for commitments of a locked-in supply. Canagrex must compete with other suppliers in the export trade. Since the corporation will have no locked-in supply, it will not be in a position to offer anything for sale. It will have nothing to sell, except in those areas where there are new products being put on the market. In those areas there will be new processes and volumes will be small. Canagrex is designed to be small-time forever and ever. It will have to compete with people who are already in the field.

Canada must compete with the sale of new products, but it is hardly a way to establish Canada as a leading exporter. In addition, the lack of agreement to promote single desk selling and price pooling could very well lead to the abuse of the producers that Canagrex is supposed to help. Agricultural production is often cyclical, particularly in thin markets. For example, the price of rapeseed rose enormously from less than $2 to more than $10 in 1972-1973.

Where in this legislation is there any guidance given to Canagrex to share those windfall profits with the producers? I find none. Where in the bill does it demonstrate that Canagrex can be more than a trading company that is backed by the government? Again, I find none. Where in this legislation does it demonstrate, after the prolonged gestation of the bill, that Canadian farmers should regard Canagrex as a friend in the way that the Canadian Wheat Board is regarded? Again, I can find no such guarantee.

On the whole, although the idea of Canagrex is good, there is no way that we as Members of Parliament can allow it to become law without some assurance that Canagrex protects the people it is supposed to help.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I consider it both a pleasure and a privilege to rise this afternoon and address this House on second reading of Bill C-85, to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote the export of food products from Canada. This bill is being introduced at a most appropriate moment for our agricultural industry, for all the people who are connected with this industry unanimously agree that the 1980s will be the decade for agricultural and food production in Canada and the rest of the world. Just as the 1970s have been the decade for oil and energy, the 1980s will be, in my opinion and in the opinion of a great many people, the decade of food production.

We need only take a look at the figures which are increasing year after year. For instance, farm revenues from all categories reached $18.4 billion in 1981 and are expected to increase by 4 per cent to $19.2 billion in 1982. This means that there is a constant growth in this industry. It is worth mentioning that there will be some 30.7 million people living in Canada by year 2000, and this is one third more than in 1981, and that the world population will increase by as much as 55 per cent. One can already visualize the impact this population explosion will have on the demand for farm and food products. In order to meet this huge challenge, the Canadian agricultural and food industry must be provided with a dynamic understructure which will help maximize its enormous potential. Food production in Canada could increase by as much as two thirds between now and the year 2000 and bring in revenues of some $35 billion in today's dollars, thus placing Canada in a particularly privileged position.

Mr. Speaker, in this great country which is Canada, we are indeed extremely wealthy, thanks to the ability of our farmers and the diversification of our agricultural production. Our potential for farm development is limitless. And Canada is already considered as one of the few net exporters of foodstuffs. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has been visiting Canada and the world for a great many years and he is proud to be able to say that Canada has become a net exporter of foodstuffs. And now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with some of the questions that were raised. A while ago, I heard the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) suggest that he knew of no legislation or benefit the minister ever gave the agricultural industry. If I were to list everything the Minister has done for agriculture over the past ten years, Mr. Speaker, I would not have enough of the time allotted to me.

I would simply like to name a few. There are the Agricultural Products Board, the Agricultural Stabilization Board, the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Dairy Commission, the marketing boards, the cost-sharing plans, and so on. A while ago, my colleague opposite, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), said that Canagrex would definitely be prejudicial to existing organizations such as the Canadian Wheat Board and others, but I must tell him, as the minister did in his speech and as reported in Hansard, that Canagrex would in no way affect the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission, which are already established, but if necessary Canagrex could assist—and this is for the information of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who is smiling—the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission.

I think that both organizations, of which we can be proud, have done some excellent work. One only has to recall the years 1973 and 1974, and perhaps 1975, when the dairy industry in Canada, and more especially in Quebec as well as in Ontario, faced some problems. At that time, this same Minister of Agriculture set up the Canadian Dairy Commission and cost-sharing plans were approved in each province. A marketing board, the Canadian Dairy Commission, has been controlling that production and today Canadian farmers, especially milk producers, are proud of the Canadian Dairy Commission.

I say therefore to my colleague for Prince Albert that Canagrex will in no way affect or be prejudicial to existing organizations. I would also urge the hon. member for Prince Albert to examine the report which has surely been sent to his office by the Department of Agriculture and is entitled: "Challenge for Growth in the Eighties, An Agri-food Strategy for Canada." This report, prepared by the department, makes forecasts and plans for our agriculture both in eastern and in western Canada, for our grain and dairy productions, for soilless crops, and it truly reflects the intentions of the Department of Agriculture for the eighties, always, of course, in co-operation with the agricultural sector and the processing industry. I also urge my colleague for Prince Albert to read a report entitled "News and Features" that he surely has in his office since it was distributed on Monday December 7, 1981. It provides an excellent outlook on agriculture for the coming year.

In addition, every year, the minister and the department organize an Outlook Conference on agriculture which is always held in early December and in which from 600 to 700 farmers, processors, researchers, agricultural teachers and academics take part and work together to develop an agricultural policy to meet the needs of the Canadian farmer. I would also like to mention to my friend for Prince Albert, who seemed to have forgotten it a while ago, that the Department of Agriculture provides hundreds of millions of dollars every year to help farmers throughout Canada to finance their crops, whether wheat or corn. I can say, Mr. Speaker, that as far as I am concerned, I represent a largely agricultural region, the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe in the Richelieu valley, one of the best farming regions in the country. Then comes Joliette, which is one of the best farming areas—

An hon. Member: So is Valleyfield, for my colleague behind me!

An hon. Member: And Beauce also!

Mr. Ostiguy: Indeed, the hon. member for Joliette has many good farmers among his constituents. I had the opportunity to visit this constituency quite recently. I go there from time to time as I have some family in this beautiful region, and I am certain that the hon. member for Joliette, who will probably take the floor this afternoon, will also be proud to support the Canagrex bill because he also has chicken farmers, egg producers, dairy farmers and very good potato producers in his region. It is in this perspective, Mr. Speaker, that we want to support agriculture but not to eliminate surpluses, not at all, but we all know that, as I said earlier, our farmers are able to produce more and to double their production. We are a small nation of 25 million people and we are able to produce food to feed the world population, we can do our share to help developing countries or those that are still known as underdeveloped countries.

I too have had the opportunity in the last few months of travelling abroad, in places as far as Bangladesh, for instance, where, I can assure you, the only possible crop is rice. But other food products are needed: meat, milk and so on. Canada is a net exporter of dairy products, milk, powdered milk, condensed milk, butter, cheese, and grain. We want our western farmers to increase their grain production. We also have farmers who produce without land: they breed pigs; in fact we produce 140 per cent of what we need and therefore we are overproducing. We also have very good poultry and egg producers and so we are exporting. Canagrex will help small processing plants to find markets, Mr. Speaker. In the last few weeks, I had the opportunity of meeting representatives from Middle East countries who were visiting Canada; they were interested in buying Canadian farm products. We were asked if we had, like Mexico, an agency that would handle the trade because, as we know, some countries would rather trade on a country to country basis. Thus, Mr. Speaker, Canagrex will fill the void, the void between the processing plants or rather, the processors and potential buyers of Canadian products.

Mr. Speaker, a few years back when I was a member of the Quebec National Assembly I had a chance to speak on a somewhat similar bill under which the then government proposed to set up the SOQUIA Corporation. I can say that the Corporation is doing very useful work within Quebec. Certainly Canagrex would not have exactly as the same role as SOQUIA but the goals are almost identical, namely, to help first the farmers and second the processors. As far as I know, SOQUIA did not get very much involved in the export of agricultural and food products. But surely with the co-operation of the provinces and of such a body as SOQUIA in Quebec, Canagrex will complete that network that is so important for the welfare of our Canadian agriculture.

In 1980, we had a $3.5 billion agri-food trade surplus, accounting for 75 per cent of the total Canadian trade surplus. In order to add to that positive tendency in our agricultural sector and enable Canada to meet the strong demand which is anticipated, the Department of Agriculture has adopted, as I stated earlier, an agri-food strategy based on three main aspects requiring co-operation and consultation. Those three aspects are most important, Mr. Speaker. First there is the processing of resources, second, the development of markets, and third, thematic agricultural research. Coming back to the processing of resources, we know that Canada must take into account the existing markets if we are to process the full range of our national resources through regional research and development. Farm production is affected by the policies of several federal departments. Further, the Canadian government and the provinces, as I said, share the responsibility for preserving and developing our resources. The provincial role is especially significant because the resources of this land and the advisory services fall within their jurisdiction. Consultation, liasion and co-operation within the federal government and with provinces are the key elements of that strategy. And in order to promote productive investments, the resource processing strategy must ensure technological progress through further research and the application of experimental results, combined with the necessary incentives.

Then there is the development of markets. The government has always contributed its effort to the development of better outlets for Canadian goods on foreign markets. During the last round of multilateral trade talks, Canada succeeded in reducing tariff barriers and securing for a great number of our Canadian farm products better access to foreign markets. Simultaneously, greater protection has been negotiated for part of our major garden crops. Thematic research is definitely an aspect that has always been a most vital concern of the Department of Agriculture, since more than $200 million are allocated to research in agri-food and agricultural research in Canada, but the Department of Agriculture will need more money to better promote that research. I would not say we are lagging behind, but we are not yet at the forefront as far as our research needs are concerned.

I have just highlighted a few aspects of that challenging strategy, but still it must rest on a structure which is both flexible and tailored to Canada's agricultural reality. Mr. Speaker, it is in that framework that the establishment of Canagrex gains its full significance. In a way, everything that has been done for the Canadian industry over the past ten years will be hallmarked today by the adoption of such an important bill. I am convinced that the Minister of Agriculture as well as hon. members on both sides of the House, whether they spoke before or will speak after me, will explain the need for Canagrex as well as its objectives and its mandate. Personally, Mr. Speaker, during the few minutes at my disposal I would like to outline the make-up, the type of financing which the new corporation will be adopting.

First of all, the corporation will be headed by a chairman of the board and a president who will be his senior director, and an advisory committee to the Minister of Agriculture. The board of directors will set up its own subcommittees as required. During the first few years of Canagrex a team of monitors from the Agriculture Canada marketing and economics branch will be responsible for finding challenging marketing projects and taking a first look at the projects submitted by farmers, marketing agencies, co-operatives, provincial governments, processors or any other body related to the agricultural food sector.

The board of directors will have 11 members who, like its chairman, will be appointed by the governor in council upon the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture. Most members will be selected among farmers known as leaders in their respective fields.

A moment earlier I heard the hon. member for Prince Albert say that farmers would not be appointed to the board of Canagrex. Not quite, because there will be farmers among the 11 appointed members. The board will also include spokesmen for the agricultural food industries and businessmen fully cognizant of export markets and experienced in banking, credit, insurance and foreign markets. It has also been proposed that the federal departments of agriculture and international trade be represented on the board which will be authorized to approve the projects. I heard my colleague opposite, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), say that he could not understand how Canagrex could possibly be connected with three different departments—agriculture, industry and commerce, and external affairs—and still manage to operate smoothly. I will explain to him. First, Agriculture Canada represents the agricultural community and the food processing industry. Second, Industry, Trade and Commerce represents the processing aspect of it, namely the manufacturing sector. Finally, External Affairs has a whole network of embassies throughout the world, and therefore Canagrex, through its board of directors, will dispatch its people to those embassies to work with their trade attachés to promote Canadian agricultural products. The hon. member for Elgin said something else which really surprised me, and I am quite sure that he did not really mean it. I quote from his speech of Monday last which can be found on page 14290 of Hansard:

> How do we ensure the board of directors of Canagrex is composed of qualified people? These people are not around the country in great numbers.

I was taken aback by those remarks, because we do have good managers in this country, good experienced farmers, and good food processors. The hon. member for Elgin, the former minister of Agriculture, tells us that qualified people in this country are not in great numbers.

And he said further and I quote:

> It is extremely important that we secure well-qualified people, people who are ready to work and are capable of taking appropriate action.

I really do think the hon. member for Elgin did not really meant that, and I am convinced of it because otherwise it would be an insult to our farmers, to our farming community and indeed, to all Canadians.

• (1710)

So there will also be an advisory committee made up of representatives from all parts of the agricultural community. It will be placed under the direct authority of the Minister of Agriculture in order to ensure that the corporation's policies are consistent with the global Canadian strategy in matters of trade and production. Agriculture Canada will provide administrative services to this advisory committee which will include representatives besides those I mentioned a minute ago, from provincial governments, marketing boards, co-operatives, federal departments and services, the business community, farmers and consumers. I believe this wide range of representation will meet with the approval of my colleague from the other side, the hon. member for Joliette. As far as we are concerned, we have qualified people in our country.

Regarding the financial aspect, Mr. Speaker, Canagrex will be a Crown corporation established under Schedule C. It will have an annual budget appropriated by Parliament. The corporation will require a total investment of $12.3 million for its first three years of operation. It has been pointed out that the minister had said it would be a higher amount, and we now realize it will be only $12.3 million. I think the hon. member on this side who spoke before me has put it very aptly when he said you have to learn to walk before being able to run. Of course, during the first year, Canagrex will have to build up its structure. However, this corporation does not need a staff of 200 to run its operations. What we need is qualified people and I am sure we will have them. During the first year, only a few people will be enough to get the corporation going. Canagrex will establish a fund to which any benefit from joint ventures as well as loans or guarantees repaid to the corporation will be credited. Canagrex will deposit into this account all moneys paid to it as a result of joint ventures as well as reimbursements of loans and guaranties. Canagrex will be able to pay for its expenditures out of the financial transactions account.

When Canagrex is fully cost effective, it may borrow money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The contingent liabilities from the guarantees are limited to $75 million, of course. Certain limits will be provided for each loan, grant and loan guarantee. The due dates, the interest rates, the schedules for reimbursement and the other terms and conditions or applicable costs will also meet with the criteria for government programs or any other criterion authorized by the government.

Considering that it will take some time to make Canagrex operational and to hire the number of experts needed, it is imperative that we establish this corporation as soon as possible. Of course, Canagrex will operate under the new Crown Corporations Act providing that the said corporations will have to submit to the Treasury Board five-year plans which would be updated every year.

Furthermore, as far as the operation of the corporation is concerned, the advisory board will have to submit every year to the minister a marketing strategy for the next three years. The board will define its strategy on the basis of data provided by Agriculture Canada, the Department of International Trade, the provinces, and by the agricultural industry and private industry. That amalgamation of a variety of general data and interests will allow for the development of a practical and enlightened strategy. Canagrex should normally strive to develop foreign markets as well as new and existing agri-food products. I also heard earlier the hon. member for Prince Albert say that we should have new products. I think we shall begin with those we have. I indicated earlier a great number of products that we can export on the international market as early as tomorrow even if—and I commend them for that—pork processors are already exporting to the United States and supplying the very large Japanese market. This does not mean that at a given time they will not be pleased to have an organization such as Canagrex help them on the international market where conditions are sometimes very difficult, and I had the opportunity to discuss this matter with them.

Each year, the directors of Canagrex shall prepare a three-year corporate plan. The plan shall set forth its purposes and objectives, its target markets as well as the products to be dealt with in the years covered by the plan. The whole plan once approved will serve as a basis for the preparation of the annual operating and capital budget that Canagrex shall submit to the Minister of Agriculture for Treasury Board approval. In fact, Canagrex shall have to show through studies and other analyses that the projects proposed in the yearly plans are economically feasible and are likely to become profitable within a reasonable period of time. Finally, each year, the board of directors shall make a report on its activities which the minister will table in Parliament.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with all the provisions included in Bill C-85, as a Member of Parliament representing a rural riding where agriculture is of the utmost importance, where processing plants are on the increase, where agriculture is most diversified, I am convinced that Canagrex will make a most valuable contribution to the Canadian agricultural sector and processing industry. As I said a minute ago, this is an over view of this structure, Mr. Speaker, and I hope members opposite will not delay their approval of this bill which, once again, as I said earlier, will enhance the role of Canadian agriculture. I should like to end my remarks with these words, Mr. Speaker. The people in the Middle East are often referred to as the oil-rich Arabs. I say that Canadians, in the 1980s, will be the Arabs of agriculture and agri-food products.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, just now the member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) challenged the members on the opposite side, that is, the government members, regarding measures taken by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who has been in charge of this department for about ten years.

[English]

As a result of that challenge, I would seek the consent of the House, in order to avoid having to read the full list of accomplishments of the Minister of Agriculture, which number more than 50 during his tenure, to simply revert to Orders of the Day in order to table this document and perhaps obtain the consent of members of the House to have it appended to this day's Hansard.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I think that is completely out of order. It is a point of argument. I do not think there are many provisions under our rules which would allow the tabling of such a document by a minister.

• (1720)

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I will go through the list. The establishment of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, the establishment of the National Turkey Marketing Agency—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I thought when the minister sought unanimous consent he was on the right track, standing as he did on a point of order. But I do not think we can have him read a list of accomplishments. As he suggested, I will seek to know whether there is unanimous consent for the minister to revert to motions in order to lay upon the table a certain list of accomplishments.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has already made a speech. I would like to ask the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) to take part in this debate, and he would, of course, have an opportunity to speak for the Minister of Agriculture on the comments made earlier by my hon. colleague.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments and I was hoping that the mood would be a little less aggressive than it was yesterday evening—after all, no one day is the same. However, bills and debates do not seem to change. On the other side of the House I sense great enthusiasm for this proposal to establish a Crown corporation for the export of agricultural products. I believe there is no problem as to the principle. In times like these, and in view of the problems with which our producers are faced, I feel there should be no objection to adding a new instrument for agricultural development to those that already exist, or to having a mechanism for promoting exports of our agricultural products. However, although we have no basic objection to this new concept, I do have some reservations because it is a new organizational structure, and because we do not know exactly what this other new structure is the government announced recently, which is based on the concept of reorganizing the country's economic development by consolidating the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, while the Department of External Affairs is also involved—some ministers are going down a few notches while others may not be getting anything out of the new structure, I am not quite sure about this and in any case we do not know what exactly is involved.

The Prime Minister himself (Mr. Trudeau) had a lot of trouble explaining on television what this new economic development tool was supposed to be. In any case, it seems that the government intends to set up a rather extraordinary organization. Since we do not know exactly what the role of the new organization will be, the question arises whether the Crown corporation we are discussing could not have been integrated into this larger organization. With many other colleagues on this side of the House, I feel that when the bill is considered in committee, we will be able to have a far better idea of what is involved than we can from a short press release and a few understandably enthusiastic comments by government members.

This reservation is necessary, I believe, with respect to the importance that will be given to and the cost involved in this new economic development structure which, besides, seems to bring about a fundamental change in the role played by the Department of External Affairs. When considering the legislation in committee, we will be in a position, on this side of the House anyway, to ask relevant questions, because there should be some kind of relationship when we deal with economic development; agriculture cannot be totally set apart, and it is important for us, it is important for Quebec as well as for my riding. The minister has left the House for a few minutes, and I wanted to thank him for honouring me with his presence, not too long ago, in my riding. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Ostiguy) for one has stated that he had been in my riding some time ago to meet with a few producers. This made me wonder all of a sudden about what was happening, last summer, because I had so many visits, Mr. Speaker. I represent a rural riding and agriculture seems to concern more people than ever, but those were very short visits. I will not go any further into this, Mr. Speaker.

In my riding, of course, there are many producers who will be interested in any proposal likely to promote our agricultural markets. Dairy producers are important in our area, as well as farmers involved in the production of fruits, vegetables, potatoes, pork, eggs, chicken and so on. Let us hope that maple syrup producers, for instance, will be able to sell their products through this new agency. It would be a good thing to see those producers who presently have big problems take advantage of this agency once it is in operation.

The second reservation I wanted to make right now, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister had a much broader idea in mind than what the Parliamentary Secretary explained to us today. According to the minister, some $60 million would be necessary to create this agency, which could give employment to 120 or 125 people, I think. Of course, there seemed to be a relation between the importance of this new corporation and the number of employees and the budget it would require. The hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) feels sorry that this legislation has been introduced so late, but it is certainly not our fault. I think this time we did not hold up the introduction of this bill. Apparently the minister intended to introduce this piece of legislation 11 months ago and at that time the budget and the number of employees would have been greater than provided for in this legislation. Here we are dealing with $12 million and four or five employees. Then I wonder whether the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture stated all the truth when he told us that for the first year Canagrex would be a rather modest operation, or rather whether the minister could not get the credits he wanted from the cabinet. Indeed, it would not have been the first time that the Minister of Agriculture had failed to obtain what he needed to promote the industry he represents, namely agriculture. Nevertheless, we are still skeptical when we hear the government talk about such an enormous over-all plan, not to say too costly. For the time being, I do not have to wonder about that, but only about the fact that this plan could be reduced so drastically from what it was in the original proposals.

I certainly think that interesting and pertinent questions will be asked before our committee on agriculture. Earlier, I listened to the hon. member for Chicoutimi who said he was sorry that the passing of this legislation had been delayed for so long and that high interest rates made it very hard to build up inventories of agricultural products, especially where beef is concerned, and that it was much more difficult now to build up inventories than it used to be some months or some years ago because of interest costs. Such a criticism does not come from the opposition side but from a member on the government side, the hon. member for Chicoutimi, and I was happy to hear it because it confirms what we have been saying for at least the past year.

Some mention has been made—and I agree one hundred per cent—of the self-discipline that farmers have managed to show in some areas of production. More and more, they will run their business with the same discipline as that of any industrial manager. There is no doubt about that. I think that producers have demonstrated a lot of interest and compliance in agreeing to all these plans which today allow us a better control over our production in relation to our market needs. This is the only way to go. It is also relevant to emphasize the importance of food production on a global scale and to note our country's ability to meet this ever-increasing demand which, incidentally, will give our producers the opportunity to increase their incomes. I repeat, any proposition concerned with the promotion of this objective is worth consideration.

It has been said that this corporation will not replace existing agencies such as the Canadian Dairy Commission, the Canadian Wheat Board or other marketing boards, but the minister also said in his speech that if they ever needed help from this corporation they would be welcome to it. At this stage, it is not intended to act as a substitute for existing agencies but should the need arise, it could help them out. I think that when this bill goes through the committee stage, the minister will be asked some pretty interesting questions. Promoting the export of our agricultural products and increasing our exportations is certainly a worthy aim which all hon. members should support. I repeat that there appears to be a consensus as far as the principle is concerned.

In view of the present problems of our producers, I believe that any positive action to promote ever better agricultural production will always be well received on this side of the House, because I do not think, as you must understand, Mr. Speaker, that the recent budget can help our agriculture to start on the road to recovery. We are well aware, and other members have emphasized this before me, of the difficulties now facing our farmers. I know quite well, for instance, that the Minister of Agriculture tried to get much more money to bolster the Farm Credit Fund than he was able to obtain at this time.

We know that the farmers are extremely discouraged by the budget proposals. I therefore take this opportunity to remind the minister of the difficulties facing the farmers. He must understand that a sustained effort must be made for the farmers and those in difficulty. Of course, I shall be told that the budget includes a proposal to save those who are already going under, but they will not be saved completely. There is nothing to protect those who will go under in a short time. Those members who are at least interested in farming and who live in rural constituencies are also aware of the difficulties facing many other sectors such as hog producers and dairy farmers. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ostiguy) mentioned the problems faced by these producers in 1973, and which I recall quite well. There is also room for improvement in other areas, and I say once again that any worth-while measure will be well received.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the board of directors. It appears that there will be 11 directors under the responsibility of the minister, of course, and that seven will be selected outside the public service. I do not know if ability will come before political stripe, as this is not written in the bill. The parliamentary secretary expressed concern earlier about the comments made by my colleague, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), to the effect that there were not enough qualified people to—

Mr. Laniel: Please apologize!

Mr. La Salle: I think I can explain why my colleague said that. He is concerned about the level of competence of the directors because he does feel, as I do, that the people to be appointed to the board will probably be bosom friends of those in power. That explains his concern.

Mr. Whelan: How could you imagine such a thing?

Mr. La Salle: Furthermore, if I understood him correctly, the minister gave me the assurance that people from both political stripes would be appointed to the executive committee. We will make sure of that. Also provincial representatives of the business community and farm organizations will sit on the advisory committee. I do not know if all provinces will be represented on it. Naturally, I hope so, and I would like the minister to realize the importance of provincial representation. I think it is important to have a dialogue with all the provinces, including the province of Quebec, and that the business community participate in those negotiations, in those consultations with farm organizations. In that respect, I would be pleased to hear in committee, which organizations the minister intends to have represented on the advisory committee.

I think those representatives should be chosen very carefully, since this corporation will have the responsibility of promoting our agriculture as well as our farm products abroad. Understandably, those people must be picked very carefully and board and advisory committee members should be selected on the basis of their skills and their experience in agriculture. And I shall insist on the presence and representation of the provinces. As the minister is probably aware, there is a tendency to emphasize the federal presence or even to centralize when all the provinces are concerned. I hope that this corporation will respect the provinces and provincial priorities as concerns their farm legislation. I hope that all other federal departments will follow suit, since such dialogue, negotiation and consultation with the provinces is essential in such a crucial area as agriculture.

Those were the few remarks I wished to make, Mr. Speaker, regarding that new corporation which has, I think, a most significant mandate. It will be much easier to consider such a bill in detail in committee. Certainly it will be easier to get answers to our questions when we can question the minister in committee, and if he can explain what will be the structure of the new Department of International Trade and External Affairs, we will be able to understand how important the new corporation will be. But since to date we have not been getting enough explanation on this new organization for regional economic development, we have every reason to have our reservations concerning this future organization.

If we could be convinced that this agency will be of a great help to our farmers, we would not hesitate as this party has always been favourable to farmers and has always done its best so that our agricultural community would have a greater importance within our domestic economy, and so that our farmers get reasonable benefits from the profession they have chosen. I believe there is no question about that and I hope that we will soon go into committee, but I know that some of my colleagues want to participate in this debate. I believe this is perfectly justified in view of the importance this party attaches to the future of agriculture in Canada.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is an auspicious day for Canadian agriculture and trade as we meet for second reading of the legislation that would bring Canagrex, the Canadian Agricultural Export Corporation, into being. I should like to commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) for his efforts in promoting this corporation and for his expediency in introducing this legislation to establish Canagrex. I want to point out that over and above the 50 or more accomplishments to his credit which the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) wanted to read into the record, we will soon be able to add this important piece of legislation to his achievements as Minister of Agriculture.

The bill we are considering fulfils in large part the government's promise of developing the same reputation in markets for all Canadian agricultural products which this country enjoys in grain handling. It is also consistent with many of the recommendations made in the agri-food discussion paper "Challenge for Growth" which has clearly identified the need to supply and develop markets for all our agri-food products. Moreover, the international climate is ripe for Canada to take on a more active role in promoting the sale of its food products abroad.

As we enter the third year of this decade, it is becoming more clear all the time that the eighties have all the makings of becoming the decade of food production, much as the 1970s were known as the energy years.

Worldwide demand for food will have serious political, social and economic repercussions unless nations such as Canada, one of the four net exporting nations of food products, are able to boost food supplies.

World population is increasing by 75 million to 80 million per year, and food production will most likely not keep pace with this increase in world population. Canada must take on the challenge of expanding its food production to meet world demand, not only for its own sake but also as a responsibility toward those countries that depend on the exporting nations to feed their people. Food is, after all, man's most basic need and unless exporting nations capitalize on their potential to produce and export food products and understand more fully the requirements of each country, they risk triggering a crisis that is far worse than the energy crisis we knew.

Agri-food is the natural resource that offers the most hope for mankind and, as far as Canada is concerned, we have much to gain by developing this resource, because not only is it renewable but the agri-food industry has the potential for tremendous expansion. Optimistic estimates indicate that Canada will be able to increase its food production by two thirds in the next two decades. If we can develop the market for our agri-food products and meet wheat export targets of 36 million tonnes by 1990, agriculture may become the cornerstone of our economy. We will not only have expanded our agricultural base, but will have diversified it as well by opening new markets for products that have never in the past been competitive internationally.

At a Financial Post conference on agri-business in Toronto last fall, one participant predicted that if world population grew as predicted, Canadian food producers may have to supply 80 million new customers every year. However, in order to meet future demand, we require a thorough understanding on overview of world markets, a strategy to supply those markets, and the ability to do so comprehensively and consistently. Canagrex can make a big difference, serving as the focal point for various agricultural marketing efforts with the capacity to carry through on the long-term, higher-risk ventures.

Extensive discussions, analysis and a sense of commitment to improving Canada's export capability and track record have brought us to this stage today. It has been a lengthy but a worth-while process.

The idea of forming such a Crown corporation was first discussed by the Minister of Agriculture and representatives of farm organizations in 1978.

Canagrex has been widely discussed across Canada since the announcement of its planned formation in the Speech from the Throne in April, 1980. Comments from all sectors of the food and agriculture industry have been favourable. This is significant because Canagrex is expected to work closely with all sectors of the industry, including private firms, co-operatives, marketing boards, and individuals, to reinforce the export capability of the food and agriculture industry.

It should be borne in mind that the government, through Canagrex, wishes to encourage additional exports, not to duplicate the existing efforts of firms presently doing a good job. But Canagrex would have a necessary and important role as a co-ordinator of marketing thrusts across the country.

Canagrex will enable us to consolidate and intensify our efforts much more than we have in the past. This is essential if we wish to live up to our potential in food production. Canadians consume only part of our food production, and unless a serious attempt is made at selling these products abroad, the industry at home will never have the opportunity to grow.

By establishing an agricultural export corporation, we will develop an expertise we have never known in agri-food production and marketing. It goes without saying that if the agri-food sector is strong, then research in this area will also increase and improve. Furthermore, input into Canagrex will come from the business community, farm organizations and government, so that it represents the interests of all parties who have a part to play in agri-food production.

Support for Canagrex is strong across the country. On numerous occasions, there has been unanimous support for its creation by provincial ministers of agriculture. The farming community, too, favours the establishment of Canagrex. Farm organizations such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers Union, have repeatedly called for an agricultural export corporation. As well, a number of private companies and industry groups have expressed interest and support for a stronger federal role in agricultural export efforts. This of course, Mr. Speaker, is not surprising given that a better export capability for food and agricultural products will, in turn, facilitate an expansion of Canadian agricultural production and increase to the industry.

If Canada is to put more emphasis on trade, one of our first responsibilities should be to focus on areas of strength, and agriculture is no doubt at the top of the list. There is nothing unusual about the establishment of a Crown trading corporation.

Industrialized nations have come to realize that in order to compete more effectively in world markets, they must co-ordinate or even centralize their activities. The Canadian government has taken such an initiative in other sectors in order to improve trade relations with other countries by establishing, for instance, the Canada Development Corporation, the Export Development Corporation, the Canadian Commercial Corporation and even Petro-Canada.

It is already a known fact that many countries prefer or even insist on negotiating trade deals with governments of other countries either directly or through Crown corporations or government agencies. This is especially so in commercial relations with east European countries and with the developing countries. We may reach the point, if we have not already done so, that the success of our trade relations with the east and the Third World will depend on how much interest the government has in the corporation that is doing the trading. For example, in 1973, when the Hon. Donald Macdonald attempted to negotiate a deal with the Venezuelan government, the latter specified that it was prepared to sign a deal with the Canadian Crown corporation, but not if a private oil company was involved. There are many other instances where countries have either hesitated or refused to sign deals with Canada, unless it was under the auspices of a Crown corporation. This has been a feature when signing energy deals with other countries such as with Mexico. The trend is likely to continue, especially when it concerns exports which are vital to human subsistence, such as food products.

Private industry itself has begun to recognize the importance of Crown corporations and government agencies in opening markets and in promoting and selling their products abroad. Rather than viewing these corporations as competitors, they have accepted them as important allies and partners in export markets. Canagrex will not only demonstrate the federal leadership that has been called for, but it will help to develop the agricultural potential which exists in all provinces to produce and market abroad more raw and processed food and agricultural products.

In addition to helping develop a firmer partnership between industry and government in marketing, Canagrex will act as a unifying force in Canada. It is conceivable that we may have missed significant trade opportunities in the past, opportunities that we may have taken more advantage of if Canagrex had been in place. For example, it is possible that our exports of seed potatoes to Portugal would have been enhanced through a joint venture involving Canagrex. Algeria has indicated that it would prefer to deal with an organization such as Canagrex for importing a number of agricultural commodities. A potential sale of livestock to Spain was lost because we could not match the terms and conditions offered by our competitors. Canagrex will be more attuned to the market requirements of a wide array of countries and products. Very simply, we cannot knock on doors unless we can deliver. Without Canagrex we have not been able to market our products as aggressively as world competition demands and as we could have done and will be able to do with Canagrex in place.

Our agricultural trade missions to such places as Egypt have been fruitful, but we have not been able to conclude significant deals without an organization in place to carry through with providing the link between industry and government to deliver the goods. Therefore, it is clear that the legislation with which we are dealing today and its adoption by the House will have a great impact upon Canada's ability to improve its balance of trade, its marketing efficiency and its role as a provider of food to a growing world population.

Canagrex enjoys considerable support outside the House. I would sincerely hope that it would continue to enjoy similar support from hon. members today. Members have already indicated an appreciation for what Canagrex has to offer when they waived the traditional waiting period to give unanimous approval for first reading of Bill C-85. For years we have seen export sales opportunities slip through our fingers because there was not a mechanism in place to provide the help needed to close deals on the scale involved. With the support of hon. members, such losses can now be a thing of the past. I urge every hon. member to approve this bill without delay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have sat here this afternoon and listened with considerable interest to the debate which has taken place. I thought to myself that times have certainly changed in the past ten years because I heard an hon. member of the NDP severely criticize Crown corporations. I sat here and I listened to the government side which traditionally, many years ago at least, was a free enterprise party praising Crown corporations. I wondered what has happened to Parliament. It seems to me that in the last ten years we have moved toward socialism under the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Whelan: He is following Alberta's policy.

Mr. Neil: I hear the minister, but I think there is more free enterprise spirit in the province of Alberta or in the government of Alberta than there is in the Government of Canada.

Mr. Whelan: How much land does Alberta own?

Mr. Neil: At least some of us believe in the right to own land.

Mr. Whelan: Alberta owns 50 per cent of the land.

Mr. Neil: I will not get involved in an argument with the minister across the floor of the House—

Mr. Smith: Because you would lose it.

Mr. Neil: —because we are dealing with the Canagrex bill. I was interested in the attempt which was made by a minister a short time ago to bring in a list of the minister's accomplishments.

Mr. Whelan: The list was requested.

Mr. Neil: I do not believe that anyone requested that the list of the minister's accomplishments be tabled in the House. But I would assume that the minister carries that list around in his pocket all the time so that it is always available. I wonder whether he lists among his accomplishments the Meat Import Act when he was not prepared to recognize lamb as meat, when he forgot about the lamb producers in Canada and was not prepared to rise and argue that lamb should be included in the Meat Import Act. What about the metric bill? He was involved in the metric bill as the minister when they made changes for the Canadian Grain Commission.

Mr. Whelan: That is right.

Mr. Neil: I do not think the minister understands or appreciates the feeling with respect to metric across Canada, this system of measurement which has been imposed upon Canadians by order in council.

I should like to get into the details of the bill, but I see that it is approximately two minutes before six o'clock. May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): With the unanimous consent of the House we will call it six o'clock. I do now leave the chair until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 5.58 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE POLISH CRISIS—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SUPPORT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In Poland, suppression of human rights, including the imprisonment of some 50,000 members of Solidarity, seems to be intensifying, and last Sunday, Archbishop Jozel Glemp, leader of the Catholic Church in Poland, said that continued martial law might lead to a "revolt and perhaps even civil war". I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That, in recognition of the fact that nations of the free world should present a united front in opposing martial law in Poland, this House express its disagreement with the ambivalent attitude to the Polish crisis taken by the Prime Minister, an attitude that is encouraging General Jaruzelski and the Soviets to continue their repressive action and is discouraging to the Polish people, since the Prime Minister justified the oppression of ten million Polish members of Solidarity in comparing the situation with his own use of the War Measures Act in 1970; that this House declare the words of the Prime Minister of Canada to be odious and insensitive, and that this House invite the Prime Minister to support his Secretary of State for External Affairs on this matter and that it urge him to seriously consider the evidence obtained by his minister of Soviet involvement in the imposition of martial law in Poland.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

REFUSAL TO STRIKE COIN FOR SASKATOON CENTENARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, whereas the Royal Canadian Mint has refused to strike a commemorative coin to honour Saskatoon's centennial year because it states that it has a policy of only honouring capital cities, and whereas in 1975 the city of Calgary was honoured on the occasion of its centenary by the issuance of a silver dollar—and that city, as far as I know, is not a capital—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), who hails from Saskatoon:

That this House direct the Royal Canadian Mint to strike in 1982 a commemorative coin to recognize the centenary of this penultimate, progressive, pleasant, pretty and productive city of Canada positioned where parkland meets prairie and which, incidentally, is my home town of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

SUPPORT URGED FOR NORTHERN GAMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Canada Council have sponsored a film of the Northern Games presently being shown at the Museum of Man in Ottawa, but the minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport refuses to put any money into this unique Canadian sporting event, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Government of Canada financially support the Northern Games as an international sports meeting of circumpolar nations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—IMPACT OF VIOLENCE ON PROPOSED ELECTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 concerning the forthcoming scheduled elections in El Salvador. In accordance with the resolutions adopted at the Inter-Parliamentary Conference last September, supported by the Canadian delegation, and the recommendations of the Parliamentary Sub-Committee on Latin America and the Caribbean adopted unanimously in December, and in view of the conclusions of the all-party delegation which returned this week from Central America, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House strongly urges the Canadian government to withdraw its support for holding elections in the climate of terror and violence which now exists in El Salvador and instead calls for immediate political negotiations to resolve the violence as an essential precondition for elections.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOLIDARITY FOR SOLIDARNOSC DAY

SUPPORT FOR POLISH PEOPLE'S FREEDOM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I rise seeking the attention of all hon. members of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I want to emphasize that my motion has been drafted by representatives of all three parties in the House. In view of the fact that January 30, 1982, has been declared "Solidarity Day" in the United States, and in view of the fact that on Saturday there will be mass demonstrations, coast to coast, by Canadians showing their moral support for people's freedom in Poland, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House declare Saturday, January 30, 1982, "Solidarity For Solidarność Day".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: There is unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is moved by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis), seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House declare Saturday, January 30, 1982, "Solidarity For Solidarność Day".

Does the House agree to the said motion? Agreed? Carried.

• (1410)

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I believe the seconder of the motion was the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski).

Madam Speaker: But the hon. member for Edmonton North is not in the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Very well, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I would like to speak in support of this motion.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, but the motion has already been carried.

Mr. Crosbie: But I was on my feet, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Andre: He was on his feet, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I notice that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not here to veto that motion. I was on my feet, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Andre: He was on his feet.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Nothing would please me more than to allow the hon. member to speak on the motion, but he was not on his feet fast enough. The only hon. member who was on his feet was the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and I recognized him on his point of order. I am sorry, but the motion has been carried. Therefore, I cannot allow any more speakers.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

FINAL PAYMENT FOR DURUM WHEAT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Canadian Wheat Board asking price for Durum wheat during the 1980-1981 crop year was approximately $2 per bushel higher than the asking price for Canadian red spring wheat, with the exception of a period of about two weeks, and in view of the fact that the final realized price per bushel for Durum wheat was only 47 cents per bushel higher than for Canadian red spring wheat, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie):

That the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, through his spokesman the Minister of Transport, table in this House the reasons that the final payment for Durum wheat was only 1.6 cents per bushel rather than in the $1 range.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TERRORISM

RESCUE OF U.S. BRIGADIER GENERAL BY ITALIAN SECURITY FORCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter which I feel will receive the support of all members of this House.

This morning word has been received that the Italian security forces have found and released unharmed, Brigadier General James Dozier of the United States Army, who had been kidnapped and held by terrorists, the most cowardly group of all political interventionists. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House expresses its thanks and congratulations to the Italian security forces, and expresses its best wishes to General Dozier and his family, who have suffered greatly from the cowardly actions of these criminals.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

INDUSTRIAL AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the promises made by the government to consult with labour and management in a meaningful way before bringing forward its programs to deal with the very heavy lay-offs which have taken place in the last two years, and in view of the failure of the government to live up to that commitment so that the legislation prepared under ILAP was brought to Parliament without any meaningful input by labour or management, and in view of claims made by labour representatives from both the United Steelworkers and Auto Workers that, so far, the views of the local committees have been largely ignored and that virtually no money spent under the ILAP program has gone to help workers laid off, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the federal government change the unilateral decision-making process which it has been following and begin instead to develop the ILAP program through real co-operation with labour, management and local communities, for whom the ILAP program was supposedly developed, so that some of the thousands of laid-off workers who have been devastated by the current recession will begin to get help.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING TAXATION OF EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance regarding some of the confusion existing in the country about his budget. He may well know that Inco is now deducting new taxes on employee benefits amounting, for example, to $212 per year for a married employee with a taxable income of $26,000 per year. Prudential Life, however, where benefits are worth $369 per year for married employees, does not make a deduction. Neither company, nor the thousands of Canadians who work for them, know whether they should be deducting anything or, if so, how much. The situation is the same for thousands of other employers and employees. Will the minister tell the House how long he intends to allow this confusion to go on?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Well, Madam Speaker, to my knowledge there is no confusion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: The situation has been clearly laid out in the budget; we all know its provisions. I would add to that general statement the point that the collection of these taxes and how they are applied to various firms is, of course, a matter for the Minister of National Revenue.

POSITION OF UNEMPLOYED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Well, the minister can attempt to pass the buck to his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue. He says there is no confusion. The fact is that if he were in touch at all with reality in this country he would know that companies having to deal with the problems caused by this budget simply do not know, two months after the budget was brought down, what will be the impact of its provisions. Those Canadians suffering deductions now simply do not know whether they are being properly or improperly taxed.

Let me ask the minister another question. He might know that in the construction industry, where work is seasonal, and where individuals often work for different employers in a particular year, unions negotiate with employer associations to establish union trustee plans which fund employee benefits. Many of the employees who receive those benefits are, thanks to the economic policies of the minister, now unemployed. Will the minister tell us are these unemployed Canadian construction workers to be taxed on their employee benefits? Are you adding new taxes to Canadians now unemployed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Of course not, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: We will correct that as we corrected the minister's misstatement about the child tax credit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CHANGES IN BUDGET

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Now, the minister will know that his colleague, the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, said yesterday morning on "Canada AM", and I quote, "Obviously the government is going to make some major changes in the budget." Will the minister tell us is the government going to make some major changes in the budget, and when will those major changes be announced?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Well, Madam Speaker, I suppose what I might regard as a major change the Leader of the Opposition might regard as minor. I discovered that when some of the changes I made on December 18, which I regarded as major, were described by others as minor. I have no intention of making any changes in the budget—

Mr. Andre: Say goodbye to your backbenchers.

Mr. MacEachen: —until the House of Commons has an opportunity to examine the provisions of the budget. It is not my intention to come into the House and make these changes.

Mr. Nielsen: You dare not do so.

Mr. MacEachen: They will be made in the normal way in the course of the parliamentary process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: If hon. members take that process seriously, they will realize that is where members' views are heard, representations can be made, consideration can be given to these views and, if they are convincing, then the changes will be made. That is my general answer to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: So much for the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan and the reliability of his word, and that of other members opposite and the reliability of their word.

• (1420)

MINISTER'S POSITION ON POSSIBLE CHANGES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): If I understand the minister correctly, which is always impossible, he has now given the proposition that the House of Commons will write the budget. The one relief is that it will be a much better budget than the minister wrote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: But the minister has now admitted the possibility of changes. He says, with all feigned innocence, that it will be up to the House to make them. Is the minister currently proposing to a committee of the House of Commons that there be any change to any part of the budget? Is he presently contemplating that? If so, why will he not immediately indicate to Canadians what kind of changes he is prepared to contemplate? While he is on his feet, can he tell us whether he has given reason for any Liberal Member of Parliament to believe that there will be changes in the budget which he has not revealed to the whole House of Commons or to the public?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not take a different line in the caucus than I take in the House of Commons. Maybe the Leader of the Opposition does that, but I do not.

Mr. Crosbie: Give me a rubber man.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They are weak men, your backbenchers.

Mr. MacEachen: I assumed that the Leader of the Opposition had some respect for the parliamentary process.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: He has stated that it was his intention to filibuster the tax measures, to have a very long debate, to ensure that they were carefully examined. It is the normal procedure at least to examine these tax measures. I am not suggesting, previewing or forecasting what changes might be made in the measures. However, it is the normal course that views of hon. members are heard—

Mr. Crosbie: And laughed at.

Mr. MacEachen: —amendments are proposed, and, at times, changes are made. That is what I have in mind when I talk about the parliamentary process. What do hon. members suggest?

Mr. Nowlan: Incredible!

Mr. MacEachen: That we disrespect the whole legislative process and say that it is irrelevant? I regard it as a very relevant phase of the work of changing taxes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: To get you off the hook.

COST OF COLLECTING TAXES ON EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Minister of Finance. Many labour groups, including the Quebec Federation of Labour, the B.C. Federation of Labour, the Quebec Teamsters and the National Union of Provincial Government Employees have all told us that the proposal to tax employee benefits, such as dental and health plans, will lead to substantial labour unrest because these contracts have already been negotiated and the unions will seek to recover their costs from the general taxpayer and consumer. We are also told that the cost of administering this part of the budget is more than the revenues which will be gained. Why is the minister prepared to risk billions of dollars of damage to the economy in order to collect nickels and dimes?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not believe any such risk exists.

Miss Carney: I would refer the Minister of Finance to all the labour contracts which have been negotiated by unions, and suggest that he refresh himself on their contents.

POSSIBLE IMPACT ON PENSIONERS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): My second question is also addressed to the Minister of Finance. Our Conservative task force was told by John Arthur, who is the president of the Canadian Pensions Conference, that the proposal to tax social benefits would disqualify many pensioners from receiving supplementary pensions such as the guaranteed income supplement. He has already referred to the fact that another cabinet colleague administers the national revenue, administers some of the budget measures that he wishes to introduce. We were also advised that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has refused to calculate these benefits into pension income. Why is the minister determined to tax pensioners on health benefits paid by their former employers when the concept has been rejected by his own cabinet colleague?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has not clearly stated what particular benefits she has in mind. Just the other day one of the other hon. members of the opposition referred to veterans and the alleged additional taxation they might face. Of course there is no provision whatsoever in the budget that would affect the current status of veterans. There is a provision in the relevant resolution to which the hon. member's colleague referred, providing for a prescribed omission or prescribed elimination of certain programs. Unless the hon. member is very specific as to what other benefits she has in mind, I must say I am at a loss to answer her very general question.

● (1425)

PAYMENTS TO PENSIONERS' HEALTH AND DENTAL PLANS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also to the Minister of Finance. I can be very specific. These are payments to health and dental plans by employers, which are continued for pensioners. They are the ones named in the budget papers.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not believe the hon. member can equate employee benefits and retirement benefits. They seem to be contradictory.

FINANCE

AUTHORITY FOR COLLECTION OF TAXES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of National Revenue. The minister is no doubt aware that to this point in time there is no tax guideline printed and available for employers in this country with regard to the tax changes announced by the Minister of Finance in his budget. On what legal authority do employees of the Ministry of National Revenue instruct or advise employers in this country to deduct from the wages of their employees taxes applied against what may well become taxable, on this day, in advance of the taxing measures being passed by the House of Commons?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, specifically under Section 153 of the Income Tax Act and Regulation 101 which expands on that section, it is the duty of the employer to deduct taxes on behalf of his employees. In January of every year the Department of Revenue, as it did this January, sends out tax tables to employers. For the benefit of the Leader of the Opposition I might say that the tax tables this year included the budget provisions of November, so there should be no confusion in the minds of employers. The same tax tables and the same information has been sent to all employers under Section 153 of the Income Tax Act.

While I am on my feet, I might say to the hon. member that I am rather surprised that he raised a question of privilege about an announcement which clarified employee benefits, made when the House of Commons was not in session. I would have thought it important to get that clarification out as soon as possible. Indeed, most workers wanted that. I am particularly surprised in the sense that this is beneficial to 12 million Canadians who will see a reduction of their tax through this budget. Indeed, 250,000 people in Newfoundland will improve their financial situation this year as a result of this budget. That was the reason for getting the press release out as soon as possible.

TAXES COLLECTED BY EMPLOYERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, is it then legal for an employer to tax an employee at any level he sees fit, or must the employer tax at the legal level as established by the law?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, obviously the ways and means motion puts into legality the provisions of the November budget. It is the practice of employers to withhold taxes on behalf of their employees. This is obviously given legal sanction by the ways and means motion through legislation in the House of Commons. It is a time-honoured practice of this House, in fact of all Houses that I know, including the provincial Houses across this country, to operate in exactly the same way as we have been doing for years, including when the party opposite was the government.

LEGAL BASIS FOR COLLECTING TAXES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, perhaps the minister is not aware of two facts. First, his own legal officials, in consultation with this party, have indicated that they do not have any legal authority to require employers to collect tax for which there is no legislation. Second, advice being given by the ministry officials over the telephone is that they cannot issue a tax bulletin because there is no legal authority for the collection of the tax. What exactly is the legal authority that allows employers to take taxes from employees in excess of the legal taxes allowed by the laws of Canada?

• (1430)

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I believe I have dealt with that question previously. I have referred to Section 153 of the Income Tax Act. It is not true to say that employers do not know what taxes they have to deduct.

An hon. Member: There is no law.

Mr. Rompkey: The tax bulletins are issued by the department. I would be quite happy to supply them to the hon. member. Apart from the tax tables, there are interpretation bulletins which are now in existence and which are being updated and will be issued to employers.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BUDGET FOR CAPITAL PROGRAM

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In his speech to the Conference of Defence Associations on January 14, the minister said the following:

> The proportion of the budget that we devote to the capital program has been rising, it is now up to 24 per cent, and still rising.

The estimates for this year show that the capital portion is only 19.6 per cent of the total, a decrease from the 19.8 per cent of the previous year. Would the minister tell the House from where is he getting the additional 4 per cent?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the statement that I made during the CDA conference referred to figures given by my department, and I think these questions on figures, percentages and statistics can be discussed when the estimates are before SCEAND. I believe I said that this year the capital expenditure was up to 24 per cent. I think that was the figure I gave at the CDA. I am ready to discuss that when the time comes.

Mr. Clark: Phone the Senate.

Mr. McKinnon: One would expect the Minister of National Defence to have overcome his confusion over the budget figures by this time.

MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): While we were discussing the estimates at what he calls SCEAND—the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence—the minister said on March 26, 1981, that capital expenditures will account for close to 20 per cent of the defence budget, taking into account our contributions to the NATO airborne warning system and the infrastructure. How can the minister put these two conflicting statements before Canadians? Apparently, he allocated 4 per cent extra in the capital budget yet he pretends not to know where it comes from, if indeed there is a 4 per cent addition. I would like to know what the truth is between those two totally irreconcilable statements.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, there always can be many discussions on statistics, figures and percentages. However, I think the real figures will be there when the estimates can be discussed, when the final budget will be adopted as far as defence is concerned. The fact is that the defence budget this year is one of the best budgets we have had for a long time and this government has taken its responsibility for our commitments toward NATO and the defence of Canada. As far as the figures of the hon. member are concerned, I will be ready to discuss these with him in the House committee when it sits.

FINANCE

PROPOSAL TO TAX RENTAL VALUE OF OWNER-OCCUPIED HOMES

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. The minister will know that, according to the budget papers, the main thrust of the budget was to eliminate certain tax expenditures or so-called benefits. He will also know that the budget papers refer to a tax on imputed rent on owner-occupied homes. In fact the budget even calculates the amount of revenue the government would receive if such a tax were imposed. I might tell the minister that the constituents of North Okanagan and home owners across Canada are very concerned about the possibility of the government imposing a tax on the rental value of owner-occupied homes. I am shocked about this possibility, as are my colleagues. Will the minister give his assurance that this government has not now placed nor will it in the future place a tax on rental value of owner-occupied homes?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of that situation. The Minister of Finance has said that this budget is fair and equitable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: That is exactly the way it will be administered.

Mr. Dantzer: Madam Speaker, I would refer the minister to page 31, I believe, of the budget papers, which refers to incomes of individuals.

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON OCCUPANTS OF SUBSIDIZED HOUSING

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that many people, particularly the elderly and those who have low incomes, live in subsidized housing. I am not talking about subsidized housing which comes under employer benefits, but subsidized housing where the size of a person's income determines the amount of rent to be paid. When the minister puts a value on subsidized housing as an income, does he intend to value that as income which will, of course, have the effect of raising the rent to those people and increasing their tax? Could he answer that?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): No, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Clark: No answer.

THE CONSTITUTION

DATE OF PATRIATION

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Could the minister comment on today's decision by the British Court of Appeal with regard to native rights in the Canadian Constitution, and perhaps give the House some indication of when we may expect to see the Constitution patriated?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, this morning we heard the news of the decision of the Court of Appeal in England. We expect that the British Parliament will proceed with finalizing the acceptance of the package in the House of Commons and House of Lords within the next few weeks.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Can you give us a better idea?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PAYMENT OF BENEFITS TO WORKERS LAID OFF IN MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. At the present time one third of the work force of Leaf Rapids and Lynn Lake, Manitoba, have been laid off. Because these people are eligible for payment in lieu of notice, they are being denied immediate access to UIC benefits. If these same benefits were called severance pay, the workers would receive UIC benefits at this time. Will the minister admit that these payments are the same as severance pay, and ensure the workers are eligible for UIC benefits now? In other words, will the minister waive the regulations pertaining to the workers in Leaf Rapid and Lynn Lake, just as he did for the workers at The Winnipeg Tribune?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in this particular case the definition of the benefits is defined by the Manitoba Labour Code. They are being defined as wages in lieu of notice and, as a consequence of that, I wrote to the Minister of Labour in Manitoba last week requesting that he waive the application of that law in this particular circumstance. If he waives the application of that, we would be prepared to consider it as severance benefits and therefore pay the workers their full entitlement under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I suggest to the hon. member that, rather than trying to stir the pot, he would be better off to persuade his colleagues in the provincial government to concur with our request to waive that application so the workers can receive the benefits.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, the minister knows that the reason the provincial government cannot waive the regulations is that the company is trying to give the workers less money than they are entitled to by provincial law. The province will waive the regulations but can only do so if the company will also waive the regulations. The minister has the power to do that himself, as he should.

INCOME TAX

RELIEF SOUGHT FOR LOSS OF HOMES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): My supplementary question is to the Minister of Finance. These people who are being laid off in Leaf Rapids and Lynn Lake are being forced to sell their homes at a loss. They are living in one-industry communities and there is no market for their homes. Will the Minister of Finance investigate the possibility of allowing people who are laid off because of shutdowns or plant closures, the tax benefit of being able to charge that loss against their income? We can protect corporations; can we also protect individuals?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the situation which the hon. member has raised. I believe that there may be some action which can be taken by lending institutions to give these cases some consideration.

Mr. Epp: Let the Manitoba government solve it.

Mr. MacEachen: I know that in other communities where there have been extended strikes, for example, lending institutions have declared a moratorium on the collection of mortgage payments. I think something along those lines might be investigated.

COMMUNICATIONS

OPERATION OF PIRATE BROADCASTING STATIONS IN NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Communications, who has just slipped out. I do not know what communication we will have here, but I see he is now returning.

• (1440)

My question is about pirate stations operating in some northern areas. The CRTC is imposing certain regulations which insist that northern areas have nothing but CRTC approved communications. Is the minister prepared to allow some of the so-called pirate stations to operate in those northern areas, or will he close them down so that they will not operate in those northern areas?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as I have indicated to the House a number of times, we are prepared to take as flexible a position as possible. Basically, as the hon. member knows, the CRTC has authorized a new service for remote and underserved areas of Canada known as Cancom, which makes four television signals available to all those underserved communities. Since the beginning of the year, the CRTC has licensed some 266 communities to receive the Cancom service. Obviously in areas where there is now a licensed distributor of Cancom services we would expect the other, illegal services to terminate.

BROADCASTING OF "HOCKEY NIGHT IN CANADA"

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, is the minister prepared to allow Cancom to introduce "Hockey Night in Canada", which would allow an injunction to be served with respect to a service which is copyrighted in defiance of the law? This is something the pirate stations wanted to do. Is he prepared to abide that kind of situation and to allow the matter to be taken to court?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the pirate stations are offering essentially American fare to the areas to which they are distributing signals. I do not believe there is any possibility for a pirate station to pick up "Hockey Night in Canada". We hope to see CBC services extended to all communities in Canada. The hon. member knows that there is an accelerated coverage plan which comes to an end within the next year or so which will assure basic CBC services, including "Hockey Night in Canada", to all communities of 500 or more residents.

SMALL BUSINESS

DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM APPLICATIONS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, and it deals with the small business bond. In view of the fact that small-business men and farmers are still encountering great difficulty in obtaining application forms at their local lending institutions and are unable to secure any definite information on the small business bond from their bank managers, can the minister assure the House that he will again approach the banks and ensure that information and forms will be readily available, so that members of the business community will be able to understand and take full advantage of the small business bond?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance and myself issued a press release about two weeks ago, informing the financial institutions of the regulations concerning Small Business Development Bonds. I have been told that since then, the head offices of the chartered banks are now in a position to inform their branches of the regulations for issuing such bonds. I shall be happy to act on the hon. member's suggestion by getting in touch again with the banking community to ensure that they are approaching the bond program in as positive a manner as possible.

[English]

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN PROGRAM

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As the small business bond is 80 per cent self-financed when used for capital expansion, and represents one of the more effective stimulants to our sluggish economy, will the minister withdraw the restrictive "dire straits" clause from the bill and restore it to its original form, and give more incentive to our farmers and to small businesses which are really suffering from the effects of the budget?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the purpose of confining the application of the Small Business Development Bond to firms or individuals in financial difficulty was to ensure that the available funds would be channelled to those most in need. That was the dominant request made by members of the opposition before the budget.

Mr. Wilson: It was not.

Mr. MacEachen: The request was that some effort be made to come to the assistance, for example, of farmers who were facing extraordinarily high interest rates, and we have provided, as a result of budget measures, including the Small Business Development Bond and the special provisions which will be applicable through the Farm Credit Corporation, substantial relief to those particular farmers. It seems to me that is a very effective way to deal with the case.

I should remind the hon. member, as I have stated earlier, that that particular provision has always been part of the bond. It was there when it was introduced by the former Minister of Finance.

HOUSING

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF CONSTRUCTION STARTS

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. In today's Toronto Star a Mr. Deslise from Statistics Canada has reported a surge of housing starts following the November 12 budget. Could this signal a turnaround in the housing sector in 1982—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bloomfield: —and does the minister share that optimism?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question gives me the opportunity to say yes, I share the optimism of the report in the Star today. This afternoon I will introduce amendments to the National Housing Act. The budget provides $350 million for the rental supply plan. The amendments to the plan to provide improved mortgage documents for the private sector market will support that turnaround. This first turnaround in five years is a good sign.

FINANCE

TAX DEDUCTIONS FROM WORKERS' PAY CHEQUES

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, as my leader, the right hon. member for Yellowhead, has pointed out, members of many unions across Canada making representations to the Progressive Conservative task force pointed out that commencing this month an additional $200 to $300 will be deducted from their net incomes. Officials of Inco and other companies have confirmed they feel they have a responsibility to officials of Revenue Canada to make these deductions. My question to the minister is quite simple. He evaded this question when it was put to him by the Leader of the Opposition. Does he condone the deduction tomorrow of these amounts from the January paycheques of mine workers and others in hard pressed and depressed communities across Canada, who have to contend in a general way with all the negative consequences of his budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member should put the situation in the proper context. I suggested in the House earlier that at the present time in Canada, for example, the average industrial wage is about $22,000. At this income level, with the budget measures which were included and brought into effect, the average tax saving for a family of four will be about $650. I believe that is the beneficial fact the hon. member ought to draw to the attention of his workers, and that ought to be reflected in the withholding taxes which are put into place this month by employers, because there will be millions of Canadian employees taking more money home this month as the result of the budget than they did last year. That is the fact I want to get out before the Canadian people.

EFFECT ON WORKERS LAID OFF FOLLOWING SHUTDOWN OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, once again the Minister of Finance is distorting the facts, because in fact the marginal tax rates have not changed for incomes under $24,000. Benefits are lost because of the higher taxes on energy. Additional taxes are withheld due to taxes on employee benefits. Many employees will have less in terms of real income. I am speaking in real terms and not referring to inflationary increments and requirements to keep pace with the 13 per cent rate of inflation in this country.

● (1450)

Madam Speaker, the minister's response is small consolation to the 430—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is carrying his preamble a bit too far. I would ask him to put the question.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, I wanted to ask the minister if he condones the progressive shutdown of Canadian industry, of the base metal industries, which is leading to massive lay-offs and massive numbers of applications for unemployment insurance in offices across the country. Will he continue to accept this foolhardy advice from a bunch of philosopher kings who are leading him down the path—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in his preamble the hon. member attempted to conceal the tax cuts that are contained in the budget. In doing so he has drawn attention to the increases in energy prices. I am surprised that the hon. member would do that when his own party consistently advocated higher energy prices than were included in the Alberta-Canada energy agreement. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre had the effrontery the other day to make the same point, when he was the man who, at the annual Conservative convention, very strongly supported an increase in energy prices.

If you want to take that into account then you are taking into account quite a separate matter than the budget tax cuts which, in the case of an industrial wage of $22,000 for an average family of four, registers a tax cut—

Mr. Clark: That is not what they are saying in Timmins.

Mr. MacEachen: —of $650 in 1982, and $220 for a single person. Those are the facts.

RAILWAYS

SNAVELY REPORT ON GRAIN TRANSPORTATION COSTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. He has in his possession the third report of Snavely Consulting Services of Washington, D.C. In the two earlier reports that consultant rejected including certain costs in computing the costs of transporting grain under the statutory grain rate, the Crowsnest Pass rate. In the terms of reference for this third report, why did the minister instruct Mr. Snavely to include costs that he had rejected earlier? Was this an attempt to get an exaggerated estimate of the costs of transporting grain?

Will the minister be good enough to tell the House if he will make the report public? I wonder if he has seen it—if he would care to look this way—and would he make this report public? Would he also advise whether those recommendations are going to be used in an attempt to increase the Crowsnest Pass rate to grain producers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Snavely Report is the third, or the second update of the first report that was produced around 1975. It is Mr. Snavely's assessment of the cost of transporting grain in western Canada on the basis of variable cost, and on the basis of fixed costs and so on. It is not to be seen as government policy. This is a transportation cost analysis which is determined on a number of assumptions. Consequently it will play a role when the Crow debate takes place—if it does, when cabinet has decided—but it should not be seen as the Bible by anybody. The hon. member should not go around the country blessing the Snavely report and extrapolating all kinds of fancy conclusions on the basis of it.

With respect to the publication of the report, we have an executive summary of it which is supposed to come out today or tomorrow, or the next day. The report itself will be published in due course when the possibility exists of having it printed in the proper form. I will be more specific on that to my hon. friend in a few days, but I repeat there will be an executive summary of it within a few days.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—DELAY IN PROSPECTIVE ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have two further questions for the minister. Is it the intention of the government to delay any announcement of intent regarding changes in the Crow rate, following the pleadings of the Liberal Party of the remnants of the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan, to hold off until after there has been an election there?

Since any kind of increase proposed or recommended by Mr. Snavely to grain producers would cost 50,000 jobs across the country, instead of trying to demolish the Crow rates will the minister provide investment into rail transportation in Canada and take equity ownership in those rail systems in return?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, on listening to the hon. member I am not surprised that the comment of a fellow westerner on the hon. member's last press conference was "rubbish". That is about what the question leads to.

He is asking me, first, if we would delay the announcement of a program on western transportation including the Crow rate. How can I delay something that has not yet been announced? How can I delay on a date which is not known yet? That is a difficult question to answer.

On the 50,000 jobs that would be lost, obviously my friend has not thought about it enough. He should, because the amount of construction that would result from what is talked about in terms of western rail development would be extraordinarily greater than the few jobs my friend says could be lost. He estimates this at 50,000, which is something which has resulted from a weekend of imagination. The investment—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. At this point I do not know which is the longer, the question or the answer.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY WHETHER NEW COD TRAWLING PERMITS WILL BE ISSUED IN 1982

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, my question is directed to his parliamentary secretary.

The minister is aware that many Gaspé fishermen are anxious to obtain licences for groundfish trawling in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether the minister or the department intends to issue new licences for cod trawling in eastern Canada in 1982?

[English]

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to inform the hon. gentleman—and I may take the opportunity to say that he is one of the most hardworking members on this committee—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: As you can see, Madam Speaker, members on all sides of the House certainly agree. Unfortunately, because of full utilization of the fish stocks in the Gulf region, both on the Quebec and the Newfoundland sides, if I can explain it that way, it is impossible at this time, based on the best scientific evidence that we have, to issue new licences. The hon. member will certainly be kept informed as we know that the interests of fishermen are always paramount in his mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMERGENCY MEASURES

TERMS OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council who is the minister responsible for emergency planning. On May 21, 1981, cabinet passed an order in council known as the emergency planning order, that authorized sweeping federal powers not only in times of war but more particularly in times of peace. I should like to ask the minister what kind of emergencies, short of war, he envisages happening in Canada that would allow the federal government to control all national information sources, to release convicted prisoners, to regulate and control the movement of manpower, and to create civilian internment camps.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is quoting out of context some passages from an order in council that is of the utmost importance for sound emergency measures planning in Canada. I feel that during the past few years we could have taken far more practical steps to improve emergency measures planning. What is contained in the order in council does not yet have force of law. For the order in council to become effective would require debate in Parliament and Parliament's approval of its implementation. Meanwhile, what this order in council does is to provide the various departments with instructions on how to plan sensibly for coping with any emergency situations that might arise in this country. I feel that this is an excellent example of sound planning by the government, and once again, nothing in the order in council has any legal effect unless it is approved by Parliament.

REASONS FOR NOT INTRODUCING LEGISLATION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Given the complexity and the absolute power given to the government under this order in council, why did the government, if it had nothing to hide, not introduce legislation seeking this authority, where everything would be out in the open and above board? Could the answer be that the government is afraid of drawing public attention and public outcry to these very serious and, I think, undemocratic and dictatorial powers?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): The reason is quite simple, Madam Speaker. We feel it is more sensible to deal with events as they occur. We do, of course, want to be ready to take effective action to cope with any emergency situations that may arise, but we want to avoid setting in motion a whole process that might not be really necessary to deal with a specific situation. I also wish to reassure the hon. member that the order in council in question was distributed and discussed at a federal-provincial conference on emergency measures over which I presided last May. I have been in touch with a number of my colleagues who are responsible for emergency measures in various provinces to discuss with them how these measures would be implemented.

I feel that in each case they have understood that it was a matter of sound planning whereby departments are instructed to prepare for any eventuality, and should an emergency arise, only those measures described in the order in council would be used that would be necessary to cope with the situation.

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Wednesday, January 27, 1982, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, might I ask the government House leader the usual Thursday question with respect to House business, whether he could outline for us what we will be doing tomorrow and as far into next week as possible?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, today we will start debate on second reading of Bill C-88, an act respecting loans to farmers. Tomorrow we will return to second reading debate on Bill C-85, to establish a corporation called Canagrex.

[Translation]

Next week's agenda will include legislation concerning the agricultural sector. Monday and Tuesday debate will continue on second reading of the bill respecting loans to farmers. Wednesday, if necessary—unless referral has taken place before then—we shall try to finish second reading of the Canagrex bill, which concerns a new corporation to promote exports of agricultural and food products from Canada.

If we manage to refer both agricultural bills to committee before Wednesday morning, we shall be able to start second reading on Wednesday of a bill to be tabled shortly by the Minister of Public Works, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act. These are, of course, measures that are a direct result of the budget as it affects agriculture and housing. Finally, Thursday next will be an opposition day.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, based on the timetable outlined by the government House leader, with the implicit conclusion being drawn that the government feels that it will be adequate to debate the farm credit legislation today and for Monday and Tuesday, and because of its importance to the agricultural community and the need to place these benefits in the hands of the agricultural industry in the country as soon as possible, after consultation with our agricultural critic I can inform or signal to the government House leader that we are prepared to allow that bill to go to committee at the close of business on Tuesday. We agree with the government that that is a reasonable time for that debate.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I welcome that collaboration and I appreciate it very much. I should like to know about the question I raised this morning with my hon. colleague as to whether Canagrex will also go to committee tomorrow or next Wednesday, so that we can plan the business for next Wednesday accordingly.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, again as a result of consultations with our agricultural critic, he informs me that there are some difficulties with that legislation which require debate by a further number of our members, at any rate.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, much though I would like to offer the same kind of assurance—and I may well be able to do so at some subsequent point in time—I would have thought that we might have made a decision such as this in private consultation rather than on the floor of the House. I will inform the House leader for the government of our position privately within the next hour or two.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I also recognize the usual collaboration of members of the NDP on such bills. I expect that they will not prevent Bill C-88 from going to committee on Tuesday evening. I am sure as well that we will have their collaboration on the Canagrex bill.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. PAPROSKI—S.O. 43 MOTION OF MR. FLIS

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope I did not embarrass my House leader or our external affairs critic when I was not in my seat at the time the motion under Standing Order 43 was presented by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis), as I did agree with him to declare January 30, 1982, "Solidarity Day". I apologize; I was on the telephone with some of the organizers of Solidarity.

Mr. Deans: A point of privilege, Madam Speaker.

PETITION

MR. BRADLEY—POLAND—IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Madam Speaker probably noticed yesterday in the presentation of my petition that I asked whether in your wisdom you would allow the petition to be read today in the House, if it was found to be correct. I wonder if at this time I may ask that the petition be read.

Madam Speaker: This requires the unanimous consent of the House. I think the hon. member ought to have raised it at that point. At any rate, I could ask the House if it gives unanimous consent for the petition of the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley) to be read. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deans: On a point of privilege, Madam Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEMBER FOR EDMONTON EAST TO SIT AS INDEPENDENT

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of personal privilege. For over 14 years I have been a Progressive Conservative, both provincially and nationally. During that period I have had extensive political responsibility, and I have thrived on it. With many of my colleagues I dreamed great dreams and sometimes I reached so high that I faltered, but always I dared to try. Foremost in my mind was the unity of this great nation. On December 2, this assembly bridged 54 years of political failure to give this nation a new Constitution and a new pulse beat. Unity is assured, I am pleased.

However, I have now reached a state of mind where I have lost the desire and even the will to be a Progressive Conservative. The party's vision is not my vision any longer. The party and its leadership have nothing to offer me and I have nothing to offer the party. Therefore, from now on I will be sitting in this assembly as an independent member. I humbly ask, Madam Speaker, that you change my present seating location to a more appropriate one. I deeply thank all those who have travelled the same road as I have over the last 14 years. The journey has been a fascinating and rewarding one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: According to the wishes of the hon. member, I will assign another seat to him in due course.

PETITIONS

MR. McKNIGHT—HERD MAINTENANCE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I ask leave of the House to present a petition signed by 141 farmers from the Tramping Lake-Unity area of Saskatchewan.

These petitioners request that the Government of Canada reconsider its policy under the herd maintenance assistance program, established in 1980, in order to permit any farmer adversely affected by drought conditions to be compensated. By so doing, the government would remove the discrimination that presently exists under the herd maintenance assistance program.

Mr. Deans: A question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-647, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Saint-Michel.

Some hon. Members: Explain!

Mrs. Killens: Madam Speaker, I am requesting this change in the name of the riding on behalf of the members of my association and of my constituents. When three ridings were amalgamated in the northern part of the city, as you well know, Madam Speaker, since Ahuntsic was your own riding—the people there would have liked to see Ahuntsic added to the new name of Saint-Michel. Therefore, with the constituents of Saint-Michel, I hope that we shall soon be able to add the name Ahuntsic to the present name of my riding.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DEANS—REPLY OF MR. ROMPKEY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have been attempting to get the floor for the last few moments, but unfortunately you did not see me. My question of privilege flows from today's question period, specifically an answer provided to me by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey).

In my question to the Minister of National Revenue I asked for the specific authority under which the minister was permitting his officials to advise employers to collect taxes from employees for which there had not yet been a law passed in the House of Commons. I refer you, if I may, to Beauchesne's fourth edition. Citation 233 on page 198 reads:

> It is one of the old standing principles of our Constitution that the House of Commons should control the finances of the country. That is the right, privilege and duty of the House. It has been achieved by means of struggle lasting through centuries, beginning from the fourteenth century down to the seventeenth century, when it was fully confirmed, and since then it has never been disputed.
> The cardinal principle on which the whole of our financial system is based is that of parliamentary control, and by this is understood not the control of Parliament in its constitutional sense, but control by the Commons alone. Upon this fundamental principle, laid down at the very outset of English parliamentary history and secured by three hundred years of mingled conflict with the Crown, and peaceful growth, is grounded the whole law of finance and, consequently, the whole of the British Constitution.
>
> The right, privilege and power of the Canadian House of Commons are the same as those of the United Kingdom House and they were stipulated in the first sentence of the British North America Act which reads as follows: "Whereas the Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have expressed their desire to be federally united into One Dominion under the Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, with a Constitution similar in Principle to that—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have only four more words.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member has again engaged in quotations which might be useful, but at this point the Chair does not know exactly to what use they may be put. The hon. member has not stated what his question of privilege really is. The hon. member is shaking his head, but he has not stated what his question of privilege is. He has quoted precedents and he has quoted Beauchesne, but at this point the Chair does not know what the question of privilege is. I would be grateful if the hon. member told me in a few sentences where his question of privilege lies and then I will allow him to elaborate.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I do apologize. I wanted to establish what the privileges of members of Parliament are. The privilege on which I rise is the following. The government has acted by imposing a tax without having sought the specific approval of the House of Commons. I claim the privilege as set out in Beauchesne, Citation 233, and as confirmed in Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 16, that as a member of the House of Commons I have a duty and a responsibility, notwithstanding what other members may have done in the past, to demand the privileges that are clearly set out as privileges of Members of Parliament.

The privilege that I believe is now being breached by this government is the privilege and the duty that I have to be able to see and to pass judgment on legislation affecting taxation before it is put into force.

Madam Speaker: On two counts I have to interrupt the hon. member. First, the hon. member is raising his question of privilege flowing from the deliberations of this House, and that he can do without notice. As he is exposing the question now, I do have to tell him that because he is not satisfied with the answer of the minister does not constitute a question of privilege.

Further, the hon. member is again discussing the point that he discussed yesterday. At any rate, I have to remind the hon. member that, in my view, the procedure as established by this House has been followed in the sense that a budget has been given to the House and ways and means motions have been deposited following that budget. The process of taxation, which is not included in the Standing Orders, has gone through according to practices which are of long standing.

If the hon. member has a grievance about the way in which the taxes have been collected, that constitutes a grievance but not a question of privilege. The quotation which the hon. member has just read from Beauchesne, of course, refers to the right of parliamentarians to determine and to vote on government expenses. Nothing has changed about that right of parliamentarians. But the particular instance to which the hon. member is referring is covered by the Standing Orders, and as far as the Chair is concerned, the Standing Orders have been followed. I am afraid the hon. member does not have a question of privilege.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Might I ask which Standing Order provides for the collection of taxes prior to the implementation of legislation covering same?

Madam Speaker: I told the hon. member precisely that the practice in collecting taxes has nothing to do with the Standing Orders. The practice of depositing ways and means motions is one that is covered by the Standing Orders. These are the rules which apply to the budgetary process and they have been followed. Therefore, the hon. member does not have a question of privilege. I repeat that the process of collecting taxes has of course nothing to do with Standing Orders; if the hon. member has a grievance about that he can air that grievance, but not as a question of privilege.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,048, 3,061, 3,092, 3,107, 3,152 and 3,513.

NATIVE CANADIAN ART PURCHASED BY NATIONAL GALLERY

Question No. 1,048—Mr. Stewart:

During the past ten years, did the National Gallery of Canada purchase indigenous native Canadian art, Inuit and Indian prints and sculpture and, if so (a) what was the type of object and the date of purchase (b) what was its cost (c) who was the artist?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Museums of Canada as follows: During the past ten years, the National Gallery of Canada did not purchase any indigenous native Canadian art, Inuit and Indian prints or sculpture.

INCOME SUPPORT PROGRAMS FOR VETERANS

Question No. 3,061—Mr. McKenzie:

With reference to section 10.53 of the 1980 Report of the Auditor General (a) for what reason were questions pertaining to Canadian veterans not included in the 1981 census forms (b) are any other surveys developed to obtain detailed data on other income support programs concerning the benefits received by veteran clients in relation to their needs and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): In so far as the Department of Veterans Affairs and agencies are concerned:

(a) During the formative phases of the 1981 census forms, a number of discussions were held between the Department of Veterans Affairs and Statistics Canada to investigate the feasibility of including such questions. As a result of these discussions, it was concluded by the Department of Veterans Affairs that the costs involved in acquiring information on Canadian veterans using the 1981 census were prohibitive.

(b) No. For all veterans and dependents in receipt of income support payments from DVA, the total income of each recipient family is known. The level of guaranteed income is specified in legislation, and this level is compared to recognized levels of income below which poverty is believed to exist. This method is considered to be more sound than would be surveys of veterans' families only.

ACQUISITION OF SHARES BY CFDC

Question No. 3,092—Mr. Clarke:

1. During the period 1970-80 did the Canadian Film Development Corporation acquire shares or other ownership interest in any other corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and, if so, what was the (a) name of the corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and any subsidiaries thereof (b) percentage of equity acquired (c) cost of acquisition (d) book value of the acquisition?

2. Does the Canadian Film Development Corporation have a plan to change the present portion of ownership in any of these enterprises and, if so, what is the plan?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows:

1. The Canadian Film Development Corporation is mandated under its act to invest in feature film productions. In doing so, the corporation acquires undivided interest in the ownership of the copyright in the film; it does not as a matter of policy acquire shares or other ownership interest in a corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company involved in the production of the film.

2. The corporation has no plans to modify this policy.

ACQUISITION OF SHARES BY CBC

Question No. 3,107—Mr. Clarke:

1. During the period 1970-80 did the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation acquire shares or other ownership interest in any other corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and, if so, what was the (a) name of the corporation, limited liability company or unincorporated company and any subsidiaries thereof (b) percentage of equity acquired (c) cost of acquisition (d) book value of the acquisition?

2. Does the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation have a plan to change the present portion of ownership in any of these enterprises and, if so, what is the plan?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. The table below outlines the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's 1970-1980 acquisition of shares or other ownership interests in corporations, limited liability companies or unincorporated companies, including the CBC's cost, the percentage of equity purchased and the book value of the acquisition. Included as well are explanatory notes for interpretive purposes.

2. Companies listed under the caption "Ownership Interest—Acquisitions" have been 100 per cent acquired, dissolved or wound up, and the assets and their operations incorporated into the CBC. With respect to the company listed under the caption "Non-Ownership Interest-Acquisitions", the contract calls for the redemption of these shares by the company according to a timetable.

Explanatory Notes:

1. General: The Corporation purchased the above companies for their broadcasting licences and/or assets. The purchase of 100 per cent of their shares was the only purchase option open to the CBC. The purchase price was based on the market value of the companies at the time of purchase and not on the "book value of net assets". The latter figure excludes "current values" due to inflation and the present value of future earnings.

2. St. Clair River Broadcasting Ltd. was acquired as a subsidiary whose only purpose was to enter into a partnership with Baton Broadcasting Ltd. to purchase and operate station CKLW-TV Windsor. In 1974 St. Clair purchased outright Baton's interest in CKLW-TV, including the financing of the partner's CKLW-TV operating losses over the four years from the time of original purchase. The funds invested by the CBC in St. Clair shares included an amount of $9,022,000 for these operating losses.

3. Master FM Ltd. This company was formed by five Toronto FM broadcasters, including the CBC, to build and operate a common FM antenna on the CN Tower, Toronto, Ont. Construction financing was mostly by bank loans. Each of the broadcasters pays the company an annual rent which finances its operating costs.

4. TV St. François Ltée. The acquisition of these preferred shares of St. François does not represent a share of the ownership. They are redeemable by the company in line with a time schedule at the then going rate of interest.

SALARIES OF MPs AND PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 3,152—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,615 which stated in part that as of October 17, 1980 there were 23,187 public servants earning more in salaries than Members of Parliament were receiving in annual indemnities, what is the current figure as of the date the answer to this question is prepared?

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): As of October 1981, the indemnity of a Member of Parliament is $43,800. Members also receive a non-taxable expense allowance of $14,700. This allowance increases for certain electoral districts that cover large geographic areas; as of October 1981, it is $19,500 for ridings in the Northwest Territories and $18,100 for those outlined in Schedule III of the Canada Elections Act.

As of October 1981, there are 6,375 federal public servants as defined in Schedule I, part 1 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act earning over $43,800 per annum. Of these, 375 earn more than $58,500 per annum. These figures, however, include only personnel for whom the Treasury Board is the employer: they do not include governor in council appointments or employees of Crown agencies.

CTC HEARING IN WHITEHORSE

Question No. 3,513—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 3,026 which stated in part that the cost of the Canadian Transport Commission hearing in September in Whitehorse was $717, does this amount include the transportation and accommodation costs of the commissioners and others and, if not, what was the cost?

2. Is the government aware that an article in the September 1, 1981 edition of the Globe and Mail estimated the cost to be more than $2,000?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows:

1. Yes. The amount includes total transportation and accommodation costs related to the Whitehorse hearing.

2. Yes.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, my question on the Order Paper No. 2,214 has been there since March 10, 1981. It is not a very difficult question for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism to answer. After all, he does not have very much more to do. The question reads, Madam Speaker:

1. During the period January 1, 1980, to January 31, 1981, what amount was allocated by the government to each ethnic group in Canada and, in each case (a) what was the group's origin and mailing address (b) on what date (c) for what purpose (d) under which program (e) what was the amount originally requested?

The question is very simple and the minister should have it on his computer. I recall that when I was minister we had something which could have been distributed to members who are interested in the ethnocultural community, not only myself but others. I think this is wrong and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) will talk to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. He really does not have too much to do so maybe he can look after this one particular question.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will make representations on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I want to inform the parliamentary secretary that I did not receive today the customary written notice of the questions to be answered today. I trust that was an oversight and the courtesy will be continued as usual.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, the hon. member has a valid point. I do not know what happened but I can assure him we will follow the custom and I will inquire as to what the slip-up was today.

FARM CREDIT ACT
FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Madam Speaker, this legislation is extremely important to the farm community and to Canada as a whole. It proposes measures which will strengthen the role of the federal Farm Credit Corporation in helping Canadian farmers invest in their industry's future.

When one checks the record, Mr. Speaker, one will find this act has been amended many times since it was first proclaimed in 1959. It was amended in 1961, 1962, 1964, 1966, 1968, 1972, 1975, 1978, and a bill was placed on the Order Paper March 14, 1979, and died there. So when they say there has been no concern about farm credit, history shows how many times the bill has been changed to reflect economic conditions of the day. When you see the increasing amounts of money the farmers needed, how rapidly that escalated as the farm operations became larger and larger along with the increasing value of land, it is a most interesting history to read.

The proposed changes come at a crucial time. Canadian agriculture is on the verge of a new period of development. Of all sections of the national economy, agriculture is the one with perhaps the best opportunity for growth in the balance of this century. The agri-food strategy, which I announced last July, estimated that Canada could increase its output by two-thirds by the year 2000. Both world and domestic markets for agricultural products are expanding. I believe Canadian farmers must and will rise to the challenge of producing for those markets. However, they can only do so provided that we in the federal government do our part to ensure an environment which encourages the necessary investment, and which ensures they receive a reasonable income for their crops and livestock.

To produce food efficiently in order to be able to compete in world markets in the years ahead will require major investments in new technology and new machinery. Some of the new machinery they are working on, for instance in handling forage, will in the next five to ten years revolutionize livestock feeding in Canada. So when we talk about investment in machinery, it is a tremendous investment which a lot of people in Canada do not realize farmers have made. Some machines are used only a few days a year but they must have them to be efficient.

Some farmers will have to expand the size of their farms to achieve the economies of scale necessary to take advantage of modern production methods. They need money to buy land, so it is essential that the Farm Credit Corporation have access to additional funds and Canadian farmers are assured of a constant and sufficient supply of long-term credit.

Why, one may ask, does this money have to come from the Farm Credit Corporation? Why can the farmers not borrow from their local banks or credit unions, as I might if I were buying a new home or seeking funds to start a new business. Why, indeed? One need only look at the record of the banks over the last five years as to how they have handled, or maybe I should say mishandled, farm loans to know the answer to that question. I think hon. members from rural constituencies will agree when I say farmers need a supply of long-term credit from an agency which recognizes the needs of farmers and knows how to lend money responsibly in rural Canada, particularly to the agricultural sector. The Farm Credit Corporation has that kind of knowledge and expertise, Mr. Speaker.

Although I sometimes get letters from individuals who say the FCC has not dealt with them fairly, I think by and large the corporation has a good track record of considering the individual circumstances of their clients and treating them with more sympathy and human dignity than many private lenders have shown in recent months.

In its 22-year history, the Farm Credit Corporation has lent nearly $5 billion to some 160,000 Canadian farmers. Approximately 74,000 loans are in effect at the present time, including 4,328 loans made so far in the year 1981-82. The total amount lent to farmers in the current fiscal year, as of mid-January, was $426.9 million, with the average loan being a little more than $98,000—approximately $100,000.

In the last two decades, the Farm Credit Corporation has been one of the most important factors in helping Canadian farmers establish and expand their agricultural production and increase the efficiency of their operations. The federal government's conviction of the need for a national credit corporation to assist agricultural development has been reinforced by the excellent record which the Farm Credit Corporation has attained in carrying out its function. At the moment, more than 93 per cent of all Farm Credit Corporation loans are in very good standing. We should not forget that these loans are made to people who, in most instances, cannot borrow money from any private lending institution, because that was the intent of the Farm Credit Corporation in the first instance.

In better economic times, the farmers' rate of property payment of these federal loans is even higher. Sometimes less than 2 per cent or 3 per cent are in default or in some difficulty; however, at the present time it is about 7 per cent. We are right to put faith in the ability of Canadian farmers to invest well with the funds extended by the Farm Credit Corporation. We must now make more money available to the farmers through the corporation. I spoke earlier about the number of times amendments have been made to the Farm Credit Corporation, generally for the purpose of allowing the government to lend more money and to provide more capital for the Farm Credit Corporation.

The Farm Credit Corporation was established in 1959. For most of its history, this federal agency has been the major lender for farm mortgages in this country. As recently as 1975, the Farm Credit Corporation extended more than 70 per cent of all the long-term credit needed by farmers. In 1975, the banks extended virtually no farm mortgage credit. At that time, six years ago, I appealed to the banks to get involved in the long-term farm credit market because I saw a need for wider sources of credit. As I expected, the demand for long-term credit in the agricultural sector has rapidly grown in the last few years. The increase in demand for farm credit financing has grown by approximately 20 per cent annually. The banks have responded to this growing demand, and so have the credit unions. Let us look at some figures. In 1980, for instance, credit unions lent $424.4 million in long-term credit to farmers. That was 20 per cent of the total, across Canada, for farmers. The banks lent $457.6 million, or 23 per cent of the total. The Farm Credit Corporation lent $498.7 million, which was about 25 per cent of the total, nearly $500 million. The remaining amount came from provincial agencies and private individuals.

In many instances, what farmers thought was long-term credit which they borrowed from the banks turned out not to be long-term credit. I believe some of them signed agreements which they did not really understand. Agreements which they thought were mortgages could be turned over into demand notes when that lending institution so desired. In my office I have documented letters which show that some of them were refused long-term credit. The Bank Act clearly states that the banks can do this kind of thing; that is, they can provide long-term credit with fixed interest rates if they so desire, and they have done this in some instances. Many people buy debentures from the banks for long terms. I recently heard from a man in my constituency who sold his farm several years ago. His debenture with the bank now yields him 9 per cent on $150,000.

The banks have many ways of raising money, and they have a great deal of money on which they are not paying high interest rates. The Bank Act gives them a lot of leeway to do the kind of job which should be done in the rural, agricultural community of Canada. However, this has not been done in the right fashion, because it is obvious to me that a large percentage of these farmers would not be in financial difficulty if the physical structures which they built, such as new buildings for housing their livestock and feeding operations for both beef and swine, had been financed on ten-year mortgages. They would not be in difficulty now since in most instances they built during the period when the interest rate fluctuated somewhere between 9 per cent and 11 per cent. However, because they had a combination of floating loans and depressed markets for commodities they were selling, when the interest rates went as high as 24 per cent for some of these people, it was impossible to continue to carry on.

The need for economic restraint in federal government spending in recent years has prevented us from substantially increasing the funds available to the Farm Credit Corporation to meet the rapidly growing demand for long-term investments in agriculture. We realize that this is causing a serious problem for many Canadian farmers, especially since the private lending sector, as I said, has not performed as well as it should in the administration of farm loans. As I have said outside this House, I am extremely disappointed in the way in which most of the banks, but not all of them, have handled the demand for farm credit. I had made an exception, because I named one bank as being one which I believed to have the best farm lending program of all, but farmers immediately wrote to tell me that that bank was not so good either. Therefore, it is obvious to me that none of them is perfect. In many cases, they have handled the demand for farm credit in an improper way by extending credit beyond the ability of farmers to repay. Some have forced farmers to take out short-term bank loans at floating interest rates when, as I said, long-term loans at fixed rates should have been made available instead.

Many lenders have shown neither mercy nor consideration for the future food supply of this country by abruptly foreclosing on mortgages and calling in demand notes. One of the things I find to be amazing is that there are cases where a farm has been in a family for four generations, has been built and expanded, with perhaps a quarter of a million dollars in interest paid over a few years to a bank or lending institution, which then puts the farm into receivership or bankruptcy. Many cases are not really listed or registered as bankruptcies, so they are not shown in the figures we use here. The number should be much greater. However, the banks are willing to take a loss rather than give a write-off to the benefit of the person who has contributed by paying high interest rates over a long period of time. No mercy will the banks show to that person, who has generally been deprived of even the necessities of life in order to pay interest payments to the bank over, say, a period of five years or ten years. However, the banks are willing to sell it at a loss to some complete stranger rather than give a write-off to that person who has made such a contribution to the lending institution.

This has been brought to my attention by many farmers. In my experience, only one bank has been able to offer a write-off of part of the loan. It has said that if one can obtain the rest of the money through the Farm Credit Corporation or the Small Business Development Bond, it would go along with that kind of an operation. This is the only instance in many hundreds with which we have dealt.

Nevertheless, the banks do have an ongoing and important role to play in farm credit, and I hope they are now looking, as I understand some are, at their farm lending policies in order to improve their future dealings with the farm community. However, there are legitimate credit requirements of farmers which banks and credit unions will never be able to serve because the potential borrower does not meet their security or repayment rules. These farmers, in particular, will benefit from the additional funding to be provided through this legislation which we are discussing today.

The most important amendment being proposed is that a new source of future funding be provided for the Farm Credit Corporation. The bill contains amendments which would enable the corporation to borrow money from the financial markets. A major portion of its budget would still be derived from the Consolidated Revenue Fund; however, the corporation would be in a position to supplement its loan funds from other sources. It is estimated that with an agent of Her Majesty status, under normal interest rate conditions the extra cost of borrowing from the financial market would be between one half and one percentage point above the current cost of funds through the government.

● (1540)

With the authority to borrow from sources other than the Minister of Finance, it is expected that the FCC will borrow in the financial markets through private placements by an agent. The debt instruments, such as bonds or debentures, offered by the Farm Credit Corporation would likely be purchased by institutional investors, such as life insurance companies, trust companies, pension funds and other investment companies interested in acquiring high-grade securities for their portfolios.

Farmers, particularly retiring farmers, have often asked me about the possibility of investing funds in the FCC so that they can assist young and beginning farmers. With this proposed amendment, a special investment mechanism could be developed to channel funds from these retiring farmers into the FCC.

A type of investment fund could be established where retiring farmers could invest the proceeds from the sale of their farms. In principle, it could be the same as the current registered retirement savings plans, with a retiring farmer being allowed a major contribution in the sale of his farm. A farm would essentially be transferring his retirement plan, that is the equity in his farm, to a more formal investment.

In the future, consideration could be given to providing special tax concessions on bonds sold by the Farm Credit Corporation. This would effectively reduce the Farm Credit Corporation's cost of funds and permit it to loan at a lower rate to young and beginning farmers, or to those in financial difficulty, for example.

A further amendment set forth in this bill provides that the maximum amount of a loan be prescribed by regulations rather than in the act. That is so that if conditions change, it is not necessary to come back to the House and wait your turn in the legislative line-up to get a bill through.

Currently the limits specified in the act are $200,000 when there is one qualifying applicant in a farming enterprise and $400,000 when there is more than one. It is no secret that financing a farming operation is getting more and more expensive all the time. It is no different from any other business.

If the Farm Credit Corporation is to meet the needs of today's and tomorrow's farmers, it must have the flexibility to adjust the loan maximum upwards when necessary. Some people think that when a farmer spends a tremendous amount of money in his farm operation he must be rich. A recent report in The Globe and Mail, a large daily newspaper in Canada, attempted to show how rich farmers are. I have the complete breakdown by the Farm Credit Corporation. It shows exactly what a farmer's investment is, how rich he is and what his returns are, but that was eliminated from the published report. It was not there.

There is hardly a businessman in Canada who would operate on as slim a margin as farmers. The ordinary person reading that newspaper report would think that every farmer in Canada is rich because of the amount of his holdings. As we know, they do have holdings, but very little capital that they can use.

Transferring the loan limits from the act to the regulations will provide an opportunity for the corporation to respond more quickly to changing agricultural conditions. At this time, and we hope this bill becomes law quickly, we are proposing to increase these limits to $300,000 for one qualifying applicant and $500,000 when there is more than one applicant. It may be necessary to use regulations to change that before the year is out, who knows?

Another amendment which will benefit FCC borrowers provides the corporation with the authority to disburse up to 30 per cent of a loan on the basis of acceptable security until the mortgage registration and other security arrangements for the loan are completed. This is a common complaint from the farmers. Once a loan has been approved, there may be no funds. He may then have to go to a private institution to borrow the money temporarily at a higher interest rate. Sometimes this is done under very difficult conditions. In most institutions once the lending institution sees that the loan has been approved, they make the loan. However, it is more costly for the borrower. This initial disbursement will save farmers the cost and inconvenience of having to arrange interim financing until mortgage funds are actually extended by the corporation.

The corporation's borrowing authority is currently limited to 25 times its capital. It is interesting to note that the capital was increased from $56 million to $66 million in 1972, ten years ago. The current capital limit is $150 million. By the end of this fiscal year, capital contributed to the corporation by the Government of Canada will reach almost $143 million. That means the FCC will reach its maximum borrowing authority early in 1982-83. It is therefore necessary to increase the capital from $150 million to $225 million to head off a serious depletion in lending funds.

In recent years I have received numerous representations concerning the age limit fixed on the phasing-in program which allows borrowers under 35 years of age to work off the farm for up to five years. Bill C-88 proposes to remove this age limit from the program because it is discriminatory. Approximately 74 per cent of loans were made to those between 18 and 35 in 1980-81.

The second part of the bill will give the corporation the authority needed to rebate five percentage points on the interest for loans under the special farm financial assistance program announced in the November 12 budget. This authority will allow me to obtain the necessary funds through departmental estimates.

The FCC has already made 89 loans under this special program. A total of $11 million has been loaned with the average loans being almost $124,000. As hon. members know, of the $50 million budgeted for this program, $45 million will go to the farmers and $5 million for the interest subsidy. This is for farmers facing the most difficult financial problems at the present time.

It is interesting to see where these applications are coming from. Naturally, the vast majority come from Ontario. Applications in some western provinces are almost nil. The need is not there. It depends on the kind of agricultural production entity that they have. I am pleased that the FCC was quick to respond following the budget announcement and that it has already processed many inquiries. I am told that by the end of the fiscal year all of that money will be lent, and it better be! I am sure the corporation is doing a very thorough job, as it usually does.

In addition to doing the work on Farm Credit Corporation loans, the corporation has 203 credit advisers in 110 offices across Canada. They are also assisting farmers in making applications for small business bonds from other lenders. With this program the farmer can borrow the maximum $200,000 under the Farm Credit Corporation and the family can get a small business bond from another lender at a reduced rate of interest, fixed for five years. This will give them an opportunity to recoup their position. They will not make that much money unless there is a better marketing system for what they produce. I will touch on that later.

I have only touched on the most important changes being proposed. Many of the other amendments will help streamline the operation of the FCC and I look forward to a full discussion of these in committee.

The hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) pointed out on Monday that this legislation has been promised for some time. I would have liked to have had this legislation considered sooner. However, it is my belief that my officials and I have used the extra time to good advantage to listen to and discuss the many suggestions brought forward by farm organizations. The hon. member for Elgin participated in a program that studied farm financing just before Christmas and I am sure he would not want me to bring in some legislation without hearing the report of that committee before we finally drafted this. I believe we have accomplished some of those things and I am sure the hon. member will tell me shortly that I have not accomplished them all. This is why, for the fourth time, I will have the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt—

• (1550)

Mr. McKnight: You have the wrong party.

Mr. Whelan: I was looking forward to hearing from the learned and experienced member. I will willingly pay attention to the hon. member when he does speak.

I read in the paper that I had not done anything for farm credit in five years. We went back and reviewed the situation. Since I have been minister, there was a bill introduced in 1972, 1975, twice in 1978 and one in 1979 which died on the Order Paper—almost every second year we have done something about farm credit. One gets the impression from the paper that we have not shown any concern for the needs of farmers. I just want to put that on the record.

The amendments I have outlined today come as a result of many letters and personal representations from individual farmers, farm organizations, the FCC advisory committee, provincial ministers of agriculture and my fellow members of Parliament. All have stressed the need for more long-term credit for Canadian farmers. We are not pretending, by any stretch of the imagination, that this bill will be the answer for every Canadian farmer. We still think there is a definite place for the lending institutions to develop a proper lending policy because of the importance of food production. They have just as much responsibility to those farmers who are in financial difficulty, because I suggest they have put many of them in trouble as a result of their lending practices. In fact, they probably have more responsibility to help those farmers out of their financial difficulty than I have as Minister of Agriculture. I asked them to make loans in rural Canada, and as I said earlier, I did not know they would do that kind of job.

This bill will provide more long-term credit for farmers and also strengthen the Farm Credit Corporation's ability to respond to the needs of our producers.

The FCC is helping to ensure that the Canadian family farm remains a stable and viable entity. It is probably one of the most decentralized organizations, as is Agriculture Canada, since confederation, because the vast majority or our employees are located from Nova Scotia through to British Columbia. They are not all here in the capital. These people understand the needs of the farmers in their communities because they work with them all the time. It is said that we have not done all the things we should have done. There is other money being provided to farmers actually interest-free, a fact which many people are not aware of. For instance, we passed the Advanced Payments for Crops Act for crops outside the responsibility of the Wheat Board. I believe it was estimated that we would probably lend $40 million under that legislation. This year we are lending some $136 million in interest-free advance payments to farmers for the lifetime storage of that crop.

If you consider the advance payments on grain under the Wheat Board this year, Mr. Speaker, you will find those interest-free payments amount to well over $300 million. Before the year ends, I think you will find about $500 million has been provided interest-free to farmers. You will also see in this fiscal year that the Farm Credit Corporation will have again lent over $500 million at an interest rate which will average much below the interest rate being charged by other lending institutions for the fiscal year. I would say we will average at least five points below what other lending institutions have provided for the whole year.

I urge hon. members to show their support for Canadian farmers. The House leaders have already come to an agreement on the number of days for debate of this bill before it goes to committee.

Again, I urge hon. members to show their support for Canadian farmers through this legislation, and if they have other sound recommendations, I am not beyond accepting them when the bill is before committee or when it comes forward for third reading in the House if the recommendations are practical and improve the legislation. I urge hon. members to show their support for Canadian farmers by improving, through this legislation, the farm credit service provided by the federal government so it is what we want it to be. Indeed, I cannot imagine a man or a woman among my colleagues, regardless of where they sit in this House, who would not support the farmers at this vital point in the agricultural industry by denying them this worth-while legislation.

I want to conclude by saying that the government, and I am sure the Farm Credit Corporation, would be irresponsible if we were to lend money carelessly. A large percentage of the people—some 95 per cent of them—who are in trouble are in the red meat industry in Canada. The other 5 per cent are from the horticultural sector, with a few in the dairy sector who borrowed money from a lending institution outside any provincial lending institution or the Farm Credit Corporation. They borrowed it thinking they had fixed interest rates and so on, and then when their return was about 10 per cent on investment and their interest rates went up as high as 24 per cent, they were just not able to carry on.

So what I am saying is yes, we can make the Farm Credit Corporation a better institution, we can help the Farm Credit Corporation people to do a better job—a job we all want to see them do—and people who are in financial difficulties will be unable to repay their mortgages unless they have better marketing facilities and we are able to guarantee them a better economic return.

I look forward to hearing what the next speaker has to say.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I think it is probably evident to most people in the agriculture industry that there are times when we agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen)—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKnight: I am sorry, never the Minister of Finance! On a point of privilege, never the Minister of Finance! But, Mr. Speaker, we do agree at times with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), and just in case he thinks that somehow my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wise) is relinquishing his control over the agriculture business in Canada, from the uneven match that we witnessed on the bill referred to as Canagrex the other day, my hon. friend from Elgin felt that it was only proper for the Minister of Agriculture and I to debate this bill since my hon. friend overwhelmed the minister in the Canagrex debate. So now we are down to an average of mediocrity!

We think it is important that we point out to the minister some of the things that could strengthen Bill C-88, the amendment to the Farm Credit Corporation legislation. But before doing this, may I say that we agree that the Farm Credit Corporation has over the past number of years provided a very valuable service to the agriculture industry in Canada—not just in any special part of the country but right across Canada.

Probably one of the reasons that the repayment rate under the farm credit program is right now in default in about 7 per cent of its loans could be that the criteria which has been established for lending under the Farm Credit Corporation is a little stiff, a little heavy. Perhaps we are not taking enough of a chance on young or new farmers, men and women who wish to enter the agriculture field. Maybe that is one of the reasons. The minister knows, and I know, that the other reason is that people involved in the agriculture industry attempt to maintain a credit standing because credit is so necessary in the production of food in Canada. It is becoming more a part of production every day.

• (1600)

We wonder about the delay of this bill. The minister said he felt the time had been put to good use and that the delay had not affected the bill negatively but had strengthened it. I think that could be debated because since 1979 this is the only time we have had an opportunity to debate a Farm Credit Corporation bill. In 1979 when my colleague, the hon. member for Elgin, was in charge of the Department of Agriculture and the Farm Credit Corporation, $50 million was provided for additional farm credit lending. We had hoped that in 1980 there would be an additional $100 million. In 1981 there should have been an additional $150 million. In 1982 there should be an additional $200 million just to keep up with inflation and rising land costs all over Canada, and I am sure those costs will continue to increase.

I hope the government does not consider borrowing from the marketplace is the panacea or the only answer. I see that the minister agrees. I believe he is sincere in that, and I hope officials of the Farm Credit Corporation will increase pressure for additional funding from the federal treasury. However, there should not be federal funding if it is not necessary. The Farm Credit Corporation is anything but a granting institution. It lends funds to the agriculture industry and is repaid with interest. The corporation does not give money to producers. In times of financial difficulty and when there is pressure on the government, it may be that the government might decrease funding for the Farm Credit Corporation or fail to keep funding at inflationary levels. We have faced high inflationary levels in Canada over the last few years and will continue to face them in the next few years under some of the policies we see presented. When the Farm Credit Corporation bill, Bill C-88, goes to committee, I hope the minister will assure us that the federal government will not relinquish its role in financing farm credit and that he will put something into the law which we can accept as a guarantee that farm credit will continue to be funded by the federal treasury at least at the level of the inflation rate in the Canadian economy, and hopefully higher, and at the rate land prices increase throughout Canada.

Sometimes we wonder about the minister. He has stated he is very pleased to be able to do this, but it is interesting that according to the London Free Press of January 31, 1980, the minister said he would not allow the Farm Credit Corporation to receive funds from outside because that would create privatization of the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Whelan: That is a misquote if there ever was one.

Mr. McKnight: The minister says that is a misquote.

Mr. Lewis: You can't tell when the minister is quoted properly or improperly.

Mr. McKnight: I will send it to him later.

Some of the other issues hinging on Bill C-88 are some of the promises made during the 1980 election campaign, and I hope the producers involved will not have to wait as long for those promises to be fulfilled by the Minister of Agriculture as they have had to wait for Bill C-88.

Credit is a necessity in the farming industry. It is important that everyone in Canada understands that about 15 per cent of the costs paid out by the agricultural industry is for interest. Right now 15 per cent of the cost of production is made up of interest payments in one form or another. Credit is one of the biggest problems farmers in Canada face today, and the cost of credit is continually rising. I hope the next time we look at farm credit the minister will not be increasing the rate of interest borrowers will have to pay to the Farm Credit Corporation. I hope he will be able to decrease that rate.

In 1979, $634 million was made available to the Crown Credit Corporation. I think there were some unusual circumstances that year. Farmers paid off some loans, which gave the corporation a little more money to lend out. However, from 1979 until now we have not seen an increase which would come anywhere close to maintaining the corporation's ability to lend at the 1979 level. I think the minister would agree that in some areas 30 per cent of the cost of production is interest costs. I refer here to cash crops. The Farm Credit Corporation will be called upon to lend more and more money as time progresses.

Perhaps one of the reasons farmers in western Canada are in a better financial position now is that the minister spends most of his time in Ontario rather than in western Canada. I think that probably speaks for itself. The other thing that might be to our advantage is that the red meat industry does not finish livestock in western Canada. The red meat industry finishes livestock in Ontario. Steps can be taken and should be taken to assist producers in the red meat industry. I do not accept the argument of the Minister of Agriculture that a national marketing board is the panacea for the red meat industry.

I would like to talk about the province of Saskatchewan. Statistics show that operating expenses in the province of Saskatchewan in 1976 were $966 million. In 1980 they were $1.58 billion. The percentage increase between 1976 and 1980—just four years—was 63.6 per cent. In 1976 farmers made interest payments amounting to $131 million. According to preliminary figures for 1980 that figure was $285 million, an increase of 117 per cent in four years. Let me compare total farm expenses with total farm cash receipts in the province of Saskatchewan. In 1976 cash receipts were $2.3 million. The preliminary figure for 1980 is $3.13 million. That is a 39.5 per cent increase in four years. However, net farm income decreased by 47 per cent in four years.

It is not that the government has sat idly by. This government has established interest rates which are costing producers in Canada. They are not assisting producers, so I do not think the minister should be so pleased to come in with a small piece of legislation because the legislation has been necessary for the last three years, and hope to see more legislation in the future.

I would like to refer to the budget of November 12, 1981. A lot of credibility and enthusiasm was developed by the Minister of Agriculture with an input of $50 million for farmers in dire straits or farmers who were in financial difficulty. Out of that $50 million, only $5 million is available to subsidize interest rates for farmers in financial distress. Those farmers have to be in the position that they cannot even get a small business bond. It is probably 20 per cent of what was necessary, maybe only 10 per cent, or perhaps it was put in without a great deal of thought. When you look at the number of farmers it would really help, you see that the number is negligible.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has said that the Farm Credit Corporation provision is disgracefully inadequate and is a sop to the requests of farmers for some real help. It points out that the $45 million provided in the budget allows only $100,000 for 450 farmers. Yet a farmer needs $200,000 minimum today to start up a farm, so that assists only 225 farmers.

I have some questions about how the minister's food policy will be developed when we do not have enough government assistance to enable people to become involved in agriculture. Even with this financial provision there is not enough financial assistance to transfer land from generation to generation or from individual to individual.

I hope that the refinancing of the Farm Credit Corporation by the private sector will work. I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture could persuade the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) or the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) to allow individuals who have retired and have sold their farms to place money in the Farm Credit Corporation with the same benefits that the government has given to the banks to lend money out on the Small Business Development Bond, where the banks do not pay tax on the interest received and where the individual does not deduct it from his tax when he borrows money. We know that the producers who find themselves in financial difficulty are not in a position to pay tax; therefore the cost to the federal treasury would be nil. Hundreds of Canadian farmers who are retiring would be pleased to place funds at the disposal of the Farm Credit Corporation in order to help other farmers come back into the industry.

In the province of Saskatchewan the average age of the farmer is 50 and the average age of retirement is 57. There are a lot of people who are no longer interested in, and in some cases are no longer capable of, carrying out the business of farming who would like to be able to transfer their land. With tight money and the high interest costs on other sources of financing, they are unable to do this.

I am sure the minister would agree that the changes made in the budget of November, 1981, regarding income averaging annuity contracts have frozen the land sales of this generation. Until there is some change in the capital gains tax and until there is some change in the ability of individuals to use the funds they have saved or the capital from their farms that will protect that from exorbitant taxation at the time of sale, this generation is going to have to continue to maintain control of the land. As a result, agriculture will not prosper when people would sooner retire from the business and have younger men and women take their place.

There is an option in Saskatchewan—but it is not a very good one—called the land bank, where the government buys the land from the retiring farmer. The government contends that this is a good plan because it offers the land back to the farmer in five years. In one instance, however, where the government bought the land for $100 per acre it offered to sell it back to the individual in five years for $400 per acre. The minister should consider such cases because due to the lack of funding by the Farm Credit Corporation some individuals in Saskatchewan are forced to sell to the land bank. The land usually remains in the hands of the government because it insists on recovering a profit of 400 per cent within five years.

I hope that the changes in the Farm Credit Corporation will assist individuals who are having difficulty transferring farms from generation to generation. Individuals who are asked about the treatment they receive from the Farm Credit Corporation say, in almost every instance, that it is good, fair and reasonable. I do not think that is due to the Minister of Agriculture as much as it is to a lot of the people in the field, such as the Farm Credit Corporation advisers. I hear it filters down from the top, but if that were the case I think some farmers would be in greater difficulty than they are now. I should like to commend the men and women who work for the Farm Credit Corporation for the service they give to people in the farming communities of this country.

I should not like to end on a negative note, Mr. Speaker, so I should like to put a few questions to the minister. I am sure he has heard them before but we have not had answers to them. Perhaps his parliamentary secretary, who is very capable and I am sure is of great assistance to the minister, could answer some of them.

We requested that a moratorium be placed on farm bankruptcies and we wonder why the minister has not taken any interest in this request. We do not think it is an answer to the problem but we think it is a way to save the farm in tough times. I am sure the minister would like to answer that question.

We also wonder why the Farm Credit Corporation was given $50 million in November, 1981, rather than $500 million. We also wonder why the Small Business Development Bond is administered solely by the banks. I have heard the minister express some feelings about the banks so I thought he would be the last person to place this matter in their hands. Why could it not be placed in the hands of the Farm Credit Corporation? It could issue the Small Business Development Bonds, especially in view of the changes we are discussing today.

I am sure the minister is familiar with the agri-bond concept and the proposal made by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture which wanted a market insurance risk plan. That suggestion may not be the answer to the problem but it is something that would give assistance and add stability to the agricultural sector.

There are subsidies for all kinds of things all over Canada, Mr. Speaker, even in other areas of agriculture. We would like to know why there could not be a short-term or medium-term loan subsidy on interest rates.

● (1620)

It is also important to know what happened to the promise of the Minister of Agriculture on valuation day concerning the re-evaluation of capital gains. I distinctly remember the minister saying that it would be moved up to 1974. This would have helped, but he needed something else during the election campaign to entice votes from farmers. He said that he would give them a once-in-a-lifetime exemption from capital gains tax. That was a promise of the Liberal campaign, a promise of the Minister of Agriculture. Now we see what happened. Not only has valuation day remained unchanged from 1971, one of the years in which land was at its lowest price in a long time—it has not been changed to 1974—but there is no once-in-a-lifetime exemption from capital gains on farm land. There is no moratorium now, and there are still producers in the agricultural industry who are faced with forced sale prices. It is bad enough that the election promises were not fulfilled, but now we see men and women who have worked for a long time to build up their retirement stakes being taxed by the government under the budget of November 12.

I am sure the minister would like to see these changes. I hope he is successful in making them. The people of rural Canada, whether in the Atlantic provinces, central Canada or western Canada, need those changes if they are to retire with dignity and to pass along their farm land.

In 1979 there was an energy tax credit which would have assisted farmers in the production of food. It would have protected them to some extent against the increased cost of fuel used in production. This would have gone along with the 1979 increases proposed by the Progressive Conservative government, not the exorbitant ones proposed by the Liberal government which are being implemented immediately.

I notice that the minister talked about RRSPs in his speech. He will recall the proposal of the then minister of finance in the December, 1979, budget that there would be $100,000 for people to put into RRSPs; those RRSPs could have been put into farm credit now. The minister spoke of an investment of that type. It is something we look forward to seeing.

I hope I hear the answers I requested from the government side when the turn rolls around to them again, but in closing I should like to refer to the farm bankruptcy statistics between January and October, 1981. In the province of Nova Scotia there were 3; in New Brunswick, 3; in Quebec, 45; in Ontario from where the Minister of Agriculture comes, 126; in Manitoba, 12; in Saskatchewan, 18; in Alberta, 15; in British Columbia, 8, for a total of 230 bankruptcies. Those are 230 families, individuals, men and women, sons and daughters who worked to try to produce food for Canada and to contribute to our national good. They tried to do something on their own, but we have let them down. I say "we" because there must be some co-operation among hon. members of all parties in the area of agriculture. The agricultural industry is so important to Canada and to individual families that we cannot allow something called politics to destroy Canadian farms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to speak to the amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act in Bill C-88. We have awaited this group of amendments for a long time. I am not sure why we have waited so long because in essence the amendments make the bill more general than it was. They allow for administration of the bill by means of regulation rather than by specific requirements in the bill itself. It loosens up the administration of the bill considerably. Therefore I fail to understand the argument of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in his presentation as to the excuses for delaying the bill until after he had heard from one task force or another. They were excuses for delay so that he would have a so-called perfect bill, when in fact the bill is so general that it could have been written almost any time. It would apply to almost any day or age simply by the use of the regulations which are pertinent for that day or age.

I am somewhat disturbed by the minister's presentation of the bill. I feel he almost ignored the problem. Granted, he is dealing with a need for farm credit, but he has not been addressing, either in his policy statements and speeches across the country or in the House, what I consider to be the real problem in the area of farm credit. It is not a problem of inadequate credit. Probably more specifically it is a problem of a lack of adequate net incomes in the farming economy because of a lack of attention to other aspects of agricultural policy.

In order to finance agriculture adequately in the short run and to finance the reinvestment requirements of the industry to keep it up to date, net incomes in the long run must be adequate. The industry should be almost self-financing. It has seldom been, but it should be. When we look at net farm income figures, the outstanding farm debt, the value of farm capital, the cost of interest, and at the tables of Agriculture Canada, we see that from 1974 to the end of 1981 there has been very little change in realized net incomes in the country. They were $3.5 billion in 1974. In 1980 they were $3.3 billion. In 1981 we expected to make a little jump up to $4 billion, but the outlook for 1982 is that they will be down 15 per cent or 18 per cent. Basically net farm incomes have remained stable in a time when the value of the dollar has been eroded by more than half. In real terms, available net incomes to farmers are probably half what they were in 1974.

In order to overcome that shortfall, farmers have taken the only available route. They have done the only thing they could do to survive in business. Some of them have failed, but they have attempted to borrow money to make up the shortfall. The farm debt in 1974 was $6.9 billion. At the end of 1980 it was up to $16.6 billion. In an effort to overcome the shortfall in net incomes, farmers have increased borrowings at a phenomenal rate. Because of other policies of the government and I suppose of this continent—because it is a copy of what is ongoing in the United States—along with increased borrowings and high interest rates, we see a very disturbing story of the cost aspects of farming with respect to interest.

In 1974 the total interest paid by Canadian farmers was $473 million. By the end of 1981 it is estimated to be $2.168 billion, which is something over five times as much just in the course of seven years. This was not the minister's expectation, if you go back and look over some of the speeches he has made regarding farm credit and farm income. I do not think he expected that. I think it is indicative of the kind of assessment which the minister has made of the problem. That has very much missed the mark on a solution.

• (1630)

For instance, the minister seems to have got it into his head around 1977, perhaps before, that the way to get out of this problem was not to attack directly the marketing problems that exist in Canadian agriculture, not to attempt to improve the stabilization program so that farm incomes could be maintained at income levels where farmers could refinance themselves, but rather to privatize the lending institutions, open up the banking system and thereby encourage the banking system to take up the slack.

On October 25, 1977, in a speech to the Canadian Bankers' Association at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, which was at a time when the minister was looking for something from the banks and not taking a very hard stance with them, he said:

I take my hat off to banks and other interested financial organizations who are starting to get involved in long-term agricultural lending programs because I welcome progress. And this is progress.

That is what the minister said in 1977. In this connection he said that the annual amount of credit used by farms ranged from a possible $9 billion to $12 billion by 1981. The minister saw increased need for credit. He went on to say that he could not see the Farm Credit Corporation taking up that slack.

In fact, the estimate of credit needs was quite a bit off the mark. Instead of being $9 billion to $12 billion, it exceeded $16 billion by the end of 1980. We do not know what the figure is for 1981. Needless to say, no one expects it to be between $9 billion and $12 billion. The minister did encourage the banks to get into the market.

The minister had some rather harsh words in September, 1978, regarding the role which the Farm Credit Corporation was playing up to that time. Agriculture Canada on behalf of the minister issued a news release on September 28, 1978, which reads:

The Farm Credit Corporation is on the verge of being freed from the control of civil servants who don't know about farming, Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan said Thursday.

Yet we have before us a bill that frees up the role of Parliament and presents to this House a generalized bill, and through it all of the decisions will be made by regulation. I suppose from the minister's attitude toward civil servants that the regulations will be written and proposed to cabinet totally by the minister, but I doubt it.

Mr. Whelan: We are listening to your representations.

Mr. Althouse: The minister says that he will be listening to our representations.

Generally speaking, we have no major objection to the presentation of this type of bill. We understand that most of the governing of the country is done by regulation. We just do not appreciate the length of time being used as an excuse for slowness in introducing this bill. I think that such a generally worded bill could have been presented to the House much sooner. It changes very little. The actual changes are completely unknown to us. We will have to dig them out when we are in committee and watch for future announcements.

I return to the 1978 press release because it goes on to quote the minister as having said:

—he tried to get the change made when John Turner was finance minister but it wasn't until Jean Chrétien took over last September that approval was given.

Now we have approval. That was the basis of the 1978 announcement. Approval may have been given, but the bill has wended its slow and tortuous way to the House through this process and has finally arrived. Although it has gone through a long, tortuous process, we welcome the fact that it has finally arrived.

It is hard not to make any comments about the slow process in light of the minister's attitude toward civil servants getting things done when it took the minister over four years to do something. Instead of carrying on with his self-image of being lean, mean Gene, we should more correctly start referring to him as "glacier Whelan". Glaciers make very imperceptible movements, which is what this ministry and certainly this bill have done.

We in our party have assessed the situation that faces Canadian farmers and Canadian agriculture to be somewhat broader than a need for more credit. While more credit is part and parcel of the immediate solution to turning the situation around, we think that the basic problem is still one of inadequate prices brought about, admittedly in part, by the kind of world pricing situation facing agricultural products all the time. Some things we can do something about and some we cannot. There have been a great many attempts by different nations to combine action, to set up what are sometimes called cartels, other times called agreements, and yet at other times called interstate arrangements, so that the problems of shortages and surpluses can be worked out between nations. At any one time in the world there is usually no great amount of surplus food. Surpluses and shortages occur in certain countries and certain regions.

With the right kind of co-operation, perhaps some day the world will establish a means of communication and transportation that will create pools or banks of food so that countries suffering from shortfalls will be able to draw from those banks. In the meantime, we note the slow progress that has been made in this regard. However, within the confines of our country there are certain things that can be done. For example, we can examine methods of improving the system of marketing so that farmers who produce the basic product are able to extract maximum returns from the marketplace. Very few of our commodities are structured that way, in part because of some of the difficulties arising from the British North America Act where jurisdiction over agricultural products is shared between the provinces and the federal government. So there has been and continues to be very real and jealously guarded jurisdictions. However, that has been overcome on a number of commodities and I think more effort should be made on those commodities that are not yet in a system of national marketing.

Along with the setting up of agencies to enable producers to extract the maximum return from the market, we have to be aware that, since prices are affected by world market conditions, some form of price insurance or price stability has to be provided agriculture if it is to be self-financing. I think improvements to existing stabilization programs are definitely required if Canada's agriculture is to continue to progress and recapitalize itself to face new challenges.

We have varying forms of crop insurance to cover natural disasters, which I think works moderately well. We should continue that and make certain it is updated to meet the full cash costs of production for those farmers in the position of losing a crop due to sudden weather changes. So we are saying that we do need an aggressive attack on the real problem, the price question which faces agriculture.

The need for credit is peripheral to that. We would not have a large shortfall of credit were there adequate incomes in the first place. However, because we are in this position and it will take a number of years to get ourselves out of it, we have been proposing over the last number of years, certainly since I have been in the House and I know my colleagues here before me have made similar suggestions to previous governments, that there must be a method whereby our agricultural resources can be turned over from one generation to the other, which method is self-generating and self-financing.

We have said on many occasions that there are some moves which this government could make to facilitate this. I wrote to the minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) prior to the budget on a number of occasions, outlining suggestions to improve the credit position of farmers. These included a form of bond that would allow the retiring farmer to reinvest his money in farm credit bonds or some similar instrument, with the co-operation of the Department of National Revenue. We think there could be a great pool of funds developed for refinancing farm land by deferring the capital gains tax on the sale of land until such time as the retiring farmer has to withdraw his funds from the FCC in order to meet his retirement income needs. This would mean that the agency could have the use of that money for about two thirds or three quarters, probably two thirds, of the current interest rate. This would be useful and acceptable to the retiring farmer and would make a great deal more money available to the beginning or expanding farmer. It would not cost the government anything except a little bit of deferred taxes, and would be a very useful and obvious pool of investment capital.

Added to that could be a program allowing farmers with particularly high income years to invest in that kind of bond on a similar basis, which would make further funds available to the FCC at much below market rates on the understanding that tax on that income could be deferred until drawn out for use by the individual. Neither of those options has been taken up; instead the government chose to present a bill which leaves the option open, but we do not know if it is there.

We wish there had been some announcement along with this bill outlining the government's intentions regarding the regulations, and where they intend to get the funds mentioned in the bill. I think we will be pursuing that in committee and I hope the minister and his officials will be prepared to discuss those questions there.

Without taking up a lot of the time of the House on this particular bill, I am going to attempt to review my impression of it so that we can go on to complete the debate as quickly as possible. As I said, this bill has been talked about for four or five years, both by this minister and the previous minister in the Conservative government. Some of the original reasons for presenting these kinds of amendments seem to be changing as the minister changes his mind about whether the banks are good guys or bad guys. However, we still have the opening, the way this bill is written, for banks to take over an even larger chunk of Canada's farm credit needs.

Those needs are not unsubstantial. As I recall, the banks are filling about 30 per cent of the total requirements, most of it on a short-term basis, along with a goodly chunk of the medium-term capital required. This bill appears to increase the capital available to the FCC so that they may now have up to $5.6 billion outstanding, up from $3.75 billion, or roughly a 50 per cent increase. From the way the bill is written it is not clear how much of that will be available soon or from what source. We do not know how much is private money or how much is public money. This kind of basic information is not available to us in the bill. I hope the minister and his officials will be able to give us some indication of that when it gets to committee.

Because we do not know the relationship of public to private money, it is very difficult to get an idea as to what kind of interest rates there will be. If we do go out strictly on the public market without using any of the provisions I have discussed in my presentations to the minister and to the Minister of Finance, I do not see how the public money will be able to reduce interest rates to the Farm Credit Corporation. The government may have a magic formula, and I would be very interested to hear how that particular program will work to bring about lower interest rates.

• (1650)

In fact, an interesting altercation took place on the radio noon show today. George Price the farm broadcaster, while hosting an interview on this very subject, asked a very fundamental question, namely, whether interest rates will continue to rise. One of the civil servants who had been identified as a vice-chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation, Paul Babey, began to say yes, but the minister interrupted to explain that they will not be rising. We will be interested to find out the various points of view concerning that matter when it gets to committee, as well.

An hon. Member: Is the minister in charge?

Mr. Althouse: Well, it is not certain. My colleague asked whether the minister is in charge. It is not certain just who is in charge at the moment. He was not going to leave it up to the civil servants, yet the bill seems to leave a great deal of it up to the civil servants.

We agree that the corporation should be increased to seven members. We support this move. Also, we have no objection to the ceiling on eligibility for loans being set by regulation. We think this will allow for more flexibility and will probably allow hon. members of this House and farm organizations to have as much leverage in decisions as we would if such matters went into a bill and were locked in for several years before the bill could come back to the House. We have no objection to that.

While I am standing, I wish to make note that it seems that some changes and broadening of the regulations have been made as they apply to Indian bands. There was formerly a ceiling of $400,000 on loans to Indian bands. Now this ceiling will not be set in the act itself but will be subject to regulation. I hope that regulation will make that ceiling a great deal higher so that Indian bands with substantial agricultural land to develop can take advantage of Farm Credit Corporation loans to do so.

I also note that, while there is only one mention of agricultural production co-operatives in this bill, and a similar kind of notation would be made by the minister and his officials, some production co-operatives need great amounts of capital, too. As long as co-operatives are operated by their members and shareholders, when regulations are being drafted consideration should be given to that aspect of agricultural production as well. It is a kind of agricultural production which is very often forgotten in regulations made here in Ottawa. I hope when it comes to making Farm Credit Corporation funds available that that form of agriculture production will not be ignored.

I note that there will be some changes to the regulations and to the bill itself with regard to age limits on farmers. I would just like to take a moment to congratulate the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) for his work in getting the ceiling lifted on age 35. This was done through his discussions with the Human Rights Commissioner, Mr. Fairweather, who noted, upon reviewing the matter, that this was indeed a discriminatory clause. I think the intervention by my colleague, the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake, had a great deal to do with the change in this part of the act.

Another aspect to this ceiling of age 35 in the bill is that a bit of sex discrimination was beginning to emerge in the Farm Credit Corporation as well. I hope the particular wording now contained in the bill will eliminate that. There were a number of instances where, because of the age 35 ceiling, a wife would make an application as the farmer and owner because she happened to be under age 35. In a great many of these cases there was much difficulty in convincing various officials that females could be farmers. I hope this aspect will disappear from the act as a result of this new wording and that it will not show up again in the forthcoming regulations.

In conclusion, I would just like to reiterate my initial comment that the farm income situation looks very grim. It is projected that in 1981-82 incomes will drop to the same level or slightly below the 1974 level. That is really a disaster because it means, in effect, a halving of farm incomes. It is no wonder that the thoughts and attentions of farmers have been directed toward the need for farm credit. The incomes generated on farms have not been adequate. This particular bill, this move to attempt to free up more funds through the Farm Credit Corporation, will assist; but I hope that the government and the minister will focus more attention on doing something about the real problem, the farm income problem, and will get on with programs for improved marketing and better stabilization which will bring us better net farm incomes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I now speak to the amendment to the Farm Credit Act. The Canadian Farm Credit Corporation has been in existence for 22 years, during which period it has made about 147,500 loans totalling $5.1 billion. With its long-term credit programs it has been a major force in helping Canadian farmers to increase their production and efficiency during the last 20 years. The corporation has financed more than 60 per cent of long-term farm credit in recent years. The remaining funds were provided by provincial agencies, banks, credit unions and through private loans. Since 1973, the total amount of long-term farm credit has increased at an annual rate of almost 20 per cent, rising from $655 million in 1975 to about $1.9 billion in 1980. This trend is expected to continue, and it will therefore become increasingly important to ensure that the Farm Credit Corporation has an adequate and stable source of funding.

In 1980-81, the last year for which complete statistics are available, the corporation approved 4,686 loans totalling $508 million. A regional breakdown for the year 1980-81 shows that British Columbia received 175 loans totalling $21,597,000. Alberta had 640 loans totalling $71,739,000 and in Saskatchewan farmers received 1,346 loans totalling $128 million.
